Display advertising for this term at The Journal is going quickly. Call the sales team at 533-6711 to book your space now.

(rumoured) 1998-99 COURSE CALENDER PREVIEW

In the school year of the triple-zeros, Queen's administration may offer the following "thrill-ride" courses in order to stimulate interest in what has traditionally been considered an upright, neo-conservative institution. Ready to prove to the academic community that Queen's University is a fun and exciting place to be, the university is rumoured to be preparing to publicly recommend to its associated faculties that the courses in this preview, on top of many others, be added to what is often thought of as a curriculum of outdated crap perpetrated by a bunch of old men still succumbing to the empowering elitism of traditional academia. The information was leaked to The Journal via the rantings of Professor Emeritus of Jokology, one Storm Glenwood. All in a huff, the professor rang our offices yesterday and informed us of the news that wasn't supposed to be made public for at least a day or two. Sources later rumoured that the Professor has been subsequently castrated and shipped off to a deserted island in the south Pacific where he will gaze with the sheep until he can learn to, as one Queen's VP is alleged to have put it, "Keep his fat mouth shut."

Neil Young receives an honorary PhD for extensive studies in Rock in the Three World & Pru, Inc.

- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
- ENGL-322/1999 Even More British Literature Than You Could Ever Imagine
Hourly for boring British literature!
- ENGL-323/0/5 Still More British Literature Than You Can Shake a Stick At
ENGL-324/0/001 Adverbs. Adverbs. Adverbs. Delightfully wonderful discussion into how the adverb beautifully, romantically, fearfully, brutally,
- PHIL-334/100xp-1 Topics in Arrogance
Topics include why philosophers are not welcomed by engineers, how philosophy can impress strangers, the art of saying nothing while sounding intelligent, why philosophy only screws you up.
-

Come by and get your winter text books...
AND drop off your Fall books too!

exchange
CDs • Posters • Texts • Crafts • Books & Stuff

Mon. to Fri 9 am. - 5 pm.
NEW this term! Sat. 10 am. - 1 pm.
533-2120

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

since 1873
TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1999

Queen's law rates second last

BY FIONA SCANNELL

In the latest issue of Canadian Lawyer, Queen's Faculty of Law scored a B- and placed second last in the magazine's 1999 Law Schools Report Card.

In the article "Readin', writin' & researchin'," Canadian Lawyer published the results of a country-wide survey of law school graduates. Results were based on the responses of "slightly more than 1,000 recent graduates [within the past five years] of Canadian law schools," and categorized according to curriculum, faculty, caring profs, students, testing, facilities, practice relevance and the percentage who recommend the school to others. Out of 19 schools evaluated by this criteria, Queen's holds 18th place. Only the University of British Columbia finished lower.

"The students I've spoken with aren't paying much attention to the survey other than to say 'it isn't worth the paper it's printed on'."

— Chris Ellis, Queen's Law Students' Society president

The sentiments of many students and faculty at the Queen's Law School do not support the survey's findings.

Admitting a dislike for surveys that rank opinions, third-year law student Jason Hannibal said the information in the Law Schools Report Card is not useful and that he disregarded the results of Canadian Lawyer's earlier surveys when he was researching law schools prior to coming to Queen's.

Please see Queen's on page 4

Pedestrians wade through Kingston streets after the January snow storm melted into muddy waters.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Counterfeit money circulating

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Queen's students, faculty and staff: beware. Counterfeit five and 10 dollar bills circulating around Kingston made an appearance on Queen's campus last week.

Last Thursday The Sidewalk Cafe in the John Deutsch University Centre received a counterfeit $10 bill. The bill was identified at closing time by the cashing clerk who was counting the transactions for the day. Earlier the same day, another counterfeit $10 bill was discovered in Jean Royce Hall on West Campus.

"The printing [on the bill] wasn't centred and it was obvious it wasn't copied straight," said General Manager of Sodexo-Marrriott Services Jim Fougeret. "It stood off a whole lot easier when compared to other 10s," he reported. The bills are "quite dark in colour," said Detective Constable Laurel Mundt. "They aren't the best counterfeit we've seen. The details are quite vague and there is no crispness to the bills."

Both incidents were reported to Kingston Police who confirmed the falsified nature of the bills.

Last Wednesday a 39-year-old man was arrested for possession of counterfeit money. Following an investigation, Gordon Stephen was deemed responsible for the "creation and initial distribution" of the bills found on campus, Mundt said. She reported that the counterfeit bills are easily identifiable but "in effective lighting they could pass as a legitimate bill." Although Stephen's arrest will halt the creation of those bills, there is no way of determining how many of the counterfeit bills have already been distributed.

"We certainly still have some out there in the community," she added. Mundt encourages those who are uncertain of the authenticity of a bill to "get a legitimate bill and compare." As well, Mundt encourages those with falsified bills to turn them into the police. "We're trying to stress [to people] to accept the loss and get it out of circulation," Mundt said.

After the discovery of the bills on campus, Sodexo-Marrriott issued a warning to all its service outlets, including all food retailers in the JDUC, Macintosh Corry and Jean Royce Hall.

"Right now we're working closely with the Kingston Police force, the OPP, and Campus Security," said Fougeret.

High-tech cheating hits campus

New line of watches allow students to sneak a peek

BY ERIK MISSIO

They're fashionable, practical, surprisingly affordable... and they can help you cheat your way to better grades.

Besides being water resistant and equipped with an Indiglo night light, the new Timex Datalink line of watches offers something a little extra: the watches allow you to send information from your computer to your wrist in a matter of seconds, without any wires or connecting cables.

This past week, Cindy Price, the chair of the Senate Committee on Academic Procedure (SCAP) notified other committee members to warn them of the problems that these watches may pose at Queen's. Associate Dean (Studies) Rob Beamish e-mailed various department heads about the Data Link.

"These watches could allow a student to store text for exam purposes...and [the watches] aren't expensive."

— Rob Beamish, associate dean (studies)

He pointed out that there is a policy in both the School of Business and in the Faculty of Applied Science that restricts the types of calculators used in exams to those that are unable to store text.

He also made it clear how readily available the Data Link watches are: "These watches could allow a student to store text for exam purposes...and [the watches] aren't expensive—about $100 for a low end [model] which still has text storage [capabilities]."

Whether or not students' watches will be inspected prior to writing exams is a decision that the SCAP Exams Committee will have to discuss in the

Please see Watches on page 6

index

Volume 126, Issue 25
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	A&E	19
Editorials	8	Crossword	27
Opinions	9	Classifieds	28
Features	13	MISC.	29
Sports & Fitness	16

WEATHERWATCH

Today

Cloud with flurries
High -3°C, Low 5°C,
POP: 40%

Wednesday

Sunny with clouds
High -1°C, Low -8°C,
POP: 30%

Thursday

Sunny with clouds
High -2°C, Low -7°C,
POP: 20%

Friday

Rainy
High -1°C, Low -1°C,
POP: 90%

TEN for Job Interest
TEN for Career Value
TEN bucks an hour

SWEP jobs are:
career-related
mostly on campus
available in many areas of interest

open to full-time undergraduate students who plan to return to Queen's University
as undergraduate students in
September, 1999

posted on the Career Services web page
www.careers.queensu.ca
and at Career Services on January 25

MAC develops local snow removal plan

By FIONA STEVENSON

The Alma Mater Society Municipal Affairs Commission is actively working with the city of Kingston and Queen's administration to improve snow removal in the student housing area and on campus.

According to MAC Commissioner Sarah Corman, city officials are currently having a difficult time planning for snow removal in the city's expanded boundaries. The city of Kingston and townships were amalgamated last January. "They knew it would be a challenge... This is an experimental year for them," Corman said, adding, "The huge amount of snow we've gotten recently hasn't made it much easier."

"It would be nice if students would take a more active role in clearing the sidewalks."

— Soroh Corman, MAC commissioner

A bucket loader clears a path on Queen's campus.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

A Queen's snow removal committee, made up of a range of representatives from the university community was formed in early December to identify strategic routes to campus. These routes will be given first priority for snow removal by the city, Corman said. They will also be advertised to the university community.

Queen's Physical Plant Services, the department responsible for snow removal on campus, has also agreed to extend its boundaries for snow removal,

Please see Students on page 5
Please see related Map on page 5

In the last issue of The Journal, an article in the Sports & Fitness section incorrectly identified the date when Perri van Rosem began working with the football team. Because of the inclement weather, the first session was cancelled and will take place this Thursday.

Queen's prof named to Order of Canada

By RENEE HUANG

A member of the Queen's faculty is among 89 prominent Canadians to receive an Order of Canada this year, the country's highest honour.

Thomas J. Courchene, director of the John Deutsch Institute for the Study of Economic Policy, was officially appointed an Officer, joining the ranks of past Principal David Smith, Chancellor Peter Lougheed and Queen's graduates Ray Heenan and Judith Maxwell.

Courchene was described in a 1998 Canadian Business article as "the most influential economist in Canada," said

Thomas J. Courchene

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Keith Banting, director of the School of Policy Studies.

The body of Courchene's research and writing encompasses Canadian policy issues, federal-provincial relations, constitutional reform, comparative federal systems, social policy and Aboriginal issues. Courchene has also published more than 250 books and articles on Canadian policy issues.

"I'm obviously incredibly proud to be receiving this award," Courchene said. "It represents my contribution but I think the emphasis is on people who have made contributions to Canadian life... I think there are other faculty whose international reputation is greater than mine," said the modest 58-year-old.

Banting used the word great three times in one sentence when describing Courchene's contributions. "Tom is always a stimulating colleague and he has a great, great capacity to anticipate the next great policy issue," said Banting, who has known Courchene since the early 1980s. "Tom has wonderful antennae as to what the big issues are."

Courchene was born in Wakaw, Saskatchewan in 1940 and completed his undergraduate degree at University of Saskatchewan. After finishing his Ph.D. at Princeton University in 1967, he was a professor of economics at University of Western Ontario until 1988. He was chair of the Ontario Economic Council of Canada from 1982 and 1985, an elected Fellow of the Royal Society of Canada and a past president of the Canadian Economics Association. From 1988 to 1992, Courchene was the director of Queen's new school of policy studies and is currently a professor of

"Tom is always a stimulating colleague and he has a great, great capacity to anticipate the next great policy issue."

— Keith Banting, director of the School of Policy Studies economic and financial policy.

He cites his earlier work at Western as providing him with "great background" for his research. "The encouragement I've gotten from colleagues [at Queen's] has been fantastic," he continued. Courchene credits his work at Queen's for broadening aspects of his research. "Queen's has been an important environment for someone interested in interdisciplinary work."

The Order of Canada was established in 1967 as a lifetime achievement award to recognize outstanding achievements and contributions in a wide variety of human endeavours. Appointments are made twice a year, and lists are made public on New Year's Day and Canada Day. People are recognized according to the degree and scope of their contributions in three different levels of membership: Member, Officer and Companion.

Whatever his future plans may be, Courchene intends to stay in Kingston. "Queen's is home base," he said.

"If one is lucky enough to be researching in an area that's dynamic and exciting as Canadian policy, then this [award] is just the dessert," Courchene said. "Canada's an exciting place to live."

New religious studies program approved

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

The University of Toronto, McMaster University and Wilfrid Laurier University offer the only other MA programs in religious studies in the province. There are only seven other English-language MA programs in the rest of Canada.

U of T receives 39 applications for its Masters programs annually, and admits 10. McMaster receives 42 applications and admits six.

The Queen's administration has approved the introduction of a Master of Arts degree program in religious studies.

The program will concentrate on one field, religion and modernity. "We're interested in what happens when religion meets the modern world," said department head Pam Dickey-Young.

"The degree will allow for exploration into explicit or institutional aspects of religion, such as the tradition church, and also encourage implicit, or non-institutional religion, or what is commonly referred to as spirituality," explained Dickey-Young.

"Students in the program will explore what happens after the advent of forces of historical consciousness... such as those that have influenced the western world since the Industrial Revolution," states the summary of the program.

"We're looking for students who want to engage religion as a cultural form," said Dickey-Young. "There is definitely an interest in the field."

In a department that currently has twice as many students as they did five years ago, religious studies has "undergone a revival," said Dickey-Young. "To further mature as a department, it was important to begin a graduate program."

"We're looking for students who want to engage religion as a cultural form."

— Pam Dickey-Young, department head of religious studies

The new Queen's program will admit four to six students per year.

"We are a small department, so we are offering a program where we perceive the interest to be," said Dickey-Young.

The department of religious studies has managed to create this new program with minimal additional costs to the department.

"We're lucky that Queen's has continued to support religious studies, when other schools are questioning the validity of continuing their programs," said Dickey-Young.

AMS to introduce dental plan next year

WHAT ARE YOUR TEETH WORTH?

	Canada Life (100%)	Canada Life (80%)	Altima
Plan:	Canada Life (100%)	Canada Life (80%)	Altima
Cost:	$99.36	$87.44	$93.00
Location:	any dentist	any dentist	Altima dentist only

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

As a result of a survey conducted by the AMS in the fall referendum, students may soon be sinking their teeth into a new dental plan as early as next year.

The AMS is currently trying to decide between three plans. If their choice is passed by AMS Assembly, students will be allowed to vote for or against the plan during the spring referendum, to be held March 16 and 17.

During the fall referendum, 60.3 per cent of those who voted, or 1,097 students, said they would like the AMS to research the addition of a dental component to the health plan.

"I think it has the potential to save some students without coverage a lot of money, but the trade off would be it would hassle other students," said Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations).

Students who already have dental coverage would be able to opt-out of the plan, but would not have to opt out of the health plan as well. Similar to the health plan, students could only opt out of the dental plan with proof of alternative coverage. If a high number of students opted out of the coverage, it could be reevaluated for the following year, Moodie added.

The three plans under consideration by the AMS include two Canada Life plans and one Altima plan. The first Canada Life plan covers 100 per cent of the costs of one annual examination, consultation, cleaning and polishing as well as 75 per cent of the costs of fillings, space maintainers and extractions (up to two wisdom teeth per year).

The second Canada Life plan offers the same 75 per cent coverage on fillings, space maintainers and extractions, but only 80 per cent coverage on the annual examination, consultation, cleaning and polishing.

The Altima plan would offer the same services as the 100 per cent Canada Life plan and is slightly less expensive, however, with that choice students could only receive coverage at an Altima dentist. According to Moodie, there are only two Altima dentistry offices in Kingston.

There is a maximum coverage of $500 per year on all plans.

Moodie said the aim is to keep the total cost for students under $100. So far, everyone Moodie has spoken to has preferred the Canada Life 100 per cent coverage plan. Students can direct questions or comments regarding the dental plan to Moodie at vpops@ams.queensu.ca.

Fourth-year Queen's Commerce students Blair Nitchke (front left) and Anousha Harris (front, second from left) placed second in the Labour Arbitration event at the 21st annual Queen's University Inter-Collegiate Business Conference, held in Kingston last weekend. The annual competition invites teams from various universities across Canada to compete in seven events.

PHOTO COURTESY OF CBC

NEW

Alfie's PUB

LIVE FRIDAYS
LIVE MUSIC EVERY FRIDAY

LIVE JAZZ THIS FRIDAY
HASKELL & THE CLEAVERS
$6 DOOR 9:00 PM +19

LIVE BANDS NEXT FRIDAY
ULTRA VIOLET CD LAUNCH
JON COAKLEY TRAVEL AGENT IBIZA
GILLIAN BARBER JAMIE ALLEN KING OF SUEDE MATT BARBER
FRIDAY, JANUARY 29 $4 8:00 PM +19

WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

Queen's a 'school on the mend,' report says

Continued from page 1

Hannibal said he questions the credibility of any survey that gives low rankings to highly-reputed schools such as Queen's and UBC. "There is no way that UBC and Queen's are the worst," he said.

An empty classroom at the Queen's Faculty of Law.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Hannibal recommended A Guide to Canadian Law Schools, written by Catherine Purcell of the School of Policy Studies at Queen's, as a more well-rounded and useful resource that displays the strengths and weaknesses of Canadian law schools.

Hannibal said he knows the legal world respects a Queen's education because it was not difficult to find an articling position and he has already had job offers for when he completes his degree.

Chris Ellis, Queen's Law Students'

Society president, supported Hannibal's positive attitude towards Queen's law. "The students I've spoken with aren't paying much attention to the survey other than to say it isn't worth the paper it's printed on," he explained. "The Canadian Lawyer survey is irrelevant to the way we see ourselves."

In an e-mail sent to all law students, Associate Dean Don Stuart claimed that "surveys like that of the Canadian Lawyer are shallow and based on very poor research methodology." While Stuart said he considers the implications of this survey "destructive," he said it does "not appear to represent sentiments expressed by and large by our student body at graduation dinners, graduation ceremonies, teaching evaluations, personal contact, et cetera."

Ellis confirmed that "Queen's Exit Surveys indicate that the Faculty of Law's approval rating among recent graduates is very, very high, as it is with current students."

Kathleen Cowick, president of Law '01, said she has "found our teaching staff, professors and our Dean both approachable and helpful in all situations, from classrooms to job searches and extra curricular events." According to Cowick, "Queen's does a commendable job of balancing the teaching of theory and practical skills."

Cowick said she looked into the University of Calgary, which ranked first in the survey with a final grade of A-, but found it to be a practical program for work specifically in the Calgary market. While Calgary offers "a definite focus on natural resources," Cowick said "many students coming to law school are looking for a well-rounded combination of skills that will enable them to seek opportunities across the country. Queen's law prepares its students for whatever challenges they may seek."

Dean of Law Alison Harvison Young said the survey has some positive aspects, such as when it states Queen's is a "school on the mend." Harvison Young said she takes this to mean the outside world is recognizing that Queen's is undergoing a great time of academic renewal. During the past few years many professors have retired and the Faculty of Law is now actively recruiting new professors, with the intention of enriching the faculty, she continued. Stuart's e-mail makes light of the low ranking from graduates, suggesting that this reflects on members of Queen's faculty, who "score A in teaching critical abilities." Harvison Young agreed.

"One of our weaknesses is not telling other people how good we are," she explained. Harvison Young also noted that a law education at Queen's focuses on "academic excellence in the context of social justice and equity." Not only did the survey fail to measure this, but it is an area that other schools might not value, she said.

Rector adjusting to new position

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

One of the biggest challenges of a new job is getting to know the people you work for, but for Mike Kealy, the new Queen's Rector, that challenge has been bigger than most.

The difference for Kealy is that, instead of having one boss, Kealy has thousands; as Rector he is responsible to all the students of Queen's University.

Since being recently elected, most of Kealy's time has been consumed with getting to know these bosses. He has been researching issues, speaking with student leaders and Queen's administrators to get a better handle on students' concerns.

Kealy has helped several students address issues of concern or complaint, has attended a December Board of Trustees meeting, and has participated in several committees, including the Senate Subcommittee on Exams, which recently instituted the $15 fee for students writing exams without an student identification card, among other changes.

According to Kealy, outgoing Rector

Ian Michael eased him into his new position and office for about two weeks and taught him the tasks the job involves.

Kealy was also surprised at how helpful and accessible Queen's administrators have been. Although Kealy wasn't expecting communication between himself and the administration to be particularly difficult, he said that the deans and vice-principals have been extremely open with him.

"I think that there's so much that can be done with this job," Kealy said, especially since he has access to many of the top officials at Queen's.

For the next few months Kealy plans to make few concrete changes to the way his position works. "I'm still in the exploratory stage of his job," he explained.

Kealy plans to have a Web site up and running in the next two weeks, so students have better access to his office. He hopes to increase his visibility on campus and his accessibility. Kealy also plans to spend his time researching the issues of concern on campus in order to prepare himself for the Board of Trustees meeting this March.

Students asked to clear sidewalks

Continued from page 2

Corman added. Sidewalks the university has committed to clearing include: Union and Stuart Streets between Albert and Barrie Streets; University Avenue between Stuart and Clergy Streets; Queen's Crescent between Albert Street and University Avenue; the south side of Clergy Street between University and Division Streets; Division Street between Clergy and Union Streets; the west side of Barrie Street between Union and King Streets; and the east side of George Street.

MAC is also encouraging students to clear the sidewalks in front of their houses. Although it is technically the city of Kingston's responsibility, "In my opinion, it would be nice if students would take a more active role in clearing the sidewalks," Corman said.

MAC will be holding "Shovel It," this Thursday from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Lower Ceildh of the John Deutsch University Centre. Shovels will be sold for $5 and students will have an opportunity to learn about the best routes they can use to get to campus. The Street Captains will also be at the event to provide students with their addresses so they can stop by and borrow a shovel if they need one.

Sidewalk routes to campus that will be given priority by the city for snow removal.

COURTESY OF SARAH CORMAN

SOCIETY OF GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL STUDENTS

ELECTION '99

Nominations are now open for the following executive positions:

- President
- VP External
- VP Internal (Graduate)*
- VP Communications
- VP Internal (Professional)†
- VP Services

Nomination Forms and Information Packages are available at the SGPS Office. (JDUC - Room 021)

OTHER INFO:

Nominations Close:
Monday, January 25th @ 4:00 PM (SGPS Office)
Election Dates:
Tuesday/Wednesday, February 9th/10th

Positions are open to all members of the SGPS.
*VP Internal (Graduate) is open to Graduate students ONLY.
†VP Internal (Professional) is open to Law and Theology Students ONLY (pending approval of this position by SGPS Membership on January 20th).

For more information, contact Kevin Brown: brown@civl.queensu.ca or 549-7238.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

The AMS Accessibility Task Force presents

AMERICAN SIGN LANGUAGE 101

taught by the Canadian Hearing Society

Weeknights from 6:00pm to 9:00pm running 10 weeks. Two courses are offered: Monday nights starting January 25 and Tuesday nights starting January 26. The course is open to all full and part-time Queen's students who have had no previous sign language instruction. The cost is $100 and must be paid in full (cash or cheque) when you sign up. Sign-ups will be in the AMS office (at the front desk) starting January 18 at 10:00am (on a first come, first-served basis). Space is extremely limited, so come early! Sign-ups must be made in person and will not be accepted unless physical accessibility to the AMS office is a concern. Please contact by e-mail as soon as possible if this is the case: 4vadd@qlink.queensu.ca

Master of Public Administration

Learn How Queen's MPA Can Help Prepare You for the Challenges of a Lifetime

INFORMATION SESSION

Join us on Tuesday 19 January
5:30 - 7:00pm
Policy Studies Building Conference Room 202

OR VISIT US

Queen's University <http://qsilver.queensu.ca/sps/>

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Coping with Student Debt Seminar presented by Canadian Association of Financial Planners in conjunction with SGPS. Thurs., Jan. 21 John Orr Room, JDUC. Refreshments will be served.

Innu Elder speaking on Innu Rights: low-level military flying, mining at Voisey, development of the Moisie River Jan 23 1:30pm in the Policy Studeis Rm 202. For more info contact OPIRG (549-0066).

information session for students interested in volunteer positions. Biosciences Complex Room 3112. Feb. 2, 5:30 - 6:30, Feb. 16 5:30 - 6:30 Call Linda at the CSS at 384-2361 to confirm or for further info.

Become an Art Gallery education volunteer (a "docent") at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre! Training is provided. Pick up an application form at the reception desk of the Interim Agnes, 218 Barrie St. For further information call Allison Morehead, Education Officer, at 533-2190.

Give the Gift of Life. Canadian Blood Donor Clinic of 1999. Grant Hall, February 8 & 9 for more info., or to volunteer, contact Erica at 6ejdl or 531-5266

Shabbat Dinner 6:30 pm this Friday (Jan. 15) at the Hille! House. Join us as we welcome Jewish Student Communities from across the province. As always, the meal is included in the cost of membership. For more information, contact Hillel@ams.queensu.ca

The Canadian Cancer Society will be holding

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

New team joins race

By QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

A new team has picked up a nomination package for the Alma Mater Society Executive elections, bringing the current number of running teams to three.

Nick Cheeseman, ArtSci '99, confirmed that he is running for president with Vice-President (Operations) candidate Sue Henry, ArtSci '99, and Vice-President (University Affairs) candidate Kate Bailey, ArtSci '99. Cheeseman is head cheerleader at the Queen's Bands. Henry is an assistant manager at the Used Book Store. Bailey is the academics commissioner of the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society.

The team picked up a nomination package on Thursday and have already begun collecting nomination signatures, said Cheeseman.

Two other teams picked up nomination packages early last week. The nomination period closes this Friday.

Watches store notes

Continued from page 1

future, Beamish explained. Although at this stage the existence of the watches is more for interest's sake than a huge cause for worry, Beamish still thought it important to alert others. "I do have a concern that all students compete on a level playing field," he said. "I wanted to let instructors know about this technology and be aware of [the Data Link watches] and how they might change that playing field."

The text would then scroll along the face of the watch, allowing easy and subtle access to the information.

According to the Timex Web site, up to 150 entries of text can be stored on the watch. Each entry contains 31 characters, making it easy to save shopping lists, directions, appointments and cheat notes.

Using downloadable software, a student could type out various study notes on a computer and then allow the watch to "read" the data which appears as flashing bars of light on the monitor. The text would then scroll along the face of the watch, allowing easy and subtle access to the information.

Still, some members of the student body were reluctant to admit they would use the watches for anything less than noble purposes. Fear, not ethics, appears to be the rationale.

"Sure I'd think about it... it would definitely come to mind... but it would never happen," said Nel McIlveen, ArtSci '01. "I'd be too afraid of getting caught."

Claire Holloway, Con-Ed '02, echoed McIlveen's anxiety. "Even if I could figure out how to use [the watch], it wouldn't be worth it. I'd waste the entire exam treading and looking over my shoulder."

Fast Facts

In Here

More SWEF jobs

The Queen's Summer Work Experience Program will offer 44 per cent more jobs to students this summer than last. This is the second consecutive year that SWEF funding has been increased. As a result of this year's increase, the program will offer 155 jobs to students this summer as compared to 108 last year. SWEF positions will be available in a wide variety of university departments, services and student organizations.

SWEF Coordinator Sharon Layton said the purpose of the SWEF program is "to provide career-related summer jobs for Queen's undergraduates."

To be eligible for SWEF, students must be full-time undergraduates who are returning next year as undergraduates. Job listings are posted on the Web site at <http://careers.queensu.ca> and at Career Services beginning January 25. The deadline for applications is February 15.

Out There

Yeltsin's Health Declines

Russian President Boris Yeltsin was rushed to hospital Sunday with a bleeding stomach ulcer. Yeltsin could be required to stay in hospital for as long as three weeks, as surgery may be required. Yeltsin has had a long history of illness, suffering several heart attacks and two cases of pneumonia in recent years. The struggle for political power is intensifying in Russia, as Yeltsin's health declines.

Clinton in trouble, US on top

With his political future in question, US President Bill Clinton delivers his State of the Union address to Congress today, even as the Senate continues his impeachment trial. The US is enjoying the most prosperity in decades, with an economy with 93 months of consecutive growth, the lowest unemployment rate in 29 years and the lowest inflation rate in 10 years. America is also becoming safer, with crime and traffic deaths on the decline.

Cultural Protectionism?

The US and Canada may be on the road to a nasty trade war, as Ottawa comes closer to approving Bill C-55, which would outlaw all Canadian advertising in any newly started split-run magazines. Split-run magazines solicit advertising in Canada but contain minimal Canadian editorial content. The bill is entering its third and final reading in Parliament. Its aim is to keep $350-million in advertising revenue in the hands of Canadian businesses, and to protect Canadian culture.

— courtesy of The Globe and Mail

Air Ontario makes it easy to get to Oxford, Harvard and UCLA.

Curious about the world?

Find out more about living, studying, working, and travelling abroad.

Learn about different regions of the world during our Winter Speaker Series:

Talk with our Education Abroad Advisor

Jan. 20 - Africa

Jan. 26 - Latin America/Caribbean

Check out our Resource Library

Mar. 24 - Indian Sub-continent and the Middle East

Feb. 3 - Western Europe

Feb. 8 - Eastern Europe/CIS

Mar. 10 - Australia/Pacific

Mar. 2 - China, Japan, and South-East Asia

If you're preparing to go abroad, join us for these information sessions. All sessions will be held in the Music Listening Room, JDUC from 5:30 - 7:00 p.m.

The International Centre

at Queen's University in the John Deutsch University Centre just past the Queen's Pub.
Tel: (613) 533-2604 Fax: (613) 533-6190 <http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

INTRODUCING KINGSTON'S AIR CANADA TORONTO CONNECTION.

No matter where you're going, or why, Air Ontario is making it easy. Because with our new flights to Toronto, you've got a better connection to Air Canada's vast and expanding world.

4 DAILY NONSTOPS TO TORONTO'S TERMINAL 2

With four daily nonstop flights to Pearson's Terminal 2, Air Ontario and Air Canada give you connections to 51 cities in Canada, 43 cities in the United States as well as great European destinations. So we not only make it easy to get to Toronto, we also make it easy to get to Oxford, Harvard and UCLA. Of course, we're not saying we make it easy to get into Oxford, Harvard or UCLA. Just to.

EARN TRIPLE AEROPLAN MILES.

You can also earn triple Aeroplan miles for each Kingston-Toronto trip you make between January 17 and March 31. When you begin your career, you'll probably be doing a lot of flying, so if you're not an Aeroplan member, this is a great time to join.

SPECIAL OFFER

Triple Aeroplan Miles

Aeroplan bonus mileage to March 31, 1999.

For reservations or information, call your local travel agent or call Air Canada at 1-888-247-2262.

AIR CANADA  airOntario
Kingston's wings to the world.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Arts and Science Lite

IN THE FIRST REVIEW OF THE FACULTY of Arts and Science in more than two decades, it was found that the greatest problem with the curriculum is that there's too much of it.

The proposed overhaul of the Faculty's curriculum would reduce the required number of courses for a major degree from 19 to 17 and give more opportunity for independent studies. The report also recommends an emphasis on inter-disciplinary studies and greater freedom to take courses outside of your area of interest.

Let's not fool ourselves into believing that students here are any more motivated to learn than students elsewhere.

Both of these recommendations would certainly be a boon for students who would benefit from a greater scope in their education. It is the hope of Robert Silverman, Arts and Science dean, that students at Queen's would take advantage of the lighter course load to further their education through what he calls 'deeper learning'. Some students may prefer, however, to spend the extra time in 'deep sleep' or deeply engrossed in television.

While we may momentarily gush at Dean Silverman's assertion that Queen's students "are different than students elsewhere... are better," let's not fool ourselves into believing that students here are any more motivated to learn than students elsewhere.

Contrary to the report, a 19-credit Arts and Science degree is not a huge burden for students. Unlike other degree programs at Queen's, time is not at a premium for many Arts and Science students. On the other hand, for those who do wish to pursue a more diverse learning experience, the lighter course-load would be invaluable. There are many enriching academic and extra-curricular experiences at Queen's that preclude finishing a degree in four years. It is unfortunate that so many students who chose to become involved in student government, campus media or athletics are forced to spend an extra year at Queen's.

While there are both merits and problems with these proposed changes to the Arts and Science curriculum, the only sure losers seem to be the other faculties. With substantially less free-time than their classmates in Arts and Science, they may find themselves unable to participate in campus life.

Protect the children

LOOKING AT PORNOGRAPHIC pictures is not a crime in Canada. When those pictures depict the sexual exploitation of children however, they cross over the line of acceptability and their possession becomes an indictable offense punishable by up to five years in prison.

Anyone who owns such child pornography is an implicit partner in the perverse objectification of children, many of whom are sexually abused during the manufacture of pornographic material. It is disturbing, therefore, that the British Columbia Supreme Court ruled last week that the law against owning child porn is in violation of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The court argued that the benefits of prohibiting such material are limited and are outweighed by the intrusion into freedom of expression and the right of privacy. While any threat to these fundamental freedoms is of grave concern, the honorable Justices are misguided if they think child pornography does not pose an even greater threat. By striking this law they are neglecting to protect those most vulnerable to a violation of their rights—children. It is a misconception that the ownership of child pornography is a victimless crime; behind every picture and every film are children who could not have legally consented to being objectified for other's pleasure. It would be a travesty if these individual's rights were compromised in order to protect the rights of others to own pornography.

While there may still be other laws prohibiting the manufacture and distribution of such material, unless we are vigilant against its possession, children will continue to be victims of sexual exploitation.

Don't have a cow, man.

TAKE A LESSON FROM OPRAH Winfrey: Don't trust the cows (or the people that feed them).

Last year it was mad-cow disease, today the threat comes from Bovine Growth Hormone, a bio-engineered hormone that is injected into dairy cows to unnaturally increase milk production. Despite well documented safety risks for the cows, and evidence of a potential health hazard for humans, BGH was approved in 1993 in the United States. Last week, the drug was rejected by Health Canada after nine years of research that concluded that the drug causes serious health problems in cows. How serious? Well, one side-effect is a four-fold increase in mastitis, an udder infection that causes massive quantities of pus, which can end up in the milk. Or, there's hoof rot, a condition treated with antibiotics that according to the Center for Disease Control could lead to a public health crisis.

There must be a pretty good reason why the U.S. government would choose to ignore its own scientists and the findings of several independent studies and rubber-stamp the approval of this drug. They certainly don't need the milk. In fact, one of the most significant problems in the dairy industry is the massive overproduction of milk each year. It's hard to reconcile the evidence that BGH is a nasty substance with the lack of interest at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration in regulating its use.

It's not surprising, therefore, that BGH has been the source of much speculation on the Internet as well as material for an episode of the X-Files. The real culprit, however, is not aliens but the economic importance of the biotechnology industry. As a federal study made clear in 1994, American hegemony in the bio-tech industry would be "impeded if there were new Government obstacles to such bio-tech products" (Harper's Magazine, Oct, 1994).

Don't trust the cows (or the people that feed them).

Thankfully, the Canadian government has chosen not to stake its claim in this emerging industry at the expense of its citizens. But don't relax too soon: the makers of BGH may sue the Canadian government, and even with the ban we cannot prevent the importation of cheese or other milk-products made from BGH-treated cows in the U.S. Don't panic, though. Despite the conclusive evidence presented by Health Canada that BGH dramatically increases the risk of infection and disease in cows, they also came to the conclusion that there are little health risks for humans.

Got milk?

BY PAUL HEISLER

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerrie
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renee Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lillian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alicia Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Liu

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudio Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke
Kristian Li
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucilla
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva
SYSTEMS MANAGER

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, January 19, 1999 • Issue 25 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal, all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganaroque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8
Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation: 9,000
Issue 26 will be published on Friday, January 22, 1999

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Sarah LeMay, Eric Missio, Heather MacDonald, Anna Nesbitt, Sindi Sabourin, Neato Sager, Fiona Scannell, Deirdre Swain, Rachelle Villanueva.

Photographers: Cheryl Cheung, Samson Wu.

OPINIONS

Avoiding prejudice

ANYONE WHO HAS TAKEN a first year psychology course has probably learned that we tend to like things that we are familiar with. One experiment that proved this consisted of putting some infants in rooms with vertical lines and others in rooms with horizontal lines. Later on, these same people tended to prefer things with vertical or horizontal lines, depending on which room they were put in. As well, if a pregnant mother listens to a certain type of music, her child is more likely to show a preference to that type of music after being born.

This is why a lack of familiarity with certain groups of people can breed prejudice. While this tendency to prefer things that we are familiar with is not, in and of itself, prejudice, we need to be aware of it in order to avoid prejudice.

Suppose you are walking down the street and you need directions. You see two people together and decide to ask for help. One of them is physically handicapped and requires the use of a wheelchair and the other is a walking pedestrian. If you yourself are not handicapped, who are you more likely to direct your questions to? Or suppose one of them is a burn victim and the other is not. If you yourself are not a burn victim, who are you more likely to direct your questions to? Unfortunately, most of us would tend to choose the person we're more familiar with and ignore the people we perceive to be different.

Thus, in order to fight prejudice against specific groups of people, we need to familiarize society with those groups of people. This is why integrating black and white people together in the same schools was such a good way to fight racism.

Now, let me go out on a limb here and suggest that if a pregnant woman's body was see-through and we could watch prenatal children develop for the full nine months, our greater familiarity with children of that age would significantly decrease prejudice against them.

For example, some people would argue that, because the fetus is not developed enough to be able to survive outside a woman's body (a statement that's only true for the first five and a half months of a fetus' life), it is less valuable. But post-natals are too developed to be able to survive inside a woman's body, and it is unclear which is "better". We only believe it is better to be able to survive outside a woman's body than it is to be able to survive inside a woman's body, because that is what we are more familiar with.

In order to become less prejudiced against the unborn, people need to know the stages of development for prenatsals.

Some people suggest that because the fetus doesn't look human until about two months after conception, it is not human. But we must realize that in order to say that a fetus doesn't look human, we have to assume that only postnatals are human. A fetus doesn't look like a postnatal because it is not one.

In order to become less prejudiced against the unborn, people need to become familiar with what prenatsals look like and the stages of development they go through. People need to realize that, just because we can't see them, doesn't mean they don't suffer during an abortion procedure. Watching an ultrasound of an actual abortion of a 12-week old fetus shown by Dr. Nathanson, who has performed or presided over more than 60,000 abortions, one can see the child's response. His heart beat jumps to twice as fast; he moves away from the abortion instruments, trying in vain to escape; his mouth opens wide in a silent scream; when the instruments start tearing apart his body, he protests violently until he can protest no more.

SINDI SABOURIN
PHD

Opinions wanted

Do you support a position which needs to be talked about? Here's your chance to spark the discussion. Send your opinion of 500-600 words to The Queen's Journal and we'll send it to everyone else. Call Dan at 533-2800 or journal@post.queensu.ca.

talking HEADS

What was the worst part about the snow storms?

"Cabin fever"
Deress Ashghedom
Artsci '99

"Oh, when it got cold?"
James Lee
Artsci '99

"Frozen pipes"
Chris Calvet
Sci '99

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

Letters to the Editors

Journal disrespects December 6th

Dear Editors,

While criticism of The Journal for its substandard product is nothing new, I feel especially compelled to do so after reading the December 4th issue.

It goes without saying that the anniversary of the Montreal Massacre is a solemn event, heavily laden with emotion; however, The Journal's efforts to recognize this event were nothing short of offensive. While it's true that The Journal's usual level of editorial quality is beneath that of even the typical high school newspaper, the effect of treating such a delicate subject to such juvenile writing is enough to raise the ire of any sensible person. For example, Lillian Kim's article "Sore ankles and wounding words" reminds us that "Unfortunately, not everyone involved that day had a choice...Some of those people died because of the opinion forced on them." What a journalistic revelation, Lillian: those 14 women didn't choose to be shot! By making such an elementary statement with the air of one who is making a profound observation, and to make it in such simplistic fashion, Kim comes across as one with no real contribution to make to this issue. Her article's inclusion in a campus-wide memorial is insulting to those of us with real feelings on the subject, and is belittling to the reading community at large.

For Mr. Salvador to assert that his possession of a penis makes him partially responsible for the actions of all men is laughable.

May I also make particular reference to Mark Salvador's article, "Males and moral responsibility." In this article, Salvador states "I, as a male, must take some responsibility for the terrible violence that happened on that fateful day." This position must be seen as nothing short of ludicrous. Mr. Salvador had nothing to do with the actions of Marc Lepine, and given that Mr. Salvador was probably a prepubescient in 1989, I think it's safe to assume that the two never even met. For Mr. Salvador to assert that his possession of a penis makes him partially responsible for the actions of all men everywhere is laughable, and reeks of a transparent attempt to appease the politically correct faction of the student body. I also found his remarks personally insulting: after all, I'm a male too. Are you trying to tell me, Mark, that I'm partially responsible for the Montreal Massacre as well? That is the logical extension of your reasoning, and for you to accuse me thusly is enough to make my blood boil. I assure you, not I nor any other male on campus is responsible for the barbarism of Marc Lepine, regardless of our genitalia.

I could go on at length, but I hope my point has been made. Journal, we students have come to expect shoddy journalism and weak integrity from your paper; but if you're going to do something as serious as pay tribute to the deaths of fellow students, get your act together, just for one issue, and do it right.

Mike Martelle
Arts '98

Inaccessible Ogle

Dear Editors,

This past September I saw an advertisement in The Journal advertising for the position of Member-at-Large on the Strategic Planning Committee of the AMS Board of Directors. The advertisement was placed by AMS Board of

If you attend this university, you both hear and occasionally voice criticism of the self-serving resume-padders that purportedly abound in the AMS.

Directors Chairperson, Trevor Ogle, and it was to Trevor that I directed my

Continued on Page 10

Should I stay or should I go?

A Kingston high school student talks about the pressure to stay

MY HIGH SCHOOL CAREER is coming to a close and I am anticipating the stress of deciding which universities to apply to. The pressures to attend Queen's are appearing more and more prominent.

Why spend the extra money to go away when there is a beautiful, spirited, highly ranked university in your home town?

With tuition fees continually increasing, it is becoming more costly to attend any university let alone one that is out of town. Though my parents have made it very clear that I may choose a university regardless of where it may be located, I may feel guilty choosing another university due to the added costs of living out of town — something

I think many students take into consideration while deciding which university to attend.

Why spend the extra money to go away when there is a beautiful, spirited, highly ranked university in your home town? I think independence answers this question quite simply. I realize many Kingstonsians attend Queen's and are enjoying it, but I also feel that being a local student takes away much of the experience and independence away that is often gained from attending an out of town school.

Moving away forces one to become self reliant and to meet new people. There is less probability that one will know as many people and university life will always be new and exciting. Many local students are forced to live at home over the course of university due to financial difficulties, thus missing the experience of residence or living with friends. For these people it may be more difficult to meet other students and they may miss out on study groups or intramural sports that are formed within the residence floor.

I realize many Kingstonsians attend Queen's and enjoy it, but I also feel that being a local student takes away much of the experience and independence gained from moving away.

Some of the pressure for local students to attend Queen's is a result, in part, of Queen's high ranking. Many kids do not want to attend Queen's simply because they would rather leave Kingston and live in a more exciting and culturally diverse city.

However, how can one turn down an acceptance to Queen's simply for the need to go away? Shouldn't one attend Queen's if one is accepted because of the prestige, the program and the ranking, and not for the desire to leave the city? The familiarity of the city, the campus, and the university also tends to provide a comfort level that makes Queen's an easy choice.

There are many pressures for local students to attend Queen's. The considerations of dealing with the financial costs and the stresses of a new environment often make Queen's an easy, comfortable, and welcoming choice for kids. Even from an objective viewpoint, if one was to consider all factors of another university, the reality of financial pressures is unavoidable to some local students.

ANNA NESBITT
BAYRIDGE SECONDARY SCHOOL

More Letters to the Editors

Continued from Page 9

interest in this committee.

I was interviewed by the hiring committee, which was headed by Trevor Ogle; during my interview I asked Trevor at what time I would be notified whether I was chosen.

My interview took place on a Monday; Trevor told me that I would be notified by telephone on Wednesday.

Before I continue, I want to be clear that I am not writing this letter to vilify Trevor Ogle.

However, a week went by. The following Wednesday I called and left a message on Trevor's voice mail asking if a decision had been made, and could he please let me know the status of my application, since if this did not turn out, I would volunteer elsewhere. Two weeks went by from this message. Trevor did not return my call. Again, on a Wednesday two weeks from the previous message, I left another message, asking Trevor to please let me know either way. Another two weeks went by, and Trevor did not return my call. I left a third message on Trevor's voice mail. This message was left seven weeks after Trevor originally told me that I would be notified, and during that seven weeks, after I had left three messages, Trevor did not call me once.

The following week I left a message on the voice mail of Claude Sherren, General Manager of the AMS. Since Claude had been on the hiring committee, I thought he could help me with my communication problem with Trevor.

Unfortunately, Claude did not return my call either. So on November 30, a week and a half after leaving my message with Claude, I wrote a letter addressed to AMS President Tom Stanley, cc'd to Trevor Ogle and Claude Sherren. This letter outlined the above events, and concluded with the following: "I don't care whether I'm on the Strategic Planning Committee or not. In fact, I'm not even mostly concerned about the absolute incompetence that has been exhibited by Trevor Ogle and Claude Sherren.

It's how inconsiderate their behaviour is - behaviour that is particularly odious considering their positions in the AMS, and what the AMS is supposed to be to the students it represents. . . . I would like to know why neither Trevor nor Claude feel that returning phone calls is the appropriate manner in which to treat the students of this university whom they represent."

Claude Sherren responded to my letter immediately, with this response: "I passed on to [Trevor] your concerns immediately upon hearing from you several weeks ago. The reason I didn't call you myself is that it was up to the chair of the hiring committee (Trevor) to transmit to you the status of your application. I am sorry now that I didn't call you back to confirm your concerns were being addressed - I just assumed that it would all be resolved very quickly."

If I were a first-year student, I would have used this experience as the basis on which to judge the AMS and my non-participation in it.

Before I continue, I want to be clear that I am not writing this letter to vilify Trevor Ogle. I received an apology from Trevor on December 2, for which I am grateful. However, what concerns me is the attitude of contempt with which I was treated in both the events of the fall and unfortunately also in Trevor's apology. I am writing this letter because (I can hear the swelling violins in the background already) I believe in student government. Student government at Queen's provides services, voices, as well as leadership and employment experience for Queen's students; it is an often criticized, first-hand experience of liberal democratic politics. If you attend this university, you both hear and occasionally voice criticism of the self-serving resume-padders that purportedly abound in the AMS. We are all at-chair critics.

What I would find alarming, however, is if this kind of criticism could be grounded in personal experience, such as that which I have outlined above. Hence, I write the following because I believe, perhaps foolishly, that the AMS is a good thing, and in general, staffed by students wishing to "serve and represent the diversity of students at Queen's."

There are two issues here: (1) Trevor did not notify me whether I was on the committee, and (2), Trevor would not return my calls.

Issue (1) is simply a contravention of AMS policy - Trevor should have notified me within 24 hours (AMS Hiring and Appointment Policy and Procedures Manual section 13.01).

Since issue (1) is understandable to

Continued on Page 11

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
445-6972

More Letters to the Editors

Continued from Page 10

an extent (a week or two) because people do get busy, my concern is with issue (2).

As mentioned, Trevor wrote me an apology. However, Trevor begins "It was with some consternation that I read your email of November 30. It marked perhaps the first time that I have been called 'incompetent'."

I am writing this letter because (I can hear the swelling violins in the background already) I believe in student government.

In response, I can assure you that I am quite competent at my position." I am sure there are aspects of Trevor's position at which he is competent; however, "communication" is not one of them.

Trevor also writes, "An effort was made to contact applicants (successful and non-successful), although, in retrospect, the task should have been completed more vigorously." I do not think that more vigour in the effort to contact me was what was needed; I just think it should have been done.

Trevor: "To be honest, if I hadn't gotten a hold of applicants after a couple days, I assumed that they would realize that they had not been selected." This is an unmitigatedly inconsiderate way of treating the members of the student body whom the AMS is supposed to represent. I might also direct Trevor to the AMS hiring policy section 13.01.

Trevor: "With regards to your statement regarding repeated voice mails, I can offer you little satisfaction. I can tell you that the activities in this office are often quite hectic, and I am sorry that your calls were not returned." I am not sure if I should understand this as "we're busy, and we lose telephone messages all the time", or, "we're busy, and we have no time to spare for unimportant telephone messages like yours". The first is incompetent, and the second is contemptible.

Trevor: "[Claude Sherren] indeed emailed me to let me know you had called. It was my impression that your discussions with him had been sufficient to inform you of the committee's decision, and that the situation had been settled." This is incongruent with Claude's statement that I quoted above.

Hence I write because I hope an awareness of my experience will serve two purposes. First, if I were a first-year student, I would have used this experience as the sole basis on which to judge the AMS and my future (non-) participation in it. Second, if I had known earlier in the term that I had not been selected, I would have used my volunteer time elsewhere. Somewhere where they respected my time enough to return my telephone calls.

Graham Robinson
Arts '00
BMUS '98

Forgetful, not stupid

Dear Editors,

Queen's Administration is either trying to confuse its student body, is itself confused, or perhaps both. The Queen's Journal reported in the front page of its last issue that the Queen's Senate on Academic Procedures' Subcommittee on Exams passed a motion in November 1998 which will force students forgetting to bring their student cards to exams starting in April 1999 to pay a fee of $15. What (if any) is the logic behind the enactment of this policy? There isn't any, although Queen's Administration wants us to believe there is. Here's what the Queen's administration wants us to believe: charging a fee of $15 will "encourage students to make an extra effort to remember their student cards".

In April 1998 994 exams were written without a student card. If half as many forget again this year, administration will generate $7,455 (cha-ching!).

Fair enough, but now we must ask what the purpose of "encouraging" students to remember their cards to is. Supposedly it has something to do with cracking down on cheaters, since "[when students forget their student cards] there is no way of being sure someone else didn't write that exam." But how does a fee of $15 stop someone who is bent on cheating? Ummm, it doesn't. They'll just "forget" their card and pay the cash.

It seems Queen's administration's "logic" for charging $15 to all students who forget their cards is seriously flawed. Could their be an alternate "reasoning" for the enactment of the policy then? Could it have something to do with the fact in April 1998 there were 994 exams written without a card?

Let's see, if even half as many students forget their cards this April as last, that means Queen's administration will have generated a whopping $7,455 (cha-ching!). Not bad, especially since

Continued on Page 12

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca

PHONING QUEEN'S?

From off-campus, use the new 533-exchange. **

On-campus calls are now 5 digits.

For More information:
533-3000

WWW.its.queensu.ca/telecom

** dial-in modem pool numbers stay the same

A.M.S. Executive Election

WE NEED 3 NEW people to WATCH!!!

Nomination packages are available at the Front Desk of the AMS.

Questions? CONTACT Cathy, Carolyn or Shawn in the Commission of Internal Affairs at 533-6000 ext. 74815

WANT TO TAKE BETTER PHOTOS?

Don't want to pay like a Zeiss lens to do it?

The Tricolour Yearbook presents

a two day course in intermediate photographic technique by professional photographer Richard Martin.

If you own and can operate a 35mm SLR camera, then this is for you!

Topics will include:

- Exposure and lighting
- Filters
- Film choice
- Depth of field
- Flash photography
- Camera accessories
- and more and more!

Cost: $30 per person (Camera Kingston offers this course at $130)

Date: Sat Jan. 23, 10am-3pm and Sat. Jan 30, 10am-3pm (price includes both sessions)

Contact the Tricolour Yearbook at 533-2738 or tyb@ams.queensu.ca

SPACE IS LIMITED TO 6 PEOPLE SO ACT FAST!

More Letters...

Continued from Page 11

the money is all generated under the guise of being for the purpose of cutting cheating, although the policy is totally inadequate for this.

One wonders where the money generated from this new source of revenue will go. Most of all, one begins to wonder who the real cheaters are.

Theo dos Santos
Arts '99

Kingston severely lacks style

Dear Editors,

Although my initial reaction to the signed editorial by Ken Butland of January 15 was to take offense, I can not help but agree — to an extent. I've been to Montreal many times and have had the same revelation. But reflecting on the topic now I believe that it has a lot more to do with style than with looks.

The Queen's population (I won't include the rest of Kingston because that is a separate phenomenon) has many great looking people, both male and female. The problem is, however, that the majority of the student body has little or no fashion conscience. I'm sorry, but no matter how good looking you are, the second you put on an Arto jacket or Alfie's rugby shirt, your appearance takes a serious turn for the worse. Even those students who avoid such fashion crimes, generally possess an apathetic approach to style. In Montreal, people regularly go to nice clubs, trendy cafes, or other venues of city culture where it is necessary to look presentable.

The majority of the student body has little or no fashion conscience.

In Kingston, the way I see it, nobody can be bothered to dress up because there is nowhere really to go. Are you, Ken, going to get all styled up to go drink pitchers at Alfie's or play foz ball at the Shot? If you saw a girl — no matter how good looking — decked out in Montreal club gear hanging out at the Brass or AJ's, you would probably laugh your ass off, or at least wonder why she bothered. It just seems that daily life in Kingston does not warrant the effort to look that good.

It's not that people aren't good looking, I've seen many great looking guys and girls wandering this campus, they just can't be bothered to go to the measures that people do in Montreal.

If you took that bar full of people you saw on New Year's Eve and put them all in Engineering jackets and fleece pants, I bet you wouldn't think they were such hot stuff. Don't get me wrong, I'm not a superficial clothes horse and I don't hold anything against people who wear those awful jackets — I just believe that your observation has less to do with physical beauty, than with the way people choose to present themselves in a small town severely lacking in style.

Siri Agrell
Arts '00

Features lite

They're the headlines few and far between what you'd expect from a campus paper committed to covering the in's and out's of a conservative institution in the modest town of Kingston.

Yet somehow, even at Queen's, an odd collection of stories have somehow managed to slip under the covers, which we present in...

BELIEVE IT OR LEAVE IT THE JOURNAL 1873

Of course, of the 12 stories illustrated below, some may be real, others may be just a bunch of phoney baloney. To know the truth, flip to page 15.

Illustrations by Rachele Villanueva

Woman driven out of Stauffer by masturbator

"I didn't know what he was doing until I saw his penis and he was masturbating."

(Marriott) Worker allegedly fired for "not shaving"

"The reasons given, (the worker claims for being fired) included the fact that he hadn't shaved, and his unsafe handling of dishes."

Library accepts prof's offer to pay for Playboy

"(Drama professor Maury) Breslow made a formal offer to pay for a 10-year subscription to Playboy, Playgirl, and a feminist magazine last week in a Senate meeting."

Yelling matches result of free photocopiers

"There must be over 10,000 students at this institution and you have only three photocopying machines. Now, two of these are out of order. How is one supposed to acquire knowledge when one can't even get copies of the material?"

Over-exposure at Alfie's

"Several male patrons were asked to leave Alfie's after they were spotted sitting at a table with their pants undone and their genitals exposed... 'Honestly, I can't believe they did it.'"

Ho-Hum Homecoming Contest

"The most interested were those of the Women's Liberation Movement... (who expressed) their distaste towards Queen's holding a contest to perpetuate the concept of woman as an ornament."

Kingston couple narrowly averts CAstrophe

"The (Kingston) couple currently have 663 felines living with them in their Elm Street home."

British army may tank Queen's prof for plan

"Queen's professor Dr. J. Ursell has designed a military tank and submitted it to the British army for consideration... 'It's a secret,' he said."

Double Dragon pulled from JDUC

"This is only the second game in eight years to be removed from the games room. The last one removed was a Playboy pinball machine."

Students submerge themselves in macaroni dinner

"Two students... submerged themselves in a pool of (632 boxes of macaroni and cheese) for 33 hours."

Carleton kidnaps Queen's bands manager

"They just think it's hilarious. They don't see anything wrong with kidnapping the bands manager at all," (the bands manager) said."

QP striptease offends some

"...the dancer was funny at the beginning, but became offensive when she took all her clothes off... 'Everyone seemed to enjoy it, even the girls.'"

THE COCAMO

WHERE QUEEN'S PARTIES!

WEDNESDAY

HIP HOP

TOONIE ALL NIGHT!

DJ DUSTY FROM OTTAWA

THURSDAY

LOONIE!

LOONIE NIGHT!

1$ Cover Between 7 & 9 pm
1/2 price after 9 with STUDENT ID

FRIDAY

KILL THE KEG

SUPER LITE DRAFT

From 7-10pm
Loonie until 11:00

WIN A BAR FRIDGE!

The AMS Needs Your Input!

The AMS is currently in the process of formulating new policy on post-secondary education to present to both the federal and provincial governments. In order to more accurately represent Queen's undergraduate students we need your help.

What should the future post-secondary education system in this province look like? Tell us what you think!

The AMS Government Issues Committee is now requesting submissions from undergraduate students and any campus group on the following topics:

- Deregulation
- Student Aid Reform
- University Performance Indicators
- Public/Private Funding

Written submissions are due on Friday, January 22, 1999. By 4pm at the AMS front desk.

The Government Issues Committee will also entertain presentations between Monday, January 25 to Monday, February 1, 1999.

Any questions? Contact Milan at 533-6000 ext. 74818 or by email at milan@ams.queensu.ca.

THE FEATURES SECTION OF
THE JOURNAL
1873

Interested in writing a feature?

You don't need experience. All you need is an idea.

Call Sean at The Journal, 533-2800

Hoops For Heart

ASUS Heart and Stroke Presents...
3-on-3 Basketball Tournament!

SATURDAY, JANUARY 23/99
ROSS GYM
MEN'S & WOMEN'S DIVISIONS
TEAMS OF 4 OR 5

PRIZES FOR PARTICIPANTS AND SPECTATORS!
REGISTER AND PICK UP PLEDGE FORMS AT
THE CORE (183 UNIVERSITY AVE), FROM JAN. 13-19, OR EMAIL AT:

6je1@qlink.queensu.ca

People will even read a drunk Journal ad.

Display advertising for this term at The Journal is going quickly. Call the sales team at 533-6711 to book your space now.

And the truth of the matter is...

Continued from page 13

- 1 True A man was actually discovered masturbating behind a bookshelf at Stauffer library last year at the horror of an anonymous Queen's student. Talk about a bookworm.
Ran February 27, 1998
- 2 True Wow, we never knew Marriott had such high standards. Question: then why is their food so shitty?
Ran November 5, 1993
- 3 True The Playboy and Playgirl were to be viewed on black & white microfilm. This might be able to explain 1.
Ran February 1, 1991
- 4 True The article never suggests "yelling matches," but I can see why tempers would flare when the student body had access to only three photocopiers.
Ran February 16, 1988
- 5 True This one's pretty believable, but it doesn't make the headlines too often. I mean, five guys with their cocks hanging out?
Ran November 5, 1993.
- 6 True Six members of the W.L.M. entered the homecoming queen contest to protest the proceedings. Subsequently (get this) one of the hosts was so upset with the W.L.M. that he declared that "some women of W.L.M. should not be women."
Ran October 16, 1969
- 7 True This Kingston couple at one point had 663 felines living in their Elm Street home. Holy shit.
Ran January 21, 1992
- 8 True Sadly enough, a Queen's professor designed a tank for the British military. We hope it's been put to good use.
March 6, 1991
- 9 True Okay, it isn't that weird or funny, but why does Playboy keep popping up?
Ran March 18, 1988
- 10 True The premise of the article isn't as silly as the headline suggests when you consider that the act was raising funds for Youth Challenge International.
Ran November 12, 1993
- 11 True This Queen's bands manager sure is cocky. I mean, he's the bands manager. Who gives a shit that he was kidnapped? Now, if he were the EngSoc Prez, then he'd have a case.
Ran November 5, 1985
- 12 True Back in the eighties, birthday strippers always seemed to spring up in the pages of The Journal. We find it hard to believe that "everyone seemed to enjoy it," but what do we know?
Ran March 27, 1986

What other gags are there?

Yes, but she can drive a car...

"Medical researchers in Tokyo are studying 10-year-old Sayuri Tanaka's claim that she can see through her nose."

We didn't get this teaser, which was printed on December 7, 1976.

Male arrested after masturbating in library

"The (45-year-old) man 'masturbated in the library, and then got up and exited the library."

Some people just have too much time on their hands (among other things). Given that this is at least the second Journal story on masturbating madness in Queen's libraries, we have to stop and wonder. Originally ran March 22, 1991.

Bananas downed

"Bulging cheeks and distorted faces showed the agony endured by participants in the Gordon House First Annual Banana Eating Contest."

While the article's content is fairly mundane in nature, we thought that the headline from November 19, 1976 was a little too suggestive.

Queen's asked to nix "Star Wars" research

"He is 'certain that there is no research currently going on at Queen's related to this issue."

This article ran November 1, 1985. Now though it wasn't overly funny, it did lead us to assume that George Lucas was lobbying Queen's for researching future trilogy projects.

The Queen's Journal Reader's

NEW ICE STORM CONTEST DEADLINE

Friday, January 22nd, 1999
journal@post.queensu.ca • 272 Earl

Want to have experience in teaching Conversational ESL? Want to find out about other cultures and teaching overseas? Be an ESL Volunteer Tutor. Two-hour weekly commitment. Call 533-2472 or drop by the School of English at 96 Albert St.

X
Q
U
E
E
N
S
E
Z
E
M
E?

Researchers at The Exchange work overtime to bring you innovation.

We've got your

tickets.

Starting January 16, 1999

and everything else you need for life at university

9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JDUC • 545 2120

SPORTS & FITNESS

REVENGE SOUGHT
The Super Bowl teams have been set and there will be a chance for a repeat winner. With the defending champion Denver Broncos earning a return engagement by defeating the New York Jets in the AFC final, quarterback John Elway will get a chance to face his old coach Dan Reeves. Reeves led the Atlanta Falcons to a surprising win over the Minnesota Vikings and an even more eye-raising appearance in the Super Bowl. Reeves, who is recovering from recent heart surgery, was unceremoniously run out of Denver by John Elway, so this will be his opportunity to exact revenge. We're all rooting for you Dan.

YOUNG GUNS
Despite having one of the lowest payrolls in the league, the Ottawa Senators are now undefeated in their last eleven games (8-0-3). They are currently battling it out with the Toronto Maple Leafs for first place in the North Eastern Division. Contributing to the Senators' excellent season has been captain Alexei Yashin, who is in the top-10 in league scoring and goaltender Ron Tugnutt. Tugnutt has a minuscule goals against average of under 1.80 and was recently named player of the week. The team has overcome the loss of General Manager Pierre Gauthier to continue to be the most exciting young team in hockey.

ROCKET LANDING
After a long, drawn out hold-out, former Vancouver Canuck Pavel Bure has finally been traded to the Florida Panthers, but he isn't going alone. Joining the Russian whiner are defencemen Brett Hedican and Brad Ference, as well as a third round pick. The Canucks got former number one pick Ed Jovanovski, veteran forward Dave Gagner, Mike Brown, goalie Kevin Weekes, and a first-round pick. Vancouver general manager Brian Burke had to make a move with the Canucks struggling — only time will tell if it was a good one.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• The Sports Network would start airing some college basketball games because darts and billiards are growing tiresome.
• Now retired Packer great Reggie White would keep his controversial views to himself.
• All hockey men would follow the lead of Brian Burke and let holdouts suffer for a little while.

A moral victory

BY NEATE SAGER

The Queen's men's hockey team was twice fit to be tied last weekend, skating to 4-4 and 2-2 draws with the Guelph Gryphons and University of Toronto Varsity Blues, despite significant roster attrition due to injuries and unfortunate circumstances.

Queen's 4, Guelph 4 Queen's 2, U of T 2

"The guys did an unbelievable job concentrating on [who] we did have," commented Gaels' Head Coach Chris MacDonald.

On Saturday versus the OUA Mideast division leading Gryphons, the Gaels were staked to an early 2-0 lead on markers by Mike Sammon and Matt Thorne, each set up by the deft playmaking of Rob Mailloux. Just when the Gaels seemed to be sailing in calm waters, the club received a scare. With four minutes remaining in the opening period, standout defenceman Wes Booker was rendered motionless after a dangerous check into the boards.

Paramedics were needed to tend to the injured Gael, but thankfully, Booker turned out not to be seriously hurt and is currently out of action on a day-to-day basis.

After an extended intermission, the Gryphons climbed to within one courtesy of Gaels' netminder Jason Skilnick, who bungled a Guelph shoot-in. After Queen's reestablished their two goal lead, the visitors again pulled within a goal, as forward James Boyd swatted home a rebound only one second before the horn sounded.

Buoyed by the goal, Guelph seized momentum of the contest in the early stages of third period, as right wing Marcel Kars knotted the score at 3:20. This could have represented a serious blow to the depleted Gaels, who had been reduced to four able-bodied defencemen after the injuries to Booker and Sammon (slight concussion).

However, six minutes later, after several impressive stops by Skilnick, Rob Mailloux stepped to the fore, recording his fourth point of the evening, thrusting a centering pass to blueliner Ken Ronson, whose backhand nes-

Please see Injury on page 18

Men's volleyball stuffs York

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

With a gold medal performance at York's Excalibur Tournament during the holidays, the Golden Gaels men's volleyball team re-entered league play brimming with confidence and sporting a ninth-place ranking in the CIAU polls. The roll continued with a weekend sweep of the York University Yeomen in Toronto last weekend.

In Saturday's game, the Gaels smoked the home team 3-0, with 15-12, 15-3 and 15-13 set scores. The Gaels repeated the result against York the next day in a much harder fought 3-1 victory.

Having lost to the Yeomen at Bartlett Gym earlier in the year, these victories were key for better positioning in the league. "We lost at home and that was one we would like back. We had some internal problems which needed to be solved," said Head Coach Brenda Willis. "[However] our first win this weekend nullified that loss and the win in the second game sets us up more comfortably to host the semi-final."

The statistical stars of the weekend in Toronto were Jake Magolan, who also won the tournament MVP at the Excalibur, Greg Stevenson and Frederic Cotnoir.

As a whole, the team is simply playing better and more cohesively than it did in their first encounter with the Yeomen.

"Now that we have a few months together under our belt it seems like the team is working better as a unit," said second-year Phys-Ed student Scott Millington. "We seem to have

Please see High on page 19

YOU HEARD ME!

arctic STRONG lemonade

arctic STRONG lemonade

ALCOHOLIC LEMONADE 6.1% alc./vol. LEMONADE ALCOHOLIST

Available at your local beer store.

Gaels squander playoff opportunity

By ROBERT MACNEIL

With a playoff spot in sight, the Queen's Golden Gaels women's hockey team came up a little short, suffering consecutive defeats to the Guelph Gryphons last weekend. Coming off consecutive shutout victories at Windsor, the team came back to earth with 3-1 and 6-4 losses on Jock Harry Arena ice.

Guelph 3, Queen's 1
Guelph 6, Queen's 4

On Saturday, Queen's got off to a shaky start as forward Andrea Millard suffered what was first thought to be a broken leg, but it thankfully turned out to be only a bad sprain. In what was a close-checking affair, there were very few shots on goal for either team. Despite staying close for most of the game on the strength of goaltender Claudia Tom, the Gaels were no match for Guelph with Millard gone.

The lone Gaels' goal was scored on a scramble in front by Meredith Amin, who was set up by Sarah Reid, easily the best Queen's skater on the ice.

Sunday afternoon, the Gaels' effort was negated by poor officiating. After Colleen McDonald banged in a rebound to tie the game 1-1 after two minutes of play, Jess Mullen appeared to give Queen's the lead. Mullen battled in front of the Guelph net and eventually whacked the puck in, however, the referee claimed to have blown the whistle before the puck crossed the line, and the goal was disallowed.

Gael's captain Sarah Reid circles in search of the puck during Sunday's loss. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

"(We saw the) puck was in before he whistled," said Co-Coach Jacques Tremblay. Despite the questionable call, the Gaels entered the second period with a 1-1 tie.

Guelph jumped out quickly to a 2-1 lead when Krista Lehtbass scored 34 seconds into the period. Feisty Mullen responded with her first recognized goal of the game, after a good workout in front of the net. Mullen's strong work ethic continued minutes later when she swept down the right side and fired in her second goal of the game for a 3-2 Queen's lead.

A controversial play later in the period allowed Guelph to tie the game. Gaels' goalie Tom made the initial save on a routine shot and covered up the puck. The whistle wasn't blown, however, and Guelph knocked the puck loose and the score was 3-3.

"(Tom) took her hand off the puck, she thought (the official) had blown the whistle, or he was about to," said Tremblay.

After these two controversial calls, the morale of the Gaels was weakened and the third period resulted in three straight goals by Guelph, including two by Nicole Dossier who completed a hat trick.

The Gaels are now two points behind York for the final playoff spot, but the two teams play each other twice at the end of the season. Before Queen's looks ahead to those games, they must prepare for next weekend's road trip to Toronto, where they will take on the first-place Varsity Blues.

Injury problems continue

Continued from page 17

tled into the net behind Guelph's Mike Gowan, who had vexed the Gaels for much of the evening.

"Tonight was one of Mailloux's best games," said MacDonald. "He's finally figured out this league, and that's going to make him a much better player."

Unfortunately for the Gaels, a questionable roughing penalty assessed against Jason Flynn provided Guelph with an opportunity to tie the game, and at 16:21, centre Scott Swaltzer flicked in a rebound for his second goal of the night, sending the contest into overtime. Neither side was able to break the deadlock, as Skilnick refused to buckle under steady Guelph pressure, while Jeff Scobie and Mailloux each came tantalizingly close to picking up breakaway passes.

On Sunday afternoon against Varsity, the Gaels again drew first blood on a goal by Paul Lang five minutes into the proceedings. However, despite scoring chances, the Tricolour was unable to pad their total. The visitors tied the game late in the opening period, then pulled ahead with two minutes remaining in the middle frame, as Skilnick was pelted with 33 shots in the first two periods.

"Skilnick's giving us a chance to win," remarked MacDonald on his starting net-minder, who turned aside 82 of 88 shots in the two matches. "Especially during those stretches where we're under heavy pressure."

In the third period, the Gaels pushed for the tying goal, time and again coming close to scoring. Whereas the previous evening a late penalty had robbed Queen's of a potential victory, in this instance, it was the Gaels who benefited from a phantom penalty call, as Varsity's Scott Murchie was penalized for holding with 96 seconds remaining in regulation time. With six attackers to the Blues' four, the Gaels frantically swarmed the goal, and saw their persistence awarded when Matt Reid flipped home a loose puck from a scramble in the slot with a mere 14 seconds left.

Once again, the extra session resolved nothing, leaving the Gaels with a 3-9-6 record, with all six of the ties having occurred within the familiar confines of Jock Harry Arena.

"We've played steadily better since the RMC game," commented MacDonald. "Eventually we'll be healthy and we'll be able to continue playing good, solid hockey." The Gaels will take to the road the next two weekends, commencing with contests at Brock and Ryerson this weekend.

We'll miss you Michael High hopes

A message to those who never got the opportunity to know him

TIME CAPSULE - TUESDAY, JANUARY 19, 1999

TO BE OPENED IN THE YEAR 2045

I AM SURE THAT when this time capsule is unearthed, many changes will have occurred and many athletes will have stepped up and been considered the greatest of all time, but any such notions would be misguided and misinformed. Just the other day the greatest athlete of this generation — and in the minds of most, every generation — hung up his famous basketball sneakers and number 23 jersey.

Michael Jordan, like previous greats Pele, Mickey, Wilt and the Babe, became known to everyone, sports fan or not, by a single name: Michael. Jordan came to be an intrinsic part of popular culture, not just sporting culture. From his appearances in shoe commercials with movie stars, fast food commercials with cartoon characters to the larger than life size murals all over the world, a day didn't go by that M.J. didn't intrude upon our senses in some way.

It wasn't only winning nine scoring titles, two Olympic gold medals, six NBA titles, five regular season MVPs and six NBA Final MVPs, it was the manner by which he did it. Jordan rose up above all doubters, those that questioned his dedication to win or his ability to lead, and became the ultimate winner and the quintessential leader. It wasn't only his talent, it was his dedication and competitive spirit that made him a better player even while his innate skills diminished.

The way 'Air' Jordan played the game was above the tim, with confidence that no one could match and a style that could make your heart pound and stop, seemingly at the very same time.

Jordan was also able to keep the masses of media that followed him wondering what he would do next. After earning his third consecutive title and losing his father to a tragic murder, Jordan exchanged his basketball shoes for a pair of baseball spikes and a glove and joined the Chicago White Sox organization. After spending two years as a double 'A' spectacle, for good and bad reasons, Jordan came back to the sport he loved with two words — "I'm back."

The great Jordan is gone, and he went out the way everyone wishes they could, on top.

And back he was. After a slow start wearing an unnatural jersey number (#43), Jordan and the Chicago Bulls returned to old form and won three more championships in a row. This left a slew of rival players grasping for ways to stop the legend and at prayers for an opportunity to win a crown of their own. The opportunity is now. The great Jordan is gone, and he went out the way everyone wishes they could, on top. By singlehandedly winning the sixth and deciding game of his last NBA Final, including the game winning shot with little time remaining on the clock, he left basketball fans longing for more, but knowing that his timing was perfect.

As he walked into the sunset, many asked if he would ever return, and he responded that he was 99 per cent sure that his time as a hoopster was done and his time as a golfer and father had begun. When asked about the other one per cent, he responded that he was keeping it in his pocket because it was his, and nobody else could have it.

While most of you have not had the chance to see him live, take an opportunity to look him up on a viewing machine of some sort to get an idea of how great he is. To truly understand what I am talking about, look up the NCAA Championship

Please see Jordan on page 20

DID THE HOLIDAYS MAKE YOU BROKE?!

Take advantage of an on campus part time employment opportunity which offers valuable sales experience while working in a dynamic team setting. Queen's Telefundraising combines personal achievement with valuable interpersonal skills all during flexible evening hours. Applications at the Old Medical Building, room 303, COMSOC, ENGSOC, ASUS, CESA, outside the AMS and Career Services. Deadline: Friday, January 22, 1999 at noon. Info: 533-6746.

Continued from page 17

it a little more together then we did then."

While the cohesion was "Now that we have a few months together under our belt it seems like the team is working better."

Scott Millington, Phys-Ed '01 obvious against York, it was even clearer in the big tournament win, which Queen's earned by defeating American volleyball power Ball State and rival University of Toronto in the final. What made the victory even more impressive was the significant injuries that has crippled the Gaels. With numerous starters out of the line-up, including Millington, Cotnoir and Andy Lynn, bench players had to step up and they certainly did.

"[The tournament win] was a total team effort, it was certainly not an individual accomplishment," said modest MVP Magolan. "Reserves Brian English, Andrew Calder, Brian Bell and Kevin Latchford played really well and that is why we won. It was a good tournament as a team, the game against Ball State was the best of the year."

With road games against Toronto, who remain undefeated in league play, and Ryerson this weekend, the stretch run to the CIAU championships has begun and the team has high hopes.

"To make the CIAU [finals] has been our goal from the outset. If we don't go a lot of guys from the team will be very disappointed," said Millington, a Nepean native. "We have beaten a lot of good teams and it is just a matter of peaking at the right time."

Coping With Student Debt

The Canadian Association of Financial Planners in conjunction with the Society of Graduate and Professional Students is presenting a seminar on coping with student debt in the John Orr Room of the John Deutch Center from noon to 1:30 p.m. on Thursday, January 21. Refreshments will be served.

sale

Calvin Klein
underwear

BUY 2
GET 1
FREE !!

WHILE QUANTITIES LAST !!!

FUJI FOTONEX 210IX GIFT SET

$149<sup>98</sup>

- 2x (22.5-45mm) Fujinon Zoom Lens
- Auto flash with red-eye reduction
- Information Exchange (ix) for better photo
- Choice of 3 print sizes
- 3 rolls of Fuji film Nexia A200/25 and case

Free Mini Bear with your purchase (limited quantity)

Camera Kingston
foto source™

FROSH T-SHIRT BIDS!!!!

Wonno make Frosh T-shirts? Well, Orientation Roundtable is accepting bids for Frosh T-shirts at the front desk of the AMS office in the JDUC until 4:00 pm FEBRUARY 5TH, 1999. The fax number is (613) 545-9565. Bids should be addressed to Richard Young, Orientation Roundtable, and must take into consideration these specifics:

- ✓ There will be APPROXIMATELY 3,500 T-shirts needed in the following colours: grey (1760), royal blue (130), purple (500), yellow (90), forest green (200), orange (150), beige (30) and red (700)
- ✓ There will be 2 different SCREEN PRINTED designs on the front of the shirts, and 10 on the back
- ✓ Sizing will be one size fits all
- ✓ T-shirts will be 9oz cotton, short-sleeved, and double stitched
- ✓ Bids must include ALL FEES (tax, set-up, delivery, etc.)

Bids will be evaluated not only on price, but on quality of product and benefit to Queen's University. Potential companies will be asked to make a presentation to the Roundtable. For more info, please contact Richard Young of the Campus Activities Office at 533-6000 Ext. 74819 or e-mail at Truy@qlink.queensu.ca. Thanks for your interest and GOOD LUCK!!!

In the game

Working the Queen's sporting beat

Women's basketball

The women's basketball team rebounded from last weekend's last-second defeat in a big way, crushing the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees, 83-75. This leaves the Gaels' record at 3-6 and in a very precarious position as far as making the playoffs. The squad hopes to bounce back this weekend against Rycerson and Laurentian on the home court.

On Saturday, Queen's handed Carleton a 77-56 pasting. Steph 'long range' Glancey continued her recent scoring binge with 24 points, hitting five of eight from behind the three-point arc and seven of seven from the free throw line. Glancey's phenomenal day was supplemented by a total team performance, including 16 points from Deane Shelly and 12 off the hand of Andrea Thomson. On the whole, the team shot a remarkable 90 per cent from the charity stripe and 56 per cent from behind the three-point stripe.

The team continued its winning ways on Sunday evening, soundly defeating Ottawa 65-48. 'Long range' Glancey paced the team again in the scoring department with 17 points. Jen Jackson also lit up the Gee-Gees for 17 points, while Andrea Thomson, who has been hot of late, contributed 12 points. The team improves their record to 6-3, good for third-place in the OUA East.

Men's basketball

The men's basketball team saw less success than their female counterparts in their voyage to Canada's capital city, as they lost both encounters. Against Carleton on Saturday the team lost a close one, 67-64. The team was then narrowly beaten again, this time by the University of Ottawa Gee-Gees, 83-75. This leaves the Gaels' record at 3-6 and in a very precarious position as far as making the playoffs. The squad hopes to bounce back this weekend against Rycerson and Laurentian on the home court.

At the Queen's Open Tournament the

Wrestling

Gaels male wrestlers finished a disappointing sixth in the overall standings. Donovan Beth paced the team with a third-place finish in the 76 kg division and Derek Beattie finished fourth in the 82 kg weight class. On the women's side, Queen's again finished sixth overall, with outstanding performances coming from Tara Feeney and Lara Bozablian, who finished second and third respectively in the 61 kg weight class.

At the Dartmouth Adidas Relays

Track & Field

there were numerous outstanding performances. Gold medals were won in the triple jump by Chike Madueme, who also won a bronze in the long jump, and in the high jump by Nimrod Major. Silver medals were earned by the distance medley relay team of Jennifer Clarke, Lisa Curran, Tara Lohmann and Julia Thomas. In addition to Madueme's bronze medal, Derek Caveney finished third in the 5,000 metre run.

Jordan: a time capsule

Continued from page 18

game of 1982 where an 18-year old North Carolina freshman, Jordan that is, leapt onto the national stage with the game winning shot. But that was only the beginning.

Nobody of this generation will forget the 63 points he scored against Larry Bird and the Boston Celtics at the Boston Garden in the 1986 playoffs or the series winning shot at Cleveland in 1989. But Jordan was still just getting warm.

The images that have left an indelible mark on the Jordan legend came during his run of six titles. The first was a move for the ages against the Los Angeles Lakers in the 1991 final. It was a driving, swooping lay-up, during which Jordan changed hands in mid-flight. It is simply remembered by broadcaster Marv Albert bellowing "what a spectacular move." The second picture that will never be forgotten was that of Jordan hugging the championship trophy and openly weeping, as he had answered all of the doubters who questioned his ability to win. The final image is the last one we will most likely see. The picture of Jordan holding his hand high after sinking the game, series and championship winner, in what turned out to be his last game, is the one that will most likely serve as his legacy. To see any of these images as a picture or video footage can show all that is great about this man as a player and why he became a legend.

The intense desire to win and his competitive fire served him well in sport, but sometimes hindered him in life. His insatiable appetite for competition led to high stakes poker, large 'skins' on the golf course and critical opinion of those who did not share his desire to compete. This same competitive spirit also led to the end of his basketball career, as once he did not feel competition, he did not want to continue to play the game with less intensity.

It wasn't only winning nine scoring titles, two Olympic gold medals, six NBA titles, five regular season MVPs and six NBA Final MVPs, it was the manner by which he did it.

At the time of M.J.'s departure the world of sports as we knew it was crumbling around him. With what was once a game becoming more and more of a business, the basketball fans began to question all that was wrong with the NBA, but never questioned Michael. While his colleagues alienated themselves, he endeared himself and furthered his image as not only a great athlete, but a great man. Many ask why he didn't do more for society with all the power he held and maybe in the future he will, but as of today, he did all that he could during his time.

Many people in our time have belied the fact that his impressive accomplishments and incredible class would never be duplicated, but nothing is impossible. It just seems that Jordan was cut from a mold that was used once and then destroyed. In the press conference to announce his retirement Jordan concluded by saying in his laconic manner, that he expected someone would emerge and create his own legend that may even surpass his own. I hope for every sports fan's sake that he was right.

Adam Kaminsky is happy that Karl Malone can now win a championship.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Back in Line

Strategic Planning: (from left) Ben Chaplin, John Cusack, and Jim Caviezel await the attack.

Terrence Malick returns to cinema with a contender

MOVIE REVIEW

The Thin Red Line
Catarqui Theatres

By JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

The Thin Red Line will not be as financially successful as another recent World War II film, Saving Private Ryan, nor will this film be as loved or revered as Steven Spielberg's ultra-graphic epic.

The Thin Red Line is a peculiar film, one that may be so entirely outside of our expectations that there are no clear models on which to judge it. Comparisons to previous films that are similarly concerned with World War II, Saving Private Ryan being first and foremost among them, are inevitable but ultimately of only trivial significance. The Thin Red Line is not "about" World War

II so much as it is "about" survival — about the eternal cycle of violence that humanity has brought upon itself.

The Thin Red Line is unparalleled in recent western cinema; cameras move with often Hitchcockian deviousness, tantalizing us with what lies outside the frame or inside the character's mind.

It is a high-minded film, so much so that it may alienate more audience members than it attracts. Director and screenwriter Terrence Malick, a maverick New Hollywood legend making his first new film in nearly 20 years, has produced something that is more abstract and meditative than any war movie that has preceded it, and is sometimes paralyzing so.

One cannot imagine a more beautiful war film, if such a thing can be said to exist. Malick, known as something of an image lyricist in his previous films, relies heavily on his cinematographer (John Toll, whose work in this film is breathtaking, as is Hans Zimmer's dark, brooding score) to provide meaning and narrative through an often purely visual language.

Soldiers become fixated on a flower or piece of grass swaying in the breeze in the middle of a bloody and desperate battle; soft sunlight filters through primordial tree-tops as troops carry out their orders. The deft subtlety with which Malick's musings pervade The Thin Red Line is unparalleled in recent western cinema; cameras move with often Hitchcockian deviousness, tantalizing us with what lies outside the frame or inside the character's mind.

The Thin Red Line ceaselessly gropes for a transcendental, unseen and redemptive spiritual reality that never quite reveals itself.

Malick's use of narration — again, in a sparse and unusual manner — gives the film an immediacy and insight that has been alternately criticized as sophomoric or praised as philosophically legitimate. We are often unsure who the speaker is in the voice-over segments, reinforcing one of the film's fundamental tenants — the involvement of each individual in the universality of the human experience. The Thin Red Line ceaselessly gropes for a transcendental, unseen and redemptive spiritual reality that never quite reveals itself. The story is told from the point of view of an island (references to isolation, islands and alienation abound in the film) and thus attempts to remove the septic of cultural bias from the film's perspective. We see the island before the war reaches it, and dwell on it after it departs; we come to see the island as a symbol not merely of the individual, but also of the timelessness of both violence and nature.

While there is certainly merit to this observation, it should be realized that Malick is concerned here with what one critic has labeled a "larger, questing, self-tormenting consciousness."

Criticism has been leveled against the film for its perceived weak characterization. While there is certainly merit to this observation, it should be realized that Malick is concerned here with what one critic has labeled a "larger, questing, self-tormenting consciousness." Sociological and psychological detail is superseded by a concern with the metaphysical, in which individuality is less important than collectivity and commonality.

There are performances within the film that are as nuanced and subtle as Malick's tender direction. Nick Nolte adds another powerful character to his already distinguished career, playing a harsh, determined and tortured Lieutenant Colonel who is the antithesis of Elias Koteas's soft-hearted, empathetic and ineffective Captain. Similarly, Sean Penn's inaccessible, stony First Sergeant Welsh is a perfect foil for Jim Caviezel's

Please see Malick on page 25

Penn-ed down: Sean Penn (center) leads his troops in The Thin Red Line.

Creative caffeine

Café serves coffee, art and chat

Work and play: Café visitor tests out the offerings.

CAFE REVIEW

By DEIRDRE SWAIN

Despite the artistic name, the owners of the Creative Café have great business sense.

In a town that brims with coffee shops, Lincoln Flanagan and his mother Suzanne Renaud have done something different; they've created a space for their customers to express their artistic instincts while enjoying a nice cup of coffee.

The Creative Café, located at 242 Wellington St. is the brainchild of Renaud, a former social worker who wanted to retire and still do something good for the community. When she first encountered a similar business in Montreal, she thought about franchising it, but decided instead to strike out on her own. Flanagan, a student and competitive swimmer, chose to take a year off school both to train and to help his mother with her new venture. It took nine months of tedeocating and hard work, but on September 14, the café opened, and has been enjoying some success.

Customers enthusiastically comment on the café's reasonable prices and creative concept.

Please see Creative on page 24

AMS Student Trustee Election

Spend* money that isn't yours!!!

Sit on the Board of Trustees
for Queen's University

*Help to shape the future of QUEEN'S and decide where the money is going to be spent!

Nomination Period:

JANUARY 15 @ 9:00AM

TO

JANUARY 26 @ 5:00pm

Nomination packages are available at the Front Desk of the AMS.

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT Cathy, Carolyn or Shawn in the Commission of Internal Affairs at 533-6000 ext. 74815

WANTED

Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its 50-node Novell network, Web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS communications services, general office and numerous committees and activities.

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. 11me commitment ranges between 10-20hrs/wk

Questions?

Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chris@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherrin, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a Windows NT networking environment,
- have good communication & organizational skills,
- have a working knowledge of MS Office,
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment,
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC.
Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

Varsity Blues blew

Movie suffers from a predictable script and bland acting

Feeling Blue: Van Der Beek and friends live the game.

Varsity Blues
Capitol Theatres

By DAN ROWE

John Hughes and Amy Heckerling must be smiling somewhere, because films geared to hormonally imbalanced young people are everywhere.

The return of the teen movie to prominence in the late nineties has not gone unnoticed. SPIN recently printed a compendium of the genre's offerings in their January issue and most studios have attempted to cash in on the popularity of Kevin Williamson's movies filled with attractive young people killing and being killed.

The star of the ubiquitous Williamson TV hit Dawson's Creek, James Van Der Beek, is the star of Varsity Blues. Van Der Beek plays Johnny Moxon, the hopelessly sensitive, even bookish, but positively dreamy backup quarterback for the West Canaan Coyotes. All the Kurt Vonnegut reading heartthrob wants to do is finish the season, spend Friday nights with his girlfriend and go to Brown University on an academic scholarship.

Of course, as it must, everything goes wrong when injury fells All-State quarterback Lance Harbor (Paul Walker) who, as it happens, is the older brother of Moxon's girlfriend Jules, played by Amy Smart. This all-too-likely turn of events forces the hero, played blandly by Van Der Beek, to spring into action.

Films geared to hormonally imbalanced young people are everywhere.

Moxon is caught having to deal with the expectations of a girlfriend sick of football, a father who seeks glory vicariously through his son, a desert-topping clad cheerleader, a fascist football coach with a Lenin-esque statue of himself in the endzone, and a Texas town so mad about football it will overlook the robbery of a police car because it could get the star wide receiver in trouble.

While Van Der Beek's performance is as stale and unoriginal as week-old white bread, Jon Voight steals the show. Voight's solid and fun performance as the not-so-fun Bud Kilmer, the hard-driving, win-at-all-costs football coach, is by far the best in the film. However, Voight is stuck with a script that relies on old clichés and a formula that isn't much different from the 1988 Anthony Michael Hall, Robert Downey Jr., and Uma Thurman vehicle, Johnny B. Good.

More troubling than the rehearsed, typical storyline was the portrayal of some of the characters. The Coyotes' star offensive lineman, aptly-named Billy Bob (Ron Lester), is extraordinarily fat and has a number of health problems which seem to be partially attributed to his extreme girth, but the only really successful humour in the film is derived from Billy Bob's troublesome obesity.

Worse still is the way in which the film portrays females. Outside of Jules, and Moxon's mother there isn't a female character who doesn't appear in some state of undress.

Moxon is caught having to deal with... a fascist football coach with a Lenin-esque statue of himself in the endzone.

A lengthy and gratuitous scene in The Landing Strip, West Canaan's strip bar, has no real purpose in the movie other than to serve as the punchline to a drawn out and bad joke and excite the young boys whose parents thought they were taking them to a sports movie. All of this is surprising when it seems that a large part of the audience for this film includes young girls who were drawn by the alleged star power of James Van Der Beek.

Up the Creek?: Van Der Beek's acting is lacklustre.

One thing the film does seem to do well is portray football in a fairly accurate way during the game sequences. Director Brian Robbins, who acted in the eighties teen sit-com Head of the Class, seems to have a good grasp of the game and the action looks real which is the chief complaint of most sports fans about movies with a sports theme.

While Van Der Beek's performance is as stale and unoriginal as week old white bread, Jon Voight steals the show.

Like most of the pictures in the growing cannon of films with teens and for teens, Varsity Blues follows the tried and true formula of giving teens the cinematic pahlum that the suits on Hollywood's backlots think they will wait in line for. Sadly, the suits are usually right.

SENATE COMMITTEES NEED STUDENT MEMBERS

Academic Development, Educational Equity, Information Technology ... and more

Terms start September 1
Apply now! Do it before Valentine's Day
Deadline: February 14

www.queensu.ca/secretariat/senate/vacancy

or call 533-6095
or visit MACKINTOSH-CORRY, B400

Still sure about Engineering but not sure about university?

St. Lawrence College offers you an alternative! You may qualify for advanced standing in the following Engineering Technology programs: Civil, Computer, Electronics, and Computerized Automation and Control.

St. Lawrence College offers a more practical, skills-oriented approach to learning in smaller classes using curriculum and facilities that are continually being updated. Graduates are in demand and are important members of the engineering team.

Call our school of Engineering Technology & Trades now and we'll arrange for you to meet with faculty and students, check out labs, and sit in on classes.

For more information: call 544-5400 ext.1501

Engineering Technology

ISO 9001 Registered

Queen's University Libraries and the AMS Accessibility

invite you, our campus colleagues and students to attend an open House of the Adaptive Technology Lab, Douglas Library

Monday, January 25, 1999
Between 3:00 to 5:00pm (remarks at 3:15)

Where: Adaptive Technology Lab, Douglas Library, Main Floor
Refreshments provided

Find out how Queen's Students with disabilities use the Lab's Adaptive technology. The Open House will showcase our newest acquisitions, such as: Naturally Speaking, Kurzweil 1000 and Zoom Text Xtra, funded by the generous support of students through the AMS Accessibility Task Force.

A&E

in brief

15 minutes of fame: 60 Minutes II's claim as the first media crew to enter Krasnoyarsk-26 with a television crew was deemed false. NBC spokeswoman Hilary Smith explained that NBC News has been reporting the story for more than four years. Krasnoyarsk-26 is a Siberian city where plutonium is made for nuclear bombs.

Mick feels a kick: Texas-born model Jerry Hall has called it quits with Rolling Stone Mick Jagger last Friday. Hall has threatened to divorce the rock legend several times before. The latest incident between the famous couple had a Brazilian model claiming to be pregnant with Jagger's child.

Stern sentence: Howard Stern's stalker was sentenced for harassing the shock jock. The lurking obsessor will spend two and a half years in the slammer, nearly twice the amount of time normally doled out by federal guidelines. Michael Lance Carvin repeatedly sent letters which threatened Stern and his family.

Bocelli cancels shows: Opera singer Andrea Bocelli was forced to cancel his West Coast tour due to a throat infection. The tenor was to perform last Wednesday in San Francisco. The Grammy-nominated singer was covered by James Taylor and Robin Williams for an appearance he was scheduled to make at the cancer center at the University of California.

Marvelling at Zombie: Former White Zombie vocalist Rob Zombie, following the success of his solo album, Hellbilly Deluxe, is preparing to release his comic book series, "Spookshow International." Zombie was motivated by the state of today's comic books, which he said were, "...just too incestuous."

Off the Wall

Fresh new magazine a pleasant sight

wallpaper*
Time Life Entertainment Group Ltd.

By LIUAN KIM

Not surprisingly, *wallpaper** definitely has its fair share of beautiful people. But the most stunning aspects of the entire magazine did not wear silk boxer shorts or ripple 6-pack abs.

Nope, the sweetest things were either shalacked or covered with homemade dressing. The subheader explains it all: "The stuff that surrounds you."

I have to say thank you to the mastermind who has created a magazine, which could either be labeled as fashion or entertainment, that doesn't suffocate itself with mundane articles such as "Tone it by tonight." *wallpaper** revolves itself around the fresh trends that are graciously making their way into North American homes.

The UK-based magazine is intelligent in its approach. An article entitled "Berlin Ambition" examines the historical aftermath of the Berlin Wall and to complement the study, the writer explains the revamping of the interior design of many embassies which are slowly in progress.

Of course, a magazine cannot function solely on artistic merit. Selling is part of the vicious game, commercializing is an entirely different ballpark. *wallpaper** lays out the best buys, but not the ordinary items you would expect. The magazine tracks down odds and ends from all around world and develops them as part of its scheme to make the consumer think twice about purchasing the same old mahogany coffee table with marching coasters. Instead, try the supermodel television — waif-like with pristine visual quality.

Now, if being a couch potato is not part of your scene, then perhaps its time you get down to that bomb shelter of yours and give it the TLC it deserves. That's right, *wallpaper** offers great tips on how to make the millennial shelter into a comfortable living space packed full with champagne and black market Heinz baked beans.

Speaking of food, various recipes are scattered within different articles throughout the magazine. Not only do they promote themselves by satisfying the buds, but the food looks really sexy. A recipe for lox seems almost appealing as a lingerie campaign.

Now, if being a couch potato is not part of your scene, then perhaps its time you get down to that bomb shelter of yours and give it the TLC it deserves.

Pictures are valuable to the magazine's appeal. The shots are clean and make sense. It's important that a publication do such a thing, since visuals are naturally the first focus point.

Alumni Achievement Award Nominations Requested

The Alumni Association requests nominations for the 1999 Alumni Achievement Award. This award is presented annually to "an alumna/us who has demonstrated the high ideals imparted by a university education through a significant contribution to the arts or sciences, to the public service, to leadership in business, industry or a profession, and to community, charitable or volunteer work." Individuals or Branches may submit nominations.

Deadline for nominations is February 26, 1999. For more information, please contact Deborah Shea, Secretary, Alumni Achievement Award Committee, Summerhill or call 1-800-267-7837 (toll free) or 533-2060.

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

exchange

Events List

ON SALE NOW

A CHORUS LINE

Jan 20 - 23rd

$12

Tickets At:

exchange

Creative cup of coffee

continued from page 21

These two young women make it obvious that Flanagan is not far off when he says the concept is spreading all over North America. The Kingston version is a small, brightly lit space that seats 20, where the clientele can buy bisque — pre-glazed ceramic — items, paint them however they wish, and have them glazed and fired on-site within a matter of days.

The customers do not hesitate to joke with [Flanagan], use the sink behind the counter and generally do away with all customer-employee boundaries.

The walls are lined with examples of lovely pieces created by customers. Also prominent is a framed poster informing the interested customer about different types of paint brushes their effects.

The paints, firing and glazing are all included in the price: $6 per hour for students, seniors and children under 13, and $8 per hour for adults. The price is charged only while the customers are painting, and stencils and idea books are provided for the artistically challenged.

The cost of the pieces are quite varied, ranging from $2 for doorknobs to $8 for figurines to more than $20 for pizza plates and vases.

The Café offers special deals for the truly prolific: there are unlimited studio-time passes that range from $60 to $180, a two-for-one special on Friday nights, with another for seniors, on Wednesday mornings, and a "Frequent Fun" program whereby after five visits the customer gets a free mug to decorate. The space is also available for special catered parties, and the Café runs school programs and a kids camp over March break to appeal to young artists.

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

"We like to look after our customers," says Flanagan. "We keep them informed about special events through our mailing list, and let them know if our hours change or if items go on sale."

Flanagan added that the Café was extremely busy through the pre-Christmas season, and with Valentine's Day fast approaching, he expects it to be swamped again soon.

It is evident that his easy rapport with the clientele is part of the Café's appeal. The customers do not hesitate to joke with him, use the sink behind the counter and generally do away with all customer-employee boundaries common to most service industry businesses.

The price is charged only while the customers are painting, and stencils and idea books are provided for the artistically challenged.

With the Creative Café, Kingston has become part of a growing trend, where sipping lattes is combined with personal expression.

Anyone looking for a new twist on "going out for coffee" would do well to check it out. The café's hours are Tuesday-Thursday, 12-8, Friday 12-10, Saturday 12-6 and Sunday 12-4.

It's a chance to get out your artistic urges, and remember, Valentine's Day is coming.

"Erotica" stimulating Donison makes four seasons pleasurable

Red hot

continued from page 21

Christopher Donison conducted the World Premiere of "Symphony Erotica" last Friday evening at Grant Hall.

SYMPHONY REVIEW

By HEATHER MACDONALD

Unfinished and Just Finished was the whimsical title given to the Kingston Symphony Association's Friday Night Live Series this past weekend by their guest conductor Christopher Donison.

Donison maintained a unique flow of harmony, blending skill and passion and dispersing it to each musician.

After an uplifting opening number of Beethoven's "Overture to The Creatures of Prometheus," Donison explained his reasoning for choosing Unfinished and Just Finished as the title of the evening's performance. The second piece of the evening, Schubert's "Symphony No. 8 in B minor (Unfinished)," was the inspiration for the beginning of the title. The latter part, Just Finished, because Donison's own symphony, "Symphony Erotica," had only been finished the previous evening.

With an audience of approximately 300 people, both young and old, Donison valiantly led the musicians through a two hour performance.

During the three pieces performed, Donison maintained a unique flow of harmony, blending skill and passion and dispersing it to each musician.

Each piece in itself was performed with an excellent array of tempo, pitch, dynamics and tone, which, in turn, provided an intense blend of listening delight.

Performed in Grant Hall, the acoustics echoed from wall to wall, providing every seat in the house with an equally enjoyable listening environment.

As for the music itself, both Beethoven's and Schubert's pieces prepared the audience for the magnificent debut of Donison's symphony.

"Symphony Erotica" was presented in four parts, each containing three movements and corresponding to the four seasons of the year. The tempo and style of the four parts fluctuated as the seasons changed, beginning in the spring and summer months as a down-tempo classical interpretation and progressing into a contemporary style throughout the fall and winter.

As I watched the music being performed, my emotions fluctuated with every change in tone. I was excited, passionate, and then timid.

Donison revealed in the program that each movement is able to be played individually or in a set group, but can only be played in the sequence written. The movements are designed so that they overlap one another in order to create a strong flow of music while played as one piece.

As I watched the music being performed by the varied group of musicians, my emotions fluctuated with every change in tone. I was excited, passionate, and then timid. All of my emotions seemed to run into each other — never was I left with only my thoughts, keeping in tune with the style of Donison's symphony. As an evening of music appreciation, or simply a night on the town, I would recommend an evening at the symphony to all.

beatific and idealist Private Witt.

In producing a film that is more a stylized tone poem than action film, far more abstract than real, Malick has created what has been called "an epic aestheticization of war."

It is unfair and unsatisfying to judge The Thin Red Line by the same standards that one applies to conventional cinema and certainly that one applies to previous war movies; this film belongs to the genre of meditative cinema, in which thought and idea supersede plot and action.

This is a film about violence, longing and belonging, and it is in the quest for an understanding of these things that The Thin Red Line achieves its fascinating and peculiar greatness — not in the ambiguous and mystical answers that the film offers.

Career Services at Queen's... Career Services at Queen's... Career Services at Queen's <http://careers.queensu.ca>..... <http://careers.queensu.ca>..... <http://careers.queensu.ca>
 St. Lawrence Building..... St. Lawrence Building..... St. Lawrence Building

Your Summer Job Search TO DO LIST

CHECK OUT ..... the Resource Centre at Career Services
 We have a LOAD of directories, calendars, self-help books and company files.

CHECK OUT .... the Career Services website at <http://careers.queensu.ca>
 On-line job postings, links to off campus sites, career/job information

SIGNUP... for a Workshop....
 50 minutes, free.... Career Search 101, Summer Job Search, Resume Writing, On Campus Recruiting Workshop, Graduate School Bound, Graduate Job Search, Skills, Interviewing, Using the Internet, Transition to Work & Networking

SIGNUP ... for a Resume Spot check...
 15 minutes... held almost daily... Signup at Career Services.

CHECK OUT ...the boards at Career Services
 Updated regularly with opportunities you can apply to directly.

ATTEND ... Summer Job Fair
 January 20th, 1999
 Grant Hall
 10:30 - 2:30 p.m.

<http://careers.queensu.ca> ..... <http://careers.queensu.ca> ..... <http://careers.queensu.ca>
 St. Lawrence Building..... St. Lawrence Building..... St. Lawrence Building

CFRC
 QUEEN'S RADIO
 STEREO 101.9 FM

YOUR CAMPUS/ COMMUNITY RADIO STATION...

CFRC FM 101.9 CARRUTHERS HALL

8AM - 3PM, MONDAY - SUNDAY

BUSINESS OFFICE: 533-2121

REQUEST LINE: 536-1019

HTTP://WWW.QUEENSU.CA/CFRC/
CFRCFM@POST.QUEENSU.CA

ROOTS KINGSTON

SAVE! UP TO 50% OFF

WINTER SALE EVENT

sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult, Kids & Baby

229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
 1873

Nominations for the position of editor(s)-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal are now open.

All nominations should be submitted in person to Keith Gerein, Co-editor-in-chief.

Please call 533-2800 for details.

Nominations close Friday, January 29 at 5 p.m.

H'Art and soul

Art studio provides artwork and community support

Warm H'art: Katherine Porter and Elspeth Carmichael head the studio's event.

ART REVIEW

BY SARAH CROSBIE

Home is where the heart is for students who work at the H'art Studio in downtown Kingston.

The studio and gallery is a centre where mentally and physically challenged youth and young adults in the Kingston area can participate in daily work activities to create functional art-work.

There are 15 participants, who range in age from 16 to 70 years old, who work regularly at the studio, many of whom are autistic or have downs syndrome. The participants create artwork ranging from mirrors to coat hangers to sculptures to chalk boards and other decorative pieces which the studio sells and for which the artists receive commission.

Many of the pieces would be a great way to brighten students' houses.

The H'art Studio is only funded by the generosity of the community and through the sales of the art work. According to Elspeth Carmichael, who is in charge of the studio's development, the studio is really a business, in that it teaches people "how to development, create, market and sell their art work."

As I toured around the studio I thought to myself that many of the pieces, like the chalk boards and mirrors, would be not only functional, but also a great way to brighten students' houses in the dreary winter months.

The H'art Studio is only funded by the generosity of the community and through the sales of the art work.

The studio is working on a group of pieces entitled, "Springing For Heart," which are sculptures of people with raised arms. These figures symbolize welcoming in the new and the idea of people opening their hearts to others. Also, as February 14th draws near and the stress of finding that unique gift for that special someone begins to prey on your senses, H'art Studio has painted bouquets with sayings like, "I love you," "Hug Me" and "Kiss Me" at the studio which would be great Valentine's Day gifts.

The studio, whose slogan is "art from the heart of young adults with special needs" is always accepting people with special needs, as well as anyone who is interested in volunteering at the H'art Studio.

Anyone who is interested in contemporary folk art, becoming part of the program, which allows participants to communicate through artwork and be a part of a supportive community, volunteering or just need a little something to brighten their day should visit the studio located on 2 Montreal St. or call 545-1392.

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

Get Out There!

ASUS SCHOLARSHIP

ARE YOU GRADUATING FROM ARTS AND SCIENCE?

ARE YOU PROUD OF YOUR ACADEMIC AND EXTRACURRICULAR ACHIEVEMENT AT QUEEN'S?

WOULD YOU LIKE $1000?

ASUS will be awarding up to three (3) $1000 scholarships to graduating Arts and Science students (one each in Humanities, Social Sciences, and Natural/Physical Sciences) with strong academic records and outstanding extracurricular contributions to Queen's. The deadline for the scholarship application has been extended until Monday, Jan. 25, 1999. Drop by The Core (183 University) or call 533-6278 for more information.

Just Win It.

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from January 15th to January 21st: 546-5395

- A Civil Action 1:40, 4:20, 7:10, 9:45
- You've Got Mail 1:30, 7:20, 10:05
- Star Trek 4:30
- In Dreams 2:00, 4:35, 7:30, 10:10
- First Sight 1:00, 4:00, 7:00, 9:55
- Varsity Blues 1:45, 4:25, 7:15, 9:50
- Shakespeare in Love 1:10, 4:10, 7:05, 10:00
- Prince of Egypt 1:20, 4:05, 6:50
- Enemy of the State 9:20

Playing at the Cataragui Cineplex from January 15th to January 21st: 389-7442 (Matinees are Friday, Saturday and Sunday)

- Rugrats 1:00, 3:15, 5:25
- The Faculty 7:35, 9:50
- Virus 12:40, 2:55, 5:05, 7:15, 10:00
- Patch Adams 1:10, 3:50, 6:55, 9:30
- Waking Ned Devine 12:50, 3:05, 6:55, 9:30
- Stepmom 1:20, 4:00, 6:45, 9:20
- The Thin Red Line 12:30, 4:15, 8:15

Live Music:

The Edward Day Gallery: 547-0774

On Wednesday January 20th at 8 p.m., Canadian Sing-Songwriter Connie Kaldor in Concert. Tickets are $17.50

Theatre:

The Grand Theatre: 530-2050

Queen's Musical Theatre presents award winning musical, The Chorus Line from January 20-23. Tickets are $12-$14 and can be purchased at the Grand Theatre Box Office or UBS.

Earl St. Theatre (KCVI)

Playing on February 3, 4, 5 and 6, Sunesit Productions Presents For the Love of Oz a musical comedy about a middle-aged Dorothy. Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for students. Shows start at 7:30, with a Saturday matinee at 2 p.m.

Visual Art:

The Union Gallery:

The Union Gallery presents Cezanne's Closet, an annual gala fundraiser for the Union Gallery. More than 100 works of art will be exhibited. When ticket holders have their number drawn, they have 30 seconds to choose their favourite piece. Tickets are $100 and entitle two guests to attend the event and guarantees a piece of art. The event will be held on Saturday, February 6 at the Howard Johnson Hotel. For more information, contact the Union Day Gallery.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

Answers to last week's puzzle

ACROSS

- 1. Yearly sheep
- 4. Alcoholic beverage
- 8. Whiteness with frost
- 9. Warmest season
- 11. Civilian dress
- 12. What Gabriel sounded
- 14. Dwarfish sprite
- 15. Exclamation of annoyance
- 17. Hindu philosophy
- 18. Malt beverage
- 19. Put on
- 20. Thus
- 21. Isolate
- 24. Transmitted
- 25. Quoit's target
- 26. Negative vote
- 28. Hemingway's soubriquet
- 31. Ten tens
- 35. Greek letter
- 36. Failure
- 37. In the dumps
- 39. Close
- 41. Two of a kind
- 42. Theatrical warming
- 43. Of a place
- 45. Dark wood
- 47. Continued story
- 48. Category
- 49. Bring up

DOWN

- 1. Brittle candy
- 2. Have a meal
- 3. Pancake pan
- 4. Mr. Bacharach
- 5. Big bird
- 6. TV award
- 7. Sleep
- 8. Ship frames
- 9. Taxicab parking space
- 10. Sigurd's foster father
- 11. ___ culpa
- 13. Diplomacy
- 16. Needing sanding
- 22. Accountant
- 23. Boredom
- 24. ___ Darya
- 27. Prepare for mailing

50. Drunkard

- 28. Nuisance
- 29. Musketeer of fiction
- 30. Destitute person
- 32. "Ralph Roister Doister" author
- 33. Bodyguard
- 34. Overcome with fear
- 38. "The Partridge Family" actress
- 40. Put out of breath
- 41. Comedian Jack
- 44. Cloak-and-dagger group
- 46. Frightening word

Attention University Graduates

Earn an E.C.E. Diploma in Only 8 Months

Apply Now for the Intensive E.C.E. Program at Sheridan College.

Starts May 10, 1999.

To receive information: Call: 416-480-1320

Email: sheridan@minacs.com Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/edserv/cedede.htm

ASUS ARTS & SCIENCE FORMAL '99

The party of the year is on its way.

Don't Miss It.

Tickets go on sale Monday, Jan. 25, 1999 $65

@ the UBS, JDUC Information Centre, and the ASUS Core.

Tickets will NOT be on sale after Friday, Feb. 12, 1999.

What are you waiting for?

For more information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at ASUS, 183 University, 533-6000 x75805.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

THE JOURNAL

1873

Nominations for the position of editor(s)-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal are now open.

All nominations should be submitted in person to Keith Gerein, Co-editor-in-chief.

Please call 533-2800 for details.

Nominations close Friday, January 29 at 5 p.m.

Classifieds

$ .99

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.kweb.com/bluerof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

A CHORUS LINE Queen's Musical Theatre presents Tony Award winning musical, January 14th - 16th, January 20th - 23rd at the Grand Theatre. Tickets $12 - 14 available now at the Grand box office or UBS.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10. Innd go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY: We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

QUEEN'S INTER-UNIVERSITY BASEBALL TEAM indoor workouts begin Sunday January 17th at McArthur Gym (West Campus) 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. January 24th 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. P.E.C. For more info 68sm1. All welcome.

AMERICAN SIGN LANGUAGE COURSE offered this term! Sign up for Monday or Tuesday classes, 6 - 9 p.m., beginning January 25th and 26th at the AMS Front Desk. Cost is $100 for ten weeks. Space is limited!

TBC BIKE REPAIRS/SALES/RENTALS We do: minor repairs, winter tune-ups, refurbish old bikes, and sell used bikes and bike parts. Call 542-0964 or drop by 132 Ordinance St.

ARE YOU GRADUATING from Arts and Science this year? Are you proud of your accomplishments at Queen's? If so, you can apply for an ASUS scholarship worth $1000.00!!! Deadline has been extended until Monday, January 25th, 1999!!! Come by the Core at 163 University Ave to pick up an application or for more info.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS: Our next class features quick, hearty, comforting soups. Call the Health Educator at 533-6712 to sign up for this session Monday, January 25th 5:30 - 7:00 p.m. at the International Centre. Free with a donation to the Food Bank.

INTER-UNIVERSITY Baseball try-outs, Sunday the 24th and 31st in Bews Gym, 11 - 1. For information contact Bryan at 68sm1. All welcome.

UP TO THREE ASUS SCHOLARSHIPS are available to graduation

The Queen's Journal Reader's NEW ICE STORM CONTEST DEADLINE

Friday, January 22nd, 1999
journal@post.queensu.ca • 272 Earl

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information. Now available at your university bookstore.

LOST AND FOUND

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: '89 Ford Escort LX - 5 door for sale - 160 km. Asking for $4,000. Also, Mountain bike $35. Sony PCS cell phone and leather case $80. Call Christine at 543-4535.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information. Now available at your university bookstore.

LOST AND FOUND

FOUND: Multi tool found - engraved. Found on Clergy St., December 21st. Call 542-1383 to identify.

A Misc. guide to FAKING HIGHBROW

You can tell the difference between Labatt Blue and Molson Canadian. You've got a few cigarette tricks. You know the macarena. Whoopie-poo Chester, cause that won't get you very far in the diamond studded, solid gold, genuine leather world of the upper-class. Nosirree, you've got to have style, panache, a certain — I don't know — "je ne sais quoi" in order to hobnob with the highbrows. Failing that, you've gotta have enough know-how to fake it. Sort of like Jack in Titanic. And that's what this three-part article is about, helping you get as far as possible in high society with minimal effort. The focus today is on that holy trinity of highbrow indulgences: wine, cigars and ballroom dancing. Learn vague wine-critic lingo! Become a cigar aficionado! Dance just like a rich twit! You can do it. Read on.

WINE TASTING

AS EVERYONE KNOWS, wine-tasting is a sham. I refer to an obscure episode of Northern Exposure where some character tricks another character by finding this really crappy wine and making him think its good by adding moss and stuff. I can't recall it exactly, but it proves my point.

Regardless, if you want to impress the highbrows, you're going to have to pretend to possess critical wine-tasting abilities, and this means using fancy words. But don't worry, nobody knows the difference anyway. So all you have to do is use a random combination of the words below and you'll be fine. And if someone disagrees with you, just call them a lush.

IMPORTANT WORDS TO MEMORIZE:
Attack: First impression a wine makes
Middle/Mid-Palate: Impression of wine between initial tasting and swallowing

Finish: Aftertaste
Balance: Proportion of elements (Acidity, Fruitness)
Body: Overall texture (light-, medium- and full-bodied)
Bouquet: A wine's smell due to aging
Aroma: A wine's smell due to fruitiness

OTHER IN-THE-KNOW IMPRESSIVE-SOUNDING TERMS:
Accessible: Easy to drink
Astringent: If the tartness makes you pucker
Anisette: Simple, One-dimensional (usually applied to younger wines)

Beaujolais-like: Light, fruity fresh
Bright: As a colour, transparent. As a flavour, high in acidity
Brooding: To describe a heavy, intense red wine
Chunky: A very, very full-bodied wine
Clean: Having no unpleasant flavour or aroma

Closed: Showing little or no aroma or flavour at all
Cloying: Too sweet
Crisp: Tart but not really tart
Flabby: Not having enough acidity
Forward: A randy wine
Fresh: Having a pleasant, fruity aroma
Muted: Lacking taste
Pungent: Excessively sour
Robust: Full-bodied
Thin: Too light-bodied
Vinous: Deliciously smooth
Warm: Having a high percentage of alcohol

IF YOU CAN'T THINK OF ANYTHING TO SAY:
Evasive: Means it's difficult to describe (frown your eyebrows slightly when using this)
Vinous: Means nothing really stands out (try to remain expressionless when using this)

Just $4 for students • $10 for local • $15 for national

Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday publications and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday publications. Call our business team at 533-2800 or stop by the Journal House at 272 Earl Street to place your ad today.

Get a job!

The Alma Mater Society of Queen's University fills hundreds of paid positions every year. All members of the Alma Mater Society are eligible to apply. Students must maintain their membership throughout their term of employment.

It's time to start thinking about getting a job!

Positions available before the end of the Winter term will include all of AMS Council, all managers, assistant managers, and staff at the UBS Exchange, the Walkhome Service, the P&CC, Alfie's Pub, the Queen's Journal, the Tricolour Yearbook, Studio Q, the AMS Foodbank Student Constables, Hoods & Gowns, the QEA, Extended Child Care, and the Queen's Pub.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. Positions are open to all AMS members in good academic standing in ASUS, COMM, CON-ED, ED, ENG, MBA, MEDS, NURSING, PHYS-ED, and REHAB.

Applications will available at the AMS in the lower JDUC, and will be due back in the next while.

CIGAR SMOKING

IT'S NOT SO HARD to impress highbrows by showing a cigar smoking prowess. Lots of them are sissies who are afraid to put smoke in their lungs. Even just holding a big, firm, sausage-like, fiery thing in your hand can be intimidating to many. But those things cost a lot of money for what they do, so you want to make sure you do it right.

SELECTING A CIGAR:
1. Squeeze the cigar gently. It should "give" but not be too soft. Don't roll it in your fingers, as some suggest - this can damage the wrapper. Squeeze gently up and down the body to look for lumps or soft spots. A good cigar should have neither.
2. Inspect the wrapper for "odd" discolorations, looseness, or cracks. The wrapper should be smooth and tight, and not damaged on either end. Smaller veins are good to watch for, as these often smoke smoother, but compare the single to other cigars with the same wrapper.
3. Look at the tobacco in the exposed end. Some variation of color is normal, as most cigars are made from a blend of tobaccos. What you're watching for is extreme or abrupt color changes. This sometimes means an inferior leaf was used, or the leaves weren't laid together properly in the bunching process. Off tastes and uneven burns will often be the result.

*Also remember that the larger the diameter (ring gauge) the richer and fuller the flavor, and the longer the cigar, the cooler the smoke.

LIGHTING THE CIGAR:
• If you use a match, wait till the sulphur burns off before using it to light your cigar. Use those fancy long cedar matches if you can find them.
• If you use a lighter, use a butane one. The gasoline based ones impart a foul flavor to your smoke.
1. Heat the foot (the open end) by slowly rolling the cigar above the flame at an angle allowing a tiny black ring forms all the way around the wrapper. Don't allow the flame to touch the cigar.
2. Place the cigar in your mouth, and draw in. Repeat the process, slowly rolling the cigar at an angle above the flame, but never letting the lighter flame actually touch the cigar.
3. If it is a bit uneven, gently blow on the end in the appropriate place to intensify the heat there. It will take a couple steady draws. Then just wait a minute before continuing to puff. This short delay seems to allow the cigar a chance to stabilize and self-correct the burn.
4. Smoke.

TERMS TO TOSS AROUND:
(Unlike wine-tasting, cigar critiquing is usually less verbose. You can usually offer a choice descriptive word or two and punch it with a hearty grunt)

Bitter, Dry, Harsh, Mild, Rich, Sharp, Smooth, Sour, Sweet, Tangy, Tart.

BLOWING SMOKE RINGS:
The biggest factor in blowing good smoke rings is practice. With that in mind, try this technique.
First, you need a cigar with dense smoke, and a place with still air. Don't waste your time trying to blow smoke rings in a breeze!
Draw a thick puff of smoke into your mouth. Hold it there and open your mouth slowly. Make an "O" with your mouth, (maybe more of a rounded "oh") — definitely not a pucker like a kiss. Curl the tip of your tongue down, and pull your tongue all the way back.
Now, when blowing a ring, you're actually not exhaling. You're just pushing out the smoke in your mouth with your tongue in short bursts — like a piston, only in a relaxed way. It's actually a really gentle motion. Push forward with your tongue, with perhaps a slight recoil at the bottom.

BALLROOM DANCING

BALLROOM DANCING IS TOUGH. There are many different styles and lots of different moves for each style. You have to be mindful of your partner's moves. You have to buy special shoes.

But you can fake it. All you have to do is maintain an expression that seems to say: I have something up my ass right now, and I'm not sure if I like it or not. Chances are the highbrows will not notice your relatively poor coordination, what with their being drunk on wine and the thick veil of cigar smoke between them and you.

Most probably the simplest ballroom dance is the Waltz. Your grandmother can do the Waltz. You should be able to do the Waltz.

THE BASICS:

The Waltz is a smooth dance, characterized primarily by its rise & fall action, accompanied by leg and body swing. Turning movements in both directions are prevalent. Most basic movements involve the Chasse Turn action, where 3 steps are taken with the feet closing on the third step.

RISING AND FALLING:

The characteristic rise & fall action of the Waltz cycles over the course of 3 steps at a time. The typical progression of rise & fall is described as follows:

Commence to rise on step 1
Continue to rise during step 2
Lower at end of 3

THE FOOTWORK:

Forward steps on count 1 should be taken as a normal walking step, commencing with a heel lead. Backward steps on count 1 should also be taken as a normal walking step, allowing the toe of the front foot to release from the floor as the body moves away from it.

Because of the rise, steps on count 2 and 3 should be taken on toes. The heel of the foot should lower to the floor after it has received full body weight on count 3. A noted exception to this rule is the backward walk, where the rise is taken through the body only. The heel of the receiving foot should lower to the floor on all 3 counts, while the toe of the forward foot is released.

Ken Butland still believes that one day he'll fool the highbrows into thinking he's one of them, be the life of some grand soirée, and at the height of the evening, when he's just made some witty remark whose response gets everyone in the room's attention, make the loudest farting noise with his hands and mouth anyone has ever heard, then giggle like a crazy person.

THE EXPRESSION
(very important)

MISC

YOU'RE WANTED

MISC. Needs you to write fun stuff. Anything really. Write about your favourite Spice Girl. Write about the wonders of cheese. Explain how the shower is always free until you need it. Wanna do a fast-food burger showdown? MISC. will pay for it! Something bother the hell out of you? Write it down. Just WRITE. WRITE WRITE WRITE WRITE WRITE WRITE. You'll feel better. Contact Ken at The Journal. Phone 545-2800. Stop by 272 Earl St. Email journal@post.queensu.ca.

SARAH'S RECIPE CORNER

MINESTRONE SOUP

- *2/3 cup small pasta shapes (shells, for example)
- *1 10oz. can chicken broth and 2-1/2 cans of water
- *2/3 cup green beans, ends trimmed, cut into bite-sized pieces
- *1 small zucchini, washed and diced
- *1/2 of a 19oz. can of romano or kidney beans
- *1/2 of a 28oz. can of diced or whole tomatoes (if using whole, cut up before adding, natch)
- *1 bay leaf
- *1/4 cup chopped fresh parsley or 1 tsp. dried
- *1/4 cup white wine (optional)
- *Salt and fresh ground pepper

DIRECTIONS:

1. In a large pot, brown the onion and garlic in the olive oil.
2. Add the potatoes and sautee for a few minutes.
3. Stir in the pasta and chicken broth, and the cans of water. Simmer until the pasta is half-cooked, about five minutes.
4. Add the green beans and zucchini, cook on medium heat for about three minutes.
5. Add the remaining ingredients and stir. If you find the soup too thick, add a little more water. Heat until almost boiling.

Serve sprinkled with parmesan cheese.

Sarah LeMay has cooked for Nelson Mandela, the Duke of Westbury, Castro and the Princess of Monaco. Oprah orgasmed over her Chicken Gumbo. The Pope fought back tears of joy while slurping up her Gaspazcho.

SINCE COOKING IS A COMBINATION OF chemistry and intuition, there is hardly ever only one recipe for a dish. There are probably as many recipes for minestrone soup as there are cooks that make it. This is my own recipe for the well loved Italian soup. It keeps well in the fridge, which is a good thing, since this recipe serves four.

INGREDIENTS:

- *4 tbsp. Olive oil
- *2 cloves garlic, minced
- *1 medium-sized onion, chopped
- *3 medium-sized potatoes, peeled and diced

ink in the blood?

The Journal is looking for any and all volunteers interested in contributing to the paper this term. Call us at 533-2800 or come by the Journal house at 272 Earl St. any time, night or day (we'll be here, believe us!) Gain great experience, great friends, and enjoy free food every Sunday and Wednesday. Mmmm... free food.

TRYING TO LOSE WEIGHT?

Queen's Players '99 Auditions

be prepared to sing and make us laugh (bribes accepted)

- Saturday January 23 12 noon 'til 5pm
- Sunday January 24 5pm 'til 8pm
- Monday January 25 7 pm 'til 10 pm

sign up for auditions in Lower JDUC or for more info call Robyn @ 531-4586 (only after 8pm)

ENG WEEK '99

Spunky Monkey Paints the Town Gold

Pub Crawl

Tonight
8:30 at Clark

$5

Receive free drinks and a free t-shirt

Thanks to our sponsor

MOLSON 1838

What Beer's All About!

Queen's Musical Theatre Presents...

A CHORUS LINE

Written By: Nicholas Dante and James Wickwood
Music By: Mary Jo Hamilton
Lyrics By: Edward Kleban

JANUARY
14-16, 20-23

Grand Theatre
Regina Rosen Auditorium

Students/
Seniors $12
General $14

Tickets available at the Grand Theatre at 520-4050 or exchange

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, JANUARY 22, 1999

Queen's student hit by bus on Union St.

By HILARY CLARK

A first-year Queen's student received minor head injuries after she was struck by a city bus early Tuesday morning. At the time she was walking on the road, as large amounts of snow were blocking sidewalks.

The 19-year-old woman, who does not wish to be identified, is a resident of West Campus and was on her way to an 8:30 a.m. class Tuesday morning. She was walking on the north side of Union Street, facing traffic, when she was hit by the bus near College Street, she said.

According to Megan Williams, ArtSci '02, who was walking on the road behind the woman, the bus had stopped and the woman was unable to get around it because of a high volume of snow on one side of the bus.

"She couldn't have jumped over the laceration, was taken to Kingston General Hospital and released the same day.

"There was only one way around the bus and the last time I had looked at [the bus] it wasn't moving and everything seemed okay."

— First-year Queen's student

A Queen's student was hit by a bus at a site close to this intersection on Tuesday morning.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Williams said the woman stopped and looked in the other direction as if to cross the street, in order to get around the bus.

At the same time, the bus pulled out from the stop and the woman's leg was caught, Williams explained, and the student was spun around and struck on her right side, then thrown into the snowbank on the side of the road.

The woman suffered a scalp laceration, was taken to Kingston General Hospital and released the same day.

"There was only one way around the bus," said the woman. "And the last time I had looked at [the bus] it wasn't moving and everything seemed okay."

The student, who said she never takes the bus, said she was forced to walk on the road due to the amount of snow on the sidewalks.

"The sidewalks were impassable," she explained.

Mark Segsworth, manager of transportation for the City of Kingston has been appealing to pedestrians to stay off the roads. He said though the sidewalks on Union Street were snow-covered they were deemed passable by the city.

"It depends on your definition of cleared," said Segsworth. "Though the concrete wasn't bare, a person could still

Please see Union on page 3

Faculty of Ed. adds new dean position

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Earlier this week Rena Upitus, dean of education, announced that the Faculty of Education will be adding a second associate dean.

Don Campbell, current acting associate dean, will now fill the new position of Associate Dean of Concurrent Education and Graduate Studies and Research.

Lisa Mori, president of the Concurrent Education Students' Association, said the decision was prompted by a collaborative effort of CESA and the Faculty of Education in order to address the existing concerns of Con-Ed students over program objectives and issues of accessibility. "I think it's a message from the faculty that [they] want to address [student] concerns," Mori said.

"I think what we were looking for is someone who had a vested interest in education," said Danielle Chanda, CESA commissioner of academic affairs. "We wanted someone who was really looking out for our needs."

Over the past few years "there has been an element of dissatisfaction," said Mori. Education professor Bob Hill's retirement two years ago meant there was no longer a faculty member who was specifically devoted to offering professional guidance to Con-Ed students, explained Mori.

CESA submitted a proposal to the faculty proposing that a program director be hired to fill this need. "It is really valuable to have somebody there who's had a lot of experience and can offer some guidance," said Mori.

"Having somebody on main campus will be really beneficial," said Mori, adding "at least now there will be

Please see Con-Ed on page 2

Queen's First Aid to go on-call

By ALEXANDRA DYER

The Queen's community may soon have another emergency alternative to turn to if an on-call initiative organized by Queen's First Aid catches on.

Queen's First Aid has provided on-site health-care coverage for students since 1986. This has involved QFA volunteers being present at intramural and special events on campus, trained and equipped to deal with medical emergencies. This year, the organization is planning to go on-call and will begin a month-long trial period on January 25.

"There is definitely some need for this kind of service," said Jeff Coull, QFA director. "From our research, there are a lot of medical emergencies that don't necessarily warrant an ambulance. Also, many people don't want to call an ambulance, whether due to cost or the spotlight it puts them under."

Coull emphasized that "we are not presuming to taking the place of emergency medical services, instead [we will be] serving as an additional and complementary service."

"There are only three ambulances serving the entire Greater Kingston Area after 6 p.m. and there have been cases where [people] have had to wait for up to 30 minutes for an ambulance," said Coull, adding, "Queen's First Aid, with an average two-minute response time, would definitely be able to provide valuable medical assistance."

"There has been a lot of collaboration between the executive and the members of First Aid, as well as between the QFA and other campus organizations, particularly Queen's Campus Security," Coull said. "The month-long trial period will determine the demand for this service and allow QFA to fine-tune the details of the program."

The on-call hours are Monday to Wednesday, 8 a.m. - 12:30 a.m., and Thursday to Friday, 8 a.m. - 3:30 a.m., with coverage on main campus. "Two QFA members will be on-call and they must be on campus. The responder and supervisor will be equipped with radios and well-equipped emergency kits," said Coull. "They will call an ambulance if it

Please see No on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 26
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Science	16
Editorials	6	A&E	17
Opinions	7	Crossword	21
Features	9	Classifieds	22
Sports & Fitness	12	MISC.	23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Light rain High 4°C, Low -2°C; PCP 40%	Sunday Snowy periods High 1°C, Low -4°C; PCP 40%
Saturday Rainy High 6°C, Low -1°C; PCP 90%	Monday Partly cloudy High -3°C, Low -8°C; PCP 20%

1st question: When I say 99 what do you think of?

Wed. with DJ Harry

Thurs. & Sat. = 99!

NO COVER

Ecstatic Fridays

Superlite til 11

Trasheteria

545-1591

Sex at Queen's safer than national statistics

BY JONATHAN TINNEY

Despite troubling information about sexual practices of young Canadians which has some health experts at Queen's concerned, students are taking responsibility for their actions and seem well-informed about their contraceptive options.

The Health Canada report on 18-24 year olds shows that less than 30 per cent of woman who use oral contraceptives also use condoms. This has some sexual health experts at Queen's worried.

"There is a misconception among young people that birth control means STD control," said Student Health Educator Diane Nolting. She also cited a national survey which found that 47 per cent of respondents said they felt that having sex with a steady partner somebody to take our issues to." Mori reported that the Con-Ed program has seen many changes over the past few years. She said she would like to see the program "establish some clear program objectives...[and] flow logically from year to year."

Please see Students on page 5

Con-Ed students happy

Continued from page 1

Mori said she believed that the new associate dean will work closely with CESA, particularly in the professional development area. They are hoping to establish a portfolio development program and "we were looking for some faculty guidance in doing this," said Mori.

Mori said that CESA is pleased with faculty's action in addressing their concerns, "I think we've forged a really good partnership this year," she said.

Queen's students enrolled in the Faculty of Education greeted the news with positive remarks.

"I think there are problems," said Stephanie Dunn, Con-Ed '00. "I think it's a great idea and hopefully it will be beneficial."

Cara Jelley, Con-Ed '01, agreed. "It sounds like a great idea... it would give us some place to go." She added, "right now we feel kind of lost... I know there's definitely things I would like to talk about."

CORRECTION

In the last issue of The Journal, Jon Krashinsky and Chelsea Gay's positions at Golden Words were incorrectly identified. Krashinsky is co-editor and Gay is Operations Manager. The Journal regrets the error.

ink in the blood?

The Journal is looking for any and all volunteers interested in contributing to the paper this term. Call us at 533-2800 or come by the Journal house at 272 Earl St. any time, night or day (we'll be here, believe us!) Gain great experience, great friends, and enjoy free food every Sunday and Wednesday. Mmmm... free food.

Queen's group develop programs in Bosnia

BY LIANNE ELLIOTT

Project Director Dr. Geoffrey Hodgetts (far left) and head of Queen's department of family medicine Dr. Ruth Wilson pose with faculty and staff at the Family Medicine Centre in Tuzla.

COURTESY OF QUEEN'S FACULTY OF MEDICINE

Amid the hardships of a war-torn region, two initiatives directed by Queen's department of family medicine continue the university's humanitarian efforts for providing relief and resources to the poverty-stricken Balkans.

As of last summer, both of Queen's Bosnia projects expanded their medical education work to include the Republic of Srpska, one of the two entities which make up Bosnia-Herzegovina.

The projects, headed by the Queen's International Centre for Advancement of Community Based Rehabilitation (ICACBR), are now focused on developing rehabilitation programs in the Republic of Srpska, and plan to extend educational training programs to the republic's three new clinics.

As of July, Queen's department of family medicine has also expanded to provide assistance to the University of Banja Luka in Srpska, as well as the University of Tuzla, in the development of Family Medicine undergraduate and graduate programs.

Both projects began after Dr. Malcolm Peat, director of the Queen's school of Rehabilitation therapy, visited Bosnia-Herzegovina during the height of the war in 1993.

ICACBR's Bosnia project developed that same year aiming to rehabilitate the physical and psycho-social disabilities of war victims and help them reintegrate into Bosnian society. According to ICACBR Program Officer Djenana Jalovic, in order to achieve this goal, ICACBR's primary focus "is developing educational programs and teaching local rehabilitation."

In addition to the plans to work in the three clinics in Srpska, the group has already provided rehabilitation training sessions to staff members of 40 clinics across Bosnia.

ICACBR is planning to host a conference in Sarajevo next April that will concentrate on local project participants and their experiences. Future health reform and medical policy will be two items on the agenda since, according to Jalovic, "Bosnia is now in a period of reconstruction."

The department of family medicine officially began its Bosnia project in 1997 after receiving a grant from the Canadian International Development Agency. This grant enabled the department to work closely with the Ministry of Health and four universities in Bosnia, including the recent affiliations with the University of Banja Luka and the University of Tuzla. The grant did not, however, mark the beginning of the group's involvement in Bosnia, as Project Director Dr. Geoff Hodgetts had already visited five times between 1995 and 1997.

ICACBR's Bosnia project [aims] to rehabilitate the physical and psycho-social disabilities of war victims.

With their Bosnia project, the department of family medicine hopes to strengthen primary care in Bosnia, which, according to Project Manager David Packer, has traditionally been a "specialist driven" country. In Bosnia, rather than be treated by a primary care giver, such as a family physician, patients are continually referred to specialists. A concern arises when primary care provides more than simply treatment, Packer said. "Primary care givers are involved in both the prevention [of illness] and promotion of health," he explained.

In the four Bosnia-Herzegovina universities, the Queen's department of family medicine has been working to create medicine programs where doctors can choose to either specialize or study family medicine. "It is a model similar to the Canadian model," Packer said.

Along with their work in Bosnia, in February the department of family medicine will also host an orientation session at Queen's for five people from Srpska who are involved in the amelioration of Bosnia's family medicine.

'No additional financial burden'

Continued from page 1

is a serious emergency."

Liability coverage will be provided primarily by St. John Ambulance and also by Queen's University, said Coull.

Coull said "this kind of service is provided at other universities and has met with success." He also stated that "Queen's First Aid is extremely well qualified with high training standards and requirements."

Queen's First Aid will likely be recruiting in March for an additional five to 10 members, Coull said, but added that "since QFA members are volunteers there will be no additional financial burden for the program or for the student body."

Louise Fish, Director of Campus Security, acknowledged that "[the new service] will fill the niche between the initial call and the arrival of an ambulance. It will also be needed when someone doesn't want an ambulance but still needs assistance in dealing with a situation."

Cheryl Gross, Queen's Intramural Coordinator, said "First Aid has always provided first-rate assistance and the service they provide is relied upon." She stated that she has been "assured that on-site coverage will continue in key areas and remain at a high standard."

"Students should call 533-6111 if they want any kind of assistance and an ambulance will be called, unless they specify otherwise," said Coull. He ensured "strict confidentiality and impartiality among First Aid volunteers who will not be judgemental of the individual or the situation."

Task-force to address local housing problems

BY CHAO HEARD

A report released by the AMS this week confirms that many Queen's students are living in houses that do not meet the minimum property standards set by the City of Kingston. Consequently, the health and safety of students in the student housing area could be at risk.

To address these housing problems, the Alma Mater Society's Municipal Affairs Commission has created an organization called the Property Standards Task-force. This task-force is in its first year of operation, working with the City of Kingston to improve living conditions in the student housing area.

The task-force has two goals, said Sarah Corman, AMS municipal affairs commissioner. The first is to raise awareness of rights students have as tenants and what they can ask of landlords. The second is to help students bring their housing up to the basic standards set by a City of Kingston by-law.

It is a free service for tenants to have their house inspected by a property standards officer. The task-force serves to inform students of this service, book appointments and accompany the officer on the inspection. Following the inspection, tenants are advised of the problems needing correction and how to proceed in addressing their landlord.

"There are some landlords, obviously, that are concerned. Others are never seen from one year to the next."

— Lindo Chortier, property standards officer for the City of Kingston

In the fall the task-force conducted property evaluations on several homes in the student housing district, concentrating on the streets most heavily populated with students such as Earl Street, University Avenue, Alfred Street and Johnson Street.

"Most houses will have some violations that aren't important," said Corman, but stated that the goal of the task-force is to "target the ones that have safety issues."

Linda Chartier, property standards officer for the City of Kingston, said, "I thought the response was good... it was a really good idea, and I'd like to see more of it."

"There are some landlords, obviously, that are concerned. Others are never seen from one year to the next," Chartier said. "We're just asking for the basic necessities."

Chartier said one of the major issues to be dealt with in the student housing district is the confusion over garbage collection, stating that garbage left out over the weekend eventually creates a larger mess.

Both Chartier and Corman said the student housing area needs work, however, Chartier said "I think [the student housing district] is definitely an improvement from years ago."

"It just takes the group of us to put pressure on landlords to pull the property up to standards," Corman said.

Union St. deemed passable by city of Kingston

Continued from page 1

[walk on it]."

"I know it is slow going on the sidewalks and I know it is easier and faster to walk on the roads," said Segsworth, adding that it was just safer to stick to the sidewalks.

"I'm sensitive to Union Street and it has received a lot of attention [from Kingston snow removal.] But a lot of snow has fallen," he continued.

Williams said she was also walking on the street because of the poor sidewalk conditions. "They were really impossible to walk through in some places,"

"I'm sensitive to Union Street and it has received a lot of attention [from Kingston snow removal.] But a lot of snow has fallen,"

— Mark Segsworth, Kingston's monogor of transportation

she said. "Though after [I saw] the accident I walked the rest of the way on the sidewalks."

Williams had also noticed the sidewalks on the south side of Union Street were completely clear the day after the accident, though Segsworth said the removal of snow was just part of the regular snow removal schedule for Union Street.

Detective Constable Mike Schultz of the Kingston Police said no charges have been laid in the incident at this point.

SWEP

TEN for Job Interest
TEN for Career Value
TEN bucks an hour

SWEP jobs are:
career-related
mostly on campus
available in many areas of interest

open to full-time undergraduate students
who plan to return to Queen's University
as undergraduate students in
September, 1999

posted on the Career Services web page
www.careers.queensu.ca
and at Career Services on January 25

CAMPUS CORNER

Home of rich resources

By RICHARD SMITH

Just opposite Summerhill is one of Queen's richest resources. Kathleen Ryan Hall has been the permanent home to the Queen's University Archives collection since 1982. Though considered only medium-sized, Queen's Archives is regarded as one of the best and most important archival collections in Canada.

Public Service Archivist George Henderson explained the collection is unique because "unlike most university archives in North America, we collect not only material relating to the university, but a great deal of private material as well," said Henderson. At present, the records stored there cover approximately six kilometres in length.

The building's interior is quite modern. Special facilities include a modern conservation lab, and large storage vaults in the basement that are temperature and humidity controlled to ensure preservation. Everything is stored in acid-free folders within acid-free boxes, and some of the older items contain acid-free paper sheets between the original pages. The boarded-up windows serve to keep sunlight out.

The archives house Queen's University files of various administrative offices and minutes of the Senate, Board of Trustees, and student clubs. The QUA also preserves Queen's publications which have been collected since 1873. Bound copies of graduate theses can also be found there, many of which have not been published elsewhere, said Henderson. In addition there are many records of Canadian literature, with several items going back to material donated in the mid-1920s by Lorne Pierce, Queen's BA '12, LLD '28.

Other records include public affairs, and business collections, records from Canadian steamship lines, as well as the private papers of notable Canadians and members of the Ontario government. Collected from nine of Canada's Prime Ministers are approximately 300 reels of microfilm, or roughly three million pages.

A particularly impressive record in the archives is a handwritten letter from Queen Elizabeth's father King George VI, written in 1839. Henderson explained that it is extremely rare to have anything handwritten from that particular King.

There are also numerous audio visual materials. There are roughly one-half million photographic negatives that can be reproduced, 3,500 sound tapes, and a small collection of videos. Many local business' walls are adorned with reprints from QUA negatives.

The archives are open to everyone. Researchers from Britain, the United States and all across Canada know their exact location; however, many members of our community have never even heard of the building. The Queen's community has at its fingertips an incredible amount of history, from personal memoirs to photographs of football seasons gone by.

Another long-term contraceptive method is the Norplant system. This procedure uses a surgical implant, which continu-

Students prefer the Pill

Continued from page 2

reduced their risk of contracting STDs.

She indicated that the best protection against STD infection is the use of the condom, both female and male. The female condom offers slightly more STD protection as it covers a larger area of the outer (female genitalia), which can give added protection against genital warts and herpes.

Traditional condoms offer about 90 per cent effectiveness from pregnancy, while the female condom offers only about 75 per cent effectiveness, said Nolting.

Nolting felt confident that most people were aware of the preventative possibilities of condom usage. In a national survey, 81 per cent of women and 67 per cent of men said they would try to discourage friends from having sex without a condom, reported Nolting.

She cited that one contraceptive method which offers birth control but no STD protection is the Depo-Provera injection for women, recently approved for use in Canada. This method consists of a series of injections taken every three months.

"The Depo-Provera method is well suited to a woman with a very erratic schedule who has a hard time remembering to take pills," said Nolting.

Another long-term contraceptive method is the Norplant system. This procedure uses a surgical implant, which continually distributes contraceptive medication for up to six years. This method has many of the same benefits and side effects as the Depo-Provera method, but complications have arisen around the removal of the old implant. While this technique has diminished in popularity, it is still available in Canada.

"[Students] know what they don't know and what they want to know... Generally people want to know everything."

— Tanya Da Sylva, Sexual Health Resource Centre volunteer

"By far the oral contraceptive is the most popular form of birth control... but it doesn't provide any protection [against STDs]," Nolting said "Condoms help but they're not perfect... certainly we encourage people to use condoms."

Nolting stressed the importance of also ensuring protection against sexually transmitted diseases. "All STD control methods prevent pregnancy, but all birth control methods don't control STDs so a backup method of condom use should always be used to ensure you're protected."

Clearly the focus on educating about the dangers of STDs and pregnancy are affecting the younger generation as recent national reports show that the age of first experiences with intercourse are being pushed back, reported Nolting.

Tanya Da Sylva, ArtSci '02, is a volunteer at the Queen's Sexual Health Resource Centre, located on Queen's Crescent across from Stirling Hall.

Over a four-day period, the centre logged in almost 50 inquiries about various aspects of sexual health, she said. For the most part, students seem to be fairly informed.

"The calls we get are pretty exact," Da Sylva said. "They know what they don't know and what they want to know... Generally people want to know everything."

She said that condoms seem to be a popular form of birth control on campus because they are readily available, inexpensive and protect well against STDs. Condoms are also more accessible than other forms of contraception such as the Pill or diaphragm that require a prescription or fitting.

Da Sylva mentioned that although students don't ask volunteers many questions about Norplant or the inter-uterine device, queries about Depo-Provera have been on the rise.

As well as selling inexpensive condoms, the centre offers a whole range of non-prescription contraception and accessories. "The KY Jelly we just got is selling really quickly," Da Sylva said. "Asströglide is also going fast."

— with files from Jocelyn Laporte and Renée Huang

Fast Facts

In Here

Classic Ski Loppet

The Fronrenac Zone Canadian Ski Patrol will host its annual Little Cat Classic Ski Loppet at Little Catarauqui Creek Conservation Area on Sunday. Events include a winter relay triathlon at 10:30 a.m. and five and 10 km loppets at 1 p.m. Participants must preregister at least 30 minutes before at the Oudoor Centre for a cost of $5 per team or $2.50 per person. Contact Karla Maki-Esdon at 546-4228 ex. 226.

Accessibility Task Force Open House

The adaptive technology lab and accessibility task force, is hosting an Open House in Douglas Library from 3-5 p.m. on Monday. They will be showcasing newly purchased equipment, such as voice recognition, screen magnification and vocalized text output. Keynote speakers will include Principal Bill Leggett and Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs.

Women & Relationships

A free support group for women who have experienced physical, emotional or verbal abuse in an adult relationship who would like to talk with other women from similar backgrounds meets Wednesday mornings from 9:30-11:30 a.m. starting February 3 until March 24 at the Kingston Community Counselling Centre. Participants must register in advance and child care will be offered on site. To register, call Colleen or Rosemary at 549-7850.

air transat holidays

Florida February Sale

• ORLANDO • ST. PETE'S • FT. LAUDERDALE • • FT. MYERS • SARASOTA • WEST PALM BEACH • • JACKSONVILLE
DEPARTURES Feb 01 Feb 08 RETURNS Feb 11 Feb 20 from $199/$219 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Feb 09 Feb 21 RETURNS Feb 21 Feb 28 from $219/$239 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Feb 22 Feb 28 RETURNS Mar 01 - Mar 15 from $259/$299 Midweek Weekend

YOU GOTTA SKI US!!!!

Vacations starting from:
Quebec/Vermont/N.Y. 5 DAYS

- Stoneham PQ $199
- Mt. Ste. Anne PQ $209
- Tremblant PQ $199
- Eastern Townships PQ $319
- Lake Placid NY $145 CDN
- Stowe VT $330 CDN
- Vermont Ski Around $277 CDN
- Jay Peak VT $299 CDN
- Sugarbush VT $455 CDN
- Killington VT $380 CDN
- Smugglers Notch VT $478 CDN

ALL U.S Destinations in CDNS B.C./Alberta - 7 nights with air

- Whistler/Blackcomb BC $855
- Big White BC $815
- Silverstar BC $779
- Panorama BC $729
- Canadian Rockies $625
- Banff/Lake Louise $715

Also check out for SUMMER Chile $3,090 Seadooling $299 Rating $145

CALL MARLIN TRAVEL: 549-4400

Queen's Alumni Association

SPECIAL PROJECT FUNDING

The Alumni Association has a small fund to help Queen's groups introduce innovative programs. Application forms can be picked up at the Department of Alumni Affairs in the West Wing of Summerhill. Applications are reviewed twice each year. To be considered for the next review, applications must be completed and returned to the Department of Alumni Affairs by January 28, 1999. For more information, please contact Deborah Shea, Assistant to the Director, Department of Alumni Affairs, at Summerhill or call (613) 533-6000 (Ext. 74008).

January Ring Week

Next week, from Monday, January 25th until Thursday, January 28th, come to the Campus Bookstore for our January Ring Week.

Representatives from First Recognition and from Jostens Canada will be here at the Campus Bookstore to help answer all your questions about their rings and to help you find exactly what you are looking for.

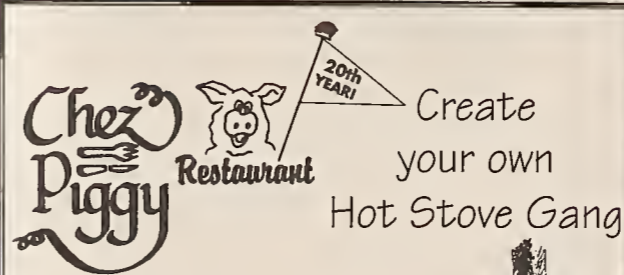

Don't miss your chance to find the perfect ring!

January Ring Week:
January 25th-26th with First Recognition
January 27th-28th with Jostens Rings

January 25th-28th

Campus Bookstore • www.campusbookstore.com • Clark Hall

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Grab your friends and c'mon over to Kingston's hottest restaurant for lunch, dinner, or Sunday Brunch... or stop by for sweet bites and Hot, Hot, Hot special coffees & potent potables.

Our Gang gives you 15% off* on all food every day!!

Only 12 more days to go...

Chez Piggy 68R Princess St. 549-7673 *with student ID

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

The cost of cheating

LAST APRIL, 994 EXAMS WERE written without a valid photo ID. Had the administration been fining students $15 for such an offense, we can rest assured that those with honest intentions would have brought their IDs. If we eliminate absent-minded students, those who are just uninformed about the rule, and the few who are so rich they can afford to blatantly disregard the rules, the remaining offenders must be cheaters! Elementary, my dear Cindy Price, exams administrator.

While this policy won't curb cheating, it will cost students thousands of dollars with no apparent benefits.

It's hard to imagine how the Senate sub-committee on Exams was persuaded by such twisted logic when it approved this policy in the hope that it would curb cheating. The reality, of course, is that students who want to cheat will not be deterred by a fine. After all, $15 is a small price to pay to get away with cheating on a final exam. If the policy works at all, it will only serve as a reminder for those who innocently forget their IDs — at the expense of their pocket-books. While this policy won't curb cheating, it will cost students thousands of dollars with no apparent benefits.

If the administration is really serious about cutting down on cheating, they should consider a policy that does not permit students without valid photo IDs to write an exam. Such a policy already exists at other universities in Ontario and would not be unreasonable. If the administration is unwilling to go that far, they should at least abandon this inept policy and consider other plans that would actually deter cheating. They might want to start by requiring the members of the sub-committee on Exams to take a course in basic logic — no cheating allowed on the exam.

Life in the dustbowl

WITH ITS SIZABLE POPULATION, large student presence, and an endless supply of prison inmates, Kingston is an obvious choice as a test market for the latest in popular culture.

Yet, despite the presence of such luminaries as Dan Ackroyd and the guitarist for the Tragically Hip, Kingston has not become the cultural mecca of eastern Ontario. One look at those aging neon palaces that call themselves cinemas and we are struck by the lack of choice that moviegoers have in Kingston.

For those who cannot afford the exorbitant cost of cab-fare to the Cataract Town-centre, there is only one real option: the Capitol theatre with its uncomfortable seats and limited selection of new feature films. In fact, even when you include the theatres at the Cat Centre, many great movies are never screened in Kingston, at least not right away. With so many movie connoisseurs at Queen's and in K-town, the time seems right for the opening of a giant mega-plex downtown. Perhaps an invitation should be extended to the American Movie Company, a chain of movie theatres that, unlike the current crop, offers a discount for students.

Even with a discount however, movies are expensive and students really should have more entertainment choices near campus. For starters, it's about time we have a 24-hour or late-night coffee-shop that has a smoking section on campus (but not in Stauffer library!). Everywhere else in Kingston seems to close at 9 p.m., a time that clearly does not suit students' needs.

In fact, other than fast food, the only other late-night options for students all serve alcohol. While we would never decry the presence of pubs on campus at Queen's, it would be nice if students had somewhere else to go at night.

Why should people go out and pay to see bad movies when they can stay at home and see bad television for nothing?
— Sam Goldwyn

Going under the knife

BACK IN THE 16TH CENTURY, women would drown their eyes in belladonna (a.k.a. Deadly nightshade) just to dilate their pupils and achieve that sparkly, dreamy look that was supposed to be attractive. Sure, it helped you get the guy next door, but it certainly left your eyes burning and dry, your nose bleeding and your joints swollen, just to mention a few symptoms.

Liposuction wasn't pretty either. As the doctor sucked up the fat, one could see a heterogeneous mixture of blood, bright yellow fat, and goodness knows what else rush through the tubes and end up in a bubbling clump at the bottom of the container.

Cosmetic surgery isn't worth all this pain.

The tradition of Chinese women having their feet bound often resulted in gnarled feet which caused them to wince with excruciating pain every time they took a step.

Let's face it, appearance has been, still is, and will always be, an essential part of human culture. It becomes frightening and dangerous however, when people decide to achieve their desired look by voluntarily slipping under the knife of a plastic surgeon and letting this person treat their bodies like pieces of cheap fabric.

The Learning Channel has provided me with a window of opportunity to witness several plastic surgeries, including face-lifts. Although it was just another surgical procedure, it somehow seemed unreal, even eerie. I stared at the screen with a gaping mouth as the surgeon tugged and stretched the lifeless, placid-looking skin and neatly trimmed off the excess as if he were stretching a canvas.

The fact is, cosmetic surgery isn't worth all this pain. Having small breasts, eye bags, or a belly isn't life threatening in any way. Yet many men and women spend large amounts of cash to alter their features or figures in order to "beautify" themselves or defy the natural aging process.

We all know that aging is a natural process that is inevitable. Plastic surgery may iron out those little wrinkles, keep those breasts perky or provide full lips, cheeks or chins. But the procedure isn't necessary for survival; so why subject yourself to possible infections and weeks of pain? There are so many other ways of being beautiful without having to inflict scars and pain upon your body. How about being yourself?

BY JANICE CHAN

OPINIONS

Negative on affirmative action

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION PROGRAMS have been used as a means to include women and minority groups in society. They were needed in an era when the contributions of individuals in these groups were ignored and repressed. However, today these programs have become damaging to society.

First, it was important to outline why affirmative-action programs (defined as promoting individuals in selected groups to positions otherwise unattainable by them because of race and gender) were necessary. The following anecdote outlines how the exclusion of women from science was actually detrimental to society.

When an affirmative action policy is put into place, authority figures such as teachers and employers are to promote individuals of a designated group.

In the 1950s, a woman named Barbara McClintock discovered transposons, fragments of DNA that hop from one chromosome to another. The value of this knowledge lies in the fact that transposons can carry genes from one organism to another. Today, this astounding discovery is frequently used in practical ways. Biotechnology companies use transposons to make transgenic plants and animals, making food production more efficient. Transposons can also be used to transfer genes in the manufacturing of drugs.

Despite the contemporary beneficial derivatives of her work, Barbara McClintock's work was ignored in the 1950s, and gender prejudices were largely responsible. There are many other examples supporting the need to make contributions possible from individuals of all genders and races. The affirmative-action programs made many gains toward this ideal of equal opportunity. However, these programs are used today for a different reason — egalitarianism.

Equal opportunity permits people of different races and genders to contribute their abilities to society and earn a living. Maintaining an opportunity for everyone to have such a fulfilling life is a goal of a multicultural, liberal democracy.

In contrast, the egalitarian emphasis of our present affirmative action programs is destructive to equality. Egalitarianism is a distorted derivative of equality whose end product is an appearance of equality by numerical quotas. When an affirmative action policy is put into place, authority figures such as teachers and employers are to promote individuals of a designated group.

The injustice of this is that individuals outside of this group, even from majority 'over-represented' groups, are not given an equal opportunity to be judged by their abilities and production. Indeed, affirmative action programs weigh appearance equally or greater than ability.

The actual cost of this is substantial. For example, governments spend billions on education, encouraging the best students to make a contribution to society. The goal is circumvented by affirmative action programs in the education system, for instance, when other issues (i.e. proportional gender representation) are emphasized besides scholastic competence in scholastic ability.

A popular, if unintelligent response to affirmative action is that it is racist and/or sexist.

A popular, if unintelligent, response to the above argument is that it is racist and/or sexist. People sometimes, without properly considering the implications, use those terms to protect social structures which promote the ideals that they believe in. To claim that the abolishment of affirmative action programs is racist or sexist would be oxymoronic. Affirmative action programs segregate individuals by sex and/or race. They are truly sexist and racist. Affirmative action programs should be stopped.

MICHAEL BLANK
MSC

Letters to the Editors

The abortion debate rages on...

Dear Editors,

I would like to respond to Sindi Sabourin's article in your Tuesday, January 19, 1999 issue entitled "Avoiding prejudice." Sabourin argues that we should spare the lives of "the unborn," and attempts to substantiate her piece by urging the reader to dismiss any prejudices that he or she might have picked up in his or her everyday, "familiar" environment.

I would urge Sabourin to follow her own advice and extend herself beyond the realm of her own comfortable, privileged, familiar place of judgement and imagine how the lives of women would be affected were abortion made illegal. Imagine that you are the victim of a rape that results in pregnancy. Imagine what your life would be like next if you were forced by society to carry the unwanted child for nine months, then endure the pains of childbirth.

And did you think about what might happen next? Either the mother would suffer the psychological damage of forced motherhood, leaving both herself and the child miserable, or the child would be abandoned, putting the burden upon society. Women have the right to control their own bodies, and their own destinies.

Please, Ms. Sabourin, take the time to consider all sides of an issue before coming down so forcefully on one side.

The abortion issue is a complex one, certainly, but is one for which each individual must have the freedom to make their own decision about.

For a woman, this means the right to decide whether or not to terminate an unwanted pregnancy.

Ann Valikoski
Arts '99

...and on

Dear Editors,

Sindi Sabourin's piece "Avoiding Prejudice" was sensationalistic, unfounded, and poorly argued. I attempted to critique it in a detailed way, but was unable to identify any reasonable arguments within the article.

The pro-choice philosophy is not as simplistic as Sabourin suggests.

I would, however, like to emphasize the fact that the pro-choice philosophy is not nearly as simplistic and ridiculous as Sabourin seems to suggest.

The abortion debate is not about fetal prejudices, it is about rights. It is about the fact that women deserve the right to control their own bodies and their own lives.

Taryn McCormick
Arts '99

Royal pain

Dear Editors,

This letter is intended to inform students of problems with the Royal Bank and their treatment of students. I am a second year student who has jumped through all the hoops, dotted the 'i's, and crossed all the 't's and has still not been able to get money into my account from the Royal Bank.

Yes, I have called their student loan center numerous times, and have been told that "Yes, you have brought in all the necessary paperwork, but we are very busy now and will process your loan as soon as possible." I have spoken with supervisors and sent their complaint center an e-mail. The Royal Bank needs to stop treating students like second class citizens.

They have a legal obligation to process a student loan within 72 hours of receiving all the paperwork. I have received nothing but hollow promises and excuses. I cannot emphasize enough, how I have been greatly inconvenienced, been misled, and have been taken advantage of by this bank. I have had to deal with the strategic incompetence of the Royal Bank for weeks now.

However, I can guarantee that this is one student who will not be treated as a second class citizen.

Lessa Beard
Simon Fraser University

talking

HEADS

What is the most fun you can have with puddles?

"How can you have fun with a half congealed puddle of water?"
Dan Evans
Artsci '99

"Take a bath."
Danielle Brodhagan
Artsci '99

"Splash all the KCVI kids"
Kavita Sribhar
Artsci '00

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith O'Brien
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura Macinnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Susan Murray

ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Buxland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING CO-ORDINATOR
Mark Ficella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Ainsie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, January 22, 1999 • Issue 26 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the Queen's Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-editors-in-chief. Please inquire about further privacy policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone: (513) 613-3333. Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 27 will be published on Tuesday, January 26, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Michael Blank, Daniel Clarke, Harry Clark, Alexander Dyer, Liann Elliot, Robin Fongor, Douglas Reid Gaurin, Chad Heard, Jennifer Patterson, Adam Prosser, Eh Schuster, Richard Smith, Brad Sulsham, Edrick Thy, Johnathan Tinney, Damirios Tosos, Virginia Wigmore.

Photographers: Galstedo Baa, Mark Johnson, Jill Offenbeck.

Got some time? BIG SWING TUESDAYS

live with
The Swing Cats

Dance contest
& prizes Martini on the rocks

It's a Swing thing!

Free Swing Lessons from 7-9pm.

178 Ontario Street • On the Waterfront

Where's the bus?

A West Campus resident wants answers

HOW MUCH LONGER do we have to wait? The last time I checked my watch, five minutes past eight meant 08:05, not 08:00, 08:10 or 'no show'. The timing of the Kingston buses are nowadays so haphazard, they make a random number seem positively uniform.

The timing of the Kingston buses are so haphazard, they make a random number seem positively uniform.

This, of course, has several implications. A game of strategy is required in order to catch the damn things. Turn up early and you risk waiting around for up to 15 minutes; at the risk of frostbite when it's -40°C. Turn up late and you risk missing the bus altogether; at the risk of 'professorbite' upon being subsequently late for classes. Turn up on time and, invariably, the bus doesn't show at all.

What is even more annoying is the capacity problem which has become particularly acute from routes serving West Campus during the current winter period. Line-ups of 50 or more people are emerging each morning for the 8:30 rush. Each day, dozens of people are left standing at the bus stop as capacity reaches a maximum. When the weather is so biting cold, this can be a mere danger in itself. But more importantly, this leaves many people late for classes as they either walk in or wait for the next service.

I cannot believe this is the first time someone has raised issues over the bus services; this cannot be a new complaint. However, it would therefore stand to reason that officials should learn from past experiences and sort this problem out. Each year, $36 of our student fees is directed towards Kingston Transit ($32.36 for post-graduates). With approximately 15,000 students, this is just over $500,000 a year, or around $2,300 a day. Despite these figures, the bottom line remains the same. The fee is for unlimited transport, not unlimited waiting.

Turn up early and you run the risk of frostbite when it's -40°C. Turn up late and you risk missing the bus altogether and 'professorbite' upon being late for class

A subtle suggestion of extra buses around the morning period, specifically for shuttling Queen's students, may help alleviate the problem. While everyone knows that Friday morning class attendance redefines the meaning of positive skewness, it should be clear that there is a disproportionate number of students requiring transport to classes on all other days of the week, between 8:00 - 8:30am. I ask for someone to please recognize this, but more importantly, act on it.

DANIEL CLARKE
COMM '00
INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE STUDENT

ATTENTION ALL GRADUATES

Graduates from Arts, Science, Engineering, Nursing, Law, Medicine, Theology, etc.!

HERE IS YOUR CHANCE TO APPEAR IN THE TRICOLOUR YEARBOOK

Don't be caught saying to your children, "This is my yearbook, but I'm not in it."

Submit a photograph (with negative) of you and your friends AND/OR personal note, memory, poem, letter, etc. to your friends.

Drop off in the box provided, at the Tricolour Yearbook office (Lower Cellidh, JBUC, Rm. 50) with your name, faculty, phone number and address.

Chosen submissions will appear in the grad section of the yearbook. Not all submissions can be chosen.

Submissions must be received by Feb 8, 1999

SUMMER CAMPS ASUS

Two instructors.

One camp.

You do the math.

ASUS is looking for instructors for our summer camp, Science Discovery. Applications are due Friday, Jan. 29 by 4:00 at The Core (183 University). Please call 533-6917 with any questions.

Did we say one camp? We meant three! Instructor positions will be available soon for Arts Adventure and Computer Discovery. Keep watching for details!

ASUS NOW HIRING. ASUS

Househunt

Moving out?
Ready to move on up to the east side?
If so, here's what you need to know.

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

IT'S LATE JANUARY and prime house hunting season is well underway with students on the trail to scope out the "perfect" home — either the one that fits their own unique personality or that which fits their meagre budgets.

Prior to inking the lease that determines their official residence for the following year, however, there are some important issues students should seriously consider.

UP TO SHUFF

ONE OF THE MOST IMPORTANT FACTORS is property standards. Results recently published by the Queen's Alma Mater Society's Municipal Affairs Commission claim that many houses currently occupied by students are below Kingston property standards. Despite the numerous health and safety hazards this poses to tenants, it is also illegal.

The report suggests that many students are aware of some of the problems with their home, but remain ignorant to their legal rights regarding minimum property standards.

A Property Standards Taskforce was initiated this year at Queen's under the MAC and in conjunction with the City of Kingston as an effort to improve the student housing area. Beginning in mid-October students could have their houses inspected and evaluated by a Property Standards Officer — a service free of charge for tenants.

The most common property standards violations found in student homes included the following:

- exterior problems with damaged porches and roofs
- draughty and unlocking doors and windows
- poor paint conditions and exterior debris such as garbage and broken appliances
- interior problems with non-existent or non-functioning smoke detectors
- unsafe wiring and unacceptable electrical repairs
- inadequate heating systems and systems emitting carbon monoxide or being insufficiently ventilated — poor ventilation
- unsafe or non-existent handrails

JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

- poorly working appliances
- poorly fitting interior doors and floorboards
- cracks, holes, leaks and mould

FRIENDS AND PETS

"COMPATIBILITY WITH ROOMMATES is number one," said Patrick McNeill, Town-Gown relations coordinator. McNeill suggests choosing your housemates wisely based on personal tastes and living styles.

McNeill recommends medium households as being more manageable than larger ones (five or more people). He also suggests that potential housemates discuss housing conditions together before they even begin house hunting.

"Sit down beforehand and have a heart to heart," said McNeill.

Some of the items he suggests reviewing to avoid potential problems include: whether the household will be smoking or non-smoking, how tidy or messy and noisy or quiet it should be. Other issues to determine may be whether guests will be allowed or if girlfriends/boyfriends will have access to keys.

Early establishment of the house rules is a positive move according to McNeill. Devising a work-wheel and determining a general level of tidiness for common rooms can be helpful for managing a large household. Also, setting out guidelines from the beginning as to what is "house" food and what is "personal" food and deciding how "green" the house will be in its shopping, cleaning, recycling and composting can prevent future disputes. McNeill maintains that even if "you have the best house in the world... incompatibility can ruin friendships."

LEASES AND LANDLORDS

ACCORDING TO SARAH CORMAN, municipal affairs commissioner of the Alma Mater Society, one of the biggest mistakes made by students is "rushing into signing a lease." This often occurs because "a lot of people feel pressured by their landlords."

Corman wants students to be on the lookout for the "miracle worker" landlord who promises to fix up a run down place. "Chances are it's not going to be transformed over the summer," she explained. She also advises to have all changes and repairs written directly into the lease agreement.

Keeping property standard laws in consideration when looking at a house to rent is also a good idea. Corman reminds students that it is illegal for a landowner to rent a house which is below minimum standards and suggests that such an owner is "probably not a landlord you'd want to deal with."

Look for signs of damage within the house, for example rust on the water heater, and ask the landlord when the plumbing, electrical work, and other facilities were last inspected.

Landlords who pressure students into signing their lease may also be something to steer away from. Trust is important in a rental situation, said Corman, and such a landlord "may not be your best bet." Another undesirable landlord type may be the overly concerned renter, who makes a habit of frequently dropping in unannounced.

Good landlords will be responsive and attempt to understand the needs of students. They will make an effort to be available when needed and they will ensure that their property is maintained.

Corman also explained that landlords are not allowed to charge a deposit for either keys or damage. They are allowed to require a deposit either equal to or less than the last month's rent. However, this money does cover the final month's rent, and you cannot be asked to pay it again at the end of the year.

Another item which should be detailed in the lease is who will be responsible for the upkeep of the property, both in summer and winter. "A lot of the time it will be in the lease," said Corman, noting that students are responsible for shovelling their walkways in winter. If, for example, a letter carrier slipped while delivering mail, the tenants would be held responsible not the landlord.

"Compatibility with roommates is number one."

— Patrick McNeill,
Town-Gown
relations coordinator

It is also important to remember that "a lease is a flexible document." Corman explained that you can have repairs and necessary changes written directly into the lease, and you can also have items you are uncomfortable with taken out. She also commented that "rent is usually flexible" and suggested negotiating with a landlord by proposing another number if the rental price is too high. "As a whole it is very flexible until signed," she said.

Once the lease is signed, walk through the house with your landlord and point out current damages, such as chips or holes, and anything that needs to be cleaned. This ensures that you will not be held responsible for previous damages done to the house.

Corman cited good communication with your landlord as the key to a positive relationship. "Having one spokesperson for your group is a good idea," she said, and suggested keeping good records, or even a log book, of all communications with the landlord. These things help to minimize confusion and ensure all landlord responsibilities are being taken care of. "If there is a problem let them know right away," she advises.

Of course, house hunting requires the right attitude. Corman advises being firm but considerate and having a good idea of what you want. "Be prepared and understand your rights."

HOUSE OF HORRORS

"IF I HAD IT TO DO OVER AGAIN I would have been a lot more careful," says Amy VanSanten, LifeSci '98. "The day we moved in [the previous tenants] still hadn't moved out," she said.

Their landlord was not there for a key exchange and consequently she and her housemates ended up having to clean the whole house, explained VanSanten, which included "shovelling" out the rotten remains of the kitchen cupboards.

Continued on next page

Continued from last page

"He was a nice man," said VanSanten of her former landlord, and talked about how he would buy them Christmas presents and take them out to dinner once in a while. However, since he lived in Ottawa he was never available when they needed help. He would delay in fixing problems and would then only repair them in the cheapest manner possible.

One memorable incident involved a leaky pipe in the basement of their house. "The whole floor was flooded... it smelled bad," recalled VanSanten. Their landlord had someone come to inspect the pipe but, after learning it would cost a lot to repair, he took renovations into his own hands by tying garbage bags around the pipe and securing them with duct tape. "He ended up fixing it in the end, after we complained a lot," said VanSanten. Another episode she recalls was when the refrigerator broke and their landlord replaced it with the cheapest one he could find. The "new" fridge was actually rather old, thus less energy efficient and caused their PUC bill to substantially increase.

The landlord took renovations into his own hands by tying garbage bags around the pipe and securing them with duct tape.

VanSanten wishes now that they had checked the house over more before they signed a lease. "We didn't check everything we should have," she said. They also had not asked information concerning such things as the heating costs and, as it turned out, the house had poor insulation and they ending up paying a lot of money in heating bills.

VanSanten advises checking everything out in the house when you go to see it and asking previous tenants a lot of questions.

"This is the place where you might be living. If it's not up to your standards you shouldn't have to lower them," she said. She suggested bringing a list with you of questions you want to ask, "it's important to get the information you need."

Doug Gierula, ArtsSci '00, has had similar experiences with his landlord. Gierula suggested bringing a camera with you when you move in to take photographs of what the house looked like upon occupancy. "When we moved in nothing had been cleaned... people were still moving out when we moved in," said Gierula, adding that the former occupants left a lot of their things behind, which the landlord refused to take away.

Gierula regrets not having any of the renovations they were verbally promised by their landlord put into writing. "We thought he was a good enough guy," he said. Any repairs that were made to the house were done "as quick as you can do it and in the worst way possible," he remembers.

Gierula and his housemates did not seek help from the Property Standards Office right away because they "wanted to be less formal." However, after successive arguments concerning the upkeep of the property the Queen's Municipal Affairs Commission and the Kingston Property Standards Officer, Linda Chartier, were contacted. An evaluation was conducted on the house and a written warning to make improvements to the

"Be prepared and understand your rights."

— Sarah Corman, municipal affairs commissioner property was issued to the landlord.

After not complying with the first notice to improve items which were not up to safety and legal standards, a second document ordering him to improve the property was issued. Since then Gierula's landlord has been fixing the problems with the house.

"Just keep pursuing it," advises Gierula, adding "I had to look up all the rules." Ask a lot of questions about the property and the owner before signing a lease, "looks can be deceiving too."

LEGAL EAGLES

LINDA CHARTIER, property standards officer for the city of Kingston, recommends avoiding such scenarios by being on the lookout for property damages while looking at potential rentals. The exterior of a building can provide a lot of clues as to what type of property the landlord maintains. "Even just the outside... broken steps, ripped screens, all give you an indication of the landlord," said Chartier.

Calling the PUC company and inquiring about the average heating costs for the house is also "a really good starting point," said Chartier. "Low rent isn't great if the PUC is high," she said, adding "it's a long heating season."

Other things Chartier advises checking, are whether the yard has any garbage, abandoned furniture or appliances, if the windows have glass and screens and if there are locks in working order on the doors and windows. Inside she recommends looking over walls and ceilings for any damages or lack of repair and inspecting all plumbing, heating and electrical systems, and checking for smoke detectors.

If you do have a problem, Chartier said you should "always contact the landlord first, then if you get no response or a negative response contact us."

Most of all, Chartier emphasized taking your time when choosing a place to live for the year. When students who have problems with housing standards and poor landlords are asked why they would have rented the house in the first place, Chartier said the response "90 per cent of the time is 'we were in a hurry!'"

In all seriousness, Jocelyn Laporte is rumored to be the cause of every major world catastrophe.

DARBAR The finest Indian Cuisine in Kingston

Exotic Indian Cuisine

Daily Lunch Special $4.99

20% Discount for Students (on food items)

479 Princess St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 1C3
Tel.: (613) 548-7053 Fax: (613) 531-8869

Valid Sunday - Thursday only

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
960 AM (CFPX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.caolink.com/uckington/chalmers/>

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

New Beer in Ontario

Colt 45 8% alc./vol.

- clear bottles
- 12 packs

NEW at The Beer Store

WARNING
CONSUME IN MODERATION. THIS BEER IS 8% ALC. VOL. WHICH IS NEARLY TWICE AS MUCH ALCOHOL AS REGULAR BEERS.

Thank you.

800 food items donated by university faculty and staff in December.

Food donations and fundraisers by:
A & P at Princess and Barrie
English DSC
Office of Advancement
Ronald and Sandra Seaman
Queen's Apartment and Housing
Queen's Residences
Queen's University Faculty Association
Queen's Ultimate Frisbee Club
Vice Principal (Advancement)

AMS Food Bank
Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.
Basement, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division)
533-6972

SPORTS & FITNESS

The Peanut Gallery

THE BIG BOYS PLAY
The 49th annual NHL all-star game is scheduled to be played on Sunday afternoon in Tampa. For the second consecutive year the format will be the supposedly more competitive North America against the World, but a sniff body check is about as likely as snow in June (which is hopefully still unlikely). The yearly controversy over stuffed ballot boxes and snubbed players exists, but there will be no questioning the talent level at the game. The World team will feature Dominik Hasek, Peter Forsberg, Jaromir Jagr, Teemu Selanne and Alexei Yashin, while Paul Kariya, Eric Lindros, Steve Yzerman and John Leclair lead the North American team. The true excitement will come in the Skills Competition on Saturday night, so watch and enjoy.

IOC SCANDAL
The International Olympic Committee carnage continues with rumors abounding about numerous Olympic bids where cash, presents and scholarships were made available to IOC members in exchange for votes. With a few fat cats already having resigned and many more under investigation, things are getting very interesting all over the world as both bidders and voters are under intense scrutiny.

NBA ACTION?
The February 2 start date for the abbreviated 52-game NBA schedule is fast approaching and teams will soon begin to enter camps and sign free agents. There is still a long way to go before a clear picture of what will unfold once the year is tipped-off, but here is a brief synopsis. Out of shape players begin season a step slow, games are a great deal less entertaining and injuries run rampant. Come playoff time lineups will be depleted, fan interest will be waning and Shawn Kemp will still be very fat. The NBA Finals will be played while most people are watering their lawn or sipping lemonade on the veranda, and nobody will be watching. Michael, we want to retire too.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• With Latrell Sprewell arounds the New York Knicks would hire a body guard for Coach Jeff Van Gundy.
• The NHL all-star game would see less than 18 goals scored.
• Lawrence Taylor would get elected to the NFL Hall of Fame.

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

While a holiday rest is helpful for most, in the case of the Queen's Journal female athlete of the week it was extremely beneficial. After a slow start to the basketball season, Steph 'long range' Glancey found a lot more under the Christmas tree than presents — she found her shooting touch.

With a total of 41 points and 10 three-pointers, the Belleville native helped the team to a road sweep University of Ottawa and Carleton University over the weekend. This stunning weekend performance came one week after Glancey hit five treys against the University of Toronto in a losing cause.

The re-discovery of her shooting touch has certainly helped the squad, but Glancey is quick to credit her teammates for the recent success.

"I'm getting really good looks, sometimes I'm getting wide open shots," said Glancey, who is in her final year of Phys. Ed. "[Point guard] De'annah [Shelley] is drawing two defenders and kicking it out. It is easy for me."

While getting open shots is helpful, her recent ability to knock them down has come from confidence.

"I shot the ball well over Christmas, it was sort of a confidence thing," said Glancey, who is one of the captains. "I'm getting good rotation on the ball and I feel good when I shoot the ball and that comes from confidence. When you're confident and you feel you can make the shot, that is half the battle."

With 15 trifectas in the past three games, Glancey is on pace to break her own Gaels' record of 28 three-pointers in a season, which would be a great personal accomplishment and would help the team on their playoff run.

"This team does not have

Please see Long on page 14

With a tournament win and a weekend sweep of the York Yeomen, the men's volleyball team is on a roll. Helping lead that charge is the Queen's Journal male athlete of the week, Frederic Cotoir.

The Sherbrooke native recorded 41 kills, three stuffs and eight aces in the back-to-back victories over the then second-place Yeomen. The 5'10" power started playing volleyball 10 years ago. He spent two years playing at Sherbrooke College and two years on the team at CIAU powerhouse Université de Sherbrooke, before enrolling in Queen's Law school.

For many the transition from one school to another would be difficult, but Cotoir has taken the change in stride.

"The dynamic of the [volleyball team] is the same here as at Sherbrooke. A sports team is still a sports team," said Cotoir. "The only adjustment that had to be made was between the different style of coaching, but even that didn't take too long to make."

While the statistics that Cotoir has put up since his arrival at Queen's have been impressive, his experience also helps the team. As a player at Sherbrooke he had an opportunity to go to the national chamionship tournament twice, which can only help the Gaels, who only have one other member with experience at the nationals.

"My experience can help if we get the CIAUs because it is sudden death and those without experience tend to be nervous," explained Cotoir, who already holds a degree in civil law.

With an important match-up pending this weekend against the division leading U of T Blues, the Gaels will have an opportunity to send an early message that this year's edition will not be bounced from the playoffs.

"It seems like we are seeing an improvement on a day-to-day basis and that is encouraging," said Cotoir.

Making it work

Continued from page 11
you have achieved that goal for two weeks, try eating healthy for one day a week as well as not eating junk food on Mondays. Continue the healthy eating regime for a few weeks and continue to add healthy days, as you feel ready. Read one article about healthy eating a week. In this way, none of the goals seem too daunting.

Let's assume your New Year's resolution was "I will exercise." Start by making it to the gym once a week. Just make it to the gym and change out of your day clothing into your "workout" clothing. That should be your first goal. It may sound silly but the hardest part of working out is just getting there. Which is more enticing, an hour curled up in your warm blanket with a nice cup of hot chocolate or an hour of sweaty wet hair and some body odor? Your next goal might be staying in the gym for 30 minutes. Just stay there, sit in a chair and read your textbook if you don't feel ready to sit on the bike. Next go adding the number of days you make it to the gym, and workout, as you see fit.

Remember there is no magic formula to achieving your goals. But there is a magic formula for feeling better about yourself. Success! Make goals that you can reach and as time goes on the goals that seemed impossible in the beginning will seem as easy as getting out of bed in the morning — although that seems hard sometimes too.

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

'Long range' Glancey

Continued from page 11

any one way to win a game, a so called go-to player, so in order for us to win we have to have an inside-outside combination," explained Head Coach Dave Wilson. "Having Steph hitting from outside they have to play her on the perimeter, or in the case of Steph, a long way out on the perimeter, opens up the post players."

It was the absence of veteran post player Wendy Moon that made Glancey's performance in Ottawa all the more important.

"With Wendy out it was particularly important to get scoring from outside, and Steph helped provide that," said Wilson.

Glancey, who is known for shooting from anywhere on the court, doesn't really pay attention to where she is when she fires the ball up.

"When I get the ball and I've made a couple of shots already, I just feel where I am and I shoot if I feel comfortable," said Glancey.

With nemesis and division leader Laurentian coming to town this weekend, Glancey is confident that the team can continue to win.

"We haven't beaten [Laurentian] in my career, but this is the most confident we have been in a long time. This year I really feel that they are beatable and that we are more prepared for them than we have ever been," said Glancey.

If Glancey continues to stretch the defence, the Gaels may get a belated Christmas present.

SOCIETY OF GRADUATE AND PROFESSIONAL STUDENTS

ELECTION '99

Nominations are now open for the following executive positions:

- President
- VP Internal (Graduate)*
- VP Internal (Professional)†
- VP External
- VP Communications
- VP Services

Nomination Forms and Information Packages are available at the SGPS Office. (JDUC - Room 021)

OTHER INFO:

Nominations Close:
Monday, January 25th @ 4:00 PM (SGPS Office)
Election Dates:
Tuesday/Wednesday, February 9th/10th

Positions are open to all members of the SGPS.
*VP Internal (Graduate) is open to Graduate students ONLY.
†VP Internal (Professional) is open to Law and Theology Students ONLY (pending approval of this position by SGPS Membership on January 20th).

For more information, contact Kevin Brown: brown@civil.queensu.ca or 549-7238.

BEWIC days a success

By ROBERT MACNEIL

This past weekend, Queen's students took a few days off from the sloppy weather to participate in the BEWIC Sports Days '99. The spirit was high, and the participants all had a great time. Teams of 30 people (15 men, 15 women) competed in four events: volleyball broomball, intertube water polo, and rugby-basketball.

The last event was the most interesting and entertaining. The rugby-basketball competition was the most challenging of the four sports because of the difficulty associated with dribbling and shooting a rugby ball. Players could only carry the ball three steps, and then had to either pass, shoot or dribble. Dribbling a rugby ball, however, required a certain amount of skill or luck, as it was quite easy to have it bounce wildly. To help increase the offence in the game, shots taken from basketball's three-point line were worth five points. Scott McCann of the Yellow Pubmarines had "a great time and really enjoyed the bonding experience." His team was comprised of both Student Constables and Clark Hall Pub staff — a winning combination of alcohol and law enforcement. Sadly, booze and cops didn't mix and the team recorded a disappointing finish.

Despite their record, McCann felt it "was nice to see people outside the context of the pub and show our athletic prowess."

The top three teams in the 'Overall' category were Bewic Sports Club, Touched by Love and Superjocks. The top three 'Competitive' teams were Bewic Sports Club, Superjocks and Touched by Love. The top three 'Sportsmanship' teams were Touched by Love, Highlanders and Shazaam!

Resolutions that count

By JULIETA LOEFFLER

I am willing to bet that 90 per cent of the population started the year 1999 with many New Year's resolutions, ways in which they were going to change their lives.

Did you know that the two most common New Year's Resolutions are "I will quit smoking" and "I will lose weight"? Despite the good intentions of these two resolutions, as they are both health orientated and in the long run will probably improve the quality of life, they usually fail.

It is the New Year and I am a fitness writer, therefore, I can not discourage any potential exercise nut from making their way down the dungeon staircases of the PEC into the world of the sweaty. However, I offer you a middle ground, some sound advice that might make you feel great, inside and out.

Change a large and difficult to manage goal into one that can be achieved easily.

What I propose is making a small adjustment to the classic resolution "I will lose weight" or "I will start working out." Change this large and difficult to manage goal into one that can be achieved easily. The logic behind it is simple. Just like a child learns to walk by holding on to tables, taking tiny steps and getting praise from eager parents, one must also start with baby steps and rewards. Instead of striving for immediate weight loss or immediate muscular tone, strive for smaller, obtainable goals.

If you want to lose weight, don't fixate yourself on low calorie diets. The shock to your system is too great and you will feel crummy for a long time before your body gets adjusted to your new habit. Ease yourself into a healthy way of life. Set a goal such as "I will not eat any junk food on Mondays." Once

Please see Making on page 14

ON DECK

FRIDAY
Basketball vs. York
@Bartlett Gym
Women 6 p.m.
Men 8 p.m.

SATURDAY
Queen's Invitational Swim Meet
@ the pool
12 noon

Basketball vs. Laurentian
@Bartlett Gym
Women 6 p.m.
Men 8 p.m.

SUNDAY
Volleyball vs. Ryerson
@Bartlett Gym
Women 2:30 p.m.

SCIENCE

Fireflies and 'cool' light

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

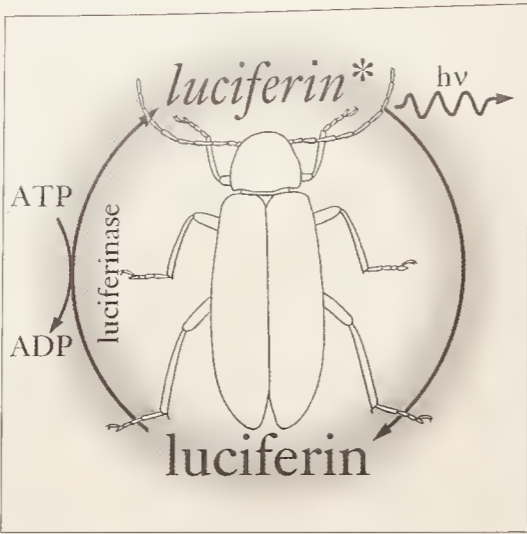

Fireflies are pretty popular as far as insects go, and for one simple reason: fireflies are cool because their butts light up. Maybe I would've been cooler in high school if my butt had lit up, too.

People have been marveling at the beauty of fireflies — which, for the record, are actually beetles — for centuries. Japanese farmers used to tie bags of fireflies to their ankles to plant seeds at night. Guilty frogs have even been known to emit a familiar glow after a big meal. But the scientific age has given fireflies even more distinction.

The basic firefly reaction has been known for a long time and involves the substance luciferin. In the presence of oxygen, ATP (an energy source) and the enzyme luciferinase, luciferin is boosted into an unstable, high energy state. The molecule immediately "falls" back down to its stable state, and releases that energy as light — 100 per cent light in fact, and no excess heat produced. That's significantly more efficient than incandescent light bulbs, which produce only 10 per cent light, and waste the rest as heat.

Sounds valuable, doesn't it? That's what a lot of other people thought, too. Much research has been done into the luciferin reaction, but it turns out that the substance is much too expensive to isolate to make firefly light bulbs a viable option, at least for the time being. But no one's saying you can't still tie them to your feet. Except the fireflies maybe.

Luciferin, however, has many uses other than the production of reading light. In a sense, the firefly enzyme is perfect for detecting life. Here's how: the luciferin reaction, but it turns out that the substance is much too expensive to isolate to make firefly light bulbs a viable option, at least for the time being. But no one's saying you can't still tie them to your feet. Except the fireflies maybe.

as well as for a cosmic life-detector that NASA sent to Mars on Viking. The luciferin reaction is also used in cancer and tuberculosis research.

I guess you might say that we've ruined the mystery and magic of fireflies, but hopefully we will gain enough from our investigations to make up for it. Maybe one day they'll even figure out how to make my butt glow.

Drinking water and other dangers

Queen's students host symposia on how the environment affects our health

BY ROBIN FONGER

Although we have isolated ourselves from many of the deleterious effects of the environment through controlled indoor environments, humans, as well as other species, depend on the environment for their well being. In order to sensitize the public to the importance of environmental quality, it is important to make the links between human health and the environment readily obvious. It is on this rationalization that fourth-year environmental science students at Queen's have prepared the fifth annual environmental science symposia.

This year, these symposia fall under the common theme of "Human Health and the Environment." Their aim is to educate about the health risks we are exposed to in the normal routine of everyday life, and how our health is affected by diet.

From the glass of tap water we drink when we wake in the morning, to the mercury fillings we receive at the dentist, and the stresses experienced in the work place, there are many external factors that can influence our overall health. Often however, we are unaware of these exposures. Health risks can even be encountered from seemingly harmless exposures, such as the electromagnetic fields from power-lines or even Furbies, the polyvinyl chlorides (PVCs) found in the soft plastics in children's toys, or the food we consume that has been treated with pesticides.

Discussions on how human health is affected by diet will include a talk on the importance of eating environmentally and another talk on the health risks involved. Other symposia will reveal the fungi, algae and bacteria we consume daily, and the changing diets and eating habits of Inuit people.

According to Peter Hodson, the director and faculty coordinator of the School of Environmental Studies, "Every symposium has featured on each day a speaker who was inspiring and informative. The symposia do not consist of just talks, but really good information changes hands along with the networking of different combinations of people. Specific contacts can be made for students for graduate type activities and jobs."

This year, the symposia are anticipated to be just as successful as those of the past have been. Along with the topics mentioned above, there will be workshops on feminine hygiene, yoga and relaxation, organic food, and water quality and cancer.

The upcoming symposia will include speakers from the Annadale Organic Food Co-op, The Body Shop, The Downtown Workout, Greenpeace, Ontario Hydro, the Sierra Club, the University of Guelph and Queen's, as well as many others.

For all interested, this year's symposia will run the weekend of January 30 and 31. It will be held in the Biosciences complex from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. each day at no charge. All wishing to attend are encouraged to bring their own mug. An up-to-date itinerary will be available on the web at <http://glink.queensu.ca/~4wck/sat-ind.htm> and at the Earth Centre.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Pluto's not a planet?

This February, Pluto will once again be the furthest planet from the sun, as its elliptical orbit takes it beyond the orbit of Neptune. Not long after that, it may no longer be officially a planet at all. Pluto has never quite fit in with the other planets: not a gas giant like its closest neighbours, not a rocky planet like the inner four. Pluto is tiny — smaller than Earth's moon — and composed of a mixture of rock and ice. Its one satellite, Charon, is relatively large and the two revolve around each other in a very tight orbit (Charon itself has been demoted: not Pluto's moon, but its companion).

So, if Pluto's not a planet, what in Hades is it? One school of thought wants to group it as a minor planet, one of the thousands of smaller bodies that orbit the sun, including the asteroids in the belt between Mars and Jupiter. The International Astronomical Union's Minor Planet Center is even willing to commemorate the event by dubbing Pluto the 10,000th such body to be classified. The alternative is to create a new classification of celestial bodies and lump Pluto in with the 60 or so other small, icy bodies that have been found beyond Neptune's orbit, in the Kuiper belt. In that case, Pluto would be honoured with the title of Trans-Neptunian Object No. 1.

And you thought the headache and dry mouth were bad...

A new study suggests that the same chemical responsible for hangover symptoms can also cause cancer. Acetaldehyde is produced in the body as it processes alcohol and during normal digestion, and is also found in car exhaust and cigarette smoke. The international team of scientists who published the study found that acetaldehyde can cause damage to nucleotides, the genetic building blocks, and that these damaged sections can slip into DNA and cause mutations. The study supports earlier studies that link alcohol consumption and cancers of the larynx, esophagus and liver.

Overclocking the brain

It seems that, like a computer, a brain can be tinkered with so that it runs faster than it was designed to. Researchers in California have been able to significantly increase the number of sound pulses a rat can process per second by directly stimulating the part of the brain that distinguishes between important sounds and background noise. Future studies based on this technique could improve our understanding of certain types of dyslexia and other language impairments that are linked to slow sound processing in children.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Kaldor soars

Connie Kaldor and Bill Gossage get intimate with the packed house at the Edward Day Gallery.

CONCERT REVIEW

BY DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

Who is Connie Kaldor? Without making light of the question of trapping Kaldor within the rigid confines of some functional yet two-dimensional definition I'm going to take the risk and try anyway.

Kaldor is a Canadian musician who writes and sings in a quirky and engaging, genre-bending manner. Her music cannot easily be described because it is the "you should've been there" sort which must be seen and appreciated live.

Over the years she has been recognized for her musical abilities, headlining folk-type festivals in Canada and the United States, as well as performing in various countries in and around the Pacific Rim. All this work has culminated recently with an award at the Junos.

I had the opportunity this past Wednesday evening to attend a performance of Kaldor's, hosted at the Edward Day Gallery. The venue for the performance was intimate, allowing a closeness between the small, packed house and Kaldor.

With the backdrop of softly lit artwork, Kaldor and her side-man, Bill Gossage, came onstage and casually warmed up. Kaldor engaged the audience in a humorous and hushed lullaby banter about preparing for the iced and snowy mess of a Canadian winter, while Gossage slowly picked away at his cello.

The atmosphere was that of some close friends who hadn't seen each other for a while, but had not noticed the lapse in time. Indeed, this appeared to be true, as Kaldor reminisced about past performances and a sizeable portion of the audience sang and clapped along to a number of their favourite songs.

A great deal of what made Kaldor's performance so engaging was the way in which she interacted with the audience. She insisted that a lady with a crying baby not leave but, instead go into the back room so that she did not expose the child to the weather.

She also shared, between songs, personal humorous anecdotes. These were on topics such as the strangeness of finding one's soulmate at a prairie wedding or the kinship she felt with a Mongolian mother while travelling through Mongolia, because of the knowledge that, like her, the mother must also deal with soiled diapers. These moments created a friendly rapport with the audience. Kaldor's personal stories made the music and lyrics that much more authentic and enjoyable.

The music was often funny, and always engaging. With songs ranging from country-style love ballads about jilted relationships to the Caribbean song "Mr. Tally Man" parodied in an ode to the Internet, each new song was effective for reasons varying from creative rhyming to the wakefulness of her calming, smooth voice.

Overall, the concert was a worthwhile experience. I must admit that I am generally not a big fan of the different kinds of music that Kaldor played, but I look forward to the next time she comes to town so that I may sing and clap along with the rest of the audience. You'd just have to be there to understand, but I hope next time you are — Kaldor is not to be missed.

Thrusting it

Bottled up, Thrust was about the only interesting drink at AJ's on Wednesday.

Thrust and BTK fail to excite small crowd at AJ's

CONCERT REVIEW

BY BRAD SUISHAM

Wednesday evening, rap group BTK made a return to AJ's Hangar, where they were supposed to open in September for Econoline Crush. Unfortunately, this Bad Terrible Krap should have remained an opening act.

BTK's opening act, Thrust with Fudge, appeared previously at Alfie's with Rascaz and members of the "Northern Touch" Crew. The rappers seemed lethargic on stage, perhaps owing to their prolonged pre-show snooze in the bar. Although Thrust made valiant efforts to rouse the 10 members of the audience, energy levels remained low throughout the short set. Attention in the bar was more focused on beer than the entertainment, as someone had Broken The Keg and all taps in the bar were dry.

BTK is probably best known for their "Peppyrack" video that combines Sesame Street nostalgia and illicit drug imagery. The video was in heavy rotation last fall, and recently received a MuchMusic Video Award for its innovation. The band's creative character was evident on stage; band members joked with each other between songs, and showed finesse in handling a drunken heckler who kept screaming "Mother of Ass."

BTK's music uniquely combines rap with Bass and Turntable Kitsch. Their sound invites comparison to the Beastie Boys, although it doesn't quite match the Beasties in intelligence or charisma. Songs in their repertoire that strayed from the popular "Peppyrack" and "Superchile" formula tended to lack coherence and energy. The band's performance suffered due to the lack of an attentive audience; competition with WCW's Psychosis proved too intense.

Despite the success of "Peppyrack," BTK has not built a following that can justify headlining a show. Perhaps the release of either another unique video or another album will increase the band's ability to draw a crowd. Regardless, they were still Better Than K-Ci and JoJo.

Rotate this!

Dallas Dallas High Park Records

BY ELI SCHUSTER

Rest assured fellow readers, I haven't gone country on you. In spite of the title of this CD, there isn't a twang, a yee-haw, or any mention of cheating wives, pickup trucks, or getting piss-drunk while wallowing in self-pity. Hell, there ain't even a portrait of Larry Hagman in a light grey early-eighties three piece suit and matching cowboy hat.

I found "raj Kapoor" to be a haunting and mysterious love ballad.

Nope, Bobby, J.R., Sue-Ellen and the rest of that wacky and dysfunctional gang have nothing to do with this project. Dallas is the name of a European boy-girl pop duo who look as though they generally stay out of the sun and don't waste a lot of time in the shower.

Judging by the names on the back, I'm assuming the group is Finnish. The female singer is reminiscent of the Icelandic Bjork.

I really wasn't expecting to like this collection of songs; the CD jacket is an ugly montage of weird, seemingly drug-induced band photos punctuated with a hideous combination of gold lettering over a shocking pink (think of it as a high school art project gone horribly wrong).

A number of the songs aren't that great, and none will ever enjoy the honour of being re-written into Muzak versions, but I found "raj Kapoor" to be a haunting and mysterious love ballad.

Similarly, "police" was enjoyable (although I'm not sure if it really has anything to do with police officers), with a few good guitar riffs thrown in at the end.

Instead of giving it away to my younger and more foolish brother, or keeping it handy for a spare frisbee, I think I'll keep the Dallas CD and perhaps even play it sometime.

The CD jacket is an ugly montage of weird, seemingly drug-induced band photos.

Just to be fair, I thought I should re-play the album, and I'm glad I did because a funny thing happened — a few of the tunes actually began to grow on me.

Rotate this!

Continued from page 17

Fun Lovin' Criminals
100% Colombian
Virgin Records

BY LILIAN KIM

Forget about "Scooby Snacks" for a moment, and take a second to imagine what the Fun Lovin' Criminals are really all about.

The New York-based band is more than the pop-dance tune that shot their debut album Come Find Yourself into a flattering musical stratosphere. "Scooby Snacks" does not do justice to what the trio of Huey (vocals/guitar), Fast (bass) and Steve (drums) have actually accomplished with the rest of Come Find Yourself and to their soon to be released album 100% Colombian.

The Fun Lovin' Criminals are a mix of every possible attractive musical genre in one package. The band collects elements of hip-hop, jazz, rock n' roll, blues, soul and lounge to create a sound so diverse that 100% Colombian seems like a compilation of artists than a single band's project.

Frontman Huey sings with a soulful rasp and melody that emulates trip-hop god Tricky. Tracks like "The View Belongs to Everyone," and "We Are All Very Worried About You," heavily move with hip-hop beats, but the undertone is met by apparent guitar licks, emphasizing the band's ability to successfully experiment with broad range music.

The thing about the Fun Lovin' Criminals is that they could easily be diagnosed as musical schizophrenics. Their track "Southside" is pretty much a three-chord, downward strumming rock song, while "Up On the Hill" could be compared to a delicious new track from A Tribe Called Quest's The Love Movement.

In any case, confusion is not part of the trip. 100% Colombian seems to take a natural stance as second album for F.L.C. and is a lot stronger than one might expect it to be.

Various Artists
The Faculty
Sony Music

BY DOUGLAS REID GIEURLA

Through the years, we've all had teachers who we felt didn't come from the same planet we did. Well, someone made a movie about it. And now there is The Faculty soundtrack. The artists on this album have come up with some cool teen-angst tunes — either their own or some apt classic rock covers.

The most striking are the latter, particularly both parts of Pink Floyd's "Another Brick in the Wall" performed by the "Class Of '99," an alt-rock all-star supergroup featuring Layne Staley (Alice In Chains) on vocals, and Tom Morello (Rage Against The Machine) on guitar. Their take is even darker, moodier, and more menacing than Floyd's original, with an industrial undercurrent that makes the already timeless tune an incredible cover for 1999.

Second, what is a highschool flick without Alice Cooper? Well he gets his place on Creed's whumping version of "I'm Eighteen" and Soul Asylum's fiery romp on "School's Out," where the instrumental arrangement is identical but the spookiness of Cooper is replaced with a slice of Soul.

We all know "Rockabye" guy Shawn Mullins and he offers a faithful rendering of David Bowie's "Changes." Not bad, but stick to your one-hit wonder. "The Kids Aren't All Right" by the Offspring is what you would expect from any Offspring tune, fast, loud and sure to kick-start your day!

Rounding out The Faculty soundtrack are several original tunes by some of the hottest artists in alternative music today: "Stay Young" by Oasis, "Resuscitation" by Sheryl Crow, and "Medication" by Garbage. The Faculty is the first soundtrack to come my way where I can truly listen to the dozen songs without hitting SKIP.

Drop this disc in your player and soon you'll be ready to rebel against that prof from another planet!

A&E Boys in brief

Howie could you? This past Sunday, the Backstreet Boys had to cancel their first show in six years. Howie Dorough had to miss the show because his sister recently died of lupus at age 25.

Another Panzerotti Pavarotti? Luciano Pavarotti has tipped the scales at 300 pounds and has offered a reason for his weight problem: "You have to have some willpower and have to be determined. It's psychological. A person of my size has some hunger, maybe from the war. I am a child of World War II."

Enter Sand-ler: Adam Sandler of The Waterboy and Billy Madison, will soon have an animated ego. He has made a deal with Sony for an animated musical — it is expected to take a number of years to create. This summer you can see him in Big Daddy with Joey Lauren Adams.

Rap-sheet (again): Rapper ODB was arrested on a charge of attempted murder after an attempted shoot-out. ODB, also known as Big Baby Jesus, was stopped by the police after his sports utility vehicle didn't have its lights on. This is his fourth arrest since July.

Everyone else is up the Creek: (Top 3 movies for the weekend of January 15)
1. Varsity Blues $14.3 million
2. A Civil Action $10.9 million
3. The Thin Red Line $10.5 million

Want to have experience in teaching Conversational ESL? Want to find out about other cultures and teaching overseas? Be an ESL Volunteer Tutor. Two-hour weekly commitment.

Call 533-2472 or drop by the School of English at 96 Albert St.

enjoy a pint and you can STILL hear your friends
Robby Burns Supper Mon Jan 25
Celebrate the.. "Bard Of Scotland"

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS

$2.49 sunday breakfast

sun-tues

1/2 price wings*

wed

1/2 price nachos*

*after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS

fri Jan 22

WoeBeGone

reggae-ska-soul

East meets West

Exhibit strives for cultural understanding

BY EDRIK THAY

Maqamaat: the plural of the Arabic word maqam, a term defined as a resting place, a level of achievement, a level of understanding, or respect given to you by others.

Maqadimah: a word rooted in Arabic, embodying, according to artist Sylvat Aziz, "a preface, an introduction, a court case, a thesis, an examination, and a treatise" all at once.

These words form the titles of two series of works by Aziz, some of which are currently on exhibit at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre. Lying at the heart of both series are concerns about female positions in Muslim society, gender relations and cultural identity.

The large-scale, vibrant coloured paintings and sculptures reveal a conscious attempt to reconcile Muslim images with Western ones. The boundaries between the two are blurred, and the arbitrary demarcations drawn between cultures are brought into order to understand; the viewer must become more self-aware — aware of his or her own personal history, perspectives, and ultimately his or her own cultural identities.

The large-scale, vibrant coloured paintings and sculptures reveal a conscious attempt to reconcile Muslim images with Western ones.

"Maqamaat Carousel" highlights these concerns. On the left panel of the portrait, a brilliantly coloured horse is at once rendered familiar and exotic; the horse is foregrounded against a dark and somewhat forbidding wall of what appears to be Arabic text. The panel brings to mind Western images of the plains, as well as those of foreign empires, such as the Assyrians and Persians. Various cultures, separated by land and time, are brought together in this one image.

The panel also reveals Aziz's concerns about feminine identity in Muslim society. Situated in the foreground along with the horse, is a Muslim woman, barely visible, overshadowed and hidden in female positions in Muslim society, gender relations and cultural identity.

Please see Vivid on page 20

The Charity Ball

a formal evening of dinner & dance

January 30, 1999

Tickets $30

Tickets on sale January 18 - 29th
Monday, Wednesday & Friday: MacCorry
Tuesday & Thursday: lower JDUC

all proceeds to Helen Tufts Tutorial Program

Glamour & Glitz

533-6000 ext 74819

University of Alberta
excellence in research and graduate education

ENGINEERING

If you are planning to do graduate work in engineering, why not study with the best? The Faculty of Engineering at the University of Alberta offers high quality graduate programs, an extensive financial assistance program, and strong industry connections.

Our faculty, recognized leaders in their particular fields, are involved in internationally recognized research in which graduate students play a vital role.

Come and work with the best.

For more information:
Faculty of Engineering
5-1 Mechanical Engineering Building,
University of Alberta,
Edmonton, Alberta T6G 2G8
Tel: 492-3320 or 1-800-407-8354
engin@dean.engg.ualberta.ca
www.engineering.ualberta.ca

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Nominations for the position of editor(s)-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal are now open.

All nominations should be submitted in person to Keith Gerein, Co-editor-in-chief.

Please call 533-2800 for details.

Nominations close Friday, January 29 at 5 p.m.

Sight not worth second look

At First Sight relies on sexy stars

First Base: Kilmer and Sorvino steam it up in At First Sight.

MOVIE REVIEW

At First Sight
Capitol Theatres

By VIRGINIA WIGMORE

Valentine's Day, touted as the most romantic day of the year, is rapidly approaching. While Hallmark and Laura Secord are doing their part by supplying

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

heart-shaped chocolates and mushy cards, Hollywood is also contributing by releasing a barrage of romances. At First Sight starring Mira Sorvino and Val Kilmer is one such movie.

At First Sight follows the basic recipe of girl and boy fall in love, girl tries to help boy overcome a personal disability. In this case however, the girl is a recently divorced, overworked young architect trying to help a blind masseuse regain his sight.

Despite the predictability of this film, it is still worthwhile to see — especially for the massage scene. This is perhaps one of the most erotic non-sex scenes in recent film history. The sexual tension between the two main characters is palpable, as Virgil Adamson (Kilmer) gives Amy Benic (Sorvino) a therapeutic, deep-body massage, starting with the soles of her feet and slowly moving upwards. The tension is further heightened because Adamson is only able to touch Benic with hot oil between his fingers — his attraction is entirely based on the way she feels, the interplay between the complacency of her skin and her muscles. Ooh baby, this scene is reason enough to fork out the nine bucks.

While it was basically the prospect of catching this scene that caused me to venture out of my house during the snow storm, At First Sight did possess other qualities.

Based on a true story, At First Sight deals with the question: how would your life and your relationships change if you were plagued with blindness since birth, but you suddenly regained your sight?

There are many touching scenes in this movie, particularly one between Adamson and his sister, played by Kelly McGillis of Top Gun fame, during which he thanks her for all that she has done for him in his less than ordinary life.

One area of the movie which was lacking was the rapport between the main characters. I was often left wondering what the relationship was based on, because there was little development in the relationship past the initial attraction.

The two main characters were one dimensional and exhibited little charisma or magnetism, making it difficult to sympathize with them as they struggled to make the relationship work. Sorvino's Benic comes across as pushy, whiny and only interested in her own well being. Kilmer's character is apathetic and self-interested.

At First Sight is definitely not a must-see movie. While I enjoyed the film, I did not find it very memorable. If I was Siskel, I can't say I would give it a thumbs up.

So, unless you are lonely and think a hot and erotic massage scene will add a little spice to your life, I would recommend waiting until this film is released on video.

Vivid images

continued from page 19

this luminous animal of red, gold and white. The image, however, resists simple interpretation; the viewer is asked to question cultural assumptions, to decipher myths and preconceptions. Meanings are mingled in this cross-cultural exchange.

The panel brings to mind Western images of the plains, as well as those of foreign empires.

Aziz was born in Lahore, Pakistan, and her work reflects her life there and in Canada since 1983. She has participated in numerous group and solo shows since 1976, and is currently an assistant professor of painting and drawing at Queen's University.

Her work is shaped by personal experiences, and as a result, invites the viewer's participation beyond that of a passing glance.

Aziz's introspective work requires introspection on the viewer's part. In this light, Aziz not only educates the individual, but also enlightens the individual's own sense of self.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

- ACROSS
- New Zealand parrot
  - Liquid distilled from coal
  - Motorcycle gang member
  - Archangel
  - Its atomic number is 27
  - Make up for
  - French king
  - Child's word for toe
  - Neckline shape
  - They might get in your pants?
  - Compass point
  - Saucy
  - Gem setting
  - Excepting that
  - Large tank
  - Baking pan
  - Bent the arm
  - Cracks a whip
  - Diving bird
  - Short sleep
  - Christmas
  - Autumn mo.
  - Deep sleeps
  - Regret bitterly

- Segovia's instrument
- Baptismal oil
- Goes bad
- Difficult to chew
- Pinch
- A stiff hair
- Record of voyages
- Agreements
- Complain unreasonably
- Brogan
- Parson bird
- Settled habit

DOWN

- Give a piece of advice
- Letters before an alias
- Iodine source
- Mr. Shaw
- Die having three pips
- Help
- Actor Keanu
- Singer Pat
- Needing attention at once
- Sly looks
- Sideways walker
- Encountered
- Wildbeest
- Number of deadly sins
- One cent
- Slack
- Fleur-de-
- Adult male voices
- Concentrate
- Hand cream
- Stream barmer
- Charioteer constellation
- Luxurious
- Appear to be

QUEEN'S CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP
www.ams.queensu.ca/QCF

Winter term
Smallgroup Bible Seminars:
GAMES 'N JAMES (Paul & Greg)
Mondays 12:30pm Music Listening Rm JDUC
CHRISTIANITY IN CONTEMPORARY CULTURE (Dave & Nate)
Mondays 7:30pm Geneva House (Frontenac & Union)
GOSPEL OF JOHN (Leah & Dave)
Mondays 8:30pm 346 Brock St. Apt.503
RUTH: YOUR LIFE & GOD'S WILL (Phil)
Tuesdays 3:30pm Geneva House
JOSHUA (Jen & Ryan)
Tuesdays 4pm A-wing Seminar Rm, Vic Hall
EPISODES IN THE GOSPELS (Perry & Darren)
Tuesdays 7pm Watson Hall 517
PARABLES OF JESUS #1 (Doug)
Wednesdays 4pm Geneva House
SOCIAL JUSTICE--french language study (Rachel & Christian) Wednesdays 7:30pm 356 Albert St.
PARABLES OF JESUS #2 (Doug)
Fridays 11:30am Music Listening Rm JDUC
Biggroup meetings: Thursdays 6:30pm @ Allie's
Jan 28, 7:30pm QCF will be taking Biggroup to Etherington Auditorium to hear Geneva Lecturer Gerard Gabrielse of the physics Dept. Upcoming Biggroup guest speakers
Feb 4 Phil Apol (Geneva House)
Feb 18 Bill Van Groningen (Campus Ministry Director, C.R.C. North America)

WANTED

Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its 50-node Novell network, Web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS commissions, services, general office and numerous committees and activities.

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. Time commitment ranges between 10-20 hrs/wk.

Questions?
Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chris@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherren, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a Windows NT networking environment,
- have good communication & organizational skills,
- have a working knowledge of MS Office,
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment,
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC.
Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

PUBLIC LECTURE

to be given by

DR. ALMERIA NATANSOHN

Professor Department of Chemistry
Queen's University

MOVING MOLECULES WITH LIGHT

Monday, JANUARY 25, 1999
7 p.m. at CONFERENCE ROOM 202
SCHOOL OF POLICY STUDIES

This lecture is associated with the award to Dr. Natansohn of one of the two 1997 Prizes for Excellence in Research at Queen's University.

JESUS AWARENESS WEEK

JANUARY 25TH TO JANUARY 30TH, 1999

SPONSORED BY CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

IS THERE ANY REAL RIGHT OR WRONG?
the error in post modern thought

Monday January 25th
1:30 PM - McLaughlin Room, JDUC

CHOOSING MY RELIGION
the search for religious truth

Tuesday January 26th
1:30 PM - McLaughlin Room, JDUC

ONE SURE THING ABOUT Y2K
technology in crisis

Wednesday January 27th
7:30 PM - Ellis Auditorium

MAXIMUM SEX
the search for true intimacy

Thursday January 28th
7:30 PM - Dunning Auditorium

FRIENDS NIGHT
food, friends and fun

Friday January 29th
7:30 PM - Ellis Auditorium

JESUS - THE FILM
the story of the One who changed the world forever

Saturday January 30th
7:30 PM - Dunning Auditorium

Classifieds

$.99

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOFF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/bluerooft or call Kim Ondaalje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night! February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

QUEEN'S INTER-UNIVERSITY BASEBALL TEAM Indoor workouts begin Sunday January 17th at McArthur Gym (West Campus) 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. January 24th 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. P.E.C. For more info 6bsm1. All welcome.

AMERICAN SIGN LANGUAGE COURSE offered this term! Sign up for Monday or Tuesday classes, 6 - 9 p.m., beginning January 25th and 26th at the AMS Front Desk. Cost is $100 for ten weeks. Space is limited!

STILL LOOKING FOR PRINCE

CHARMING? You just might find him at Glamour and Glitz 1999 on January 30th. Get your tickets to Charity Ball soon! It'll be kickin'!

ARE YOU GRADUATING from Arts and Science this year? Are you proud of your accomplishments at Queen's? If so, you can apply for an ASUS scholarship worth $1000.00!!! Deadline has been extended until Monday, January 25th, 1999!!! Come by the Core at 183 University Ave to pick up an application or for more info.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS: Our next class features quick, hearty, comforting soups. Call the Health Educator at 533-6712 to sign up for this session Monday, January 25th 5:30 - 7:00 p.m. at the International Centre. Free with a donation to the Food Bank.

UP TO THREE ASUS SCHOLARSHIPS are available to graduation Arts and Science students who have demonstrated outstanding academic achievement and significant extracurricular contributions while at Queen's. Drop by the ASUS Core at 183 University Ave., for an application or more info. Deadline is January 25th.

OUT AT NIGHT? Walkhome is open from 6 p.m. - 2 a.m. - Wednesday, and until 3 a.m. on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. So if you're not sure where you're going, don't feel comfortable on your own, or just want some friendly company, give us a call at 533-2662.

TICKETS TICKETS TICKETS Tickets are on sale for the French play Les Belles-soeurs by Michel Tremblay, February 4th, 5th and 6th. Students $5 and general $8.

CAMPUS TRIVIA TOURNAMENT. Do you know stuff? Prove it! Sign up your team of 4 or individually. $5 per person. January 30th. Email 6aj13 to register.

CHARITY BALL'S GLAMOUR AND GLITZ The best party of the year! Tickets sold Monday, Wednesday, Friday in Mac-Cory and Tuesday, Thursday in the J-DUC from 10 - 3. Get yours soon!

VOLUNTEER OPPORTUNITY - Be a volunteer notetaker and help a student with a disability succeed! Your commitment? Attend class and take legible notes. Your reward? An improvement in your own notetaking skills (we provide the training!), and an opportunity to learn something about the university experience of a student with a disability. For more information, contact Soia Ross at 533-6467.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR SALE: '89 Ford Escort LX - 5 door - for sale - 106 km. Asking for $4,000. Also, Mountain bike $35; Sony PCS cell phone and leather case $80.00. Call Christina at 543-4535.

FOR RENT: One and two bedroom apartments available. Clean and spacious. Laundry room facilities on site. On bus route to Queen's. Parking available. Call 544-4568.

FOR RENT: Lovely bachelor apartment on Brock near Sydenham. Rent

UP TO 50% Off

Winter Parkas

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 PRINCESS ST.
542-2892

$525.00 plus PUC ($15-$20 per month). Quiet building. Call 547-2338 to view. Sublet to September possible.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

WANTED

VOCALIST LOOKING for (preferably) 3 - 6 piece jazz band to experiment with standards, creative work; from torch songs, ballads, to swing. Let's make this happen. Call 531-3613.

MISC LOIN KINGS

I NEVER THOUGHT IT WOULD HAPPEN. This is a special time for me, and for everyone like me. I think that, as the final moments of the millennium slip past us, as writers begin to use the word "millennium" more than is strictly necessary, as everyone else grows sick to death of hearing about the millennium, and as this sentence draws to a close, this will be one of the moments long remembered in the 20th century.

DISNEY HAS FINALLY COME THROUGH WITH GENUINE PORN.

Ever since I noticed that Donald Duck doesn't wear any pants, I've been aware of the somewhat uncomfortable sexual overtones of our modern day cartoons. You can't deny it: Betty Rubble, Jessica Rabbit, and Wonder Woman are all sex symbols as much as Marilyn Monroe or Lana Turner. More so, if you're a member of my generation. Actually, most people of my generation don't even know who Lana Turner is. I don't even know who Lana Turner is. I just remember hearing somewhere that she was sexy. Or dreaming it.

"The right people" now know how to look for hidden pornographic images, and no one else cares.

Anyway. Cartoons are sexy, anyone who has ever watched cartoons could tell you that. But it seems that there are a few people who didn't watch them, and grew up thinking of cartoons as harmless, and were shocked to discover their true, hedonistic nature. At least, they were told that they ought to be shocked, and therefore went out of their way to discover a hedonistic nature which did not necessarily exist.

Adding to the disillusionment, it turned out that the Walt Disney company, which trusting parents had thought to be a simple, harmless monolithic, octopus, megalomaniacal, profit-mongering corporation, was in fact the major perpetrator of this smut! Shocking! Outrageous! All the more shocking if outraged parties could dig up some actual proof of the allegation, which of course they did very soon.

But the fact is, these brave crusading souls never stood a chance against Team

Rodent. Their kids had already been sucked in, with a great slurp, by the devilish facade of quality animation. Well, except for The Black Cauldron.

Walt Disney, of course, was a staunch believer in family values, and his company has done the best they can to follow

Brazil, was an obvious target. But the aforementioned moral standards made it hard to outright accuse them. Still, anyone who didn't know Disney was evil hadn't been breathing much lately.

So, in their weakness, the crusaders grasped at straws:

But the silly buggers, they were on the right track. They just swung at the ball too soon, and struck out.

With this month's recall of The Rescuers, Disney has proven that it is feasible to ship porn in a children's animated film, and that, at this point, no one even gives a rat's ass.

I think The Rescuers was a trial run. Pretend like it was a mistake, apologize, and recall. But now they have established a climate in which "the right people" know how to look for hidden pornographic images, and no one else cares!

The silly buggers were on the right track, but they swung too soon and struck out.

The average animated film contains 110,000 frames. That's more sex fantasies than Hugh Hefner and Larry Flynt can envision in a month, combined. That's also the last time I want to have to picture Hugh Hefner and Larry Flynt's sex fantasies combined.

Doubtless, Disney will continue to stay one step ahead of others who will vie for the same market. There will doubtless be competitors. The pioneering Ralph Bakshi (Heavy Metal, Fritz the Cat) tried all this back in the seventies, except for some reason he got it backwards, resulting in animation with the porn out in the open and the actual entertainment value rendered subliminal.

But Disney will no doubt remain the ruler of the animated porn industry. The Magic Kingdom is here for real, my friends. Just watch Tinkerbell, that half-dressed nymphet mute, fly out and make the mighty castle tower appear. You'll see it's not such a small world, after all. Whatever that means.

Adam Prosser animates most things with their clothes on *Officially known as "That generation that came after the Baby Boomers," or TGT-CATBB. The list of generations goes like this:

[Various boring generations that never had the luxury of sociologists to tell them what kind of people they were, back into the mists of history]; [The generation before the baby boomers]; [THE BABY BOOMERS]; [tgt-catbb].

Just $4 for students • $10 for local • $15 for national

Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday publications and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday publications.

Always Your Best Ticket Home

One Way Fares (incl. tax)

Toronto $23

Ottawa $18

Montreal $25

Every Weekend!

Return on Sunday

The Tricolour Sixpack is Back!!!

Get Your Tickets At

By Popular Demand! Buy Your Tricolour Tickets in Advance All Through January!

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
545-6972

Take a trip for free!

P&CC
The Publishing and Copy Centre
☎ 548-6543 ☎ 545-0350
The centre of the lower JDUC

exchange
City / Phone / Year / Cafe / Book / Staff

1-888 AIR CANADA

Visit our Internet site at: www.aircanada.ca

The AMS and Air Canada will fly you and a friend ANYWHERE in North America with the AMS Card.

Including the Caribbean and Hawaii
Pick up your AMS Card at any of the above services or the AMS Front Desk

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, JANUARY 26, 1999

Wondering what to do on Tuesday evening?

Come to The Journal Open House
Tuesday, February 2
7:30 p.m. - 10 p.m.

Big Sugar (left) jammed at Golden Word's annual Beer Brewing Contest at Clark Hall Pub Friday evening as the Kingston Town Crier (above left) and Mayor Gary Bennett (above right) faced off in a marshmallow stuff off.

PHOTOS BY JILL OFFENBECK

Stand and deliver

Did the AMS exec keep their election promises?

ANALYSIS

By Erik Missio

This year's Alma Mater Society Executive have lived up to many of their campaign promises and have enjoyed a number of successes; however, they failed to realize their ultimate goal of alignment, and have not appeared to change students' apathy towards campus politics.

AMS President Tom Stanley, Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie and Vice-President (University Affairs) Alison Loat were elected with 74.8 per cent of the vote last February.

One of the executive's big successes is that, for the first time in 10 years, the Queen's Pub is making money. Not one of the team's original campaign promises, the pub's expansion was given the go ahead after surveys showed it to be a good investment and misconceptions concerning the AMS budget were cleared up, said Moodie.

Although some consider the revitalization of the QP to be the jewel in this year's AMS crown, Moodie refused to take credit for its success, saying that honour belongs to Manager Mark Picketts and Services Director Sarah Armstrong. "The QP is a good example of how an idea combined with good hiring can result in a good outcome."

Moodie was instrumental in expanding Alfie's Pub menu to include more food items such as french fries and

EngSoc survey shows high debt

By Shawn Brimley

A comprehensive survey of Applied Science students, dealing with levels of student debt and quality of education, was recently completed by the Engineering Society.

Last May, the Ontario government announced a program designed to increase the numbers of graduates in computer and electrical engineering. The Access to Opportunities Program (ATOP) will allow assenting universities to double their enrolment in electrical and computer engineering, and offer the opportunity to deregulate tuition across the entire Faculty.

"As all engineering schools in Ontario have chosen to participate, the potentially astronomical heights to which tuition may rise is a cause of significant concern among students," the survey reads.

"We saw pretty quick that with ATOP, it was very likely that every university in Ontario was going to participate," said Keith Stewart, Engineering Society president. "We would do a far better job of representing our students by doing something more constructive, than by aggressive protesting, which we felt would damage our credibility."

The Engineering Society designed a survey asking Applied Science students their views on the quality of education they receive and the student debt load. The survey met with a 60 per cent return rate.

"We got 20 minutes of class time in every undergraduate class, which was absolutely key in getting the results that we did," said Stewart. "With a 60 per cent return rate, there is a lot of weight behind these results."

"I'm really impressed with the survey," said Tom Hattis, dean of Applied Science. "The survey gives us hard data on the numbers involved in student debt load."

"On the areas where we can cross-validate, such as the University Registrar, the numbers are quite accurate," Harris added.

Upon joining the ATOP program, universities will be required to direct 30 per cent of revenue from any tuition increase to "mitigating the effect of the tuition increase," said Stewart.

The results of the Engineering Society survey indicate that in a deregulated environment, a tuition increase of

Please see Teaching on page 3

Please see Students on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 27
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	ABE	15
Editorials	6	Classifieds	20
Opinions	7	Crossword	21
Features	9	MISC.	22
Sports & Fitness	11

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High: -3°C, Low: -11°C; POP: 10%	Thursday Cloudy High: 1°C, Low: -2°C; POP: 40%
Wednesday Sunny with clouds High: 1°C, Low: 0°C; POP: 40%	Friday Cloudy High: -4°C, Low: -7°C; POP: 40%

Street youth focus of new shelter

By Stefan Murray

Kingston's street youth will have another place to go this winter, when a new shelter opens soon on Brock Street.

"There are a number of youth that live on the street... If you can get them off the street without [them] getting frostbite, you have done them a service," said John Johnson, director of strategic planning at Hotel Dieu.

The shelter, which will be located between Clergy and Montreal Streets, is a three-story former apartment complex, currently in the last stages of renovation. The Religious Hospitaliers of St. Joseph, who own the building, are making it available to the Social Planning Council for six months rent-free, while Hotel Dieu volunteers have donated $26,000 toward the project's operation.

"There are a number of youth that live on the street... If you can get them off the street without [them] getting frostbite, you have done them a service."

— John Johnson, director of strategic planning at Hotel Dieu

"Staff [for the shelter] have been hired and trained, and the construction is almost complete," said Johnson.

The initiative will be limited to young adults, aged 16 to 25, who need a place to stay for the night. At this point, the facilities are only equipped to accommodate 18 youths.

"The shelter will try to get them through a crisis situation for three or four days. It is an emergency shelter," Johnson said.

The building will serve a dual purpose, opening as an overnight shelter from 5 p.m. - 9 a.m., then serving as a youth employment centre in the daytime. The employment centre will attempt to provide youth employment opportunities throughout Kingston. The dual programs of the project will hopefully satisfy the short and long term

Please see Delay on page 4

*****
Wannabe A GAEL?
 *****
Info. Meeting...
6:00
TUESDAY JAN. 26TH
ELLIS AUDITORIUM
 *****
 *****

AMS proposes tuition info week

By ALISON MITCHELL

An AMS proposal to host a week devoted to addressing tuition and financial aid issues has won the support of assembly members; however, not all agree that the week should end with a draw for free tuition.

The primary goal of the week, which could be held in early March and has yet to be named, would be to educate students about the issues surrounding tuition in Ontario and about financial services and help which are available to them.

Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), wrote in a press release that some of the ideas for the week were to hold workshops on budgeting and paying off student loans, to organize a three-party debate on education in Ontario (in light of the upcoming spring election), and to host various guest speakers.

The AMS also plans to use the week to survey students about such things as their debt levels and their feelings about tuition and the quality of their education.

In the past the AMS has had difficulty getting student input regarding deregulation, debt and tuition, Loat explained. She proposed that having the week culminate with a "Win Your Tuition!" draw would generate unprecedented interest.

To be eligible to win, students would fill out a survey and, if they met other suggested requirements, such as being a full-time student, they would be entered in the draw.

"I thought we needed a new punch," Loat said when asked about the proposal. "I can't think of a better way to generate interest in the issues."

"I think that there's better ways to spend money in greater public interest."

— Jascha Jabes, ASUS representative to the AMS

Due to higher than expected enrollment this year, the Society Development fund, which is drawn from the AMS Assembly budget, has a significant unbudgeted surplus. The surplus is roughly estimated by Loat to be more than $4,000. Loat wrote in her memo that the extra money could easily cover the cost of the theme week and the draw.

This is a particularly important year to encourage student awareness about tuition issues, Loat said, because last year's Trustees set tuition levels for two years, and as a result the university will not be engaging in a tuition debate this year.

At its January 14 meeting, AMS

Please see Alternatives on page 4

CORRECTION

In the previous issue of The Journal, Dean of Education Rena Upitits's name was spelled incorrectly. The Journal regrets the error.

Going out into the world alone?

ARE THESE YOUR QUESTIONS?

- CAN I GET FUNDING FROM AN ORGANIZATION?
- WHAT ARE MY RESPONSIBILITIES AS A TRAVELLER?
- WHERE IS THE MOST SENSIBLE PLACE TO LIVE WHILE THERE?
- WHAT DO I REALLY NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE REGION I'M TRAVELLING TO?
- IS THERE AN ORIENTATION PROGRAM I CAN ATTEND BEFORE I LEAVE?
- CAN I TALK TO ANOTHER STUDENT WHO HAS ALREADY BEEN THERE?
- CAN I GET CREDITS TOWARD MY DEGREE?
- WHAT ARE THE CUSTOMS OF THE COUNTRY?
- WHAT IS CULTURE SHOCK?
- CAN ANYONE HELP?

YES.

Visit the International Centre and get your questions answered before you go.

Upcoming and Ongoing Events at the International Centre

The Winter Speaker Series continues (5:30-7:00 pm in the Music Listening Room, 2nd floor, JD11C).
 Tuesday, January 26 "Latin America / Caribbean"      Wednesday, February 3 "Western Europe"

And ask us about the International Choir for People Who Think they Cannot Sing!

The International Centre
 at Queen's University in the John Deutsch University Centre
 Tel: (613) 533-3604      Fax: (613) 533-6190      http://www.queuqc.queensu.ca
 Just past the Queen's Pub.

Future politicians rock Ottawa's House

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Last week, Parliament Hill in Ottawa was anything but sedate: the House of Commons passed the budget, enacted legislation to merge all banks into one mega "Bank of Canada" and debated issues such as bringing stoning back as a form of capital punishment.

While it may sound like the Members of Parliament are acting a little stranger than usual, these events took place during Queen's Model Parliament.

More than 300 Queen's students representing five different parties occupied the Lower Chamber for three days of serious debate, laughs and good times.

This year was QMP's seventh year in Ottawa, and all five parties worked on creating 11 bills that were considered in the House. Each party had an elected leader, a whip, cabinet members and/or critics who debated the bills in the House. The moderators of the debate, or the "Speakers" of the House of Commons were guests invited by the committee. This year guest Speakers included Kingston and the Islands MP and Deputy Speaker Peter Milliken, past and present Queen's professors, and other MPs and government officials.

A highlight for many delegates this year was an emergency debate on a "crisis" that emerges after a hurricane wreaked havoc on Latin America. The country could no longer afford to purchase Canadian goods, and the dollar fell to approximately $0.31 cents American. After an afternoon of intense debate, caucus meetings and back-room negotiations, the Liberal government was able to resolve the crisis with the support of the NDP, the third party in the House.

NDP leader and former Queen's student Alexa McDonough came to speak to the participants on Thursday night at a keg party on Parliament Hill. "I am impressed that students take the time away from their studies to see how it all works," she said. "I am sorry that I didn't participate when I was at Queen's... not that it is the only way into politics."

At the Friday night banquet on Parliament Hill, the keynote speaker was Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson, who used to work as the speech-writer for the Speaker of the House of Commons. "Every member of my family went to Queen's, except me," he said. "I went to Carleton." Watson spoke on his experiences in student government and joked about drinking and university life.

Most participants were very enthusiastic about their experiences. "I found some of the remarks [in the House] very intelligent," said Kate McCloskey, ArtSci '01. "Once you got in the House everyone took on the persona of their party... you really did take on a party line," she said.

"Every member of my family went to Queen's, except me... I went to Carleton."

— Ottawa Mayor Jim Watson

"Being an engineering student I was grateful for the chance to dabble in politics," said Anson Chan, Sci '01. "I think for science students it's a great way for them to broaden their interests."

Both McCloskey and Chan indicated that they would likely participate next year.

"Everything went great," said Greg Sullivan, co-chair of QMP. Sullivan said he spoke with many first-time QMP members who said they were looking forward to returning. "That's the greatest compliment that we can get," he said.

Queen's students enjoyed three days of lively debate and debauchery during their seventh annual visit to Ottawa's Parliament Hill for Queen's Model Parliament.

COURTESY OF GREG SULLIVAN

Teaching ability most valued

Continued from page 1

$2,000 would require student aid resources to be approximately $2.2 million, $1 million short of what ATOP would bring in revenue.

"A major conclusion from the survey is that tuition policy needs to reflect the projected shortage of funds, and where and how those funds would be acquired," said Stewart.

"Students are much more interested in the quality of teaching, rather than the size of their classes."

— Keith Stewart, EngSoc president

The survey also indicates that the average student debt load for engineering students is increasing.

"According to the results of the survey, the average student will end up graduating with $20,000 of debt," said Stewart. "But since our results are averages, what is frightening is that there will be a large number of students graduating with debt loads much higher than $20,000."

Another highlight of the survey was the results for questions relating to the quality of education Applied Science students receive.

"Students are much more interested in the quality of teaching, rather than the size of their classes," said Stewart. "Students would rather have an effective teacher in a large lecture, than a poor professor in a smaller class."

According to the survey, students ranked teaching ability, up-to-date labs, and innovative material as the most important factors in the quality of education they receive.

"Our results [in the quality of education section of the survey] are very similar to where the Faculty of Applied Science has set its priorities in terms of the upcoming capital campaign," said Stewart.

"The conclusions from this survey reinforce the direction where we're going," said Harris.

"The Faculty of Applied Science wants our education to be better, they believe they need more money to do that," said Stewart. "As students, we believe that there are lots of ways other than increasing funding, to increase the quality of education, but we also recognize that there are certain things where you need more money in order to do them."

"I think student organizations have a responsibility to do these kinds of things, to put more structure and credibility behind their arguments and positions," said Stewart. "I think all Faculty societies should try something like this."

Students remain apathetic

Continued from page 1

chicken strips. An original campaign promise to offer "lite nites" and reduced pricing on drinks in Alfie's went unfulfilled however, after Moodie learned such practices would be contrary to the law and would place Queen's liquor license in jeopardy.

Another of Moodie's key contributions has been the largely ignored AMS Services Card. "I don't know what we were thinking when we created that card," Moodie admits, "but to complete it, you'd have to restructure your life." The card was recently redesigned so that students are only required to make four different purchases from AMS services for a chance at winning the Hawaiian vacation.

Loat credits Foodbank Coordinator Eric Morris for the success of this year's initiative to help students during times of trouble. Use of the Foodbank has increased this year, which Loat attributes largely to the addition of signs pointing out its location. The Foodbank has also benefited from an excellent relationship with the A&P and successful food drives within the Queen's faculty, Loat said. The Foodbank has expanded its scope to educational programs like the "Food that Makes Cents" cooking course, she added.

In terms of safety and security, Loat cited much progress over the course of this year, but still sees room for improvement. The Queen's Security Web site offers updates of incidents around campus, and message boards can be found in various local stores to keep students abreast of happenings in the area. A media blitz for "Listen, Accept, Respect," a consensual sex awareness program, is expected prior to Reading Week. The AMS is also continually pressuring Vice-Principal (Operations and Finance) John Cowan to allot more money towards the placement of signs showing accessible entrances to campus buildings and increased lighting and blue lights on West Campus, she said.

"The Commissioners and Directors [of the AMS] worked hard... and thankfully, we had an unscandalous year. It all goes back to hiring," Loat said. "The people hired [as Commissioners and Managers] were excellent."

Moodie was quick to agree with the success of the past five months. "Overall, the AMS is looking to have a very successful financial year... if the AMS continues to perform this well [in future years], we could take on a QP-esque project every year. We have a team that all get along really well."

Despite this success, the executive's ultimate dream of aligning the Queen's student body with the lobbying group, Ontario Undergraduate Students Alliance, failed after a referendum vote. Both Moodie and Loat expressed severe disappointment with the results of their bid for student alignment. "I'm disappointed in the OUSA referendum," said Loat. "Queen's is isolating themselves from other university students."

Moodie said he also "would've liked to have another crack at OUSA. A combination of how we handled it and how other people conceived the issue could be re-looked at."

"How people conceive issues' has continually been a struggle for the AMS. Less than 29 per cent of all eligible students voted in the last AMS elections. "If there's no problems, people don't complain. Our generation is pretty apathetic across the board," said Loat. "I wish people would care more [about student politics] but if they just want to use the AMS for its many services, that's fine too."

"I read The Journal all of the time, and I'd like to think I'm informed, but I don't know that much about the AMS. I see posters for movies at Dunning more than I see anything about the AMS," remarked Pedro Rendulich, ArtSci '01. Jay Grozelle, Sci '01, also had no direct opinion on the AMS Executive. "It's not that the AMS is doing anything wrong... I just don't give a damn. I didn't even know about voting [last year]. There should be more publicity."

Students encouraged to begin summer job search

By JENNIFER MORRISON

Kingston may still be covered in snow and ice, but students are advised to begin their summer job search as soon as possible.

"Now is the time to start," said Jane Good, counsellor at the Career Planning and Placement Centre. "Start now and keep going with follow-ups to check on the progress of your application."

Students may visit the Career Planning and Placement Centre for summer employment information. Located across from Victoria Hall in the St. Lawrence Building, the office contains an extensive collection of academic and job-related material and a number of summer job postings. The Centre also offers students free individual counselling sessions and workshops. The workshops cover several areas, ranging from interviewing and networking, to skill development. Workshops devoted specifically to summer job searches are also conducted.

"Four out of five jobs are never advertised."

— Counsellor Jane Good, Career Planning and Placement Office

The Alma Mater Society's student employment manual also offers a number of valuable leads and contacts for summer job seekers. Now available online at <http://www.ams.queensu.ca/>, the guide contains helpful resume and cover letter tips, as well as a comprehensive listing of on campus and off campus job resources. For each listing, the guide includes the address, phone number, e-mail address and name of the contact person, as well as pertinent information, such as hiring

Alternatives to be discussed

Continued from page 2

assembly voted to recommend the tuition information week; however, some assembly members did not support the free tuition draw for various reasons, including the concern that it was too much money to give to one student when need wasn't taken into account.

"I thought that the idea of having a [tuition information week] was a great idea," said Jascha Jabes, ASUS representative to the AMS. "The spirit of the motion was good... [although] I think that there's better ways to spend money in greater public interest."

Jabes added that some assembly members thought "the specific marketing ploy... wasn't the most appropriate." One criticism brought up during the meeting was that the proposed tuition week would only encompass the interests of Arts and Science students. Medicine and Law students whose tuition is considerably higher than that of ArtSci students would not benefit from the tuition give-away, he said.

In terms of her response to the Assembly meeting, Loat said, "I would have been happier if there were some meaningful alternatives presented." She said she remains concerned that there aren't any other strategies that will generate as much interest as the "Win Your Tuition!" draw.

However, the week will be going on in "some modified form," Loat said, and explained she will be discussing possible alternatives to the draw with assembly members over the next few weeks.

—with files from Renée Huang

air transat holidays

Florida February Sale BOOK NOW LIMITED TIME!

• ORLANDO • ST. PETE'S • FT. LAUDERDALE • FT. MYERS • SARASOTA • WEST PLAM BEACH • JACKSONVILLE

DEPARTURES Feb 01 - Feb 03 RETURNS Feb 11 - Feb 20 from $199/$219 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Feb 09 - Feb 21 RETURNS Feb 21 - Feb 28 from $219/$239 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Feb 22 - Feb 28 RETURNS Mar 01 - Mar 15 from $259/$299 Midweek Weekend
--	--	--

YOU GOTTA SKI US!!!!

Vacations starting from Quebec/Vermont/N.Y. 5 DAYS

- Stoneham PQ $199
- Mt. Ste. Anne PQ $209
- Tremblant PQ $199
- Eastern Townships PQ $319
- Lake Placid NY $145 CDN
- Stowe VT $339 CDN
- Vermont Ski Around $277 CDN
- Jay Peak VT $299 CDN
- Sugarbush VT $455 CDN
- Killington VT $389 CDN
- Smugglers Notch VT $478 CDN

ALL U.S. Destinations in COMS B.C./Alberta - 7 nights with air

- Whistler/Blackcomb BC $855
- Big White BC $815
- Silverstar BC $775
- Panorama BC $729
- Canadian Rockies $625
- Banff/Lake Louise $715

Also check out for SUMMER Chile $3,090 Seadiving $299 Rafting $145

CALL MARLIN TRAVEL: 549-4400

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

Via Rail's 6-Pak
Up to 12 flights a day
New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553
Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Delay due to financial and location concerns

Continued from page 1

needs of street youth and "should run nicely together," according to Johnson.

Karen Hindle, AMS social issues deputy commissioner, said the shelter is "a great endeavour that has been a long time coming [and] it's great that Queen's students have become involved in these projects." The Queen's students that have been involved in the shelter have volunteered their time through the Queen's Project for International Development.

"We wanted to extend QPID's involvement to include local projects... and to raise awareness of issues facing developing communities," said Amy Lister, QPID's on-campus and programming director. QPID volunteers have been involved in collecting furniture and appliances for the shelter, as well as cleaning the building and raising awareness for the campaign.

Lister deemed the shelter necessary because "I have noticed more youth on the street recently than I did in my first year here."

"I have noticed more youth on the street recently than I did in my first year here."

— Amy Lister, QPID's on-campus and programming director

Preparations are underway for the opening of a local shelter. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Johnson agreed that the shelter is necessary for the Kingston community and cites both financial and location concerns for the delay.

There's not much money available and we have been looking for a building for over a year," Johnson said.

The shelter will open soon and will be available to any youth in need of temporary shelter.

SENATE COMMITTEES NEED STUDENT MEMBERS

Academic Development, Educational Equity, Information Technology ... and more

Terms start September 1
Apply now! Do it before Valentine's Day
Deadline: February 14

www.queensu.ca/secretariat/senate/vacancy

or call 533-6095
or visit MACKINTOSH-CORRY, B400

Teach English Overseas

ESL Teacher Training Certificate Course

- Intensive 34 hour courses (weekends)
- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development, grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Training of teachers, agencies and recruiters from around the world
- Formal certificate given upon course completion
- Cost: $245 (includes comprehensive training materials)

Opening Courses:
Jan. 30 - Feb. 7 Saturdays and Sundays
May 8 - May 18 Saturdays and Sundays

For More Information Call Oxford Seminars:
(416) 544-9389 / 1-800-247-8719

Fast Facts

In Here

Winter Adapted Games

The Winter Adapted Games are being held next Saturday from 8:30 a.m. - 4:30 p.m. at the Queen's Phys-Ed Centre. The event is a full day of games and activities for individuals between five and 25 years old who have physical or mental impairments or learning disabilities. Participants will be paired with Queen's students from the Faculties of Physical and Health Education, and Rehabilitation Therapy. The day is free and includes complementary lunch, snacks, arts and crafts, and games. Parents, family and friends are invited but are not required to come. For more information or to pre-register, contact Jenn LaRocque at 542-6466 or 547-5956.

—with files from Renée Huang

Nature films at Ellis Hall

Eight outstanding international films based on living and playing in mountain environments will be played at Ellis Hall auditorium, Queen's campus, next Saturday at 7 p.m.

Queen's National High School Debating Tournament

The Queen's Debating Union will be

Out There

Members needed for Falls Prevention Coalition

The KFL&A Fall Prevention Coalition is looking for volunteers with an interest in seniors' issues. The coalition is a group of interested seniors, volunteers and representatives from various local agencies and organization, funded by Kingston General Hospital. The group's mandate is to reduce the number and severity of falls by seniors on pedestrian walkways and in the homes. Call Shirley Albinson at 549-1232 or Karen Graves at 544-7090.

JESUS AWARENESS WEEK

JANUARY 25TH TO JANUARY 30TH, 1999

SPONSORED BY CAMPUS CRUSADE FOR CHRIST

IS THERE ANY REAL RIGHT OR WRONG?
the error in post modern thought
Monday January 25th
1:30 PM - McLaughlin Room, J10C

CHOOSING MY RELIGION
the search for religious truth
Tuesday January 26th
1:30 PM - McLaughlin Room, J10C

ONE SURE THING ABOUT YZK
technology in crisis
Wednesday January 27th
7:30 PM - Ellis Auditorium

MAXIMUM SEX
the search for true intimacy
Thursday January 28th
7:30 PM - Bunning Auditorium

FRIENDS NIGHT
food, friends and fun
Friday January 29th
7:30 PM - Ellis Auditorium

JESUS - THE FILM
the story of the One who changed the world forever
Saturday January 30th
7:30 PM - Bunning Auditorium

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Housing Lottery
balloting on Feb 1 & 2 Lower Vic Hall, 9:30 - 3:30, Draw on Feb 3, 2:30 in Wallace Hall, JDUC.

Charity Ball is here!
Saturday, January 30th at the Portsmouth Harbour. Tickets available Monday, Wednesday, and Friday in MacCorry, Tuesday and Thursday in the JDUC.

Hey Engineers!
Catch a glimpse of your future at CIRQUE+, Feb 12 & 13 - Holiday Inn Kingston. This year's theme is "What can do with an Iron Ring?" Register now in EngSoc - deadline is February 3rd. Need more info? www.engsoc.ca/cirque, or email cirque@engsoc.queensu.ca

AMS Executive Open Forum
Hear the candidates for the AMS Executive and the Undergraduate Student Trustee speak. Hear other people ask them questions. Watch them sweat. All this fun on Tuesday, February 2, 6:00 in Victoria Hall.

Got Talent?
If so then show it off at the "High School meets University" Coffee House at the Grad Club, February 7, from 7 - 10. Those interested in performing should call Jenn at the MAC Office - 533-6000 Ext.75178 or email : 6jek1

Give the Gift of Life.
Canadian Blood Donor Clinic of 1999. Grant Hall, February 8 & 9 for more info., or to volunteer, contact Erica at 6ejd1 or 531-5266

Coffee House! Big Prizes!
Grad Club, Saturday, Jan. 30. All proceeds to the High School Outreach Program. For more info, call Karen in the MAC Office 533-6000 ext. 75178.

If you have something you want to tell the world then
phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

THE JOURNAL

1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Watch your Words

LOVE OR HATE IT, anyone who has ever read Golden Words knows one of the paper's most cherished trademarks is its willingness to poke fun at anyone and everyone. Given the controversy the paper often finds itself in, it's clear that no one is safe from GW's poison pen. Sadly, this reputation was given a dent last week, due to an article that was notable not so much for who it attacked, but rather, who it didn't.

As influential campus media, GW has an obligation to maintain some semblance of neutrality in its election coverage.

In a carefully labeled "opinion" piece in last week's issue, co-editor David Cheung attempted to castigate The Journal for an error in a news story. Unfortunately, before proceeding into his main argument, Cheung decided to throw insults at a seemingly unrelated target — a pair of candidates in the upcoming AMS executive election. While such candidates are certainly fair game for scrutiny and criticism, in this case Cheung should have exercised better judgement, especially considering that a trio of GW staffers is also contending for the AMS executive job. By singling out two AMS hopefuls, and refusing to use that same critical eye against the other candidates, including his co-workers, Cheung has abused his position as editor and impugned his publication's credibility. As co-editor-in-chief (not Operations Manager) Cheung should be well aware that, even under the auspices of an "opinion" piece, his words reflect his influence on the paper as a whole.

As influential campus media, GW has an obligation to maintain some semblance of neutrality in its election coverage, especially when a perception of bias is already high. Using the paper as a pulpit from which to derail the campaign of certain candidates to the benefit of others is an unacceptable violation of this. Furthermore, if Cheung's style is to be the norm, how can we trust that GW's future election commentary will be delivered in a fair and equitable manner? If GW truly wants to contribute to the debate, its staff needs to remember that, as silly as it sounds, everyone needs to be ridiculed equally.

GW has always been an important and valued player in AMS elections. The only way that will happen this year, however, is if they stop making exceptions for themselves.

Turning a blind eye

DURING THE 1980s, apartheid was a human rights issue that galvanized the entire world. Countries stood against the apartheid regime in South Africa in thought and deed, both decrying the situation and instituting economic sanctions. After years of protest, apartheid fell, and in 1994 the African National Congress won a resounding victory in the general election.

Sadly, there is another form of apartheid taking place in 1999 that is being virtually ignored by the rest of the world. The fundamentalist rulers of Afghanistan, called the Taliban, took power by violence in 1996. Since then, they have instituted a gender apartheid that denies women fundamental human rights.

In the name of religion, the Taliban has decreed that women cannot go to school, work outside the home, or travel without a male companion. Women cannot leave the house without being covered from head to foot by a garment called a burqa, which has only a small mesh opening to see and breathe through. Because the country has no rule of law, and the courts are run by the Taliban, women on the street without a male relative, or women seen wearing white socks can be beaten or shot. Both women and men are suffering from the institution of this oppressive regime, although women have remained the main targets of these violations.

The world, by and large, has ignored these atrocities, citing, when pressed, the cultural integrity of the Afghan people. We cannot interfere with the religious freedom of a people, say world leaders.

During apartheid in South Africa it was clear that that nation's self-determination had to be interfered with in order to maintain the rights of blacks in that country. Why do we turn away from Afghanistan when it is clear that a group of people is being systematically oppressed?

It is time for the rest of the world to start treating the human rights violations in Afghanistan like it treats other human rights violations. It may not be a swift reaction, nor one commensurate to the offences committed. But it is time the world registered its disgust.

Making safe sex visible

QUEEN'S STUDENTS PRACTICE safer sex. They are well-informed, interested, and comfortable with sexual health issues.

This is the view purported by some members of the Sexual Health Resource Centre and Student Health Services, who believe that the prominence of sex-related programs and services on campus have encouraged liberal attitudes on campus about sex, sexuality, and sexual health.

We need to make safer sex products more accessible on campus.

The belief that most Queen's students practice safer sex is a dangerous one to propagate. Many Queen's students are not well-informed about sexual health, and certainly not everyone is having safer sex, every time.

I applaud the efforts of the students and staff who are pushing for a greater awareness of sexual issues within the Queen's community. Volunteers at the SHRC sell birth control and STI-prevention products at cost in the Grey House, and work with Peer Educators to offer free and confidential information about sexual health. Students who take advantage of their services have access to valuable information, products, and services.

My concern is that not enough students take enough initiative to benefit from these services. Many lack the confidence to seek sex-related information or to buy products from their peers, and others are simply not informed enough about the SHRC to know where to turn.

Instead, I feel the best way to make students more aware about safer sex is to make these programs and services more visible on campus.

For instance, the SHRC could set up vending machines containing birth control and STI-prevention products in residences, libraries, and high-traffic buildings around campus. The machines could contain condoms, sponges, lubricants, foam, and other products at low costs. They could contain free pamphlets about sexual health and a directory of campus services that students could turn to for more information.

Such vending machines could also include feminine hygiene products such as tampons, maxi-pads, and the keeper. The SHRC could thus possibly share the cost of setting up the machines with the university, which has long been neglecting its responsibility for providing menstrual products in women's washrooms.

Alfie's Pub has recently set up condom machines in its washrooms. This initiative ought to be commended as a means to make safer sex a viable option for students who could otherwise take unnecessary risks.

I believe that the key to making safer sex a reality on campus is to make safer sex products more accessible those who might not seek them out.

BY LAURA MACINNIS

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Manbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler (in absentia)

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Beltinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Andrew Cooke
Suzanne Armstrong

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Focella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, January 20, 1999 • Issue 27 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the publisher. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further information policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial, 613-533-2800; advertising, 613-533-6711; Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 28 will be published on Friday, January 29, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Stephanie Carvin, Jeff Child, Stacey-Anne Curtis, Mike Kralj, Calvin Lam, Sarah LeMay, Stefan Martin, Erik Missio, Alison Mitchell, Jen Morrison, George Pfaff, John Trenholme, Hannah Varto, Gillian White

Photographers: Sue Holland, Bob Hair, Mike McDermott, Jill Offenbeck

OPINIONS

$15 fee is reasonable

A response to the controversy over new exam policy

IN LIGHT OF THE RECENT ACTIVITY concerning the Senate Sub-committee on Exams institution of a $15 fee assessment to students who do not present a valid student card at exams, I feel it incumbent upon myself, as a student on that sub-committee, to address the issue.

Requiring students to bring a student card to their exams is a reasonable manner to discourage cheating. The old system failed to do so and a $15 fee was the best way to achieve this

In the past few years, the number of students failing to bring a valid student card to their exam has increased at a near exponential rate. The faculty and administration became concerned with this alarming pattern, and sought out the sub-committee to address this problem. The unfortunate subject of cheating had reared its ugly head, and a solution was required.

Requiring students to bring a valid student card to their exams is a necessary and reasonable manner in which to discourage cheating. The previous system had apparently failed to do so. The sub-committee discussed various methods of solving this problem. Reluctantly, the $15 fee assessment was seen as the best way to achieve this goal.

What does the sub-committee hope to accomplish with this action? The goal is to reduce the numbers of students failing to bring their student cards down to a manageable level. Of course, it has been put forth that students desperate to cheat will gladly pay the $15. True, the unscrupulous will remain so and may continue with their devious actions. The difference, however, is the scrutiny that will be placed upon those who fail to provide a valid student card. With a decrease in the number of students failing to provide valid student cards, cheaters will be identified and dealt with properly.

This is an attempt to aid the exam proctors in dealing with other concerns that the thousands of other students have during exams. This is an attempt to address the issue of cheating in a fair way, and to remove the negative image that the increase in students failing to bring their student cards to exams represents. This is an attempt, finally, to address a concern that all students and members of the Queen's community should feel compelled to consider.

I am a forgetful man. I don't like the idea that I may be assessed a $15 fee for forgetting my student card at my next exam.

Honestly, I am a forgetful man. I don't like the idea that I may be assessed a $15 fee for forgetting my student card at my next exam. But this is a reasonable solution to a very real problem. I also don't like paying library fines for

Continued on page 8

The letter of the law

Dear Editor,

I wish to clarify certain comments attributed to me in The Queen's Journal this past week regarding Queen's Law's ranking in Canadian Lawyer Magazine. I fear that my comments, as reported in The Journal were taken out of context, and may be misinterpreted.

In my interview with The Queen's Journal reporter, I did not actually point to my own success obtaining an articling position as an indicator of Queen's Law's reputation in the legal community.

Rather, I observed that the Faculty of Law at Queen's has a very strong reputation in the legal community generally. As an indicator of this reputation, I pointed (in great detail) to the high regard the legal community has for the professors at Queen's, both for their teaching abilities, and the particular expertise of many faculty members in different areas of the law.

The legal community has a high regard for the professors at Queen's, both for their teaching abilities and their expertise in different areas of the law.

I also noted the high regard in the legal community for Queen's law grads as a result of the rigorous education offered at Queen's. This has translated into a relatively high success rates for Queen's law grads when seeking articling and other positions.

To further clarify, articling is one of three phases that lawyers must complete before they are called to the bar. Organizations offering articles begin to offer positions to students at the end of their second year, but this process continues into third year and past graduation.

Moreover, not all law students choose to article — many go on to graduate studies, and others seek employment in areas outside the law.

That I obtained an articling position is incidental to my primary observations that Queen's law has a strong reputation in the legal community, and offers a first rate education.

Jason Hannibal
Law '99

The ongoing abortion debate

Dear Editors,

I am responding to Ann Valikoski's letter that concerned my article. Her letter concentrates exclusively on the example of a woman becoming pregnant by rape. I have a few things I would like to point out.

Firstly, her letter assumed that everyone who is pro-life has never been raped. This is hardly true. But it certainly is true that anyone who is pro-choice have never been dismembered, having their body torn apart, piece by piece, and then sucked into a vacuum cleaner, only to be thrown in a garbage can.

Secondly, I don't think that she would accept killing postnatal children for the same reasons that she accepts killing prenatal children. As well, if the mental health of the woman is all that's important, why shouldn't she have the right to kill her rapist? Wouldn't that help her to stop having nightmares about the incident if he can never come back to hurt her? Yet, for some reason, it's OK to kill her unborn child, but not her rapist. Why? Because people can see that a rapist is a human being and has rights of his own, but prenatal children don't have rights in our society today. All as I was asking Ann Valikoski and other pro-choice people to do is to justify their reasons for not wanting to give prenatal children the same rights as postnatal. Is there some fundamental difference between the two groups that I'm not thinking about that devalues prenatals? If not, can we really say that we're any more moral than the slave-owners of 150 years ago or the Nazi Germans of World War II?

If the mental health of the woman is all that's important, why shouldn't she have the right to kill her rapist? Wouldn't that help her to stop having nightmares about the incident?

Thirdly, she bases her entire position on one rare example. Most pro-choice people accept abortion-on-demand, so to bring up the issue of rape is nothing more than a dishonest attempt at making her opinion look good.

Fourthly, she urged me to extend myself beyond the realm of my own "comfortable, privileged familiar place of judgment", but I have to ask, isn't she suggesting that women have the right to judge their own children as worthless human beings that should not have any rights?

Sindi Sahourin
PhD

talking

HEADS

Who would be your ideal Formal Date?

"Her"
Justin Medved
Phys-Ed '99

"Him"
Heather Graham
Phys-Ed '99

"Gord Downie"
Pam Fritz
Con-Ed '99

"Britney Spears"
Mike Goodyear
ArtSci '00

PHOTOS BY SUE HOLLAND

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

1st question: When I say 99 what do you think of?

Wed. With DJ Harry NO COVER
Thurs. & Sat. = 99!
Ecstatic Fridays Superlite til 11

Trasheteria
545-1591

Fair fee for forgotten cards

Continued from page 7

overdue books and reserve readings. Believe me, I've paid a lot of money to the library over the past four and a half years due to sheer laziness or apathy.

The University is not trying to make up for lost provincial funding by hoping to receive at best a few thousand dollars.

Is it fair that I was charged for my inconsiderateness? In my opinion, it was very fair. The goal seems to be rationally connected to the punishment that is instituted, with minimal impairment on the reasonable student. By having a system of library fines in place, students are encouraged to return their library books on time, so that other students may have fair access to them.

I would like to now turn my attention to what this $15 fee assessment is not. It is not a cash grab by the University. Really, does this make any sense? The University is not trying to make up for the millions of dollars in lost provincial funding by hoping to receive (at best) a few thousand dollars. The forgetful and the deceitful are not viewed by the subcommittee as untapped economic resources.

Nine hundred and ninety-four students failing to bring valid student identification is a problem. The University is serious about correcting this problem. This is the most reasonable solution. What is unreasonable, and severely lacking in logic, is The Journal's alternative.

The Journal suggests that, if Queen's is truly serious about preventing cheating on exams, it should not allow students lacking valid student identification to write the exam at all! This confused and troubled me somewhat — a $15 fee assessment is going too far, whereas not permitting students to write their exams is considered reasonable? I fail to see the logic in this suggestion, but I most certainly see the irony in this hypocritical assertion that the members of the subcommittee reevaluate their own logic concerning the matter.

The Journal suggests that Queen's should not allow students without a card to write their exam. This confused and troubled me.

Our solution is an attempt to identify those who cheat, while at the same time trying not to punish those who legitimately forget. Granted, it's not perfect, and I would love to hear a better solution. For now, however, this is where I will stand. This is a reasonable and responsible approach to an identified problem.

I wish everyone the best of luck on their exams. I would also like to remind everyone to bring their student cards to their exams. This, I believe, is a reasonable request. Take responsibility for your actions. We're adults. We owe it to ourselves and to each other.

MIKE KEALY
ARTS '98
LAW '01

SWEP

TEN for Job Interest
TEN for Career Value
TEN bucks an hour

SWEP jobs are:
career-related
mostly on campus
available in many areas of interest

open to full-time undergraduate students who plan to return to Queen's University as undergraduate students in September, 1999

posted on the Career Services web page
www.careers.queensu.ca
and at Career Services on January 25

The Geneva Lectures
presents
Physicist Gerald Gabrielse

Gerald Gabrielse, Harvard University Professor of Physics, is the featured speaker of the ninth annual Geneva Lecture Series. Currently Professor Gabrielse leads the international ATRAP Collaboration whose goal is accurate laser spectroscopy with trapped antihydrogen atoms. The ATRAP Collaboration grew out of the earlier TRAP Collaboration, also led by Professor Gabrielse.

Please join us on the Queen's campus for the following public lecture:

"Antimatter in the Hands of Job's God"
January 28, 1999, Thursday, 7:30 pm, Etherington Auditorium
(Etherington Auditorium is located on Smart Street opposite KGH underground parking)

Also, a colloquium co-sponsored by the Queen's Physics Department:
"Elementary Particles in Designer Atoms"
January 27, Wednesday, 1:30 pm, Stirling Hall

All are welcomed

G
GENEVA FELLOWSHIP

This event is sponsored by Geneva Fellowship, 182 Frontenac Street. For more information contact: Rev. Phil Apol at 535-2962 or Dr. Bill Van Groningen, 531-4627.

FEATURES

The way things are going, they're going to crucify me

- Did the CIA program an assassin to kill John Lennon?
- Was Kurt Cobain murdered?
- Did the son of a one-time U.S. President use a cancerous injection to infect Bob Marley?

ROCK 'N ROLL PART I IS DEAD

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

In Utero, Us Interitus: The Suspicious Suicide of Kurt Cobain

Give me a Leonard Cohen afterworld
So I can sigh eternally
I'm so tired I can't sleep
I'm a liar and a thief
— from "Pennyroyal Tea"

OFFICIALLY, KURT COBAIN'S DEATH on April 8, 1994 is listed as a suicide. High on heroin, depressed and suffering from a chronic stomach ailment, Cobain died as a result of a gunshot wound to the head that was judged to be self-inflicted.

Alternate explanations of Cobain's demise surfaced most immediately. Conspiracy-minded investigators quickly noted that Cobain's "suicide note" contained no mention of suicide (Cobain wrote that he was "retiring," which, while possibly an oblique reference to suicide, could also refer to a withdrawal from his musical career), while some argued that Cobain was too stoned to shoot himself after having shot up on three times the lethal dose of heroin.

Additionally, it has been reported that the shotgun used by Cobain was not properly examined by authorities until one month after Cobain's death — a fact that the conspiracy-minded have taken as evidence of foul play. Others have alleged that the cartridges and gun itself appeared to have been wiped clean of fingerprints, a fact that is at odds with a suicide.

Furthermore, musician Eldon Hoke has claimed that he was offered $50,000 by Cobain's wife, musician/actor Courtney Love, to murder Cobain. Sadly, Hoke was killed after being struck by a train in 1997, before his claims could be satisfactorily investigated. Some argue that suspicious circumstances also surround Hoke's rather convenient demise.

One of the most outspoken of those investigating Cobain's death is Los Angeles private investigator Tom Grant. Grant alleges to have uncovered a plot to kill Cobain initiated by Courtney Love.

According to Grant, who was hired by Love several days prior to Cobain's death to investigate his disappearance from a drug rehab centre, Love hired a professional assassin to murder Cobain. Citing inside information that states Cobain was about to divorce Love and cut her from his will, Grant alleges that the unscrupulous Love sought to secure her share of her husband's significant fortune by having him murdered. While several campaigns have been mounted to defend Love's honour and the Seattle police's investigation into Cobain's death officially ended in 1994, speculation persists that Cobain's death was not a suicide.

and principles of free love and non-violence as a potential terrorist is more than poignantly paranoid — it is outright absurd.)

Lennon's association during the early 1970s with a variety of "radical" groups and individuals both in America and Europe had not endeared him to many of those countries' sometimes menacing governments.

The most popular conspiracy theory surrounding Lennon's murder has Chapman controlled by the CIA as a type of Manchurian Candidate (the notion of the CIA "brainwashing" soldiers into automaton-like killers turns up often in conspiracy lore and was recently popularized by Mel Gibson in Conspiracy Theory). Chapman had long been employed by the YMCA, which, in case you did not know, is considered by many in conspiracy circles as one of the CIA's cover operations (puts a whole new spin on the tired image of the Village People, doesn't it?).

As evidence of Chapman's association with the intelligence community, conspiracy theorists point to Chapman's presence in Beirut during the 1975 uprising and his purchase of an "assassin-type pistol" and set of "military-style hollow-point bullets" a week before the Lennon killing. These purchases required a substantial amount of cash — far more than a meagre YMCA worker like Chapman should have at his disposal. Furthermore, the man who sold Chapman the arms is reported to have significant connections to the American intelligence community.

Making matters more murky is an oft-repeated statement that Lennon murdered to activist Paul Krassner in 1972: "Listen — if anything happens to Yoko and me, it's not an accident."

Some have argued that, while a possible motive for a government-sanctioned killing of Lennon exists, and Chapman is significantly suspicious as an operative, it is incongruent that the government would strike in 1980 with Lennon dwelling in semi-retirement, his output limited to sentimental ballads about him, Yoko and family. Lennon was out of the limelight and his influence was fading; however, on the other hand, what better time to get away with murder? All the reasons that applied to the waning of Lennon's career would also work to ensure that outcry over his death would be easier to contain than if it had happened a decade earlier.

Lennon is also reported to have been on the verge of becoming active again in the political community at the time of the slaying.

No conspiracy, no cry: the cancerous death of Bob Marley

Sheriff John Brown always hated me
For what I don't know
Every time I plant a seed

He said, "Kill it before it grows."
He said "Kill them before they grow."
— from "I Shot the Sheriff"

BOB MARLEY DIED OF CANCER on May 11, 1981. The illness was traced back to a wound sustained during a soccer match in 1977, which was diagnosed as being cancerous one month later in Miami. Three years of experimental and sometimes controversial treatments could not stop the spread of the disease through his body. It reached his brain shortly before he died.

Conspiracy theorists take their cue from the gaping flaw in this story — who has ever heard of someone getting cancer from a toe injury?

They hold that someone, perhaps undercover CIA agents operating in Jamaica, injected Marley with a secret and lethal carcinogen as his toe was being treated, resulting in the singer's death. The conspiracy-minded cite Marley's outspoken support for charismatic and anti-American Jamaica Prime Minister Michael Manley as a possible motive for Marley's murder. The CIA had previously tried to unseat Manley as Jamaica's leader in favour of U.S.-friendly Edward Seaga.

Evidence for a conspiracy is sketchy at best. The CIA did keep files on Bob Marley and considered him a dangerous revolutionary. Marley had survived a previous assassination attempt in 1978, days before a concert sponsored by Manley's party. And, most tantalizingly, the sons of both George Bush (future U.S. president and former CIA chief) and William Colby (then-CIA chief) were in Jamaica at the time of Marley's cancerous toe injury. At least one conspiracy theorist has proposed that the two were CIA agents "who posed as Rolling Stone magazine reporters to inject Marley with cancer."

This is not the end, beautiful friend: the afterlife of Jim Morrison

"If there's one guy who would have been capable of staging his own death — getting a phony death certificate or paying off some French doctor...and putting a hundred and fifty pounds of sand into a coffin and splitting to some point on this planet — Africa, who knows where — Jim Morrison would have been the guy to pull it off.”

Continued on next page

Continued from last page
— Doors keyboardist Ray Manzarek

DOORS LEAD SINGER, poet and world-class eccentric Jim Morrison reportedly died of a heart attack on July 3, 1971, at the age of 27. Pamela Courson, Morrison's longtime girlfriend, reported that Morrison decided to take a bath in their Parisian apartment one evening and was found dead in the tub the next morning.

Alternate causes of Morrison's death began to surface immediately. Most alleged that Morrison had died of a drug overdose at one or another of Paris's sleazier nightclubs and was rushed home to his apartment in secret to avoid a public spectacle. While hardly a conspiracy, this kind of speculation may have helped to fuel what was to come. Courson might have also inadvertently fanned the conspiracy flames by reporting to the press that Jim Morrison was "not dead but very tired and resting in hospital" when, in fact, a Parisian doctor had already signed Morrison's death certificate.

The strangest occurrence surrounding Morrison's death is the delay with which it was reported to the media, as begun with Courson's deceptive press release. Morrison's coffin was sealed before either the American embassy or Morrison's family were notified and no autopsy was performed. It was not until six days after Morrison's death that a cause of death was officially offered: Jim Morrison had died of a heart attack brought about by a blood clot.

Such delaying inevitably gave rise to talk of a cover-up. While most Parisians favoured the nightclub OD scenario, one political conspiracy theory had it that Morrison was assassinated in a plot masterminded by the J. Edgar Hoover-led FBI. As these conspiracy-theorists would have it, "Morrison's popularity, anti-authoritarian bent and native smarts made him a threat to the American Way."

Given the American government's involvement in other attempts to undermine the New Left (discrediting Martin Luther King, Jr., troubling allegations linking the FBI to King's assassination, etc.) and the fact that the FBI did launch an investigation into Morrison's past at one point during the 1960s, this scenario is not entirely far-fetched. But given Morrison's refusal to ever commit to any political causes during his career, it is highly unlikely that the government would go to the trouble of murdering such a high profile figure. And then there is always the complete lack of evidence to substantiate this theory to poke holes in its validity.

More elaborate theories involving Morrison's suspicious death relate to the Lizard King's well-known dabbling in the esoteric arts. One report alleges that, upon Morrison's death, someone plucked out his eyes, thus "freeing his soul." Another supernatural theory posits that Morrison was killed by a disgruntled New York mistress via transatlantic sorcery. Most metaphysical theories surrounding Morrison's death contend that somehow, Jim Morrison defied death in the conventional sense.

Not surprisingly, there have been many reported post-mortem sightings of Jim Morrison on both sides of the Atlantic. A bank employee in San Francisco claimed to be handling Morrison's bank account; a black-leather-wearing Morrison reportedly cruised Paris's underground gay nightclubs frequently in the months following his death. Speculation ran rampant in 1974 when Capitol records released an album called "Phantom's Divine Comedy," featuring musicians X, Y and Z, and a lead singer whose voice bore an eerie resemblance to Mr. Mojo Risin' (the infamous anagram of Jim Morrison). Recent theories, however, have contended that the Morrison sound-alike is none other than a young leggy Pop.

The most wild theory of all holds that Morrison's aura was bought and sold on that day in Paris when he "died." The author of the theory, conspiratologist Thomas Lyttle, has it that Morrison dabbled in voodoo, which holds that the soul needs several months to successfully make the journey to the spiritual afterworld. Voodoo high priests, according to this tradition, are capable of intercepting these souls and collecting them in clay jats (canari). According to Lyttle, Morrison's soul was captured by a woodoo priest in Louisiana who now goes by the name of James Douglas Morrison and claims to be the "dead" rock star. For the record, Lyttle also considers Morrison's second incarnation as having connections to a number of domestic and international intelligence groups, including the CIA, NSA and Interpol. And to think: all this started by finding Jim Morrison dead in a bathtub!

Jesse Craig Bellringer fled to Kingston in 1963 for staging a wet shirt contest on Capitol Hill and is now the sixth most wanted man in America.
Next week, look for part II of Rock 'n' roll is dead: The Paul McCartney death conspiracy theory

SPORTS & FITNESS

DON'T GO JOE

After making a remarkable comeback last week from lung cancer, the Yankee Clipper Joe DiMaggio is again on death's door. The 84-year old legend is now bedridden at home and using a ventilator. DiMaggio has been read his last rites several times but repeatedly keeps bouncing back. He has nine World Series rings, won three most valuable player awards and holds baseball's most famous batting record, a 56-game hitting streak. Hopefully the Clipper has at least one more ninth inning rally left.

IRON MIKE KNOCKED OUT After telling reporters that it was inevitable, Iron Mike Keenan was fired Sunday from his position as head coach of the Vancouver Canucks. The team resides near the basement with a dismal record and they are currently five points out of a playoff spot. The heir to Keenan's throne is former Colorado Avalanche and Canadian Olympic team Head Coach Marc Crawford. The hitting could be a double-edged sword for the Canucks as they must pay the Avalanche compensation since Crawford is still under contract. Also, Crawford was one of the men associated with Canucks' captain Mark Messier not being named to the 1998 Olympic team. Looks like GM Brian Burke's headaches are not over yet.

WINNING BACK FANS? The NBA training camps have opened and the teams are now stocking their respective rosters with high priced talent. With the sports ticker now looking like it belongs on Wall Street, big contracts are being doled out like candy on Halloween. Some of the big names to relocate are Bulls stalwart Scottie Pippen, who will now be plying his trade in Houston, Latrell Sprewell, who has been removed from the suspended list and joins the New York Knicks. The notable post-players to find riches are Antonio McDyess, who returns to Denver after a one year hiatus in Phoenix, Isaac Austin, a big body signed by Orlando. With every announcement of a big dollar signing another fan is lost.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• The Toronto Raptors and Vancouver Grizzlies would win a double-digit number of games.
• Regular season NHL games would see half the goal scoring of an all-star game.
• Mike Keenan would at long last be out of hockey.

Gaels start playoff run

BY CALVIN LAM

It was a do-or-die weekend for the Queen's men's basketball team. A Gaels' loss or even a split of the two home games against York and Laurentian would virtually eliminate all chances of a playoff berth.

Queen's 72, York 58
Queen's 58, Laurentian 56

Despite their precarious position, the men showed incredible spirit and remarkable poise. First, they convincingly defeated York 72-58, and then in perhaps their best game of the season, trumped first place Laurentian 58-56 with a last second tip-in. This amazing weekend left the Gaels with a 5-6 record and once again thinking about the postseason.

On Friday, Queen's did not disappoint the packed house at Bartlett Gym. From the opening tip-off, the Gaels had the York Yeomen overwhelmed. It was a complete team effort that did it, an offence that was firing on all cylinders and a defence that was just relentless. Queen's took the lead early on and never relinquished it. Every time York threatened Queen's advantage, the Gaels would answer. Whether it was a penetrating drive by fourth-year forward Derek Richardson who led the team with 12 points and four steals, or a clutch basket by fan favorite John Purdy who chipped in with 11 points and nine rebounds, the Gaels were always able to maintain the lead. On two separate occasions, Purdy made spectacular steals, each time finishing them off beautifully with a one-handed jam.

The finishing blow came with two minutes left in the game and York pressing. With the shot clock winding down, fourth-year point guard Michael Gleeson, buried an off-balance shot from well beyond the three-point arc. This put Queen's up 66-57 and effectively put the game out of reach for the Yeomen.

Brimming with confidence, the Gaels took on the Laurentian Voyageurs on Saturday who were ranked sixth in the nation. It was Gleeson again who provided the initial spark for Queen's by scoring their first eight points. Rookie guard Jay Fraser also chipped in, displaying his play-making abilities, with some great assists. Ignited by Gleeson and Fraser's efforts, the team put together a 28-22 lead at the half.

"That's the difference with fourth year guys, Richardson and Purdy displayed some great leadership out there and they wouldn't give up."
— Head Coach Scott Meeson

However, the Voyageurs were not going to die quietly. They stormed back in the second half, going on a 10-4 run to pull even at 32-32 at 17:45. Laurentian turned it up a notch on defence and using an all-out defensive trap, forced Queen's to commit numerous turnovers.

Gael John Purdy and Voyageur Ted Doegellmans do battle.
PHOTO BY MIKE MCDERMONT

The Gaels frustrations showed, as Coach Scott Meeson was called for a technical foul.

Queen's could have easily folded, but instead they rose to the challenge. The game intensified and the second half featured six lead changes and the teams were never more than five points apart. Both teams and the crowd sensed that the game would go right down to the wire. Richardson's jump shot from 10 feet pulled the Gaels even at 54-54 with a

Please see Two on page 14

Women's b-ball splits homestand

BY GEORGE PFAFF

The women's basketball team entered the weekend facing the always daunting task of playing teams with very different talent levels as they hosted both York and Laurentian. The squad easily defeated the midling Yeowomen on Friday, before falling to the league-leading Voyageurs in a tightly played contest on Saturday evening.

Queen's 72, York 42
Laurentian 68, Queen's 60

The weekend opener saw the Gaels hitting on all cylinders, mauling the overmatched Yeowomen 72-42. It was a total team performance which saw four players in double figures, led by Deannah Shelley's 13 points, and the return of the suffocating full court defence. While the victory over York was impressive, it was simply a prelude to the match-up of the weekend against the defending OUA champion Voyageurs. The Gaels faced a tall order in this game, with 6'3" Steph Harrison leading the charge for the Lady Vees, a team that the Gaels haven't beaten during Dave Wilson's 17 years as head coach.

Queen's started off well, making their first six foul shots, and on the strength of a good drive by point guard Shelley, they took their first lead at the 14:35 mark of the first half. The Gaels' then fell into a minor shooting slump, allowing Laurentian to go on a 7-0 scoring run and retake the lead.

There was not much to choose between these two good teams as the lead changed hands several times during the first-half with neither team able to take control and pull away. Late in the half, Queen's uncorked a 9-0 run, capped by a three-pointer by Andrea Thomson, which staked the Gaels to a six-point advantage. The Voyageurs made a comeback at the end of the half, narrowing the margin to two, with the Gaels leading 25-23 as they went to the locker room.

Gael Andrea Thomson (right) hustles after the loose ball.
PHOTO BY MIKE MCDERMONT

The second half started off much like the first, with both teams playing each other tough. However, as the game wore on fatigue began to set in on the smaller Queen's team and they were unable to contain Harrison, who finished with 21 points, 14 of which came in the decisive second half. Under ideal circumstances, Harrison

Please see Confidence on page 14

exchange
Events List
Swing at Grant
$5
On Sale Now!
Tickets At:
exchange

The six degrees of condoms

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

BY HANNAH VARTO

Hannah Varto is the External Educator for the Sexual Health Resource Centre

A FRIEND OF MINE went to the drugstore last weekend. In addition to hair products, Hallmark cards and toilet paper, she discreetly brought up a small blue box of condoms to the cashier. She paid for the items and walked out of the drugstore, marking the end of an uncomfortable excursion.

She had gone to the store with the intention of purchasing a simple box of condoms. Intimidated of the task before her, she kept reminding herself that no one there knew her, people have sex all the time and she simply wanted to protect herself. The condom display was located directly across from the prescription waiting area where a woman sat awaiting her usual array of medication. Nervously trying to ignore the woman's curious glare, my friend paced past the display several times.

My friend had a wide variety of choices to make.
• Which condoms should she buy?

• Which brand, type and shape were right for her?

Since my friend was trying to avoid the woman's stares, she quickly grabbed the first box she saw and raced to the front, gathering other products to conceal the package.

Though our generation is constantly inundated with safer sex slogans and "protect yourself" posters, the act of buying condoms can still be an awkward situation. The location of condom displays within drugstores often makes buying them anything but easy and the variety of condoms available makes selection incredibly taxing.

Here are some quick hints to help you choose the condoms that might be right for you. To eliminate long periods of needless rummaging through condom boxes, try asking yourself these questions while you're on your way to the drugstore.

1) Am I allergic to latex? If yes, then your choices have suddenly become very slim. Animal skin (no STD protection) or female condom (made of polyurethane, and is worn by a female usually for heterosexual sex).

2) Lubricated? Lubrication increases pleasure and decreases risk of breakage. Lubricated condoms are not recommended for oral sex — they don't taste very good.

3) Ribbed for her/his pleasure? That's up to you and your partner, but honestly, it doesn't make that much of a difference.

4) Thin? Thin condoms do not imply weaker condoms as all rubbers have to measure up to Canadian standards. Some men find that they can feel more with thin.

(By the way, slogans like "Sense-thin" are just advertising, thin is thin is thin.)

5) Flavoured? Coloured? Scented? Once again, it's your choice, but just make sure that they are not novelty items and protect against everything you want protection for.

6) Brand? This is a common question. There is very little difference between brand names. Your choice of brands is simply preference — talk to your friends about what they like best or just keep trying different ones until you find what feels best for you and your partner.

So, that's all folks. Next time you go to the drugstore have your choices in mind and look for the box that bears them. I recommend visiting the Sexual Health Resource Centre in the Grey House next to Vic Hall for your condoms and other sexual health products. Not only are all the products sold directly at cost, the volunteers are completely confidential and can help you make a good decision. As well, you can pick up lubricant while you're there.

If you have any questions about the use of condoms, what to look for or about sexual health in general feel free to contact the Sexual Health Resource Centre at 533-2959.

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

Queen's First Aid

Introduces...

ON CALL SERVICE

for first aid assistance

- Confidential
- On Campus
- No Charge
- Prompt Response

- Non-Judgmental
- Surrounding Areas
- Highly Trained Students
- Effective First Aid

Emergency Report Centre:

533-6111

Hours: MON-WED 8:00am – 12:30 am
 THURS-FRI 8:00am – 3:30 am

For more information, please call the QFA office at 533-6000 ext. 75373

In the game

Results from a wild weekend on the beat

Men's Volleyball

In men's volleyball action last weekend, the Gaels split two games against University of Toronto and Ryerson. Against U of T, Queen's lost 3-0 in an even, high-level contest. After suffering this defeat, the aching regulars were benched and the subs took over. The result, a 3-0 win over Ryerson that places the Gaels in the thick of the playoff race. This weekend at home, the Gaels play two matches against Laurentian, and one win will propel them into the post season. At the home games Saturday and Sunday a contest will be held in which students can win a flight to anywhere in the world.

sion trailing University of Toronto and Guelph, the perennial division champion. The team will be travelling to York and Laurentian this weekend in hopes of making up ground in the standings.

Women's Volleyball

In a good old fashioned whipping, the Golden Gaels throttled the Ryerson Rams in three sets (15-5, 15-5, 15-8). Queen's, which is beginning their run for the fourth and final playoff spot, were clearly too much for the undermanned visitors. The stakes are raised this weekend when they take on rival Lakehead, who are making the long trek to Kingston for games on both Saturday and Sunday. Wins over the weekend will help solidify an entry in the 'second season'.

Swimming

This past weekend, the Gaels hosted the Queen's Invitational swim meet in what was an important tune-up for the OUA finals held at Laurentian on February 5-7. At the meet, Anne Rowan-Legg qualified for the CIAU championships by winning the 50m freestyle, the 200m back stroke, and the 200m individual medley. The team enjoyed an exceptionally successful weekend as a whole and some of the great performances can be attributed to the team's training camp in Florida over the holidays.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJUNIAN

Men's Hockey

The injury riddled squad hit the road this weekend for two games and split the results with a win against Ryerson and a loss to Brock. This gives the team their first win in almost three months. The team has been able to stay within striking distance of their OUA Mid-East division foes during that time by registering some key ties. Currently the Gaels are in third place in the divi-

Baseball

The baseball team, which is a competitive club, is hosting open try-outs Sunday, January 31, from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on at BEWS gym. Subsequent practices will be held at the same time at the MacArthur Gym on West Campus. The team has only eight returning players so many positions are available.

A splashing start at the Queen's Invitational Swim meet. PHOTO BY BOB HUIR

Attention University Graduates

Earn an E.C.E. Diploma in Only 8 Months

Apply Now for the Intensive E.C.E. Program at Sheridan College. Starts May 10, 1999. To receive information: Call: 416-480-1320. Email: sheridan@minacs.com. Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/edserv/lecede.htm

THIS SATURDAY

WIN A HOT TUB PARTY & KEEP THE TUB!

WIN PRIZES ALL NIGHT LONG

Alfie's PUB

ONE STEP BEYOND WEDNESDAY, FEB. 3

TICKETS AT THE UBS & QEA

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Nominations for the position of editor(s)-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal are now open.

All nominations should be submitted in person to Keith Gerein, Co-editor-in-chief.

Please call 533-2800 for details.

Nominations close Friday, January 29 at 5 p.m.

Two big wins

Continued from page 11
1:30 remaining in the game. Laurentian regained the lead by converting a pair of free throws, but Queen's raced down the court and after several passes, found Purdy open for a clutch basket which again knotted the score at 56 with 18.1 seconds left. In an uncharacteristic play, the Voyageurs proceeded to turn the ball over with 14.1 left on the clock. This time the heroics belonged to 6'5" forward Peter Stelter who tipped in the loose ball with just 0.5 seconds showing on the game clock, bringing the Bartlett Gym crowd to their feet. "That's the difference with fourth year guys, Richardson and Purdy displayed some great leadership out there and they wouldn't give up," said an ecstatic Coach Meeson.

When Purdy was asked to describe the atmosphere in the locker room after the victory, he said "Unbelievable. It's just great. It's a lot different than from two games ago. We're definitely thinking about the playoffs now."

Given their incredible performance this weekend, they would have to be crazy not to.

Confidence remains

Continued from page 11
would be defended by two-time OUA all-star Wendy Moon, however, she was out with a shoulder injury and is listed day-to-day. Moon's absence forced the Gaels' to defend Harrison with smaller players, allowing the all-conference center to have good looks at the basket.

Queen's battled hard through the second half, but at the end the Laurentian height advantage and dominant play on the boards were too much for the Gaels' and the Voyageurs pulled out an impressive 68-60 road victory.

Queen's best player in this spirited contest was wing Jaqueline Beaudoin, who finished with 19 points. Her aggressiveness and speed allowed her to drive through the Laurentian defence on many occasions. Coach Wilson was excited about her play, crediting it to her "high confidence" level.

Although the Gaels lost the game, Wilson considers Laurentian "a team we feel we should beat." The coach cited rebounding and fatigue, as the main factors why Queen's lost. "I was disappointed that the fatigue beat us in the second half," said Wilson. The fatigue led to "shooting and aggression problems," and a general inability of the Gaels' to penetrate from the perimeter.

To beat the Voyageurs, Wilson believes that his team has all the skills, they just need "simple execution."

Queen's next game finds them hosting Ryerson, a team the Queen's should be able to beat. That said, Wilson is not going to take the Rams lightly as their "less predictable" play makes it difficult for them to prepare for.

—With files from Adam Kaminsky

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Stand-up and deliver

Comedians impress crowds at Clark

Urban Legend: Ron Tite laughs up the crowd at Clark Hall Pub.

COMEDY REVIEW

BY JEFF CHILD

Laughing seems to be this year's biggest hit.

As some of the downtown nightspots are starting to realize, the demand for the healing power of laughter is too great to be ignored. Stand-up comedy has secured itself in the foundation of Kingston's nightlife and while the scene is still in its infancy, quality comics are pleasing sell-out crowds. With clubs like The Shot and The Grizzly Grill at the forefront of this comedy infusion, it was only a matter of time before campus pubs discovered that the secret to a full house each night consists of one microphone, one spotlight and a court jester willing to rant to a crowd for about a half an hour. So, when Clark Hall Pub opened its doors Saturday for a night of laughs, I threw my rain slicker on and headed out in search of good humour.

As I climbed the stairs to the Pub the smell of stale beer and uncontrollable laughter permeated the air. My suspicions were correct, the house was full. And why not? With stellar performers like Urban Myth and Ron Tite dropping by to spit out some of their new material, laughter would be guaranteed.

The secret to a full house each night consists of one microphone, one spotlight and a court jester willing to rant to a crowd for about a half an hour.

The set started off on the right note with Urban Myth's musically inclined act. This five-person troupe is currently taking Toronto clubs by storm. Now Magazine recently rated the group as one of the top 10 comedy acts in Toronto and with appearances at Second City and exposure on the Comedy Network, Urban Myth seems to be generating lots of laughs everywhere they perform. The musical sketch comedy adds an alternative to the lone joke teller, which stand-up comedy is usually associated with. Former Arts '93 student Nick Kindler, who seemed to enjoy playing at his old romping grounds, highlights the troupe.

Please see Stand-up on page 19

99 Degrees warms K-town

Modern Fuel Gallery's reception excites art lovers

High Octane: Just a little of the work displayed at the Modern Fuel Gallery.

ART REVIEW

BY JOHN TRENHOLME

It was like seeing light at the end of the tunnel — literally. On Saturday night, the rainstorm that drowned Kingston did little to dampen the mood at The Modern Fuel Gallery, where the Kingston's Artists Association Inc. (KAAl) hosted 99 Degrees, the first Regional Juried Exhibition in a recent renaissance of such shows.

At the head of two flights of dingy stairs, the cozy and vibrant scene within the studio (a loft in one of Kingston's dilapidated warehouses along the lake) contrasted the abysmal scene in the windswept streets. Teens mingled with their sophisticated elders. Toddlers read Berenstein Bear books while their grandparents sipped wine and admired the evening's festivities.

In this cultural cross-section of 60 or so people, I found Mike Bayne, one of the showcased artists and a humble few who commented little on the upshot of the exhibition, preferring to let the works stand alone.

Ralph Allen, the juror selected by KAAl, was more vocal in stressing the show's significance. "The first thing I noticed was the strength of all the pieces," he announced in his brief but cordial address to the guests. He seemed to have an almost apologetic tone for having disrupted the spirited discussions that subsided to hear his words.

His method of determining the winners further emphasized the exhibition's strength, "I started off by circling the room, looking at every piece, placing yellow stickers beside those which seemed to... to mean something... the first time around I used three stickers," he offered drawing towards the punchline. "After several subsequent tours," he said, "I suddenly realized this was a pretty strong exhibition... and I was almost out of stickers."

Allen raved about the rebirth of juried exhibitions, which had teetered on the fringes of extinction (especially in Kingston bookends Toronto and Montreal) for a lack of adequate funding. I struggled to figure how the free admission charge fit into the whole equation.

Nonetheless, several works struck me as evidence that the Kingston art scene is anything but suffering. Almost every imaginable style and medium was represented from acrylics and oils on canvas and linen, to graphite drawings, framed photographs and sculptures of steel, porcelain and in one instance, a variety of items exclusive to sidewalk sewers and Cracker Jack boxes.

Toddlers read Berenstein Bear books while their grandparents sipped wine and admired the evening's festivities.

To list specific works aside from winner Alan Dickson's "Grey Mithuna" would only ensure I excluded pieces worthy of mention — either the stacked porcelain bones, or a girl dangling wine from her fingers, or Leonardo's fingerprint.

The visual stimulation alone is worth the trip and even the students wallowing in debt can afford the admission fee.

Perhaps it was fitting that the prize winner, a brass and steel sculpture that unwary meanderers may have tripped over otherwise, oozed such modesty. The whole evening was a celebration of the Kingston art scene, and the prospect of future exhibitions in a comparatively small market art scene. The awards ceremonies itself seemed insignificant.

99 Degrees will be showing at The Modern Fuel Gallery, located at 21A Queen Street, until February 5th. Gallery hours are Wednesday through Saturday, 12-4:30 p.m.

Globe theatre

Gold rush

BY JESSE CRAIG BELLINGER

Shakespeare in Love and Saving Private Ryan were the big winners at Sunday night's Golden Globe awards, while The Truman Show surprised many by collecting two prizes.

While Shakespeare in Love won a total of three awards, including Best Screenplay and Best Picture, it was Jim Carrey's win as Best Actor for his role in The Truman Show that produced one of the ceremony's most memorable moments. Carrey, known mainly for his comedic roles, won the award over such distinguished competitors as Tom Hanks, Nick Nolte and Ian McKellen.

Despite the fact that the Golden Globes distinguish in their voting categories between comedies and dramas, the ceremony is considered an important predictor of March's Academy Awards. In the last 16 years, 12 films that won best motion picture honours at the Golden Globes went on to take the same prize at the Oscars. Steven Spielberg's ultra-violent Saving Private Ryan garnered wins in the important Best Picture (Drama) and Best Director (Drama) categories, boding well for its fate at the upcoming Academy Awards.

David E. Kelly was the big winner on the television side, collecting awards as the writer/creator of Fox's Ally McBeal and ABC's The Practice. Newcomer Keri Russell was honoured with the Golden Globe for Best Actress (Drama) for her role on the WB's Felicity while Dylan McDermott of The Practice won the Best Actor (Drama) prize.

MOTION PICTURES:

PICTURE, DRAMA: Saving Private Ryan
ACTRESS, DRAMA: Cate Blanchett, Elizabeth
ACTOR, DRAMA: Jim Carrey, The Truman Show
PICTURE, MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Shakespeare in Love
ACTRESS, MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Gwyneth Paltrow, Shakespeare in Love
ACTOR, MUSICAL OR COMEDY: Michael Caine, Little Voice
FOREIGN LANGUAGE: Central Station, Brazil
DIRECTOR: Steven Spielberg, Saving Private Ryan
SCREENPLAY: Marc Norman and Tom Stoppard, Shakespeare in Love

TELEVISION:

DRAMA SERIES: The Practice
ACTRESS, DRAMA: Keri Russell, Felicity
ACTOR, DRAMA: Dylan McDermott, The Practice
MUSICAL OR COMEDY SERIES: Ally McBeal
ACTRESS, MUSICAL OR COMEDY SERIES: Jenna Elfman, Dharma and Greg ACTOR, MUSICAL OR COMEDY SERIES: Michael J. Fox, Spin City

ASUS Arts & Science Formal 1999

Coming soon to a campus near you:

The Party of the Year!

Tickets go on sale Monday, Jan. 25, 1999

Tickets go "off sale" after Friday, Feb. 12, 1999

Tickets available for $65 at the UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and ASUS Core

Don't Miss It!

For more information, including information on ticket bursaries, please stop by the Core (183 University) or contact the Formal Committee at 533-6278.

talk to us
journal@post.queensu.ca

Terry Fox Humanitarian Award Program
$ 4,000 x 4 years

Students who demonstrate a dedication to community service, humanitarianism, perseverance and courage in the face of obstacles; and who pursue excellence in physical fitness and academics are encouraged to apply.

Applications are available in the Student Awards Office, Victoria School Building.

Application deadline: Monday, February 1, 1999.

UNDERGRADUATE COLLOQUIUM
COLEMAN-ELLIS LECTURES

In 1984 the Department of Mathematics and Statistics at Queen's University established a special undergraduate lecture series in honour of Professors A.J. Coleman and H.W. Ellis. The series will continue this year with the aim of exploring interesting ideas in mathematics and statistics in an elementary fashion. The third lecture this year will be given by:

Dr. Grace Orzech
Department of Mathematics and Statistics
Queen's University

"VOTING PARADOXES"

We have put a lot of faith in the process of "taking a vote," but it is not generally known that there are intractable problems associated with any election that provides more than two choices. The talk will feature examples of disturbing outcomes and a discussion (maybe even proof) of Arrow's Impossibility Theorem.

Wednesday, January 27, 1999
Jeffery Hall, Room 118
8:00 p.m.

The talk will be followed by refreshments and informal discussions. Students at Queen's and other interested individuals are cordially invited to attend these lectures.

Queen's University at Kingston
Department of Mathematics and Statistics
Jeffery Hall, University

Curry Village

Bringing you Kingston's finest Indian Cuisine for 13 years

Recommended by The New York Times,
The Globe and Mail, Toronto Life and the
Where to Eat in Canada Guide (1987 - present)

169A Princess Street (upstairs), 542-5010
Kingston, Ontario

20% Discount for Students, Sun. - Thurs. (Food Only)

Leave it to Cleavers

Jazz ensemble cuts album at Alfie's

HASKELL AND THE CLEAVERS

CONCERT REVIEW

BY STEFAN MARTIN

Last Friday evening, Haskell and the Cleavers, a well-known Kingston jazz band, recorded a live album at Alfie's.

If you are among those who are bitter that they missed it, don't worry — you're in the majority.

Perhaps it was the short notice given by the band that accounted for the lack of publicity the event received, or perhaps it was the lack of Jazz fans at Queen's, whatever the reason, the turnout at Alfie's was sparse.

Al, from Long Shot Records (the company that taped the show), revealed that even he wasn't given notice until within a week of the show. Nevertheless, vocalist Andy Poole and the boys were in fine form.

The show consisted of three sets. The first was an off-the-cuff warm-up set that was not recorded for the double-live album. This warm up included a great impression of Louis Armstrong by Poole.

The taped portion of the show included the last two sets, each one recorded on a separate disc and involving a different style of jazz. The first recorded set had Poole on vocals, with band mainstays Doug Rooks on the standing bass and Rich Bannard on drums. These three were joined by two older gentlemen, who witnessed the birth of jazz and have been playing together ever since, Paul Chabot on piano and Murray Wilson on the valve trombone.

The first album features tributes to Nat King Cole and Bobby Darren, with such jazz classics as "Autumn Leaves" and "Mack The Knife." This entire album has a big band feel to it reminiscent of the Benny Goodman era.

The second recording featured a switch in styles. The valve trombone and piano were replaced with Bobby Hsu on alto sax and renowned Canadian jazz guitarist Dave Barton. This set featured notable tunes as "Honey Suckle Rose," "Ipanema" and Poole's politically correct version of "Lady's a Tramp," renamed "Lady's a Champ." This set took away the brass feel and delved into more of a Charlie Parker style of jazz.

The band played well together with Poole stepping back more often than not to allow the other members to go off on some great solos. However, Poole did not let the instruments steal the show. His voice and stage presence was worthy of a New Orleans jazz club, let alone Alfie's stage.

As I scanned the sparse crowd, watching the audience bob their heads to the rhythm, I thought of Poole's words of wisdom, "we can all take solace in the fact that the best jazz is played to an empty room." For at least one Friday evening, this statement held true.

2000-2001 ROTARY AMBASSADORIAL SCHOLARSHIPS

Purpose

The Rotary Foundation announces that applications for 2000-2001 Rotary Foundation Ambassadorial Scholarships to be awarded worldwide are now available. Designed to further international understanding and goodwill, the scholarships provide for study abroad in one of the 150 countries and 35 geographical regions where Rotary clubs are located.

Scholarships

Academic-year scholarships are for one academic year abroad and provide up to $23,000 U.S. for round trip transportation, tuition and fees, room and board, necessary educational supplies, contingency expenses and one month of intensive language training.

How to Apply

Applications are made through a Rotary Club in the area of the applicant's legal or permanent residence (school, university or place of employment). Application forms and information brochures may be obtained from:

Room 120 - Commerce Undergraduate Office
Dunning Hall, Queen's University

Completed application forms must be submitted no later than February 19, 1999 to:

Dr. Perry A. Bamji
Room 126
Dunning Hall, Queen's University

For information, please contact:

KINGSTON ROTARY CLUB
Cyrus Regnart - 372-0034

If not available, please leave your name and phone number on the answering machine.

No need for a nightlight
In Dreams fails to terrify and come true

Keeping the light on: Aidan Quinn becomes a part of the nightmare in In Dreams.

MOVIE REVIEW

In Dreams
Capitol Theatre

BY STACEY-ANNE CURTIS

The movie In Dreams leaves one wondering if someone has perhaps redefined the term thriller. "Thriller" is defined as something which excites or stimulates — as it stands, this term certainly does not apply to this film. The movie suffers from a stagnant plot line which can be figured out entirely by watching the TV previews.

In Dreams stars Robert Downey Jr. as a deranged murderer suffering from serious emotional and mental repercussions from a bad childhood.

Chained to a bed by his crazy mother, he was left to drown when the town in which he lived was abandoned and flooded over. He miraculously escapes, and grows into a sick man who has some kind of clairvoyant powers. Somewhere along the way, he seems to have picked up the ability to project images into the mind of co-star Annette Benning.

The movie then goes on to solve more not so interesting things and ends with a slight twist from the traditional horror ending.

Benning is haunted by visions of the future crimes that Downey Jr. will commit, beginning with the murder of her own daughter.

As the dreams become more intense, haunting her in sleep and possessing her when awake, Benning is perceived as, of course, all the more insane by those around her. Her husband, played by Aidan Quinn, agrees to have her conmitted to a mental hospital. She soon realizes she is staying in the same room that Downey Jr. had stayed in before he escaped and began plaguing her life. The movie then goes on to solve more not so interesting things and ends with a slight twist from the traditional horror conclusion.

For weeks I'd been interested in seeing this movie, wanting to figure out how exactly the writers would explain what the preview had shown me. Well, what I discovered is that they don't.

The husband and wife live in a beautiful house on the lake, and must walk down a path through the trees of what is reminiscent of an enchanted forest to get there.

In Dreams is quite poorly written. There is very little character development. A fight between the husband (Quinn) and wife (Benning) which has absolutely nothing to do with the rest of the movie is one of the many useless scenes thrown in random places. Scenes which were meant to be scary are completely predictable, or completely ridiculous.

At one point, the audience is meant to be scared by a bunch of apples being regurgitated from the kitchen garbator. Well, I definitely wasn't scared, but I did learn not to stuff 200 whole apples down my garbator at once.

The movie did, however, have some redeeming qualities. The acting of both Benning and Downey Jr. was excellent. Benning was especially impressive in her portrayal of a woman growing more and more unstable. Her character always maintained a grasp on what actions were her own and those she performed when possessed by Downey Jr. At the same time, Benning herself acted superbly in portraying a woman who knows that she is perceived as insane. She held stable ground between being driven somewhat crazy by the dreams of a lunatic, and delivering the perfect amount of sarcastic remarks towards patronizing doctors.

The movie also makes good use of scenery, imagery and symbolism. The husband and wife live in a beautiful house on the lake, and must walk down a path through the trees of what is reminiscent of an enchanted forest to get there. This paralleled with the daughter being involved in a production of the fairy tale Snow White and Downey Jr.'s want of his perverted version of a fairy tale life.

Well, I definitely wasn't scared, but I did learn not to stuff two hundred whole apples down my garbator at once.

Overall, In Dreams is quite a disappointing movie. It is slow moving, with little variation or psychological suspense. I must admit that I wasn't completely bored to tears, but I definitely wasn't thrilled. If you're looking to be frightened In Dreams is not the movie to see.

ROOTS KINGSTON

SAVE! UP TO 50% OFF

WINTER SALE EVENT

sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult, Kids & Baby

229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

Jesus

Step 1. (step when)
You are loved... by God and He wants the best for you and your life.

WE HAVE ALWAYS HAD THE TASTIEST SANDWICHES
ON CAMPUS
BUT NOW WE'RE THE CHEAPEST!

COME IN MONDAY & WEDNESDAY AND GET A FREE SOFT DRINK
WHEN YOU BUY ONE OF OUR SANDWICHES

ALSO THIS WEEK CATCH

OPEN ALL DAY...ALL WEEK!
SANDWICHES...SUDS...FLICKS...LIVE MUSIC

THE ACOUSTIC GROOVES OF

JON COAKLEY

Watch out for your safety!

The AMS, the Department of Security and Dean of Student Affairs, in collaboration with local businesses, have set up security notice boards to inform you of security incidents on and around campus.

Watch for the boards at the following locations:

A&P
The Beer Store
Food Basics
Mac's

Daisymart
Bedore's
College Variety

Freddie's
Berance's Grocery
University Coin Wash
Central Laundromat

Stand-up

Continued from page 15

Crush-ing the Competition?: 22-year-old "teen queen" Alicia Silverstone is on the line to test her pipes for Kenneth Branagh's musical production Love's Labour's Lost. The actress, who shot to stardom after starring in Clueless, has not been taking her singing obligation lightly. "At first I was like God my jaw hurts and my throat hurts," complains Silverstone. "Singing lessons help me with my breathing for everything else, because I have, um, a really hard time breathing."

Point of View: The View, television's daytime gab fest, is currently searching for a replacement for Debbie Matenopoulos. Matenopoulos was to represent the 20-something generation on the show, but the producers realized that the viewers were not relating to the young host. One rumored candidate for the position is Amy Kean. The View's Joy Behar is excited about the addition stating, "I love it that we've got another skinny bitch on the show."

"Always too hot, never too cold": Alanis Morissette is finding the business a little too strenuous for her own liking. The angst-ridden bellow burst onto the music scene in 1995 with her hit album Jagged Little Pill. But the quick fame and fortune took a toll on the rock star. "I didn't laugh for two years. I was just overwhelmed by a lot of it." Jagged Little Pill became the highest selling debut album in US history with a record breaking sum of 28 million copies.

Spelling Success: This year's Sundance Film Festival will feature a Toti Spelling infested film. The flick is about New York youths and drag queens searching for love in the city. One viewer gushes that a scene involving Spelling having a nervous breakdown is "amazing." A far cry from the Hills.

Spearing to the top: Former Mouseketeer Britney Spears is shaking her way to the top of the music charts. Her hit single "Hit Me Baby One More Time" is number one on the Billboard charts. It's not easy being 17. The number two spot is taken by Brandy's "Have You Ever" while number three goes to Deborah Cox with "Nobody Supposed to be here." Yay, girls!

The momentum kept rolling as Ron Tite made his debut at Clark Hall. Tite, a Phys Ed '93 graduate, was back in town to support the 50th anniversary of his former faculty, which is scheduled for May of the year 2000.

How do you raise money for such an event? Apparently, you jump on a stage, tell some jokes and charge five bucks for admission.

Tite proved to the audience that the cost and the cause were worth it. His set started off slow, but quickly picked up the pace. By the time he explained that Hammy Hamster was the creation of four bored potheads, the crowd was fixated on his hyper mannerisms and grizzled voice. Tite is definitely a comic for our generation.

His routine concentrated largely on the trivialities of growing up in the eighties as a youngster.

From the pom-pom on the top of the toque and the abominable snow suit your mother made you wear to the difference between Boo-berry cereal and Shredded Wheat, Tite was able to connect with the crowd. It made for 30 minutes of laughter and fond memories. As a newcomer to the stand-up scene Tite can only get better. While he's still an amateur, look for Tite in the professional ranks soon.

Overall, the night was a success: Phys Ed earned some funds for their year 2000 reunion and the comics kept the crowd happy. The comedy machine is pushing its way into the Kingston night life.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre until January 28:
546-5395

- A Civil Action 7:20, 9:55
- Varsity Blues 7:30, 10:15
- Playing By Heart 7:10, 10:00
- A Simple Plan 7:00, 9:50
- Shakespeare in Love 7:15, 10:05
- Prince of Egypt 6:50
- In Dreams 9:30

Playing at the Catarauq Cineplex until January 28:
389-7442

- Gloria 7:05, 9:45
- Virus 7:15, 9:55
- Patch Adams 6:55, 9:25
- Waking Ned Devine 7:25, 9:35
- Stepmom 6:45, 9:15
- The Thin Red Line 8:15

Earl Street Theatre:

On February 3, 4, 5, 6 at 7:30 and with a matinee at 2 p.m. on Saturday, Sunesis Productions Presents For the Love of Oz, written and directed by Jesse Stewart. Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for students.

Dance:

On Saturday, January 30 at 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual and Transgendered Pride Committee is sponsoring a dance at the Lion's Club Hall, 216 Elliot Ave. Tickets are $5 to $12.

Theatre:

Theological Hall:

On February 5 and 6 at 7:00 p.m., Queen's Department of Drama and Ariel Goldblatt present T.V., by Jean-Claude van Itallie. Tickets are $4 and are available by at the Drama desk.

Live Music:

On Saturday, January 30 at 8 p.m., Seattle based singer/songwriter Erin Corday will perform at the Edward Day Gallery. Tickets are $10 and can be purchased by phoning the Edward Day Gallery at 547-0774.

The Campus Bookstore and Jostens

present

January Ring Days

Save 10% On All Jostens Rings

A representative from Jostens Canada, will be at the Campus Bookstore, this Wednesday and Thursday. There will be a 10% saving on all Jostens rings ordered. Jostens rings offer unmatched quality and provide a free full lifetime warranty and four year insurance coverage. The Campus Bookstore offers Jostens rings in a variety of styles and designs to suit students as well as alumni. No deposit is required on your order and Jostens rings will be available for pick up within 8 to 10 weeks. Do not miss your chance to save 10% on your perfect ring. Come see the Jostens representative this week!

Campus Bookstore • www.campusbookstore.com • Clark Hall

January 27-28

10% Off Jostens Rings During January Ring Days

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 533-2955
 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Classifieds

$ .99

Whopper Junior every day

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website: www.kwb.com/blueroof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Resizable now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962 8262.

CAMPUS TRIVIA TOURNAMENT. Do you know stuff? Prove it! Sign up your team of 4 or individually. $5 per person. January 30th. Email 6aj3 to register.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN BECOMING A PEER EDUCATOR? We are currently recruiting volunteers for next year. There are many ways to get involved in this valuable experience. Why not look into becoming a Peer Learning Assistant, Peer Tutor, Peer Health Educator or get involved with the Peer Educator Program on Sex, Intimacy and Dating? Please come out to an information session and find out the details. Sessions will be held on Thursday February 11th, 5:30 - 6:30 p.m. and Friday, February 12th, 12:30 - 1:30 p.m. Both sessions will take place at Student Counselling Services, Ground Floor of the St. Lawrence Building. For more information call Diane Nolting at 533-6712.

COFFEE HOUSE Friday, January 29th, 8 p.m., at St. James' Church, Corner of Union and Barrie Streets. Desserts provided by The Laundry Cafe. Open mic.

WANNABE A GAEL? Wannabe a gael meeting Tuesday, January 26th/99, Ellis Hall, 6 p.m.

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CD's, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9096.

JESUS AWARENESS WEEK! CHOOSING MY RELIGION: TONIGHT! 1:30 p.m., McLaughlin Room, JUCY Y2K: technology in crisis: Wednesday, 7:30 p.m., Ellis Auditorium. MAXI MUM SEX: Thursday, 7:30 p.m., Curving Auditorium. FRIENDS NIGHT: food & fun! 7:30 p.m., Ellis Auditorium. JESUS - THE FILM: Saturday, 7:30 p.m., Ellis Auditorium.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY. We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

JANUARY IS ALZHEIMER'S AWARENESS MONTH at Queen's! Look around Campus for events sponsored by the ASUS Alzheimer's & Aging Awareness Group! Help support Alzheimer's Kingston.

IF ANYONE IS INTERESTED in creating an alt-2600 club at Queen's email me at daveconrie@hotmail.com

FOR SALE

FOR SALE: '89 Ford Escort LX - 5 door - for sale - 106 km. Asking for $4,000. Also, Mountain bike $35, Sony PCS cell phone and leather case $80.00. Call Christina at 453-4535.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@genetralion.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

WANTED

VOCALIST LOOKING for (preferably) 3 - 6 piece jazz band to experiment with standards, creative work; from torch songs, ballads, to swing. Let's make this happen. Call 531-3613.

WANTED: Computer Network Support person for the AMS. Interested? Check out our ad in this issue.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside MacCory Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if it's yours.

PERSONALS

CSLC COMMITTEE AND VOLUNTEERS: Good luck this week and have fun! You've done a great job.

Your ticket to ride!
Discounts up to 40%

Valid student card must be presented at time of purchase.
 For schedule and fare information call 613-547-4916 or 1-800-461-7661
trentway-wagar

Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday papers and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday papers. Call 533-6711 for details.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

Canadian Criss Cross by Walter D. Feener

ANSWER TO FRIDAY'S PUZZLE

TEG BEER
 HOAR SUMMER
 HUEYI TRUMPET
 ELF DRAT YDGA
 ATE DON STE
 SECTUDE SENT
 PES NAY
 PARA HUNDRED ETA DUD SAD
 SHUT PAIR CUE
 TOPICAL EBDNY
 SERIAL SORT
 REAR SOT

- |                                   |                              |                              |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------------|------------------------------|
| ACROSS                     | DOWN                  |                              |
| 1. New Zealand parrot             | 1. Give a piece of advice    | 29. Adult male voices        |
| 5. Liquid distilled from coal     | 2. Letters before an alias   | 30. Hand cream               |
| 8. Motorcycle gang member         | 3. Iodine source             | 31. Stream barrier           |
| 9. Archangel                      | 4. Mr. Shaw                  | 33. Charioteer constellation |
| 11. Its atomic number is 27       | 5. Die having three pips     | 34. Luxurious                |
| 12. Make up for                   | 6. Help                      | 35. Appear to be             |
| 14. French king                   | 7. Actor Keanu               | 36. Record of voyages        |
| 15. Child's word for toe          | 8. Singer Pat                | 38. Agreements               |
| 17. Neckline shape                | 9. Needing attention at once | 41. Complain unreasonably    |
| 18. They might get in your pants? | 10. Sly looks                | 42. Brogan                   |
| 20. Compass point                 | 11. Sideways walker          | 45. Parson bird              |
| 21. Saucy                         | 13. Encountered              | 47. Settled habit            |
| 22. Gem setting                   | 16. Wildebeest               |                              |
| 24. Excepting that                | 19. Number of deadly sins    |                              |
| 26. Large tank                    | 21. One cent                 |                              |
| 28. Baking pan                    | 23. Slack                    |                              |
| 29. Bent the arm                  | 25. Fleur-de-                |                              |
| 32. Cracks a whip                 |                              |                              |
| 36. Diving bird                   |                              |                              |
| 37. Short sleep                   |                              |                              |
| 39. Christmas                     |                              |                              |
| 40. Autumn mo.                    |                              |                              |
| 41. Deep sleeps                   |                              |                              |
| 43. Regret bitterly               |                              |                              |
| 44. Segovia's instrument          |                              |                              |
| 46. Baptismal oil                 |                              |                              |
| 48. Goes bad                      |                              |                              |
| 49. Difficult to chew             |                              |                              |
| 50. Pinch                         |                              |                              |
| 51. A stiff hair                  |                              |                              |

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE

Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
 (613) 544-9389
 1-800-269-6719

SWEP

TEN for Job Interest
 TEN for Career Value
 TEN bucks an hour

SWEP jobs are:
 career-related
 mostly on campus
 available in many areas of interest

open to full-time undergraduate students who plan to return to Queen's University as undergraduate students in September, 1999

posted on the Career Services web page www.careers.queensu.ca and at Career Services on January 25

Man

Step 3. (step thrE)
 Get connected... to God, through His son Jesus Christ. His is the only way.

Shorter Prose

By Gillian White

I love butterflies. The kind you get in your stomach when you know you're about to do something really daring but you don't give a fuck and do it anyway. You do it anyway.

I love doing it anyway, the thrill of overcoming that voice that says: "What are you thinking?"

Today I stepped out of class to go to the washroom. The halls were empty except for one guy walking toward me. Of course, he was cute but that's not why I ended up smiling at him. As he got closer, I recognized him. He used to show up sometimes at the bar I worked at last year, and was someone I always noticed. Quite probably, I had fantasized about him. He had always looked interesting. He still did.

We walked by each other. I went to the washroom. He went somewhere else. I went back to class. For three whole minutes, I squirmed in my chair and then finally said to myself "Fuck it, I'm doing it anyway." I grabbed my coat, picked up my bag and went off in the direction that I thought he was. I found him photocopying some papers and I started talking to him.

You know what? He acted like an idiot. I left him, thinking "What a waste." Aaahh, but that's where I was wrong. Truly, it wasn't a waste. Anytime, you can overcome those voices in your head (c'mon, I'm not the only one who hears voices in my head), you've made it. You own the world when you get rid of those voices.

MISC

I am Fantasy Woman.

No, I did not say Pin-Up Chick or Sock Jerk-Off Girl. I said Fantasy Woman. I am always fantasizing. It's on the days that I don't have fantasies to fall upon that there is no hope, there is no magic. There is desperation in the absence of magic. So I spend my time fantasizing about people like you.

Quite often I am not a part of this fantasy. (And sorry, Sock Jerk-Off Boy, the fantasies aren't always sexual). Instead, I dream up incredible details about who you are and the things you do. I imagine you clubbing on a Saturday night, or watching a movie with your friends, or picking your nose in front of the bathroom mirror. It beats television any day.

Alright, you're thinking, What happens to this chick when the fantasy is replaced by reality? Fantasy is rarely replaced by reality; it is only altered by it. Reality always intermingles with fantasy. We all spend our time fantasizing. Each of us constantly fills in the gaps of what we don't know about each other.

We dress ourselves, knowing this will happen. We clothe ourselves with this in mind, so we choose our clothing carefully, attempting to guide people on how to develop their fantasies about us.

We get accustomed to our clothes, to carrying ourselves or acting in particular ways. We get too comfortable. We do our thing and our thing becomes routine. We eat the same things, buy from the same stores, go to the same bars, have the same days. There is no magic in this.

Magic happens when we do it anyway. The times when we say fuck it and test the fantasy. Magic happens when we know we risk making complete fools of ourselves, but we don't care. Magic happens through fantasies, when you define the world. When you do it anyway.

MISC

An evil donkey checking the pulse of a sleeping man?

For A Contest As Puzzling and Mysterious as Goya, Turn to MiSC. Starting February 2nd.

NACHO DIP

Since this is a layered dip, it's best to make it in a glass pie plate or bowl so everyone can see how creative you are, and what they are being fed.

If you have no friends, or are just plain greedy, you can make two or three smaller servings to save some for another time.

- 1 pkg. of cream cheese, light or regular.
- 1/3 cup of sour cream, light or regular
- 1 clove of garlic, finely chopped
- 1 avocado
- 2 tbsp. of pickled jalapeno peppers, chopped or 2 tbsp. of pickled green chilies
- 1 tsp. of lemon or lime juice
- 1/2 cup of sliced black olives
- 1 cup of salsa, mild, medium or hot

• 1 cup of grated cheddar cheese

1. Mix the cream cheese, sour cream, and garlic, and evenly spread in the bottom of the dish.
2. Peel and mash the avocado and mix with the lemon juice and peppers. Spread the mixture evenly over the first layer in the dish.
3. Sprinkle the olives over the second layer.
4. Pour salsa over the olive layer, and cover with the grated cheddar cheese.

Warm your nacho chips in the oven on a baking sheet for a few minutes before serving.

Sarah LeMay can boast being the hostess with the mostess

Got some time?
BIG SWING TUESDAYS
live with
The Swing Cats

Dance contest & prizes
Martini on the rocks

It's a Swing thing!

Free Swing Lessons from 7-9pm.

178 Ontario Street • On the Waterfront

WANTED Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its on-node Novell network, web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS commissions, services, general office and numerous committees and activities.

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. Time commitment ranges between 10-20 hrs/wk.

Questions?

Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chols@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherren, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a windows NT networking environment,
- have good communication & organizational skills,
- have a working knowledge of MS Office,
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment,
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC. Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

Jesus Christ, God.

Step 4. (step for)

Accept it for what it's worth

Accept Jesus Christ, God's son, as your personal Lord and personal Saviour. It's worth peace, forever.

du Maurier
ARTS

Supporting 215 cultural organizations across Canada during the 1998-99 season

It's A Fact!
A Queen's graduate has been selling used books for 10 years.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
General Travel: 549-3553
Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

since 1873

FRIDAY, JANUARY 29, 1999

Alfie's $4,500 under

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE AND FIONA STEVENSON

A homecoming blackout, poor October performance, and competition from the Queen's Pub, have been suggested as reasons why Alfie's is approximately $4,500 under budget.

A power outage on the Saturday of Homecoming weekend led to an estimated loss of about $10,000 for the pub and resulted in September revenues being down 12 per cent versus the pub's budgeted revenue for the month. Were it not for the blackout, "I think the pub would have been right on track," said Alfie's Manager Ben Bourke.

October was also a disappointment for the pub, which AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong attributed to Thanksgiving weekend and mid-terms. Gross revenue was only 61 per cent of budgeted revenue for the month.

"They had a better November and a good December, and January so far has been going well," Armstrong said, adding "they had an incredible New Year's. It was their biggest night after homecoming." The evening brought in $9,272.50, compared with $4,746.90 two years ago. Last year the pub closed early due to the ice storm.

"We're counting on a good winter term," she added. "They're going nuts with programming and bands."

Bourke believes renovations made to the pub in August have been beneficial. "The renovations have been good at helping Alfie's bring in money," said Bourke. He estimated that Alfie's is bringing in about $1,500 to $2,000 more on a big night this year, thanks to additions such as a taps at their side bar and a mirror ball and new lighting on the dance floor.

However, the addition of an autofry to the pub has not been as successful as

Please see QP on page 3

Students walk through snow flurries in front of Stauffer Library on Wednesday afternoon.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Meds vote to stay with AMS

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY

Last week, medical students participated in a referendum to decide whether to continue their membership in the Alma Mater Society. With a 55 to 45 per cent result, students voted to stay in the AMS.

Voter turnout was 61 per cent, with 77 per cent of students in years one through three casting votes.

"It was an issue that we had been looking at for a couple of years," said Ian Billingsley, Aesculapian Society (medical students society) representative to the AMS. "It was a question of which organization best served and contributed to the interests of medical students."

"In a federation, there is always going to be strained relationships," said Tom Stanley, president of the AMS. "There are always going to be members who don't feel their needs are being met."

"The AMS needs to be more acutely aware of the needs of its members," Stanley added.

There was some discussion, according to Billingsley, of the Aesculapian Society becoming an independent student organization, with no official ties to the AMS or the Society of Professional and Graduate Students.

"The logistics and administration that are required to form a viable independent organization would have proved rather difficult," said Billingsley. "So in effect, the referendum turned into a question of whether to stay in the AMS or join the SGPS."

Law students answered the same question last year and, in a referendum, voted to leave the AMS for the SGPS. "I wonder how much momentum generated by the Law students separation last year had to do with this situation," Stanley said.

Billingsley said the two situations were quite different. "There is no historical grievances between medical students

Please see Student on page 6

Food wars Battles with eating disorders plague many

BY JONATHAN TINNEY

National Eating Disorders Awareness Week is approaching and many students are taking time to reflect on the severity and frequency of eating disorders in our community.

Health Canada estimates that approximately three per cent of women between the ages of 18 and 24 suffer from anorexia and four per cent of women in the same age group suffer from bulimia.

Eating disorders are directly correlated with negative body images, and experts believe that women's overall view of their bodies are getting worse, not better. A reported eight per cent of Canadian women who were deemed underweight told researchers they wished to lose more weight, while 37 per cent of healthy women reported they wished to slim down, according to Health Canada.

Please see Body on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 28
www.journal.queensu.ca

News . . . . . 1	Sports & Fitness . . . . . 14
Editorials . . . . . 8	A&E . . . . . 16
Opinions . . . . . 9	Crossword . . . . . 21
Features . . . . . 11	Classifieds . . . . . 22
Science . . . . . 13	MISC. . . . . 23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny High: 7°C, Low: -7°C; POP: 0%	Sunday Partly Cloudy High: 0°C, Low: -10°C; POP: 0%
Saturday Partly Cloudy High: -1°C, Low: -11°C; POP: 0%	Monday Partly Cloudy High: 1°C, Low: -2°C; POP: 0%

Virtual texts wave of the future at Queen's

BY NICOLE SALAMA

Picture the future of Queen's University: you prepare yourself to study, seat yourself at your personal computer and pop in the latest textbook version of your course work into the CD-ROM.

This vision is becoming less far-fetched as new technologies in the form of CD-ROM textbooks and Internet courses are filtering into Queen's course curriculums.

Some Queen's courses use the CD-ROM as a textbook, others use them as supplementary material, and two correspondence courses are based solely on a CD-ROM text and the Internet for lecture notes, submission of assignments and interaction with the professors.

Gloria Delisle, a professor in the Queen's department of microbiology, co-created a few such CD-ROM textbooks for nursing, medicine and the two distance courses. Delisle said that using the CD-ROM as a textbook is beneficial for these subjects because "biology is very visual and the animation enhances [the students'] understanding."

According to Delisle, there have not been any major glitches in the programs because of rigorous copy editing and data testing. The only major problem with the CD-ROMS is the issue of

Please see Personal on page 2

WANTED

Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its 50-node Novell network, Web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS commissions, services, general office and numerous committees and activities

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. Time commitment ranges between 10-20hrs/wk.

Questions?

Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chris@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherren, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a Windows NT networking environment,
- have good communication & organizational skills,
- have a working knowledge of MS Office,
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment,
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC. Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

Personal interaction still highly valued

Continued from page 1

student accessibility. Many students come to university without a computer or CD-ROM, and Delisle said there were 11 stations compatible for these programs in the Bracken Library, which are not nearly enough to satisfy the demand.

Delisle said her classes have become "more active and interactive" due to this new style of teaching. She also noted that class attendance and participation rates have increased and that most students seem to do well with the computer approach.

"It's alright... I think it would be better if it had a combination of a textbook and a CD-ROM."

— Amy Bald, ArtSci '02

Delisle and co-creator Lewis Tomalty, noted many of the students' reactions in the January 25 edition of The Queen's Gazette, saying "students [have] responded with enthusiasm, saying that the animation and videos made the subject come alive for them."

The use of computer technology in the classroom is not limited to science courses. Clarke Mackey, a professor in the film department also created a CD-ROM to supplement FILM 350, a production course.

Mackey designed such material to assist the students with the technical side of film production such as loading a camera. He believes that this allows students to "sit with the CD-ROM [in the computer] and the camera in their laps and learn at their own speed." In turn, the supplementary material and use of new technology frees up more class time for creative topics.

Amy Bald, ArtSci '02, uses a CD-ROM in her POLS 110 course and has mixed feelings about the technology. "It's alright. It'd be better if it had a tangible text," she said. "I think it would be better if it had a combination of a textbook and a CD-ROM."

Delisle and Mackey recognise the benefits and flaws of the CD-ROM technology.

Delisle sees this as "the way of the future" but both she and Mackey hope that this does not reduce the face-to-face interaction between students and professors which is so highly valued. They also agree that Queen's needs to add more computing stations that are compatible for their programs to keep all students in their classes on equal ground.

Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner, said he feels similarly and hopes that with these new teaching methods, a professor will not be replaced by a computer screen. As well, he noted the importance of these programs being accessible and cost efficient to the student body.

Student efforts help adaptive labs expand

BY LIANNE ELLIOTT

Student initiatives were the target of praise during the Queen's Adaptive Technology Labs Open House held in Douglas Library Monday afternoon.

As a result of the efforts of the AMS Accessibility Task Force and the support of Queen's student fees, the Adaptive Technology Labs were able to purchase new computer hardware and software this fall. The labs have been providing disabled students with access to learning materials through specialized computer equipment since 1991.

"You have to get students behind something if you want to really get something done," said Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs, during the Open House presentations.

With money raised by the Task Force, the Adaptive Technology Labs have been able to purchase two new computers. These include new voice input programs, which allow students to speak into the computer, and screen readers, which read material on the computer screen aloud. The labs are located in Douglas Library, Stauffer Library and on West Campus.

They have also acquired a digital scanning package, which scans written material onto a computer and then recites the material orally to users, providing visually impaired students with access to textbooks and other written documents.

For students with learning disabilities, the labs have purchased new computer software, including Inspiration and textHELP!, which help students organize ideas and correctly identify grammatical errors.

Financial assistance for the expansion of the Queen's Adaptive Technology Labs was provided by an endowment fund created by the AMS Accessibility Task Force, a group

Please see Queen's on page 7

Some of the new computer workstations unveiled by the task force in Douglas Library Wednesday.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

QP a competitor

Continued from page 1

predicted by pub management. Armstrong said the autofry was necessary because before this year, Alfie's wasn't following the terms of the Liquor License Act related to food. "The pub must offer a certain number of light meals," she explained, and "the most cost-efficient way of doing that was autofry."

"There weren't big plans for that to be a huge money maker," she emphasized.

"Food sales in general are down," said Bourke. He reasoned that Alfie's draws crowds due to dance atmosphere and that most people do not go there to eat. "People are coming in on really big nights to drink and dance... Alfie's is more of a big night venue type of place."

Speculation has arisen that the QP may be a greater competitor for Alfie's this year than in the past.

"The intent certainly was not to make a service that competes with another service," said Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations). However, since they have both become busy on the same nights, some competition has resulted, he said.

"I think people feel a little more comfortable here sometimes," said QP Manager Mark Picketts. "We do have limited space, but I think we utilize it well."

"We had a fantastic first term and a lot of that was because we were the new kid on the block," Picketts continued. "The buzz around the expansion made students come in, it was our job just to make sure they had fun."

Picketts said the QP has not intentionally marketed towards Alfie's patrons. "We are still predominantly an upper-year bar," he said. "We've developed strong, strong regulars this year."

Picketts said food sales at the QP are stronger than they have ever been. "We have aggressively marketed and planned towards increasing the amount of food we had offered from last year," he said. "We offered other platters, expanded the autofry and now we're working on expanding lunch."

"We've also developed a lot of people who will have a couple of drinks here and then go downstairs," Picketts said. "If they've had those drinks up here then they don't need to drink them down there."

Bourke agreed. "On some nights I can see that happening for sure," he said. "Some of that money is being spent upstairs... there are nights though when the QP doesn't affect us at all."

Bourke sees the QP's success as positive, not threatening. "I don't really see much of a problem... more money overall is still going into the AMS," he said. "It has affected our business, but I definitely think both [pubs] can exist."

"Between the two bars, the sales are up incredibly over last year," Armstrong said. The December 31 total for both bars was $344,819.08, compared with $305,855.08 at the same time last year. "They're obviously taking away business from downtown," she said.

Awareness week educates, promotes healthy eating

BY JONATHAN TINNEY

Beginning Monday, the Anorexia Nervosa and Bulimia Association of Kingston will be sponsoring a variety of events for National Eating Disorders Awareness Week. The goal of the week is to further awareness of eating disorders, their effects and the many societal causes that bring on these illnesses.

The week will kick off Monday with the second annual "Evening of Image, Art and Entertainment," at the Edward Day Gallery. This event will feature the work of many local artists, with music by Pat Murtagh and Cam Schaefer. During the week, information booths will be set up throughout the Kingston area to answer questions and give advice.

The main focus of the week is "Fearless Friday," a national non-dieting day scheduled for February 5. This event is meant to encourage everyone, especially those for whom dieting is a habit, to enjoy their favourite foods guilt-free for a day. The organisers hope that this day will help foster feelings among the public that eating well is essential for personal well being.

"We hope that everyone will participate in Fearless Friday, even if they don't come to the other events," said Mary Jane Gordon, president of the ANAB. "Ideally we hope to change a few peoples' minds about dieting and show how unhealthy the idea of not eating can be."

The Alma Mater Society Social Issues Commission is also planning some events. Among them include increasing awareness on campus, holding discussion groups and a possible movie presentation. Notices of events will be posted later this week.

While the ANAB is busy organizing the awareness week, it is also involved in year round projects for the awareness, consultation and treatment of eating disorders.

Students have responded well to the ANAB efforts.

"I think the week will do a lot for raising consciousness and answering important questions about eating disorders," said Kimberley Nowell, ArtSci '00. "Some of the events sound like they would be good, and the non-dieting day seems like a great way to take some focus off trying to be thin," said Marc Raymond, Arts '02.

ANAB offers open group discussion every Monday at 8 p.m. in the Ban Righ Woman's Centre across from Victoria Hall. Anyone needing counselling, diagnoses or treatment, is encouraged to contact the ANAB.

Body image important factor in anorexia

Continued from page 1

"There is a concern that the general level of body-dissatisfaction in society is rising," said Mary Jane Gordon, president of the Anorexia Nervosa and Bulimia Association of Kingston. "This, while quite obviously not healthy, may cause eating disorders to become more common and makes the warning signs harder to see."

One person for whom negative body image became very important is Linda, who chose not to reveal her real name. Linda is a recovered bulimic, and believes that her self image was a large factor in the development of her eating disorder. "I'd lose five pounds and feel better about how I looked, it gave me a sense of control. I had a hard time finding a sense of control back then," said Linda. "I had an eating disorder because losing weight helped me deal with other problems."

"An eating disorder is a coping mechanism. It is used to deal with larger, underlying factors," said Gordon. "Someone who develops an eating disorder is often just as likely to develop alcoholism or other obsessive behaviours."

Whatever the reason for developing the illness, the principle concern when helping a person with an eating disorder is early diagnosis and treatment. Health Canada also reported that as many as 15 per cent of anorexics die in treatment, often because care was not administered soon enough.

Signs of an eating disorder include extreme fear of weight gain, fluctuations or serious reduction in weight, binge eating, strict avoidance of food or food-related activities, irritability, depression and isolation.

Anorexia and bulimia are often not mutually exclusive and many victims suffer from both disorders.

According to Gordon, Kingston is quite fortunate to have a good therapy system. "We have an immediate care, outpatient facility operating out of the Hotel Dieu," said Gordon.

"Unlike many other communities, we are lucky to also have an adolescent program, both are available by a doctor's referral. We also have many excellent long-term care support groups," she said.

Linda recommends seeking help. "I realised I had a problem, when I realised that I was not going out with friends, participating in sports or doing schoolwork," said Linda. "I was depressed and food had become the main aspect of my life."

"I got treatment through a social worker who referred me to a clinic," said Linda of her treatment. "I was required to stay at the clinic during the day, but could go home at night."

"[The clinic] focused on body image, food planning, and looked very heavily into the underlying issues I was dealing with," continued Linda. "I fell off the wagon a few times but the gaps between those times just got longer and longer."

There are many long-term dangers of an untreated eating disorder. They include mouth sores, tooth decay, osteoporosis, cardiac irregularities, hair loss, severe damage to the gastrointestinal system and death.

"I feel now like I am fully cured," said Linda. "I feel no need to relapse. And the way I see my body, I believe, is without negative feelings."

In hindsight, Linda said she cannot understand why she had such a poor body image. "I'd like people to know that you can totally leave it behind and enjoy life by your own standards," Linda said.

National and international Development Week Celebrating

Development Work at Queen's and Abroad!

Join us for a week of activities February 1-5, 1999

Coordinated by the International Centre, JDUC
Tel: 533-2604

<http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

Watch the Journal for a copy of the program or visit our website.

SNID

OPIRG

QPID

Participating Faculty

QMO

WUSC

Amnesty International

AND MORE!

Kate Bailey

By REBECCA STELTER

Kate Bailey, candidate for Vice-President (University Affairs), says she brings to her team experience in Queen's student government and a fresh perspective on changes that can be brought to the AMS.

Bailey, who is running with Nick Cheeseman, President candidate, and Susan Henry, V-P (Operations) candidate, is a fourth-year English and health student from St. Albert, Alberta. She has been involved in Orientation Week at Queen's for four years, and said it is "one of my passions."

Bailey was the Operations Chair for ASUS Orientation Committee '98, and served as a co-ordinator for Orientation Committee '97. "I think [Orientation Week] is so important because it welcomes first-year students, and it's a great way of getting involved," said Bailey.

She is currently the Academics Commissioner for ASUS. Although Bailey and her team have little direct AMS experience, she does not see this as an impediment. "We've each had exposure to the AMS in one form or another but I think we can bring in a lot of new ideas," she said. Bailey also sees the team's closeness as a very positive attribute. "We all get along really well and we know each other really well... We know that we can work well together and our styles complement each other," she said.

Cheeseman, Bailey and Henry have chosen to concentrate their platform on four main areas: community relations (including issues of lighting, relations with the Kingston Police, and Bus-it); tuition (including improvements to Queen's Career Services and "more bang for your buck," said Bailey); academics (especially exam issues, marking turnaround and TA training); and awareness/availability of the AMS, (increasing relations and co-operation).

"I feel really strongly about Career Services because I am personally looking for a job," said Bailey. She feels that Queen's does not offer enough information about what is available for graduates in the global economy.

"It's a shame for Queen's to abandon students once they get their degree," said Bailey.

Bailey sees the position of V-P (UA) as a challenging one because there are so many facets to the position. "It's really important to give as much attention and thought to as many activities as you can," she said.

Motivating commissioners and maintaining a healthy workplace are priorities for Bailey. "I think it's great to create a positive working environment," she said.

Bailey said the election campaign is a worthwhile and positive experience. "In the last two weeks I have learned a lot about this school," she explained. "Friends have given us so much support."

V-P University Affairs Quiz

What is your life goal?

To be successful.

Who is the equity advisor?

?

What does STRIVE stand for?

Students Taking Responsibility & Initiative for a Viable Environment

What commission is responsible for the Student Advocacy Committee?

A.C. (Academics Commission)

How long has the AMS Food Bank existed?

Two years

What groups share the Grey House space? Women's Only Space

LEBA
Women's Centre, Sexual Health Resource Centre, QSCS
Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Wid Rose
The Wild Rose is Alberta's provincial flower. It is an enduring plant that survives the AB winters, grows freely in all different locations, and is a positive addition to any garden.

Quiz Answers: 2. Mary Margaret Dauphinee 3. Students Taking Responsible Initiatives Toward a Viable Environment 4. Academic Affairs Commission 5. Two years 6. Sexual Health Resource Centre, Kingston Lesbian Gay Bisexual Association, Educating Students on Substance Abuse, Women's Centre, Anorexia Nervosa & Bulimia Association, Frontier College for Literacy, Amnesty International, Queen's Students and Community Services Group

Lisa Mori

By JONATHAN TINNEY

Lisa Mori is a fourth-year Con-Ed science student from Markham who hopes to be elected to the position of Alma Mater Society Vice-President (University Affairs).

Mori, who is running with Sarah Cotman, President candidate, and Owen Minns, V-P (Operations) candidate, is involved in many aspects of campus life. She is president of the Con-Ed Students Association and a Kaleidoscope buddy, plays intramural water polo and volleyball, and still has time for class.

In addition, she is chair of the AMS Tricolour and Frank Knox awards committee. These awards are distributed to students who make great contributions to extra-curricular activities and to Queen's professors for teaching excellence.

"I am really glad to be a part of the [awards] committee, it allows me to take part in motivating and rewarding excellence here at Queen's," Mori said.

"I think [the V-P (UA) position] is a direct line to the widest aspects of student life," Mori said. "Through the six commissions I am able to be a team leader, creating my own initiatives as well as co-ordinating others to help with their objectives."

Mori expressed praise for many of the strategies started by the current executive. She said she hopes to expand on much of the good work done so far.

"I'd like to further develop the role of the VP (UA), to help maintain the high academic quality at Queen's," she said. "I'd like to do what I can to foster an environment of innovation and distinction. Academics is of common interest to all students, and the AMS needs to work for that common interest."

Mori said she would also like to make changes to services, through the Student Services Taskforce. This group is responsible for analysing and assessing the quality of student services on campus.

"I would like to see a continuation of the expansion to campus security. The security notice boards put up last year were a great start, but I'd like to keep going," Mori said. "Like expanding the blue-light program to include high-risk areas like the student village and Victoria Park, as well as possibly using Walkhome employees to patrol between assignments."

When asked why she decided to pursue the position, Mori said, "I had a real appreciation for the dynamic between Owen and Sarah... it wasn't an opportunity I could turn down."

Mori said she would also like the AMS to communicate more actively with students. "I would consider it my responsibility to take an active role in educating the student body about doings in the AMS," she said.

As for the important issues, Mori attests her favourite childhood toys were jigsaw puzzles, would have Depeche Mode play Grant Hall if she were Queen of Queen's, and described the Juicy Juice drink at the QP as "juicy."

CANDIDATE PROFILES '99

V-P UA

Jon Krashinsky

By MANDY MARRIOTT

You won't hear any "big idealistic proposals" from Jon Krashinsky, but the candidate for Vice-President (University Affairs) is enthusiastic about the upcoming election anyway.

Krashinsky, who is running with Mike Belzner, President candidate, and Chelsea Gay, V-P (Operations) candidate, is critical of some individuals who enter the AMS election carting impressive-sounding promises they may not be able to keep.

"These people are elected on the strength of idealistic proposals but balk at what they have got themselves into when they realize they may not be able to fulfill all those proposals," said

Krashinsky. In his opinion, it is better for candidates to go into the race with less idealistic views and more willingness to put in the hours that are required to get done what they have promised.

If elected, one of the most important changes Krashinsky intends to make concerns the position of V-P (UA) itself. He contends that the public needs to know more about the job and its attributes. Krashinsky believes that it is disquieting to hear people ask about the position and have no idea what it entails.

Krashinsky and his team "would really look into getting a more defined protocol for the V-P (UA)," he said. As it presently stands, the President and V-P (UA) separately chair several positions on a number of committees. Krashinsky and his team would like to see some of these positions co-chaired by both the President and the V-P (UA).

"There needs to be a tighter link between the V-P (UA) and the President," he said.

Krashinsky feels that his experience as this year's co-editor of Golden Words has given him many of the skills he needs to be successful as the V-P (UA). His position "proved that [he] could run a significant job that required him to put in a large number of hours while maintaining a full course load," he said.

Although he and his fellow team members are all members of the Golden Words staff, Krashinsky is not worried that students may not take them seriously. Krashinsky admitted he has been approached by people who have been concerned that this campaign is nothing more than a practical joke.

"We are all serious, but we will run a fun campaign," he said. He believes that "it is most important to do the work, and you won't want to do that unless you make it fun and enthusiastic."

According to Krashinsky, the V-P (UA) has three different areas of responsibility. The first involves the supervision of the six different commissions. The second area of responsibility is more informal. It involves the V-P (UA) sitting on a number of committees that have a link to the AMS. The third area is even more informal and, in Krashinsky's opinion, the most important. It involves being available to the students as a resource.

Krashinsky believes his primary job "is to interact and be there to meet the students' concerns."

V-P University Affairs Quiz

What is your life goal?

To be the co-star of Bill Nye the Science Guy

Who is the equity advisor?

Mary Margaret Dauphinee

What does STRIVE stand for?

Students Taking Responsible Initiatives for a Viable Environment

What commission is responsible for the Student Advocacy Committee?

Academic Affairs

How long has the AMS Food Bank existed?

2 years

What groups share the Grey House space? ANAB - Women's - LGBA - Centre - TALK - Sexual Health Resource Centre

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Fe

(chemical symbol for iron - strong and supportive!!!)

V-P University Affairs Quiz

What is your life goal? Develop telepathy not to make people vote for me but to make their heads explode

Who is the equity advisor?

a sensitive, caring person

What does STRIVE stand for?

oh, right. If you don't know don't expect me to tell you.

What commission is responsible for the Student Advocacy Committee?

No one! The S.A.C. is running wild! Call the National Guard!

How long has the AMS Food Bank existed?

4 years (or, uh, yrs.)

What groups share the Grey House space? There's no sharing - they fight bitterly over the space - sigh - can't we all get along?

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

(me) (the president) (ninja's bent on destruction)

Student leaders happy with vote

Continued from page 1

and the AMS, unlike the situation between the Law students and the AMS," said Billingsley. "We never came to the AMS and said, 'This is what you've done wrong'."

"Some of our members thought that our natural place was among other 'graduate' students," Billingsley continued.

There is bound to be an affinity with the word 'grad', when you already have a degree," said Stanley. "I believe dividing along graduate and undergraduate lines is logical, but coming together in one big collective, and not two medium-sized groups, makes for a strong, diverse organization."

"I'm no stranger to referendum results being close," said Stanley, speaking of the narrowly defeated motion to align with the Ontario Student

Undergraduate Alliance in the fall referendum. "It's up to next year's executive to work towards fulfilling every student's needs."

Both Stanley and Billingsley were pleased with the outcome. "The fact that the medical students are staying with the AMS is a better thing for student government at Queen's," said Stanley. "I hope the Law students vote to come back."

"Personally, I was happy with the outcome," said Billingsley. "As I looked at it, I thought the AMS was an appropriate organization for medical students."

"In a way, with the Law students in the SGPS, and the medical students in the AMS, we have more of a collective voice than if we went to the SGPS," said Billingsley. "This could only be a positive-thing... We are looking forward to working with the AMS, now that the referendum is over."

Super Bowl XXXIII
Denver Broncos Vs Atlanta Falcons
 come and watch the excitement
NO COVER, PRIZES,
free dogs and chilli at 1/2 time

The Toucan
 www.thetoucan.com
 down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
 $2.49 sunday breakfast
 sim-fries
 1/2 price wings*
 wed
 1/2 price nachos*
 *after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS
 fri Jan 29
i que vida!
 ..sensual explorations of the night,
 groovalicious rhythms...

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares
Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service
 It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!
 ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
 ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
 ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
 186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
 Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
 Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Outstanding Contributors: January

TINNEY
 JONATHAN

Tall, dark, handsome... you may have seen Jon Tinney gracing the corridors of Queen's, notebook in hand, smile on face, for on the trail of the latest breaking news. Jon's been the superman of the News section this month, writing several articles at once, coming up with his own story ideas, and staying up late into the night reading pamphlets, pouring over bound journals, and devising clever leads. Jon is friendly, funny, incredibly talented and, in our opinion, a real hunk.

TSOTOS
 DIMITRIOS

Dimitrios Tsotos is A&E's superstar contributor this month. Dimitrios is interested in writing the best, well-researched articles possible. Dimitrios wrote an excellent concert review, which was thoughtful, creative and insightful — not to mention extremely well polished. Your zealotry is unsurpassed.

SAGER
 NEATE

Neate Sager has been named to the Sports and Fitness All-Star team this month. Neate is the ideal contributor who not only covers every event we ask of him, but also provides insightful analysis of national sports news. His writing is always interesting and he contributes to the overall quality of the section by complementing a wide range of journalistic voices. Take a bow Mr. Sager!

Chez Piggy Restaurant 20th Anniversary
 As of February we're Kingston's first XX-rated restaurant!

So.....we're stripping down to retro prices for a whole week!!
 Celebrate our coming-of-age February 3 - 10 and get your 15% student discount* too!!
 Chez Piggy 68R Princess Street 549-7673 *with ID

Fast Facts

In Here
 German Theatre Group

The Queen's German Theatre Group will be presenting a play February 11-13 at Rotunda Hall in Theological Hall. The play starts at 8:00 p.m. and tickets are $5 for students at the door.

Explore Kingston's Heritage
 Anger Management Group

The Marine Museum of the Great Lakes is inviting people to celebrate Canada's Citizenship and Heritage Week February 8 - 15. Enjoy free admission and door prizes from 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. at "Explore your Community" day on February 12 and "Thank Someone Special" day on February 14

Queen's a 'role model'

Continued from page 3

major with a disability, is one of the 160 students who use the Adaptive Technology Labs each year.

"I use the lab at least once a week", she said, "I think it's a study environment which is beneficial to all the students who use it."

Chittenden believes that as a result of the new computer equipment, Queen's can be considered a Canadian leader in its pursuit to provide students with disabilities access to specialized technology. "With this new equipment, Queen's is a role model for other universities," Chittenden said. She explained that Queen's Adaptive Technology Labs have been visited by officials of the University of Toronto and Trent University, who are looking to upgrade their own labs in a similar fashion.

Lynne Jank, a third-year psychology

It's cold out there!
 Stay warm with our huge
OUTERWEAR SALE
20% - 50% OFF everything
TRAILHEAD
 237 PRINCESS STREET
 KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B3
 PH: (613) 546-4757 FAX: (613) 546-5243
 WEBSITE: http://www.TrailHeadCnd.com
 MAILBOX: Kingston@TrailHeadCnd.com

SUPERBOWL

SUNDAY
 See the game the way it should be seen!
BIG SCREEN!
SURROUND SOUND!
FOOD
FREE PIZZA! (Limited quantity)
PRIZES!
$5.00 AT THE DOOR.

S.O.A.R. WITH US THIS SUMMER!

We are looking for seven highly motivated, outgoing and enthusiastic Arts and Science students to work as Peer Advisers for our Summer Orientation to Academe Registration (S.O.A.R.) Program.

The intention of the S.O.A.R. Program is to orient and help new students and their parents with the "academics" of the Faculty of Arts and Science. The program is administered throughout July.

Applicants must be:

- entering third or fourth year of an Arts and Science program in September 1999
- in good academic standing
- committed to helping new students

Employment details (including deadline dates), job description and application packages will be available beginning January 25, 1999 at Career Services.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Not fit for print

AN EDITOR OF A CAMPUS publication at Queen's recently noted that "with the advent of easily accessible media, pretty much anybody can get their opinions, musings, or recipes for coffee cake out into the world."

While Jennifer Abel probably didn't intend the remark to be an indictment of her own publication, Surface magazine, the question cannot be avoided: why are the pages of Surface filled with assinine opinions and musings that are of little relevance and even less interest to Queen's students?

Why are the pages of Surface filled with assinine opinions and musings that are of little relevance and even less interest to Queen's students?

As the news magazine published by the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society (the largest Faculty society at Queen's), Surface should have the resources and talent to produce a publication that rivals other campus media. It wasn't so long ago that Surface did publish interesting and thought-provoking content that pushed the envelope and earned the magazine a reputation as controversial. These days, however, Surface rarely emerges from the fringes of campus media with anything notable. In the latest issue, the magazine reached a new low by dwelling on the only-too-well-covered issue of Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky for six out of 15 pages!

Why should anyone care if Surface continues to toil in un-read obscurity? Well, for starters, two-thirds of Arts and Science students chose not to opt-out of Surface's $2 student levy. This adds up to a hefty sum of money to fund the operations of a publication that could be distributed on another planet and few students would notice the difference. And second, our campus needs Surface! We need Surface to challenge us, to make us think, to provide an alternative to the views printed in The Journal and Golden Words.

Despite its poor layout and thin content, Surface has the potential to become what it already calls itself: the most interesting, original, and dynamic periodical in Kingston. Without contrivance by students this will never happen. So take the time and come on down to the ASUS Core at 183 University — Surface has meetings every Wednesday at 6 p.m.

Douse the flame

WHILE THE MEDIA and the public have always paid enough attention to the Olympics, nobody ever seemed to notice where the gold and silver really went. Now that the media spotlight has turned away from the amateur athletes and towards the professional cheerleaders at the IOC, there's no turning back.

Unlike past incidents involving drugs or unfair judging, the recent bribery scandals have revealed a pattern of systematic corruption that cannot be easily resolved. No longer about honest competition, the Games have degenerated into a contest between ambitious host cities and IOC members to get a greater share of the Olympic trough.

A flawed selection process and the secretive and unaccountable practices of the IOC have only served to engender a culture of greed that has flourished under the insipid leadership of IOC President Juan Antonio Samaranch. Unless Samaranch, who has run the Olympics for almost two decades and insists on being called "your excellency", resigns, the process of reforming the Olympics cannot begin.

Even with major structural changes and the creation of an independent ethics commission, it may be too late to restore public confidence in the Olympics. Even potential host cities, once the major driving force behind the Olympic movement, are finding that bidding for the games is more of a stigma than a prize. The power to inspire millions may be gone now that it's become apparent that the people who run the Games have abandoned the Olympic ideals themselves.

Marriott doesn't cut it

THERE'S DEFINITELY A HOLE in the system. Last Thursday I went to the Fireside Grill in the JDUC to get the standard breakfast — a coffee and a bagel. I was very confused however, when the bagels weren't in their little glass case — displayed to tempt the salivating Queen's masses.

I asked where the bagels were and I was directed to the new little bagel table. I took my bagel and asked the guy to toast it. Nope. No toasting. You had to cut your own bagel, and then toast it and then wait in line and ask for cream cheese. Why?

With such few services on campus, is it too much to ask to have our bagels toasted?

Let's think about this. Firstly, I don't want everyone's scuzzy little hands handling my food. I think it's unsanitary for everyone to be tumbling through the bagel bag trying to decipher which bagel lives up to their taste. This wouldn't be an issue if a Fireside Grill employee was selecting the bagel wearing gloves.

Second of all, there are problems when the bagel and soup lines collide. The toaster only toasts two bagels at a time. Does this seem like an adequate number of customers being served? I think not.

Is this service? With such few services on campus, is it too much to ask to have our bagels toasted? Well, apparently not. As of Tuesday, there is now a sign over the new bagel station stating: "We still serve bagels at the Grill, but if you are in a rush try the self-serve station."

So what does this mean? It means everyone will still be pawing through the bagel bags so they don't have to get one with poppy seeds and there will still be congestion around the bagel and soup station.

It also means the people at the Fireside Grill didn't rationally think this initiative out well — or it wouldn't have been modified so quickly.

So bagel lovers of the world unite! Refuse to go to the "self-serve" station and demand that the employees of the Fireside Grill make your bagel — isn't that what they're there for?

Like all issues, however, there is a larger concern at hand. The Fireside Grill's rapid decision to toast our bagels again means someone is listening to students' complaints. Students often complain that they're ignored on important issues such as tuition, campus facilities and safety. But rest assured kids, when it comes down to a critical issue like bagels, Queen's is listening.

BY SARAH CROSBIE

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Greshin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renee Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heister

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Sofian Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Uljan Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeill

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Aimee Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, January 29, 1999 • Issue 28 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially independent newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Journal's Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further information policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711
Facsimile—editorial: 613-533-4728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: <http://www.journal.queensu.ca>
Circulation 9,000
Issue 29 will be published on Tuesday, February 2, 1999

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Heather Aggus, Mike Burgess, Rajeev Davé, Liane Elliott, Angela James, Mandy Marriott, Bob McGill, Andy Poole, Paul Quick, Naeiro Sager, Nicole Salama, Mark Salvador, Eli Schuster, Rebecca Steiner, Jonathan Tinney, Dimitrios Tzoukas, Jim Whittington.
Photographers: Civi Acham, Luke Mylyganam.

OPINIONS

Money for nothing? Private post-secondary education comes to Canada

IN 2002, POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION in Canada will undergo a radical change. Not only will the population of first-year students double, the first non-religious and private university will open its doors. This university was conceived by David Strangway, ex-president of the University of British Columbia, and will be located in Squamish, a small town one hour away from Whistler. Strangway, who calls his university a "niche [in the] mediocre educational system," will cost a student $25 000 in tuition alone.

If a university education is supposed to provide students with a broad spectrum of information, enabling them to expand knowledge and to advance society in a positive direction, then the educational environment must provide a strong foundation of knowledge in many subjects. It must strive to include the views of the many students that hail from different regions of the country, particular class origins, and diversified ethnic backgrounds. Even if the primary motive for choosing to attend a particular university is merely social reasons rather than altruistic matters, the diversity should still be there.

This is not to say that Queen's has an open and fair system. In fact, our system is problematic; little distinction is made in our transcripts concerning the circumstances of our personal resources (i.e. employment during school and/or other responsibilities). Furthermore, both Western and Queen's already have "full-fee" programs (i.e. MBA and EMBA programs). Media and business institutions hail these programs as "innovative," yet the fundamental social consequences are ignored.

An education system that is more diverse and has more unique people provides a stronger foundation of knowledge in many fields and subjects, thus allowing students to create new theories, inventions, and connections between fields. With this foundation, students can build and expand from what others have learned rather than needlessly wasting time and effort. This is the ideology of the Queen's School of Policy Studies Masters Program. As many students of that program will tell you, the creation of this environment allows students to mesh attributes of different backgrounds to formulate new and more brilliant ways of viewing the world. For example, what does a student researching poverty really know about that issue if they cannot correlate the social, economic, and political answers together?

A careless argument against this concept attempts to compare the differences between American and Canadian colleges, showing how the American system produces many intelligent individuals. While this may be true, it is also apparent that each individual is not equal. When will administrative educators and their ilk realize that the strengths and capabilities of each individual must be taken into account with regards to the socio-economic situations they exist in? While I acknowledge that such restrictions are taken into account in some programs, these are infrequent and superficial and certainly are not the norm.

This new Canadian private university could be the start of a movement that might wipe out the middle class and leave a huge gap between the upper and lower classes.

Statistics show that private schools in the United States offer much better opportunities for their students. This increases the gap in the social status of Americans by educating the wealthy and leaving the others with low paying jobs. This new Canadian private university could be the start of a movement that could quite possibly wipe out the entire middle class, leaving a huge gap between the upper and lower classes. Even the Americans accept inequality as a problem, but they have not yet worked seriously to fix it. Thus, the status quo remains even as the correlation between socio-economic status and student performance has been consistent for as long

Continued on page 10

Letters to the Editors

Ogle fights back

Dear Editors,

While I have been advised against it, I feel compelled to respond to the attack by Mr. Graham Robinson on my conduct as a member of an AMS selection committee. It was vicious, offensive, and intended to do nothing else but discredit me and malign my reputation. Mr. Robinson's claim that he did not write to "vilify" me is betrayed by the obvious — he wrote three pages doing exactly that. This much is fact: Mr. Robinson suffered a frustrating experience in his dealings with the AMS in large part, this was my fault. My forgetting to return three phone messages, along with a subsequent misunderstanding between AMS GM Claude Sherrin and me (over who Mr. Robinson had spoken with), contributed to the situation. I have apologized to Mr. Robinson for what happened. This truly was an exceptional circumstance, virtually all of my voice mails get returned.

And that really is my point. I apologized to Mr. Robinson (in an e-mail that was sent on December 2), and admitted my mistake. It is my belief that an honorable man would have accepted that apology and got on with his life. Mr.

Robinson, however, did not. His letter of January 19 followed an equally spiteful attack at AMS Assembly on January 14. My actions towards him were careless, not immoral or dishonest, and are not deserving of the vindictive words he has both written and uttered. I am the first to agree that unreturned messages are irritating, but they do not warrant a massive, two-thousand-word spout in The Journal. Despite what Mr. Robinson writes, my conduct was at no time contrary to AMS policy (section 22.01 of the AMS Appointments Policy specifically exempts committees such as these from the requirements that Mr. Robinson refers to); and I maintain that my assumption regarding selection notifications was reasonable. If Mr. Robinson was calling seven weeks after the decision was made, I am quite certain it was not out of a genuine desire to know if he was selected.

Furthermore, in his letter, Mr. Robinson quotes me in a manner designed to make me appear arrogant. He neglects to mention that what I wrote was in response to a sarcastic e-mail that he sent to Tom Stanley, Claude Sherrin, and me. In that e-mail, Mr. Robinson wrote, amongst other things, that Mr. Sherrin's job involved being the "adult" paid to "keep an eye on" the "kids" within the AMS. If my anger at comments like these muted my apology somewhat, then I think most would understand. It did not, however, lessen the sincerity of that apology.

In closing, I would like to say the following. I, like the many people I have had the good fortune to work within student government, put a lot of effort into what I do. I don't do it for the pay (my honourarium works out to be quite substantially less than minimum wage), or to "pad my resume", as Mr. Robinson suggests (few people even know that my position exists). I do it because I enjoy those I work with, and I do it because I enjoy contributing, even in a small way, to the University that has been very good to me for the past four years. I take pride in the work that I have done for the AMS, and I stand behind my efforts. Mr. Robinson judges me based on the single encounter that he has had with me. I would suggest that he familiarize himself with everything else I have done before he tosses around epithets. Of the dozens of people I have dealt with since I started as Board Chair, I would say that the large majority have been pleased with the way in which I conduct myself and carry out my duties. It angers me deeply that Mr. Robinson, a man that has met me but once, has so maliciously attempted to

talking

HEADS

If you were an IOC member, what would you ask for?

"A dozen wives."
Mike Burgess
Arts '99

"A small third world country."
Adam Janikowski
Sci '02

"Some interns and a couple cigars."
Grant Sernick Sci '99
Trevor Ogle ArtSci '99

"A chance to 'train' with Ross Rebagliati."
Michelle Zuliani Sci '01
Caley Baker ArtSci '01

PHOTOS BY LUKE MYLYGANAM

insult my character and cast aspersions upon me.

Trevor Ogle
Chair,
A.M.S. Board of Directors

$15 fee is illogical

Dear Editors,

I want to begin by thanking Mike Kealy for attempting to defend the new policy passed by Queen's administration which will force students forgetting to bring their student cards to exams to pay $15. It is precisely such discourse I wished to foster with my previous letter, in which I argued the new policy is not, in fact, defensible. I must confess I remain unconvinced by Mr. Kealy's

Private school trouble

Continued from page 9

as records have been maintained.

In the book The Bell Curve, it is clearly illustrated that American students from affluent backgrounds tend to do better in school and on standardized tests than students from economically disadvantaged backgrounds. The authors concluded that even with the large increase in colleges of "plebeians," the probability of a high school graduate attending college is as dependent on parental socio-economic status as it was 30 years ago. This is a tragic example of the educational social stratification in America. Sadly, this methodology is being emulated in Canada.

When students acquire education, the freedom to explore new ideas and concepts comes with it. Going to university with peers from one spectrum of society (in this case the financial elite) restricts students from learning from other people, and this may act a barrier to developing unconventional or abstract ideas. Students must be able to learn from whatever sparks their curiosity. Some of our best innovations come from this "informal" thinking.

Even though various disciplines try to separate themselves from others, administrators know that each subject is a branch of education and every branch stems from the same tree. Some branches diverge and have twigs and branches of their own, but everything is joined at the root. All education is very similar because each branch of knowledge relies on the other in order to advance. For example, science relies on language to document and publish experimental results. If these findings are published inaccurately, other scientists who use these publications in their own research will be misinformed. Each subject relies on another in some way. It is easier to understand each branch of the tree better if you can see how it is involved universally; where it stemmed from, and how it is dependent upon other branches; what branches stemmed from it, and how they are dependent upon it.

In order for the private university to work, the students must have the economic density to pay, the social insight to empathize, and the emotional maturity to thrive.

MARK SALVADOR
ARTS '00

'99 Teach in JAPAN

Global Educational Opportunities Services

Interviews will be held in Ottawa Feb. 19-21st. You must be able to attend all three days. Please fax your cover letter and resume by Feb. 1st to: GEOS Language Corp. Attn: Q1 - Personnel Coordinator FAX: (416) 777-0110 All hiring decisions made by GEOS Japan Web: www.twies.com/~mjm/hiring.html

GEOS Corp. was founded in Japan in 1973 with the goal of furthering international communication through English language education. GEOS is a global network of over 420 schools in Japan and 35 worldwide. You are dynamic, gregarious and ambitious with a Bachelor's degree (any discipline) and committed to teaching English Conversation in Japan for a 1 year renewable contract. Positions begin 2-4 months of hiring. GEOS offers many promotional career opportunities (within Japan and internationally), such as Teacher-Trainer/Manager, Curriculum Development, Human Resources Manager or Homestay Coordinator. GEOS provides you: Working Visa, Salary + Extra Monthly Payment, Private Apartment, Top-Notch training Programs (before departure and throughout your career), Japanese Lessons Return Flight Benefit, Health Insurance, Fun and Excitement!

Letters to the Editors

argument; any way you look at the policy, it just doesn't make any sense.

I think I can provide a very clear and compelling argument which shows why. And I don't even think you need to have studied logic in order to follow it. I start from the assumption that the whole rationale for asking students to bring their student cards to exams was to prevent cheating in the form of impersonation.

Okay. Certainly a small fine will reduce the number of students who forget their cards. But what a $15 fine won't do is force each of the 994 students who forgot their cards to remember them next time (not that it will be the same 994 students, but I'm sure you get the drift). So there will be students at exams without their student cards (and therefore paying $15) who are not cheaters — I think this is a fair assumption.

Similarly, and I have made this point before, a $15 fine will not discourage those really bent on cheating. They will just pay the fine and have someone write the exam for them. If there were cheaters at exams before the $15 fine, there will also be cheaters at exams after it — I think this is also a fair assumption, and Mr. Kealy seemed to agree with it.

So now we must ask a simple question: besides depriving students (cheaters and non-cheaters) of their money, and making Queen's administration a little richer, what difference will the policy make? Now I did consider the argument Mr. Kealy put forward. He said that "with a decrease in the number of students failing to provide valid student cards, cheaters will be identified and dealt with properly." Oh really? How so?

Both cheaters and non-cheaters will be forced to do the exact same thing: pay $15 and present their signature in lieu of their student cards. I'm deeply sorry, but unless Queen's administration has some magical method of sniffing out the phony signatures from the real, I don't see how the policy will be at all effective. Well, it will generate some coin for the Queen's coffers (cha-ching!)...

Mr. Kealy, I do not think this is some devious ploy by Queen's to compensate for funding cuts. But it does strike me as unethical to charge students $15 for a policy that will not achieve what it is designed to. In my opinion, that's nothing short of stealing, and it really pisses me off. Of course the rising number of students who forget their student cards (not to be equated with a rising number of cheaters) is a serious problem, and one that needs to be addressed. I also think a flat out refusal to let students who forget their cards write exams would be too drastic a measure.

Remember, however, that there is not a simple policy for every sophisticated problem. Queen's administration may have confused itself and some of its students into thinking so, but I dare say the cheaters won't be fooled.

I think the above comprises a valid argument against the implementation of the $15 policy. What's left now is for Queen's administration to have the courage to admit it has made a mistake and to open itself to other suggestions. Although, Mr. Kealy, at the end of your argument you did state that you would "love to hear a better solution." I do believe the proper order of things would have been to first solicit opinions from the student body, and then to pass policy.

Did it ever strike you, for example, that the debate which is going on right here might have a greater impact on reminding students to bring their student cards than a $15 fine? Analogously, a simple ad in The Queen's Journal would certainly cost students a lot less than your fine, and have no dubious ethical implications besides. It would, in short, be a much more logical policy.

Theo Dos Santos
ARTS '99

Polaroids not cash

Dear Editors,

I am writing in response to the recent controversy over the new exam policy of charging $15 to students writing an exam without a student card.

The goal of the policy is to combat cheating on exams, a goal most students would agree with. However, as many people have pointed out if people are willing to get someone else to write their exam they won't have a problem shelling out an extra $15.

Is there any policy that can eliminate cheating on exams without resorting to DNA testing? I think there is. I propose that students writing exams without student cards be fined $15 and have a Polaroid photo taken of them.

Their marks will not be released until they produce a valid student card matching the Polaroid and pay the $15. After having done so, they may keep the Polaroid to forever remember their forgetfulness.

Now, originally I thought this was a pretty silly idea but with time it grew on me. So stop your laughing and I'll try to answer all possible objections to this policy.

First, people will say that it will distract others writing exams. In a 2-3 hour exam the 5 seconds required to take a picture is negligible.

Similarly, the chance of someone near you having their picture taken is remote considering how strict a policy this is. Secondly, people might complain about the cost but the $15 people are paying in fines more than makes up for the cost of a single picture. Thirdly, some 1984/conspiracy theory fans will probably raise the issue of personal privacy. To this, I can only say relax, it's really not that big a deal.

No elaborate file will be kept on perpetrators and Polaroids will be used so that once the student shows their ID they can have the only picture back.

If Queen's is truly serious about eliminating this type of cheating on exams, they should give this idea some thought. Because absolutely no one will be writing someone else's exam if they have to later match the Polaroid with a valid student card.

Kevin McCarthy
ARTS '00

FEATURES

SHORT FICTION CONTEST

THE WINNER

Opera

By Paul Quick

PROFESSOR Serlin stood at his window, smoking a cigarette.

"Is it still raining?" asked the girl in the bed. He didn't turn around to look at her.

"No." A little lie; it wasn't raining very hard. What did it matter to her anyway? She was just trying to find something to start a conversation. "I didn't know you were awake."

"I wasn't. I woke up because it's cold."
That was a hint: she wanted him to close the window. She couldn't just ask him to do anything, she had to drop hints — it pissed him off. He wanted some fresh air. If she was that cold she could get out of bed and shut the window herself. He needed it open. Right now he really needed to stand in front of an open window. It wasn't that much to ask.

The street lights were out as far as he could see. Electricity had been off and on all night. The apartment across the street had power now, but his side of the block was out again. They had quite a storm there for awhile. She had clung to him through it, panting and groaning over him while the lightning flashed outside. A real spectacle, a real cinematic little show, something for everyone. He knew what would happen: she'd write some poem about it and want to read it to him out loud. About the lightning and thunder and the movement of their bodies, how it was all a beautiful metaphor. How it was all so perfect and meaningful.

He kept looking out the window. So dark out there without the streetlights, it didn't even look like the same city. The street seemed too far down, the buildings too far away. Nothing felt right.

"What are you looking at out there?" The girl sat up in bed, sliding a nightgown over her head, and pulling the sheets up to her neck. He glanced over his shoulder at her, then turned back.

"Nothing."
"Like Hemingway?" said the girl in the nightgown.

"No. Not like anyone." He jabbed his cigarette out against the windowsill. "Christ."

The lights were on in one of the apartments across the street. Professor Serlin had been staring at it absently for the last quarter of an hour. The curtains were open. He was watching an old man inside moving furniture around. The old man was singing to himself.

"Is it okay if we close the window?" The girl in the nightgown was shivering.

"You should go back to sleep." It was past her bedtime. He needed the air, the smooth oxygen; he needed to cool off and get a grip on things.

The old man moved slowly around the apartment as he shuffled from one piece of furniture to another. Sometimes he would just lean against them, but also he would move them. Just a few inches at a time, at first. Then he started really moving them, lifting up table lamps, dragging his sofa and recliner around. He'd be doing that for a while, then he'd stop and just look around. A couple times Professor Serlin watched the man make big gestures with his arms, like he was rehearsing for a show. An old man singing arias while rearranging his apartment in the middle of the night. Why not?

"WHAT'S he doing?" said the girl in the nightgown. She had got out of bed and was standing by the window next to him. She kissed Professor Serlin's neck and rest her sharp chin against his shoulder. "What a weird man," she said, her jaw pressing into him with each syllable. "It's so late. It looks like he's talking; maybe he's senile. Can you tell what he's doing?"

"You should try and get some sleep. You have class tomorrow." She should leave the man alone. What an old man does in his apartment in the middle of the night is his own business. It's one thing just to watch, it's another to discuss it. Besides, it was probably just the weather. It's hard to sleep when the weather changes like this.

"What do you think his name is?" The nightgown put her arms around him, threading her fingers together like a knot. It didn't matter what the man's name was, it was a ridiculous question. The girl in the nightgown was too young; she was missing the whole point. "Maybe Geoffrey, he looks like a Geoffrey."

Serlin had a word stuck in his mouth, a rough stone under his tongue. She was trampling all over sacred ground and dragging him with her. It had been so perfect for a moment while she slept — as thought they were the only two men awake in the entire city. They had a shared this quiet dignity. The word was there now, waiting to speak itself as her hot limbs tightened around him.

"What are you thinking?" A whisper of sour breath in his ear.

Serlin shrugged the nightgown's weight off him and leaned against the windowsill. He looked at her, right at her, right at what she was. He saw it, and his stomach tightened and turned as though twisted by a fist. She was shivering and almost naked, flimsy as a sheet of paper. She was a young body distorted and misshapen, a receptacle of weakness. She had tricked him into this place, slipped the stone under his tongue with her careful gestures. She knew what she was doing. The word waiting there, moist and ready.

"What are you thinking?"
Cunt.
"I think you should transfer out of my class." He turns back to the

Continued on next page

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

apartment across the street. The old man is dragging his recliner around by the footrest. He was still singing and moving his arms, though his gestures had become smaller and less confident.

"I thought we talked about it, that it wouldn't be a problem. But if you've changed your mind, that's alright. I just thought we had decided that—"

"I don't want you in the class." The old man let the recliner go but kept looking at it, it was clear he wasn't happy with where it was.

"I understand. Whatever you think is best." The old man moved to the middle of the room and looked all around him, examining his work. Then slowly, deliberately, he turned and walked out of the room. The lights in the old man's apartment went off, and the whole street was dark again.

"I don't think I want to see you anymore." Serlin squinted across the street, but all he could see in any direction was the faint blue rectangle, an imprint of light left on his eyes. He curved his hands around the cold windowsill and breathed in. "I don't want to see you again. Ever." And then, "If that hurts you, I guess I'm sorry."

The girl in the nightgown started saying things. Quietly at first and then louder. Professor Serlin listened to her voice move up and down its registers. Whenever she got emotional she'd talk like she was in a goddamn opera — her voice was all over the place. Maybe he would stand and applaud once she was finished. It was perfectly dark out, but his eyes were adjusting to it. The street looked deep and slightly shiny, blood from a smooth cut. Maybe the moon was out; he couldn't see it from the window. The girl in the nightgown grabbed his arm and started to shake him, pulling on it then pushing it. No, it was too cloudy for the moon to be out. There must have been a little light coming from somewhere else.

Either way, he was beginning to see clearly again.

The girl had stopped shaking him but was still saying things until Professor Serlin shut the window. It closed with a quick shriek, metal against metal. He faced the girl in the nightgown and put his hands in his pockets.

"You can leave now or leave in the morning — it's up to you." He gave her options; she was a woman and she had the freedom to choose.

She hit him. Then she hit him again. He didn't take his hands out of his pockets. After a while, she stopped hitting and looked around the room. She went over to the night stand and pushed the lamp onto the floor so that it broke. Professor Serlin watched as she pushed the other lamp over and it didn't break. He watched while she sat on the bed crying, out of breath, as she tried to put her pants on. He was watching her now; he was interested. She hunched up her blouse, but had to start over because some of the buttons were in the wrong button holes. Then she was yelling and throwing clothes into a duffle bag, shoving them down. She wasn't being careful about it.

When the girl in the blouse got to the door, Professor Serlin said, "Bye."

The girl in the blouse didn't even say bye back.

For the runners-up to the short fiction contest, turn to pages 4, 5 & 6 of The Queen's Journal Reader

Grok:
A Science Opinion

A Natural Selection?

Many conventional and powerful medicines are derived from natural sources: aspirin from willow bark, morphine from poppies and digitalis, a cardiac stimulant, from the foxglove, pictured here.

BY ANGELA JAMES

INITIATIVE AND INDEPENDENCE are generally considered attractive and enviable personality traits. In an era where people have immersed themselves in self-help books and do-it-yourself kits, it is little wonder that herbal medicine has become so widespread. With the growing availability of these substances, people are attempting to prevent and treat illnesses with compounds made from all-natural ingredients.

These natural substances are lauded as being superior to their pharmaceutical counterparts since they are not chemically synthesized and are reputed to produce fewer side effects. However, the success of this phenomenon seems to be rooted in deliberate manipulations of the public through plays on common misconceptions.

The first misconception is that natural is synonymous with good. The idea that nature is benevolent is deeply rooted in public consciousness. However, "mother" nature produces a variety of substances that are lethal to various organisms, including humans. Belladonna is one such plant. Its actions are potentially lethal if taken in large doses since they block muscarinic acetylcholine receptors, which are responsible for the modulating many physiological processes. Nonetheless, belladonna has been included in several herbal formulations. The Cornell University Webpage of Poisonous Plants outlines several plants that can be dangerous to humans. Again, some of these plants are found in small doses in various herbal remedies. This information underscores the importance of carefully researching all medications, regardless of whether they are natural or synthetic.

People need to remember that these various herbs have evolved with specific adaptations that made them more likely to survive and reproduce. Their potential benefits to humans are not the driving forces behind the evolution of their specific features. The chemical substances in natural sources can be dangerous and caution needs to be exercised when selecting appropriate medications of either type.

The substances in natural sources can be dangerous and caution needs to be exercised when selecting medications.

The corollary to the first misconception is that chemically synthesized compounds are inherently dangerous. The effectiveness of each herb, however, is rooted in the presence of specific active ingredients. Whether a monoamine oxidase inhibitor is synthesized in a lab or found naturally in St. John's Wort does not alter the fact that the same active ingredient brings about the specific antidepressant effects. Since the active ingredients determine the overall effectiveness of the remedies, pharmaceutical drugs actually have an advantage since the dose of active ingredients is clearly labelled.

When purchasing herbal remedies, however, quantities of active ingredients are not clearly labelled, making the selection process difficult. Often people rely on the advice of others to determine which formulation of ginseng is "better."

Pharmaceutical drugs, often possessing key active ingredients discovered from natural sources, are carefully regulated to ensure public safety. Each drug is carefully researched before being released to the clinical trials stage. Once in this stage, well-designed studies are carried out to determine the actual effectiveness of the drug and the range of associated side effects. The presence of these carefully regulated investigations is much more reassuring than the testimonial type of "evidence" offered by many herbal advertisers. As well, sources are readily available that offer information on approved uses of these drugs, potential risks and specific warnings (such as take with food, or avoid alcohol while taking this medication). The information seems to be much more consistent and more easy to obtain for pharmaceutical drugs than for herbal remedies.

Herbal medication, for the most part, does not contain many controls. The wide range of natural substances available have been suggested to ameliorate every condition from fatigue and depression to impotence and baldness. The lack of adequate controls on the what advertising claims can be made makes the potentially safe and effective herbs difficult to differentiate from the other substances available.

Though I believe that many herbs contain ingredients that can provide effective medications, more controls and better research is clearly needed. The potential benefits and risks of these substances need to be regarded with the same caution as any other chemical. Perhaps future investigations will lead to the use of herbal medications in association with traditional medicine. The current state of herbal medicine in this continent, however, does not merit the replacement of conventional treatments.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Cosmic explosion 'caught on tape'

Last Saturday night, an orbiting sensor platform detected a spike in radiation from deep space and promptly alerted its ground computer in Maryland. The computer sent out a signal directing an observatory in New Mexico to open the huge doors of its dome and focus on that area of the sky. When astronomers reviewed the film from that night's activities, they knew what they had found: another gamma-ray burst from the universe's furthest reaches. They occur almost every day, only this time the researchers had caught one in the act.

Gamma-ray bursts from space have been reported since the late sixties when the US placed the first orbiting gamma-ray detectors to check that a nuclear testing ban was being upheld. In all those years, however, only the afterglow of a gamma-ray burst had ever been observed. No one had ever caught a gamma-ray burst at its brightest point, or observed the visible part of a burst, until now.

Despite their frequency, gamma-ray bursts continue to be mysterious objects to astronomers: no one is yet sure what causes them. It is known that the explosions take place at the outer part of the observable universe, billions of light-years away, and that they are very powerful. This most recent burst was estimated to have the power of 10 million billion suns, although like most of the bursts, it only lasted a few moments. Theories for the origin of the bursts range from a collision between super-dense neutron stars to a more fanciful explanation advanced by the National Enquirer: intergalactic civilizations blowing each other up.

Vot dreams may come

After having fallen out of favour with scientists in the sixties, the dream theories of Sigmund Freud are making a comeback.

Freud considered dreaming to be the continuation of thought processes into the unconscious state. His theory was thought refuted when it was shown that the period of sleep — REM sleep — associated with dreaming was controlled by an area of the brain that didn't have anything to do with higher brain functions. This week, however, a British neurologist said that there is no association between REM sleep and dreaming.

His claim is based on a study of 26 patients who had lesions in the part of the brain that controls REM sleep. While none of them was capable of REM sleep, all but one retained the ability to dream.

Kingston's One and Only
Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday
nights - open MIC
with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

Write for features

All it takes is an idea

Call Sean at The Journal, 533-2800

OR

e-mail at 6sms3@qlink.queensu.ca

Camera Kingston
foto source™

• One hour photo •
Video • Passports

ASK ABOUT YOUR CLUB CK SAVINGS CARD!

2nd Set*
PRINTS
FREE

35mm or APS film at time of development. See store for details.

114 Princess St.
(near Wellington)
549-3747
650 Bath Rd. at Gardiners Rd.
384-3747

SPORTS & FITNESS

PANTHERS BURNING FUEL
After petulantly holding out for five months and demanding a trade from the Vancouver Canucks, Pavel Bure has settled in quite nicely in sunny south Florida. Bure, who was traded to the Panthers last week in a multiple player exchange, scored twice in his first game, a Florida win against the New York Islanders. He followed that with a goal against the New York Rangers in another Panther win. The scoring rampage continued following the all-star break when the "Russian Rocket" scored a hat trick, which accounted for all of the Florida goals, in a tie with the Philadelphia Flyers. Pavel's had six goals in three games, which makes Panther General Manager Bryan Murray look very astute.

WANTED: ONE OPPONENT
With a one punch knock-out of the "White Buffalo" Francois Botha, Mike Tyson has once again proven himself to be a fearsome fighter. Unfortunately it seems that it will be quite a while before he proves what he can do against a legitimate opponent. It looks like his April 24 bout will be against weak jawed German Axel Schultz or washed up Canadian Donovan "Razor" Ruddock. With the lack of interest in the Botha fight, it is unlikely that even a sharper Tyson could draw a big crowd against the dull "Razor".

RAPTOR FANS STAMPEDE
Despite their best efforts to perform a kind gesture for basketball fans, the Toronto Raptors plans went haywire Tuesday night. As part of an ongoing promotion, the upper level seats to the exhibition game versus the Boston Celtics were given away free. Once the gates opened, however, thousands of fans tumbled in, resulting in broken turnstiles, windows and fan injuries. Several had to be taken for medical treatment and mothers were seen crying with their children. The injured fans didn't miss much, since the Raptors played dismally in a 106-88 loss.

CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY
• IOC President Juan Samaranch would commit hara-kiri with the $15,000 samurai sword he received as a bribe.
• The Ottawa Senators would name Ron Tugnutt the starter, and end the two goalie system.
• The Toronto Raptors would go back to the drawing board to find ways of regaining the fans.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Personal statistics are often the sole measure of an athlete's performance, but the weekend actions of the Queen's Journal Athlete of the Week go far beyond his final stats. For point guard Mike Gleeson and the Queen's basketball team, the only statistic that mattered was 2-0, their record for the weekend, which consisted of wins over the York Yeomen and national power Laurentian Voyageurs.

Against York it wasn't the 10 points that Gleeson scored that were significant, it was his total game and his timing. The fourth year life-science student was able to help hold York's all-conference point-guard Dean Labaney to only eight points, while not committing a turnover himself. "Glees" also hit a wild, leaning three-pointer with the shot clock winding down late in the fourth quarter, which sealed the Gaels fourth win of the season.

Gleeson followed his miraculous shot with the Queen's first eight points against Laurentian, the division leaders. Despite not scoring later in the game, Gleeson's steady influence was obvious in helping guide the team to an impressive victory. While it was the first victory for Gleeson over these Voyageurs, they have come close in the past.

Mike Gleeson

"We felt loose and confident because we had nothing to lose, we had beaten York and weren't worried about the Laurentian stigma," said Gleeson, a Campbellville native.

"[Making the playoffs] makes practice a lot easier. There is something that we are working for, it is a lot more fun."

— Mike Gleeson

Gleeson is an excellent leader who has started every year since arriving at Queen's, but this year has seen him increase his scoring potential.

"If you don't guard him, he will shoot the ball. He has the green light to shoot whenever he is open," said Head Coach Scott Meeson. "It certainly gives us a lot of octane in our attack when he gets going."

The two wins did more than excite the fans at Bartlett Gym: it also gave the Gaels five on the season and started a run for the playoffs.

"[The wins] means keeping the season alive, which is obviously huge. There were a lot of upsets this weekend and it will be a race for the playoffs," said Gleeson, who graduated from St. Michael's School in Toronto.

Coach Meeson expects to see even more from his point guard as the playoff run continues.

"He's been our most consistent performer all year and he still has more to show," said Meeson. "He works his butt off all the time and it will definitely pay off."

For Gleeson and his fellow seniors, this season is a stark contrast to the struggles of their first few years. With a realistic shot at the playoffs for the first time in their career, things are a little more exciting for the squad.

"It makes practice a lot easier. There is something that we are working for, it is a lot more fun," explained Gleeson. "And besides, coach is in a better mood."

Bowling in Miami

The Sunshine State gets Super Bowl Fever

By NEATE SAGER

Last year at this time a would-be Amazing Kreskin, the considerable point spread favouring the defending champion Green Bay Packers be damned, prophesied that the Denver Broncos would break their string of Super Bowl futility. After defeating Tidelton, USA 31-24, and threatening the self-styled "Dirty Birds," undefeated season this year, the Broncos have returned to the big game and are prohibitive favourites to duplicate their championship in Super Bowl XXXIII Sunday in Miami.

The challenger, the nouveau riche Atlanta Falcons, are in terra incognita. Former Denver coach Dan Reeves has instilled the self-styled "Dirty Birds," long part of the NFL's Third World, with the trappings of championship teams: a reliable ball-control offence built around battering-ram tailback Jamal Anderson, and a staunch defense. Atlanta shines in two telling statistical categories, boasting a league-best time-of-possession average and an impressive turnover ratio. It goes without saying that come Sunday, the Falcons' blueprint in all likelihood will be to control the clock by mixing short passes from wily veteran pivot Chris Chandler with Anderson's punishing running to keep the potent Denver offence on the sidelines.

However, Denver's defence, which ceded a miserly 28 rushing yards in two postseason contests, should win the battle of the line of scrimmage, while Denver cornerbacks Ray Crockett and Darrien Gordon should be able to contain the Atlanta receiving tandem of Terance Mathis and Tony Martin.

Meanwhile, on the other side of the ball, the Falcons will focus on stifling Bronco tailback Terrell (2K) Davis, who is fast staking his claim as a peerless big-game runner. The task will prove too daunting, as Denver's astute, agile offensive line will cancel out the Falcons' strong run defence. Denver's running game will help its aerial attack: the game very could turn on a long pass from quarterback-saint John Elway to one of his capable receivers, Ed McCaffrey, Shannon Sharpe, and Rod Smith. The stewardship of Elway, playing his likely final game, and of sideline general Mike Shanahan, will steel Denver against whatever defensive tactics the Falcons attempt.

What should unfold on Sunday is a fierce, intense, physical contest; the more aggressive team will carry the day, Denver, since the beginning of the playoffs, has shown itself to be helibent on repeating as champions, which it will accomplish, though not without considerable resistance from Atlanta.

Broncos 27, Falcons 17

By ADAM KAMINSKY

That's right, it is Super Bowl time and yet another numb brained, over-hyped writer is jumping on the bandwagon of the en vogue underdog — this time it is the Atlanta Falcons.

With the AFC's Denver Broncos holding bragging rights over the Super Bowl and listed as the favourite for the big game, the NFC must answer the call, and they will.

With the facts about each team easily accessible, it is most important to outline why the "Dirty Birds" will win.

The first reason is their superior defensive secondary. With excellent cover corner Ray Buchanan supported by a dynamic safety duo of Eugene Robinson and William White, the Falcons front seven on the defence can concentrate on closing the cut back angles and shutting down Terrell Davis.

A second advantage held by the Falcons is the all important "wild card" player. In the case of Atlanta, it is Tim Dwight who is at the disposal of coach Dan Reeves. Dwight is able to run back punts and kicks and come in as a third down receiver or quarterback. It can be expected that at least one big play will come from him.

It is sad to say, but the final advantage held by the Falcons is at the quarterback position. The Broncos have been winning despite the great John Elway, not because of him. Chris Chandler has proven himself to be a capable quarterback and he doesn't make bad decisions.

It is these three factors that will allow the upstart Falcons to stay in the game and win by a Morten Anderson field goal.

Falcons 27, Broncos 24

ON DECK

FRIDAY

Basketball vs. Ryerson

@Bartlett Gym

Women 6 p.m.

Men 8 p.m.

Women's Hockey

vs. Laurier

7:30 p.m.

Jock Hartly Arena

SATURDAY

Women's Hockey

vs. Laurier

1:30 p.m.

Jock Hartly Arena

Women's Volleyball

vs. Lakehead

2:00 p.m.

Bartlett Gym

Man's Volleyball

vs. Laurentian

6:00 p.m.

Bartlett Gym

SUNDAY

Women's Volleyball

vs. Lakehead

12:00 p.m.

Bartlett Gym

Man's Volleyball

vs. Laurentian

2:00 p.m.

Bartlett Gym

sports experts

Congratulations Dave Gilbert, Arts '02, you lead the pool for the 2nd week in a row. Gilbert picked the following team: Paul Kariya, Jatromir Jagr, Peter Forsberg, Larry Murphy, Niklas Lidstrom, Dominik Hasek, and Paul Laus. No surprise that Gilbert is running the show; Kariya, Jagr, and Lidstrom are tops in scoring, Murphy and Lidstrom lead the defencemen, Hasek leads the goal-tenders by a wide margin, and Laus is a close second among goons. Any errors (spelling or otherwise) should be brought to the attention of frd@quikink.com.

Total	Name	Faculty/Year	289
289	K. Prochazka	Arts/01	289
289	Jeff Fairbairn	Sci/99	289
289	Shawn Smith	Sci/02	289
289	Rick Karpus	Law	289
288	Dr. R. Holden	Faculty	288
288	Kate Kearney	Arts/02	288
288	Chris Badali	Arts/02	288
288	J. Pushcar	CommEd/99	288
287	Mike Keast	Sci/98	287
286	Eugene Lei	Comm/01	286
286	D. Mossington	Arts/02	286
286	Graeme Martin	Arts/01	286
286	Neil Acharya	Arts/01	286
285	Matt McGlow	Sci/01	285
285	Derek Jackson	Sci/01	285
285	Gail Bouchette	Sci/01	285
285	Laura Stewart	Sci/02	285
285	Jon Grossman	Arts/01	285
285	Jason Townsend	Arts/01	285
284	Will Lee	Sci/01	284
283	K. Meyer	CommEd/99	283
283	Karen Kelly	Grad	283
283	J. Whittington	Arts/00	283
282	R. Mackenzie	Arts/01	282
282	Peter Graham	Comm/00	282
281	Eric Trought	Sci/00	281
281	Lawrence Lau	Sci/01	281
281	James Leonard	Arts/02	281
281	Bob Ewart	Staff	281
280	L. MacHardy	Sci/00	280
280	D. Broomfield	Sci/98	280
280	Dan Iwachiv	Comm/01	280
279	Jen Lillie	PHE/01	279
279	Nel Finney	Arts/00	279
278	Mark Rogers	Sci/01	278
278	Vivek Mehra	Staff	278
278	Harold Yentema	Staff	278
277	Andrew Bocking	Sci/00	277
277	Scott White	Sci/00	277
276	Gabe Taylor	Sci/00	276
276	M. Thompson	Arts/00	276
276	L. Richardson	PHE	276
275	Rod Kyd	PHE/01	275
275	A. Firmani	Sci/00	275
274	C. Guest	Arts/01	274
274	Wesley Hung	Staff	274
273	A. D'Alessandro	Staff	273
273	Garry O'Neill	Staff	273
273	G. Thomson	Grad	273
273	John Ford	Sci/00	273
272	B. Grosvenor	PHE/99	272
272	Jesse Shantz	Arts/00	272
271	Julie Cair	Arts/97	271
271	Ila Dalcor	Staff	271
270	Nick Sinclair	Arts/99	270
270	Wade Williams	Law	270
269	Jon Powell	Arts/01	269
269	Blake Shaffer	Arts/00	269
269	Stefan Murray	Arts/00	269
268	Franklin Say	Comm/01	268
268	Steve Ganepy	Arts/99	268
267	George Pfaff	Sci/99	267
267	Steve Chong	M.Sc.	267
266	J. Feneman	Arts/00	266
266	Mark Crawford	Law	266
266	Denris Davidson	Staff	266
266	Carolyn Russell	M.Sc.	266
265	L. Hashim	Arts/00	265
264	Mike Rossler	Sci/01	264
264	Jackie Penford	Arts/99	264
264	L. Mossington	Arts/99	264
263	Karen Beatie	Arts/00	263
262	Kirsten Graham	Arts/99	262
262	Eric Tremblay	Staff	262
262	Tavi McLashlin	PHE/00	262
261	Julie Lorenzin	Nurs/01	261
258	Kevin Brown	Grad	258
257	Ted Wright	Grad	257
256	Jesse Cullen	Arts/99	256
254	N. Cheeseman	Arts/99	254
254	Aaron Chan	Law	254
254	Perry Lao	Arts/99	254
253	Gallego Bae	Arts/99	253
252	Maria Gully	Arts/00	252
252	Brian Luke	Arts/99	252
249	Hartley Lefton	Arts/01	249
249	L. Hse	Comm/01	249
247	Chris Elvidge	Grad	247
247	Cynthia Fekken	Faculty	247
245	M. Belzner	CommEd/99	245
242	Doug Giernia	Arts/00	242
241	Dan Gratto	Staff	241
240	Jay Bondar	Med	240
238	D. Kwong	Sci/01	238
237	Kaston Leung	Sci/01	237
231	Nathan Sager	Arts/00	231
231	Brad Greatrix	Arts/00	231
227	Margot Leney	PHE/02	227
215	Shawn Desbois	Sci/00	215

A night at the dome

Syracuse loses, but shows the way

AFTER A FLURRY of failed three point attempts and a futile scramble for rebounds, the Syracuse Orangemen were defeated by the St. John's Red Storm on Wednesday night, sending 20,182 orange clad fans home disappointed. What makes this game significant is that both St. John's and Syracuse share something in common with Queen's: they are universities, and the players on the floor are students. It is at that point that the similarities end.

While the action on the hardwood between players in their ten years or barely beyond was frenetic, the intensity in the stands matched it shout for shout.

From the alumni in their old letter sweaters to the student section which never sat down, this was not about a basketball game, it was an event.

It is important at this juncture to address all of the cynics, who can already be heard mulling complaints.

There is no doubt that most of these ball players could not get into Queen's. Many of them will not graduate, and if they do, some will do so with a degree in basketweaving or telephone reception. The reason that these players have traveled from across the United States to school in upstate New York is not for the scenery or the great journalism school, but for the basketball program. When these players dream they do not dream of an MBA, they dream of the NBA and this is the best way to get there. In addition, there may very well be players on that floor who get paid to go to these institutions of higher learning (although by no means can that be proven in this article).

But the point is not the talent on the floor or the theory of the exploitation of the student athlete (which by the way, doesn't really hold water), it is that many of the people in the Carrier Dome stands could get into Queen's. If they were here many would do exceptionally well. This is despite the fact that 15 times a year they are willing to wear an orange wig, an orange sweat shirt, orange pants and paint their faces and scream like lunatics. These well educated, intelligent individuals take time from their studies and attend an event. Most couldn't name you the starting five of the home team, but they're having a good time.

All of this prefaces the actual point, which is really a question; "Why doesn't this happen here?" The first response that can be heard from the cheap seats is that this sort of thing does happen at Queen's, "have you never been to Kill McGill?" asks the distant voice. WOW! One day a year this university gets riled up and goes to enjoy an event. This one shot deal is not something to be proud of, granted it is better than some schools in Canada could muster. A second and equally likely answer is that the quality of play is superior in the United States. This is a given, but not a particularly good excuse. The level of CIAU basketball is much higher than many would think. While the alley-oop jam is not a frequent occurrence, the intense and creative basketball can easily entertain even the casual fan. That said, there will be athleticism that is beyond what most people will have seen in person and it is difficult to get much closer to the action than you can at Canadian universities.

This is not a call for 20,000 people, this is a call for a crowd of people that will come out and support the teams that could use a few pot banging, face painting... type fans.

The final response, which is the most common and frustrating of all, is that the culture in the US is completely different from that of the Canucks up here. This point, like the previous two, has merit, but is a bit presumptuous. While the schools south of the 49th parallel have arenas that are larger than most professional stadiums in Canada, the gyms and field houses up north are set up for a more intimate gathering.

That is where the differences in sporting culture should end. While the number of people to reach capacity are different between the two countries, a full house is still attainable in both nations. US schools prove this night in and night out and some Canadian universities do the same. Ask any varsity basketball player where the toughest place to play on the road is and to a player they will name the same two schools; Laurentian and Bishop's.

These two schools are much smaller than Queen's, but every home game is a festival. Teams are forced to huddle in the key, pots and pans are standard equipment and face paint is more prevalent than at WWF RAW. Is it any wonder that Bishop's is the defending CIAU champion and Laurentian almost never loses when they play at home?

Players love to play where the people care, and sadly enough the fan participation is slowly dwindling at this fine institution. There was time that people used to come out and celebrate Queen's pride, and then go out and tie a few on for a good time, but that seems to have passed.

Sure there are things to do on a Friday or Saturday night here in busling K-town, but what is wrong with starting them off with a few drinks and a couple of ball games. This is not a call for 20,000 people, this is a call for a crowd of people that will come out and support the teams that could use a few pot banging, face painting, obscenity yelling (don't blame me if you get thrown out) type fans.

This is not the first time that there has been a call for more fan support, but consider what everyone is missing. Think about all those times that you see Duke and their venerable home court, Cameron Indoor Stadium, and wish that you were at a school where basketball drew out that kind of emotion. Something similar could happen, it is just a matter of a few fans leading the charge.

As those final futile three point attempts were being thrown up by the struggling Orangemen, a large number of the student body held their breath, and then let out a collective sigh of disappointment when it all failed. Even in defeat they showed how things should be.

If you don't believe it, drive down Interstate-81 and find out for yourself.

Adam Kaminsky will be at the huge Queen's basketball games on Friday, will you?

Intramural corner

QUEEN'S INTRAMURAL WINTER TOURNAMENT DATES AND DEADLINES

Tournament	Type	Date	Entry Deadline
Badminton	WIC/BEWS	Mar. 6	February 15
Bowling	BEWIC	Mar. 6	February 15
Skate, Jog/ Swim Athlons	WIC	Mar 8-21	March 1
Volleyball(Open)	WIC/BEWS	Mar. 13	March 1
3 on 3 b-ball	WIC/BEWS	Mar. 20	March 1
Wallyball	BEWIC	Mar. 20	March 1
Volleyball	BEWIC	Mar. 27	March 15
Broomball	WIC/BEWS	March	February 8

Queen's Intramural applications for the 1999-2000 season are now available. Look for more details in upcoming editions of the Journal or at the Phys-Ed Centre. For more information on tournaments or job opportunities please contact the Intramural office in room 201A at the Phys-Ed Centre of call 533-6000 ext. 75036.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

In the still of the Night

Night Noises keeps audience enchanted

Warming Sensation: Actors powerful performances enchant audience.

PLAY REVIEW
By ANDY POOLE

The dozen or so people who braved the stormy January weather last Wednesday to catch the preview of Night Noises at the Baby Grand theatre were simultaneously warmed and chilled by Theatre Kingston's latest offering.

Director Craig Walker's effective use of lighting and blocking transformed the stage seamlessly from a doctor's examining room to a lecture theatre to a dining room, all while the cast carries on the play.

In spite of this, he allows them to remain under the care of Mlle. Doudet, resulting in tragedy. Euringer has obviously researched this story extensively and includes actual transcripts of Marsden's lectures, court records of the case against Doudet, and personal letters in the script.

Director Craig Walker's effective use of lighting and blocking transformed the stage seamlessly from a doctor's examining room to a lecture theatre to a dining room, all while the cast carries on the play.

Craig Walker's effective use of lighting and blocking transformed the stage in the tiny Baby Grand seamlessly.

Walker has also assembled and impressive cast. Matthew Gibson delivers a riveting performance as Marsden. His depth and insight in his portrayal of a sympathetic father and physician keeps you spellbound through the entire performance Charles Hayter and Elisabeth Sorensen who play James and Fanny Rashdall, the brother and sister of Marsden's late wife, are also both quite excellent. In particular, it's Fanny who makes the rest of the cast squirm by asking the tough questions about the welfare of the children. Jane McGaughy who plays Mary Swinson, Marsden's second wife, gives a very convincing performance of a young Victorian-era woman dealing with (or not dealing with) the controversy she becomes embroiled in. Gloria DiFolco, as Celestine Doudet, is completely convincing as a chilling governess. Night Noises runs from Jan. 28 to Feb. 14, Wednesday to Saturday nights and is only $8 for students.

Chilling Sensation: Victorian era neuroses disturb audiences.

PHOTO BY LIUAN KIM

If you want to see a world premier of an excellent play, wonderfully performed, I recommend this one highly.

Adding it up

Melons and boxes meld

PHOTO BY ALEXANDROV

ART REVIEW

By DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

The Queen's community is fortunate to have the Union Gallery. Not only do young artists get exposure for their work, but the student body also gets to see the developing talent of many of the school's artists.

The Queen's community is presented with another such opportunity with the Union Gallery's presentation of eight melons and four boxes. This show presents recent works by fourth-year Fine Arts students Rebecca Bayer, Ashleigh Grenawalt, Grace Lee and Silvia Schinke.

The works shown are extremely varied in form and content, running the gamut from Schinke and Lee's abstract portraits and still-life character studies to the unconventional, literally in-your-face works by Bayer and Grenawalt.

Schinke's two works "Hung Figure" and "Untitled," both oil on masonite, are interesting because of the contrast in feel and emotion presented. They maintain a stark contrast between a sense of openness and broken repression, seen through the brooding sensuality in the lines and curvature of the featureless person in "Hung Figure" and the dark figure in "Untitled." The depth of this obscure person seems to waver as she breaks her moody, striped barrier.

Lee's character studies, drawn in acrylic paint and charcoal, present what her artist's statement proclaims as an "uncluttered, unguarded, unmasked and unpretentious portrayal of women during intimate moments of solitude, contemplating something far off in the void, enjoying a hidden joke or talking on a phone."

The four pictures depict a singular quality of intimacy where the women are alone, in their own worlds, if only for the briefest of moments. Grenawalt says in her artist's statement that her steel and cement sculptures work to present "the human condition as it pertains to the relationship between the organic human body and the fabricated environment of buildings."

Indeed, this can be seen in the opposite sides of the two sculptures and how they seem to duel with each other. One side shows the contrived human world of tangled sharp edges, chains, and screws and wire mesh while the other side portrays the naturalistic side of smooth flowing metal folds, concrete tendrils and oversized crystalline hedges.

The most unconventional of the four artists is Bayer. Her three-dimensional works, titled planar pieces 1, 2, and 3, are constructed from an assortment of materials such as foam, felt, wire mesh, floss and PVC. These pieces provide a tangible take on a kind of falling over, free-verse poetry of personal realization through art. Bayer's statement gives evidence of this with her flow diagram/equation that proposes that the anticipation of the known (variable A) leads to the realization of the moment of the unknown (variable B) that eventually produces a cathartic outcome (variable C).

She goes further to explain the differing relationships between the three variables, suggesting that true understanding is something totally different for each person. The works presented in the show are varied and unique, and are worth noting not only for the ingenuity in execution but also for the imagination and scope of ability. But don't take my word for it — find out for yourself.

Eight melons and four boxes runs from January 26 to February 16. The opening reception will be this Saturday from 6-8 p.m. For more information, Jocelyn Purdie, the managing director, can be contacted at 533-6000, ext 75384.

Wide Screen

New venue, new films

PHOTO BY CINI ACHARY

THEATRE PREVIEW

By ROBERT MCGILL

Movie lovers mourning the loss of the Princess Court cinema may have a cause to celebrate the recent opening of The Screening Room.

The Screening Room is a one-screen, 104-seat theatre on Princess street north of Wellington. Its previous incarnation was SuperFlicks, which showed second-run movies.

Now, owner Dan Wannemacher is looking to meet the demand for independent and foreign-language films that Kingston's commercial theatres often pass up.

Wannemacher says that SuperFlicks "never did find its niche." Many nights, Wannemacher was the only person on staff. Despite the resulting low overhead, SuperFlicks was a continual money-loser.

"People liked us for two reasons," says Wannemacher with a wry smile. "One, they liked the coziness, and two, they liked us because it wasn't crowded." Even the name was a problem. "Some people thought we were a video store, and some thought we were a porno place," he says.

Now, he claims, "It's a different crowd altogether. I think they appreciated that someone went out and got some movies that they wanted to see." In fact, Wannemacher says that it occurred to him to change his theatre's format only after repeated requests from patrons for movies that the Princess Court would normally show.

The Screening Room opened January 8 with The Red Violin, and Wannemacher says the resulting response to the new format has rejuvenated his business. The theatre has also brought in Elizabeth and The Governess, and it will start into its fourth week of screening Life is Beautiful today. The acclaimed and controversial Italian picture has sold out twice, something that films seldom did at SuperFlicks.

In the next month Wannemacher plans to bring to Kingston films like Happiness, Don McKellar's Gemini-nominated Last Night and Velvet Goldmine, starring Ewan McGregor.

"Princess Court's been closed for a few months, and there have been some big movies since then that haven't come to Kingston, so I'm going to try to catch up with those first and then bring in new movies," says Wannemacher.

Meanwhile, The Screening Room will also mix in second-run commercial films with discounted ticket prices.

Wannemacher describes the cinema business as a precarious one that can succeed or fail based on one's ability to intuit what the tastes of an audience will be. At the same time, he admits to being a newcomer to independent film, and he is relying on word of mouth when making decisions as to what films to bring to Kingston. He suggests that people with requests mention them to him at The Screening Room.

"Some people thought we were a video store, and some thought we were a porno place."

— Dan Wannemacher

Wannemacher admits that his theatre is disadvantaged by its small screen. It also lacks a storefront and is easy to miss when walking down Princess. However, he hopes the theatre's intimacy, nearby parking and new, more comfortable seats will make it stand out. "Kingston is way behind in terms of seats," he says.

The Screening Room will be competing against the established Catarqui and Capitol cinemas, and Wannemacher notes that both have been playing movies such as Waking Ned Devine and A Simple Plan which would typically be destined for art houses like the Princess Court. The popularity of these other theatres also means that they get first crack at movies like Shakespeare in Love, which is currently playing at the Capitol. "I will still bring it in here, but by the time I get it, it will be 'worn,'" says Wannemacher.

Wannemacher frankly admits that his business differs from the Princess Court in that it is a private, "for profit" venture, and he also observes that he "wouldn't be doing this if the Princess Court were still open." However, he sees The Screening Room as filling a need, and he believes that his theatre has finally found its niche. "We won't ever switch back," Wannemacher claims. "We're here to stay."

Rotate this!

Travel Agent Terminal 103 Independent

By MIKE BURGESS

Attention all music fans, Travel Agent has expanded its services — now you can take a trip with them from the comfort of your own home.

Terminal 103, the band's debut CD, is a collection of seven quality tracks which captures the energy and feeling of the live performances that have made Travel Agent one of Kingston's most popular acts.

Think of Terminal 103 as a vacation with the band's 10 members as your travel guides. They chart the destinations and make all the arrangements; all you do is relax and lend them your full attention.

Upon the first listen, it is evident you are in the company of experienced travelers who have honed an interesting itinerary. On almost every track, Travel Agent demonstrates a different aspect of their music, and they combine their many instruments without ever drowning each other out. Make no mistake either, this is not a shotgun, seven cities in seven days, tour — Travel Agent takes its time to fully explore each song.

Upon departure, the first stop is "Passin' By," a soulful track featuring strong vocals by Brendan Wypich and equally powerful performances by the band's brass section. Next is "North," which, along with "Getaway," provide the two instrumental jams on the CD.

These tracks contain impressive solos by saxophonist Andrew Benton and trombonist Jonathan Dyck, guitarists Mike Budd and Ben Smith, and percussionists Brian Higgins and Neil DeGasperi. This improvisational quality helps recreate the feeling of the band's live act.

On "Getaway" Travel Agent also includes a "talking crowd" background effect which adds the atmosphere of a smoky bar. Among the other tracks are "Hover," a slow, jazzy tune, "BSG," which is funky and energetic, and "Chemical Smile," a mellow groove. The trip concludes with "Chicago's On Fire," which features another strong vocal performance by Wypich and lyrics that make you feel like you're coming home.

It is clear, after leaving Terminal 103, that the members of Travel Agent have invested a lot of time and care into creating a quality CD — one that displays considerable promise.

While their style of music is not for everyone, most music fans, even those unfamiliar with Travel Agent's sound, should find something to enjoy. So if you feel like you need to escape the mid-winter blues, or have no plans for reading week, I suggest giving Terminal 103 a spin — good trips don't usually come this cheap.

However, the brotherly duo of Chris (lead singer), and Rich (now lead guitarist) Robinson remains intact, and it seems that all the Georgia-based band has needed to put together their best work in years.

The album is all vintage Crowes at its best. Rich Robinson is awesome on lead guitar, his skillful slide and rhythm work will soon make you forget the name Mark Ford. Despite his deathly appearance, Robinson's vocals seem as strong and soulful as ever.

There isn't one weak link on By Your Side. Each song can easily stand on its own merit, and there's a nice unrepentive and flowing mix of genres, whether it be the soul of "Only A Fool," or the old fashion rock roots of "Go Faster." Other standouts include "Kickin' My Heart Around," "By Your Side," and "Then She Said My Name."

The Black Crowes days of larity of alternative, hip hop, and electronica.

The Crowes emerge unscathed, however, with that same powerful mix of soul, blues, and rock that made them to begin with, and they'll be damned if it'll break them today.

By Your Side represents the band's first release with Columbia, their new label, and their first work without the strong lead guitar of Mark Ford who left in 1998.

However, the brotherly duo of Chris (lead singer), and Rich (now lead guitarist) Robinson remains intact, and it seems that all the Georgia-based band has needed to put together their best work in years.

The album is all vintage Crowes at its best. Rich Robinson is awesome on lead guitar, his skillful slide and rhythm work will soon make you forget the name Mark Ford. Despite his deathly appearance, Robinson's vocals seem as strong and soulful as ever.

There isn't one weak link on By Your Side. Each song can easily stand on its own merit, and there's a nice unrepentive and flowing mix of genres, whether it be the soul of "Only A Fool," or the old fashion rock roots of "Go Faster." Other standouts include "Kickin' My Heart Around," "By Your Side," and "Then She Said My Name."

huge record sales, and sold out stadium concerts may be over, but that hasn't stopped them from putting out great music. Your Side is another great album from a great band.

Various Artists Chef-Aid: The South Park Album Sony Music Soundtrax

By KEN BUTLAND

Oh my goodness, this is a great album.

I don't care if you find Trey Parker and Matt Stone the laziest and most half-assed funny creator/writer/animators on television — Chef-Aid: The South Park Album has enough South Park inspired material on it to at least deserve a listen.

Pop, rock, and new-wave stars of days gone by like Elton John, Meatloaf, Ozzy Osbourne and Devo meet the hip-hop, rap, punk, alternative (the convenient record-store section

Speaking to the soul

Klezmer gets set to perform

Tuning Up: The Klezmer band prepares for appearance at Indigo.

BAND PROFILE

By HEATHER AGGUS

The Queen's Crescent Klezmer band is a new addition to the music department. Mike Anklewicz, a music major in his final year of study, began the project in order to have some fun playing Klezmer, a genre of music that Anklewicz says he has been listening to for most of his life.

Klezmer is traditional folk music of Eastern European Jews, and is based on their Yiddish culture and language. It has traditionally been played at weddings and other celebrations, and enjoyed quite a bit of popularity during the twenties and thirties. In the fifties and sixties, the music all but died out, partially as a result of the Holocaust. Lately however, it has been experiencing a revival, according to Anklewicz.

When questioned about the comeback potential of Klezmer, Anklewicz is not too optimistic. "It doesn't have as wide an appeal as swing," he said. But according to Anklewicz, this music is enjoying a large popularity in Europe and New York and other major urban centres.

The Queen's Crescent Klezmer Band consists of six music students; Phil Addis on bass guitar, Christian Franksy on piano, Matt Kryzanowski on trumpet, Caroline Matt on violin, Guy Thomas on drums and Anklewicz on saxophones and clarinet. Although most of the other musicians were unfamiliar with Klezmer, each has grown to really enjoy playing the music.

Klezmer has a distinctive sound, and I was instantly reminded of Fiddler on the Roof. This is an obvious comparison, as both are based on the culture of the same group of Jews.

The music is varied though, some songs are bouncy and upbeat, others slower and haunting — perhaps this is because of the people who originated the music. Anklewicz noted that the Jews are people who have historically suffered great hardship and oppression, which Klezmer reflects.

Although it is at times very joyful, it is written in a minor key which gives it its "bittersweet emotion" according to Anklewicz. He believes that Klezmer "speaks to the soul and speaks to the heart. That's why the music has survived."

The Queen's Crescent Klezmer Band will be playing at Indigo hooks on Princess Street tonight at 8 p.m.

Pop-e Up Video: Pope John Paul II, is about to star in a music video. Sony Classical and Vatican Radio announced plans this week for the video — it will be a spinoff of their joint release music CD entitled, "Abba Pater." It will be released in March.

Bitter Sweet Surrender: Lilith Fair is coming to an end. Sarah McLachlan will pull the plug after this summer's tour. It grossed $34.4 million in 1998. The tour was always viewed as a three year mission.

Titanic Performers: According to Entertainment Weekly, these are the top five performers of 1998: Leonardo DiCaprio, Tom Hanks/Steven Spielberg, Women of WB, Adam Sandler and Calista Flockhart.

Look Who's Talking: New movie releases for January 29:
1. Baby Geniuses
2. She's All That
3. Spanish Fly

Rotate this!

Continued from page 16

kind of alternative) strats of today like Puff Daddy, Mase, Rancid, Perry Farrell, Flea and a bunch of others.

Building on that whole Aerosmith/Run D.M.C. corporate combo trend, Ozzy performs with Old Dirty Bastard and Crystal Method, with Mase and Puff Daddy perform with System of a Down (the latter opened for Slayer on tour last year).

Elton John performs a weak ballad he wrote called "Wake Up Wendy." Master P falters on the shirty track "Kenny's Dead." But other than that, the offerings are solid and musically diverse.

Cartman's sing along with Wyclef's "Bubblegum" is neat. Chef's tracks are all sweet soul spoofs, including the single "Chocolate Salty Balls."

The two main highlights, hands down, are Devo's "Huboon Stomp" and Ween's groovy little number "The [Homo] Rainbow." Ween uses this great acoustic/electric wah-wah combo and their trademark even two-part harmony. As it is often with Ween, the lyrics are both twistedly saccharin and cryptic.

"Many colours in the homo rainbow/Don't be afraid to let your colours shine/So many colours in the homo rainbow/Show me yours I'm gonna show you mine/If you find your pot of gold/Everything is gonna work out fine/In the homo rainbow"

The album is basically a mish-mash of a ton of popular artists unified (in varying degrees) by their collective artistic salute to South Park. If nothing else, I recommend you buy it (or copy it) because you get 20 plus tracks and 30 plus artists on a single CD. And getting music in bulk is always satisfying.

Various Artists
Playing by Heart Soundtrack
Capitol Records

By Eli Schuster

When I first picked up this CD, the soundtrack for Playing by Heart, I had a funny feeling that I would probably never attempt to see the movie.

I've been suspicious of big cast, multi-subplot romantic comedies ever since I saw Neil Simon's late-1970s California Suite a few years ago. I don't know how Simon did it, but he managed to put Bill Cosby and Richard Pryor in a number of scenes together without generating any laughs.

"I'll put one of [the songs] on the next time I get dumped."

Playing by Heart features one of my all-time faves, Sean Connery, and I shudder to think of how his talents have been wasted.

I remain suspicious, yet I'm more likely to see Playing by Heart after listening to the soundtrack, which I'll describe as: "not bad".

The only song I recognized was Bran Van 3000's "Drinking in LA" (for the record, I don't quite understand the meaning behind this song; there are plenty of worse things to do with one's time than drink in LA — drinking in Hamilton comes to mind), but there are a few other good numbers on this CD as well.

John Barry's "Remembering Chet," and "End Game," and the Charlie Haden Quartet West's "Everything Happens to Me" are all cool, subdued piano jazz tunes which could easily fit into any Peanuts special (think: Charlie Brown walking home by himself feeling depressed). Maybe I'll put one of them on the next time I get dumped, or I don't know which way my life is going.

Unfortunately, I wasn't too impressed with any of the other selections. Fluke's "Dirty Little Mouth" is just a collection of synthesized drum beats, Moby's "Porcelain" is a slow and uninspiring attempt at a dance number (at least, I think that's what the Big M was going for), and "Tijuana Lady" by Gomez was just annoying after awhile. I'm not even going to mention the others.

What's my advice? I can't exactly recommend buying a new copy, but Playing by Heart might be something to look out for the next time you visit a used record shop.

THE SCENE

Appearing throughout the 1998-99 volume of The Journal, The Scene will highlight various facets of Entertainment culture and artistic endeavor not normally featured in the section.

Crass, Crude and Canadian

New animated series Kevin Spencer competes in style with South Park

SHOW PREVIEW/INTERVIEW

UNLIKE SOME characters down South, his life is no walk in the Park. Kevin Spencer is the star of Canada's new animated series, but unlike Kenny, he doesn't get to end it all during every episode.

Spencer is a teenage, mute character serving a 25 years-to-life prison sentence and is one screwed up kid. He's addicted to cigarettes and cough syrup and is the product of drunk degenerate parents. Needless to say, is it a wonder he's disturbed and violent? — Or that the show's predicted to be a hit?

A brainchild of Ottawa comic/writer/director/ animator Greg Lawrence, Kevin Spencer has already enjoyed selected notoriety among comedy fans. The show has aired on The Comedy Network's Canadian Comedy Shorts and as two minute vignettes on Saturday Night Live.

Now, Kevin Spencer has become a 13-episode half hour series that is the Canadian Comedy Network's first, original adult animated series.

It also seems appropriate that Greg Lawrence's company is named Ocnus Productions, after the condemned soul in Greek mythology who provided the levity of laughter for the other condemned souls of hell.

Kevin Spencer is billed by The Comedy Network, as "Canada's answer to South Park," and creator Lawrence also sees the similarity between the two animated series.

"The similarity is fine. I was expecting it. The lower-budget animation is similar, it's more adult oriented, it's darker and a kid is the main focus."

The show documents the life of the teen, as he discloses his childhood angst to the prison psychiatrist, Mr. Franklin, who basically serves as the yin to the screwed-up kid's yang. The other cool character of the show is Allan the Magic Goose who is Kevin's imaginary friend

Spencer for Hire: The Comedy Network is currently airing the Canadian series Kevin Spencer.

knows of, "I'm from Belleville, so I'm up to speed on the Kingston prison jokes."

So are regular average Canadians going to identify with Kevin Spencer?

"I hope not" Lawrence laughed. "Kevin's not a regular guy. But people will appreciate the dark humour. No other show is dealing with it. Sodom y jokes? We're the only ones."

—Greg Lawrence, creator of Kevin Spencer

While Kevin Spencer may not be for everyone, at least for students, watching the life of a teenaged, alcoholic sociopath may enable us to laugh at the craziness in our own lives, while laughing along with Kevin's.

Perverted or profound? If it's Canadian, probably a little of both.

Just starting on January 17, the episodes will continue to air Sunday nights at 10:30 p.m. Repeating the following Thursday at 11 p.m.

Sarah Crosbie thinks most men are better off in animated fashion.

and Franklin's antithesis.

Take Spencer, his slutty mother Anastasia, his in-and-out-of prison father Percy, Franklin and Allan the Magic Goose, set it all in a prison and voilà — Lawrence has created a series that just screams Canadian content.

"It wasn't set out to be identifiable Canadian," Lawrence admitted. "Canadians won't see it as Canadian as much as Americans will because we use the language and phrases everyday."

After Lawrence admitted that, as a comedian, he was "thrilled to stay in Canada," I questioned him as to why comedy was becoming part of the entertainment hub in our little city. "Comedy is more prominent in Canada now. People get a little bored spending nights out seeing bands. Comedy is less expensive, and a change."

"Club owners are becoming increasingly aware of Canadian talent. It will turn a profit at the door because Canadian comics are becoming known quickly — in part due to the exposure from The Comedy Network and CBC," Lawrence stated.

It's great that Canadian comics themselves are prospering, but what about an adult animated series? With competitors like The Simpsons, Bob and Margaret and Kevin Spencer's main competition, Trey Parker's and Matt Stone's vulgar hit comedy, South Park, will Kevin Spencer fly?

"So far we've had an excellent audience response. It will find its place in adult animation. It has a strong cult following now and will find its place in the landscape of TV," Lawrence said.

Students may find Kevin Spencer a welcome change to average American programming so many of us are use to — not to mention the fact that students and Kingstonsians may easily relate to the prison humour, which Lawrence admits he

THE SCREENING ROOM MOVIE THEATRE
120 PRINCESS ST.

7:05 P.M. LIFE IS BEAUTIFUL (pg)
9:35 P.M. LAST NIGHT (aa)
Starring Don McKellar
Sat. & Sun. Matinees
2 P.M. THE TRUMAN SHOW (pg)
4 P.M. LAST NIGHT (aa)

24 Hour Movie line-up 542-6080
www.moviekingston.com

DARBAR The finest Indian Cuisine in Kingston
Exotic Indian Cuisine

Daily Lunch Special $4.99
20% Discount for Students (on food items)

479 Princess St., Kingston, Ontario K7L 1C3
Tel.: (613) 548-7053 Fax: (613) 531-8869
Valid Sunday - Thursday only

THANK YOU!

...to the faculty, staff and students who made a charitable donation to Queen's in 1998.

The University benefits everyday from your dedication.

Your financial gift is a very important additional expression of support, and I am personally grateful to each of you for keeping Queen's high among your charitable priorities.

All the best in 1999,
Principal William C. Leggett

The Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL 11 P.M.

Two for One Lunches
Valid Monday - Friday, before 5pm
Expires Feb. 12

New Beer in Ontario

Colt 45 8% alc./vol.

- clear bottles
- 12 packs

NEW at The Beer Store

WARNING
CONSUME IN MODERATION. THIS BEER IS 8% ALC. VOL. WHICH IS NEARLY TWICE AS MUCH ALCOHOL AS REGULAR BEERS.

Teach English Overseas

ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses

- Intensive 34 hour courses (weekends)
- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
- Personal assistance given upon course completion
- Cost: $345 (includes computer, including materials)

Training Courses:
Jan. 26 - Feb. 7
May 8 - May 16
Saturdays and Sundays
Seminars and Seminars

For More Information Call Oxford Seminars:
(416) 544-9389 / 1-800-269-4719

air transat holidays

Florida February Sale BOOK NOW LIMITED TIME!

• ORLANDO • ST. PETE'S • FT. LAUDERDALE • FT. MYERS • SARASOTA • WEST PALM BEACH • JACKSONVILLE

DEPARTURES Feb 01 - Feb 08 RETURNS Feb 11 - Feb 20 from $199/$219 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Feb 09 - Feb 21 RETURNS Feb 24 - Feb 28 from $219/$239 Midweek Weekend	DEPARTURES Mar 01 - Mar 15 RETURNS Mar 08 - Mar 22 from $259/$299 Midweek Weekend
--	--	--

YOU GOTTA SKI US!!!!

Vacations starting from:
Quebec/Vermont/N.Y. 5 DAYS

- Stoneham PQ $199
- Mt. Ste. Anne PQ $209
- Tremblant PQ $199
- Eastern Townships PQ $319
- Lake Placid NY $145 CDN
- Stowe VT $339 CDN
- Vermont Ski Around $277 CDN
- Jay Peak VT $299 CDN
- Sugarbush VT $455 CDN
- Killington VT $389 CDN
- Smugglers Notch VT $478 CDN

ALL U.S. Destinations in GDNS B.C./Alberta - 7 nights with air

- Whistler/Blackcomb BC $855
- Big White BC $815
- Silverstar BC $779
- Panorama BC $729
- Canadian Rockies $625
- Banff/Lake Louise $715

Also check out for SUMMER CHILE $3,090 Seadooling $299 Rafting $145

CALL MARLIN TRAVEL: 549-4400

Will MP3 kill the video star?

Internet Audio files have potential to "burn" the music industry

BY STEFAN MURRAY

With the inception of the Information Superhighway in the 1990s, a general excitement ensued as the internet was hailed as the pinnacle of the free, uncorruptable exchange of information and ideas.

The Internet, more than print, telecommunication and satellite television, had the potential to transmit information at a staggering rate and immeasurable scope.

As the personal computer increasingly becomes synonymous with the school system, world of business and the family home, the scope of this resource continually grows.

Today, the superhighway is an invaluable commodity and in the past few years the traffic has become congested. The Internet has become a part of every marketable product and all forms of industry, including the music industry.

The major record labels are endlessly searching for new and broad venues to promote their talent. In the early eighties an artist was encouraged to produce videos for television consumption, killing the radio star.

In the late eighties, labels began to package music on compact disc, making both vinyl and cassettes obsolete. In the last few years, the major labels and even independents have been promoting their acts on extensive websites. They took advantage of a technology that would bring their artists to a larger audience and in the process, promote fans with up-to-minute updates on releases, tour dates and fan club info among other things.

As the technology advanced, some labels even posted samples of their artists' music on the Web as a teaser and incentive to buy the album.

They entered the era of the MP3 or MPEG, a compressed audio file which can be downloaded by anyone with a sound card, a little special software and Internet access.

The process is simple, (the needed software can be found, oddly enough, on the Web,) and the potential benefit for the artist is tremendous.

In an interview with The Journal Mike McCarty, president of EMI Publishing Canada, the availability of music over the internet "could be the biggest boon in music history."

The perception of the Internet as a bastion for the "free" exchange of information has encouraged the creation of extensive illegal sites by private individuals.

"The best case scenario for Internet music is that it will become an additional source of distribution of music. More music to more people," he said.

EMI Publishing is the biggest music publishing company in the world with more than a million songs in their catalogue. They own and manage the copyright of music by Moist and Matthew Good Band, Puff Daddy and Nirvana.

Jeff Rogers, owner and president of Handsome Boy Records, an independent label without the clout of EMI Publishing, has a similar optimism towards MP3 technology.

"Hey if more people find out about my band, I'm into it." He explained that Handsome Boy does have a rather large website, with information regarding acts such as Rusty and Ashley MacIsaac. However, the label has yet to post samples of their artist's songs.

With the support of the large and independent labels, it could be assumed that the Internet would prove to be a powerful weapon for the music producer and consumer. However, the perception of the Internet as a bastion for the "free" exchange of information has encouraged the creation of extensive illegal sites by private individuals that essentially distribute an artist's music without permission and for free.

Private MP3 sites are everywhere and can provide a Web surfer with music from just about any artist imaginable.

The illegal sites work exactly the same as the legal copyrighted ones posted by the record labels. Users has two options:

download the audio file (usually about five megabytes) onto their hard-drive and play it through their computer speakers, or those who have a CD-writer (roughly $400) can "burn" songs onto blank discs, which are relatively cheap, costing from $2-3. These discs can be played on a conventional CD player and give the listener the ability to mix and match only the songs they want.

The ability for an individual to create a personal disc without leaving their home and at a fraction of the retail cost poses several problems for the music industry.

McCarty claims that although he embraces the availability of music on the Web, the pirating of music on private websites, "is an extremely negative thing."

If something is not done about the issue, McCarty believes that the illegal distribution of music will "cannibalize the sales of CDs, injure artists and weaken the industry, hampering their ability to establish new talent."

Someone who is attempting to put a stop to the illegal MP3 trade is David Basskin, president of the Canadian Music and Reproduction Rights Agency. Basskin has been busy lately lobbying to the copyright board and taking direct action against websites containing pirated audio files in order to protect the rights of artist and record companies.

"You have to be realistic. The MP3 issue is a large one," said Basskin. "We approve of a secure format and are working with Internet service providers to investigate the Internet. The truth is that most of the traffic in MP3 is illegal. The music industry at large is not excited."

The Diamond Rio: A portable MP3 player capable of playing special discs with MP3 files stored on them.

Another aspect to this issue that will fail to excite the music industry is the entrance of the Diamond Rio MP3 player on the open market.

The player is intended to exclusively play MP3 files copied onto special discs capable of housing about 66 minutes of music.

The Diamond Rio is a threat because those without a CD-writer will no longer be confined to listening to their downloaded music solely from their computer.

Although the Diamond Rio is not presently available at a retail outlet in Kingston, a technology supply company in Mississauga has the player in stock and approximates that the 3" by 2" player will be available to retailers at about $270 a unit.

The increase in illegal music sites and the availability of MP3 players also has some important implications for the retail music industry. Music stores, like Sam the Record Man and House of Sounds, might expect to see a dramatic decrease in sales should the distribution of illegal MP3s continue.

Rogers sympathizes with the music stores, stating "you do have a concern about the retail industry, they might have to develop their own site."

The issue is a complicated one; users justifying their actions by claiming that $20 for a mediocre album is outrageous while artists who have paid their dues in a cut-throat industry watch as their music is distributed free of charge.

Rogers, however, maintains a semblance of optimism regarding the issue "If everybody downloads it and nobody buys it, then it won't be there," he said.

Stefan Murray only downloads files from officially recognized porno sites.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

By J.C. Bellringer

ACROSS

- 1. playwright Eugene
- 6. old style
- 10. Roman Emperor
- 14. Flanker. An example
- 15. First two words
- 16. west coast jazz musician
- 17. [Have to] spend the day later on. I have to verify it tonight
- 18. West African country on the Gulf of Guinea
- 20. -y. Laid. am. business
- 22. -y. Laid. am. business
- 23. mechanism
- 25. -y. Laid. am. business
- 26. -y. Laid. am. business
- 29. part of being human
- 31. -y. Laid. am. business
- 32. -y. Laid. am. business
- 33. -y. Laid. am. business
- 34. -y. Laid. am. business
- 35. -y. Laid. am. business
- 36. -y. Laid. am. business
- 38. -y. Laid. am. business
- 39. -y. Laid. am. business
- 40. -y. Laid. am. business
- 41. -y. Laid. am. business
- 42. -y. Laid. am. business
- 43. -y. Laid. am. business
- 44. -y. Laid. am. business
- 45. -y. Laid. am. business
- 46. -y. Laid. am. business
- 47. -y. Laid. am. business
- 48. -y. Laid. am. business
- 49. -y. Laid. am. business
- 50. -y. Laid. am. business
- 51. -y. Laid. am. business
- 52. -y. Laid. am. business
- 53. -y. Laid. am. business
- 54. -y. Laid. am. business
- 55. -y. Laid. am. business
- 56. -y. Laid. am. business
- 57. -y. Laid. am. business
- 58. -y. Laid. am. business
- 59. -y. Laid. am. business
- 60. -y. Laid. am. business

Solution to Tuesday's puzzle

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

DOWN

- 1. pertaining to the branch of metaphysics concerning the nature of being
- 2. branch of medicine concerning disorders and diseases of newborns
- 3. Allen Poe
- 4. the City of Angels
- 5. opposite of east
- 6. -y. Laid. am. business
- 7. understanding
- 8. -y. Laid. am. business
- 9. -y. Laid. am. business
- 10. -y. Laid. am. business
- 11. -y. Laid. am. business
- 12. -y. Laid. am. business
- 13. -y. Laid. am. business
- 14. -y. Laid. am. business
- 15. -y. Laid. am. business
- 16. -y. Laid. am. business
- 17. -y. Laid. am. business
- 18. -y. Laid. am. business
- 19. -y. Laid. am. business
- 20. -y. Laid. am. business
- 21. -y. Laid. am. business
- 22. -y. Laid. am. business
- 23. -y. Laid. am. business
- 24. -y. Laid. am. business
- 25. -y. Laid. am. business
- 26. -y. Laid. am. business
- 27. -y. Laid. am. business
- 28. -y. Laid. am. business
- 29. -y. Laid. am. business
- 30. -y. Laid. am. business
- 31. -y. Laid. am. business
- 32. -y. Laid. am. business
- 33. -y. Laid. am. business
- 34. -y. Laid. am. business
- 35. -y. Laid. am. business
- 36. -y. Laid. am. business
- 37. -y. Laid. am. business
- 38. -y. Laid. am. business
- 39. -y. Laid. am. business
- 40. -y. Laid. am. business
- 41. -y. Laid. am. business
- 42. -y. Laid. am. business
- 43. -y. Laid. am. business
- 44. -y. Laid. am. business
- 45. -y. Laid. am. business
- 46. -y. Laid. am. business
- 47. -y. Laid. am. business
- 48. -y. Laid. am. business
- 49. -y. Laid. am. business
- 50. -y. Laid. am. business
- 51. -y. Laid. am. business
- 52. -y. Laid. am. business
- 53. -y. Laid. am. business
- 54. -y. Laid. am. business
- 55. -y. Laid. am. business
- 56. -y. Laid. am. business
- 57. -y. Laid. am. business
- 58. -y. Laid. am. business
- 59. -y. Laid. am. business
- 60. -y. Laid. am. business

The AMS Card

AIR CANADA QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY STUDENT GOVERNMENT

We've change the rules! visit the participating AMS services for details.

pub PACC exchange Allie's PUB

1-888 AIR CANADA
Visit our Internet site at: www.aircanada.ca

- 61. -y. Laid. am. business
- 62. -y. Laid. am. business
- 63. -y. Laid. am. business
- 64. -y. Laid. am. business
- 65. -y. Laid. am. business
- 66. -y. Laid. am. business
- 67. -y. Laid. am. business
- 68. -y. Laid. am. business
- 69. -y. Laid. am. business
- 70. -y. Laid. am. business
- 71. -y. Laid. am. business
- 72. -y. Laid. am. business
- 73. -y. Laid. am. business
- 74. -y. Laid. am. business
- 75. -y. Laid. am. business
- 76. -y. Laid. am. business
- 77. -y. Laid. am. business
- 78. -y. Laid. am. business
- 79. -y. Laid. am. business
- 80. -y. Laid. am. business
- 81. -y. Laid. am. business
- 82. -y. Laid. am. business

the Xhibit

an exploration of faith and culture

fine arts display
JDUC

Mon, Tues. Feb 1-2

Sponsored by the Queen's Navigators

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
9:00 AM (CFEX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.canlink.com/ueckingston/chalmers/>

UP TO
50% Off

Columbia
Sportswear Company

Winter Parkas

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 PRINCESS ST.
542-2892

LSAT GMAT
MCAT GRE

Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25 Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

Stuck in Kingstan for Reading Week while your friends are off in the Caribbean? Lacking for any excuse not to read?

Why not join some Queen's students for a great time in Montreal?
Saturday February 27th see the Montreal Canadiens take on the Ottawa Senators.
Then party the night away at one of Montreal's hot spots!
It's only $50!
Call Chad @ 533-7512 for tickets and details!

Are You Prepared For The Fast Paced World Of Advertising?!

The Campus Bookstore has an opening for an Advertising and Manager. We are looking for a creative individual who can assist us in our advertising and promotion goals. The successful applicant must be proficient in the use of Adobe Illustrator, Photoshop, PageMaker, Microsoft Office, Excel and PowerPoint. Additionally, he or she will have experience installing and maintaining Windows based PCs, configuring and maintaining TCP/IP and Microsoft networks and have experience working with a wide range of internet/networking applications (Tchnet, FTP, etc.)

A familiarity with UNIX, a knowledge of HTML, and experience configuring and maintaining web and email servers are all definite assets. Finally, the applicant must have excellent communication and interpersonal skills and the ability to work in a busy environment under minimum supervision.

If you have these skills then please forward your resume to the attention of Cindy Healy, Operations Manager, via email ch14@post.queensu.ca, or fax at range of internet/networking applications (Tchnet, FTP, etc.) 533-6419. The Campus Bookstore is an equal opportunity employer.

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1989
www.campusbookstore.com

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROO FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/blueroo or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

$ .99

Whopper Junior every day

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

CAMPUS TRIVIA TOURNAMENT. Do you know stuff? Prove it! Sign up your team of 4 or individually. $5 per person. January 30th. Email 6aj13 to register.

OUT AT NIGHT? Walkhome is open from 6 p.m. - 2 a.m. Sunday - Wednesday, and until 3 a.m. on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. So if you're not sure where you're going, don't feel comfortable on your own, or just want some friendly company, give us a call at 533-2662.

KNOW SOMEONE SUFFERING from an eating disorder? Unsure about how to help? Get answers from experts at the CAMPUS FORUM, February 2nd, 5:30 - 6:45 p.m., POLICY STUDIES 202. Sponsored by Health Counselling and Disability Services. Call 533-6712 for more information.

TICKETS TICKETS TICKETS. Tickets are on sale for the French Play Les Belles-Sœurs by Michel Tremblay, February 4th, 5th and 6th. Students $5 and general $8.

PLAY POOL. SAVE THE ENVIRONMENT The ACE will be holding a pool tournament at THE SHOT, 7 p.m., Tuesday February 2nd. Meet other people interested in environmental stuff, or just playing good pool. Prizes, $10 per pair, tickets for sale this Thursday, Friday, Monday, Tuesday 10:30 - 11:30 a.m. at The Core. Every cent goes to protecting the Altrad Bog.

HYPE (Hy-School Projects and Endeavours) will be hosting a coffee house at the Grad Club on January 30th, beginning at 8 p.m. There will be a raffle, tickets are $0.75 or 2/$1.00, a variety of prizes generously donated by Kingston businesses will be drawn at the time of the raffle. Come out to show your spirit for high school outreach programs.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN BECOMING A PEER EDUCATOR? We are currently recruiting volunteers for next year. There are many ways to get involved in this valuable experience. Why not look into becoming a Peer Learning Assistant, Peer Tutor, Peer Health Educator or get involved with the Peer Educator Program on Sex, Intimacy and Dating? Please come out to an information session and find out the details. Sessions will be held on Thursday February 11th, 5:30 - 6:30 p.m. and Friday, February 12th, 12:30 - 1:30 p.m. Both sessions will take place at Student Counselling Services, Ground Floor of the St. Lawrence Building. For more information call Diane Nolting at 533-6712.

COFFEE HOUSE Friday January 29th, 8 p.m. at St. James' Church, Corner of Union and Barrie Streets. Oessers provided by THE LAUNDRY CAFE. Open mic.

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CDs, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9096.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY: We buy and sell most foreign currency at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellington.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

JANUARY IS ALZHEIMER'S AWARENESS MONTH at Queen's! Look around Campus for events sponsored by the ASUS Alzheimer's & Aging Awareness Group! Help support Alzheimer's Kingston.

IF ANYONE IS INTERESTED in creating an alt-2600 club at Queen's email me at daveconnie@hotmail.com

Gael Applications due February 1 at 4 p.m. Drop off boxes at Vic Hall, Jean Royce or the Core

FREE MALE CAT 2 years old neutered, declawed, all shots up to date. Very affectionate. Comes with litter box and food dish. Landlord is going to evict us. Call 547-6760.

THE SEXUAL HEALTH RESOURCE CENTRE now sells K-Y and K-Y Plus. Come into the Grey House and check it out!

Gael Applications due February 1 at 4 p.m. at The Core, Vic Hall and Jean Royce.

CORRECTION: Last week's Queen's Christian Fellowship advertisement implied this year's Geneva Lecturer is from Queen's. Professor Gabrielse is in fact from Harvard University. OCF apologizes for this mistake.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: '89 Ford Escort LX - 5 door - for sale - 106 km. Asking for $4,000. Also, Mountain bike $35; Sony PCS cell phone and leather case $80.00. Call Christina at 453-4535.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

HART BREWERY SEEMS immediate part-time sales rep to service Kingston pubs/restaurants. Car a must. Straight commission/expenses. Could become summer job during top beer/commission season! Great experience for commerce majors. E-mail resumes only - hartco@magi.com

WANTED

WANTED: Computer Network Support person for the AMS. Interested? Check out our ad in this issue.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7394 if its yours.

PERSONALS

BRITNEY SPEARS LOOK-ALIKE CONTEST to be held at half-time on Superbowl Sunday. Prizes to be announced. Contact Mark at 6mf3@qink.queensu.ca to enter.

MOTOR CITY MADMAN MAD

NUGENT THREATENS CANADIANS, ROCKS MILLIONS

"You betchur ass, baby. You betchur ass. We here to do it to you tonight's the night tonight s'theightonight's thought... Rock n' Roll a little bit here a little bit there... We gonna do it to you, we gotta do it to you... I think I know whatchu like, baby. Say I think I say I gotta say: There ain't nobody out there who came to be mellow tonight, now is there? I say there ain't nobody out there who wants to be even a little bit mellow now is there? Anyone who wants to be mellow you can turn around and get the fuck out of here, alright? Do you hear me?"

This is a love song. I'd like to dedicate it to that Nashville pussy. It's called "Wang-Dang Sweet Poontang".

—Ted Nugent, 1978.

AMERICA THE PROUD, America the free. Only America could ever hope to breed a rock star as frightening and interesting as Ted Nugent. The man was and is a walkin', talkin', gun-totin', no funny-smokin' basketcase. This is not to say he's Ozzy-type crazy. In fact, I'm sure he hates Ozzy and everything he stands for (except perhaps for open war on animals). Nugent is a wacked ball of right-wing American energy: hippie-hating, women-objectifying, flag-waving — you pick the stereotype, chances are he fits it.

That's what made him such a compelling performer. It's also what makes him so enjoyable to read about in the press.

NO BEARS FOR TEDDY

The first experience I had with Ted Nugent was watching him on an episode of the old TV Nation. The only thing I remember is that he talked really, really fast, owned many, many guns and frightened Michael Moore, the show's host. The next experience I had was buying an old double-live vinyl of Nugent, simply because it was $1 and I was curious. Wow. The man could stoke a crowd's fire with his stage banter like no one else, he was one silver-tongued son-of-a-bitch. And he could play guitar fast and erratic. I was immediately a fan.

Then last week, out of the blue, our boy decided to square off against Canada. Yep. Seamus Teddy got miffed that the Ontario government is calling a ban on spring bear hunting. According to The Globe and Mail, Nugent said the ban was inspired by "lunatic fringe" animal groups. "There are plenty of bears up here," Ted was thinking, "so why the hell can't I bomp myself a few?"

Regardless of whether he's basing it on statistics or just over-cager for some prime-cut Canuck Snokky, he's taken action. Says Theodore: "I am going to shut off the flow of American dollars into Canada, not just for bear hunting, for anything, and I can do it." The man is serious. I'm not quite sure how he plans on doing it, but this is the guy who penned Cat

Scratch Fever for God's sake; he's got a history of turning the proverbial red-blooded American crank, and how. The album Cat Scratch Fever alone has sold millions and millions of copies. He has his own National Organization of Bowhunting, which has thousands of members. Ted also is an outspoken member of the National Rifle Association, whose members contribute a fair bit to Canadian tourism (hunting, fishing, camping, etc.). What if Ted were to get Charlton Heston (another celebrity member and supporter) on his side? No one is more compelling than Charlton Heston.

While Theo's grip on reality is even looser than most Americans, he points out that "the banning of the bear season that one, most of those people have had their wits dulled by lack of fresh, juicy red meat to the point of being dangerous (although many vegetarians I know spend too much time feeling superior and trying not to die of malnutrition to notice anything else, let alone the plight of bears). So while his assessment of the situation might be a little off, The Motor City Madman's actually got a couple of good points. Frightening, isn't 1975 he went solo, releasing Cat Scratch Fever in 1977 and State of Shock in 1979, two of his biggest albums. Since then he's released more than 20 albums, including two with his band Damn Yankees (with members of Nightranger and Styx) that went platinum.

He's played with Eddie Van Halen, Jimi Hendrix, B.B. King and Meatloaf. Equally renowned for his non-stop touring, unquenchable stage energy and often controversial outspokenness on issues like gun control, Ted Nugent is a seventies guitar hero and a Rock n' Roll Hall of Fame inductee.

He's played with Eddie Van Halen, Jimi Hendrix, B.B. King and Meatloaf. Equally renowned for his non-stop touring, unquenchable stage energy and often controversial outspokenness on issues like gun control, Ted Nugent is a seventies guitar hero and a Rock n' Roll Hall of Fame inductee.

While Theo's grip on reality is even looser than most Americans, he points out that "the banning of the bear season

FINAL WARNING SHOT

"You want to have the bears run rampant? Then you go ahead and figure out how to get them out of people's dumpsters and people's backyards. And you explain to the lady why Fifi just got gobbled up by an overpopulation of black bears." Obviously Nugent wants what's best for Canada. He's not just some crazy person trying to wreak havoc on a neighbouring country. No, he's a famous, loud-mouthed, much-loved crazy person who might really do some damage if we don't let him have his way.

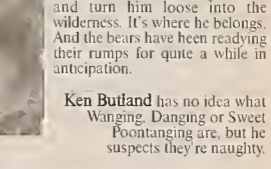

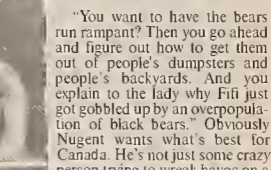

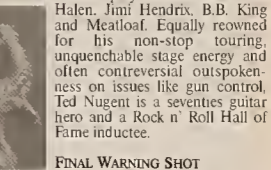

Seriously, he's only one man, how many bears could he manage to drag home? One, maybe two? Celebrities whine and pout and stomp their feet for special treatment all the time: "Whaaaah. I want the best seats in the house, I don't care who has them reserved." "Whaaaah, I wanna have these charges dropped." "Whaaaah, now I wanna be a good-will ambassador." And they usually get what they want. Why should Ted Nugent be treated any differently? We should just give him a whiny musician hunting licence and turn him loose into the wilderness. It's where he belongs. And the bears have been readying their rump for quite a while in anticipation.

Ken Butland has no idea what Wangin', Dangin' or Sweet Poontangin' are, but he suspects they're naughty.

just doesn't help the bears," which is true, because bears want to get shot. Have you ever seen the size of a bear's ass? They must work hard to get it all huge and target-friendly, so they've obviously got a death-wish. Ted's merely giving them a hand. "[The ban] only helps the touchy-feely fantasy of a bunch of people who would ban you or I from ever having a steak." By this I'm assuming he means extremist vegetarians. If so, I can back him up on

PORTRAIT OF THE ARTIST AS AN ARTIST

What would a cause a man to attempt to ruin the economic status of an entire province? Let's examine his musical career. As a teenager in the sixties, Nugent played in a bunch of garage rock bands. His first commercially successful band was The Amboy Dukes, later changed to Ted Nugent and the Amboy Dukes because Ted was the main attraction. In

SUMMER CAMPS ASUS

Share your love for computers with kids this summer!

Camp out with Computer Discovery

ASUS is looking for instructors for our summer camp, Computer Discovery. Applications can be picked up through the SWEP Program at Career Services. Applications are due by 4pm on Friday, February 15 at Career Services.. Please call 533-6917 with any questions.

ASUS NOW HIRING. ASUS

ASUS ARTS & SCIENCE FORMAL '99

PROHIBITION

Roaring into the 20's

March 6, 1999

Tickets: $65 at UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core

Get yours before Friday Feb. 12

For information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core 183 University, 533-6000 x 7580

LIVE FRIDAYS
ULTRA VIOLET CD LAUNCH
THIS FRIDAY
Travel Agent
Jon Coakley
Matt Barber

Alfie's
PUB

SUPER BOWL
SUNDAY
XXXIII
1/2 DOZEN WINGS & PITCHER
SPECIAL $12

WIN A HOT TUB THIS
SATURDAY NIGHT

NEW EVERY TUESDAY IN FEBURARY DJ MYTHIC TUNNEL TUESDAYS
HIP HOP R & B JUNGLE

ONE STEP BEYOND
WED. FEBRUARY 3
TICKETS AT THE *elchance

WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA

A.M.S. Executive Election and
UNDERGRADUATE Student Trustee Election

F
O
P
R
U
M

F
O
P
R
U
M

Tuesday, Feb. 2 at 6:00pm Victoria Hall      Thursday, Feb. 4 at 6:00pm West Campus

Monday, Feb. 8 at 11:30am
JDUC - Lower Ceilidh

Come out and listen to the Trustee Candidates, and the AMS Executive Candidate Teams

Questions?
 CONTACT CARLY, CAROLYN OR SHAWN
 IN THE COMMISSION OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS AT 533-6000 ext.74815

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

reader

JANUARY 1999

C R E A T I V I T Y

an issue dedicated to creative work

OF A UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
Reader

We do not enjoy poetry unless we know it to be poetry.

— Henry David Thoreau

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL READER
Friday, January 29 1999 • Issue 4 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents © 1998 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.

Subscriptions are available for $35.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—editorial: 613-545-2800
advertising: 613-545-6711
Fax: 613-545-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
Circulation 9,000
Issue 5 of QJR will be published on Friday, March 5, 1999
Cover and Interior Design by J.C. Bellinger

EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Kath Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

ADS CO. ORDINATOR
Mark Fucella

ADS DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourne
Arlene Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

CONTRIBUTORS
Sean Bell, S. Berger, Greg Betts, Andria Feddersen, "Hannibal Hack",
Robert Hoffman, Robert McGill,
D.L. Windell

The QJR Literary Challenge no. 3

Two questions again this month:

1. I was born and raised in Montreal, Quebec, and attended McGill University. I spent three weeks in graduate school at Columbia in New York City before returning to Montreal to read in clubs and work for the family clothing business. My earliest collections, Let Us Compare Mythologies (1956) and Spice-Box of the Earth (1961) reveal what one critic called "a fascination with eroticism and violence as means of spiritual transcendence." I have also lived, at various points in my life, in England and Greece. Who am I?

2. A writer of significant international influence, I was born in Ceylon and was educated there, in England and, later still, in Canada. During the course of my Canadian studies I attended Bishop's, University of Toronto and Queen's, completing my master's on Edwin Muir. I am accomplished novelist, poet, literary critic, teacher and filmmaker. My propensity for the strange and deviant moved one biographer to remark that "[this person's] landscapes are peopled with strange beasts, cripples, lost, violent souls, animals—all moving in and out of focus, emerging from and receding to some uncharted region of racial memory." Who am I?

There will be two winners this month, one for each question.
The same person may respond to both questions.

Please forward all responses to:
QJR Literary Challenge
272 Earl Street
journal@post.queensu.ca

All responses must be received by Friday, February 19th. At this time, two correct responses will be chosen (at random) and be awarded one gift certificate each in the amount of $10 from Wayfarer Books. This month's Challenge is authored by the editor of The Queen's Journal Reader.

Congratulations to Last Month's Winners: Bob McGill and Adam Day. Each will receive a $10 Gift Certificate from Wayfarer Books.

S & M PEOPLE

BY SEAN SPRINGER

Francisco lay on his mattress of nails as he brushed his bleeding gums with a rusty fork, passing time as usual. While perusing the daily paper, he decided to check out the personals. One of the ads caught his eye: "PREPARE TO BE HUMILIATED. Young, bright and lively sadist seeks companion to torture. If willing to endure hours of cruelty, call The Emperor at 555-8674."

Francisco was skeptical, but figured what the fuck? so he grabbed his portable and dialled. A deep male voice answered.

"Emperor's residence, the master of the house speaking."
"I'm a professional masochist," the masochist explained, "and I'm looking to be beaten senseless."

The Emperor provided Francisco with directions to his Bloor Street apartment dwelling. Wasting nary a second, Francisco ran barefoot from his Church Street residence, half-naked with a colony of leeches clinging to his extremities.

When he arrived, he rang the doorbell. The Emperor answered in full S&M garb: black zippered mask, leather Tina Turner vest, nylon gitch, black leather boots, garter belt and stockings. "Greetings," welcomed the sadist.

"You must be The Emperor?"
"Not only am I the Emperor, I am your worst nightmare," he replied. Clearing his throat, he continued, "Francisco Mongiardi, my torturing techniques will make you feel pain unparalleled to any sado-erotic adventure you've ever experienced."

Amateur night! Francisco mused to himself.
Geez, this guy's really skimpy, the Emperor observed. I might kill him. Better perform a test.

"Before our exotic, sado-masochistic activities begin, however, you must brave the power of my whip."

The Emperor extracted a ten-foot lion's whip, and struck brave Francisco across the chest, flinging the leeches onto a couple passing by. The couple thanked Francisco for his leeches, as they, too, were masochists.

Francisco hadn't flinched from the whip's blow. He then protruded his bloody chest towards the Emperor as if to say what else you got?

This impressed the sadist and he motioned for the masochist to "enter the tomb of terror." The masochist followed his master's lead down a set of creaky basement stairs to a fully finished recreation room. But this—this was no ordinary fully finished recreation room for this was the grotesque torturing chamber of a middle-aged appliance technician trying his hand at torturing.

"Put these on," the Emperor commanded. He held up a rubber band weighted with rocks designed to attach onto the scrotum.

Francisco laughed heartily, "You can't be serious! I outgrew those 'amateur' torturing gimmicks in nursery school. Don't you have some cattle prodders?"

"But, of course," replied the sadist who then swiftly drew a pair of cattle prodders out of a holster strapped to his back. Lunging at the undiscerning masochist, he awkwardly discharged a current so powerful that it could have debilitated a family of lumberjacks. Francisco, however, seemed more shocked at his master's lack of dexterity than at the absurd amount of amperes vibrating throughout his torso.

Fuck, does this guy ever suck, the masochist groaned inwardly.
Hey, this guy's good, the rookie sadist marveled to himself. He's good, but I don't give up that easily.

Next, the Emperor strapped the masochist into his homemade "elongating straps of doom"—a machine consisting of four straps, one each for the arms and legs, which were wired to the "elongating wheel of horror." The Emperor cranked the wheel and stretched Francisco to unprecedented proportions.

"How's it going?" the sadist asked salaciously.
"Fine," replied Francisco. "Look Emperor, I said I wanted to be beaten senseless. Get it?"

Knowing full well that he had nothing of any meaning left to offer his guest, the Emperor sighed, "Why don't you just leave? Besides, I don't think I'm cut out for this torturing stuff. I'm just a hack."

"Hey, perk up, friend. Have you ever thought about phone sex? You can make some pretty good money."
"Phone sex, huh?"

A few weeks later, Francisco was perusing the classifieds' "personals" section. One of the ads caught his eye: "PREPARE TO GET HORNY. Young, bright and lively phone sex operator seeks companions to arouse. If willing to endure hours of orgasms, call The Emperor at 555-8674."

Sean Springer, the ol' dirty bastard, is afraid of popcorn, banana popsicles and A. Whitney Brown. He has a crush on John Ritter and thinks Madeline Stowe looks like a horse.

poems

[Morning Wants Not]

morning wants not his skinsmell dark secret ly-ing her cracked tongue dry bruised
she is full when red liquid runs
my glass burns like love after sin

D. L. Windell

[Laughing Eyes Above Your Teacup]

Laughing eyes above your teacup
bronzed skin shining — smug judgement
You have such lovely hands such long delicate fingers
a woman's hands you always said
Warm round eyes, mischief dancing with my courage — spinning together crazy, young, pure
and far too long ago.

D. L. Windell

loving an artist

it is only with her that I notice the impressionist perspectives about her head that is framed by a pillow beside me.

is her kiss artistic or articulate?
or simply to my liking?
how come she tastes like vanilla in some instances and like champagne in others?

sometimes I wish she would outline us in such subtle shades superimposed on our flesh bare the phoenix rise: great solar flare, the rainbow.

such conjecture conjures sight
when it is only appropriate to shut ones eyes and feel the background hum with Divine cartooning all sensations.

Ryan Hoffman

If you wrote a personal ad, what would you write?

BOHEMIAN ECONOMIST SEEKS FELLOW
liberators to free world from scarcity by rejecting marriage in favour of loving in cornucopic abundance.
[Not a cynic, not casual, I want to make all relationships meaningful. I need to live in a world of love / I need to make love with the world. I want that magic feeling with everyone.] #7312

CRAZY MOTHER-FUCKER
renaissance/nowhere man, dull intellectual with messianic pretensions, seeks friend as upgrade from computer. #7888

Future Prime Minister seeks competitor. #6233

Tom Waits-Nietzsche-

-Singing-in-the-Rain-Christ hybrid seeks stable sexy-brainyraw playmate yearning to tap the human mind's potential for warp speed. #8212

Lonely heart, former superman.

seeks tall, aristocratic, bourgeois-ridiculing, Harley-driving, kick-boxing, tortured, cool poet answering to the name of Alana, again. #2300

Sorrowful lad seeks breasts to nurture artistic aspirations.

3110

Glory, jest and riddle of the universe craves answer.

hannibalhack@geocities.com

short fiction contest

2nd Place

the city admits it

BY ANDRÉA FEDDERSON

Woman

You ovulate like popcorn, he told me.

You burst, the doctor said, all over the place, over and over. But they don't explode loud enough. The cysts get caught on their way out, in the toxins of the eggs that preceded them. Hundreds of them, every month.

Cluttering up your fallopian tubes, like hair in a drain.

So you'll just keep on scarring until your ovaries are just salty, ripe scabs, tucked quietly into the layers of fat in your body.

It's like you're too much woman, he said.

I turned and gave him a polycystic smile.
"You must really love your job," I said bitterly, while he hummed and salted my thighs.

Nightclub

Dancing, dancing, seducing the walls, the lights, the smoke from an unfiltered cigarette. Cocking my hips towards a woman who's stroking her stomach as she dances.

I focus on her forehead and try to seem sultry and casual and shake over towards her, dangerous, dangerous, dangerous, because now she's seen right through me, like ultrasound.

But I'm just drinking my Manhattan.
I'm just here for a laugh.

I'm just here because the appointment was only a check-up for a girl of twenty-two.

But now I feel less a woman so it seems appropriate to try and seduce one.

Subway

My friend is named Derek. He has bright red hair and is wearing a green corduroy jacket, and sitting too close as we ride home together after school. Derek is telling me a joke he heard that afternoon, and is laughing so hard he's crying.

So the doctor is delivering this woman's baby, and once it is born, he looks at it a moment and then throws it against the wall. Then he starts kicking it around the room. Then starts stomping up and down on it and smashing its head against the doorknob. Finally he drops the bloody carcass onto the stomach of its mother, who is overcome with horror and unable to speak.

The doctor looks at her a minute and starts to laugh.
'Just kidding,' he says. 'Stillborn.'

Derek pauses for effect and I start to cry too.

Food

Sarah King is my best friend and very self-absorbed so of course I tell her first, the next morning. I use the phone, because it seems less threatening and I have threatening news.

She is snacking and listening to Jefferson Airplane in the background. The same album my father had, the same one we sold at our garage sale when I was eight. This detail distracts me.

I begin by describing to her the waiting room, and the smell of the plants and the magazines from 1991 and no later. Then I describe the doctor's eyebrows and the pimples in his beard. Then I tell her I want to have my degree framed in brass like his, and maybe even buy myself an L-shaped desk for next year if I can afford it and then I mention that I am barely fertile.

Sarah begins coughing on the other end.
I'm sorry, she says, rasping. I'm choking on a kernel.

Humegon 75 IU, Fertinex 75 IU, Lupron (Two week kit), Pergonal 75 IU, Repronex 75 IU, Follistim 75 IU and Gonal F 75 IU

I close the encyclopedia and sit down to write.

Timeline (projected):

Birth - Child - Puberty - Adult - Marriage - Procreation - Old Age - ?

University :	19 years - 22 years (meet husband)
Post-University:	22 years - 23 years (get engaged)
Beginning of Career:	23 years - 25 years (get married)
Marriage:	n/a (sigh with relief)
Pregnancy:	as soon as possible (twice a night, every night)
Baby #1:	26 years
Baby #2:	27 1/2 years
Baby #3, #4, #5:	29 years (miscarry Baby #4, Baby #5 is dangerously small)

Breathe, breathe, breathe, breathe.

I stop and rub at my scribbles; they smudge but don't erase.

Prescription

Have you taken this before?

There may be some unpleasant side effects, for some women, but not all, and there may also be some positive benefits, for some women, but not all, and when they tested this product we gave it to some women, but not all, some just sucked on sugar for a few months and wondered why they just got sicker and make sure you take it with food and store it in a cool dry place and keep your right arm raised at all times and stand up quickly afterwards and

The pharmacist is wearing a tag that says 'Gus', but I heard his assistant call him James.

He leans forward and drops the bottles in my palm. $298.09.

Gus is so full of hate he fucking shines.

Ratray Marsh

Thirty years ago Ruth Hussey stopped a development company that wanted to build thick, glossy buildings and roadways in Ratray Marsh.

Ruth sat outside the front gates for two and a half years, collecting signatures and singing hymns to save the area from destruction. In pictures she has white hair and eyes that look like fireflies. She is even buried by these gates, under a thick, glossy plaque.

I walk along the pathways, rocks in my hand. The afternoon haze sinks towards my feet. Even the grass is bending.

I spit on Ruth's many flowers as I leave the marsh, for no other reason than to feel mean and selfish, and to know that I'm not the only one this week who has been betrayed.

Time

Water forgets.

I go to a public swimming pool and stand in the communal shower. Hot water anoints me and I scrub my breasts until my nipples are red and sore. Two older women are rinsing chlorine out of their hair, and I am mesmerized by their white, rubbery stomachs and dimpled thighs. Their muscles seem to flex and bend more subtly than mine but somehow with more conviction and suddenly I can't get over how strange they both seem, how unassuming.

One of the women catches my gaze and smiles at me, dripping wet, black hair matted to the sides of her face.

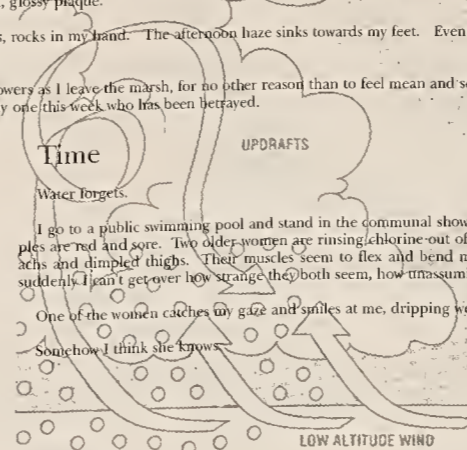

Somehow I think she knows.

Syndrome

Many nights later, I catch myself healing.

I am rubbing my stomach in warm, tiny circles and whispering into soft flesh. A dream of thaw. I can smell her sweat and hear her singing.

Moths flutter.

short fiction contest 3rd Place catch

BY ROBERT MCGILL

The change room has big orange lockers in rows. It's like the department store. I don't like the department store. Mother takes me there on Saturdays. She read me the story about Joseph and Mary losing Jesus at the festival. It made me feel bad. Jesus must have been afraid. It must have been like a department store.

I like going to the pool with Father better. We go into the change room where only the men go, but Father says that I'm little enough to come with him. The men are big and pink and hairy like Father. They smile at me and say things to Father that make him laugh. They all want to know if I have a boyfriend. I tell them that I am going to marry either Jeffrey McClure or Dylan Olczyk. Jeffrey has blond hair but Dylan kissed me on the playground. The men pat my head and say Dylan sounds like quite a catch, but I thought you were going to marry your Father.

I tell them That was last week. When the men wash themselves in the showers they put their hands right in their bums. All soapy. Rub your bum, rub your bum, rub your bum and you get some gum. Gran'papa told me that, bouncing me up and down on his knee and rubbing my bum and breathing hard because I'm such a big girl, I'm growing up so fast. Soon I will be a wife, almost as big as these men in the shower. Father tells me not to stare. Father used to have baths with me, but I'm such a big girl now, he lets Mother bathe me. I told him that I like it better when he bathes me, because he squirts water jets and makes tidal waves, but Mother just sits there on the toilet and reads her magazine. Father said to pretend the pool is a big bathtub. That's silly. The pool is deep and cold and smelly and you have to wear your bathing suit. Pool water is blue and bath water is white.

I am a little fishy in the big, blue pool with my water wings and Father is a great white shark who comes to eat me. When the finhand comes at me in the water I scream because then

Father grabs my legs and pulls me underwater and tickles me. I want to be very mad at him for scaring me all of the time, but his tickling makes me laugh. Rub your belly, rub your belly and you get some jelly. I tell him that only Gran'papa is allowed to say that, but Gran'papa is Father's father, and Father learned it from him when he was a little boy, so he's allowed, and besides, he's the Father, and Fathers make the rules. He swims away and then the finhand comes back and I scream and go underwater again, but he tickles me for too long and water gets in my mouth. I cough when he brings me back up into the air and I cry and there, there, that's my big girl. You'll be all right, love.

Father wants me to do the trick where I jump into his arms from the side of the pool. I kick my legs hard and I go to the ladder and climb up it. I do the dog trick and shake my head, but my hair is too long and it doesn't work like when Father does it. Then I go to the side of the pool and jump at Father. But he doesn't catch me. My legs hit his shoulders and it hurts and I fall into the water and everything is upside down and my mouth fills with water before my water wings float me back up. There is a man holding me up, but it isn't Father. Hey, watch where you jump, kid. Then Father comes swimming over, fast like when he shows off for me, and holds me and says Are you okay, sweetie. And I don't understand and I'm crying. Father says You jumped at the wrong man, honey. I was on the other side waiting to catch you. You jumped at the wrong man. And the other man rubs his neck and says You better make sure she doesn't do that again. Father looks sad, but I know what will make him feel better. I say to the man I'm sorry, I won't do it again. I won't jump when Father isn't there to catch me. Never. Never ever.

l

b

b

Words Words Words

Untitled

Morn. The kettle crows its fever.
As the smoke runs through tired fingers that can't hold the shaking in, ash falls
'I'm sorry' is what he thinks, but he cannot remember what it was not what was not said who?
And it was he who said what was not nothing, must have been, think, act, gesture, pose.
That is what the book says, does it make any sense?
sense. What a joke. The act is only as good as the actor.
Oh, but the stage is so unreal. I think I want to cry but tears are selfish, I don't cry for me, want you.
Perhaps smiles then, since everything matters right now never happened, nor has been, will never be Shall it be that way, I shall never sleep sit to live to smoke, let it suck me in when it does, let me follow past the lungs, to steal, "breath from another"
The air is warm, why do his fingers move?
'cause without affect, they are mine — I dig them.

Sean Bell & Lilian Kim

See by See

There r wyllld imajinings poent falls

forrays
see by see
circe in the sand

sopped on wine sublime

wyld wind
notted with sand pebels wrinkilled
braeve braeve eyze
see by see

she seize grene and treeze
sand stoan brooding up on her pushing her four words
she sees see by see cums kwyetlee
see by see

Greg Betts

first star I see tonight

& while the stars shine brightly
& I can hardly wait to hold you unheard during this soft-spoken crossing delayed
& so bare is my heart
in a half-lit world, a thirsty wish that superstition leaves behind unkind &

S. Berger

helpless
helpless
helpless
helpless

take me
to your reader

SUBMIT

POEMS • FICTION • ESSAYS • REVIEWS

QUEEN'S JOURNAL READER
272 EARL • journal@post.queensu.ca

ASUS SUMMER CAMPS
DON'T FEEL LIKE GOING TO EUROPE?

THIS SUMMER, OPEN THE MINDS OF KINGSTON YOUTH WITH
ARTS ADVENTURE

ASUS is looking forenergetic and enthusiastic instructors for our Arts Adventure camp. Applications can be picked up through the SWEP program at Career Services. Applications are due by 4pm on Fri., February 15 at Career Services. Please call 533-6917 with any questions.

NOW HIRING.

The Queen's Journal Open House

- Learn how your student newspaper is put together
- Meet the Journal staff
- Learn how to get involved
- Writing, editing, photography tips
- Free food!

Tuesday, February 2, 1999 7:30 - 10 p.m. 272 Earl Street

It's A Fact!
The Queen's Journal has been publishing used books for over 20 years. We have a large selection of used books for sale at a special price. Visit us at www.queensu.ca/usedbooks

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1999

National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations Phil Fontaine (left) speaks with delegates at the Canadian Student Leadership Conference in CSLC, the organizing committee and volunteers pose with The Honourable Pierre S. Pettigrew, Minister of Human Resources Development (centre), and The Honourable Bob Rae (right) speaks about the challenges of leadership in the next millennium. Please see story on page 3.

PHOTOS BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Svend Robinson visits Queen's

By ERIK MISSIO

Svend Robinson, an outspoken NDP Member of Parliament, addressed a large crowd last Wednesday night in Wallace Hall about the emergence of a 'police state' under Prime Minister Jean Chretien. His speech was part of a special lecture series sponsored by Queen's New Democratic Party Association.

Robinson, the MP for the Burnaby-Douglas riding in British Columbia and the first openly gay representative in the House of Commons, is no stranger to controversial politics. His lecture focused on the November, 1997 clash between Royal Canadian Mounted Police and unarmed student protesters on the University of British Columbia's campus.

The angry UBC students were protesting the inclusion of then Indonesian dictator General Suharto in the Asian Pacific Economic Cooperation talks being held in Vancouver. The students carried signs and waved banners only to have them tipped down and destroyed by RCMP officers under the direct order of the Prime Minister's office, Robinson said. Suharto, accused by many to have violated international law through the occupation of East Timor and

Please see Incident on page 3

Convocation changes debated

By RENEE HUANG

In one of the closest votes in Queen's Senate history, members passed an amendment to a motion to consider striking the traditional singing of "God Save the Queen" from Convocation in an attempt to reduce the pomp of an already lengthy ceremony.

The decision to contemplate removing the reference to Queen Victoria, who established Queen's University by Royal Charter in 1841, was passed last Thursday by Senate with 22 votes in favour and 19 votes against the motion.

The recommendation to revise Convocation was based on a Senate Committee on Academic Procedures survey given to graduates who attended the Spring 1998 ceremonies, stated a report from the Senate.

Cathy Perkin, chair of SCAP, wrote in a Senate report that "the University Secretariat's recommendation to change the Convocation program was based on a desire to improve the satisfaction level of graduates."

Following a proposal from Chaplain and Chair of Queen's Multi-Faith Council Brian Yealland, SCAP and Senate recommended the removal of the hymn, Benediction and invocation from the ceremony due to the monotheistic nature of the addresses, the report continued.

Recognizing the importance of prayer, the Council suggested introducing a single, inclusive prayer entitled "Sacred Reflection" or a "Prayer for the People," to be read by rotating members from major world faith communities.

Student senator Andy Lehrer then proposed that "God Save the Queen" should also be considered for deletion.

"I don't think it was surprising," Principal Bill Leggett said of the amendment. "It's come up two or three times in the last decade," he continued, although not during his time as principal.

Tensions were high as student senators and members engaged in lively debate over whether or not to continue singing the austere anthem during convocation.

Student senator Prem Rawal, Comm '99, believes the song is no longer an integral element of Convocation. "It didn't seem to be adding value to the ceremony," he said.

"Logically, it doesn't have much significance... There are a lot of things that

Please see Senate on page 6

Foodbank busier than ever

By CHAD HEARD

The number of AMS Foodbank users is increasing dramatically.

"Last week was their busiest week ever," said Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs). "As money becomes tighter, people are more inclined to go."

"It's a challenge right now to keep the shelves stocked," Loat added.

Eric Morris, AMS Foodbank co-ordinator, agreed with Loat. "Bottom line is, [the number of users have] pretty much tripled since September," he said. According to Morris, the Foodbank serves "about a dozen" people during the summer, and 30 to 40 people during the school year.

"We're anticipating that rate is going to grow," Morris said, adding that the Foodbank is now serving "close to 10 new people a week." Morris attributes the growth primarily to growing awareness of the Foodbank's existence.

"You basically shop for free," Morris explained, noting that the Foodbank does not perform credit checks or background checks on its users.

The Foodbank runs mainly on donations of food and money. Morris said this year approximately 9,000 students opted into a $1 AMS fee that supports the Foodbank. This represents a 10 to 15 per cent increase over last year, he added.

"We're not short for food or cash. And that's a tribute to the contributors," Morris said. The cash donations this year should surpass last year's totals, he added.

"We're always looking for donations at the Foodbank," Morris said.

index

Volume 126, Issue 29
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	15
Editorials	8	ASE	18
Opinions	9	Classifieds	22
Features	13	MISC.	23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Cloudy with showers High 3°C, Low 0°C POP 70%	Thursday Snow High -1°C, Low -5°C POP 60%
Wednesday Partly cloudy High 2°C, Low -2°C POP 30%	Friday Partly cloudy High -3°C, Low -7°C POP 10%

THE JOURNAL HOSTS
THE AMS ALL-CANDIDATES/STUDENT TRUSTEES DEBATE
MONDAY, FEBRUARY 8
11:30 AM
LOWER COLLEGE JUDIC
COME SEE YOUR CANDIDATES BATTLE IT OUT

TONIGHT!
Journal Open House
7:30 p.m. - 10:00 p.m.
272 Earl St. (the bright blue porch)
Come learn how The Journal is run.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Voters List

for the position of editor-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal

If your name is not on this list and you have made 4 or more contributions to The Journal this year, please contact Keith Gerein at 533-2800.

Voting will take place at the Journal house, 272 Earl Street Sunday, February 14 (1 - 7 p.m.) Monday, February 15 (8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m.) Student ID is required

- |                       |                     |                   |                     |
|-----------------------|---------------------|-------------------|---------------------|
| Cimi Achiam           | Greg Dole           | Jocelyn Laporte   | Andria Salisse      |
| Suzanne Amstrong      | Nicholas Du Prey    | Sarah Le May      | Mark Salvador       |
| Geoff Ashenbaur       | Lianne Elliot       | Kristian Li       | Fiona Scannell      |
| Galileo Bae           | Liz Frogley         | Julietta Loeffler | Eli Schuster        |
| Mary Anne Beaudette   | Mark Fucella        | Marco Lai         | Karen Simpson       |
| Jeane Craig Bellinger | Anne Ge             | Robert MacNeil    | Nick Sinclair       |
| Crystal Bona          | Kristen Glazer      | Mandy Marrior     | Claude Sherren      |
| John Bowman           | Chris Glover        | Laura MacInnis    | Sean Springer       |
| Robin Brehme          | Tania Haas          | Bob McGill        | Rebecca Steier      |
| Shawn Brinley         | Chad Heard          | Shantley McMurray | Fiona Stevenson     |
| Kari Brinnell         | Paul Heisler        | Jackie McLachlan  | James Terjanian     |
| Maggie Buhajczyk      | Sue Holland         | Owen Minnis       | Laura Thackeray     |
| Ken Burland           | Chris Holmes        | Erik Missio       | Craig Thomas        |
| Stephanie Carvin      | Renée Huang         | Gord Moodie       | Mike Tiffin         |
| Janice Chan           | Bob Huish           | Eric Morris       | Jonaham Tinney      |
| Jeff Child            | Todd Jackson        | Jennifer Morrison | Dimitrios Triotis   |
| Cheryl Chung          | Angela James        | Stefan Murray     | Rachelle Villanueva |
| Hilary Clark          | Adam Kaminsky       | Luke Mylyaganam   | Adra Vukstic        |
| Andrew Cooke          | Lilian Kim          | Anna Nesbitt      | Jim Whittington     |
| Katherine Colbourn    | Gabe King           | Jill Offenbeck    | Virginia Wigmore    |
| Sarah Crosbie         | Claudia Kraft       | Sean Richmond     | D.L. Windell        |
| Robert DeBellefeuille | Jonathan Krashinsky | Dan Rowe          | Mark Woolford       |
| Rajeev Dave           | Alex Krohly         | Nathan Sager      | Samson Wu           |

Business booming at Tricolour Express

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

Total net revenue for the Tricolour Express indicates that the AMS service is experiencing a dramatic increase in sales this year.

According to Vanessa Gruben, manager of the Used Book Store Exchange, the Tricolour's total net revenue as of December 31 was 26 per cent higher than the total at the same time last year. "We are very excited since the numbers went up," said Gruben. "We worked really hard to get an increase."

During the previous three years the Tricolour Express had experienced a decline in sales. A.C. Bedard, assistant manager of the UBS, attributed this to several factors. "Last year was mixed up because of the Ice Storm," she explained. "Last year there were busy times when the Tricolour did really well, such as Thanksgiving," Bedard said, however, there were also times when ticket sales did not do as well as usual. "In that way it varies from year to year... Reading Week was quieter than what we expected," she said. "This is a strong year which is great... We are doing much better."

Both Gruben and Bedard attributed the increase in sales to hard work and new promotions. "We are doing more promotions this year," said Bedard. The six-pack deal, where students can purchase six tickets for the price of five, was expanded this year.

Other promotions include various giveaways and the Frequent Rider

Giveaway coupon in the back of the What's Next. The coupon allows students to get the same deal as the six-pack without pre-purchasing the tickets. Students are given a stamp each time they buy a ticket and receive their sixth ticket free.

The Tricolour Express has also expanded to provide chartered buses to Queen's groups. "They are something that we never did before," said Bedard.

According to Bedard, important to the Tricolour's success is its ability to compete with other means of transportation. "Via [Rail] is always a competitor," said Bedard. She said the VIA six-pack train ticket deal had been a major source of competition in previous years. However, Bedard said this year, "[VIA] did not seem to advertise to students as much as they used to."

Bedard said she did not consider the bus companies to be much competition for the Tricolour. "Trentway-Wagar provides our buses so they are not that much of a threat to us," she added. "Students can pick-up tickets on campus, usually right before they leave. That's great for students making up their minds," she said.

The UBS management plans to continue with various promotions this term to maintain sales and hopes to improve service for the anticipated Reading Week rush. "Trentway-Wagar is providing us [with] another computer for before reading week to ease volume," said Gruben. "It will help to make service twice as fast."

Student leaders attend Ottawa conference

By TARA MANSBRIDGE

Former Ontario Premier Bob Rae. Harry Rosen of Harry Rosen Inc. Tony Comper, chief operating officer of Bank of Montreal. Phil Fontaine, National Chief of the Assembly of First Nations.

The list reads like a Who's Who of Canadian movers and shakers, but it is just a small segment of the long line-up of speakers who donated their time to talk to young leaders from across Canada last week.

The Canadian Student Leadership Conference, a bi-annual leadership conference run by students from Queen's, took place last Wednesday through Saturday in Ottawa. The conference hosted 65 delegates from 28 colleges and universities across Canada. The theme for this year's conference was "Leaders of Change: Foundations of Leadership for Dynamic Times."

Dawn Robertson, a fourth-year political studies student and conference chair, said the purpose of the conference "is to bring together student leaders from across the country." She also hoped to inspire them with the speakers and provide the delegates with "tangible leadership skills."

A total of 26 speakers attended the conference, including Greenpeace co-founder Patrick Moore and former candidate for the leadership of the Progressive Conservative party Hugh Segal.

"If you are serious about being a leader, you had better fall in love with chaos and complexity," said Sujit Chowdhury, the founding executive director of the Institute for Leadership Development, a United Nations global partnership programme.

"Leadership is not something we should set aside to a small minority, a tiny elite... Leadership requires resonance."

— Former Ontario Premier Bob Rae

Many echoed Chowdhury's statements about embracing change and instability in leadership roles. Other commonalities included the insistence on ethical leadership as paramount to success as a leader.

Former Ontario Premier Bob Rae also presented an idea common to the presentations of other speakers. "Leadership is not something we should set aside to a small minority, a tiny elite," he said. "Leadership requires resonance."

Despite the abundance of inspiring comments by famous speakers, many of the delegates cited something different as their favourite aspect of the conference.

"It was tremendous," said Queen's delegate Adam Daifallah, Artsci '02. "The people that were there, the speakers, the atmosphere, motale was very high."

Daifallah explained that what he enjoyed most about the conference was the interactions and discussions with other student leaders from across the country. "I think everyone there had a common purpose and that was to learn."

Conference volunteer and ASUS President Anatole Papadopoulos concurred. "I think most of the Queen's delegates were excited to meet other student leaders from across Canada," he said. "The opportunity just to interact with them and talk about the speakers was amazing."

"I feel really inspired having listened to some of the speakers," continued Papadopoulos. Delegates were selected for the conference through an application procedure which included listing their current activities and writing two essays about themselves and the future of leadership in the next millennium. The cost per delegate was $350, part or all of which was paid for by the delegates' student government organization, depending on their school of origin.

The conference was the brainchild of Sally Campbell, Artsci '97, who began the project two years ago by bringing together 62 student leaders from 15 schools across the country.

This year Robertson and the conference executive have worked hard to make the conference a better and more fulfilling experience for the delegates. The conference itself is funded completely by donations, and it is the responsibility of the team to raise the money over the 10 months they are in office.

This year, Danielle Brodhagen, sponsorship coordinator, and the rest of the conference team raised $50,000 in cash donations and $100,000 in "in-kind" donations, such as airline and train tickets. Major sponsors were Queen's, Bank of Montreal, Nortel Networks, Maclean's and the Lord Elgin Hotel.

Robertson hopes the conference will grow and eventually be held every year. She said one of the challenges the conference faces is the high rate of turn over. "If we run the conference every two years we start from scratch," she said.

This year's conference executive included Mike Beltzner, information technology co-ordinator, Laura Green, delegate operations co-ordinator, Darren MacDonald, media and communications co-ordinator, Philip Pietersman, speakers and logistics co-ordinator, Brodhagen and Robertson.

"Dawn Robertson and the committee deserve so much credit," said Daifallah. "[The conference] went off without a hitch."

Vice-president of Marketing with Labatt Breweries of Canada David Kincaid addressed delegates at Queen's Marketing Association Convention this past weekend. A former Queen's graduate, Kincaid was one of four keynote speakers to attend the three-day long event.

PHOTO BY PAUL HEISLER

Group aims to make PEC more accessible

By CRYSTAL BONA

Efforts are underway at the Physical Education Centre to improve accessibility for Queen's students with disabilities.

Rec Pals was established in 1997 by the Athletics and Recreation Department to incorporate students with special needs into PEC activities. Co-ordinator Julie Hurst said the group would like to "promote the program as well as the ability of Queen's students who have a disability, and to create an inclusive environment at the PEC."

"The first goal [of Rec Pals] is to educate Queen's students who have a disability about the benefits of exercise and to provide guidance and knowledge in developing individual exercise programs," said Hurst. Rec Pals also aims "to facilitate the involvement of these students in recreation programs and services offered at the PEC," she added.

According to Hurst, facilitating includes purchasing exercise equipment and revamping entrances to make them accessible. It also includes purchasing signs to ensure that people are aware of these options, Hurst explained.

Hurst stressed the importance of letting people know that Rec Pals exists. "Not many people know about the program, so our goal for the year is to have people with special needs made aware of what's out there for them," she said.

So far Rec Pals has received $24,000 in grants from the Alma Mater Society Accessibility Task Force, AMS Capital Allocations, and the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society. These grants have been used to purchase various equipment for students with special needs such as hand bikes, a pool lift, special showers, and magazine subscriptions which focus on physical activities for people with disabilities.

Continued from page 1

genocidal attacks against its people, was scheduled to meet various Canadian and APEC leaders at UBC.

According to Robinson, RCMP officers gave student protesters nine seconds to evacuate the area alongside the motorcade before they were wrestled to the ground and pepper sprayed.

Robinson described the incident, which resulted in more than 70 arrests, as "not only morally repugnant but without legal foundation. What happened [that day] with the Prime Minister... with the RCMP, was a profound assault on rights and freedoms."

"Canada, a democracy, took on the trappings of a police state," he asserted.

Robinson chastised the incident for having "nothing to do with security, and everything to do with providing a dictator [like Sultarto] with comfort and lack of embarrassment." He denounced the number of signs ripped down and Chrétien's outright refusal to allow any protester within an APEC leader's hearing distance.

During the fall of 1998, when Robinson challenged Chrétien in the House of Commons, demanding an apology for the use of pepper spray, the Prime Minister remarked that it could have been baseball bats.

Robinson claimed that the "clear, political direction of the police by the Prime Minister's office" signifies Canada's degeneration into a police state. Describing the entire APEC incident as the placement of corporate profits before the basic freedoms of speech and free assembly, Robinson urged students to get involved and not be discouraged. Suggesting humanitarian organizations like Amnesty International, APEC Alert and Free the Children, the MP stressed the importance of standing up against the Prime Minister's actions.

Many members of

Robinson's audience agreed with him. Rosemary Poole, Artsci '01, found it "sad that [as students] we focus on the apathy of our generation, but as soon as students show initiative, it's crushed... it's disheartening... [This is] something that shouldn't just concern UBC students, nor just Canadian students, but every Canadian."

"We should've taught by example... shown them what a democracy could be... shown them a free society... but instead of them learning from us, it seems we've learned from them," Poole continued.

After the speech was over, Robinson reaffirmed his belief that students and other concerned Canadians can, and will, make a difference. When asked what message he would give to Queen's students, Robinson replied with what he called his favourite quote: "Never doubt a small group of committed citizens can change the world... indeed, it's the only thing that ever has."

A.M.S. Executive Election and UNDERGRADUATE Student Trustee Election

FORUM

Tuesday, Feb. 2 at 6:00pm
Victoria Hall

Thursday, Feb. 4 at 6:00pm
West Campus

Monday, Feb. 8 at 11:30am
JDUC - Lower Ceilidh

Come out and listen to the Trustee Candidates, and the AMS Executive Candidate Teams

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT CATHY, CAROLYN OR SHAWN
IN THE COMMISSION OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS AT 533-6000 EXT.74815

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

CIA

Chelsea Gay

By REBECCA STELTER

Chelsea Gay believes that her personal qualities and business experience make her a strong candidate for the position of Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations).

"I'm very good at making decisions. I'm very good at listening to people's problems... I'm approachable, friendly, but I'm also not a pushover. I'm very down to earth," she said.

Gay, a fourth-year film student from Kingston, is currently on leave from the position of Operations Manager of Golden Words, where she "runs all of the financial and business aspects of the paper." She is running with Mike Beltzner and Jonathan Krashinsky covered by my mother's plan, but for students who don't have that kind of means, I think it's great."

Gay is pleased with the current system that allows students to opt out of certain AMS student fees. "I like opting out on Qcard. The more we can get on-line the better," she said. She also mentioned she would like to "extend the dates of receiving insurance letters for the student health plan."

Gay emphasized that she and her team are committed to remaining practical. "We're going in with a realistic approach," she said. "We have lots of things we want to do but we know there's only a select amount of time we have to do it in."

Gay acknowledged that some students may have misconceptions about her team. "I think a lot of people are waiting to see... because of where we all come from, where we met. People are not really sure if we're being serious or not and we are being serious," she said.

"We are definitely different but not in a bad way," Gay continued. "Because we are not part of the AMS we have a different perspective on things and that can be beneficial."

"We already know we work really well together... we do a really good job together," she said. "We all just fill in each other's spaces. We're really good friends and we also work well together so we're a pretty strong team."

"I'm really excited to be running. I think it's going to be really fun whatever comes out of it," Gay said. "I think working in the AMS would be a different experience which I'm very much up for."

Gay said she does not intend to implement many new services if elected. "I would like to set up long-term financial planning so that over a period of time things can evolve and develop," she said.

The current AMS executive is planning on implementing a student dental plan for next year and Gay said, "I think it should be opt-outable. I am personally

V-P Operations Quiz

What is your life goal?
My own Vegas Show

What was the cost of the Queen's Pub expansion?
$10,000.00
+ JDUC

What is the operating budget of the AMS?
approx. 2.5 million$

How many boards does the V-P (Operations) sit on?
Depends on the size of the Chair

What does CCBC stand for?
Chelsea's Council but cranky

Factor the following equation:
 $6x^2 + 23x + 21$
 $5(2x+4)(x+1) + (x-1)(x+1)$

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

CANDIDATE PROFILES '99

V-P Operations

University Centre management to create more space in the building for campus groups. Minns said he has already inquired into "phasing out some graduate residence space in the JDUC to give more space for clubs and activity." As early as next year the first floor of the graduate residence could be converted to extra space, he added.

In addition to improving food services at the QP, Minns would like to see improved food services at Alfie's and in the JDUC. He said he would "like to work with Queen's Food Services to make sure what students want is available."

Minns suggested late meals as something that students would be interested in. He also mentioned that he supports bringing a specialty coffee store like Starbucks into the JDUC.

The V-P (Ops) candidate said he is excited about an idea he proposed in his application for the position of Media and Services Director. The idea was to develop an external marketing office that would solicit the AMS to corporations and Alumni. The office was created during the summer; however, Minns said it was not as successful as it could have been because the EMO director's duties were not entirely clear. If his team is elected and continues to pursue the idea, Minns said the team "would try and have a more structured approach and a more comprehensive strategy."

Minns said he believes there are a lot of people and corporations that would want to take advantage of the EMO in order to increase exposure and advertising on campus. "There is a way to do this without compromising [students'] academic freedom," he said.

V-P Operations Quiz

What is your life goal?
boundless learning

What was the cost of the Queen's Pub expansion?
~$200k

What is the operating budget of the AMS?
~$5M

How many boards does the V-P (Operations) sit on?
4

What does CCBC stand for?
Canadian Campus Business Consortium

Factor the following equation:
 $6x^2 + 23x + 21$
42

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Owen Minns

By MANDY MARRIOTT

Owen Minns feels he is ready to take on the position of Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations) after spending this year as AMS Media and Services Director.

In his job this year, Minns said he "worked with a number of services and [did] management work with both individual services and the AMS."

Minns, who is running with Lisa Mori and Sarah Corman, is currently working on his second Queen's degree. He has already obtained an undergraduate degree in psychology and is now working on a computer science degree.

Minns spoke positively about the changes made to AMS services this year.

He said renovations made to the Queen's Pub "have been very successful" and, if elected, he and his team would only make small improvements to the pub, such as expanding its food service.

Minns believes greater changes need to be made to Alfie's. "Alfie's has had some problems in the past. At times booking smokers and events has been difficult."

A sub-committee of the AMS Board of Directors Strategic Planning Committee has been appointed to investigate the viability of Alfie's, Minns said. If elected, his team would take the findings of the committee into consideration before making any changes, he said.

If elected, Minns said he will continue to work with the John Dentsch

Susan Henry

By JONATHAN TINNEY

Susan Henry is running for Alma Mater Society Vice-President (Operations) because she wants to make a difference.

"I saw ways to make changes, and that was an enticing idea. I have respect and confidence in the people I am running with... I think I can do well and would love the opportunity," said Henry.

Henry, a fourth-year chemistry and economics medical student from Fredericton, New Brunswick, is running with Nick Cheeseman and Kate Bailey. She believes her experience as the Used Book Store Exchange assistant manager and ASUS Academic Chair for Orientation Week '98 have prepared her for the business side of the V-P (Ops) position.

"I got a lot of experience working at the UBS. I am now comfortable with the idea of budgeting and meeting goals," she said. "Also, being in the [Queen's] Bands, and being an Orientation leader have given me a lot of good people experience."

One of Henry's major objectives, if elected, is to improve the Queen's Bus-It program. "I would like to see the routes changed to better accommodate students from West Campus, or to make it easier for students to get the Catarauqui Centre," she said. "If a higher level of service cannot be reached, maybe a look should be taken into lowering the fee for this service."

A major role of the V-P (Ops) is to oversee the AMS services, and Henry said she approved of many of the changes the services implemented this year. "Alfie's looks great and the [Queen's Pub] is now generating a profit," she said.

"I would like to see some of the good ideas from last year expanded on," Henry said. "For instance an expansion of the QP food service menu, or space improvements in the [Publishing and Copy Centre]."

Henry said she would like to see the AMS do more for students than just offer services. "A look must be taken into the surpluses acquired this year from the Health Plan. It should be determined if the extra money was just a product of the four per cent enrolment increase or if there is a need to lower student fees," she said.

When questioned about the proposed AMS Dental Plan, Henry said, "That should be looked at in terms of necessity, it might be best to make it an opt-outable fee for the first few years."

Teamwork and accessibility are two issues highly valued by Henry. "I would like to see more communication between the commissions in the AMS. Increasing the interaction and accessibility would help to create more of a team atmosphere," she said. "Ideally I would like everyone involved to feel a part of the AMS team."

Henry said she would like to see the routes changed to better accommodate students

V-P Operations Quiz

What is your life goal?
to drive a zamboni

What was the cost of the Queen's Pub expansion?
Budgeted / Actual
125,000 / ~160,000

What is the operating budget of the AMS?
4,889,000 (~5 million)

How many boards does the V-P (Operations) sit on?
BOP, JDUC council, CCBC, ...

What does CCBC stand for?
Canadian Campus Business Consortium

Factor the following equation:
 $6x^2 + 23x + 21$
 $(3x + 7)(2x + 3)$

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Quiz Answers: 2. $200,000 total cost 3. approximately $5 million 4. 14 committees 5. Canadian Campus Business Consortium 6.  $(3x + 7)(2x + 3)$  or  $5(x + 4)(x + 1) + (x - 1)(x - 1)$

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Hey Engineers!

Catch a glimpse of your future at CIRQUE+, Feb 12 & 13 - Holiday Inn Kingston. This year's theme is "What can do with an Iron Ring?" Register now in EngSoc - deadline is February 3rd. Need more info? www.engsoc.ca/cirque, or email cirque@engsoc.queensu.ca

Give the Gift of Life.

Canadian Blood Donor Clinic of 1999. Grant Hall, February 8 & 9 for more info, or to volunteer, contact Erica at 6ejdl or 531-5266

Arts Formal Tickets

Tickets are now on sale at the UBS for the Arts and Science '99 Roaring Twenties Formal, taking place on March 6, 1999. Tickets cost $65 per person, and are available until February 19. Get them while they last!

Looking for a JOB this summer?

CREATE YOUR OWN!! ACE presents the STARTING YOUR OWN SUMMER BUSINESS WORKSHOP - Saturday, February 13th from 10:30 to 4:00. Contact Kevin at 7kam1 for more info.

AMS Executive

Open Forums

Hear the candidates for the AMS Executive and the Undergraduate Student Trustee speak.

Hear other people ask them questions. Watch them sweat on Tuesday, February 2, 6:00 in Victoria Hall.

Ask them a question and see if they squirm on Thurs, Feb 4, @ 6 p.m.

The madness continues on Monday February 8th @ 11:30 in the Lower Ceilidh..

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

Queen's Bands Executive Elections

Nominations are now open for all Queen's Bands members running for Executive positions.

For more information, contact the operations Manager.

The elections smoker will be held February 15th, 6-9 pm at the Grad Club. The elections will be held February 17th 6-8 pm in Wallace Hall.

Uphold a 93 year tradition and run!

Fast Facts

In Here

Complaint Policy and Procedure Review

The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the Review Committee wish to invite the Queen's community to offer any comments or suggestions about the policy. Written responses may be submitted

Guerilla Girls Speak Out

The Guerilla Girls will speak on Thursday at 8 p.m. in Wallace Hall, John Deutsch University Centre. Call 533-6000, ext. 74816 for details.

Senate postpones vote

Continued from page 1
"The whole issue of Canadian unity is very important to me," he said, adding he did not think "the message of being true to your country" was being communicated through singing Britain's national anthem.

ASUS representative to Senate Trevor Ogle disagreed. He regarded the anthem "as a tribute to the history of Queen's," stating that "recognizing the Queen as our official head of state is important."

Rawal said a song recognizing the Queen of England would have had greater importance in past years. "It's time to focus on where Canada is now," Rawal continued.

"As long as this university is called Queen's University, I think most people will know it has its roots in the Queen," he concluded.

For now, Senate has decided to postpone the official vote until SCAP has had a chance to review the amendments and garner further student response. As of yet, the committee has not reconvened. Perkin said, however, there is "no doubt this [issue] will come forward again."

Rawal is not discouraged by the delay. "I still think we accomplished a lot," he said, adding that 50 years ago, a Senate would probably have voted unanimously to retain "God Save the Queen."

— with files from Jocelyn Laporte

Trasheteria

Thursdays & Saturdays

All night!

How does that grab ya?

We're here every day of the week, putting together YOUR student newspaper. We write, edit, layout, design, take photos, develop them, discuss, debate, argue, run around, eat free food, suffer from a lack of sleep, and generally get things done.

Come see how we do it.

Journal Open House
Tonight, 7:30 p.m. - 10:30 p.m.
272 Earl St. (the bright blue porch)

We'll share some of that free food with you.
Honest.

One Step Beyond

THIS WEDNESDAY FEB. 3
ADVANCED TICKETS ~~10.00~~ $6

UNDERGROUND EVENTS

TUESDAY FEB. 2	WEDNESDAY FEB. 3	THURSDAY FEB. 4	FRIDAY FEB. 5	SATURDAY FEB. 6
Tunnel Tuesdays HIP HOP R&B JUNGLE DRUM 'N' BASE DJ MYTHIC	One Step Beyond	COMM '99 SMOKER	ARTS-SET100 Smoker	KALEIDOSCOPE SMOKER
TUESDAY FEB. 9	WEDNESDAY FEB. 10	THURSDAY FEB. 11	FRIDAY FEB. 12	SATURDAY FEB. 13
Tunnel Tuesdays HIP HOP R&B JUNGLE DRUM 'N' BASE DJ MYTHIC	WEDNESDAY WING NIGHT	ARTS-SET99 Smoker	ARTS-SET101 Smoker	Valentines Day Party

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

No gold in coal mine

THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT might as well have been burning the millions of dollars of taxpayers' money that has kept the coal industry in Cape Breton alive for so long. After 30 years and close to two $2 billion in government subsidies, the crown-owned coal-mining corporation Devo is still unproductive and highly polluting while the unemployment rate in Cape Breton is still high.

No one will benefit when the mines close, least of all the 1,200 people who will lose their jobs.

Although no one will benefit when the mines close, least of all the 1,200 people who will lose their jobs, the government cannot afford to continue the inept policy of pouring more and more money into an industry that is not economically viable. It should not have taken 30 years for the government to realize that the initial plan to subsidize economic activity and create jobs in Cape Breton had failed. Instead of switching the emphasis to alternative industries, education and job training, the federal government continued to throw taxpayers' money at a failing industry.

Now, with one mine closing in two years and the other slated to be privatized, the 1,200 workers have few options open to them. Many of them will likely join the ranks of the unemployed in Cape Breton, a demographic that is larger today than it was 15 years ago. Although the government has earmarked millions of dollars for training programs, few workers seem optimistic about new opportunities.

These enormous economic and human costs to the region could have been avoided if the government had acted responsibly and pulled the plug on Devo years ago.

The Mounties blow

EVERYTHING SEEMS TO BE blowing up in the RCMP's face these days. This time, however, the RCMP literally planted the bomb itself.

The questionable decision to blow up a gas well in northern Alberta is only the latest blunder by Canada's national police force. The organization is already facing considerable scrutiny over its role at last year's APEC conference and in several conflicts on Native reserves.

The Mounties may have gone too far, however, when they conspired with the Alberta Energy Company to covertly blow up a gas well as part of an investigation into eco-terrorism in Alberta. The same investigation led to the arrests of two environmental activists who are charged with conspiracy to commit eco-vandalism. Those charges may be thrown out, however, once the RCMP's conduct in the case is investigated further.

The bomb that exploded on October 14 led to a media frenzy and stirred fear in the general public. Even if this dishonest ploy by the RCMP led to the two arrests, it is unacceptable for the police to be engaged in such deceitful behaviour. It is clearly not appropriate in a liberal democracy for the national police force to spread false information and instill fear in the general public in order to catch dissident environmentalists.

Unaware that his own police force had set off the bomb, Alberta Premier Ralph Klein promised that whomever was responsible would be brought to justice. He must now respect that promise and call for a full public inquiry into the actions of the RCMP.

If the Treasury were to fill old bottles with banknotes, bury them at suitable depths in disused coalmines... and leave it to private enterprise to dig the notes up again... there need be no more unemployment.

— John Maynard Keynes

Don't trust the rodent

SO, THIS IS HOW IT'S SUPPOSED TO work: at some point today, a groundhog will poke its head out of its burrow, looking for its elusive shadow.

Now, pay attention. If the groundhog fails to see its shadow, that will mean that spring is just around the corner. However, if the groundhog does see its shadow, we are all condemned to another six weeks of winter.

You will excuse me for thinking that we should all give our collective head a shake.

We should all give our collective head a shake.

First of all, when has spring ever been "just around the corner" on February 22? Hell, even if there were a mere six weeks of winter left as of today, that would represent the earliest spring arrival in recent history. The origins of Groundhog Day are somewhat foggy, but doubtless it started in a climate much, much warmer than ours.

Furthermore, weather patterns are complex entities, determined by the Earth's orbit, oceanographic phenomena, local geological formations and a whole host of other variables that we are only beginning to understand, none of which include that diurnal activities of any one rodent.

By now, if you are a reasonable person, you should be thinking that I'm taking Groundhog Day just a bit too seriously. You'd be right, of course. The observance of Groundhog Day is pretty innocent as far as ridiculous human behaviour goes. We look for overcast skies, hope for an early spring, the town of Wyerton gets its name printed in a couple dozen newspapers and we all have a good laugh about it.

What really gets me are the practices that are as poorly grounded in reality as Groundhog Day but are so ingrained in our culture that to point them out as ludicrous is almost considered heresy.

Take astrology, for example. It's easy to imagine how astrology began, when the night sky seemed as familiar as the characters on TV are to us today. But in 1999, we know that Mars is not the bringer of war; it's a dusty, red planet. We know that Orion is not a great hunter; it's a collection of stars that form a pattern when viewed from here on Earth. That people believe these objects can affect their lives, can predict if they'll get that promotion or marry the new guy in sales, boggles my mind.

It's not that I disapprove of astrology per se. If you want to believe that a conjunction of Venus and Jupiter will cause empires to collapse and your skin to break out, go ahead. Just stop paying for it. Stop supporting companies whose mandate is to take money, at a rate of $3.95 a minute, from people who believe this sort of thing. All they give in return is a pile of nonsense and intentionally vague predictions.

I do believe that the universe is full of mysteries whose surfaces we haven't even begun to scratch. But I refuse to believe that any of these mysteries are revealed in the morning newspaper alongside the latest edition of Garfield. The universe is not that poorly designed.

BY JOHN BOWMAN

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gersin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimble
Renee Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heister

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Beltringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, February 2, 1999 • Issue 29 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Security press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further privacy policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-8728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Insurance: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation: 9,000. Issue 30 will be published on Friday, February 5, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Crystal Bona, Stephanie Carvan, Jill Child, Tania Haas, Chad Heard, Kate Hunter, Sarah Ledstone, Juliette Loeffler, Eric McDonald, Erik Mielso, Mandy Marriott, Neave Sager, Rebecca Suther, Jonathan Tinney, John Tenholme, Adra Vukinic.

Photographers: Cimi Achlam, Cheryl Cheung, Bob Huihn, Mike McDermott, Sarsion Wu.

OPINIONS

talking

HEADS

Who are you voting for in the upcoming AMS elections?

PHOTOS BY CHERYL CHEUNG

"I have no idea who's running!"
Matthew Coombs
Attsci '02

"Whoever Karla is voting for!!"
Paul Pinard
Sci '99

"Whoever Paul is voting for!!"
Karla Van Wieringen
Sci '01

"Can we mix and match?"
Ritesh Banerjee
Attsci '99

Sean Belshaw
Attsci '99

Letters to the Editors

Surface responds

Dear Editors,

I would like to thank you for your editorial "Not fit for print", which appeared in the January 29th issue of your publication. I am very pleased that you are concerned for the health of Surface Magazine, and that you are encouraging students to come out and join our dedicated core of volunteers in making Surface a better publication. My co-editor, Doris Ostendorf, and I, along with our hard-working staff, are continually striving to make Surface the best publication it can be.

In this spirit of giving, I would like to encourage Queen's students to donate their vast talents not only to Surface, but to all campus media. Lack of content plagues all of us now and again, and we at Surface would never think to be so greedy as to hoard all of the creative juices of Queen's in our own reservoir.

As one who believes in sharing with others, I should also like to point out a few minor errors in the editorial in question. I hope the unnamed writer takes this advice in the spirit in which it is offered. This issue had only four pages out of a possible 16 which concerned Bill Clinton and Monica Lewinsky. The "Man of the Year" article, which appeared on pages 8 and 9, was in fact concerned with the penis, in all its manifestations. While I realize that Mr. Clinton, by many reports, does possess a penis, he is certainly not the sole bearer of this burden, and, of course, Ms. Lewinsky cannot be included in the penis-possession category.

Lastly, having been the first official Copy Editor of Surface, a position which was created by myself and last year's editors in one of our ongoing efforts to improve the publication, I feel I must remind you that the word "asinine" is generally, and correctly, spelled with only one "s". In the spirit of volunteering to help out our campus media, if The Journal decides that it needs a Copy Editor as well, please let me know and I will be happy to render my services to you.

Jennifer Abel
Co-Editor In Chief, Surface

Cheung responds

Dear Editors,

In the January 20th issue of Golden Words, I wrote an opinion piece that was taken by some as an attack on some potential AMS candidates and a show of support for another group of candidates. That was not my intention, and I apologize if the article was taken in that manner. So, for all the students who've already decided to vote for the ex-Golden Words candidates (only officially in the running the Friday

Looking at sexual health on campus

Dear Editors,

This letter addresses the article by Laura MacInnis "Making Safe Sex Visible." First, we would like to thank you for helping to promote the Sexual Health Resource Centre to the student population, however we want to clear up a couple of misconceptions you made about our centre. The SHRC is a non-profit information and referral service that operates on grants from Queen's and the AMS. All our sales are at cost—we make no profit from them. All of our staff members are volunteers, including the Executive Board, and we all commit a large part of our free time to ensure that the SHRC is maintaining a high level of service. As the spokesperson for the SHRC, we feel it necessary to point out that in writing your article you did not consult with the SHRC to find out what it is that we in fact do to promote ourselves or what kinds of limitations Queen's itself places on our ability to increase our visibility on campus.

Unlike campus groups such as the Charity Ball committee, the Campus Crusade for Christ, Queen's Musical Theatre and many others, the Sexual Health Resource Centre is permitted only a limited level of advertising space on campus. We are not allowed to put up information posters in the residences—good luck trying a vending machine—let alone advertisements! Many students do not know what or where the SHRC or Grey House is even though the majority of first years students walk past it every day on their way to class. This is not due to lack of trying on the part of the SHRC, but due to lack of interest in having us involved in frosh week events by orientation leaders. Every year we attempted to contact the Orientation Committee about increasing

As you yourself seem to be misled in regards to what we actually do at the SHRC, we thought you might like to know. So far this year we have given about ten teach in sessions to diverse community organizations, including many secondary schools in the area as well as for Kingston HIV/AIDS Regional Services, Peer Health, KLGBA, Con-Ed students, and Adelaide Hall. We have taken part in both of the Sidewalk Sales on campus, the Health Fair in the JDUC, World AIDS Day, the upcoming Health and the Environment Conference and the sponsorship of the December 6th memorial section of The Journal.

We have held "holiday" sales for Hallow'en and Christmas, and are planning our Valentine's Day sale at present. We have a Valentine's Day presentation was misleading and did not mention most of the very important sexual health resources available to students—including misrepresentation of the SHRC as the "Sex Centre." We've heard no reply. At the very least Gaele, Bosses, Fresc...etc., should be strongly encouraged to bring their groups through the Grey House especially if they have not been there themselves.

Continued on page 10

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

ASUS

OPEN FORUMS

TUESDAY FEBRUARY 2nd, 1999
VICTORIA HALL @ 6:00 p.m

WEDNESDAY FEBRUARY 3rd, 1999
JDUC @ 4:00p.m

WHO SHOULD BE THE NEXT
ASUS EXECUTIVE?

ASUS

Continued from page 9

after the opinion piece came out), I break my voodoo magic over you! And to the students who've decided to shun the other group of candidates (who were not identified or singled-out as candidates in the article), on the direction of an obviously humorous opinion piece in a satirical newspaper, I reverse the society I apparently cast, and return your will to you. And to everyone else, I'm sorry that The Journal editorial board twisted my opinion and made you think that what I wrote was different than what I meant.

The worst thing that could happen right now is for the students of Queen's to have their vote dictated to them by any of the campus media. That's not what we're here for. Queen's students are all intelligent people, and we can usually think for ourselves. If we couldn't, we wouldn't be at Queen's. So even though the only apparent qualification to run in this election is to get 600 people to sign a piece of paper with your name at the top, we should remember that the AMS is a multi-million dollar organization. If we don't put some independent, intelligent thought into who we vote for, then we might just end up with a smack cranker as president. And just so I can avoid another editorial aimed at me, I don't necessarily mean that a junkie AMS team (if there's one out there) would be a bad thing. Just a suspiciously large portion of the budget might be filed under the heading "supplying the AMS exec with an enormous mountain of heroin."

The whole reason I wrote the opinion piece was because The Journal incorrectly

the Editors

reported the position of certain GW staff. In response to my opinion piece, The Journal editorial said that I "attempted" to castigate them for an error in a news story, whilst trying to avoid mentioning they screwed up. If pointing out that The Journal didn't bother to check an easily-verifiable fact (page 2 of every issue of GW!) is an attempt, then I guess you could say that Mark David Chapman "attempted" to kill John Lennon!

David Cheung
Golden Words Editor

Analogy is insensitive

Dear Editors,

In Tuesday's Globe and Mail, historian Allan Levine tightly asserts that "the Jews and only the Jews of Europe were victims of a systematic annihilation that the world had not seen before then or since." In the same day's Journal, Sindi Sabourin invokes an analogy between abortion and the "moral[ity]...of...Nazi Germans."

Any comparison to the ideology that spawned the Holocaust clearly trivializes the most horrific act of genocide in the history of the world. I can only assume that Ms. Sabourin would hesitate to tell my grandmother that she is only as moral as the people who starved and enslaved her for 5 years and murdered her entire family. Ms. Sabourin's comments are offensive and ignorant and deny the truth about the Holocaust. She owes a lot of people an apology.

Gabriel Desjardins
Sci '99

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Editor-in-chief candidates Open forum

Meet the candidates running for editor-in-chief of The Queen's Journal

All Queen's students, staff, and faculty are welcome

Sunday, February 7
Noon - 2 p.m.
The Journal house — 272 Earl St.

Electrical Engineering UNDERGRADUATE ORIENTATION

Walter Light Hall, Room 205

Monday, February 8, 1999
7:00 - 9:30 p.m.

Orientation Program

- ♦ The Discipline and Career Opportunities
- ♦ Electrical Engineering Curriculum
- ♦ Electrical and Computer Engineering Club Activities
- ♦ Demonstrations and Displays
- ♦ Discussions with ECE Faculty, Staff and Students
- ♦ Refreshments

- Communication Systems
- Control Systems and Power Electronics
- Microelectronics
- Signal Processing

If you are unable to attend the orientation, information on the ECE Undergraduate programs is available on our website: www.ece.queensu.ca

Continued from page 9

Smoked at Alfie's planned in February, and we are sponsoring Sue Johansen to speak at Queen's in early March. We've recently taken on the task of writing regularly for The Journal in order to help spread the safer sex word. All of this in addition to staffing our office six days a week from 9:30 am to 7:30 pm Monday to Thursday, 9:30 am to 5:30 pm Fridays, and 11:30 am to 3:30 pm Saturdays. We have also introduced brand new pamphlets and which include information about our increased product line, different STI's and birth control methods — we try to keep them distributed around campus and the community and they can be found at the Infobank, the AMS front office, The Student Health Centre, the Women's Clinic at KGH, St. Lawrence College, HARS, Club 477 and KFLA. If you haven't seen them then drop by and pick one up — while you're there we'd be happy to show you our new handouts that are up-to-date free pages with information about a variety of sexual health topics.

The safer sex vending machines which Miss MacInnis proposes are an idealized proposition which she might want to put a little more thought into.

The safer sex vending machines which Miss MacInnis suggests are an idealized proposition which she might want to put a little more thought into. First of all, the SHRC does not have the budget to fund such a huge task, nor do we have the staff to care for and upkeep these machines (we are all volunteers and mostly full-time students). Secondly, as stated above, we are not even allowed to put up posters in residences. Condoms and information booklets about the Centre were given to all of the Dons at the Don Resource Fair in a cute envelope to be placed on each Don's door courtesy of the SHRC. The vending machines in the bottom of Victoria Hall already stock condoms and menstrual products for the convenience of those students who wish to access them. If students want to buy condoms and other safer sex products at cost then they can buy them in the Grey House at the SHRC and have any questions about proper use, safety or other related issues answered at the same time in a personal setting with a knowledgeable, non-judgmental volunteer. Sometimes products that seem easy to use (ie. Pregnancy tests, Keepers, etc.) generate a lot of questions and concerns. These can be addressed and even demonstrated right in the SHRC. This far surpasses buying safer sex products from a vending machine. The trained SHRC volunteers are there to answer any questions about the products you buy, something a machine cannot offer even with added information pamphlets. Also, Miss MacInnis suggests the Keeper, an alternative menstrual product sold at the SHRC as a potential candidate for sale in these vending machines. The Keeper costs $40, comes in two sizes and has a three month money-back guarantee. It would certainly be interesting to watch some hapless woman feed $40 worth of quarters into a machine, and better still, to watch her try to return her Keeper to a machine. There are just some roles which human beings are better suited to fill.

Finally, the members of the SHRC do not believe that "the prominence of sex-related programs and services on campus encourage liberal attitudes..." We support and encourage open communication about sex and sexuality. Learning about safer sex is accomplished through special programs and activities, but mostly from talking to friends and partners. The SHRC simply offers a helpful resource where you can go to have your questions answered in a non-judgmental confidential setting.

I believe students do not feel comfortable entering the Grey House — they may not be able to buy our safer sex products, but they can always have their questions answered through our confidential phone line (533-2959). We do not believe that people who are intimidated by entering the Grey House are going to opt for purchasing products from a public vending machine. If anything, the Grey House is a safe and welcoming place where most of the organizations located within are confidential services. It is not up to the SHRC solely to educate university students about safer sex — it is also up to them individually to have their specific questions answered. We hope this clears up what the SHRC is all about for any students who were misled, misinformed or simply did not know about us. We welcome any and all students and Kingston residents to our centre.

Letter of the Week

Hannah Varo
External Educator, SHRC

Nicole Bell
Co-Director, SHRC

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Give Winter the Boot.

The Roots Tuff Chukka Boot

Regular $150.<sup>00</sup>
NOW $129.<sup>99</sup>

- Waterproof Leather
- Men's & Women's
- Canadian Made

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

Spend the Fall 99 term in FRANCE

Take 4 academic courses taught in English

Plus get intensive advanced language training in

French

The 16 week (30 Aug - 18 Dec) SELF Program is offered by the Université Jean Moulin - Lyon 3

Academic courses in the Arts, Commerce and Law

Courses could possibly count as elective courses toward any program

Designed for students with intermediate-level of French language proficiency

Application deadline: 01 March

Applications & details from: Co-ordinator, University Exchanges and International Study, Admission Services, Victoria School Bldg-2nd floor, 110 Alfred St. at Union St.

phone 533-6000 x 75379

Hab Influedza?

It's influenza season again. Headaches, sore muscles, fever, chills and a cough from influenza can be downright nasty.

Feel like helping?

Kingston General Hospital and Queen's University researchers are working on a new drug to defeat this infection. We are looking for two types of participants:

Group One

Children ages 5-12, with parental approval, who are normally healthy with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.

Group Two

Adults and adolescents age 12 and up with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.

Please call as soon as you feel these symptoms
531-SICK (7425)
or your family doctor to find out if you qualify.

A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE

PLAYER'S RACING

FOLLOW THE TEAM: WWW.PLAYERS-RACING.COM

FEATURES

ROCK 'N ROLL
PART II
IS DEAD

The McCartney Mystery Tour

Allegations that the original Paul McCartney actually died in a motor vehicle wreck in 1966 and was replaced by an impostor have mystified the public since they leaked into the media in 1969.

Was it:

1. The greatest cover-up ever?
2. A Beatle hoax intended for fun and/or publicity?
3. A fictitious product of an overzealous fan's imagination?

BY SEAN SPRINGER

DETROIT UNDERGROUND STATION WKNR-FM is believed to have started the McCartney madness on October 12, 1969. As Gary R. Patterson explains in his book The Walrus was Paul, a caller identifying himself only as "Tom" urged DJ Russ Gibb to listen closely to the fadeouts of certain Beatles' songs. It was these fadeouts that seemed to suggest to Gibb and a large number of conspirators that the true Paul McCartney was no longer among the living.

Everyone became highly suspicious. The media swiftly dissected the macabre scandal—highlights were a Life magazine cover story and a television special featuring an interview with Peter Asher (brother of McCartney's one-time fiancée Jane Asher) and Beatles' manager Allen Klein.

Certain cryptic lyrics and symbolic jacket designs off Beatles' albums convincingly suggested that while driving home in his Aston Martin late one night in November of 1966, after an argument with the Beatles at Abbey Road studios, Paul McCartney was decapitated in a car crash. Some believe that Paul picked up a female hitchhiker named "Rita," as taken from the song "Lovely Rita," where McCartney sings "Took her home. I nearly made it." Biographies of McCartney also recounted a motorbike crash on November 9, 1966 which may have resulted in facial scars that prompted the Beatle to grow a moustache for the group's next album with new material, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band.

If McCartney did, in fact, die in some motor vehicle accident, then a "new" McCartney might explain the group's alternative approach to pop music taken on in Beatles' albums from 1967 to 1969. Perhaps, as Patterson proposes, Beatlemania were only too zealous to hop onto the Paul is Dead gravy train in order to provide a sufficient explanation for the group's musical progression from one-hit wonders like "Love Me Do" to the artistic styling of "A Day in the Life."

McCartney's death could also explain why the Beatles performed their final show as a group in San Francisco's Candlestick Park on August 19, 1966 and began to shy away from the public's eye. Many believed that the Beatles may have been forced to forego public appearances at the risk of exposing McCartney's impostor.

And if it were true, just who was, and remains to be, this impostor? A relative? A genetically-engineered clone? The most widely-accepted explanation is that the winner from a Paul McCartney look-alike contest, an actor named William Campbell, underwent plastic surgery and became the new Paul McCartney. And, by an amazing coincidence, Campbell also possessed McCartney's musical brilliance and an identical singing voice.

It's a stretch, but then, most of these clues require a leap of faith. If the "Great Beatle Death" is an X-file, you can mark it under X for X-citing and X-aggerated.

The clues that follow have been filtered by using a scale of absurdity. Only the clues that meet the semi-absurd requirements are mentioned.

THE MAGICAL MYSTERY ALBUMS

Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band
released June 1, 1967

IN JUNE OF 1967, the Beatles rocked popular culture with one of the greatest rock 'n roll albums of all time, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band and if any single album was proof that the Beatles were unequivocally trying to spread a McCartney conspiracy theory, this is the album.

The cover, for instance, is frothing with clues. Over the head of the new-look McCartney, who sports a slick new moustache (possibly to conceal scars of plastic surgery?) notice the hanging hand, which can be interpreted as a symbol for death as it is in certain Eastern cultures. Notice also that the instrument Paul plays is a black English horn while the other members play golden horns. Also, the four Beatles and their waxy counterparts to their immediate right take on a solemn demeanour as they stand in front the grave of what could symbolise the late Beatle.

Look closely at the yellow hyacinths, which appear to take the form of a left-handed bass guitar (Paul's instrument). They also appear to spell "Paul?" which might be asking the rhetorical question: Is this the grave of McCartney?

The "O" after BEATLES makes: BE AT LESO. Leso is rumored to be a Greek island that Lennon purchased for McCartney's burial.

Above, though the red hyacinths spell "Beatles" to the average observer, conspirators have noticed an "o" after Beatles, which spells: "BE AT LESO." Leso is believed to be a mysterious underwater Greek island that Lennon had purchased for the final burial of McCartney. Did conspirators become so disillusioned by the McCartney scandal that they resorted to fusing the legend of Atlantis with Paul?

Ambitious conspirators also point out the car on the leg of the doll and suggest that it symbolises the Aston Martin that McCartney may have been driving on the night of his death. Next to the doll also lies a bloody driving glove.

The cover's strangest clue by far lies on the drumhead bearing the album's title. When placing a mirror in the centre of the drum horizontally, a hidden message is revealed:

I ONE IX HE ♦ DIE

which the conspirator would interpret to say: Eleven nine (the date of McCartney's alleged death) HE (the diamond points directly at McCartney) DIE.

One of the more famous clues is one that most Ontarians will spot and say, "That's not a clue! It's a police badge!" One of the inset album photos has the Beatles sitting facing the camera with Paul bearing a badge that appears to say "OPD," an acronym for Officially Pronounced Dead. Ontarians, of course, would recognise the arm-crest from certain highway patrolers and observe that the D is really a cur-off P and that the badge reads "OPP" which is an acronym for our favourite group of public servants, the Ontario Provincial Police. Look closely and you should also see a severed stitching of Ontario's crest.

Aside from the album jacket's artwork, lyrical references to the conspiracy are evident. Paul sings on the album's title song:

"Now let me introduce to you
The one and only Billy Shears
And Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band!"

Is McCartney introducing his new self, William Shears—a poetic pseudonym for William Campbell?

Continued on next page

A mock funeral procession? cover of Abbey Road, released September 26, 1969

The Grave-digger: George Harrison	The Dead: Paul McCartney	The Priest: Ringo Starr	The Deity: John Lennon
--------------------------------------	-----------------------------	----------------------------	---------------------------

Continued from last page
The last track on the album, "A Day in the Life" contained these lines:

*He blew his mind out in a car
He didn't notice that the lights had changed
A crowd of people stood and stared
They'd seen his face before*

Do these lyrics refer to McCartney's tragic accident? Is McCartney the recognisable face who "blew his mind out in a car?"

Magical Mystery Tour
released December 8, 1967

"The Magical Mystery Tour is dying to take you away
Dying to take you away
Take you today!"
— off "Magical Mystery Tour"

ACCORDING TO PATTERSON, in certain Scandinavian countries, the walrus is seen as a harbinger of death. On the cover, one of the Beatles (believed to be Paul) poses in a black walrus costume. Also, some fans have claimed that if the album were reflected upside down in a mirror, the large yellow stars in BEATLES spell out a mystery phone number supposed to hold additional clues to the case. A photo inside the album jacket shows a pair of shoes that appear to be covered in blood to the right of Ringo's drumhead, which reads "Love the 3 Beatles." A shoeless Paul stands to the right of the shoes, which is significant, as the dead are often buried barefoot in Eastern societies.

"A spooky backward track [on "Revolution 9"] also appears when a man's voice screams over and over again, 'Let me Out!'"

The song "I am the Walrus" contained a few lyrical references to Paul's death:

I am he as you are he as you are me and we are all together.

Did the Beatles act alone in hiding Paul's death from the public?

*What is he dead?
Bury my body!
O, untimely death!*

You can hear Shakespearean actors reciting these lines from a BBC production of King Lear as the song fades out.

Goo goo g'joob

John Lennon is believed to have taken these lines from James Joyce's Finnegans Wake — the last words of Humpty Dumpty before his great fall. Some fans also claim that during the fade-in and fade-out of "Strawberry Fields Forever" a voice screams "I buried Paul!"

The White Album
released November 22, 1968

WE WERE TOLD that Lennon was the walrus via "I Am the Walrus;" however, in "Glass Onion" what exactly did Lennon imply when he sang "Here's another clue for you all, the Walrus was Paul!"? Lennon's clue for us all might be an empty remark admitting that it was McCartney who wore the walrus suit on the previous album cover, not Lennon. Years later in an interview Lennon claimed that the lyric was an irrelevant joke.

During the fadeout of George Harrison's "While my guitar gently weeps," an eerie voice is believed to be heard uttering "Paul, Paul." Some conspirators purport that this could be Harrison's way of mourning for the late Beatle.

Furthermore, when the opening fade-in lyrics "Number nine, number, number nine..." of the song "Revolution 9" are reversed, we hear the line "Turn me on dead man." Patterson writes "A spooky backward track [on "Revolution 9"] also appears when a man's voice screams over and over again, 'Let me Out!' 'Let me Out!' This follows what appears to be the sounds of a terrible collision and the sounds of crackling flames."

Further mysterious backward recordings were found on the

Let it Be released May 8, 1970

White Album. Conspirators hold that the murmuring right before "Blackbird," when played backward is saying "Paul is dead now, miss him, miss him, miss him!"

What we don't have is any solid evidence besides the biographies that place McCartney in a motorcycle crash on November 9, 1966.

Continuing with the theme of death, the colour white is the colour of mourning in certain far Eastern cultures and inside the album jacket, various photos of Paul depict the cute Beatle in post-mortem states. One photo shows Paul, eyes-closed in a bathtub, appearing to lie almost lifeless. The four Beatles also pose in individual frames and Paul's photo reveals scars on his upper lip. Perhaps, as some conspirators hold, these were the scars of an impostor who underwent plastic surgery to mask his true identity.

Abbey Road
released September 26, 1969

IS A FUNERAL in progress on the cover? Draped in a white suit on the cover is Lennon, who appears to represent the church "or even the deity—white, of course, being the traditional color of mourning in many Eastern cultures." (Patterson 134) Following Lennon is the funeral's priest or undertaker, Ringo, strutting in a traditional, black suit. Next is the barefoot McCartney ("In a number of societies, corpses are buried without their shoes.") walking with his eyes closed and holding the coffin's nail in his right hand (a cigarette) which is particularly strange since McCartney is left-handed. McCartney is also out of step with the other three Beatles. Grubby George Harrison anchors the fab four as the labouring gravedigger.

Looking closely over the shoulder of Harrison at the license plate of the parked Volkswagen "Beetle," we see the "epitaph:" LMW 281E, possibly an acronym for "Linda McCartney Weeps 28 (years old) if (Paul had lived)." Though Paul was actually 27 when the Abbey Road cover was shot, it's a clue that makes you go hmmm...

The real Sean Springer was sucked into a vacuum cleaner when he was 13 and was replaced by the bastard son of Richard Simmons.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Queen's b-ball puts on show

The hard way: Duncan Cowan (#11) takes the ball to the hole.
PHOTO BY BOB HUIGH

Stifling D: Deanah Shelley pressures a Ryerson point guard.
PHOTO BY MIKE MODERMENT

DENVER REPEATS
In what seemed like a foregone conclusion, the Denver Broncos defeated the upstart Atlanta Falcons 34-19 in Super Bowl XXXIII. The game, which was held in Miami, served as a venue for Broncos' quarterback John Elway to lay claim to the title of greatest quarterback of all time. Elway, who was named Super Bowl MVP, threw for 336 yards, one touchdown and ran for another. The ageless wonder has yet to confirm or deny reports that this was his last game, but if it was, this is the way to go out. Next stop for Elway is Canton, Ohio and the pro football Hall of Fame.

TAYLOR GETS HIS DUE
Speaking of Canton, Ohio, five players were inducted into the Hall of Fame this weekend. The players were line-backer Lawrence Taylor, running back Eric Dickerson, tight end Ozzie Newsome, offensive guard Tom Mack and old-timer Billy Shaw. The most controversial of the five was first-ballot inductee Taylor, who revolutionized the linebacking position. Many believed that his problems off the field, including a very public drug problem, should keep him out of the football shrine. It is clear that the voters were able to do the right thing and elect Taylor on his merits as a football player, and ignore his flaws as a person.

AUSSIE EXCITEMENT
The least publicized of the tennis Grand Slam events, the Australian Open, ended with a familiar female champion and an unlikely men's champ. Monica Hingis won her third consecutive Australian Open singles crown with a straight sets victory over muscular French star Amelie Mauresmo. The "Swiss Miss," who is 18-years old, complemented her singles win with her third consecutive Aussie Open doubles win, this time with partner Anna Kournikova. Russian Yevgeny Kafelnikov won his second Grand Slam title by outlasting Sweden's Thomas Enqvist. Kafelnikov, who also won the French Open in 1996 benefited from the absence of top man Pete Sampras, who elected to rest during this time.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
Atlanta Falcon Eugene Robinson would get a do over for Saturday night. "The media would give Alexei Yashin a break until the facts are clear. Athletes would show one half of the joy de vivre demonstrated by John Elway after the Super Bowl."

Men lose heartbreaker in front of huge crowd

BY NEATE SAGER
The Queen's men's basketball team absorbed a heart-breaking setback last weekend, losing a 77-74 thriller to the Ryerson Rams before a lively crowd at Bartlett Gymnasium on Friday evening.

Ryerson 77 Queen's 74

The loss was a bitter pill to swallow for the Gaels. "Other than the turnovers, I didn't have a problem with what those guys did," commented Queen's Head Coach Scott Meeson, adding, "It was an exciting game and we had a great crowd... I haven't seen the gym as full."

The Tricolour came sadistically close to winning. With 52 seconds remaining and Ryerson ahead by one point, stand-out forward Derek Richardson, who turned in a gallant effort with 19 points, 10 rebounds and seven assists in 37 minutes, went to the foul line, only to miss both shots. In the dying seconds, forward Peter Stelter missed badly on a three-pointer from the right corner.

"[Ryerson's] quickness hurt us, and we didn't hit some shots," remarked Meeson, whose club, in addition to committing 28 turnovers, made only one of 14 three-point attempts. "We tried to play their [fastest-paced] game," concurred Richardson. "They were able to dictate the tempo."

The first half saw a tumultuous struggle featuring nine

Women continue their winning ways

BY NEATE SAGER
The Queen's women's basketball team scored an important victory Friday evening at Bartlett Gym, dispatching the Ryerson Rams 76-66. With the win, the Gaels, now 8-4, remained on the heels of second-place Toronto in the OUA East division standings.

Queen's 76 Ryerson 66

"It wasn't our best performance... we played well in spurts," commented Queen's Head Coach Dave Wilson, who partially attributed his team's inconsistent play to a recent spate of illness and injury. "We got into problems at times with our substitution pattern... not knowing how long some people can play."

During the initial stages of the contest, as Ryerson opened a seven-point lead after 12 minutes, the Gaels' were kept afloat by Wendy Moon, who in her return from a shoulder injury, scored 10 of the Tricolour's first 18 points.

After settling down, the Gaels jelled during the final eight minutes of the half, embarking on a 16-0 run that would give them everlasting control of the proceedings. This run was spurred by a combination of stifling defence and dead-eye shooting. The onslaught was highlighted by a pair of treys by both Steph 'long range' Glancey and Andrea Thompson. At the halftime buzzer, Ryerson received a ray of hope, as guard Miruva Muller (18 points, six steals) hit a prayer from beyond the arc, pulling the visitors within seven points, at 39-32.

Ryerson would draw within striking distance, only to have the Gaels rebuff each thrust, controlling the glass at both ends of the floor.

Opening the second half, the Gaels tipped off an 8-0 run to open a commanding lead, holding Ryerson scoreless until five minutes after intermission. For the duration of the game, momentum oscillated between the two teams; Ryerson would draw within striking distance, only to have the Gaels rebuff each thrust, controlling the glass at both ends of the floor. The home team eventually accumulated a whopping 20 offensive rebounds, and refused to gag at the charity stripe down the stretch, making 24 of 29 foul shots.

With Rams defenders challenging every Gaels' pass in hope of a steal and a subsequent fast-break bucket, the host side capitalized on their desperation with clever ball movement. "That was where we moved the ball exceptionally well... we gave [Ryerson] an opportunity to make mistakes," commented Wilson, noting the number of uncontested layups the Gaels

Please see Tough on page 16

Please see Less on page 16

Just one week, eh?
GO for a YEAR or a TERM

Hey FROSH!
There are a myriad of opportunities for you to study abroad anywhere in the world

Discover your destination at an info session featuring:

- Canadian and International Exchanges
- Video presentation on the International Study Centre (ISC) at Herstoncoeur, UK
- Present and former exchange students and former ISC students on hand to share their experiences
- Free refreshments

Wed 10 Feb @ Brockington Hall main common room
Wed 17 Feb @ Leonard Hall East common room

All sessions are from 7-8pm

Co-ordinator: University Exchanges and International Study
533-6000 ext. 75379 intstudy@post.queensu.ca

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares
Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Get your TICKETS!

- Forum Tickets
$65.00
March 6th
- One Stop Beyond
$6.00
February 3rd
- Outing Night
$5.00
February 17th
- Winterlude
$15.00
February 6th

exchange
Mon to Fri 9am - 5pm, Sat 10am - 1pm

In the game

Following the ever evolving Queen's sporting beat

Women's hockey

The women's hockey team's slim playoff hopes are close to fading away. This past weekend the Gaels suffered back-to-back shutouts at the hands of the Wilfrid Laurier Golden Hawks. On Friday night, the Gaels were defeated 3-0 in a game that was a lot closer than the final score. Hawks' goalie Charmaine Boteju came up big time after time and refused to be beaten. She entered the game with a 1-93 GAA with a mere 11 goals in six games. On Saturday afternoon, Boteju's dominance continued as she shut down the anemic Queen's offence by a count of 2-0.

Despite the lack of goal scoring, the effort by all players was present and this can be taken as a positive. The Gaels peppered Boteju with shots but were simply unable to beat the talented goaltender. If the effort remains at the same level, and the Gaels start getting some breaks, perhaps the York Yeowomen can be caught and the final playoff spot will belong to Queen's.

Fencing

Queen's University hosted Part 1 of the OUA Fencing Championships during the weekend of January 23 and 24.

Fencers from Queen's University fared well in this first of two sectionals leading to the OUA finals. Women participated on Saturday and all 12 Queen's representatives in foil, epee and sabre advanced to the Part 2 Individual Event. Queen's fencers Andrea Sommer in epee and Catherine Ratusny in sabre finished in the top three of their individual events. In the team event, Queen's and RMC will have to battle it out against each other in both foil and sabre in order to qualify as one of the three teams promoted to the finals. The Queen's women's epee team destroyed its opposition and will go directly to the finals as the top team leaving this section.

In men's competition held on Sunday, 11 out of a possible 12 Queen's individual men won a spot in Part 2. Four top four performances were provided by Queen's fencers Alexander Johnstone and Bruce Precious in sabre, Matthieu Pinard in epee, and Charles Peng in foil. In the men's team events, the Queen's sabre team was promoted directly to the finals, as was the foil squad. The men's epee team was even more impressive, winning their weapon category easily and proceeding to the finals as the number one ranked team.

Women's volleyball

Unfortunately things did not work out as planned with the team losing 3-0 on Saturday afternoon in the first game of the weekend series.

This loss left the Gaels in a precarious position as far as making the playoffs, having to sweep the Lady Nor'Westers in Sunday's encounter. The squad did come out and win, but did not do it in the requisite number of games, winning in four tightly fought sets. The team is now officially eliminated from playoff contention.

Men's hockey

The squad hit the road and did not fare very well as they lost both games on their trip. The team lost to York 4-2 on Friday night and followed that disappointing 11-8 defeat in a wild one in Sudbury against Laurentian. Despite the losses, the team remains in good position to make the playoffs out of the OUA Mid-East division.

The team hosted Lakehead University for two games this weekend, and they knew full well that a sweep was the best road to the playoffs.

PHOTO BY MIKE MCDERMOTT

Tough loss

Continued from page 15
Richardson's misses a few moments later.

With the loss, the Gaels, now 5-7, remain in fifth place in the OUA East, though with steadfast confidence. "We're not done by any stretch of the imagination... these guys have played very good basketball," said Meeson, whose club will face defending national champion Bishop's and lowly Laval at home this weekend.

Less than best effort

Continued from page 15

made during the second half. As a result, the scoring was equitably distributed, with all five starters reaching double figures: Moon had game highs of 19 points and 10 rebounds, while Thompson and point guard Deenan Shelly contributed 12 points apiece, while Glancey added 11 and wing Jacqueline Beaudoin 10.

The Gaels will face two tough opponents from Quebec this weekend, when they host Bishop's (who recently gave Laurentian only their second loss of the season) and Laval.

Rekindle your fire

BY JULIETA LOEFFLER

If it isn't pre-season training, it is post-season weight training.

If it isn't "work harder to win a game," it is "work harder to continue being on top." When you are a serious athlete, the practices never end, the pressure is never off and the stress of proper time management never lets up. All these factors can lead to burnout and staleness.

Have you ever just wanted to throw everything you ever worked for out the window?

If you are exhausted, both physically and emotionally, you no longer care about what you are doing, have little energy or interest in your current sport, you may be suffering from burnout. Others things that you might be experiencing are: feelings of low personal accomplishment, low self-esteem, feeling like a failure, being depressed, and/or having decreased performance level. Burnout is a psychophysiological response that occurs as a result of extensive training and competitive demands.

When the demands of a situation outweigh potential resources that are available, stress occurs. This could, over time, lead to burnout. These stresses can be: boring, repetitive training regimes, physical exhaustion and having too much practice. An athlete is more likely to experience burnout when he or she feels that they have little or no control over their situation.

The problem is that when someone is experiencing burnout, they are usually depressed and therefore see no way out of their predicament. The first thing to acknowledge is that you are not alone. Burnout is experienced by 47 per cent of athletes. The good news is that it is preventable and treatable. The answer lies in taking a few simple steps to avoid or treat it.

If you are exhausted, both physically and emotionally, no longer care about what you are doing, have little energy or interest in your current sport; you may be suffering from burnout.

By making short term goals to focus on during games or practices, athletes have incentives to strive for. Meeting short-term goals leads to success, which leads to an improved self-concept. Coaches should include fun goals near the end of the season to have people end the season with a positive outlook.

Communication is also extremely important. If people express their feelings, either positive ones or negative ones, it will create awareness of the situation. This awareness can be used to solve issues before they become major problems and before they lead to high levels of stress.

Take time out for yourself. This break should include physical and mental relaxation. Doing more is not always the best way to get better. Mental health is of prime importance and breaks will help any person maintain a healthy outlook.

Have your coach for your teammates find a way to manage post-competition tension and anxiety. Depression and becoming withdrawn are just some responses to losing a competition. By finding a way to cope, be it alone or with the team, stress levels can be reduced.

The most important way to cope with trying situations is to maintain a positive outlook. Focus on good traits, and things that you do well. In the words of Hamlet "nothing is either good nor bad, but thinking makes it so."

If you ever experience burnout, talk to someone about it. Do not discount your feelings. Take time for yourself and figure out what would be best for you. There are a lot of people who can help you overcome this setback. Time is on your side, and you will succeed.

Men's volleyball looks to playoffs

BY JOHN TRENHOLME

The men's volleyball team closed out their regular season this weekend on a pleasant note by sweeping both matches 3-0 against the Laurentian Voyageurs at Bartlett Gym.

Playing more like a team eager to return home and watch the Super Bowl, the Voyageurs looked both disorganized and uninterested.

The wins secured the Gaels a playoff spot in the OUA East division and home court advantage for their semi-finals match this weekend.

Any fears that the Gaels would play with complacency and quash their momentum heading into the playoffs were quickly forgotten in the match's opening minutes on Saturday. The setter-hitter duo of Michel Cameron and Jacob Magolan quickly found their rhythm as the Gaels jumped out to an early lead. On Sunday, the Gaels were assisted by the overall play of Greg Stevenson and Frederic Cotnoir, and made quick work of the Voyageurs.

The victory, however, cannot be attributed exclusively to the Gaels' strong play. Playing more like a team eager to return home and watch the Super Bowl, the Voyageurs looked both disorganized and uninterested. It was fitting then that match point on Sunday was a harmless floater served up by Brian Bell that fell untouched at the feet of several Laurentian players.

Prior to Sunday's match, the Gaels honoured the four graduating seniors who were playing their final regular season games for the Tricolour. Andrew Calder, Kevin Latchford, Stevenson and Cotnoir were all honoured for their contributions to the volleyball program and its success.

With the two victories, the Gaels finished their season at 8-4, good for second-place and now prepare to host York at 2 p.m. this coming Saturday.

PHOTO BY MIKE MCDERMOTT

ASUS ARTS & SCIENCE FORMAL '99

Q. What are your plans for the eve of March 6, 1999?

D) All of the above while Roaring into the 20's

Tickets: $65 at UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core

For information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core 183 University, 533-6000 x 7580

Trouble at Alfie's ?!?! PUB

We need your help!

The Alfie's Viability review committee is looking for students from all disciplines to participate in an informal discussion group about our beloved campus bar. We would like to get some feedback from patrons and non-patrons about what they like or don't like about Alfie's.

The session will take place this Saturday in the AMS boardroom at 4 pm. Refreshments will be provided. If you have any questions or want to comment and can't make the session please e-mail 6ijj or 6em1.

Hope to see you there!

MARCH BREAK OPEN HOUSE

ADMISSION SERVICES - STUDENT RECRUITMENT DIVISION

Wednesday, March 17 and Thursday, March 18

JOIN ADMISSION SERVICES IN WELCOMING OVER 2000 HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS AND THEIR PARENTS TO THE QUEEN'S CAMPUS DURING THEIR MARCH BREAK

SIGN UP TO VOLUNTEER TODAY!

WE ARE LOOKING FOR:

- TOUR GUIDES
- RECEPTION STAFF
- OPEN HOUSE STAFF

ALL FACULTIES AND YEARS WELCOME!

PICK UP AN APPLICATION FROM THE INFOBANK, THE AMS, FACULTY SOCIETIES, OR CALL ADMISSION SERVICES AT 533-2217

CHA GHEILL!

WANTED! Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its 50-node Novell network, Web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS commissions, services, general office and numerous committees and activities.

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. Time commitment ranges between 10-20hrs/wk. Salary approximately $7500 for the year.

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a Windows NT networking environment.
- have good communication & organizational skills.
- have a working knowledge of MS Office.
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment.
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Questions?

Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chris@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherrin, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC. Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Ultra Violet shines

PHOTOS BY LILIAN KIM

Busting Chops: Ultra Violet CD release celebration kicking into a promising future.

Campus magazine concert a hit

CONCERT REVIEW

BY LILIAN KIM

Ultra Violet recently received a nod from Moses — Znamer that is. The multi-media and multi-complex music corporation Much Music was the funding saviour for a CD compilation created by the intriguing campus magazine.

The go-ahead for the project was celebrated with a successful concert held at Alfie's last Friday.

The line-up included seven bands, all of whom submitted songs to Ultra Violet's first CD. Since the magazine received an overwhelming 250 submissions when plans for the CD were first announced, it is no surprise that Ultra Violet's Editor-in-Chief Andréa Feddersen and CD producer Celia Hatton were glowing with pride Friday night.

According to Hatton, [Much Music] was more than happy to support the magazine's venture.

Hatton, who has worked at Much Music for the past two years, approached the station last September with the proposition. According to Hatton, the popular music channel was more than happy to support the magazine's venture.

Hatton said that the objective of the CD was to expose the "huge, untapped market" of musical talent found here in Kingston. The CD encouraged submissions from both Queen's students and the Kingston community.

Feddersen found that offering the opportunity to the general community was an "excellent idea for supporting Canadian music."

The diversity of the selected bands is one of the more attractive features to the up-coming compilation. From folk to electronica and everything in between, Ultra Violet's CD is bound to appeal to many crowds.

The CD celebration drew an impressive and enthusiastic number of people who were met by an array of beats and sounds.

King of Suede kicked off the show with a comical personality and a great attitude, which

Please see Violet on page 19

Live TV Unique play hits campus

PLAY PREVIEW

BY SARAH LIDSTONE

The central feature of the typical Canadian family room is the television. The impact of television on our daily lives is undeniable. The active and visual aspects of television make it accessible to practically everyone. So it is not surprising, according to Jennifer McGettrick, an actor in the upcoming play TV, that "everyone can watch TV."

employees' jobs are essentially to watch television shows — a dream job for many of us. It deals with many of the issues and characteristics of the decade — the fashions, the role of women in the workplace, Vietnam, politics and sex — all packed into the film segments and the relationships between the stage actors.

The 40 minute long production, results in a "constant barrage of images," Goldblatt stated.

Don't expect to see everything — you can't. At some points there are three different things going on at once. "It's funky and fast-paced — very now — what the kids are into," according to Goldblatt.

"It's not a show that blasts television, saying that TV is bad. Television has an influence over society and we don't realize it, just as the [actors] in the office don't realize how much it affects them," Goldblatt added.

Goldblatt chose to do a multimedia production to expose the Kingston community to what's happening on the fringe of theatre. According to Goldblatt, there are very few multimedia shows out there, but the number is growing. There have been such shows in New York, and many of us have already been to high-budget world concert tours with massive video screens.

This particular production of TV is a rare event, as director Ariel Goldblatt decided to put a twist on the theatrical presentation by using pre-filmed video segments shown on televisions instead of supplemental actors, who have conventionally played the roles in other productions.

"The television is almost another actor," said Goldblatt.

"The show presents television as a part of modern life and asks the viewers to think about how it affects their lives," explained McGettrick. "No sense is neglected in this multimedia extravaganza."

This highly technical presentation blends theatre with television, interweaving dialogue between the two, while simultaneously exploring the storyline of the three live actors on stage. There are 43 actors in the production — the other 40 actors are characters in the television shows: The play culminates into a "live-feed," where the actors themselves become actors on the televisions.

"It flows like a television show," said McGettrick. "If we didn't have a technical director, we'd be lost."

The play, written in 1967 by Jean-Claude Van Italie, coined the "king of sixties experimental theatre," is a montage of 1960s American pop-culture. It is set in an office where the

This highly technical presentation blends theatre with television, interweaving dialogue between the two.

Goldblatt encourages people outside of the drama department to see TV because it's an entertaining play that everyone can relate to. "It's something that lots of people haven't seen before. If you're open minded, why not see it?" she questioned.

TV is showing at the Ronanda Theatre in Theological Hall February 4 at 8 p.m., February 5 and 6 at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. Tickets are only $4.

Coming out of the Closet

Gala event Cezanne's Closet an undeniable hit for Kingston

All Dressed: Cezanne's Closet on display this February.

PHOTOS BY LILIAN KIM

ART REVIEW

BY TANIA HAAS

Although the Barnes Exhibit came and went a few years ago, and a trip to the Louvre may not be one of your Reading Week vacation options, the opportunity for you to lounge into the visual arts is as close as your own front yard — or your closet. Cezanne's Closet, an annual gala fundraiser will be opening its doors to Queen's students and the Kingston community for one night only.

Held at the Howard Johnson Hotel, this year's exhibition promises a night of exposed talent and extreme excitement. Composed of over 120 contributions from Queen students, faculty and the Kingston community, Cezanne's Closet 1999 is a collection of diverse artistic ability, technique and expression.

The one aspect that could possibly inspire the exquisite prints and sculpture would be the passion of Kingston's art scene; mediums used ranged from water-colour to digital technology. Ciara Phillips used silk screen to create what struck me as an incredibly serene piece, and Liza Stiff chose beet juice as her tool for expression. The student work displayed had to go through an extensive jury process, resulting in a collection of evident talent and limitless themes.

The colour, the texture and the contrast of Cezanne's Closet unveils the talent of Queen's art department and the professionals of the region.

Former students Michael Donaldson's "The Laymen" confronts social class issues and dark, solemn subject matter, while another Fine Arts graduate, Linda Turner, depicts her experiences in "Chair Talk-Ice Storm of '98." Other works include a series by Professor Tamasauskas and several contributions by Kingston professional artists like former dancer Judith Sogopo Popiel.

The colour, the texture and the contrast of Cezanne's Closet unveils the talent of Queen's art department and the professionals of the region.

What makes this exhibit unique is not just the anticipated performance of string quartet "Igneat" nor the wine and refreshments to be served, but the "rushing of the gala guests" which begins sharp at 8 p.m.

After an hour of previewing the works, patrons and artists alike await the drawing of the ticket stubs. One by one, numbered tickets are pulled revealing the lucky recipient who has 30 seconds to claim their work of choice from the wall or show table. Adrenaline starts to pump as the exhilaration increases throughout the evening — guests wondering which artist's work will be chosen. Dana Tasic, Cezanne's treasurer admits that, "It gets pretty intense at times."

Intensity is guaranteed for the crowd of over one hundred visitors expected at the gala event, for each guest is paying $100 for the evening of artistic exposure.

All proceeds from the event go the Union Gallery, a student-run gallery which features the works of students and professionals alike throughout the year.

While the ticket price is difficult to ignore, the immense talent exhibited and the art that every guest will take home is definitely worth the cost. Dress formally, but comfortable shoes might help you in the rush for your painting.

Gallery Assistant HyeWon Yang puts finishing touches to a piece included in Cezanne's Closet.

Cezanne's Closet will be held on Saturday, February 6, 1999 at the Howard Johnson Hotel, located at 237 Ontario St. For further information regarding ticket sales or donations call 533-6000.

National and International DEVELOPMENT WEEK

February 1 - 5, 1999

Faculty invite students to audit for the week:

•ARTF 128 (B. Hunt)

"Art for Social Change" a slide lecture
Mon., 1:30-3:00 and Tues., 3:00-4:30 - Ontario Hall 205

•DEVS 200 (P. Kumar)

Guest speaker: Ofania Mena of FENACOOOP, the agricultural cooperative movement, Nicaragua
Mon., 12:30-1:30 - Walter Light Hall 205

•SOCY 225 (E. Duan)

"Marxist Theories of Globalization"
Mon., 2:30-4:30 - Kingston Hall 200

•WMNS 330 (A. Trotz)

"The Business of Hunger"
Guest speaker: Ofania Mena of FENACOOOP, the agricultural cooperative movement, Nicaragua
Mon., 6:00-9:00 - Mac-Corry E-202

•GEOG 100 (R. Stock)

"Population and Environment in Africa"
Wed., 8:30-9:30 - Dupuis Auditorium

•DEVS 200 (P. Kumar)

Wed., 11:30-12:30 and Thurs., 1:30-2:30 - Waller L Hall 205

All week:

•Fair Trade Coffee will be served free at the International Centre.

•Roy Macdonald will display photographs from Africa in the display cases of the International Programs Office, Mac-Corry and the International Centre, JDUCC.

Coordinated by the International Centre, JDUCC
Tel: 533-2604
For updates and additions check our website
<http://www.quec.queensu.ca>

Other events:

•A potluck supper will be held to give you the opportunity to meet and speak with Ofania Mena of FENACOOOP, Nicaragua.

Mon., 5:30 - Int. Centre, JDUCC

•Student groups will display their programs in an open forum.

Wed., 11:30-1:30 - Lower Colloid, JDUCC

•Help sponsor a refugee to come study at Queen's. Come out to the WUSC Refugee Sponsorship Program information session to learn more about how you can get involved.

Wed., 7:00-9:00 - Int. Centre, JDUCC

•OPIRG and the Central American Solidarity Group will be hosting a fundraiser luncheon with foods from around the world provided by development and cultural groups at Queen's.

Admission by donation, funds to support Hurricane Mitch Relief.

Thurs., 11:30 - Int. Centre, JDUCC

•SNID will be presenting Dr. Anne Macpherson, who will speak on "Gendered Developmentalism in Colonial and Post-Colonial Belize"

Thurs., 1:00 - Mac-Corry Room B204

•SALSA will be holding a salsa and merengue dance class with donations going towards Hurricane Mitch Relief.

Thurs., 8:00-10:00 - Int. Centre, JDUCC

•A benefit concert featuring the funk band, Parkside Jones, will be held for OPIRG and OMO. Tickets on sale beforehand. For information call the OPIRG office at 533-6845.

Fri., 9:00 - Clark Hall Pub

Boarding at 103

Travel Agent books crowd for CD release

TERMINAL 103

travel agent

PHOTO BY PAUL HESLER

travel agent

TERMINAL 103

travel agent

PHOTO ART BY JOHN BOWMAN

CD RELEASE REVIEW

BY ERIC McDONALD AND AORIA YUKSINIC

On Saturday night at The Shot, Travel Agent cancelled all outgoing flights and played one incredible show for the hometown.

Travel Agent, a band all too familiar to Queen's students, is now established as one of Kingston's greatest musical acts. Saturday's festivities were in honour of the release of the band's first CD, Terminal 103.

Travel Agent's musicians play their own brand of music. They are primarily a funk band, but individual songs can be readily identified as bits of trip hop, hip hop, jazz, and blues. Whether you like Herbie Hancock, Bobby Womack, B.B. King, A Tribe Called Quest, Jamiroquai, or some good ole' Kool and the Gang, Travel Agent may have something for you.

Their show featured an array of different musical abilities: trumpet, trombone, sax, keyboard, bass, guitars, congas, drums, tambourine, rainstick, and even some spinning. The different types of instruments and music are perfectly woven together by the band's creative composition.

By the time Travel Agent hit the stage, The Shot was already brimming with eager listeners and loyal fans. The band opened with "North," a jazzy funk track from the new CD. Each member seemed to be in full form, and the band's enthusiasm was quickly felt by the audience that just needed a reason to dance.

The finger picking/plucking style of lead guitarist Mike Budd was impressive, as was the incorporation of diverse styles of percussion into their music.

The next song, "Get Up," featured the vocals of singer/trumpet player Brendan Wypich. Unfortunately, the band suffered from a momentary loss of microphones due to an electrical mishap. While the problem was being fixed, Travel Agent helped pass time by doing a bit of old-fashioned jamming.

Power was quickly restored however, and the band went on to play "Chemical Smile," a mellow tune from the CD.

Please see 103 on page 20

Lilith Fair at Edward Day?

Erin Corday and Terry Tufts get intimate at the gallery

CONCERT REVIEW

By KATE HUNTER

The Edward Day Gallery was alive with the sounds of the folksy blues Saturday night as two talented artists, Terry Tufts and Erin Corday took the stage to play for a small audience. The intimate setting was a perfect showcase for the talent which displayed a rich soulful blend of folk and pop, with a little in between sets of humour.

Corday is Sarah McLachlan, Ani DiFranco and Lori Carson rolled into one, only better.

Tufts hir the stage first. He's Canadian, he's sarcastic and he's innovative. With an absolute mastery of the guitar and an equally worthy voice, Tufts launched into a set full of beautiful songs which touched on all his passions: nature ("Carmena"), Canadian culture ("Tearin' up the Tundra," a song inspired by an Inuit dance party), and life itself ("I'll Try Again").

In between songs, Tufts entertained the audience by giving running commentaries on his idols, including Gordon Lightfoot, who he honoured with a rendition of "That's What You Get for Lovin' Me." He also commented on the disappointment he felt when technology took records away from him, "you can't roll on a CD cover like you can on an album cover — roll cigarettes, of course," Tufts said with a smile.

A little Lightfoot combined with some Blues Traveller best defines Tufts — an artist whose music is as honest and natural as the artist himself. After a short intermission,

PHOTO BY SAMSON WU

Sweet Tunes: Corday enchants Edward Day gatherers.

Erin Corday took the stage. She stood centre stage and introduced Joel Litwin, her percussion man, thanked us all for coming and, after taking a deep breath, began to sing.

angels, quiet accusations and brave triumphs.

Before every song she joked timidly with the audience, playing off of Litwin and truly enjoying herself. Strong and reaching, Corday's voice echoed with emotional integrity.

While Corday quietly whispered the lyrics to her song "Who Says" — "Don't give up on me, I need your little birds in my ear," — the audience sat mesmerized. Other strong songs were the Portuguese translation of Sting's "Fragile" and "Painter's Eye," a tribute to a fellow artist who provided the cover art for Corday's latest album Painted Door.

An encore performance of "Blue Moon" — Bosanova-style — was a perfect ending to Corday's set, which was followed by a rhythmic percussion set over which Corday's voice flew without guitar chords to guide it.

Before every song [Corday] joked timidly with the audience, playing off of Litwin and truly enjoying herself.

A brave and talented artist, Corday has Lilith Fair written all over her. If you didn't catch her last Saturday night, keep checking the bill until the rest of the world falls as in love with her music as the Edward Day Gallery's audience did.

Futurelink and Alumni Affairs proudly present

MEDS' INFORMATION DAY
DUPUIS AUDITORIUM

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6th
1 to 5 PM

Speakers included:
The Dean of the Faculty of Health Science
The Head of Admissions of Queen's Med School
The President of the Aesculapian Society
An Obstetrician/Gynecologist
An MCAT course instructor

Queen's University Alumni Association

Sylvat Aziz
MAQAMAAT

ARTIST'S TALK
3 February, noon-1 pm

Free admission
Exhibition continues to 7 March
Presented with the financial assistance of The Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario Arts Council and the City of Kingston.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre
218 Barrie Street, Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613-533-2190 Fax: 613-533-6765
http://www.queensu.ca/ageth/

Want to be part of the Grammys?

Check out A&E this Friday for details.

SENATE COMMITTEES NEED STUDENT MEMBERS

Academic Development, Educational Equity, Information Technology ... and more

Terms start September 1
Apply now! Do it before Valentine's Day
Deadline: February 14

www.queensu.ca/secretariat/senate/vacancy

or call 533-6095
or visit MACKINTOSH-CORRY, B400

New film Salvageable

Indie Sci-Fi drama scores with action

FILM REVIEW

By JEFF CHILD

Take away the stretch limousines, beaded gowns and high profile celebrities. Add slushy boots, salt-stained pant legs and burgundy Queen's jackets and you have the illusion of a Hollywood premier.

On Sunday night an intimate crowd bustled in to the ASUS Theatre to view the release of Jędrzej Jonasz's independent film Salvage. Moviegoers, cast and crewmembers excitedly exchanged best wishes and congratulations eagerly while the house lights dimmed.

While the film was produced on a tiny budget, no cost was spared on the cast and crew's creativity, hard work and dedication to the project.

The film takes place in the year 2214. In this futuristic setting, darkness and military might are prevalent. The story follows Crisis, a curt young investigator played by Queen's student David Rankine, who teams up with Tellia, a vengeful army officer, played by local talent Gloria DiPolco. The two detectives find themselves trekking through the final frontier, caught up in a "who done it" murder mystery.

This 30-minute sci-fi drama was surprisingly entertaining. While the film was produced on a tiny budget, no cost was spared on the cast and crew's creativity, hard work and dedication to the project. The actors played convincing roles and made good use of the script and mundane sets in order to make the film work. The computer animation and sound effects enhanced the film's professional quality and created the illusion of an intergalactic universe.

As a fledgling project, Salvage was a success, but in future projects the cast and crew must tighten up and refine their existing talents. For instance, in efforts to capture 23rd century dialogue, the writer attempted to saturate the script with technical jargon; however, the dialogue turned out slightly monotone and pretentious.

I think the cast and crew of Salvage has done a marvelous job at using the resources at hand and taking extra risks to make the film inventive and enjoyable.

The casting also lacked in certain areas. I was put off by the fact that the only African-American actor in the film was cast as a gun-wielding perpetrator. Call me sensitive, but casting is extremely important to the interpretation of a film and unless the director wanted to create a racial stereotype he could have used his actor in a less perilous role. These small elements separate the box office sleepers from box office smashes.

While criticism is an integral part to any movie review, it is not intended to down-play a film's artistic content or the attempt made by the players to create an entertaining and thought-provoking movie.

I think the cast and crew of Salvage has done a marvelous job at using the resources at hand and taking extra risks to make the film inventive and enjoyable.

If you get a chance go see Salvage, remember, success isn't born overnight, but if this young cast and crew persist, success is imminent.

A&E in brief

Domino effect: Fitness guru Richard Simmons admits he craves pizza and has to go undercover to get it. "There's a Domino's four blocks from my house, so I have to lower my voice and say 'Hi, this is Mr. Reveles. I'd like a pizza.'"

A Big league of her own: Rosie's fatter than she's ever been. "I'm, like, 208 pounds and when I stepped on the scale it shocked me," she said. Rosie has since organized the Chub Club.

Tight Ends: Superbowl watchers may have been distracted by WWF and Victoria Secret commercials during the game. Thirty advertisers each paid an average of $1.6 million for 30 seconds of advertising.

Cry me a Rivers: Joan Rivers must be fuming — the long time pre-Oscar show host has been replaced by Geena Davis for the annual awards bash. Davis said, "I can guarantee it will not include anyone yelling 'Who made your dress?'"

FRANSELLY
Hair & Esthetics

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St.
549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples.
www.Fransellyhair.com

Got some time?
BIG SWING TUESDAYS

live with
The Swing Cats

Dance contest & prizes
Martini on the rocks

It's a Swing thing!
Free Swing Lessons from 7-9pm.

The COCAMA

178 Ontario Street • On the Waterfront

Classifieds

$ .99
Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS
WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available

Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Halt an hour away. Visit our website - www.liveweb.com/bluerof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

EATING DISORDERS CAMPUS FORUM: HOW DO I HELP? If you or someone you know is struggling with an eating disorder our panel can help. Get answers to your questions from counsellors Dr. Mike Condra and Francoise Mathieu and a recovering eating survivor on Tuesday February 2nd 5:30 - 6:45 Policy Studies 202. Sponsored by the Health Outreach Program, Health, Counselling and Disability Services.

KNOW SOMEONE suffering from an eating disorder? Unsure about how to help? Get answers from experts at the CAMPUS FORUM, February 2nd, 5:30 - 6:45 p.m. Policy Studies 202. Sponsored by Health, Counselling and Disability Services. Call 533-6712 for more information.

SAVE MONEY! Save money on your formal ticket by helping out at the Artsci 99 Formal. Volunteers are needed for setting up, cleaning up and helping out during the formal (March 8th). Checking coats, dealing Black Jack hands, etc. If interested, please contact Steve at 544-6000 ext. 75085 or stop by the ASUS Core.

COMFORT FOOD that is cheap, quick and nutritious and you can make it at our next cooking class on February 10th, 5:30 p.m. at the International Centre. Call 533-6712 to sign up for this free class. Sponsored by the Health Outreach Program.

FREE BRIDGE LESSONS. Next session starts Monday February 9th at 7:00 p.m. in the Robert Sutherland Room (Upper JDUUC). For more information contact Liam at 531-3411 or email: lwte@qlink.queensu.ca

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CD's, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9096.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FAC-

ULTY: We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellington.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

IF ANYONE is interested in creating an all, 2600 club at Queen's. Email me at: daveconnie@hotmail.com

BE IN CHARGE! Head House Attendant applications for the Artsci '99 Formal are now available at the ASUS Core.

FREE ROOM AND BOARD in exchange for evening helping with child care and household duties. 4 evenings per week 5:00 - 8:30 p.m. Female with experience and references please. 549-8565.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnie@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Phyzed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Allred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS

EVERYTHING WE DO, we do it for ASUS. Alison Lam and Brian Adams for ASUS Executive. Don't forget to VOTE, February 9th & 10th.

VOTE CHRIS SAFFORD AND SHANNON BELL for ASUS Exec. They will get your ASUS moving.

EVERYTHING WE DO, we do it for ASUS. Alison Lam and Brian Adams for ASUS Executive. Don't forget to VOTE, February 9th & 10th.

VOTE FOR ALISON LAME AND BRIAN ADAMS for ASUS Executive. Helping to bring ASUS to the people. Visit us at http://members.xoom.com/brian\_adams

LET'S GET YOUR ASUS moving. VOTE Chris SAFFORD and Shannon BELL for ASUS Executive. Let's bring ASUS into the 21st Century.

Just $4 for students • $10 for local • $15 for national
Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday publications and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday publications.

UBS Exchange Viability Review Open Forum

The AMS Board of Directors is conducting a standard review of the Used Book Store Exchange and Tricolour Express. We will be hosting an open forum on Monday, February 8th at 2pm in the Music Listening Room of the John Deutsch University Centre. All students are invited to drop in and express their views and ideas about the UBS.

Comments can also be made through e-mail to brts@qlink.queensu.ca

Why be a typical frash leader when you can be a GECKO?!!

NEWTs [New Exchange WooooHooooo (the castlepeople too) and Transfer students] Week 1999 is lacking for dedicated, sexy, orange-loving, Papsicle-licking leaders!!!

INTERESTED? Yes? Then pick up an application at the AMS OFFICE in LOWER J-DUC.

Questions? Maybe? E-mail the Kimana Dragans at: newts@www.ams.queensu.ca

.....orange is sexy

MISC's 1st Annual AMS CANDIDACY IRON LUNG COMPETITION

How do you decide which trio of AMS hopefuls to make triumvirate? Whichever team's names roll off your tongue the best? Whichever team hands out the shiniest buttons? Whichever team has promised you sexual favours? Whichever team regularly provides you with sexual favours already? It's tough to say. Personally, I'd pick the candidates who are willing to go the distance, who follow through with what they promise, and who demonstrate a high degree of good sportsmanship. And there is perhaps no better way to discern this than to have them all stick their heads in a giant fish tank filled with water. In the interest of students, MISC turned this theory into reality. A cold, wet, weed filled reality. Candidates were asked to pick a representative, predict their time, and do the deed. Each team was also asked how they planned to clean up the shore of Lake Ontario after the dirty, dirty frosh dirty it up next year. The results are telling. . . [Note: but not too telling. I mean it's not like you should base your vote on the results. But if, of course, you have no other way of deciding, you have permission to cast it accordingly. Shame on your lazy, petty, yet still voting ass though]

THE YARDSTICK
Danush Viswanathan

Danush is on the Queen's mens swimming team, competing in the 100 metre butterfly and 100 metre freestyle. He was nice enough to let us use him to gauge the other candidates' performances.
His Time: 2 min. 16 s.

TEAM BRITA
Nick Cheeseman
Sue Henry
Kate Bailey

Projected Time: 41 s.
Actual Time: 1 min. 7 s.
Solution to pollution problem: "Cool the frosh with industrial strength solvents so that they'll actually be cleaning the lake as they do the Oil Thigh."

Cheeseman easily beat his rather lome projected time. Still, he lasted less than half as long as Viswanathan, who didn't even seem to be trying very hard. His teammates were pretty chipper, and enthusiastically spurred on their wee-lunged hopeful to a mediocre finish.

U-BOAT DELIGHT

Mike Beltzner
Chelsea Gay
Jon Krashinsky

Projected Time: 1 min. 45 s.
Actual Time: 1 min. 51 s.
Solution to pollution problem: "Anything that survives after 30 years of that much abuse is likely to be unaffected by frash week. We've sent representatives to meet with Trout and Solmon communities, ensuring open communication on issues like spawning methods, etc."

A lone Krashinsky, armed only with a hair elastic and determination, proved to be the most irony-lunged competitor. Jon had a yogo-type breathing technique, which served him well. Several times during his dunking he made disturbing guttural, wounded-onimol type noises, and we considered pulling him out, but he went the distance and finished with the winning time. Congrats.

MISC. Next Issue: George Reimblatt appeals to the Queen's community at large for a date to the formal. Plus, MISC's Winter Contest and the return of Sarah's Recipe Corner.

TEAM WET BLANKET
Sarah Corman
Owen Minns
Lisa Mori

Solution to pollution problem: "Start up a 400 level marine biology class whose protocols include cleaning up the shore."

This team was a huge hassle to get this team into The Journal house even for a brief 10 minute appointment. They rarely returned our phone calls and kept saying things like "Is it really safe?" and "I still don't see the point." When Corman and Mori finally showed up, they predicted that their representative dunkee Owen Minns would last 12 hours, even though Owen wasn't there of the time. They proceeded to pull out a piece of paper cut into the shape of a fish with "Owen Finns" written on it and dropped it in the tank (top photo). Then they giggled like little schoolgirls. Based on this evidence, we elected to christen the team "Wet Blonket" rather than "Team In-Finn-ite," as the team had already decided. Not being amused (mostly because we felt they were openly mocking the competition), we tracked Owen down at home, and with help from his housemate (who was only too pleased to oblige), tricked him into opening his bedroom door. A surprised and very hungover Owen attacked the photographer, nearly destroying Senior Clicky's expensive camera in the ensuing scuffle (bottom photo).

Paul Heisler asked to cover Rose McGawon but got the AMS Candidates instead.

Ken Butland's record is 48 min. 26 s, but it ain't far breath holding if you know what I mean. It's for eating a really big hoogie.

Play

P&CC
The Publishing and Copy Centre

WHERE'S WALDO?

2 for 1 Colour Copies in February

Make Enlarging, Reducing, Multiplying and Finding Waldo Easy

Offer Does Not Include: AMS Services Card, Glossy paper copies, or Transparencies

It's YOUR newspaper...

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

do you care?

Editor-in-Chief Open Forum
Sunday, February 7, 1999
472 East St.
12-2 p.m.
Help decide the fate of your paper.

since 1873

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1999

Ontario medical students protest tuition hikes at Queen's Park Tuesday afternoon in Toronto.

PHOTO BY JONATHAN TINNEY

Meds protest at Queen's Park

BY JONATHAN TINNEY

Medical students from across the province descended on Queen's Park Tuesday in protest of rising tuition costs. Among them were roughly 120 Queen's students who journeyed to Toronto to participate. Last spring, the Harris government approved the deregulation of medical school tuition, which has allowed universities to raise costs by as much as 333 per cent.

"Universities are publicly funded institutions. Deregulation allows them to raise funds without any public accountability," said Shiva Jayarman, President of the University of Western Ontario's medical class of 2002. "They have increased tuition too high, too fast, with no consideration for how the increases will affect accessibility to Ontario health care."

The demonstration began in the University of Toronto's Medical Arts building where more than 500 students assembled. After several speeches the group made its way to Queen's Park, all the while shouting, "access to education, access to health care."

"They have increased tuition too high, too fast, with no consideration for how the increases will affect accessibility..."

— Shiva Jayarman, President of UWO Meds '02

Once at Queen's Park, the chanting ceased and the silent protest began. The group proceeded en masse in a quiet procession around the Legislature, and into the building where an official press conference was held.

"I feel this is important and because the issue tends to overlap with earlier protests made by students and doctors, hopefully we can add to the message that they were trying to convey," said Yvonne Lau, a second-year Medical student at the University of Toronto.

The group's main focus is the initial access to funding for a medical education, not necessarily the large student debt load. While debts can rise as high as $100,000 when undergraduate costs are factored in, the group admits that the debt load is often counterbalanced by future earning power, even though that level of compensation is not reached for many years.

They argue that tuition is rapidly outpacing available government and personal assistance. As present, McMaster

Please see Med on page 7

Security alert

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

On Monday evening two suspicious males were seen wandering in the Biosciences complex and in Miller Hall. One of the males was carrying a scribe, a sharp metal probe with a wooden handle, which is used in biology experiments. A pair fitting the same description, again carrying a scribe, were again seen Tuesday evening in the Biosciences complex.

One of the males is described as 16-18 years old, 5'10" with short black hair, and the other as 18-20 years old, 6' with reddish hair. Both are Caucasian.

"As far as we know they haven't done anything yet," said Louise Fish, director of Campus Security, but she added "we've had a lot of thefts [in that area]."

Fish said they were unsure about whether the scribe was intended as a weapon or as a device for breaking and entering. "We're asking people to keep an eye out," said Fish.

Campus Security is asking that no one approach the suspects, if seen, but instead contact the emergency report centre immediately.

Alfie's double booking

BY FIONA SCANNELL

On more than one occasion this year, on-campus groups and student-run organizations have been denied the opportunity to fundraise at Alfie's Pub due to double-booked events.

The most recent incident occurred last Friday when the ASUS '01 smoker was cancelled in favour of an Ultra Violet fund-raising concert.

Paul Przybylo, acting president of the ArtSci '01 year society, said he was only given one week's notice about the double-booking. Two '01 smokers were held at Alfie's last term, and two more were booked for this term. Przybylo said the ASUS executives were given the dates for the smokers at the beginning of the school year and he was not expecting to have these dates cancelled.

Members from the Engineering Society also complained to Alfie's management about the cancellation of a smoker during first term. While attempts were made to reschedule the smoker, the dates available were not appropriate.

According to Przybylo, a smoker generally brings in at least $200 for the year society. Aside from this loss, he estimated $30 was spent on ads publicizing the non-existent smoker. Since the money that went into advertising the event came out of the ASUS '01 account, it was "the students' money that was wasted."

Please see Financial on page 7

index

Volume 126, Issue 30
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Science	11
Editorials	8	A&E	18
Opinions	9	Classifieds	22
Features	13	MISC.	23
Sports & Fitness	15

WEATHERWATCH

Today

Cloudy periods
High 1°C; Low -7°C;
POP 10%

Saturday

Cloudy with showers
High 0°C; Low -6°C;
POP 60%

Sunday

Cloudy periods
High 1°C; Low -8°C;
POP 10%

Monday

Partly cloudy
High 5°C; Low -5°C;
POP 30%

Forum for debate AMS candidates discuss issues

BY JOSEPH BREAN

On Tuesday evening, the three teams in the running for AMS executive participated in an open forum in the Victoria Hall common room. This annual event is an opportunity for each team to deliver its election platform and field questions from an audience of students.

First to speak in the open forum was Presidential candidate Michael Beltzner, who spoke on behalf of his co-candidates Jonathan Krashinsky, for Vice-President (University Affairs), and Chelsea Gay, for Vice-President (Operations). Repeating the team's catch-phrase, "Government must be run like any other business," Beltzner expressed the team's deep concern for what they perceive to be poorly run student services. With his time running out, Beltzner stressed that his team, composed exclusively of Golden Words staff, has a sense of humour but is certainly not a joke. These self-proclaimed AMS outsiders plan to use their business experience to make every student service "cost effective," he said.

Next on the bill was the team of Sarah Corman, presidential candidate, Lisa Mori, for V-P (UA), and Owen Minns, for V-P (Ops). Mori's comments went straight to academics,

Please see Candidates on page 7

Ticketmaster hits UBS

By STEFAN MURRAY

Students who visit the Used Book Store Exchange can buy texts, clothing and, as of last week, tickets for Tragically Hip and Dave Matthews Band concerts. The UBS exchange has recently become an official agent of Ticketmaster, providing a new service for students on campus.

"We expect this to be a successful financial endeavour and, more importantly, an excellent service to students," explained Vanessa Gruben, UBS exchange head manager. The UBS exchange now offers tickets to students for events such as concerts and sporting events across Canada and Upper New York. Students can order tickets over the phone at the Ticketmaster 1-800 number and pick them up at the UBS or they can buy tickets for events at the store in person.

"It should broaden the UBS to make it more than just used books," added assistant manager A.C. Bedard. The Ticketmaster outlet has been operating as a part of the UBS exchange for a week now and, according to the management, business has been heavy.

The idea for to create a partnership with Ticketmaster came about last summer when management was attempting to bring a new service to campus that was both convenient to students and financially lucrative. "The more traffic [we have], the better we do," said Gruben.

The partnership is mutually beneficial. Ticketmaster provides the technical equipment and the UBS receives a percentage of the commission for tickets sold.

"Ticketmaster was really keen about having an agent on campus because it is such a large market," said Gruben. As it stands there is only one other Ticketmaster agent in Kingston, at Sunrise Records at the Kingston centre.

Although some students on campus have yet to hear of the service, they do believe they will use it.

"I haven't heard of it but I think it's a great idea," said Steve Burmaster, Arts '00 "it will help students access concerts around North America," he said.

"Once we start advertising outside of Queen's, it should be bigger," said Bedard.

Students can enjoy the convenience of a new Ticketmaster outlet in the JDUC's Used Book Store Exchange. PHOTO BY SEAN RICHMOND

CORRECTIONS

In the previous issue of The Journal, the Sports and Fitness section incorrectly stated that the women's volleyball team had been eliminated from playoffs. The Journal regrets the error.

The International Centre provides services and programs to Queen's students interested in exploring the world.

What's Happening at the International Centre?

Monday, February 8
"Western Europe"
Music Listening Room, JDUC
5:30 - 7:00 pm

Tuesday, February 16
Pre-departure Information Session One
Music Listening Room, JDUC
5:30 - 7:00 pm

Saturday, February 13
Winterlude Bus Trip
Tickets on sale at the International Centre until February 11

The International Centre

at Queen's University in the John Deutsch University Centre just past the Queen's Pub
Tel: (613) 533-2604 Fax: (613) 533-6190
http://www.quic.queensu.ca

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings (with the purchase of a beverage)

Get out while you can!

CAMP OUTLOOK

SUMMER 1999

Information Seminar

Wednesday, February 10

John Orr Room, JDUC @ 7:30 pm.

Come see a professional slide show of majestic Algonquin Park. Refreshments provided. Chat with former Outlook Staff.

Camp Outlook is a Tripping Camp for at-risk and under privileged youth, ages 13-17. We have four rounds of 10 and 15 day Canoe Trips in Algonquin Park. No experience necessary.

We offer you:

- An Ideal Leadership and Outdoor Education Experience
- Free Room & Board in Kingston, June 1- August 31.
- Over Fifty (50) Days in Algonquin Park
- Bronze Cross Swimming and First Aid Certification

Applications available at the Camp Outlook Office, JDUC Rm. 341

Hotline: (613) 544-6444 or 548-7238
Website: http://www.ams.queensu.ca/outlook

Students demand 24-hour computer labs

By JENNIFER MORRISON

Students who do not own a computer may be at an unfair disadvantage due to the lack of 24-hour computer labs on campus.

With a total of 381 terminals, Queen's currently offers numerous public and semi-public computing sites across campus, but only the lab in Jackson Hall is open 24 hours.

Fourth-year Con-Ed student Susan Macdougall said she believes all students should have equal access to a computer, regardless of whether they own one or not. "Students without unlimited access to a computer are faced with an unfair disadvantage," she said.

Doug Crowe, coordinator of Research Facilities and Computing management, said this is "primarily due to staffing and security reasons... we can't leave the buildings open unless they are staffed."

Crowe's concerns are based on the fact that vandalism has been a problem in the past in overnight labs.

Last semester the 24-hour Jackson Hall lab was shut down nightly because of continued problems with damage and vandalism.

Micro Computing Resource Coordinator for the Faculty of Applied Science Geoff Mulligan recounted that he would routinely enter the lab each morning to find it in total disarray, often with beer bottles, pizza boxes and garbage strewn about. One morning Mulligan arrived to find that someone had "torn down all the signs, punched a fist in one of the monitors and then popped off the keys from a keyboard with a screwdriver."

"24-hour computer labs are an essential service that should be provided."

— Mara Abals, fourth-year student

Even though there is no budget to support 24 hour a day staffing, Mulligan said, he does not believe lack of staffing is the issue. "There is no need to have someone there 24 hours a day. Students need to respect the rules and facilities," he said.

Despite the presence of the Jackson Hall lab, some students are upset with the level of service being provided by Information Technology Services, especially now that a growing number of course materials are only available electronically or on CD-ROM. Even students who have their own computers have to rely on campus computers for course specific software.

"I really like to work late, and there are times when I'm going to have to be up all night to get an assignment done," said fourth-year student Mara Abals. "24-hour computer labs are an essential service that should be provided."

Macdougall shares a similar viewpoint. "Students who have busy timetables often do not have time to begin working on their assignment until later, and by the time they get going, the lab closes," she said.

Crowe maintained that an increasing percentage of students are acquiring personal computers, especially now that prices are beginning to fall. He estimated that approximately 85 per cent of all students in residence have their own computer.

In the meantime, the Jackson Hall computer lab will remain open 24 hours a day, seven days a week "as long as students respect university property and the university guidelines," Mulligan said.

An on-campus computer lab. PHOTO BY SAMSON WU

Mexico hosts student leaders

By CHRISTINE TYRRELL

What happens when a group of notable world leaders and future young leaders come together to share their ideas? Two Queen's Education students recently had the opportunity to find out first hand.

Heather Hedges, Con-Ed '99, and Greg Frankson, Con-Ed '97, were among the participants who attended "The Stare of the World Forum for Emerging Leaders" conference held in Monterrey, Mexico from January 28 to 30.

Hedges and Frankson were among 15 Canadian participants at this year's conference. "It was a shame that there were not more Canadians attending," Hedges said, adding that the largest portion of delegates were from Central America.

The 600 student delegates were mostly university students "in non-governmental organizations working towards justice and social change," Frankson said. "It was a really unique opportunity to meet young people from across the world doing different things in their communities to increase civic participation."

"The most uplifting aspect of the trip was to know that there are other youth in the world who work every day towards making their communities a little better. This combined with the validation of our efforts from world leaders created an atmosphere of nothing but hope," Hedges said.

Well-known Nobel Peace Prize winners who addressed the students included former President of Poland and Solidarity Movement leader, Lech Walesa, and leader of the South African Truth and Reconciliation Commission, Archbishop Desmond Tutu.

Both Hedges and Frankson agreed "the most memorable moment was when we were at the formal banquet and Lech Walesa and Desmond Tutu were sitting at the table beside us."

Students chose from 42 different expert-run workshops, on topics ranging from poverty to the treatment of elderly people. Hedges chose the development of science and the promotion of human rights.

"It was a really unique opportunity to meet young people from across the world doing different things in their communities to increase civic participation."

— Greg Frankson, Con-Ed '97

"There was a gentleman who was exiled from China for quite a few years. He is now working out of New York City on human rights issues in China. It's one thing to hear about it on the news, but it's another thing to hear him talk about it," Hedges said.

Another speaker was Hafsat Abiola, the 24-year old daughter of Chief Moshood Abiola, who was elected president of Nigeria in 1993 but was prevented by the Nigerian military regime from taking office. Arrested and imprisoned for treason, he mysteriously died of an alleged heart attack. Kudirat Abiola, his wife, who vocally campaigned for her husband's freedom and right to assume the presidency, was assassinated. Hafsat is now a vigorous campaigner for Nigerian democracy and freedom.

Hedges said it was emotional, "to hear her sit there and talk about how she hasn't lost anything, but has only gained. She's a beautiful person."

The conference "stressed the importance of education, action, and developing a strategy which is inclusive and which has integrity. To be the difference that makes the difference," Frankson said.

Studio Q delays videos

By SEAN SPRINGER

A delay in the production of two sets of Orientation Week videos have students in the Faculty of Applied Science at grievance with Studio Q. All the videos were in distribution last year as of mid-October, however, videos for the Faculties of Concurrent Education and Arts and Science have just been released as of yesterday and today respectively. Applied Science videos are still in production.

"I don't think it was a priority for them... I think they're going to have trouble selling the videos."

— Jen Myhill, head Gael for ASUS Orientation Week '99

Studio Q, the student-run television program, has been taping Frosh week events for four years. This year, Studio Q is responsible for the distribution of the Arts and Science and Applied Science videos while the Con-Ed orientation committee is distributing their own videos themselves. One of the Applied Science videos is taped independently, on behalf of the Applied Science orientation committee. Studio Q was hired by the committee to produce this particular video.

"I accept full and utter responsibility," said Gabriel Simms, Studio Q promotions. Simms would not specify the exact causes for the delay, but noted that technical difficulties were causing significant problems. "I accept that there was a certain level of technical failure that was out of our hands," he admitted.

According to Studio Q executive producer Ariel Goldblatt, the studio met the projected release date for Con-Ed videos while Applied Science and Arts and Science videos had no formal release date.

"It's unfortunate," Goldblatt said in reference to the continuing delay in the Applied Science videos. She also cited technical difficulties as the main source of the delay.

Scott Snowden, logistics in the free committee, criticised Studio Q for the delay. "It's a pretty poor and dismal showing," said Snowden, who expressed concern over what he called "a lack of organization at Studio Q."

Jen Myhill, head Gael for ASUS Orientation Week '99, was also critical of Studio Q's organization of the frosh week videos. "I don't think it was a priority for them," she said.

Goldblatt offered a similar argument saying, "We have changed some of our priorities this year."

Ariel Goldblatt, Studio Q. PHOTO BY MARY WADE

Goldblatt cited an emphasis on other aspects of the organization such as focusing primarily on the show and training with volunteers as reasons for the late release.

Since the Arts and Science videos are produced and sold by Studio Q independently, Myhill felt the production delay was "more problematic for Studio Q" than for the ASUS orientation committee. "I think they're going to have trouble selling the videos," said Myhill.

"I accept full and utter responsibility."

— Gabriel Simms, Studio Q promotions

Simms did report that Studio Q will be selling the Arts and Science videos at a reduced rate due to the delay in production. According to Simms, the Con-Ed videos were ready for distribution as of last night while Arts & Science videos are set to be sold in the JDUC this afternoon.

The Applied Science videos have not been released and Simms was not able to give a projected release date. "I keep aiming for tomorrow," he said adding, "As far as the Applied Science videos, the gentleman who has been doing them has been working diligently."

Since regaining their operable fee this past year, Studio Q's budget has doubled. The executive is now receiving honoraria, contrary to last year, which is a contentious fact for Snowden.

Studio Q's main responsibility is to run a weekly television show on channel 13. Simms and Goldblatt both explained that only one member out of the nine students who work for Studio Q has taken on full responsibility for the videos. This person is Simms.

As for Studio Q's technical setbacks, their business manager Liz Levine said "there isn't the money." She explained that one of Studio Q's current goals is to move a step closer to purchasing high level equipment, specifically a digital system.

Sarah Corman

BY REBECCA STELTER

AMS Presidential candidate Sarah Corman defines her leadership background through a long list of achievements, including her current role as Municipal Affairs Commissioner for the AMS. Corman was also last year's Clubs Manager for the AMS and has sat on the Library Senate Committee. With this experience, Corman believes she has honed the "skills directly applicable to the role of AMS President," she said.

When asked why she is running for AMS Executive with Owen Minns and Lisa Mori, Corman stated, "I have been involved with the AMS for three years and I have seen first-hand how the AMS can positively affect so many students on campus."

Corman said she would bring her past experiences to the presidential position, but said she has "new ideas as well... [that are] not just ideas, they're concrete plans that can be brought to fruition."

As far as changes go, Corman stated that the team would be "enacting a number of small changes, yet we are not going to shy away from the big battles."

Such battles include bringing the issues of under-funding and tuition increases to the forefront of the upcoming provincial election, mitigating the effects of program deregulation, and improving the quality of education, Corman said.

Long-term planning is an essential aspect of the Corman-Mori-Minns approach to AMS executive, Corman stated.

"Even though it is only a one-year position, it is important to look backwards and forwards. An example of this is our plan to improve the JDUC. The renovations of the Queen's Pub was a start, yet there should be more, smaller changes toward long-term improvement."

Another issue important to Corman is the fact that "the relevance of the AMS has been called in question. The Law students left the AMS and the Medical students held a referendum, in which [they] decided to stay in the AMS by a very small margin."

For Corman, this issue leads back to the accountability of the AMS. In order to make the AMS more accountable to the students, Corman's approach would be "to get as much feedback as possible before making a decision. There are so many people with good ideas and we would like to channel those ideas in to better serve everybody."

Corman feels she is the best candidate for the position of AMS President. "I'm not afraid to fight the bigger battles, on the government or corporate sides of the AMS," she explained. "It's all about caring about what you're doing. I find a great importance for the AMS — this is something I really believe in and something for which I am willing to work hard to achieve."

Presidential Quiz

What is your life goal? To juggle 8 pins while unicycling along Venice Beach

How old is the AMS? 140 yrs (oldest in Canada!!!)

Who is the V-P advancement? George Hood

How much did Med students' tuition increase this year? 50% ↑

When did the AMS last align with an external lobbying group? approx. 1940 - we were involved in forming OUSA (we split in '95-'96)

How many students does the AMS represent? (to the nearest thousand) 12,000

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Juggling Balls
(I like to have lots of things on the go... and I like to juggle!)

Quiz Answers: 2. 141 years old (founded in 1858) 3. George Hood 4. increased by 52,053 5. last aligned with OUSA in March 1995 6. 14,500 full-time students

Why be a typical frosh leader when you can be a GECKO?!!

NEWS [New Exchange WoooooHooooo (the castlepeople too) and Transfer students] Week 1999 is looking for dedicated, sexy, orange-loving, Popsicle-licking leaders!!!

INTERESTED? Yes? Then pick up an application at the AMS OFFICE in LOWER J-DUC.

Questions? Maybe? E-mail the Kimono Dragons at: news@www.ams.queensu.ca

.....orange is sexy

A.M.S. Spring Referendum

Need better financing for a project???

Put a question in the Spring Referendum

NOMINATION PERIOD:

FEBRUARY 8, 1999 @ 11:45AM

to

FEBRUARY 19, 1999 @ 5:00pm

Nomination packages are available at the A.M.S. Front Desk

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT Cathy, Carolyn or Shawn
in the Commission of Internal Affairs
at 533-6000 ext. 74815

Mike Beltzner

BY JONATHAN TINNEY

AMS presidential candidate Mike Beltzner is trying to understand the human mind. As a fourth-year Cognitive Science and Education student, this is not unusual, but Beltzner and his running mates, Chelsea Gay and Jon Krashinsky are trying to discern what they can do to entice a greater voter turnout.

"While it is not our number one goal, we have taken the lofty goal of a 40 per cent turnout. The AMS elections are too important to be decided by the approximately 23 per cent of people who turned out last year," said Beltzner.

Despite the sense of fun that he and his partners have tried to bring to their campaign, Beltzner insists the team is no joke. "When we got assembled it was initially for the purpose of making a funny political statement. We wanted to promote awareness and get people out to vote," stated Beltzner. "But we soon realised that these were things we felt strongly about and that we could make some changes and still run a fun campaign."

Beltzner realises that he and his team have the least amount of AMS experience. He cites his experience as editor of the Who's Where/What's Next, as well as layout editor for Golden Words, and work with the Canadian Student Leadership Conference, as giving him a unique perspective on the AMS's mandate. "One of the biggest trends in management right now is a lateral movement. Effective people are placed in new situations and gain effective results because they tend to break paradigms," explained Beltzner. "I hope people see that we have a skill set and can make that lateral move."

If elected, Beltzner said, "We are going to sit down and read transfer reports, call ex-commissioners and say 'Hey you've been out of the job for two years, any revelations hindsight has given you?' ... I think we can do a lot of learning from the past."

He would like to see a clearer definition between the roles of the executive and "look into the possibility of the President's office taking over communications."

One of the most prominent aspects of his team's campaign is the lack of posters and pamphlets, which Beltzner said was intentional. "As for posters we placed them up later for strategic reasons. If you see a poster day after day, it quickly becomes wallpaper. We placed posters later for a greater impact," he said. "As for pamphlets, we are handing out book-marks with the address to our Web site printed on them... they use much less paper and are cheaper. We were given $400 of student money to campaign, and there is no reason to spend it all just because we can."

Beltzner said his team "wanted to give people who were interested in what we had to say had all the information we could, not just an abbreviated version, hence the Web site."

CANDIDATE PROFILES '99

President

BY MANDY MARRIOTT

Nick Cheeseman has some concrete plans for changes he and his team want to make if they are elected. Three areas Cheeseman feels need to be tackled by the AMS executive are academics, tuition, and AMS accessibility and awareness.

The presidential candidate is confident about how he and his teammates, Kate Bailey and Susan Henry, work together. He said all three have collaborated in the past as coordinators for the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society. Cheeseman believes he and his teammates are "very personable people and easily approachable," which he thinks "are essential qualities to the

AMS executive."

The team wants to continue the fight against increasing tuition, but would also like to cut costs in other areas. Cheeseman said they "want to improve things like Bus-it. [We] would like to see more stops in the student areas and more bus trips to the Cataract Centre," saving students money spent on cab fare and groceries.

Cheeseman would also like to see improvements made to the AMS food bank. He believes that "Alison Loat has made some tremendous strides" in improving the food bank but that there is still room for development. Cheeseman said he would like more seminars that would teach students how to cook a nutritional meal for less money.

In terms of academics, Cheeseman said the administration should be more responsive to students' needs. He said that teaching assistants need a minimum level of training. "[First] they should be knowledgeable in the areas that they are teaching and second they should have the ability and skills to communicate that knowledge to the students."

He would like to see an exam timetable released before the beginning of the term, thus allowing students to plan ahead for vacations and give them exact dates on when they could begin summer jobs. Cheeseman and his team have also proposed that professors be present at exams for a certain amount of time. He said he would "like to see them present for a good portion of the exam."

The team would like to produce greater awareness and increase the availability of the AMS. The AMS "needs to be opened up more to students... [the] AMS cannot be successful without feedback from students," he said. Cheeseman has suggested that the executive be made available a few hours a week to listen to students' concerns.

Cheeseman has had considerable experience developing student leadership skills and working with people. Last year, as Deputy Commissioner of Campus Activities, he said he was "directly responsible for Welcome Back Week, Coffee House and the Charity Ball." He also sat on the International Affairs Association Executive last year, a group he has been involved with for a few years. In addition, Cheeseman has been a member of the Queen's Bands for three years and works at the Queen's Pub.

Presidential Quiz

What is your life goal? to rule the world with an iron fist, a smile, and my goldfish, Bernard.

How old is the AMS? slightly older than those youngins, the Canadian government, but only once created in the 1960's.

Who is the V-P advancement? one of the Queen's VPs in charge of moving our facilities forward... you'd think a student who would know the name... you'd be wrong.

How much did Med students' tuition increase this year? 2% of course, I was expecting they'd ditch the AMS if it didn't present... I'm 2000 happy they stayed though... I'm 12! I'll cool!

When did the AMS last align with an external lobbying group? that shameful incident in north-nine when we joined the Flat Earth Lobby... sherp.

How many students does the AMS represent? (to the nearest thousand) 13,000 happy shiny students

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

The 1997/2000 AMS Exec
Chairing
Alison Loat
Chelsea Gay
Jon Krashinsky

... get it? ... no? ... action, clever, eh?

Presidential Quiz

What is your life goal? to succeed in international negotiations

How old is the AMS? 141 years - founded 1858

Who is the V-P advancement? George Hood

How much did Med students' tuition increase this year? to 9200$

When did the AMS last align with an external lobbying group? before my time

How many students does the AMS represent? (to the nearest thousand) 11000 (many law students)

Draw a symbol that represents who you are and what you stand for:

Native Canadian
Thunder bird
Enigmatic and Canadian. Strong in tradition but looking out for tomorrow.

The Journal has made this space available for each of the AMS executive teams to summarize their platforms. These 450-word outlines are verbatim and unedited.

Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner

The team of Krashinsky, Gay and Beltzner (KGB) sees student government as a business. The AMS is in the business of representing the needs and views of the students, and providing services for constituents. To be successful, we believe this business must be run both efficiently and effectively. In other words, not only must cost-analysis be performed to ensure that services and commissions are using their funds wisely, but needs-analysis must be performed to ensure that time, effort and resources are spent where appropriate.

Our team freely admits that we are not as experienced and knowledgeable with internal AMS issues as some other candidates in this year's election; we see this as an advantage. Lateral movement — in which managers or consultants with little domain specific experience are hired for their new ideas — has become one of the most successful management techniques of the decade. People who have not become inundated with a certain bias or perspective are more able to break the paradigms which may yield inefficiencies. In considering an AMS Executive Council, the key is to import a team with proven management skills who have demonstrated abilities for insight and forward-thinking. Specifics of any job can be learned — what is important is to have leaders with fresh ideas and an understanding of how businesses and organizations are run.

While the AMS Executive influences change and leads the society in a direction towards a set of goals, its mandate is not to actually implement those changes. Implementation is accomplished through the council of Commissioners and their managers, who are hired based on their innovation and dedication. It will be our responsibility to not only seek out these builders, but to guide and direct them towards our vision of a better managed student government. The end goal will not be to have "fixed" the AMS — we actually believe that the machine works pretty darned well considering its helmsmen change yearly. We hope to finish our tenure as an AMS Executive by having accomplished the minor goals we set out for ourselves, and having made progress on the larger tasks we inherited from previous years (such as the External Marketing Office) as well as the larger tasks we initiate. Team KGB has proven, through the success of Golden Words, that we can work together well to manage a business. If you'd like to see more detailed ideas and visions, please set your browser to <http://members.xoom.com/KGB4AMS>. We have everything it takes to ensure that your AMS works best for you — all we need is your approval.

For complete campaign details, check out KGB's "Electric Campaign Pamphlet" at <http://members.xoom.com/KGB4AMS> (that's case sensitive, by the by)

Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry

As the Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry team, we believe that Queen's University is unique in that it offers its students a truly vast and diverse array of opportunities, both academic and extra-curricular. All three of us have taken full advantage of our time here; we believe that our experiences both within and beyond the classroom have prepared us to fulfill the executive positions for the AMS. We are confident in the knowledge that our team offers a positive balance of AMS experience and external ideas and energy.

Nick Cheeseman is the candidate for President on our team. A fourth-year Political Studies major, his involvement at Queen's spills into all facets of the university. Through his work as Deputy Commissioner of the Campus Activities Commission and Queen's Model Parliament, Cheeseman possesses a strong working knowledge of the AMS. However, Cheeseman has also maintained consistent involvement with many other campus groups including the Queen's Bands, ASUS Orientation Committee, and the Queen's International Affairs Association where he represented Queen's at Model United Nations in Canada, the USA and Thailand.

Kate Bailey is our candidate for Vice-President University Affairs. Currently in her fourth year of an English/Health Studies degree, Bailey brings to the team a strong element of experience. Through her commitment to the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society, Bailey has filled the positions of Deputy Finance, Operations Chair for the ASUS Orientation Committee and is currently the Academics Commissioner. Her experience is further diversified through her involvement with the Kingston Ringette team, the AMS InfoBank and the Orientation Roundtable.

Susan Henry is the candidate for Vice-President Operations. In her fourth year of a Chemistry/Economics major, her commitment to Queen's spirit has been exemplified through her duties as Academics Chair for the ASUS Orientation Committee, and as an executive member of the Queen's Bands. She has also served as Chair of the ASUS Buddies Committee and has sat on the Chemistry Departmental Student Council (DSC), A Used Book Store (UBS) Exchange employee for two years, Henry currently holds the position of Assistant Manager of this AMS service.

As a team, we believe in the importance of student government; we think it is important to strive toward immediate goals and pressing issues, yet we also feel that an executive should strive towards the long-term goals which will ultimately affect future students at Queen's.

We encourage all Queen's students to inform themselves of the issues facing their university. Please come out to the debates and forums, check out our pamphlets and our web site to read up on our campaign platform.

<http://qlink.queensu.ca/~4kimb>

Unmatched in Spirit, Committed to Change!

Corman-Mori-Minns

On February 9 and 10, Vote Corman · Mori · Minns for your AMS Executive.

"What does the AMS do for me?" Corman, Mori & Minns will enable you to answer this question. We are committed to meeting the needs of every student and member society at Queen's. We will bring experience, strong leadership, innovation and dedication to the AMS.

Corman · Mori · Minns will...

- Reduce student activity fees, including the Health Plan fee
- Recruit corporate sponsorship to fund student activities
- Work with the University to expand the work-study program to increase the number of jobs available to Queen's students

...save you money.

Corman · Mori · Minns will...

- Initiate enforcement of existing mandatory training for TAs
- Establish a TA evaluation and accountability system
- Demand an investment in the hiring of faculty to reduce class sizes and retain top-notch professors
- Evaluate the innovative strategies employed at other leading Canadian universities to highlight deficiencies in our own programs
- Hold the university accountable for outlining, in advance, how additional tuition money will be used

...improve the quality of your education.

Corman · Mori · Minns will...

- Create more AMS jobs for students
- Expand the JDUC's Skylight Lounge into the Upper Ceilidh to create more comfortable student space
- Implement service quality guarantees, (e.g., your lunch is served in thirty minutes, or it's free!)
- Build on this year's successes, such as the Queen's Pub expansion and hospitality tents at football games
- Bring a speciality coffee shop to the JDUC

...improve AMS services.

Corman · Mori · Minns will...

- Increase Walkhome's efficiency by reducing downtime in the service's operation. Walkers will remain on the streets, leading to improved response times and increased comfort
- Expand the blue light program, beginning with Victoria Park

...increase safety and comfort around campus.

Corman, Mori & Minns have a realistic approach and realistic goals.

Whichever team you elect, you will see many quickly-implemented changes in the AMS and across campus. These include improvements to the Bus-It agreement, changes in exam procedures, and internal restructuring of the AMS.

Elect Corman Mori & Minns and rest assured that your student government will speak responsibly on your behalf. We have not forgotten about the thousands of people on student aid. We will pressure the Ontario government to increase our university's funding to the national per student average. We will take advantage of the impending provincial election to promote our agenda, bringing the issues of post-secondary education to the forefront of political debate.

Check us out at <http://qlink.queensu.ca/~6swc> and email us at cm4ams@hotmail.com.

On February 9 and 10, Vote Corman · Mori · Minns for your AMS Executive.

Candidates stress communication

Continued from page 1

focusing on the accountability of teaching assistants and professors. She suggested a more rigorous TA training program and more complete evaluations of both TAs and professors.

Corman explained in detail the team's goal of functioning as a "consistent voice" between students and administration.

Minns expressed his confidence by closing the speech saying, "I know what I'm doing and I can do this for you."

"Unmatched in spirit, committed to change" is the slogan adopted by the third team of Nick Cheeseman, for President, Kate Bailey, for V-P (UA), and Susan Henry, for V-P (Ops).

Cheeseman picked up where Mori had left off in academics, expressing the same concern for the quality of TAs. He offered another well-received suggestion of an "exam timetable published before you pick your courses."

Henry focused on financial issues, questioning the Queen's Health Plan's budget surplus, and suggesting that it be redistributed. She also argued that students are not getting their money's worth when they pay $30 for a bus pass and that this could be remedied by an increase in bus service and expanded routes.

Bailey voiced the team's goal of improving wheelchair access at all campus buildings with the help of the Accessibility Task Force.

The floor was then opened to questions with each team allowed one minute to answer. The importance of communication in problem solving was central to the candidates' answers to many questions. Bailey argued strongly for closer relationships between the AMS and Faculty societies. She also called for constant communication with alumni and businesses to promote Queen's students in the marketplace.

Minns joked about the QP's failure to immediately address a complaint about their brand of nachos as a way of presenting his platform of open communication at all levels of government.

This sentiment was echoed by Nick Cheeseman when he promised to sit in Mac-Corry for "a couple of hours a week" to answer questions from students. The Beltzner-Krashinsky-Gay team, true to their business-like image, were more reserved and advocated the even distribution of responsibility over the many levels of the AMS.

The AMS executive election takes place on February 9 and 10 at many campus locations.

AMS teams Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner (left), Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry (top) and Corman-Mori-Minns (bottom) spoke to students Tuesday night in an open forum at Victoria Hall.

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

ASUS debate

By Erik Missio

Victoria Hall was transformed into a stage for political debate Tuesday evening as the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society executive candidates announced their platforms and fielded questions.

In the four-minute opening remarks, Shannon Bell, alongside running mate Chrs Safford, promised to "represent, restructure, and re-energize" ASUS by increasing awareness, cooperating with other Faculty societies and enlarging the representation from Year Societies.

Alison Lam, speaking alone due to running mate Brian Adam's illness, said, "With so much experience, we understand ASUS backwards and forward." She proposed to end ASUS "chiques" and promote awareness through a two-tiered system of publicity and enterprises with corporate sponsorship.

Dave Contant and Erin O'Keefe revealed their plan of "consolidation of internal systems" through follow-ups of ASUS assembly meetings and revitalization of the ASUS Core. They also advocated an evaluation system for Teaching Assistants and a mentorship program for ArtSci students.

When asked whether or not they supported the proposed 17-course degree program, Contant and O'Keefe said they were in favour of curriculum review, but remained skeptical in terms of new course availability and potential ramifications for Con-Ed students.

Lam cited her concerns about "paying the same [tuition] for fewer courses."

Bell and Safford said the current proposal is too rough to comment upon yet.

ASUS voting takes place on February 9 and 10.

Med degree 'out of reach'

Continued from page 1

University tuition is above the maximum allowance from government assistance, before factoring in living expenses. For this reason many students feel that a medical education is being placed out of reach.

"There is a lot of concern for the effect that this will have on the health care system in Ontario."

Hooman Ghomeshi, Queen's Meds '00

"Skyrocketing tuition has created a huge barrier to a medical education for many Canadians, particularly those from low and middle income families," said Hooman Ghomeshi, Queen's Meds '00. As a result, many students may find medical training in the United States a more viable option, and the greater compensation for doctors south of the border may become a necessity for paying off increasing debt loads.

"There is a lot of concern for the effect that this will have on the health care system in Ontario, and it would seem that regardless of what form the consequences take, increases in tuition can only have negative outcomes for everyone," said Ghomeshi.

Financial viability a priority

Continued from page 1

he said. When he complained about the smoker's cancellation and the short notice given, Alfie's staff told him the '01's were simply "out of luck," he said.

"There is a contract that groups are supposed to sign when they book a smoker," explained Ben Bourke, Alfie's manager. One of the first things stated at the top of the contract is that a smoker can be cancelled at anytime, he said. "While we leave the signing up to them, the contract is made up and ready for them at Alfie's."

"When people book smokers, they are told that the date is not carved in stone or guaranteed," agreed AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong. "If Alfie's can book a show or concert, then they will generally do that, as it better meets the needs of the students... it generates more revenue for the pub."

"The pub has to remain financially viable," continued Armstrong. "A show or concert will typically bring more people to the pub, and while smokers usually generate some revenue, it is in Alfie's best interest to expand the diversity of its programming," she added.

Bourke said there were many factors at play in the cancellation of the '01 smoker. While he admitted that whichever event is "expected to generate more money can get priority," Bourke stressed that in this instance it was a worthwhile trade-off.

Bourke also mentioned that groups with multiple-booking dates, such as ASUS, are likely to lose smokers to groups with no dates booked. "Ultimately, we help numerous groups over the year, [and the smokers tend to be] mutually beneficial,"

Bourke said.

"The last thing Alfie's wants to do is upset people," Armstrong concurred. Smokers are a valuable resource to students, as they increase awareness of student groups on campus, and this is something that Alfie's takes seriously."

According to Jessica Paddick, ASUS social convenor, "The ASUS summer person does not always tell the executive members to sign the contract." The people in charge of the '01 smoker were never made aware of the tentative nature of the scheduled fundraiser, she added.

"The first thing people criticize about Alfie's is programming, so this is an area that Alfie's is committed to improving and diversifying," said Armstrong.

— with files from Shawn Brumley

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division) 533-6972

SCHOOL OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

ORIENTATION EVENING
Room 1102 - BioSciences Complex
Thursday, February 11, 1999
7-9 p.m.

MEET YOUR FACULTY AND YOUR DSC
Find out about Honours BSc options in:

- ENVIRONMENTAL BIOLOGY
- ENVIRONMENTAL CHEMISTRY
- ENVIRONMENTAL GEOGRAPHY
- ENVIRONMENTAL GEOLOGY
- ENVIRONMENTAL LIFE SCIENCES

Honours BA program:

- ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE MEDIALS

FREE REFRESHMENTS!

win a GUINNESS JACKET

come on down for a pint, or two and ask your server for details.... Cheers...!!!

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
$2.49 Sunday breakfast
Sun-Tues 1/2 price wings*
Wed 1/2 price nachos*
(after 2pm with beverage purchase)

LIVE BANDS
fri Feb 5
MAGNUM HOUSE
cum & get lunked

THE JOURNAL

1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Free food anyone?

OF ALL THE SERVICES RUN BY the AMS, only one is mandated to give food and drink away for free. While a trip to Alfie's may leave your spirits higher, only the AMS food bank can help cut your grocery bill in half. After two years in operation, students are finally warming up to the idea of using an AMS service that is available for anybody, anytime, no questions asked.

This AMS service is a resource for any student who happens to be low on food money at any given moment.

Every week, close to 10 new people a week are stopping by the food bank — a trend, that if continued, will help put a dent in student hunger at Queen's. Students seem to be realizing that this service is a resource for any student who happens to be low on food money at any given moment. In the past, too many students have chosen hunger when food is readily available at 272 Earl St. It is a reality of life at Queen's in 1999 that hunger is a problem that cuts across the full spectrum of the student community.

While student leaders and the administration should continue to support the food bank with donations, the challenge now is increasing awareness. Eric Morris, food bank co-ordinator, and the AMS are meeting this challenge with an aggressive advertising campaign.

Awareness would be further improved if the administration informed incoming students about the food bank.

Another necessary change would be improving the accessibility of the food bank. Its present location in the basement of the Journal House does not allow for wheelchair access and is daunting for anyone in the winter. If another location cannot be found, the AMS should consider renovating the building to make it more accessible.

Save the Queen

EVERY FALL, THOUSANDS OF newly arrived students can be heard chanting Oil Thigh na Barrighinn, a'brannighinn gubraith — literally: The university of the Queen, the Queen forever. Four years later, many of those same students take part in a rendition of "God Save the Queen" at their convocation. And why not? We are talking about Queen's University, an institution rich in traditions that pay homage to our original patron Queen Victoria.

Even though Queen Victoria may no longer be as integral a part of the institution's identity, these traditions still have merit. It is unfortunate, therefore, that the Queen's Senate has voted to consider eliminating the singing of "God Save the Queen" from the Convocation ceremony. Singing the traditional hymn adds character to the ceremony and establishes a connection between the graduating class and the thousands who have gone before them. The Senate should realize that if we remove all the pomp from Convocation, we will be left with a sterile and boring ceremony.

On the other hand, if singing England's national anthem is genuinely offensive to students then we should eliminate the tradition. We should bear in mind, however, that singing the hymn is a tribute to Queen Victoria and not a show of patriotism to any country. It seems appropriate that the Convocation ceremony be rooted in Queen's history, which happens to be the monarchy. It would be a shame if these traditions were replaced with neutral symbols that had no basis in Queen's history.

On the other hand, if singing England's national anthem is genuinely offensive to students then we should eliminate the tradition. We should bear in mind, however, that singing the hymn is a tribute to Queen Victoria and not a show of patriotism to any country. It seems appropriate that the Convocation ceremony be rooted in Queen's history, which happens to be the monarchy. It would be a shame if these traditions were replaced with neutral symbols that had no basis in Queen's history.

We are not amused.

— Queen Victoria

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerain
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura Macinnis
NEWS EDITOR
Flora Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heister
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Sofia Murray
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MISC. EDITOR
Ken Buchanan
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Krasny
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Joseph Breen, Mike Burgess, Boon Chang, Jeff Child, Rajiv Dave, Natalie Diaz, Alison Loat, Mandy Marriot, Erik Misso, Jennifer Morrison, Jennifer Paterson, Mike Reid, George Reinblatt, Neare Sager, Fiona Scunnell, Rebecca Stelter, Jon Tinney, Dimitrios Tzortos, Megan Webster

Photographers: Bob Hulsh, Mary Wade, Samson Wu

Hooked on Oprah

EARLIER THIS WEEK I WAS shopping for a gift at our local Chapters book store when I encountered a disturbing sight. Among the book sections was a literary division. I was previously unfamiliar with. Right there before me, beside the "Award Winners" section was a category entitled "Reviewed by Oprah." Most of us expect to meet with a certain amount of propaganda when we enter into a commercial Mecca, but since when did Oprah become a literary division?

Since when did Oprah become a literary division?

why do we need a celebrity to endorse something before it becomes the vogue?

That issue aside, Oprah is still not a literary division. Having a section with her name on it insinuates that she, or her show, are somehow intelligent and privileged enough to decide for an audience of billions of people which new literary works are "good picks." Chapters fosters this misconception by placing her section immediately next to their selection of recent award winners. By doing this they are reinforcing the myth that her show actually has the power to sift out quality reading.

I am really not trying to attack Oprah Winfrey specifically. I will even admit to being a bit of an Oprah fan. As a black woman born out of a poor Mississippi farming family, she has overcome numerous obstacles on her road to success. Lately though, Oprah seems more machine than woman.

Perhaps I am being overly sensitive to these attacks on my independent thought, as many of my friends and colleagues frequently suggest. I actually love drinking cappuccino at Starbucks while grazing the pages of a current interest. I simply think we need to meticulously consider everything popular culture throws our way. At the very least acknowledge its existence and be aware of its potential effects on your established values.

I promptly addressed this issue with some friends of mine and was astonished to learn the same sight had been witnessed at Indigo. While part of me is still wondering why I am surprised to find corporations oozing with reinforcements of the status quo, the other part of me is still offended.

Books reviewed by Oprah's club are practically placed on a Concord flight to the best seller list. Those reviewed are now being printed, not just stickered, with "Oprah's Book Club" on their front cover. I think it is positive that the Oprah book club is actively encouraging audiences to read and discuss contemporary works, but

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katharine Colbourne
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Friday, February 5, 1999 • Issue 30 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alvin Plaster Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganouaque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Thank God... for Vinyl! Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800; advertising: 613-533-6711. Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation: 5,000. Issue 31 will be published on Tuesday, February 9, 1999.

OPINIONS

Are you getting any?

IF YOU'RE FEELING LONELY, DEPRESSED, or sexually frustrated, hitting the bar scene may be just what you need! Attractive people, drinking, and dancing is part of what university life is all about. What you do once you're there is up to you. Just remember, you are about to enter the 'Meat Market.' Here you will find a wide selection of size, weight, and appearance. As a customer, you are entitled to choose what you prefer best. However, if you are not satisfied with your pick, I encourage you to return and try your luck again.

A drunk stranger of the opposite sex approached me with a half-witted comment about how my round eyes match my round breasts.

Have you ever noticed how many people go to a bar to pick up? I know this because I, like much of the rest of society, has at some point felt the need to do this. Everyone does it. However, my opinion on the subject changed when someone tried to pick me up. A drunk stranger of the opposite sex approached me with a half-witted comment about the way my round eyes match my round breasts. And then he smiles, like I'm supposed to be flattered, when really, at this point, all I can think of is walking away from him. And so I do.

For those of you who wish to be successful when picking someone up at a bar, here's a few guidelines to keep in mind: Before you set foot in the 'Market', it is crucial that you know exactly what you're looking for. First thing to consider: the gender of your preference. I'll leave that one up to you. Secondly, are you looking to meet someone or have a one-night stand? Reality check. Do you honestly believe you will find a long term, meaningful relationship in a bar full of horny, drunk people? Most people our age are not looking for any sort of prolonged commitment but would rather just date and have fun.

On the other hand, if you're looking for a "fling" or a "one-night stand," bars are definitely your first choice. Have you ever considered how much more attractive people look when they're dancing under strobe lights and you've had a couple of drinks? Anyone can pick up. This is sad, but true. The influence of alcohol plays an enormous role when deciding who is going to be in your bed tonight. Imagine how you would feel if you woke up and found another body lying in your bed; someone whom you had no recollection of meeting.

Suddenly you're standing in front of the mirror, wondering how to tell "him/her" you do not like them, when you walk back to your room, and the mysterious figure is gone, nowhere to be seen. Suddenly you feel offended. Talk about a crushed ego. At this point, of course, most people realize, as I did, that you will never find the perfect someone at a bar. Luckily for me, I never had to experience the "morning after" situation. Nevertheless, for people who are looking to find anything but that, pick up your ego from the ground and head back to the 'Market.'

You're standing in front of the mirror, wondering how to tell "him/her" you do not like them, you walk back to your room, and they're gone. Suddenly you feel offended.

The third and final thing to consider when looking to pick up: do not rush to find someone when you're getting back in the game (exceptions can be made for those who have recently broken up with significant others — they will want to engage in as much sexual activity as possible). It is important to remember that the majority of bar visitors are there for the same reasons you are. Start off with a smile, some dancing, and so forth. But do not rush it, unless you are sure the other party feels the same way. Act smooth and in control. And if you lose this one too, remember you can always come back to the Market tomorrow and try your luck again.

In short, I think people who pick up at bars will never meet the person of their dreams. What they will meet is embarrassment, humiliation, and rejection.

NATALIE DIAZ
ARTS '02

The QP vs. Corman, Mori and Minns

Dear Editors,

Having come across the campaign brochure for Corman, Mori and Minns (CMM), and been in attendance at several classes where their platform has been discussed, we as the management team at the Queen's Pub felt that there were a number of issues that had to be addressed with respect to their assessment of the pub.

Instead of inventing issues upon which to run, this team (Corman, Mori and Minns) should focus on real problems that need to be addressed with regards to the Queen's Pub.

In the first instance, it seems odd that they should place so much emphasis upon the Queen's Pub when it has been one of the most successful services run by the AMS this year, exceeding all expectations in terms of service and profitability. Not only have we put in a tremendous effort to make the pub expansion a success, but through the diligent work of our staff, we have been able to create an environment hospitable to the entire Queen's community. We believe that this is an achievement that can be built upon by successive management teams.

Letters to the Editors

With respect to the campaign's attack on the quality of the service at the pub, we find their criticisms to be unwarranted, inaccurate, and downright insulting to our staff. To suggest that patrons are forced to wait thirty minutes for a drink completely misrepresents the quality of our service. While we acknowledge that there have been occasional problems in the past with respect to waiting for service, we feel that this gross generalization disparages the hard work of all QP staff. It is evident that neither Sarah, Lisa, nor Owen have been in to the pub much this year.

As per the campaign's suggestion of hiring more staff to speed service, increase sales, and provide more jobs, it is clear that little research went into this "plan." The bottom line is that while the idea may look good on paper, it fails to appreciate the complexities of the service industry. Adding more staff on shift may seem like a good idea, however, it would not necessarily result in improved service. In fact, the only guarantee is that it would significantly lower the profitability of the pub, and perhaps return the pub to losses. We work hard to schedule the appropriate number of staff each shift, and when circumstances arise, always have staff on call to cover unexpectedly busy nights.

Finally, we take offence to the suggestion that Corman, Mori, and Minns will take pride in our expanded food menu, and have continued to improve the quality of all of our snack options. Furthermore, we have fostered a close relationship with several small-scale local suppliers, who consistently provide products of exceptional quality, including nacho chips. In fact, it may surprise the CMM team, but the nacho platter continues to be our most popular menu item.

This team is not prepared to run the QP, let alone the AMS.

In closing, we are disgusted by the ignorance of this team with respect to the Queen's Pub, and quite frankly find it unfair to our patrons, our staff, and us. Instead of inventing issues upon which to run, this team should focus on real problems that need to be addressed in regard to the pub, such as limited kitchen facilities, and other key administrative difficulties. Clearly this team is not prepared to manage the Queen's Pub, let alone the entirety of the AMS.

Mark Picketts (Manager)
Jane Lee, Scott Thomson and Mark Soules (Assistant Managers)

The Queen vs. Naked Feminists

Dear Editors,

If the Queen is irrelevant to modern Canada, then why should we keep her name for the university? While we're at it, let's get rid of those annoying bag pipes and the Oil Thigh — too Scottish.

talking

HEADS

What is the most annoying thing a housemate has done to you?

"Moved in!"

Dan Rowlands
Sci '00

"Gnawed on my nipples!"

Kevin Lorimer
Sci '00

"She leaves the toilet seat up."

Justin Lam
Arts '00

"You don't want to know. I might get a law suit slapped on me!"

Ryan Naidoo
Arts '01

PHOTOS BY MARY WADE

Let's get rid of all Latin mottoes — the Queen's motto should be expressed in English, French, and Cree. Let's get rid of the coat of arms, and replace it with a rainbow flag. Let's get rid of convocation prayers. Instead, we can have some naked feminists dance around a fire in honour of the Earth goddess.

In the end, we will have cleansed Queen's of all that poisonous tradition which has kept the campus so lily white. Plus, we'll have more time for convocation speeches!

There remains one question. What will we call our new, tradition-free university? My suggestion: the University of Guelph.

Andrew Zur
Arts '99

Computer Engineering UNDERGRADUATE ORIENTATION

Walter Light Hall, Room 205

Tuesday, February 9, 1999
7:00 - 9:30 p.m.

Orientation Program

- ◆ The Discipline and Career Opportunities
- ◆ Computer Engineering Curriculum
- ◆ Electrical and Computer Engineering Club Activities
- ◆ Demonstrations and Displays
- ◆ Discussions with ECE Faculty, Staff and Students
- ◆ Refreshments

- Computer Architectures
- Computer Networks
- Digital Systems
- Microprocessor Applications
- Software Systems

If you are unable to attend the orientation, information on the ECE Undergraduate programs is available on our website: www.ece.queensu.ca

Next Letters...

Queen's save the Queen

Dear Editors,

It is indeed disturbing to read in The Journal that the Queen's Senate is considering omitting mention of Queen Victoria at convocation and removing "God Save the Queen" from the ceremony.

For an institution that prides itself on a sense of history and tradition it seems completely illogical to discard mentioning Queen Victoria from the convocation ceremony. It takes little time at all, and recognizes our foundations not only as an educational institution but as a nation.

The notion that removing God Save the Queen will "reduce the pomp of an already lengthy ceremony" is a complete fallacy. It takes all of 45 seconds to sing the Royal Anthem, which I might add is used throughout the Commonwealth, and not just Britain. Logically it makes all the sense in the world to recognize our head of state. Every other country does!

While I could not agree more with Mr. Rawal who stated that there have been a "lot of things that have changed about this country" since 1841, Canada continues to have a monarch as its head of state. Who, despite the opinion of some, is Elizabeth the Second, Queen of Canada, who is also the Queen of 16 other nations around the world. Not to mention head of our multicultural Commonwealth, of which Canada is the most senior member.

I hope that before voting on this issue, all members of the Senate will consider the importance of retaining the Royal Anthem and mention of Queen Victoria.

Pierre Berton has often said that "the quality of the future depends on what is kept from the past." Mentioning Queen Victoria recognizes our roots as an institution, and singing "God Save the Queen" recognizes our head of state.

Chris McCreery
MA

Less Jesus, more SHRC

Dear Editors,

I was very surprised to read in a letter contained in the February 2/99 issue that the Sexual Health Resource Centre (SHRC) is subject to visibility limitations whereas Campus Crusade for Christ and other religious groups are not. The prominence of religious advertising was recently illustrated by "Jesus Awakeness Week." This lies in stark contrast to any advertising I have encountered on campus for the SHRC. It appears that a Queen's student is permitted to be accosted on Union St. with religious paraphernalia and yet this same student is shielded from information that may potentially save his or her life. This is not to say I am against religious visibility on campus as I believe it promotes diversity. However, religion is a personal choice, as are sexual choices, and both ought to be represented on campus equally. I find fault in the fact that Queen's administration seems to be selectively ignoring issues that might threaten the institution's pseudo-liberal foundations at the cost of student safety.

Alana Flexman
Arts '00

Going Some- place Soon?

(You Are Here)

The Campus Bookstore Travel Book Sale
All Travel Guides And Maps Are 25% Off
Starts Monday, February 8th.

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

SCIENCE

Turning back an invasion

BY BOON CHANG

It may seem that pregnancy and cancer have little in common, but recent Queen's research, published in the current issue of the International Journal of Cancer, draws a link between the two seemingly unrelated fields and could change the way we look at cancer treatment.

Charles Graham is an assistant professor in the Department of Anatomy and Cell Biology. His research in pregnancy, and in cancer invasion and metastasis has introduced the possibility of treating cancer growth by regulating oxygen levels in malignant tumours. For his research accomplishments in the biology of cellular migration and invasion, Graham has won the 1998 Mihtan and Mary Basmajian Award.

Since his graduate studies, Graham has focused on the biology of pregnancy. He investigates the human placenta, which is the organ responsible for the exchange of nutrients and wastes between the mother and the fetus. According to Graham, in some ways the placenta is an invasive type of organ; it attaches to and penetrates the wall of the uterus during pregnancy. This invasion of the uterus is important in human pregnancies because the fetal circulation is placed closer to the maternal circulation, facilitating the exchange of substances necessary for proper development.

Dr. Graham has discovered that cancerous cells become more aggressive at low oxygen concentrations.

The placenta also plays a role in widening the blood vessels that feed the uterus, to increase blood flow to the developing fetus. A complication of pregnancy, known as pre-eclampsia, occurs when the remodeling of the blood vessels does not occur to a sufficient extent to accommodate the growing fetus. Decreased blood flow can cause hypoxia, or an oxygen deficiency. The unborn baby may grow more slowly than normal or suffer developmental disorders. Graham believes the high blood pressure induced by pre-eclampsia is a result of "a compensatory mechanism" that attempts to provide proper amounts of blood to the fetus. Pre-eclampsia is the leading cause of prenatal death in developed countries, and affects as many as 10 per cent of all pregnancies.

Since pre-eclampsia is a condition in which the placenta does not receive adequate amounts of blood and oxygen, Graham's study focused on the effects of oxygen deprivation on the invasion of the uterus. He isolated invasive cells of the placenta, trophoblast cells, and maintained them in culture under high and low oxygen levels. He had expected to find that low oxygen concentrations reduce the invasiveness of the trophoblast cells. To his surprise,

Continued on page 12

Maggots do surgical rounds

Part 1 of 2 exposing putrid, but promising, medicine

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

Read on at your own risk. The author will not be held responsible for those persons that may take it upon themselves to gather the maggots from that dead squirrel behind Stauffer and let them writhe in an open wound. Nowadays, this action would probably illicit gawks and stares, but on a 19th century battlefield would have seem quite ordinary.

The somewhat-modern medical use of maggots began during the American Civil War, when a field doctor noticed that battle wounds that were infected with maggots healed more quickly than those not infected. The soldiers had a lot more to be squeamish about than the maggots, so subjects for further experiments weren't hard to find.

After that, maggot therapy became pretty widespread in North America for some time. Physicians watched in amazement as the blow fly larvae ravenously attacked necrotic, diseased tissue, while leaving the healthy, living tissue intact. It even seemed like the maggots might have been somehow promoting the growth of new tissue after they had removed the tainted tissue.

Rough times were ahead for the faithful maggots, however. The 1940s brought more advanced surgical techniques, powerful antibiotics and immaculately hygienic operating rooms to ward off the bacteria that caused such necrotic tissue infections. Maggot therapy was rendered obsolete (or at least unfashionable). So why are we still talking about it? Why not let this disgusting tradition rest in peace?

It so happens that maggot therapy may become the next retro fad for a really good reason. It addresses what are arguably the two greatest problems in Western medicine right now: antibiotic resistance and cuts to healthcare.

Nowadays, bacteria are commonly found to be resistant to various classes of antibiotics. So if you happen to have a multiple-drug-resistant gangrene infection, your options may be to find some obscure antibiotic that works, amputation of the infected tissue, or maggot therapy, renamed "biosurgery" for the squeamish.

Name change or not, maggot therapy has definitely been modernized. The larvae can be cultivated relatively inexpensively and free of microbial contamination. They can be ordered on the Internet and delivered overnight by courier. They can be applied by the patient at home, avoiding the costly stay in a hospital bed associated with conventional surgery. No limbs are amputated, because the tissue grows back, and no anaesthesia is needed. Apparently, the biggest complaint is a subtly hortific tickling sensation.

Sounds pretty good, but as is the habit in medicine today, you need to prove it with some clinical testing, and a little chemistry.

Researchers are already getting somewhere on the first requirement. Ronald A. Shterman, a physician at the University of California has been conducting limited trials since 1989 and so far, the maggots seem to be eating bacteria-infested tissue like there's no tomorrow. There are also plans for a large scale, randomized clinical trial in Wales. Further research is being done in labs, to try to take a stab at the chemistry requirement. A 1997 study in the journal "Life Sciences" suggested in cautious language that "the existence of intrinsic factors within the maggot... may be responsible for the growth-stimulating effects seen in maggot-infested wounds".

The exact nature of these "intrinsic factors" is still under debate, but there are lots of ideas as to the general healing mechanism of biosurgery. Maggots are known to secrete digestive enzymes to liquefy diseased tissue. They may also release healing chemicals such as ammonia, calcium carbonate, and possibly the antibacterial agent allantoin. It has also been suggested that the simple motion of the maggots in the tissue may somehow stimulate new growth.

Does all this mean that good times are ahead for the lowly larvae? Possibly. Maggot therapy is at the heart of two competing themes in medicine today: the "pill-for-all-your-problems" attitude versus the natural remedies phenomenon, and the growing river of natural therapies may just drag maggot therapy along into the mainstream.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Origins of HIV found

In equatorial Africa, there is a subspecies of chimpanzee, Pan troglodytes troglodytes, that could hold the key to fighting what has become a global epidemic. Certain members of this subspecies are infected with a strain of SIV — simian immunodeficiency virus — that is more closely related to HIV-1, the virus that causes AIDS, than any other strain yet found. In fact, the two viruses are so close genetically that scientists are now saying that this SIV is the origin of the human AIDS virus. Even with this knowledge, there is still much left to learn about HIV and AIDS. For example, chimpanzees infected with SIV do not show any of the symptoms associated with AIDS in humans. Further research and conservation efforts for the endangered chimpanzee are now planned.

Martian Airlines

NASA is still looking at exploring Mars, but has shifted its focus from driving around in the dust to flying through the thin Martian air. The Mars Airborne Geophysical Explorer mission, scheduled for 2003 for the 100th anniversary of the first airplane flight here on Earth, will involve sending the aircraft to Mars folded up in a heat-resistant capsule. After entering the Martian atmosphere the capsule will open and the "Kitty Hawk," as its been dubbed, will descend on a parachute and unfold its long wings. Under its own power, the aircraft will then fly along the canyons of Valles Marineris taking magnetic and electric field readings, as well as still and motion pictures, to determine how the valleys formed and have changed over time.

Ziggy Stardust

Set for launch tomorrow is the Stardust spacecraft, which will collect dust particles from the tail of comet Wild-2 (pronounced "vilt too" — think German). The Stardust mission will be the first to return samples to Earth since the Lunar missions of the 1970s. The actual rendezvous with the comet won't take place until 2004, after Stardust takes a couple of spins around the sun to pick up speed.

CIR nan Óg

THE PUB CRAWLER

MON, FEB. 8 ALL YOU CAN EAT MUSSELS
 TUES, FEB. 9 CELTIC JAM SESSION
 (EVERYONE WELCOME)
 WED, FEB. 10 LIVE ENTERTAINMENT -
 NO COVER
 FRI, FEB. 12 LIVE JAZZ WITH ANDY POOLE
 & FREE OYSTER BAR
 FRI, FEB. 12 THE BOYS SCOUTS
 LIVE AT 10 PM
 SAT, FEB. 13 THE BOYS SCOUTS
 LIVE AT 10 PM
 THE LOVE DOCTOR WILL BE IN THE HOUSE
 SUN, FEB. 14 SPECIAL VALENTINES
 DINNER AND LIVE JAZZ WITH ANDY POOLE

BELGIAN BEERS
 NOW AVAILABLE
 IN MONTE'S
 CIGAR AND MARTINI BAR

Kingston's Newest Adventure!

ATRIUM MALL
 541 DAYS ROAD
 KINGSTON, ONTARIO

LAZER'S EDGE... is a heart pounding, adrenaline pumping full immersion interactive laser game.
 It is a cross between traditional tag and 20th Century Cops and Robbers.
 It is played in a labyrinth filled with special effects.

As you experience the finest in interactive games equipment, you will wish that you came sooner!!
 It's great for all ages and levels of physical ability.

LAZER'S EDGE...
 will challenge your mind, your coordination, your reflexes and especially your survival instincts!

For more info...
 Regular and group rates

extreme indoor FUN!!
 (613) 634-8366

New role for oxygen

Continued from page 11

trophoblast cells became more aggressive in the presence of reduced oxygen levels.

Although other studies have already shown that oxygen plays a role in regulating the expression of a number of genes, Graham believes that "to our knowledge, this is the first instance of oxygen playing a role in regulating cell migration and invasion." His results show that in the first trimester of pregnancy, oxygen levels are indeed significantly lower in the placenta than in other tissues. He now proposes that low oxygen levels during early pregnancy are required for proper implantation and formation of the placenta. In pre-eclampsia, however, the hypoxic conditions usually do not appear until the third trimester of pregnancy, when demand for oxygen is greatest. According to Graham, it is at this point that the low oxygen levels trigger the release of substances that lead to pregnancy-induced high blood pressure in the mother.

Graham then decided to examine whether invasive cells in other biological settings behaved in a similar fashion. He examined the invasiveness in tumour growth and metastasis. He discovered that cancerous cells reacted similarly and also became more aggressive in the presence of low oxygen concentrations. Although other research has already shown that low oxygen levels in tumours generally lead to poor clinical outcomes, Graham says "we are studying the mechanism in more detail as to how the cell invades... under hypoxic conditions."

If nothing else, Graham's discovery

Dr. Charles Graham

PHOTO COURTESY OF QUEENS TODAY

that tumour cells become more aggressive in low oxygen "emphasizes the importance of paying attention to the response of the tumour cells themselves to any new forms of therapy."

Although he states firmly that "it will still be a while before anything can be taken to the clinic," his research has now opened a new door.

JOBS TODAY!

QFIT Career Fair

Grant Hall

Friday, February 5th

12:00 - 5:00

FREE FOOD

IBM, TD Bank IT, CIBC, Royal Bank Financial Group, Andersen Consulting, The Mutual Group, Nortel,
 Arthur Andersen Business Consulting, PeopleSoft, etc.

FEATURES

POP GOES THE WORLD?

According to Alison Loat, it may be the end of the world as we know it

By ALISON LOAT

Alison Loat is the Alma Mater Society vice-president of university affairs

I'M NOT CRAZY. I'M REALLY NOT. But have you seriously considered that we may only have another 11 months to live?

Wait, don't stop reading. I'm not crazy, remember? But I am really scared that this Y2K problem is going to mean a lot more than whacked-out computers and confused telecommunications, or even broken-down power sources. I think it could very well mean the end of the world.

Y2K — the internationally recognized acronym for the so-called millennium bug — had its genesis in the 1960s, when large mainframe computers began permeating workplaces for the first time. Back then, hard disk space was expensive, so in order to save costly megabytes, computer programmers developed shorthand code. One of these tricks involved using only two numbers to indicate the year, meaning that on January 1, 2000, the trillions of lines of computer code that control our lives will mistakenly think it is 1900, tossing our entire technological web out of whack. Not only does this have the potential to throw our entire network of modern conveniences out the window, but it could potentially mean a nuclear explosion that would put Hiroshima to shame.

I HATE to contribute to all this millennium bug madness, but I think we are all missing the point. So what if we can't send e-mail or faxes and may have to rely on talking to each other again? So what if I can't program my VCR to tape Ally McBeal anymore? Even losing running water or messed up banking records are nothing in the face of nuclear destruction.

Most people I've talked to haven't thought about this. Why? Because no one is writing about it. And why would they? Government, with a vested interest in preventing mass chaos, has no incentive to discuss the possibilities publicly. And scientists and journalists are unlikely to start seriously investigating the possibility that many, or perhaps all, of us could be dead within a year, killed by our own excesses. But if it isn't a concern, then why is the Pentagon spending over $2.5 billion US to fix more than 2,500 missile systems in the former Soviet Union?

THE SOURCE OF MY FEAR dates back to the 1940s, when the East and West engaged in a nuclear power struggle that,

TRUE BELIEVER? For Alison Loat, the evidence is telling that the Y2K bug may be more of a concern than the public makes it out to be.

PHOTO BY PAUL HESLER

although in retrospect appeared juvenile and unnecessary, at the time seemed a matter of life and death. Today, in our relatively peaceful post-Cold War era, we are plagued with the reality of thousands of nuclear warheads hooked up to ancient computer technology.

According to Pentagon and NATO officials, computer malfunctions could cause 1960s and 1970s warning systems to perceive an attack even when there is none, forcing them to launch a retaliation.

Just think about it. That same technology embedded in my coffee machine that will prevent me from having a fresh cup on January 1 is essentially the same technology that makes the launching of a nuclear warhead possible. And by the same technology I mean dual-digitized and un-compliant. I don't profess to be a computer expert, but explain to me why that same mistake that will cause bank records to disappear or electricity to cut out won't also cause a technical malfunction resulting in the explosion of a nuclear weapon or two.

Pentagon and NATO officials, for what they're worth, have announced that it is not defence, but offence that is the issue. Computer malfunctions, they say, could cause these 1960s and 1970s warning systems to perceive an attack even when there is none, forcing them to launch a retaliation. They have told the public that the USA has more than adequately ensured the safety of their stockpiles, but the States is certainly not the only country in the world with nuclear capability. And given the bankruptcy of the former Soviet Union, there is no way they can afford to debug millions of lines of code in order to secure control over their nuclear weapons by January 1. There are no guarantees that those bombs will remain snug in their silos — a pretty frightening thought when one realizes that even one of those weapons could wipe out a large city in one fell swoop.

What is just as frightening is the thought that we may have had this coming to us. For over two centuries, humans have manipulated and exploited the world around us in historically unprecedented ways. All the while, we have been reluctant to really ask ourselves what effect this is having on us socially, environmentally or philosophically. The year 2000 seems to be an opportune time for the truth to catch up to us, as it always does. Despite warning after warning, we have refused to impose limits on our linear pursuit of progress. We seem incapable of altering our view on the world as a natural environment that exists for our use and abuse. We've barely paused to take a breath or to ask ourselves what effect we are having on our environment and on our way of life.

In the most perverse logic of progress, humankind has rushed to build weapons designed to kill each other. How can we possibly do that sort of thing without it having some sort of long-lasting effect? Is it realistic to think we can build all that without there being any serious consequences? Hiroshima, Nagasaki and Chernobyl were all catastrophic events, but still left the majority of us in the West untouched.

Furthermore, these events failed to change our way of thinking — we still fail to pay little more than lip service to the idea that there are serious, irreversible consequences to our conception of progress. Humans are ridiculously stubborn and will not accept that we should be operating with some conception of limits: limits to what our natural world can handle, and a limit to what is morally acceptable or desirable under the banner of progress. The existence of the hole in the ozone, for example, was known for decades before anyone decided to take serious action on reducing CFCs. We can list countless causes of cancer, yet, for the most part, we fail to alter our lifestyles accordingly. Scientists working on the development of the bomb also heeded warnings about its use, but we pushed forward anyway, oblivious to the reality of nuclear weapons. In the west, we operate with the foolish belief that someone will fix things once they happen, that science and scientists will find the cure, or the solution, to whatever problem befalls our civilization at any particular point. It's a dangerous game, and one that I'm afraid we may lose.

I'M NOT POSITIVE any of this is going to happen. I'm not a computer expert, nor am I a scientist. After all, the very bug that may cause the warheads to explode could just as well prevent their operation all together. But nuclear destruction is certainly a possibility, one which we should at least consider. It's a depressing thought. For many of us, our lives are just beginning, and perhaps we'll never have the chance to experience a career, or our own family, or anything beyond the present.

Maybe you want to carpe diem, maybe you don't. I haven't decided if I'm going to live my life any differently; after all, a car could hit me tomorrow.

And I'll remind you again, I'm not crazy. Maybe I'm over-reacting, maybe not. Maybe this will just mess something up at the bank, and erase all of our student loans.

Alison Loat is normally optimistic.

By ANGELA LYON
 AND JEFF KOENIG

Dealing with yeast infections

MOST WOMEN will have a yeast infection at least once in their lives, and, recently, medications for yeast infections have become available over the counter instead of by prescription only. We know this because of the countless television commercials about Monistat and Gynolrin that we see each week. These ads make no mention of the inexpensive and effective home remedies for yeast infections that have been known for generations.

Women naturally have a discharge from the vagina — it is clear, colourless and has little or no odour. For some women, normal discharge may be more opaque or even a pale yellow. If you have an unusual discharge and haven't had a doctor-diagnosed yeast infection previously, you must see a doctor before trying to self-diagnose. In a recent study 72 per cent of women, who thought their vaginal discharge with itching and burning was a result of yeast, were wrong. Unless you've had a yeast infection recently, and this looks exactly the same, see your doctor to make sure.

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH
 • If the discharge is thick, white and cottage-cheese like, if you are experiencing itching and burning and the discharge is mild smelling — maybe a little like bread dough — then you probably have a yeast infection.
 • If the discharge is whitish-grey with a milk-like consistency and a strong fishy odour, you probably have a bacterial infection — see your doctor! Left untreated, a bacterial infection can lead to pelvic inflammatory disease and cervical infections which can leave you with serious complications such as the inability to conceive or carry a pregnancy to full term.

 • If the discharge is yellow or greenish and is accompanied by pain see your doctor immediately. It could be a sexually transmitted infection which can be cured by prescription medication, but which if left untreated can also have irreversible consequences.

YEAST INFECTIONS OCCUR when the acid/alkali balance of the vagina is disturbed. This is frequently caused by the use of douches, spermicides, antibiotics, oral contraceptives or by pregnancy. It is normal to have some bacteria (lactobacilli) and some yeasts in the vagina. Normally they help control each other's populations, however when hormone levels change or when antibiotics lower the lactobacilli population the yeast population can grow like wildfire.

Continued on next page.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Editor-in-chief candidates
Open forum

Meet the candidates running for editor-in-chief of The Queen's Journal

All Queen's students, staff, and faculty are welcome

Sunday, February 7
Noon - 2 p.m.
The Journal house — 272 Earl St.

Frosh Week Videos are here!!!

WERE REALLY, REALLY SORRY

THAT YOU'VE HAD TO WAIT

It's taken 5 months longer than necessary to provide you with 30 minutes of memories, but now it's cheaper!!!!

September $15
February $10
(5 months = $5 discount)

Come to sign up or pick up your own copy
Feb 5,8,9 1 - 3 pm
in the Lower JDUC

*more times will be announced next week

Keep your eye on the Q

Friday's at 9:30pm & Sunday's at 8ish

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

Continued from page 13

There are two lines of attack to cure a yeast infection; to increase the acidity of the vagina to make it an inhospitable environment for growing yeast, or to increase the population of lactobacillus.

Treatments

Capsules or Suppositories: Insert a yogurt capsule or tablet (lactobacillus acidophilus) into the vagina nightly for 7-10 nights. Plain calendula suppositories are another option. These are available at most health food stores.

Douching: An early case of yeast can be cured by douching with a vinegar solution of 2 tablespoons of vinegar (4-5% acetic acid) to a quart (4 cups) of warm water. Buy a commercial douche, empty it out and rinse it thoroughly. Make up a solution of vinegar/water, place the solution in the douche and insert it into the vagina twice a day for 5-10 days, allowing it to flush out completely. If you are irritated by the vinegar, or if it doesn't seem to be helping, use buttermilk or a diluted yogurt solution twice a day for 7-10 days. Yogurt solutions can be made with 1 tablespoon of live yogurt or lactobacillus acidophilus powder to 1 quart of warm water. After you have washed and douches, you can put petroleum jelly or vitamin A&D ointment on the outer parts of the vulva to help protect and heal this area.

Aromatherapy: Add 4 drops of essential oil of tea tree and 2 drops of myrrh to your bathwater. Use 4 drops of essential oil of tea tree in 1 quart of warm water in a douche, or put 1 drop of tea tree oil on a tampon and insert overnight.

NON-PREGNANT WOMEN can use any of these options to cure their yeast infections. Pregnant women should check with their doctor or midwife to see what they recommend. Please note that douching during pregnancy is not recommended. Stubborn cases may require prescription medication. Do not have sexual intercourse while undergoing treatment for a yeast infection, as it breaks up and spreads the yeast colonies.

A yeast infection can be prevented by incorporating the following practices into your everyday life:

- Bathe often and wear absorbent cotton underwear rather than those made of synthetic fibres.
- Avoid talc, vaginal deodorants and scented soaps. Avoid dyes and deodorants when purchasing toilet paper and sanitary products.
- Always wipe from front to back when going to the toilet, to avoid introducing bacteria from the anus into the vagina.

If you are prone to yeast infections you may wish to prevent them by reducing your intake of food which contain yeast: bread, mushrooms, blue cheese, alcohol, soy sauce, food containing monosodium glutamate, smoked fish and sausages. Boost your immune system by eating plenty of raw and lightly cooked vegetables, brown rice and lean meat or fish. Incorporate olive oil and garlic into your meals. Avoid coffee and tea, drink plenty of water. When taking antibiotics eat plenty of yogurt. You may wish to keep a bottle of yogurt capsules (lactobacillus) in your refrigerator for insertion into the vagina if you are feeling the early warning signs of a yeast infection (itching or burning).

Information sheets on this and various other topics are available at the SHRC in the Grey House (51 Queen's Crescent). The SHRC provides information and referrals as well as the sale of contraception and safer-sex products at cost to Queen's and the community.

a different edge
hair & tanning salon

203 Wellington St. • 547-2057

Purchase 10 Sessions for $60.00 and receive one free session

Purchase 15 sessions for $85.00 and receive one free session

Purchase one package at regular price and receive a 2nd package for 1/2 price

$100.00 Monthly

20% off all hair services

Tanning Special

- 10 Sessions
- One Bottle of California Tanning Max Lotion
- 1 pair of Peepers

Only $60.00 (reg. $75.00)

SOLO HAIR DESIGN • TANNING SALON
376 Barrie Street • 542-0823

SPORTS & FITNESS

NOT SWEETNESS

The man who has run further on NFL fields than any other has a whole new opponent to our run, time. Walter Payton has been diagnosed with a rare liver disease which can only be defeated with a transplant. The man they called 'Sweetness' is stricken with primary sclerosing cholangitis, which afflicts just three in 100,000 people. A painfully thin Payton, who spent his entire 13 year career playing for the Chicago Bears, broke down during the press conference and thanked all the people that would be praying for his recovery. Hopefully luck will smile on one of the hardest working people ever to play football.

NOT AGAIN

Here we go again. Taking a page out of the Florida Marlins notebook, the San Diego Padres are dumping talent in favour of younger players. With the trade of slugger Greg Vaughn to the Cincinnati Reds, who hit 50 homers last season, the team has now seen five regulars leave sunny San Diego. While star pitcher Kevin Brown, third baseman Ken Caminiti and centre-fielder Steve Finley left via free agency, the team has also traded starting pitcher Joey Hamilton to Toronto. In return for Vaughn they received one time all-star Reggie Sanders, infielder Damian Jackson and minor league pitcher Josh Harris. With a new stadium being built in Southern California, this is curious timing to dissolve a promising squad.

TOP TEN UPDATE

There is only one Queen's team in any of the CIAU top-10 rankings and it is the women's basketball squad. Dave Wilson's crew has spent most of the year in these rankings and currently hold the number nine position. They have been ranked as highly as sixth, but have fallen with losses to Toronto and Laurentian since the holiday break. The number one team in the land is University of Alberta, who are closely pursued by divisional foe University of Victoria.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

- NBA opening night would have the same number of fans present as the original start date — none.
- The Vancouver Canucks would score as many goals per game as Pavel Bure.
- Dan Reeves would get a new heart, Walter Payton would get a new liver and Mike Milbury would get a new brain.

ATHLETES OF THE WEEK

BY NEATE SAGER

Jake Magolan

with so much skill." The graduate of Kitchener's Resurrection Catholic Secondary School is aware of the synergy which has brought about his court prowess: the tutelage of his father, who played volleyball professionally

Please see Star on page 16

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

Caroline Gibbings

Very few athletes at Queen's have enjoyed individual success like The Queen's Journal female athlete of the week, and her career keeps on rolling. With a 10 win, 0 loss weekend Caroline Gibbings improved her badminton season record to 34-2.

Since arriving at Queen's, the third-year commerce student has only lost three matches in both singles and doubles action, while the badminton team has twice been crowned OUA Champions.

This season the team has not been quite as dominant, and enters the OUA Championships next weekend in Ottawa as underdogs. The squad will play top rated York, a team that defeated them twice this season in their first round match-up.

"We have really close games against them," said Gibbings, a Toronto native. "Three York players play at the National level. They are really strong this year and it will be rough."

In addition to playing at a high level for Queen's, Gibbings competed in an international competition against teams from Scotland and the US, as well as participating in this month's Canada Winter Games.

"To stay competitive at a national level it is important to go outside of the varsity circuit," explained Gibbings, who is a former winner of the Alfie Pierce award for excellent contributions to varsity sports by a

Please see Modest on page 16

Who am I?
The Hall is open. Can you guess who's in it?

The Queen's Journal Sports Department has built its very own Hall of Shame and after a great deal of reflection, the first 15 members have been inducted, uh, sorry, inducted.

To make this new institution all the more interactive, instead of just naming the list, the infamous 15 will be described and it will be up to the reader to guess who they are. To help solve the mystery, the answers will be listed on page 17.

In an attempt to create a competitive environment, point values for each correct player will be assigned in brackets and total scores will be tabulated at the end.

Good luck and hopefully none of the actions described hit too close to home.

1. (1 point) I am 6'8", but 6'11" with my stiletto heels. I was once considered one of the best defenders in the game and was nicknamed 'the Worm' for my sleek frame. Now after numerous publicized incidents involving referees, cameramen, models and Mormons, I am best described as a bad apple.

2. (1) I was first arrested when I was 12 years old for pickpocketing and shipped to a juvenile detention centre in the mountains, where I found a new vocation. I became one of the best in the world at a very young age, until my penchant for crime caught up with me and I was imprisoned. After being released from prison, I had my first bout with cannibalism but I continued to find employment.

3. (3) I was drafted in the first round out of the University of Alabama as a defensive stopper, but the league soon found out that my aggressive nature could help me attack on the offensive end as well. Unfortunately that same edgy personality served to see me attack another aspect of the game.

4. (3) I was once considered the greatest running back of them all who could run away and in front of my defence. As I grew older I continued to run and defence teams became a friend not a foe.

5. (5) I started my career juggling in front of crowds at half-time of professional games. I elevated myself to the greatest player of my time and with a sliver of hand my legend grew. The same legend fell rapidly with rampant drug use, constant weight gain and a habit of shooting at reporters.

6. (1) I am the dirtiest of the 'dirty birds'. Despite my nickname as the 'prophet', I could nor predict that it was a policeman.

7. (5) You can call me Joey, but if you do I will beat the heck out of you. I have thrown balls at fans, drank too much and had run-ins with other players and managers. It don't matter because I still ring up the dough.

8. (5) I am not as warm and cuddly as my nickname. I have long been a fan favourite until a few words about a Tiger hurt my reputation.

9. (3) I wear red sweater, my face turns red with anger and if the chair ain't pinned down, I'll throw it. Referees and reporters are my foes and I'll be sure to let you know.

10. (5) I was a middling competitor until I married a steroid using shot putter and won three Olympic gold medals. A scandal ensued but I failed no test until two years later, when my drug test sample had more alcohol than urine.

11. (3) I consider myself a tough hitting individual, but others see me as the dirtiest player in the game. My path has been littered by blown knees and lengthy suspensions.

12. (3) I am 74 years old and spent some of my life as a fascist administrator. In recent times I have been the head of a lucrative 'old boys club', that has seen an institution tarnished forever.

13. (3) They used to call me 'Charlie' because I gambled on the base paths. Despite one of the most prolific careers in history, they will not honour my accomplishments.

14. (3) I jumped on to the scene at a young age, but when my career didn't progress I became tough as iron. My career came undone like a poorly tied shoelace.

15. (6) I won an Olympic gold medal in the glamour event of the games. I am known for my ample physique, but in my last stand at the games I was disqualified and marched out like a petulant child.

Please see Hall on page 17

ON DECK

FRIDAY
Basketball vs. Bishop's
@Bartlett Gym
Women 6 p.m.
Men 8 p.m.

SATURDAY
Basketball vs. Laval
@Bartlett Gym
Women 6 p.m.
Men 8 p.m.

SUDDEN DEATH PLAYOFFS!
MEN'S VOLLEYBALL TAKES ON YORK UNIVERSITY
SATURDAY 2:00 P.M. @ BARTLETT GYM
GET OUT THERE AND CHEER ON YOUR GOLDEN GAELS!

NHL on a breakaway Star leader

By Robert MacNeil

At the end of last year's NHL season, the game was being criticized left and right. After the Olympic disaster in which both Canada and the US did not win medals, the playoffs dragged on forever until the Red Wings mercifully ended it with a four-game sweep of Washington.

This season, however, has been a different story. There have been several surprising teams and memorable individual performances. One of the greatest surprises has been the resurgence of the Toronto Maple Leafs. As of Wednesday, they had 61 points and led the league with a whopping 160 goals scored (40 more than this time last year). Pat Quinn has provided a shaken squad with rejuvenated confidence and Curtis Joseph has allowed a young defence to make mistakes.

Some may argue that Toronto's big-market budget allowed them to buy their way back to success. The Leafs have always had the cash, but not the brains that President and GM Ken Dryden and Assistant GM Mike Smith are finally providing, and that is the key difference.

A further success story has been the phenomenal play of the small-market Ottawa Senators. The Sens currently have 60 points and now have a bonafide number one goalie in all-star Ron Tugnutt. The journeyman goaltender has a record of 15-5-4 with a GAA under 1.60 and has better stats than Dominik Hasek. Alexei Yashin leads a Senators offence that recently scored a team-record nine goals against the hapless New York Islanders.

At the All-Star Game in Tampa, the Maurice Richard trophy was presented for the first time and will be awarded to the league's goal-scoring leader at the end of the season. Currently, John LeClair of the Philadelphia Flyers is in the lead with 31 goals.

Speaking of the Flyers, Bob Clarke has apparently solved the revolving goaltending situation with his signing of veteran John Vanbiesbroeck. The 'Beezer' has a record of 17-7-9 and a 1.85 GAA. The Flyers have suffered enough playoff futility over the last few seasons that now it appears the fans may have a reason to be somewhat optimistic.

Fans in Vancouver and Montreal can only dream that their problems would be as simple. The Canucks have been hampered all year by Pavel Bure's holdout, and Head Coach Mike Keenan recently got the axe in favour of former Colorado coach Marc Crawford. In Montreal, Habs fans are again pushing the panic button, and Jacques Lemaire, a player from the glory days, was brought in as a 'special consultant.'

As in any season, the talk of superstar Wayne Gretzky retiring comes up often. The 38-year old Great One has shown no reason to hang up his skates because he is performing this year at a point-a-game rate. Fellow fogie Ray Bourque, in his 21st campaign, has shown he has lost no speed and is being mentioned as a possible Norris Trophy candidate.

Building on this momentum, the NHL announced on Tuesday that they are continuing the two-referee system for this year's playoffs. This will ensure that the players won't have to worry about calls going missed and being cheated (the Wayne Gretzky high-stick on Doug Gilmour a few years ago comes to mind).

It's nice to see that at least one professional sports league does not continue to shoot itself in the foot.

Continued from page 15

in Europe, his seasoning with the Ontario team that won a bronze medal at the 1997 Canada Games, and being surrounded with skilled teammates at Queen's. "I've had the opportunity, but there's still a matter of putting out the effort... I've had my share of luck," said Magolan, making special citation of his experience with the provincial team. "It's the reason I am where I am now... three summers of hard work where I learned much of what I know about volleyball."

Ironically, the setter for the Quebec squad who defeated Magolan's Ontario team in the semifinals of those games was Michel Cameron, now a stellar setter for the Gaels, an ideal foil for Magolan and his fellow hitters.

"We put six very strong people on the court... I don't think I've ever been on a team with so much skill."

— Jake Magolan

"We're very lucky to have him playing for us," Magolan said, crediting Cameron's setting abilities for permitting the Gaels to successfully run their preferred offence in which Magolan is deployed as a back-row attacker. "The reason we can do this is because of Michel's setting."

Greetings, hockey fans! This week we have a new pool leader: Congratulations, Chad Rawn, Arts '98. Chad picked: Leclair, Jagg, Lindros, Lidstrom, MacInnis, Hasek, and Brashear. The ideal team for this week would have been to have Jagg, Lindros, and either Kariya or Leclair up front. On the blue line, Larry Murphy is leading our slate of defencemen with 34 points, followed by MacInnis, Leetch, and Lidstrom with 31 points each. Dominik Hasek is still running the show in net with 70 points, however Patrick Roy made up the most ground this week with two wins, including one shutout. Rounding out our optimum team would be Buffalo's Matthew Barnaby enforcing. He has 44 points according to our formula, but the man spending the most time in the box is currently Paul Laus, who is contributing 40 points to some of your bottom lines.

The following table lists the top 20 pool players for the period ended Monday, February 1. All stats are compiled based upon those published in the Globe & Mail. Any errors (spelling or otherwise) should be brought to the attention of 4rind@qlink.

TOTAL	NAME	FAULTY/YEAR
363	Chad Rawn	Arts '98
361	Dave Gilbert	Arts '02
358	Thomas Leung	Comm '00
356	James Prentice	Sci '01
356	Peter Gillespie	Arts '99
352	Stephen Leung	Sci '99
350	Sergiy Kolosov	Arts '00
349	Paul Kim	Arts '02
349	Ceilidh Templeton	Sci '01
347	Matt Murl	Comm '01
347	Adam Kaminsky	Arts '99
345	Rick Schippling	Arts '02
344	Tara Harrison	Arts '02
344	Scott Snowden	Sci '01
343	Ryan Culhane	Arts '01
342	Emma Hutchinson	Arts '02
342	Sarah Crosbie	Arts '00
340	Angelina Whiteman	Arts '00
340	Dev Patel	Sci '01
339	Jeff Child	Arts '00

Intramural corner

Application forms are now being accepted for the 1999-2000 intramural season. The following positions require prior experience with the Queen's Intramural Program: Scheduling Co-ordinators, Officials Co-ordinator, Evening Supervisors, and Chief Officials for hockey, volleyball, basketball, broomball, racket sports, pool sports, curling and field sports.

There are also several positions that do not require prior experience. These include Publicity Co-ordinator, Awards Co-ordinator, Pay Co-ordinator, Faculty Liaison Officer, Promotion Officers, Lighting Convenor and Web Site Officer. Other positions include Tournament Sport Convenors for BEWIC Sports Days, and a variety of BEWS, WIC and BEWIC sports.

Application forms and a full description of the positions available for the 1999-2000 season can be found on the bulletin board outside of room 201A in the Phys-ed Centre.

Applications should be submitted to the Intramural Co-ordinator in room 204A (Phys-ed Centre) by 6 p.m. February 18, 1999.

OUA STANDINGS

MEN'S HOCKEY
FAR EAST					MID WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
UQTR	17	13	3	1	83	34	27	Brack	20	10	10	7	78	20
Ottawa	19	13	6	0	81	56	26	York	19	7	7	5	68	42
Concordia	19	12	2	2	81	57	26	Laurier	20	7	9	4	70	91
McGill	19	10	5	4	78	63	24	Ryerson	23	4	14	0	61	99
MID EAST					FAR WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
Catshp	20	7	6	5	81	69	19	Windsor	20	43	3	2	74	54
Toronto	20	6	10	4	61	67	16	Laurier	19	8	7	4	64	59
Queen's	22	4	12	6	75	97	14	Victoria	20	40	10	0	77	66
RMC	22	5	18	1	69	116	7	Waterloo	20	7	7	6	72	67

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL
EAST					WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
York	7	8	1	10	Windsor	20	10	10	7	78
Toronto	4	7	2	14	York	19	7	7	5	68
Ottawa	9	6	1	12	Laurier	20	7	9	4	70
Queen's	9	5	4	10	Ryerson	23	4	14	0	61
Concordia	8	1	7	2	Windsor	20	7	7	6	72
Calton	5	1	7	2	Windsor	20	7	7	6	72
Ryerson	3	0	8	0

WOMEN'S HOCKEY
EAST					WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
Toronto	16	12	2	2	58	21	26	Laurier	18	13	5	0	31
Laurier	12	8	4	16	Concordia	19	16	2	48	23
Queen's	12	8	4	16	York	17	4	4	30	12
York	12	8	4	16	Queen's	19	4	12	35	59
Laurier	12	8	4	16	Windsor	18	9	13	23	44
Ryerson	12	0	2	0

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL
EAST					WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
Laurier	12	10	2	2	236	203	20	Laurier	12	9	3	916	794
Toronto	12	9	1	873	739	18	Concordia	13	8	5	923	814
Queen's	12	8	4	787	676	16	Ryerson	11	7	4	850	862
Ryerson	11	6	5	690	715	12	Ottawa	12	6	6	919	901
York	12	3	9	618	514	6	Toronto	12	6	6	800	848
Concordia	11	2	11	590	553	4	Queen's	12	5	7	826	840
Ottawa	12	1	11	636	767	2	York	12	4	9	769	822

MEN'S BASKETBALL
EAST					WEST
W	L	T	F	A	W	L	T	F	A
Laurier	12	9	3	916	794	Laurier	12	9	3	916	794
Concordia	13	8	5	923	814	Concordia	13	8	5	923	814
Ryerson	11	7	4	850	862	Ryerson	11	7	4	850	862
Ottawa	12	6	6	919	901	Ottawa	12	6	6	919	901
Toronto	12	6	6	800	848	Toronto	12	6	6	800	848
Queen's	12	5	7	826	840	Queen's	12	5	7	826	840
York	12	4	9	769	822	York	12	4	9	769	822

Hall of Shame

Continued from page 15

You have given your best guesses, now it's time to find out who the worst of the worst are.

The first 15 inductees to the Queen's Journal Hall of Shame are...

- 1) Dennis Rodman (1 point)
- 2) Iron Mike Tyson (1)
- 3) Latrell Sprewell (3)
- 4) Oenthal James Simpson (3)
- 5) Soccer star Diego Maradona (5)
- 6) Eugene Robinson (1)
- 7) Baseball player Albert Belle (5)
- 8) Golfer Fuzzy Zoeller (5)
- 9) Coach Bobby Knight (3)
- 10) Irish swimmer Michelle Smith (5)
- 11) 'Bad Boy' Bryan Marchmont (3)
- 12) Juan Antonio Samaranch (3)
- 13) Pete Rose (3)
- 14) Skater Tonya Harding (3)
- 15) Sprinter Linford Christie (6)

RESULTS

0-10 points - You're a Hall of Shamer.
 11-20 - Isn't there a colouring contest.
 21-34 - Baby steps... almost there.
 35-44 - You can really recognize evil.
 45-49 - Sports editor of The Journal.
 50 - Screw The Journal, try S.L.

Adam Kaminsky compiled this list and is the curator of the Hall of Shame, but that don't mean he should be enshrined.

Camera Kingston

foto source™

• One hour photo • Video • Passports

ASK ABOUT YOUR CLUB CK SAVINGS CARD!

2nd Set* PRINTS FREE

35mm or APS film at time of development. See store for details.

114 Princess St.
(near Wellington)
549-3747
650 Bath Rd. at Gardiners Rd.
384-3747

Modest star shines

Continued from page 15

first year student. "The best players in Canada are either not going to school at all or not going full time and since there is no CLAU level it is a good way to play people from all over Canada."

The badminton coach sees Gibbings as an asset to the team due to her dedication.

"She sets a good example for the team, works hard and plays well," said Head Coach Seva Golosky, who feels that when all the statistics are compiled Gibbings will be the OUA individual singles champion and probably the OUA doubles champion with partner Anne Brodie.

Gibbings is more modest in her assessment of her value as an example to the team.

"I do try and help out the other girls on the team at times, but at the same time I welcome criticism on my play," she explained.

Badminton at Queen's has truly been a Gibbings family affair in the last few years, with Caroline's sister Sarah dominating the OUA circuit before her younger sister arrived. They even had the opportunity to play doubles together, where they naturally went undefeated.

The presence of two sisters (Caroline has a younger sister, Martha, who is in the process of choosing a university) who love to play the game has really helped in developing her game.

"It's nice because you have someone to play with, and two or three of us can do drills, practice shots and train," said Gibbings, who learned her game at Toronto's Granite Club. "It is easy to get one of them to play."

After the good experience Caroline had in first year with her older sister, she hopes that Martha will join her next year. It can be safely assumed that the entire badminton program shares her wish.

exchange

Events List

Blue Monday at Alfies $3
 Valentine's Party at Alfies $4
 ARTSCI Formal $65
 Swing Night at Grant $5
 The Way of a Pilgrim $3
 Enemy of the State $3

Tickets At:
exchange

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from	$349
Calgary	from	$299
Edmonton	from	$299
Regina	from	$349
Winnipeg	from	$239
Halifax	from	$249
Saint John	from	$329
St. John's	from	$299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
 Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
 Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

THE JOURNAL

1873

Voters List

for the position of editor-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal

If your name is not on this list and you have made 4 or more contributions to The Journal this year, please contact Keith Gercin at 533-2800.

Voting will take place at the Journal house, 272 Earl Street Sunday, February 14 (1 - 7 p.m.) Monday, February 15 (8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m.) Student ID is required

An all-candidates forum will be held on Sunday, February 7 at noon at the Journal house - 272 Earl St. All are welcome

Cini Achiam	Nicholas Du Prey	Sarah Le May	Andria Salles
Suzanne Armstrong	Lianne Elliot	Kristian Li	Mark Salvador
Geoff Ashenburt	Liz Frogley	Julietta Loeffler	Fiona Scannell
Galileo Bar	Mark Fucella	Marco Lui	Eli Schuster
Jesus Craig Bellinger	Anne Ge	Robert MacNeil	Karen Simpson
Crystal Bona	Kristen Glazer	Mandy Marriot	Nick Sinclair
John Bowman	Chris Glover	Laura MacInnis	Sean Springer
Rubin Brodie	Tania Haas	Bob McGill	Rebecca Steiner
Shawn Brimley	Chad Heard	Shandley McMurray	Fiona Stevenson
Kari Brimnel	Paul Heiser	Jackie McLachlan	James Terjanian
Maggie Buhajczyk	Sue Holland	Owen Minns	Laura Thackeray
Mike Burgess	Chris Holmes	Erik Miniso	Craig Thomas
Ken Butland	Renee Huang	Gord Moodie	Mike Tiffin
Stephanie Carvin	Bob Huish	Eric Morris	Jonathan Tinney
Janice Chan	Indi Jackson	Jennifer Morrison	Dimitrios Fotios
Jeff Child	Angela James	Sean Murray	Rachelle Villanueva
Cheryl Cheung	Adam Kaminsky	Luke Mylyaganani	Adria Vukstic
Hilary Clark	Lalain Kim	Anna Nesbitt	Jon Whittington
Andrew Cooke	Claudia Kraft	Jill Offenbeck	Virginia Wigmore
Katherine Colbourn	Jonathan Krashinsky	Sean Richmond	D.L. Windell
Sarah Crosbie	Alex Kronby	Dan Rowe	Mark Woolford
Robert D'Abelleuille	Jocelyn Laporte	Nathan Sager	Samson Wu
Rajeer Dave

UBS Exchange Viability Review Open Forum

The AMS Board of Directors is conducting a standard review of the Used Book Store Exchange and Tricolour Express. We will be hosting an open forum on Monday, February 8th at 2pm in the Music Listening Room of the John Deutsch University Centre. All students are invited to drop in and express their views and ideas about the UBS.

Comments can also be made through e-mail to 6rts@qlink.queensu.ca

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

You can't do that on television

TV is the clicker for contemporary social commentary

PLAY REVIEW

By MEGAN WEBSTER

Many of us grew up with the constant din of television buzzing and crackling in front of us. What are the effects of this constant rattle? How do we mirror these television images? To what extent do they mirror us? How are we transformed by television's presence in our life?

TV, a fringe-y play directed by screen and film studies student Ariel Goldblatt, addresses these questions. As two large screen projectors flash pre-recorded segments of shows in the TVs that frame the set, three actors explore the role of the media in our lives. Issues ranging from politics to aging, fashion to feminism and the overarching power of stereotypes to affect our lives are examined in this play.

Written in 1967 by Jean-Claude Van Italie, a Belgian experimentalist, this play was constructed when the first serious waves of concern about the media were being raised. Thirty-two years later, these questions are still with us and Goldblatt reinterprets them with a highly technical, post-modern approach.

The plot is, well, difficult to discern. It is a post-modern experimental form. Three characters work in a screening room where their job is to preview upcoming television shows. Forty Queen's actors worked together to create a barrage of shows that are constantly being played in the background. The relationship between the characters is also ambiguous. However, the success of the show lies in the interplay between the live and recorded characters. As the dialogue weaves between the live and recorded characters, they mimic each other, unbeknownst to either of them. Finally, the play concludes with live-feed where the characters on stage appear on the televisions. Creepy.

Actors Lenny Epstein, Jennifer McGetrick and Geoff Johnson perform in TV.

During the show one gets the sense that these are not characters, but actors acting, that the hysterical on stage laughter is not genuine, but pulled from a Full House laugh track, and that the slap-stick gags are over-rehearsed to sitcom perfection.

Meaning is not handed to you in this play; you have to figure it out yourself.

Lenny Epstein (The Imaginary Invalid) plays the bumbling, neurotic Hal, who struggles to deal with the death of his grandmother. The central live character, Susan, played by Jennifer McGetrick, is simultaneously a manipulative, sexy vixen and a desperate, misled woman who seeks affirmation from all the wrong people. Often unbelievable, and often sincere to the point of tragic, McGetrick's performance is diverse, highlighting the duality of images of women in the media.

It is Geoff Johnson's understated role that truly shines in this drama. "Stripped of his dignity and respect by his co-workers," the program reads, Johnson's subtle approach to the 43-year-old character he plays lends the drama a tone of realism. Although his loneliness was palpable, his desperation was refined, and he avoided slithering down the slippery slope to pathos. Johnson's performance was outstanding.

Meaning is not handed to you in this play; you have to figure it out yourself — a compliment or a criticism, depending on why you see plays. Goldblatt's presentation of this classic is fresh and energetic, the sets are stimulating, and the acting is, overall quite good. If you live in a "constant din" household, TV raises some questions you need to ask yourself.

TV is showing at Rotunda Theatre in Theological Hall February 4 at 8 p.m., and February 5 and 6 at 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. Tickets are only $4.

Rotate this!

Take 5
Take 5
Attic Records Ltd.

By SARAH CROSSIE

They're the New Kids on the Bandwagon and to say the least, they are outright horrible. Ranging in age from 13 to 17, Take 5 is the newest boy band commodity. Be careful not to get them mixed up with Take That, another boy band. Take That are cute, British and, if nothing else, have hit puberty.

Unfortunately for the little tots, their music sounds like a group of uneducated boys singing along to some record executive's lame lyrics.

Take 5 is a young quintet who describe their music as, "a fusion of hip-hop, r&b, and pop with an urban feel to it." Unfortunately for the little tots, their music sounds like a group of uneducated boys singing along to some record executive's lame lyrics.

utive's lame lyrics. Unless you're into a 16-year old boy named Tilky telling you, "Baby you look so fine, You blow my mind, I can't help but wonder if you're candy, You kiss so sweet, Knock me off my feet," Take 5 are not for you.

Their self-titled CD does offer 12 tracks but it's questionable that it's filled with, "stratospherically high falsettos, cello-like baritones and harmonically diverse tenors," as the band promises.

The only track worth listening to is "The Tide is High," but if you're into this song go for the original by Blondie.

The only track worth listening to is "The Tide is High," but if you're into this song go for the original by Blondie.

Most of the tracks have Ryan Goodel's baritone voice introducing each song — it's not romantic or soothing, but it does provide a good chuckle.

For any of you in need of a pop album or some new boys to salivate over, choose the original boy band prototype, The Backstreet Boys (Kevin Richardson, is at least in our age range) or their clone N'Sync — "Tearin' Up My Heart" is more than danceable.

Or if you already own both of these albums, (or can't bring yourself to endure the shame of purchasing them), I recommend checking out a KCVI choir recital. I guarantee the handful of boys in this group will be more pleasant to both the eyes and ears than Take 5.

Please see Rotate This on page 20

Grand ol' Opera

Opera satisfies, but fails to entice

CONCERT REVIEW

By DIMITRIOS TSOLOS

I suspect that for many students at Queen's the idea of an opera holds a kind of comical mystery. It definitely does for me.

As a child, my only exposure to opera consisted almost entirely of Saturday morning cartoons of oversized, Viking women who bellowed at the top of their lungs while Bugs Bunny ran around, evading the conductor hell bent on beating the crap out of him. Also, I once saw a few minutes of Luciano Pavarotti sing in concert with, I think, Bryan Adams and Sting. Naturally, with a knowledge base so firmly rooted in the vicariously lived experiences of television and movies, I was completely unsure of what to expect from Kingston Symphony's presentation of Pietro Mascagni's one-act opera Cavalleria Rusticana.

Upon entering the Grand Theatre's auditorium, I couldn't help but wonder at the massive setup of the orchestra. Each instrument group slowly warmed up with the harpist playing favourites to the high-pitched strings on her harp and the violin and cello players gliding over their instruments in a scratchy sort of way. Sitting immediately behind them, the choir waited, quiet and pensive, with lyrics in hand.

The show started with a male vocalist whose resonating voice seemed to permeate the auditorium, coming in waves from every direction. This singing was accompanied by the orchestra, playing a slow, musical build up of violin and cello sounds interspersed with drum beats, harp picks and blaring trombones. The ending featured a tumbling climax and the entrance of the conductor, Glen Fast, and the narrator, Stuart Hamilton. Sitting in his armchair on the side of the stage, Hamilton proceeded to introduce the audience to Cavalleria Rusticana, a tale of "charged romance, love on broken promises, and honour and revenge".

Opera Diva: Cavalleria Rusticana features Jean Stilwell.

The tale involves Turridu, the village Don Juan, who creates a dangerous love triangle between himself, his pregnant girlfriend, Santuzza, and the woman whom he desires, the lovely, but married, Lola. The situation comes to a head

Please see Opera on page 20

The 1999 A&E Grammy

Fill out the poll below with your best choices. The entry with the most correct will get the chance to dive into the A&E CD vault for 5 picx. Deadline is February 15, 1999. When complete, bring it on over to the Journal House, 272 Earl St. Good luck!

RECORD OF THE YEAR

- The Boy is Mine — Brandy & Monica
- My Heart Will Go On — Celine Dion
- Iris — Goo Goo Dolls
- Ray of Light — Madonna
- You're Still the One — Shania Twain
- My Father's Eyes — Eric Clapton
- Anytime — Brian McKnight
- Lullaby — Shawn Mullins
- You Were Meant For Me — Shingis

ALBUM OF THE YEAR

- The Globe Sessions — Sheryl Crow
- Version 2.0 — Garbage
- The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill — Lauryn Hill
- Ray of Light — Madonna
- Come On Over — Shania Twain
- Backstreet Boys
- Andee Bocelli
- Dixie Chicks
- Lauryn Hill
- Natalie Imbruglia
- Hello Nasty — Beastie Boys
- Is This Desire? — PJ Harvey
- Airbag/How Am I Driving? — Radiohead
- Adore — Smashing Pumpkins

BEST NEW ARTIST

- Intergalactic — Beastie Boys
- Money Ain't A Thing — Jermaine Dupri Featuring Jay-Z
- Déja Vu (Uptown Baby) — Lord Tariq & Peter Gunz
- Rosa Patks — OutKast
- Ghetto Superstar — Pras Michel Featuring ODB & Maya

BEST FEMALE POP VOCAL PERFORMANCE

- My Favourite Mistake — Sheryl Crow
- My Heart Will Go On — Celine Dion
- Can't Take My Eyes Off You — Lauryn Hill

BEST MALE POP VOCAL PERFORMANCE

- Torn — Natalie Imbruglia
- Adia — Sarah McLachlan
- Save Tonight — Eagle Eye Cherry

Name:
Telephone:
Email:

Ace of Hearts

Playing by Heart makes the first move

MOVIE REVIEW
Playing by Heart
Capitol Theatre

By JEFF CHILD

Winning hand: Jon Stewart and Gillian Anderson star in Playing by Heart

It is the hollow mass of muscle located in your chest. Its rhythmic contraction forces the circulation of blood to each extremity on your body. Your heart is the centre of your physiology that keeps your body working and alive, however, in a metaphorical sense, your heart is also composed of your warmest and innermost feelings, your best memories as a child, your compassion for life and your intense love for others.

As Valentine's day rolls around we are again reminded that love is still a hot ticket item at the box office. This season's most promising love flick seems to be Playing by Heart, an intense and poignant drama that follows the lives of 11 intricately woven characters, and their search for love and a sense of belonging.

The film is held together by an incredible cast who have all created characters with differing qualities of passion, uniqueness and depth. The ensemble is headed by veterans Sean Connery (Paul) and Gena Rowlands (Hannah), who play an aged couple trying to deal with the skeleton in their closet after 40 years of marriage. The other characters are mysteriously drawn to Paul and Hannah's relationship and are somehow connected to one another. The cast is filled out by Denis Quaid, Madeline Stowe, Jay Mohr of Saturday Night Live fame, Anthony Edwards of E.R. Jon Stewart and the X-Files' Gillian Anderson. Each actor brings fresh energy to the film.

Most entertaining was Denis Quaid's portrayal of Hugh, a loner that goes from lounge to lounge reciting the outrageously tragic stories of his life. Quaid is able to bring light humour to the heaviness of Playing by Heart, while keeping the intensity of the movie intact. Jon Stewart (Trent) and Gillian Anderson (Meredith) wrestle with the complications of past romantic relationships as they are forced into realizing their love for each other. Anderson fails to deviate from the logically staunch X-Files character of Scully, but although familiar, she adds strength and vulnerability to balance the rest of the characters in the film.

Playing by Heart is a meaningful film. It avoids the formulaic and superficial ideas about love and relationships that have been engulfing the big screen lately. The screenplay is beautifully crafted and well constructed. Whether you are in love or loveless, you will be forced to empathize and you will be drawn to the characters on the screen. Be prepared for one hour and 40 minutes of the powerful force of love and it's many manifestations: passion, pain, humour, and redemption, but most of all how love becomes a quiet peace within your heart. Without love we would be born and we would die — love makes everything in between these stages worth living for, the film Playing by Heart, brings this understanding to light.

Fearless Friday
Cheesecake & Cappuccino
$4.95

WANTED Computer Network Support Person

(for transition beginning March 01, 1999)

The Alma Mater Society is seeking a computer network support person to maintain its 50-node Novell network, Web server, and Skylight Lounge. The support person is responsible for supporting business, desktop publishing, accounting and general administrative applications for the AMS commissions, services, general office and numerous committees and activities.

This position requires someone with proven computer problem solving skills and an ability to resolve a wide range of hardware and software problems, under minimum supervision. Time commitment ranges between 10-20hrs/wk. Salary approximately $7500 for the year.

The successful candidate will:

- have experience running PCs in a Windows NT networking environment,
- have good communication & organizational skills,
- have a working knowledge of MS Office,
- benefit from Novell networking experience in a business computing environment,
- benefit from any network migration experience.

Pursuant to AMS policies, priority is given to undergraduate students.

Questions?

Chris Holmes, AMS Network Support
chns@ams.queensu.ca
Claude Sherren, AMS General Manager
gm@ams.queensu.ca or call 533-2725

Pick up an application at the AMS front desk in the JDUC. Applications due before 4:30 p.m. on Friday, February 12, 1999.

Opera a challenge

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Belted it out: The Kingston Symphony performed Cavalleria Rusticana.

Continued from page 18

when Santuzza confronts Turridu and demands that he stay with her. He does the opposite, however, and follows Lola into the local church. In a fit of rage and despair, Santuzza tells Lola's husband, Silvio, of his wife's transgressions. This conversation results in a confrontation between Silvio and Turridu, and the play ending with Turridu being killed in a duel.

Having only the music and the singing, my imagination was encouraged to run free. Closing my eyes, I could easily picture a richly technicolored landscape with flowers in the fields, and children playing amongst cobblestone, as a crusty Turridu lurked his way home from an exhausting night at Lola's house.

I found that the opera was entertaining because of the novelty of seeing it for the first time, but there were some instances when it was hard to follow. I attribute this to not being able to understand the vocalists, who sang in Italian, and my upbringing on continuous 30 second audio and visual bites.

As lowbrow as it may sound, the only opera I'm interested in seeing any time soon will involve oversized, Viking women, talking rabbits and conductors who have anvils fall on their heads.

As lowbrow as it may sound, the only opera I'm interested in seeing any time soon will involve oversized Viking women, talking rabbits and conductors who have anvils fall on their heads.

Rotate this!

continued from page 18

Reel Big Fish
Why Do They Rock So Hard?
Mojo Records

BY MIKE BURGESS

Dig
Life Like
Universal Music

BY DIMITRIOS TSOLOS

Last year, while commenting on the success of their hit single, "Sell Out," Reel Big Fish drummer Andrew Gonzales said, "People are tired of crappy bands like Bush and Counting Crows... They want something happy."

As a symbol of their commitment to offer an alternative to introspective melodrama, the seven-member school of ska-popsters is back with Why Do They Rock So Hard?, a collection of 17 hi-energy tracks that will blow-out your speakers and tickle your funny bone.

Although I personally like the Counting Crows (Bush is another story), Reel Big Fish's laid-back approach to music is very refreshing.

Most of their songs are about the silliness of human relationships, about how stupid people can be, and about being an up-and-coming band. Reel Big Fish treats these themes with a self-deprecating, sarcastic, tongue-in-cheek sense of humour, which reminds the listener not to take themselves, or life too seriously.

Check out, for example, songs like "I Want Your Girlfriend to be My Girlfriend Too" and "You Don't Know," which begins with the line "Well first of all, I'd like to say Fuck Off."

Reel Big Fish's pugnacious, cavalier attitude towards songwriting, combined with their incredible energy — (it seems the band have long-since abandoned their Ritalin prescriptions) — results in a CD which, as the title suggests, absolutely rocks. The first three tracks set the tone of the album, releasing an unrelenting torrent of vocals, guitars, and horns which retains its momentum through the very last chord.

Especially worth a listen are "Somebody Hates Me," "Brand New Song," "She's Famous Now," and "The Kids Don't Like It," which all push the limits of instruments, tempo and volume.

Regardless of your musical taste, it is impossible to hate this CD. It is evident from their enthusiasm and playfulness that Reel Big Fish love to play music, and that when they're swimming with the current of their ska-pop sound, nothing can bring them down. This attitude is infectious, making it difficult not to join their school and swim along.

Just like a good movie, a good album must have a lot of heart and effort put into it.

That may be the reason I found Dig's album, Life Like, to be very poor. I'm not sure I understood the band and their music because it seemed too contrived. I refuse to believe that Dig played with heartfelt sincerity, or tried to leave their own artistic stamp on their music. Many of the songs seemed to pander to what the group must have believed their label and target audience really wanted to hear.

Basically, the album is a lame derivative of a kind of happy, U2/alt-rock'ish sound with uplifting drum beats and guitar riffs, and the uninteresting vocals of lead singer Scott Hackwith.

A number of the songs, most notably "Live In Sound," "The Fuzz," and "Stay on the Grass," start out on a good footing but then trail back into the familiar and monotonous exchanges of flat sounding lyrics and instrument play. Many of the songs got old really fast.

I'm not sure that Dig could do anything to salvage their "style" of music short of a complete overhaul and a personal, deep contemplation of what groups they really want their band to sound like.

In short, Dig's album Life Like is anything but.

PLAY REVIEW

BY MIKE REED

Marking the 60th anniversary of the movie classic The Wizard of Oz, Sunesis Productions is putting on Jesse Stewart's For the Love of Oz at Kingston's Earl Street Theatre.

Co-directed by the Stewart and Fred Duquette, Stewart's sequel will hardly have rejoicing lava-lamp junkies playing Pink Floyd's Dark Side of the Moon.

Weak in plot and thin in acting, this show was not all its publicity cracked it up to be. Although it was about a "middle-aged Dorothy," it was hardly a "musical."

The play opens in an Oz without colour, and the wizard (Peter George) suspended in mid-air in his balloon. Dorothy (Beth Morris), having taken care of business in Hollywood on a long hiatus from Oz, travels back to the site of her first adventure and finds the place in disarray. She discovers the Scarecrow (Duquette) "thinking too much," and unable to find a solution to the Wizard's plight.

Upon further travels, Dorothy encounters the Tin Man (Stewart), who has fallen

Bad night in Oz

Yellow brick road a dead end apart from being in love, and is now composed of a drum kit.

Further travels take them to the Lion, who has so much courage that he has "conquered" the jungle by fornicating with its teenage population, fathering several lion cubs. The four reunited old friends search for something to help Oz regain its colour.

Since I tend to see the cup as half full instead of half empty, the good will precede the bad for the breadth of the remainder of this review.

Stewart made a comedic and entertaining Tin Man. Cocker's depiction of the Wicked Witch was exceptional — her jeering and cackling could set fear into the hearts of any playgoer. The Studio Pas de Chat dancers also displayed their grace and poise on stage, completing some well choreographed moves (choreographed by Angela Bryant-Wood). The stars, however, did not always stand in the spotlights—figuratively and literally. The harmonized song performed by the four leads was hardly that and Duquette seemed to trip over a few of his "intellectual" lines.

In the finale, Morris seemed to be a little overzealous in her dancing and her pleas for audience participation. Finally, the red slippers were changed into gold. In my opinion, red slippers are red slippers. That is that. Messing with the red slippers would be like messing hockey fixed, James Dean not cool, or the IOC honest.

The play did have good intentions, but its child-like presentation made it unlikable and tired. I would not recommend this play to any of my friends — I can however, think of some enemies.

Chalmers United Church
212 Barrie Street (at Clergy)
546-3263

A Caring Community,
a Questioning Faith,
a Grounded Hope

Worship every Sunday, 10:30 a.m.

We welcome Students,
Faculty, and Staff!
Join us, in person or by radio
960 AM (CFFX)

Visit our web site: <http://web.caalink.com/uckington/chalmers/>

FRANSELLY Hair & Esthetics

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St.
549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples.
www.Fransellyhair.com

Sheridan

Montessori Teacher Education Program

(Early Childhood Level)

Apply Now for June 1999.

New Post-graduate Program at Sheridan College

Prepare for career opportunities nationally and internationally in the growing field of private education.

To receive information:

Call: 416-480-1320

Email: sheridan@minacs.com
Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/edserv/montessori.htm

ASUS ARTS & SCIENCE FORMAL '99

Q. What are your plans for the eve of March 6, 1999?

D) All of the above while Roaring into the 20's

Tickets: $65 at UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core

For information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core 183 University, 533-6000 x 7580

Trouble at Alfie's !?!?

We need your help!

The Alfie's Viability review committee is looking for students from all disciplines to participate in an informal discussion group about our beloved campus bar. We would like to get some feedback from patrons and non-patrons about what they like or don't like about Alfie's.

The session will take place this Saturday in the AMS boardroom at 4 pm. Refreshments will be provided. If you have any questions or want to comment and can't make the session please e-mail 6jjj or 6eml1.

Hope to see you there!

Classifieds

BURGER KING

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

needed for setting up, cleaning up and helping out during the formal (March 6th). Checking coats, dealing Black Jack hands, etc. If interested, please contact Steve at 544-6000 ext. 75085 or stop by the ASUS Core.

FREE BRIDGE LESSONS. Next session starts Monday February 9th at 7:00 p.m. in the Robert Sutherland Room (Upper JDUC). For more information contact Liam at 531-3411 or email: 3wle@qink.queensu.ca

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, 12nd go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk-in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUERD OF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Hall an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/bluerd or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

SAVE MONEY! Save money on your formal ticket by helping out at the Artsci '99 Formal. Volunteers are

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CD's, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9006.

BE IN CHARGE! Head House Attendee applications for the Artsci '99 Formal are now available at the ASUS Core.

20TH ANNIVERSARY VOYAGEUR SEMINAR: Revisiting Canada at the Millennium August 2 - 8, 1999. With the millennium rapidly approaching, now is the time to take stock of the Canadian Dream. Join us to explore the intricacies of the French River delta in historic Peace Canoes, and to rejoice in our homeland and our freedoms. We invite you to participate in this unique nation-building

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced electrolysis
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

experience. Become a Millennium voyager. For more information please contact Dr. Bill Peruniak at (613) 533-6222.

ARE YOU INTERESTED in becoming a Peer Educator? We are currently recruiting volunteers for next year. There are many ways to get involved in this valuable experience. Why not look into becoming a Peer Learning Assistant, Peer Tutor, Peer Health Educator or get involved with the Peer Educator Program on Sex, Intimacy and Dating? Please come out to an information session and find out the details. Sessions will be held on Thursday, February 11th, 5:30 - 6:30 p.m. and Friday, February 12th, 12:30 - 1:30 p.m. Both sessions will take place at Student Counselling Services, Ground Floor of the St. Lawrence Building. For more information call Diane Nolting at 533-6712.

A MUSICAL COMEDY about a middle-aged Dorothy. FOR THE LOVE OF OZ by Jesse Stewart. Earl Street Theatre/KCVI between Allred and Frontenac. Adults $10; students $8. Advance tickets at Scrubbies 471 Princess. For more information call 546-0432.

REACH OUT! To your Community, check out the Info Fair in Wallace on February 10th. To learn about opportunities for you to volunteer around Kingston 10:30 - 2:30 p.m.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

WANTED
JAZZ VOCALIST, pianist and bassist looking for brass players and percussionist to play standards, creative work and for fun time. Any instrument welcome. Call 531-3613.

WANTED: Two housemates, preferably upper year, non-smoking females, to share a house at Johnson and Nelson. Rent $365 per month. ALL utilities included, 2 bathrooms, washer/dryer. Call 531-8143 for more info.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre. If found please call Jeaneite at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5650. Thanks!

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6ms3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Allred St. bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside MacCorry Salurday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if it's yours.

PERSONALS

VOTE CHRS SAFFORD and Shannon BELL for ASUS Exec. They will get

Aching feet? Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- Free assessments/ follow up
- 30 money-back guarantee
- 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Comstock Bldg.
Brockville, ON
K6V 1S9
613-498-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston!
Kingston, ON
K7L 1B3
1-545-0100/1545-1997

Dynamic Orthotics

your ASUS moving. See our web site at <http://qink.queensu.ca/~6spb1>

LET'S GET YOUR ASUS moving. VOTE CHRS SAFFORD and Shannon BELL for ASUS Executive. Lets bring ASUS into the 21st Century. See our web site at <http://qink.queensu.ca/~6spb1>

CORMAN MORI MINNS Everyone has ideas. (email yours to cmm4ams@hotmail.com) We have plans. (see <http://qink.queensu.ca/~6swc>) On February 9th and 10th vote for your AMS Executive: Corman Mori Minns

A Formal Invitation

George Reinblatt cordially invites the women of Queen's to take advantage of a very special opportunity

OFTEN, WHEN FORMAL time comes around, people choose their dates for a variety of reasons. But no matter how much thought is put in, many still choose unwisely. Often the night turns into no more than six hours of uncomfortable conversation. Often dates end up fighting and go away crying. Often your date sees some person they fooled around with in first year and goes for one more rogering in the hockey stands. Often dates storm out of the formal screaming "Formal Schmorral, I'm going karaokeing" or "Carry your children? I'd rather carry the Ebola virus!" Often the formal date ends in disaster.

That is why I am doing everything I can to make sure that on March 6 which is the ArtSci '99 Roaring Twenties Formal comes around, my night going to be perfect. I do not want to risk choosing a bad date. So I am doing something a bit different than the standard "Ask the drunkest girl at Alfie's" routine often seen at formal time. In order to assure that my date and I are perfectly matched, I am asking all of the eligible women in town to fill out this application form. This must be done so I can make an informed decision as to who the best date for me will be.

So here it is, the official application form for all of the women of Queen's to contend for since the conception of the intercontinental title: having the honour of being George's formal date. Who wouldn't want to go out with that zany Highland Dancer, that wacky cable television star, the gorgeous "Roy" from a Chorus Line, and the official GW bitch of 1998. And of course when you go out with George, your ticket and expenses will be paid for. It just might be the biggest prize of all time.

Please fill out the questions below and send in the form along with a picture or reasonable hand-drawn facsimile to the Journal House at 272 Earl St. Applications can also be sent via email to 4girl@qink.queensu.ca, but emailing a picture with your application would greatly increase your chances. All years and Faculties can apply (so let's see some frosh in there). The deadline for applications is Friday, February 12 at 11:38 p.m. Good luck to all.

Name: _____ Age: _____

Phone #: _____ Year: _____

Turn ons: _____

Turn offs: _____

Favourite hour-long action and/or drama television show (any era): _____

I most resemble:
a) demure AMS presidential candidate Sarah Corman
b) buxom star of the silver screen/Marilyn Manson girlfriend Rose McGowan
c) saucy Jeey from Dawson's Creek
d) a chimpanzee

Which of these phrases best describes your mental state:
a) Fucking insane
b) Kinda insane
c) Not very insane
d) Happy

Are you Amish? _____

How 'bout Mennonite?
You're filling this out because:
a) You're bored
b) You're ugly
c) You're stupid
d) You're wildly attracted to ex-Chorus Line cast members

How many drinks would it take before I start looking like hunky George Clooney?
_____

How do you like your toast?
a) Toasted
b) untoasted
c) Bread is for suckas

Are your parents rich?
_____

Do you feel that Bill Cosby's Kids say the darndest things is the work of Satan?
_____

If you could live in any historical period it would be:
a) The Black Plague
b) The Irish Potato Famine
c) The Chinese Cultural Revolution
d) The Era of Red-Hot Lovin'

What's your greatest talent?
a) Kicking out the jams!
b) Singing the complete works of Kool Moe Dee
c) Making and subsequently eating toast
d) Mocking Alfie's DJs in a pithy and urbane manner

If you were a Marriott dish, which one would you be?
_____

Lethal Weapon FDUR?!! What's up with that?!!
_____

Who was your favourite New Kid on the Block?
a) 'tough' Donny
b) 'cute' Joe
c) 'sensitive' Jordan
d) 'monkey-face' Danny
e) 'forgettable' Jon

Do you plan to be alive on March 6?
_____

If there is anything else you would like to add to this form, feel free to in the space provided:
_____

A.M.S. Executive Election and UNDERGRADUATE Student Trustee Election

O P E N U M

O P E N U M

Monday, Feb. 8 at 11:30am
JDUC - Lower Ceilidh

Come out and listen to the Trustee Candidates, and the AMS Executive Candidate Teams

Questions?
CONTACT CAIHY, CAROLYN OR SHAWN
IN THE COMMISSION OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS AT 533-6000 EXT. 74815

Hab Influedza?

It's influenza season again. Headaches, sore muscles, fever, chills and a cough from influenza can be downright nasty.

Feel like helping?

Kingston General Hospital and Queen's University researchers are working on a new drug to defeat this infection. We are looking for two types of participants:

- Group One
Children ages 5-12, with parental approval, who are normally healthy with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.
- Group Two
Adults and adolescents age 12 and up with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.

Please call as soon as you feel these symptoms
531-SICK (7425)
or your family doctor to find out if you qualify.

Spend the Fall 99 term in FRANCE

The 16 week (30 Aug - 18 Dec) SELF Program is offered by the Université Jean Moulin - Lyon 3

Academic courses in the Arts, Commerce and Law

Courses could possibly count as elective courses toward any program

Designed for students with intermediate-level of French language proficiency

Application deadline: 01 March

Applications & details from: Co-ordinator, University Exchanges and International Study,

Admission Services, Victoria School Bldg. 2nd floor 11D Alford St. at Union St. phone 533-6000 x 75379

Take 4 academic courses taught in English

Plus get intensive advanced language training in French

du Maurier
ARTS

Supporting 215 cultural organizations across Canada during the 1998-99 season

VOTE!

It's your democratic responsibility. Feb. 9 & 10, at polling stations across campus.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

SINCE 1873

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 9, 1999

Assault attempt behind Stooley's

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

At approximately midnight on Sunday evening a woman was assaulted in the 300 block area of Johnson Street, near the intersection with Division Street.

When [the victim] opened the car door she heard a noise and was then dragged out of her car and thrown to the ground.

According to Louise Fish, director of campus security, the woman was parking her car in the lot behind her apartment, in the row houses beside Stooley's Cafe. When she opened the car door she heard a noise and was then dragged out of her car and thrown to the ground.

The woman managed to escape by kicking the man and fled to her apartment where she contacted the police, said Fish. The perpetrator is described as heavy set and wearing a ball cap.

"It wasn't dealt with by us," said Fish, "we don't know [yet] whether or not she was a Queen's student."

Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), encouraged students to check the Security Web site and sign up for the Security listserv for alert updates.

The Kingston Police have yet to issue an official report on the incident.

If anyone has information concerning the assault they are asked to contact either the Kingston Police, at 549-4660, or Campus Security, at 533-6733.

Players from Queen's and CFB Petawawa face off at Confederation Basin Saturday afternoon for the annual Historic Hockey Series game. Please see related story on page 15.

PHOTO BY JASON HENDERSON

Guerrilla girls invade Queen's

BY ALEXANDRA DYER

The Guerrilla Girls took the stage at Queen's Thursday evening, announcing "we're here to show you what we've done since 1984 and we hope you can use us as a model for things in your own life."

One of the most outspoken and provocative groups to visit Queen's, the two speakers began their presentation wearing gorilla masks and ran in from the back of the auditorium throwing bananas into the audience. This sense of energy and excitement continued throughout the nearly two-hour multimedia presentation.

The Guerrilla Girls described themselves as a New York City-based organization that "represents women artists and acts as a conscience for the art world," explaining that they "wear the masks because it is smart to keep their identities a secret." The women also use fake names, in this case, "Frida" and "Aphra."

The organization emerged in the mid-1980s when "some female artists realized that conventional methods of protest weren't working with respect to women's representation in the art community," explained one of the women.

"We have received a lot of response in New York and are now reaching a much larger audience," one said, explaining, "our success is due to having a good idea which has spread like wildfire."

"We needed new tactics to confront discrimination in the art world and to develop new strategies to make feminism fashionable... The art community wanted to see itself as a very liberal space and we wanted to show them the truth," one of the speakers said.

Their approach to change is full of humour and catchy slogans such as "Do women have to be naked to get into the Met?" and "Top ten reasons why it's good to be a female artist."

They have also distributed a "Guerrilla Girls 1986 Report Card" for various New York City galleries and created newsletters entitled Hot Flashes and The Token Times.

"Frida" and "Aphra" acknowledged that they "are cocky" but said "it's fun to challenge the establishment and keep them on their toes."

The speakers said they wanted to see if their organization could expand and deal with other social issues such as abortion. "Recently we have also decided to expand our activities into the other art forms," they explained.

The Guerrilla Girls initially focused on the Oscars. As one of the speakers put it, "We looked at the number of women

Please see Oscars on page 7

index

Volume 126, Issue 31
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	13
Editorials	8	A&E	17
Opinions	9	Classifieds	21
Features	11	M&C	22

WEATHERWATCH

Today
Cloudy periods
High 1°C, Low -3°C,
POP 40%

Wednesday
Sunny
High 0°C, Low -7°C,
POP 30%

Thursday
Rainy
High 7°C, Low 1°C,
POP 60%

Friday
Cloudy
High -3°C, Low -8°C,
POP 40%

Queen's researcher wins prestigious grant

BY FIONA STEVENSON

A Queen's researcher is one of four Canadians to receive a prestigious EWR Steacie Memorial Fellowship from the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council.

Norinan C. Beaulieu, professor in the department of electrical and computer engineering, is a world authority on wireless communication theory. The award he has been granted recognizes Canadian university researchers who have captured international attention for outstanding achievement in the areas of science and engineering.

According to an NSERC citation, "Dr. Beaulieu has discovered ingenious mathematical approaches to predict in advance how adept new wireless and digital communications systems will perform... Communications companies currently spend million of dollars in expensive software simulation. Dr. Beaulieu's mathematical improvements mean that they will spend less and will get more accurate and reliable predications."

Beaulieu said he is the first electrical engineer in 15 years to receive this award and one of only four electrical engineers to be granted the award since it was created 35 years ago. "There may be a perception that the pure sciences are more scientific than engineering," he speculated.

Please see Field on page 4

THE MISSION:

Students protest changes to financial aid. University administrators close the school. The government wants to see radical reform or it doesn't re-open. You have three weeks.

Do you accept? A Queen's Vice-Principal did. See the feature on page 11 for his story.

Service expanding at Queen's Day Care

By NATALIE DIAZ

The Queen's Day Care service has recently extended its hours to include evening and weekend service.

The day care began as a student-run program in 1969, and has since expanded to serve Queen's students, staff, faculty, and Kingston residents. It has been revised by parents and staff during the last five years to create a relaxed environment where children can feel comfortable and safe, explained

Executive Director Eileen Beaugarde.

Beaugarde, along with associate Mary Sutherland, supervises two centres, one for babies and toddlers and one for preschoolers. In addition, they request that parents set aside two hours each month to spend in the day care with their children in order to familiarize themselves with the program.

According to Beaugarde, approximately 85 per cent of parents who use the Queen's Day Care are students.

On average, depending on the age of the child and the program, the daily cost is $4 per child. For students who cannot afford this rate, they can refer to Emergency Funds provided by Queen's, and can also use other services and financial assistance organized by the AMS.

Last year, the day care served a total of 155 families and 119 children, subsidised financially by the government and/or other services.

Despite the fact that Queen's Day Care is a self-run organization, the University financially supports the service with a grant each year to lower operating costs of the buildings, said Beaugarde. This allows the day care to lower fees and make it affordable to a larger portion of the Queen's community, she explained.

The AMS became involved in day care by creating an extended program on weekday evenings and Saturdays. The AMS Extended Child Care Program, coordinated by Allie Ferri, has been extremely successful and is used not only by students, but also by parents in the community, she said.

The AMS pays monthly rent to the Queen's Day Care to allow this service to run in their centres. This is done to maintain affordable prices in the day care system, Ferri said.

The program runs Monday to Thursday from 6 p.m. to 10:30 p.m., and on Saturdays from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. According to Ferri, demand for the service is increasing. Parents must call in advance by noon of the day they will be needing child care assistance, and are responsible to call and cancel if they cannot attend, she said.

Ferri said the demand for day care has increased "because this year, we have increased the amount of advertising throughout campus to promote awareness. The need has always been there but the awareness has not," said Ferri.

According to Ferri, the extended hours program is used 95 per cent by students, and 5 per cent by the faculty and the community. There are no allotted spaces for the number of children that can attend because they have qualified staff who can come in upon request, she said.

Chris Rego, a parent from the Kingston Community said, "The program is very affordable. I have been very impressed with the quality of the staff and service. I have recommended it to others."

The Queen's Day Care Centres are located at 169 Union Street and 96 Queen's Crescent.

The Queen's Day Care service is extending its hours.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

One year later: More PEC renovations planned

By STEFAN MARTIN AND FIONA STEVENSON

Today marks the first anniversary of the completion of extensive renovations to the Physical Education Centre, and plans for further renovations are underway.

"We got a lot accomplished, considering the budget," said Co-ordinator of Facilities and Services Bill Sparrow about last year's renovations, which Sparrow said cost "around $1.8 million."

The current reconstructed athletic venue boasts "20,000 feet of new or renovated area," said John McFarlane, chair of athletic recreation. Filling this space is new exercise equipment ranging from ergometers to elevating treadmills, a hard-wood aerobics room, and second-floor laboratories for use by the Physical Education department. Also on the second floor is the Fitness Assessment Centre, a pay-as-you-go service for individuals who wish to access qualified help in creating a proper exercise regime.

Sparrow said he is satisfied with the renovations, but added, "we could always use more room and better facilities."

Because the centre underwent major reconstruction last year, smaller improvements are planned for this year, McFarlane said. These include resurfacing the tennis courts at West Campus, refurbishing gymnasium floors, and cleaning up and organizing men's and women's locker rooms.

However, McFarlane and

Sparrow said they anticipate that another major reconstruction will occur in the next few years. Queen's is beginning a capital campaign, which includes plans for the construction of a new Student Life facility that will incorporate the PEC, Jock Hartly Arena, the International Centre and the John Deutsch University Centre, McFarlane explained. The proposed building would house student government and other student groups, and involve "creative reconfiguration of the PEC," and new facilities, McFarlane said.

Information from a recent survey indicates that more students are using the PEC since the renovations. "The last time we did a survey was about three years ago and at that time we were having about 18,000 visits to the Phys-Ed centre per week," he said.

Another survey conducted last term indicated that this figure had increased to approximately 22,000. The current peak exercise hours are around noon, and between 4 and 7 p.m. The PEC has seen up to 3,600 people in a single day, as reported after a user account on November 17.

McFarlane attributed the increase to the new fitness centre, free aerobics classes and extended hours. "We're trying to make access easier," he said.

According to McFarlane, students contributed significantly to the renovations in terms of "enthusiasm and financially," through the Millennium Fund. Prior to the reconstruction, a survey was released asking PEC users what they would most like to see changed and a list of top suggestions were drawn up. The list included such suggestions as expanding the free weight room and buying more cardio equipment, with the number one suggestion being improved ventilation.

While these changes have been made, "we're still very much focused on trying to get more equipment in," McFarlane said.

More students are using the PEC since last year's renovations.

PHOTO BY SEAN RICHMOND

Around the world in eight weeks Flora MacDonald supports international education

By LAURA MACINNIS

Students who spent last Thursday afternoon in the School of Policy Studies got more than the standard lecture.

Flora MacDonald, a distinguished Canadian politician and social advocate, urged students to pursue a non-traditional approach to education: head for the hills.

"I consider travel to be the best form of education there is," she said. MacDonald touted the beneficial aspects of world travel, including the opportunity to experience the intricacies of other societies.

MacDonald was Conservative MP for Kingston, and served as a cabinet minister under both Joe Clark and Brian Mulroney.

A companion to the Order of Canada, MacDonald now works with a number of international organizations and agencies, all activities which lead to extensive travelling.

"I don't often get a chance to be in Canada these days," MacDonald joked.

The 72-year-old political veteran reinforced her message by showing dozens of slides to the crowd, beginning with images from war-torn Bosnia.

"Slowly and surely it's being re-built," she said, suggesting there is a need to change attitudes as well as to re-build the structures.

MacDonald spoke of community-based initiatives which have worked toward "the building between various ethnic groups... You get an opportunity to see the sort of program or project that is being carried out in the wake of conflict situations."

The bulk of MacDonald's talk focused on a pan-Asian trip

she took before Christmas, a 5,000 kilometre venture through Tibet, Nepal, China and Pakistan.

The trip itself lasted eight weeks, but it took MacDonald and her six travelling companions nearly a year to persuade Chinese officials to grant them travelling visas.

The group of women included a high school teacher, a film producer, a member of the international atomic energy agency (IAEA) and the vice-president of the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

When the visas finally arrived, they were issued to "seven Canadian housewives," MacDonald smiled, retorting "a more unlikely group of housewives there never was."

Indeed. These women hiked, camped and climbed through the mountains and roads of the Far East. They faced flooded roads in Tibet, took detours up the sides of sandbanks, and averted political dissent with a Canadian flag flying from their Toyota trucks.

After her travels through East Asia, MacDonald visited Cambodia, working with the country's desolate and elderly. She stressed the close relationship between older and younger women, who offered each other great support.

MacDonald concentrated on the obscure or untold stories of the countries she visited, emphasizing the many dimensions of culture and politics which are missing from textbooks and classrooms.

Travel, she explained, helps to complete one's education. "I encourage you, as you study international relations, do take every chance to travel," she said.

du Maurier
ARTS

Supporting 215 cultural organizations across Canada during the 1998-99 season

Ink in the blood?

We're always looking for contributors. Any contribs, all contribs. There's no application process, no experience required. Just walk in. We'll assign you a story, and feed you free food. Mmmm... free food.

Queen's Faculty of Law

The Importance to Canada of the NISGA'A Treaty

TOM BERGER

Lawyer, Author, formerly of B.C. Supreme Court

Wednesday, 10 February
7:30 pm
Dunning Auditorium

1998/1999 Corry Lecture

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

AMS recommends external marketing director position

By RENEE HUANG

Although the AMS executive is ending their term in office, they are leaving some valuable words of wisdom for their successors: the suggestion for a new full-time external market director position similar to the existing service director positions.

A sub-committee of the AMS Board of Directors and Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie have researched the possibility of expanding the summer external marketing director position into a year-long initiative.

Responsibilities would include generating all AMS advertising and sponsorship in an effort to centralize advertising initiatives for services and groups within the AMS, including the Used Book Store Exchange and Who's Where/What's Next.

The director would develop a comprehensive rate card displaying all AMS service ad prices and maintain a database of advertisers and potential donors.

The sub-committee proposal stated that the new position would reduce the "fractured and disorganized manner" with which services pursue revenue generation.

The position of external marketing director is not a new concept, according to the sub-committee report. Members of the AMS have discussed implementing a Centralized Advertising Office in the past although none of the proposed projects have reached fruition.

Moodie believes a position dedicated to overseeing all AMS sponsorship and advertising would create strong, long-term working relationships between the AMS and advertisers. "There's lots of opportunity as an organization if we build a better relationship with advertisers instead of one time requests," said Moodie.

"Ultimately, it could cut back on confusion" many advertisers experience from being approached by multiple campus groups, Moodie said. He noted that advertisers are often not thanked for their contributions; an external marketing director could be responsible for this aspect of customer satisfaction.

"Hopefully we won't lose so many advertisers," Moodie said. An external marketing director would also allow the break up of the WW/WN into its component parts.

All advertising revenue for the two publications would be generated by the external marketing director and the actual production of the publications would occur in an AMS Design Centre located in the back of the Publishing and Copy Centre.

Moodie explained that having separate computer systems for WW/WN productions, AMS services and the P&CC makes poor use of the few highly qualified computer technicians and designers as well as ensuring a "high fixed cost for computers."

"It seems to make sense to work together," he added. Other Ontario universities such as McGill, Waterloo and Western have pursued such centralized advertising initiatives to great success. Western generates over $600,000 from their central office for services including the student newspaper, Orientation Week, day planner and radio station.

"I don't know if it'll be an immediate boom for our advertising revenue but... it'll give room for growth," Moodie predicted.

If Thursday's AMS assembly and the February 17 meeting of the AMS Board of Directors approve the external marketing director position, Moodie said a formal job description and remuneration structure would be created. It would be up to the newly elected AMS to implement the ideas of their contemporaries.

Field growing dramatically

Continued from page 1

Born in New Westminster, British Columbia, Beaulieu earned Bachelor and Master degrees in Applied Science, as well as a PhD, from UBC. He came to Queen's in 1986 as a National Scholar and was appointed assistant professor. In 1988 he was appointed associate professor before becoming a full professor in 1993.

While at Queen's Beaulieu has received three NSERC Strategic Grants and an Ontario Singapore Research Award.

Beaulieu said the award's two-year $180,000 prize gives him freedom to pursue his research full-time at Queen's and take advantage of an opportunity to obtain a supplemental grant from NSERC.

Beaulieu said he appreciates the overlap that exists at Queen's between the engineering and applied mathematics departments. "What's nice about Queen's is cross appointment, a valuable thing for me," he said. "I had the opportunity to participate in two departments."

He also values the quality of the university's research in his area of interest. "In electrical engineering at Queen's, the strongest area has been communications for probably 30 years," he said.

"I was always interested in electrical engineering and communications," Beaulieu said, explaining that wireless communication theory appeals to him because of the link the field offers between theory and practice. "In this area the theory can come quite close to reality... The theory really is significant."

According to Beaulieu, most of his work "has dealt with how well cellular telephone systems work." The field is currently experiencing dramatic growth, he explained. By 2000, more than half of all telecommunications traffic in North America is predicted to be wireless, creating an immense demand for the development of new technology to accommodate increasing numbers of users. "More and more people want the services," Beaulieu explained. "The issue is there's only a finite number of radio channels... There has to be new technology or you won't be able to provide the services."

Beaulieu said he owes his success primarily to two individuals. Peter McLane, a professor in Queen's electrical and computer engineering department, and Vijay Bhargava from the University of Victoria's Faculty of Applied Science. "I owe a lot to my mentors... Those two have been particularly important," said Beaulieu.

PART-TIME JOBS

Compus security will be employing a number of students in the position of Security officer. All applicants must be registered Queen's students, possess a good knowledge of compus, be in good health and be willing to work on weekends, holidays and off-hours. Security related experience and/or being certified in First Aid/CPR are considered assets for these positions. The employment will extend from September 1999 until April 2000 and will be conditional upon the satisfactory submission of a medical certificate and Conodion Police Information Check.

Applications are available at Fleming hall, Rm. 202 or copied from our website www.queensu.co/security. Deadline for applications is Friday, March 5, 1999.

SGPS to offer dental plan to members

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

On March 16 and 17, the Society of Graduate and Professional Students membership will vote on whether to establish a mandatory dental insurance plan for all members.

"Many students call our offices asking if our current extended health insurance plan covers dental expenses, so obviously there is a need within our membership," said Deb Hume, SGPS vice-president of services, in a press release. "With the increased costs of education, students often compromise their health in favour of other more pressing financial concerns."

"Because the plan would be new, we expect to see more interest in the first few years,"

— Deb Hume, SGPS vice-president of services.

"Dental care is important for overall wellness and is something that many of our members have difficulty paying for in full. We hope that a 'yes' vote for this plan will alleviate some of those concerns," she continued.

The dental plan would resemble the one recently proposed by the Alma Mater Society. Currently, both the SGPS and the AMS offer similar health plans. "It's good to have consistency throughout the plans," said Hume.

The two proposed dental plan fee options proposed are an $83 plan offering 80 per cent coverage of basic and preventative services, and a $97 plan offering 100 per cent coverage. Both plans would be "open," in that SGPS members would be able to visit the dentist of their choice if they required care. Both options would include 75 per cent coverage of minor restorative work, 75 per cent coverage of oral surgery, and 10 per cent coverage of endodontics, periodontics and major restorative work. The maximum benefit for either option would be $500 per benefit year. Family coverage would also be available at an additional cost.

For the 1999-2000 year, Hume said she anticipates that the dental plan will be subsidized in part by the SGPS. "The premiums paid to our current extended health care plan exceeded claims by students for the 1997-98 benefit year," Hume said. "We are able to pass those savings on to our membership by subsidizing the cost of a dental plan."

Because the dental plan would be a new service to members, Hume said she expects the costs and associated fees for the plan in future years may require adjustments, depending upon the number of claims incurred. "Because the plan would be new, we expect to see more interest in the first few years," said Hume. Any future fee increases of more than 10 per cent will be voted on by SGPS members again by referendum, she added.

"I'm hoping that our members will endorse the dental plan," said Hume.

A 'yes' vote in March would mean the dental plan fee would be assessed beginning September, 1999.

A.M.S. Spring Referendum

Need better financing for a project???

Put a question in the Spring Referendum

Nomination period:

FEBRUARY 8, 1999 @ 11:45AM

to

FEBRUARY 19, 1999 @ 5:00pm

Nomination packages are available at the A.M.S. Front Desk

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT CARLY, CAROLYN OR SHAWN
IN THE
COMMISSION OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS
AT 533-6000 EXT. 74815

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

ASUS Movie Theatre Presents:
Meet Joe Black
Sunday, February 14 in Dunning Auditorium
Special showing at 8:00 only
Tickets are only $3

Vegas, Baby Vegas!!
Win an all expenses paid trip for two at the United Way Semi-Formal on March 5th. $15/person or $25/couple

Enjoy working with kids?
Volunteers needed for 2.5 hrs over lunch time from Feb. 23-25 (inclusive). Come to an info-session Feb.9 (Tues) @ 4:00 pm Mac-Corry RmB204, OR call 531-4091 email 4mc26@qlink.queensu.ca See you there.

Hey! Check it out! The German Theatre Group Presents:
"Tales from Vienna Woods" or "Geschichten aus dem Wiener Wald".
February 11th to 13th at 8pm in Rotunda Theatre, Theological Hall.

if you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

FREE MONEY

Applications for the AMS Board of Directors' Special Projects Grants are due by Thursday, February 18 at NOON.

For project criteria go to the AMS front desk in the lower JDUC or call Alison Loat at 545-2729

See ad.

See ad run.

See students read ad.

See you make money.

Got the picture yet? Space is filling up in the remaining nine issues of the 1998-1999 Queen's Journal. Reserve your space now. Call our business team at 533-6711.

In Here

ACE Business Workshop

The Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs at Queen's is hosting a workshop about entrepreneurship on campus entitled "Starting a Small Business" on February 13 from 10:30 a.m. - 4 p.m. at Dunning Hall room 213. The workshop costs $5 and includes lunch. Sign ups will be available on Thursday and Friday outside the Queen's Pub from 1 - 3 p.m. Direct any questions to 7kam1@qlink.queensu.ca.

Round Table Forum

The Ban Righ Foundation, in conjunction with the Department of Religious Studies, will be hosting a forum on February 16, from 7 - 9:30 p.m. There will be a screening of Who will cast the first stone? by Sabiha Sumar, followed by a round table discussion with special guest Dr. Shahnaz Khan.

Health Care Lecture

The Queen's lecture series on aging is presenting "Your Future Health Care: Your Decision or Someone Else's?" It will be held on February 16 in the Queen's Policy Studies Building, room 202 from 7 - 9 p.m. For more information call 548-7222, ext 2239.

Anti-Racism Lecture

Professor Robert A. Hill from UCLA will be the guest lecturer at "In the Spirit of Resistance," an event in commemoration of the past 30 years of black struggle for emancipation. It will be held on February 12 at 12 p.m. in the John Orr room of the John Deutsch University Centre.

Spaghetti Supper

The Trinity Christian School invites the public to join their "Super Spaghetti Supper" on February 19 at 5:30 p.m. at 251 Wilson St. E. Tickets are $5 per person, $2 for children six to 12, free for children five and under, and $12 per family. Call 549-2785 for tickets.

Out There

Y2K might affect health care

A parliamentary committee has warned that some patients could die if Canada's healthcare system is unable to fix computer-bug problems by the end of the century.

The all-party report urges federal and provincial governments to make sure hospitals have the money they need to complete the debugging and testing of vital equipment.

The report says electrical power, telecommunications and other enterprises providing essential services appear to be ready for next January 1, but the health-care system still faces serious problems.

King Hussein passes away

King Hussein, the world's longest-serving monarch and hero to many, succumbed to organ failure after months of painful cancer treatment that ended last week in the United States. Three hours after Hussein's death, his eldest son, 37-year-old Abdullah, was crowned in a brief ceremony at Jordan's parliament.

In a statement read on national television, King Abdullah promised to preserve the peaceful course that Hussein had set Jordan on.

A state funeral held yesterday was unparalleled in its attendance of presidents, prime ministers, kings, dukes and sheiks.

Oscars 'arena for change'

Continued from page 1

directors who had been nominated and realized that this was an arena for change... theatre is another venue where women and people of colour are under-represented, with very few plays written by women being performed in New York city theatre companies."

Their speech was presented as part of the Voices in Art series sponsored by campus groups including the AMS Social Issues Commission and AMS Speaker's Committee.

"The Guerrilla Girls were asked to talk at Queen's because they encapsulate the feeling of Voices in Art and appeal to large parts of the Queen's community," said

Naomi Brunemeyer, AMS social issues commissioner.

Kingston artist Judy Springer said she came to see and feel the Guerrilla Girls' energy and to show her support. She said she "knew about the organization and its roots but was really interested in its new directions, especially related to theatre."

Tara Moore, a fourth-year Fine Arts student, said the Guerrilla Girls "were very informative, entertaining and energetic."

For more information on the Guerrilla Girls check out their Web site at www.guerrillagirls.com.

THE JOURNAL

Election for the position of Editor-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal

The Candidates

Mark Fucella
Sarah Crosbie

Voters List

Voting will take place at the Journal house, 272 Earl Street Sunday, February 14 (1 - 7 p.m.) Monday, February 15 (8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m.) Student ID is required

If your name is not on this list and you have made 4 or more contributions to The Journal this year, please contact Keith Gerein at 533-2800.

Cimi Achiam	Nicholas Du Prey	Julietta Loefler	Karen Simpson
Suzanne Armstrong	Laanne Elbot	Marco Lui	Nick Sinclair
Geoff Ashenburt	Liz Frogley	Robert MacNeil	Sean Springer
Guido Bae	Mark Fucella	Mandy Marriot	Rebecca Stetler
Jesse Craig	Annie Ge	Laura MacInnis	Fiona Stevenson
Bellringer	Kristen Glazer	Bob McGill	James Terjansan
Cyris Bona	Chris Glover	Shantley McMurray	Laura Thackray
John Bowman	Tama Haas	Jackie McLachlan	Craig Thomas
Robin Brehne	Chad Heard	Owen Minns	Mike Tiffin
Shawn Brinkley	Paul Heider	Erik Messo	Jonathan Troney
Kari Brinnell	Sue Holland	Gord Moodie	Dmitrius Toots
Maggie Bubajczyk	Chris Holmes	Eric Morris	Rachelle Villanueva
Mike Burgess	Rennie Huang	Jennifer Morrison	Adna Vakaine
Ken Burland	Bob Huijs	Stefan Murray	Jan Whittington
Stephane Carvin	Todd Jackson	Luke Myhaganam	Virginia Wignmore
James Chan	Angela James	Anna Nesbitt	D.L. Windell
Jeff Child	Adam Kamansky	Jill Offenbeck	Mark Woolford
Hilary Cleung	Lilan Kim	Sean Richmond	Samson Wu
Andrew Cooke	Claudio Keaf	Dan Rowe
Katherine Colbourn	Jon Krashinsky	Nathan Sager
Sarah Crosbie	Alex Kronby	Andria Saltee
Rob DeBellefeuille	Jocelyn Laporte	Mark Salvador
Rajeev Dave	Sarah Le May	Fiona Scannell
	Kritman Li	Eli Schuster

SCHOOL OF ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

ORIENTATION EVENING
Room 1102 - BioSciences Complex
Thursday, February 11, 1999
7-9 p.m.

MEET YOUR FACULTY AND YOUR DSC
Find out about Honours BSc options in:

- ENVIRONMENTAL BIOLOGY
- ENVIRONMENTAL CHEMISTRY
- ENVIRONMENTAL GEOGRAPHY
- ENVIRONMENTAL GEOLOGY
- ENVIRONMENTAL LIFE SCIENCES

Honours BA program:
• ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCE MEDIALS

FREE REFRESHMENTS!

Got some time?
BIG SWING TUESDAYS
live with
The Swing Cats

Dance contest & prizes
Martini on the rocks

It's a Swing thing!
Free Swing Lessons from 7-9pm.

the COCAMA

LITE NIGHT ALL NITE! 178 Ontario Street • On the Waterfront LITE NIGHT ALL NITE!

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free.
We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

THE JOURNAL

1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Changing attitudes

SOME THINGS ARE BEST LEFT unsaid. Contrary to what some people believe, anything to do with the sexual health of a man or woman should not be in this category.

Discussing a yeast infection is taboo, menstrual cycles are only talked about in hushed tones and testicular cancer is not a popular topic at dinner. In fact, many of us are so uncomfortable discussing our sexual health that we would rather suffer in silence and neglect our health than be open about these issues. For some reason, many of us jump to make an appointment with Student Health at the first sign of a cold, but won't even consult a friend about genital warts.

Surely, we would all benefit if the stigma surrounding sexual health was dispelled. For one thing, there is no reason for society to make some women feel ashamed every month when they experience menstruation. While some guys can reasonably claim to feel squeamish at the mention of blood, let's face it: menstruation is not gross, it's part of a very natural process. Likewise, women who have yeast infections should not have to feel like pariahs: practically every woman will have one at one point in their lives.

While both these points may seem obvious, too many people are unwilling to admit these realities of female sexuality. For example, it is unacceptable that the Queen's administration still has not made feminine hygiene products easily accessible on campus.

We would all benefit if the stigma surrounding sexual health was dispelled.

Of equal concern is the lack of seriousness with which many men view their own sexual health. Sexually active men need to take more responsibility for their health by being regularly tested for STDs.

All men, however, would benefit from being more aware of certain health concerns, particularly testicular cancer. One of the most easily treatable cancers if caught early, testicular cancer is becoming a major health threat for men.

While the uneasiness that surrounds sexual health may be a major impediment to spreading awareness of this disease and other health issues, there is hope. In only a few years, we have moved from a society that did not want to talk about breast cancer, to one in which Rosie O'Donnell can demonstrate how to perform a self-examination on national television. Perhaps Jay Leno or Dave Letterman will lead the way for men.

Respecting Chelsea

NO OTHER AMERICAN PRESIDENT has faced as much media scrutiny as Bill Clinton. While there may be little that Clinton can do to salvage any shred of privacy in his personal life, his daughter should not have to share the same fate. The private details of Chelsea Clinton's life should remain just that — private. People magazine has stepped over the line by printing an eight-page cover story about the relationship between Chelsea and her mother, Hillary Rodham Clinton. Unlike the President and the First Lady, Chelsea is not a public figure and has the right to maintain a reasonable degree of privacy over her personal life.

The public's fascination with the private lives of politicians does not justify putting 18-year-old Chelsea into the spotlight. Even though the People article is relatively positive, it is still an unwarranted invasion into her private life. Despite the Clintons' adamant objection to the article, People magazine printed it because they consider Chelsea to be a fair journalistic target. While it is true that she is of interest to the public, the media must always respect certain limits when covering the children of politicians. Even though politicians, Clinton included, sometimes use their own children to enhance their image, the press should not stoop to this level unless they feel there is a genuine news story. The People article clearly does not meet this criteria.

While we cannot escape the endless legal jousting in the Senate over her father's misdeeds, Chelsea should have the chance to enjoy adolescence without always having to look over her shoulder.

Good vibrations

ALRIGHT, I'VE HAD ENOUGH. I've had enough of the shocked looks I get and the slightly envious queries I receive when I make this admission.

I'm tired of people being flabbergasted by the fact that a single woman can still be a sexual being. So, I'm going to tell you all, and I want you to listen closely. I want you to remember that most men and women I've told this particular confession to have either been shocked or enormously curious. I'm sure you will be, too. I think this is because very few women have made this "confession" publicly, even though we live in a supposedly sexually enlightened age.

I own a vibrator. More than one, in fact.

So, here it is: I own a vibrator. More than one, in fact. I am a sexually healthy, single woman, who takes it as her right to have sexual pleasure whenever she feels like it.

Wow, pretty perverse, eh? The thing is, it doesn't really sound like a crime to me. However, most people I admit this to either think that I'm a nymphomaniac or that I'm really, really lonely.

I hate to disillusion you all, but I'm neither. I'm just someone who is very cognizant of the fact that looking after one's physical needs and wants is an important part of being a healthy person.

For me, that involves owning a couple of vibrators. For you it may not, but don't judge me for what I find pleasurable.

I freely admit there are some sexual practices that should never see the light of day, but owning a vibrator isn't one of them. Women shouldn't be ashamed to walk into a sex shop and buy one, or even to surf the Internet and purchase one online. Neither should men.

Vibrators, and sex toys in general, are often demonized by sexually active twenty-somethings. A lot of people think that sex should be sex, pure and simple. That attitude prevents a great deal of men and women from enjoying themselves with perfectly natural, perfectly normal sexual aids. Even if you're not one of those people who believes that sex should be kept simple, you've probably fallen prey to the stigma yourself. I'm pretty sure that you think walking into a sex shop all by yourself is just too much.

Well, I have to tell you, it's not too much. In fact, it's actually kind of interesting. Most stores in Kingston that sell vibrators are clean and non-judgmental, and if you can't bring yourself to walk into one, you can always shop the Internet (www.goodvibes.com is a great site, run by a non-judgmental collective, if you're looking for a start.)

I'm sick of people looking at me strangely for owning a vibrator and being confident enough to openly admit it. Owning a vibrator is normal, it's healthy and it's fun.

Try it yourself, you won't regret it.

By TARA MANSBRIDGE

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerain
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Hunag
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crobble
Lillian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bolinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Coole

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, February 9, 1999 • Issue 31 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal, all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $35.00 per year and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further printing policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800, advertising: 613-533-6711. Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 32 will be published on Friday, February 13, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Natalie Diaz, Hi Kaide, Alexandra Dyer, Stefan Martin, David McCluskey, Nestor Sager, Mark Salvador, Kathy Skelton, John Trenholme, Rachelle Villanueva.

Photographers: Robin Brebner, Chris Glover, Mike McDermott, Sean Richmond.

OPINIONS

Why be randomly kind?

IT IS A SIMPLE PHRASE — "PRACTICE random acts of kindness" — but one that carries a powerful message. The community of Kingston is taking steps to spread this message. Sponsored by local businesses and our very own mayor, Wednesday, February 10 will be our first annual Random Act of Kindness Day.

Originating as scattered graffiti in the United States almost 20 years ago, this event has turned into an international grassroots movement with the goal of reversing the tide of loneliness and alienation in our world by deepening our connection with others through the practice of simple, day-to-day kindness. The aim of the Random Acts of Kindness is to go beyond one's daily activities, and bring understanding about someone else's needs, plights, likes and style.

The aim is to go beyond one's daily activities, and bring understanding about someone else's needs, plights, likes and style.

Random Acts of Kindness are those actions we do for no reason except that, momentarily, the best of our humanity has sprung into full bloom. When you spontaneously smile at a stranger, when you give your lunch to a homeless person, when you anonymously put coins in someone else's parking meter — you are doing not what life requires of you, but what your human soul invites you to do.

Many of us try hard to fulfill our obligations in life, to be a good student, to be responsible to our bodies, to support and comfort our friends, to do our share of the housework. These deeds are what we're expected to do, what in fact we have agreed to do simply because of the friends we have chosen and the lives we have decided to live. People who maintain this stability in their lives and their relationships do all these ordinary things. It is when we step outside the normal boundaries of our lives, then our kindness moves beyond the routine. It is these human beings who take up the burden of this compassion. It is human beings who empathize with situations not common to themselves. To become a human being, then, is to transcend the petty opinions of others and become, in many ways, unique.

Many philosophers and theorists have commented on this position, arguing that it is impossible. Is it possible to no longer be controlled by words such as can and must? Is it possible to give for the sheer sake of giving? Is it possible for no reason and every reason? To comprehend another person's emotional panorama? Is it possible to act not because we must, not because we have no choice, but because in our heart we have felt the necessity of acting out our love? Of course it is.

Human beings choose to care not only those who love back, but also feel responsible for those whose names, faces, and true circumstances we will never know. For us, it is inescapable and inevitable for this to happen. If not, Homo sapiens are no different than any other species.

The Kingston Random Act of Kindness Society is proud to stand with over 450 communities and over 7,500 of schools across the world. These human beings all believe that our heart, not our rationality, lead the way to a better world. Some community businesses have agreed with our sentiment and generously donated their time and support.

In these hectic days, the common mindset is "if you scratch my back, I'll scratch yours." Good deeds are done in response to others and quite often done for a reward. After all, what good does it do [for you] to help someone you don't know and will probably never see? We challenge you to find out.

Kindness is not impossible because of

Human beings care not only to those who love back, but also feel responsible those whose names, faces and circumstances we will never know.

how our society works. Without generosity there can be no community. Without the kindness of strangers, a society of alienated individuals is destiny.

For the rest of this week, see if you can make the time to smile at a stranger. Or start a friendship with someone you don't normally associate with.

We do not believe that others are too self-absorbed or self-interested. We, without reservation, take up the burden of kindness and compassion towards another regardless of race, creed, age or gender. Anyone who reaches out to someone else and understands that going through changes is something we all face from time to time are human beings. Life is a series of changes, and change can be an inspiring process.

MARK
LAST NAME WITHHELD BY REQUEST

Andy is not amused

Dear Editors,

I'd like to reply to the argument made in your editorial of February 5 that "God Save the Queen" should be retained as part of Convocation not as a tribute to the current occupant of the throne but to Queen Victoria as a recognition of that monarch's relationship with Queen's. This rationale was also employed by the Senate Committee on Academic Procedures (SCAP) which recommended that the song be retained.

Won't Queen's look rather silly when, well into the reign of King Charles or King William, we are still singing "God Save the Queen" at convocation.

I'll make the same point to The Journal that I made on the floor of Senate in moving my amendment to strike the hymn from the Convocation ceremony. It's all well and good to rationalize the retention of "God Save the Queen" by making it a tribute to Victoria but won't Queen's look rather silly when, well into the reign of King Charles or King William we are still singing God Save the Queen at convocation? Certainly, if our intent is to recognize Victoria then we can do it in some less confusing way.

Letters to the Editors

Secondly, the whole discussion of the hymn came up in a motion to remove certain religious references from the convocation ceremony. As VP Cowan argued at Senate, it would be rather bizarre and inconsistent for us to eliminate prayers and hymns from the ceremony while retaining "God Save the Queen" which is, itself, a Church of England hymn in honour of that denomination's head.

Andy Lehrer
Arts and Science Senator

Battle for our Royal Hymn

Dear Editors,

The question is not, "Ought Canada to be a constitutional monarchy?" Rather, the question is "Ought the Queen — in whose name laws are enacted, citizenship bestowed and passports honoured — to be recognized at Convocation?" I do of course have views on the first matter, but the plain fact is that Canada has been and remains a monarchy; Elizabeth II is Queen of Canada; and it is childish to pretend otherwise.

"God Save the Queen" is the Royal Anthem of our country, and it has as much place in the ceremony as does "O Canada."

"God Save the Queen" is the Royal Anthem of our country, and it has as much place in the ceremony as does "O Canada" — neither of which, I must clarify, is properly a hymn, although both mention God. I trust that the Senate will stray true to the traditions of which our University is justly proud, and not try to hide one of our fundamental national institutions.

Marc Grégoire
Sci '99

Loat's bubble bursted

Dear Editors,

I felt an overwhelming urge to write after being pointed to the article in this edition of The Journal, titled "Pop Goes The World." I guess I'm not allowed to

Continued on page 10

talking

HEADS X 1/2

What are your plans for Valentine's Day?

"All I can say is that it involves handcuffs."
Michael Stewart
Arsci '99

"Hang out in the back room of Night Owl video store."
Adrian Matangi
Arsci '99

"Pick up a fresh box of Kleenex and cry."
Andy VanderMeulen
Arsci '99

"Spend the whole day with my Baby!"
Simon Paterson
Arsci '99

PHOTOS BY CHRIS GLOVER

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Continued from page 9

write this as a normal letter to the editor since I'm not a Queen's student, rather I have several friends at Queen's who directed me towards this rather laughable piece of melodrama. Still, do with it what you will, it's my two cents.

Other than its potential to advance what was obviously its main agenda — that we should all do some down-to-earth thinking about whether all this "progress" is a good thing (which is an opinion with which I have no issue) — the article's only merit lay in its being an excellent example of Y2K hysteria. You might consider pointing this misguided young writer to recent article by Peter De Jager in Scientific American (De Jager discovered the millennium bug) and a series of articles in Wired magazine all of which stress that the cataclysmic predictions of some are way out of proportion.

You should point her to the national and international statements made by the nuclear powers to the effect that no missile can be launched without the express and strictly unavoidable participation of several human players.

Perhaps more to the point, you should point her to the numerous national and international statements made by the US, Britain and other nuclear powers to the effect that no nuclear missile can be launched without the express and strictly unavoidable participation of several human players. Those keys you see the president turning in nuclear scare movies are real — the close circuits which the computer, in all its Y2K furor, cannot possibly close. Also, you might advise her, and/or your readers, that the process of initiating a nuclear explosion, either in the silos or on impact, necessarily requires absolutely everything to go right. If those two semi-spheres of uranium/plutonium do not come together in precisely the pre-ordained fashion, then you have two pieces of very unexciting metal. Not particularly likely if, as she seems to think, nuclear missiles contain the same technology as her coffee maker.

I suppose its clear at this point that I have issues with the piece in question. It's not The Journal's fault, I understand, you are trying to give the school a voice, and I appreciate that. But every so often, it would be nice if the voice had something intelligent to say.

Johnathan Nightingale
University of Toronto

Thanks and a warning

Dear Editors,

I am in my last year at Queen's, and I have applied to the Faculty of Dentistry at the University of Western Ontario. I have taken numerous prerequisite courses, and spent over $550 in administrative fees to apply, and my money and effort almost went up in smoke.

On the weekend, I received a letter from Western telling me that I did not have the proper biochemistry prerequisites to be considered for application. However, on the denial website and in the literature I received from Western, it clearly states that students are required to have "one half course in Biochemistry." I am currently taking not one, but two third year courses in Biochemistry.

At such a large university with so many students, it was very encouraging to see Queen's come to my aid so quickly and with such determination.

When I called the office at Western, they told me that neither one of the Biochemistry courses that I was taking were acceptable. However, an introductory half course offered by Queen's (Biochemistry 010) was acceptable. By no means do I intend to say that Biochemistry 010 is an easy course; I don't know much about it. However, the fact that an introductory course was approved, but two third-year, advanced courses were not seemed wrong to me.

Here's the good part. I took the letter and my problem to my Biology 334 professor, Dr. Chris Moyes. I was expecting maybe a letter indicating the exact course content in 334 that I could fax to Western. However, Dr. Moyes immediately phoned administration at Western and within the day was talking with the man whose job it was to approved courses for Dentistry at Western.

I then went to the Head of the Biochemistry Dept., Dr. Albert Clark. Dr. Clark wrote a letter to Western more or less indicating that it was ridiculous to accept a zero level course over two third year courses.

This letter was ready for me the next day. And thanks to these two fine professors, I was put back on the list for consideration at Western.

I write this letter for two reasons. Firstly, to warn those students applying to any graduate school that requires specific prerequisite courses. Make sure that the ones you are taking are acceptable to the school to which you are applying. I took the literature and the website at Western word for word when it said "one half course in Biochemistry."

There were no stipulations or conditions to accompany this requirement, but maybe I brought this whole thing on myself by not looking into it further. Look into it yourself, and avoid my mistake.

Secondly, I wanted to thank Dr. Moyes and Dr. Clark and let everyone else know what they did. Their support was above and beyond what I could have expected. At such a large university with so many students, it was very encouraging to see Queen's come to my aid so quickly and with such determination.

Jon Swaine
Artsci '99

FEATURES

Out of Canada

John Cowan is one serious problem solver. The Queen's Vice-Principal travelled to Zimbabwe for three weeks with the goal of re-opening the University of Zimbabwe in the midst of radical educational reform.

By LAURA MACINNIS

HE IS AN ACCOMPLISHED negotiator, with experience in crisis management at 25 Canadian universities. Much of his experience lies in collective agreements, but he has been involved in negotiations of all kinds, including the consolidation of the Faculties of Education at Nova Scotia universities in 1994.

"I have a history of settling disputes. I have dealt with a lot of difficult labour relations problems," Vice Principal (Operations and Finance) John Cowan said. "I tend to get the nasty jobs, and they tend to work out."

So when a student protest over government aid to students closed the University of Zimbabwe last June and the university did not re-open, it was Cowan who was selected to mediate between Zimbabwean students, faculty, and government officials in order to revive the institution.

The University of Zimbabwe is about the size of Queen's. It has approximately 9,000 undergraduates and an added 7,500 students through distance education. The university includes a variety of undergraduate and graduate programs, and is Zimbabwe's only comprehensive post-secondary school. Tuition at the university is about $68 Canadian per year at the current exchange rate, which seems modest in Canadian terms but is significant for Zimbabweans, who face a high cost of living.

Cowan was initially contacted last October by the World University Service Canada, an affiliate of the Canadian International Development Agency, who received his name from officials in Ottawa who knew of Cowan's work.

The decision to go to Zimbabwe was not an easy one for Cowan, who joked

"initially I said no... then I said yes, and [Principal] Leggett said no" before everyone agreed.

Once the Vice-Principal committed to the job, he faced a somewhat daunting task. The mission: in three weeks, to create conditions that would allow the University of Zimbabwe to permanently re-open.

Cowan went to Zimbabwe from December 2 - 22 with Brian Tinker, a former vice-principal (administration) from the University of Calgary. They aimed to find middle ground in the ongoing political, financial, and administrative disputes between the university, the government, and the community.

Upon arrival in Zimbabwe, Cowan said he soon realized that the problem was far different than he had initially thought. "We found that a lot of our information about the nature and origin of the problems was false, or incomplete," he said. "Basically what we found was both a society and an institution in profound crisis, which was really a series of interlocking crises all at once."

The student protest which caused the University of Zimbabwe to shut down stemmed initially from a government announcement that it was going to cut grants given to post-secondary students, which accounted for about 50 per cent of their student fees and living expenses.

Cowan said the protest itself was less significant than he had initially thought. About $5,000 U.S. worth of damage was done in the scuffle. "We probably would not have closed Queen's with such a small riot," he said. Yet the Vice-Chancellor of the university, holding a position similar to a Canadian university principal, decided to close the university in fear that the riots would escalate.

It is not uncommon for the University to Zimbabwe to close in the wake of demonstrations. Cowan said the university generally shuts down "once every four or five years" for about a week due to a student protest.

PHOTOS COURTESY OF JOHN COWAN

In Zimbabwe, Cowan faced what he called "a multi-level crisis." The university and the government were in deadlock, and students were increasingly anxious over the possibly long-term closing of the institution.

Major problems ensued once the university closed. The government of Zimbabwe suggested that it wanted to see a series of radical changes to the university structure implemented before it re-opened. The proposed reforms included firing all the deans, eliminating tenure, merging four faculties, re-naming the faculties "cost-centres" and making them fiscally autonomous, and instituting a semestered system, all with two months notice. The government also sought to privatize the university food services and residences.

"Many of the reforms were politically motivated," said Cowan, who called the timing of the changes "pure opportunism" on the part of the government.

Conflict has arisen in the past between the university and the Zimbabwean government. The school is located in the capital city of Harare, and has been often regarded as a source of opposition to the governmental régime. "The government was very fearful that the university would be a focus of opposition," he said. "They really wanted to limit the university autonomy, and to limit the possibility of certain groups within the university to make opposition and to make trouble."

Nonetheless, Cowan said the reforms were completely unanticipated by university officials. "They had no idea they would have any trouble re-opening the university... If they knew what they know now, they would never have closed the university in the first place."

In Zimbabwe, Cowan faced what he called "a multi-level crisis." The university and the government were in deadlock, and students were increasingly anxious over the possibly long-term closing of the institution.

Internal issues had complicated the re-opening process. A lack of financial resources meant that professors were underpaid, and the university was considerably understaffed. "The university is broke," Cowan said. "Of the 1,100 approved faculty positions, about 325 were not filled because nobody would take the jobs. And the people who were still hired were doing every bit of consulting or every bit of chicken farming or whatever they could do to make ends meet, because they certainly weren't doing it on their university pay. Consequently, a lot of the work of the university was being neglected."

The university was also suffering from a lack of effective leadership. The Senate had stalled so long that it was being left out of negotiations, which left the university without adequate representation. Further, the Vice-Chancellor was not experienced in resolving complex political situations. "He is not a politician," said Cowan. "He was getting pretty caught in the cross-fire."

Because of the volatile situation around the university, Cowan had a difficult time establishing himself as a legitimate neutral in Zimbabwe. "When Brian and I arrived we spent a week being shouted at by people who were convinced that we were there as the govern-

Continued on next page

Cowan (left) poses with Minister of Higher Education and Technology Dr. Ignatius Chombo, Canadian High Commissioner to Zimbabwe Anne Charles and colleague Brian Tinker.

HARASSMENT/ DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT POLICY AND PROCEDURE REVIEW

The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the review committee wish to extend an invitation to university students, staff and faculty to offer any comments or suggestions they may have regarding the Policy.

Written responses may be submitted to the Senate Office, B400 Macintosh Corry Hall, or the Human Rights Office, Old Medical Building (e-mail: hrights@post.queensu.ca). Alternately, community members may arrange to make verbal submissions to the Committee by contacting the Human Rights Office at 533-6886 and making an appointment. Deadline for all submissions is March 5, 1999.

After-Hours Child Care

Child Care Hotline 533-6000, ext. 75645

Hours: Monday - Thursday, 6:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.
Saturday, 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Prices: Students: $2.00/hour for 1 child
$3.00/hour for 2 or more children

Faculty/Staff: $3.00/hour for 1 child
$4.00/hour for 2 or more children

Reservations must be made by 12 noon the day the service is required and by 12 noon

Continued from last page
ment's enforcers," he said.
"It took us a better part of a week to establish our autonomy from the one faction. This was hard going."
Over the three weeks of their visit, Cowan and Tinker met individually or in small groups with over 110 people, including university faculty, government officials, students, and journalists. Because the various factions weren't talking to one another, the Canadian pair were soon equipped with more knowledge than most.
"Because the situation had been polarized for so long, we started to know more than the people we were talking to," said Cowan. "Very quickly, we were the only people who knew everything." The suspicion which coloured their initial meetings faded, and the pair started to gain respect in the community, which accelerated the negotiations between groups. "Things really started to snowball, very quickly."

Cowan and Tinker held meetings with government officials at the home of the Canadian High Commissioner, and received phone calls from parties who had previously stayed away from their project. At this point, they made the transition from listening to individuals to negotiating ers between faculties, but they will be done over a longer period, with some university input.

The food services have been privatized, but the residences remain under university control. A new pro-Vice-Chancellor position will be added to the university, working with the Vice-Chancellor to manage academic affairs. This position may well go to a prominent 'dissent' dean, in order to institute some political balance in the university structure.
"The whole thing was pretty much a compromise," said Cowan. "Everybody seemed pretty happy... I left feeling that we had made some progress."
The University of Zimbabwe Senate voted on January 12 to approve a seven-month compressed term to replace the lost year.
Last Monday, the university was opened to first-year students. Yesterday, upper-year students went back to school. The university is now fully open.
Cowan said he felt comfortable in which to operate," he said. He described the society "in a state of considerable flux," with constant jockeying among the university, the government, and the press. "There really is no middle ground, anywhere," he said.

not release it in the next few weeks.
As for the students, Cowan said they had largely resolved their problems themselves. He spoke very highly of Fortune Mguni, the law student who led the student protest. "The chap who was the leader of the riots... really understood the problems better than most others. I think he probably has a brilliant future as a politician," he said.
Student lobbying led the government to revoke its proposed changes to the funding system, so their grants will remain in place for tuition and living subsidies.
Cowan insisted that the students were most strongly concerned about returning to school. "All the students wanted was to get the damned thing open," he said. "The students' interest really was to get everyone else to stop fighting."
In no rush to return to Zimbabwe, Cowan said negotiations in Africa were far different from any other he had experienced. "It's an odd environment in which to operate," he said. He described the society "in a state of considerable flux," with constant jockeying among the university, the government, and the press. "There really is no middle ground, anywhere," he said.

Laurea MacInnis is The Journal's managing editor.

SPORTS & FITNESS

ANOTHER BLOW
When an irate Mike Tyson took out his road rage on two motorists he did much more than just land a few glancing blows, he landed in jail. Despite the pleas for forgiveness from the two victims of the August 31 incident, who had settled out of court with Tyson for damages, Judge Stephen Johnson decided to send Tyson to jail for one year. This could be the tip of the iceberg for the former Heavyweight Champion, who is currently being investigated by the Indiana parole board to see if this outburst violates his parole from a previous rape conviction. The Nevada State Athletic Commission is also reviewing the case and could elect to revoke his license for a second time. Tyson is said to owe the IRS over $20 million and he can't make that money while in prison.

WELL, IT'S ABOUT TIME
One of the greatest athletes of modern times has finally joined other greats associated with the 'Breakfast of Champions', Wheaties. Muhammad Ali will finally grace the venerable box, which is celebrating its 75th anniversary. Many believe that this was a long time coming, as the three time heavyweight champ had the credentials to be honoured, but not the politics. Many saw his anti-Vietnam War stand as offensive and this kept him off America's breakfast table. The 57-year-old Ali, who has been dramatically slowed by Parkinson's disease, was on hand for the unveiling of the new cereal box, but was a shadow of his former self.

WELL, IT'S ABOUT TIME II
The NBA season started three months late and opening night went off without a hitch. Despite rumours of fan backlash, most of the seats were filled and television ratings were not too bad. On the court, the Toronto Raptors handily defeated the Boston Celtics on the road, thus vaulting them to first in the division. The Vancouver Grizzlies started their 1999 campaign a little later and started much slower, losing their opener to Sacramento.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
Mike Tyson would be put away before someone dies. Shawn Kemp and Bryant 'Big Eater' Reeves would find their way to a Jenny Craig Centre before the whole NBA season is lost. Maple Leaf Gardens would remain open for public skating so that fans could realize a dream.

Queen's three-peats

Synchronized swimming successfully defends OUA title

By ADAM KAMINSKY

For the third consecutive year, the Queen's synchronized swimming team came, saw and conquered at the OUA Championships, this year hosted by the University of Toronto.

The team, buoyed by boisterous support from the Queen's track and field squad, who were in attendance, won by a fairly narrow 11 point margin over McGill, who finished second, and Western, who secured third place.

Queen's came out of the first day of the two-day championship leading by a narrow margin, before extending the lead during the decisive second day.

The squad won the eight swimmer team event, which featured Sharyl Fyffe, Jen Holt, Tracey Britt, Lindsay Richards, Sabina Gallnow, Blait McKechnie, Heather Smeaton, Katie Everitt and Paula Meyler.

Holt also won the solo event and teamed with Sharyl Fyffe to win the duet event. Fyffe added a victory in the senior technical routine, which contributed to both Holt and Fyffe being named the 'Sea Queen', as the outstanding swimmers of the meet.

The team also boasted a second place finish in the intermediate technical routine courtesy of Heather Smeaton, and a third place in the senior technical routine by Paula Meyler.

Despite this litany of swimming awards, the competition

The synchronized swimming team celebrates their third consecutive OUA Championship.

PHOTO COURTESY OF SYNCHRO TEAM

was much better than in the past.

"The competition is definitely tougher this year than last year," said Fyffe, who handles coaching and swimming duties. "We were confident going in, but we know McGill and Western would put up a fight. These teams were really gunning for us."

What made the victory even more impressive was that after the cancellation of the tanking meet in Montreal earlier in the year due to snow, the draws for each event were random rather than seeded. This could have served as a disadvantage for a Queen's team that would have featured a number of swimmers seeded very highly, which would have allowed them to swim late in the round, a situation which often leads to higher marks.

The meet cancellation also meant that the team had a lack of competitive experience, but Queen's solved this problem by travelling to a national circuit event in Etobicoke, where they did a demonstration in order to get the judges' feedback. "We were the only team that did this, so this served as a bit of an advantage," explained Fyffe. Another advantage that the Gaels seemed to have over the other teams was excellent choreography. The intricate routines created by assistant coach Meghan Hanna clearly impressed the judges and may have put Queen's over the top.

With only Fyffe leaving the team after this season, the scent of a dynasty is in the air. If this weekend is any indication, the three OUA championship banners are only hangings of what will come in the future.

Gaels oust Yeomen

By JOHN TRENHOLME

During a technical timeout in the second set of the OUA East semi-final, a discouraged Gaels men's volleyball squad gathered to regroup. Whatever was said worked.

Despite a sluggish start, Queen's overcame an early scare from the York Yeomen to win their semi-final match 3-1, putting them in the division championships against undefeated Toronto.

Coming into the match, the Queen's squad had reason to be confident, as they were playing a team they had convincingly beaten twice on the road in recent weeks. This time, however, the game did not proceed as the Gaels expected.

Struggling early on to work their offence around York's effective blocking tandem, Queen's lost the first game 15-13 and found themselves trailing 5-2 early in the second.

"I just reminded them that this was the same York team we beat two weeks ago, decisively and in their own gym," Coach Brenda Willis said of the timeout that shifted the momentum in the Gaels' favour.

"[Cameron] did a great job. We set the ball higher and worked out outside game with Frederic [Cotnoir] and Jake [Magolan] to keep it away from their blockers." With York's blockers rendered ineffective by Cotnoir's, Magolan's and Andy Lynn's perimeter kills, Queen's reeled off seven straight points, eventually winning the game 15-8 on Cameron's service ace.

The Gaels' inspired play churned the large crowd into a frenzy, and the rattled Yeomen squad never seemed to recover. Magolan opened serve in the third game and promptly reeled off eight straight points. Visibly frustrated York Coach Wally Dyba added insult to injury by earning himself a red card from the chair official. Senior Greg Stevenson complimented Magolan's kills with some timely blocking, and Queen's closed out the game with conviction, 15-1. Despite falling behind early in the fourth game, OUA rookie of the year Brian Bell stepped up with some quick kills down the middle, allowing the Gaels to quickly regain their fine form and close out York on the sixth match point, 15-13.

Greg Stevenson (#13) looks on as teammate dives for ball.

PHOTO BY PHOTOG

They now move on to the final against Toronto, 12-0 in league play this season but certainly not an unbeatable opponent.

"They did beat us during the regular season, but we beat them at the York Excalibur Tournament in January," said coach Willis, who was quick to point out that they will enter the finals toting plenty of confidence. Game one of the best-of-three series will be played Wednesday at Bartlett Gym.

date

Feb.15-17

► FINE ART FANTASY ◀

place

J.D.U.C.-Lower Ceilidh

WILDLIFE ◀ hours

9 - 8

► GIANT-SIZED POSTERS

► MUSIC

last day

9 - 5

FRAMES & HANGERS ◀

► FILM

► PHOTOGRAPHY

► 1000S OF POSTERS

THE IMAGINUS POSTER SALE

A Summer Course at
McGill University
Montreal, Canada

Why Not!

We welcome visiting students

Increase your options
Enrich your program
Experience Montreal

It's all here for you!

McGill Summer Studies offers a full range of university-level courses.

Registration opens:
February 26, 1999

McGill Summer Studies
630 Sherbrooke Street West
Suite 1005
Montreal, Quebec H3A 2N7
Phone: (514) 398-5212
Fax: (514) 398-5224
E-mail: Summer@5502@mcgill.ca
Web: www.McGill.ca/Summer

Please send me 1999 Summer Studies and information on summer accommodation in McGill University Residences.

NAME _____
ADDRESS _____
CITY _____ PROV/STATE _____
POSTAL/ZIP CODE _____ PHONE _____
UNIVERSITY/COLLEGE _____

McGill SUMMER STUDIES

Key game slips away

BY NEATE SAGER

On Friday evening, the Queen's men's basketball team was on the verge of toppling the defending national champion Bishop's Gaitsers, only to unravel during the final 10 minutes, when they blew an 18-point lead and lost 59-57. The following evening, the Gaels dropped doormat Laval 82-63, salvaging a split and remaining in the thick of the OUA East playoff race.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

Bishop's 59, Queen's 57
Queen's 82, Laval 63

"We knew there was going to be a run by Bishop's," said Gaels' Head Coach Scott Meeson, explaining his team's collapse at the hands of the nationally ranked Gaitsers, whose rally was spearheaded by point guard Ryan Thorne (13 points) and 6'8" centre Rob Burns (22 points). Burns game-winning shot stunned the large Bartlett Gymnasium gathering and prompted Scotland to consider naming a national holiday for him. "I thought we did a good job defending Bishop's for 90 per cent of the game... we just had a drought that really hurt us," Meeson said. The contest was a study in contrasts, as the Gaels thoroughly dominated the first 20 minutes, shackling Bishop's with what Meeson termed a 'gap defense' intended to negate the Gaitsers' quickness. The result was a shockingly low halftime score of 32-19.

Early in the second half, a brief Gaitsers run sliced into the lead, only to have the Gaels reopen a double-digit advantage, as a try by guard Reilly Musselman commenced a 14-4 run that gave Queen's a 49-31 lead with 10:15 remaining.

With the Bishop's dormant shooting suddenly resurgent, the Gaitsers forged a remarkable run, holding Queen's scoreless for over five minutes while pouring in 17 consecutive points, taking their first lead with 4:26 remaining. As time waned, neither team seemed able to make a shot, as Bishop's took a 57-54 lead with 2:05 remaining as guard Joel Sherbino (13 points, 10 rebounds) tipped home a missed foul shot.

Battling tooth and nail, the Gaels thrice held on defense to remain in contention, and with the final seconds ticking away, made a successful last-ditch bid to tie the game. With eight seconds showing on the clock, Derek Richardson (13 points) found guard Brendan Byrne open on the left corner, from where the veteran guard drained a game-tying trey. But Thorne then brought the ball upcourt, finding Burns on the low left block for the short turnaround jumper a breath before the horn.

Against Laval on Saturday, the Gaels added to the wireless visitors' agony in a methodical victory. John Purdy, playing with ankle and shoulder injuries, paced the Tricolour with 19 points, Richardson added 15 and Byrne 12, while reserve post Mark Bednis notched ten points in as many minutes.

"I told the guys three weeks ago we would need to win three out of five on our homestand, and that's what happened," said Meeson. "We're still there [in playoff contention]." The Gaels' coach stressed that next weekend's pilgrimage to Montreal will be of paramount importance, decreeing that the Gaels will need to at least win one of their games at Concordia and McGill to sustain their postseason aspirations.

Business as usual

BY NEATE SAGER

Two home wins this weekend were exactly what the doctor ordered for the illness-ridden Queen's women's basketball team, and the prescription was filled.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Queen's 66, Bishop's 56
Queen's 63, Laval 57

"They're so sore, and so tired," said Queen's women's basketball Coach Dave Wilson of his battered, illness-depleted club on Saturday night, minutes after the Gaels had edged a strong Laval Rouge et Or squad 63-57.

With only nine healthy players available, two of them untried rookies, the Gaels had to scratch and claw their way to their fifth consecutive victory, which coupled with Friday's 66-56 defeat of Bishop's, improved their record to 10-4. "Tonight I think I saw the most character I've seen in my entire coaching career," marvelled Wilson. "It wasn't pretty by any means, but we did what we had to do."

The entirety of the Gaels' scoring versus Laval came from four players: Jacqueline Beaudoin had game highs of 23 points and 11 rebounds, making 13 of 14 free throws. Steph "long range" Glancey and Andrea Thompson scored 17 and 11 points respectively, each draining three of four shots from beyond the three-point arc. Point guard Deaneah Shelley accumulated 12 points and seven steals, and was vital in allowing Laval only two points off turnovers, in comparison to the Gaels' 22.

"Deaneah was so key tonight," Wilson remarked. "She created key trouble, and she forced Laval to keep their point guard on the floor." Shelly was especially prominent in the final 90 seconds of the first half. In the half, she twice stripped Laval guards of the basketball at midcourt and glided in for the breakaway layup, which dissuaded the Rouge et Or from rotating point guards Emmanuelle Mignault and Marie-Helene Lafleche, though the latter led Laval with fourteen points.

As the Gaels understandably began to wear down in the early stages of the second half, Laval took advantage, going ahead with 12 minutes remaining on consecutive treys by forward Isabelle Grenier. Despite their weariness and the size advantage enjoyed by Laval underneath the basket, the Gaels characteristically refused to relent. "They go out and expect to win," explained Wilson. "They're a nationally ranked team and they played like it, in that they expected to win."

The previous evening versus Bishop's, the Gaels prevailed on the strength of a concerted defensive effort, holding the Gaitsers to only 30 per cent from the field. Beaudoin had a strong outing with 14 points, eight rebounds and seven steals, while Shelley scored 13, Thompson had 12 points, six coming on free throws in the final minute, when the Gaels salted away a well-deserved win by making nine of ten foul shots. Despite being out-rebounded in the boxscore, Wilson felt the win was predicated by the Gaels' ability to contain Bishop's taller post players. "They did a paramount job containing them inside... our focus on the boards was excellent. Everyone was trying awfully hard."

Beleaguered but resolute, the Gaels will have a week of recovery before next weekend, when they venture to Montreal to face Concordia and McGill.

Women 'Finnished'

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

The women's hockey team's improbable run towards the playoffs ended this weekend after losing 6-5 in overtime to the York Yeowomen on a goal by a 30-year old former Finnish Olympic team member.

The Gaels entered their two matches against York two points behind the Yeowomen and needed at least a win and a tie to catch them for the final playoff spot. On Friday evening, Queen's found themselves in the hole quickly as they were trailing 2-0. However, an aggressive offence and fierce determination allowed the Gaels to fight back. Assistant captain Sarah Reid responded with two goals and Captain Lori Lofus popped in the other to create a 3-2 Gaels lead. York was able to battle back with four minutes left in the third period and tied the game 3-3. Overtime decided nothing and the Gaels' season came down to Saturday afternoon — all or nothing.

The Gaels started out flat on Saturday, finding themselves down 3-0 after two periods of play. At that point, Co-coach Jacques Tremblay, a veteran of 30 years behind the bench and former CIAU Coach of the Year, addressed the team in the dressing room. "I really got upset, [but] they came out of there just flying," said Tremblay.

The Gaels' offence was flying so high it should have been renamed the Concord. The women scored five consecutive goals, four of them within a five-minute span. The rookies, as has been the case all year, did the job when it counted most. Kate Quigley, Kathryn White, Amy Rose and Meredith Amin potted goals and Lofus added the fifth. The Gaels were unable to hold the lead, however, and York tied it up with seven minutes remaining.

Realizing that the Gaels could take away their playoff hopes, York sent a 30-year old Olympic athlete onto the ice to get a quick winning goal.

The entire Gaels season came down to this five-minute overtime. A tie wasn't good enough, it had to be a win in order to catch York. Tremblay told his squad that rookie goaltender Claudia Tom would be pulled within one minute left if they hadn't ended it by then. Unfortunately, it didn't come to that. Realizing that the Gaels could take away their playoff hopes, York sent a 30-year old mother onto the ice to get a quick winning goal. This was no ordinary mom, however. Sari-Krooks spent last year playing for the Finnish Olympic team in Nagano, Japan.

"She's a ringer," said Tremblay. "They bring her out whenever they need her." The vastly more experienced Krooks got the puck in the neutral zone and made a quick move on Rose, and scored on Tom, the 18-year-old rookie Gaels' goaltender.

It was a bitter pill to swallow for the Gaels, but they have absolutely no reason to hang their heads. In what was supposed to be a rebuilding year, it took an Olympic team member to 'Finnish' them off. As for next season, every member is returning and a solid nucleus is in place. The defence and goaltenders have all had a full CIAU season under their belts, and the stars can only shine brighter.

Tremblay recognizes now that the players can see a system in place. "There's a power within the team that's just beautiful. We're playing good, intelligent hockey," he said.

In the long term, Tremblay feels that the experience will help his team. "It's a good thing, they know what it takes to win. This is where we learn, and we've shown we can win on the road and at home," he said.

Historic weekend

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

On February 6, Queen's took part in the 31st annual Historic Hockey Series. Played outdoors on the frozen Confederation Basin, this three-game series celebrates the 112th anniversary of the first game on Kingston Harbour ice in March of 1886. Queen's, RMC, and the Second Regiment of the Royal Canadian Horse Artillery out of CFB Petawawa participated in the tournament.

What makes the tournament so interesting is that it is played with the same rules that were in effect 112 years ago.

The celebrations started Friday night with a dinner in RMC's mess hall with special guests Dean Prentice (who played in the NHL for 22 seasons) and former Leafs and Habs superstar (and senator) Frank Mahovlich. The NHL loaned its Hart Trophy, Art Ross Trophy and Vezina Trophy for the dinner and allowed all players a chance for photographs. Mahovlich and Prentice also made themselves available for a 'hot stove' question and answer session. At the dinner, each player received an authentic 1886 hockey stick.

On Saturday, Queen's lost its first game to RCHA by a count of 3-0 but rebounded to defeat RMC in the consolation game 4-0. Scoring for Queen's was Craig Hazel (twice), Andrew Tewlesley and Jason Henderson. Getting the shutout was Andrew Guy and Kendra Tallen received a special award for her aggressive play. She was checked badly by an RMC player but got up quickly and elbowed him in the back. The award was presented by the Historic Hockey Foundation.

What makes the tournament so interesting is that it is played with the same rules that were in effect 112 years ago. For example, there are seven players on the ice for each team and no forward passing is allowed. Attacking players must stay behind or parallel to the puck carrier. In addition, the goalie is not allowed to lie, sit, or kneel on the ice. When handing out penalties, the referee is able to decide whether to send a player to the penalty box for either one, two or three minutes. Goaltenders must serve their own penalties rather than have a skater serve it for them.

Team Captain Henderson wanted to thank Cathy Jackson for her time and effort organizing this event. Without her, it would have been next to impossible to have staged this 'historic' weekend.

Attention University Graduates

Earn an E.C.E. Diploma in Only 8 Months

Apply Now for the Intensive E.C.E. Program at Sheridan College.

Starts May 10, 1999.

To receive information: Call: 416-480-1320

Email: sheridan@minacs.com
Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/edsen/cedec.htm

Sheridan

In the game

The weekend at Queen's

OUA All-stars

This past weekend, four Gaels were named to the men's volleyball OUA all-star team.

Middle-hitter Jake Magolan, outside hitter Frederic Cotnoir and setter Michael Cameron were named to the first all-star team, while outside hitter Greg Stevenson made the second all-star team. Magolan was also nominated for the national Dale Iwanocko/TSN Award for athletic and academic achievement. Middle hitter Brian Bell was named the OUA East Division rookie of the year and coach Brenda Willis earned OUA East coach-of-the-year honours.

Badminton

The badminton team travelled to Ottawa this weekend and suffered a disappointing last-place finish. In the first round, the Gaels lost 7-4 to York and then 7-4 to Toronto in the bronze game. Caroline Gibbings and Kim Hua finished the meet each with records of 3-1.

Women's volleyball

The season came to a crushing end last week, with tough losses to the University of Toronto and York University, the top teams in the division.

On Thursday evening the squad came out strong, winning the first set against U of T. Things came unravelled after that, with the strong Toronto side reeling off three consecutive set victories.

The team then faced a must win game against division leading York, and lost in five tough sets. The squad lost the last set 15-8, which, coupled with a Lakehead win, effectively eliminated them from the playoffs.

Curry Village

Bringing you Kingston's finest Indian Cuisine for 13 years

Recommended by The New York Times, The Globe and Mail, Toronto Life and the Where to Eat in Canada Guide (1987 - present)

169A Princess Street (upstairs), 542-5010
Kingston, Ontario

20% Discount for Students, Sun. - Thurs. (Food Only)

Futurelink and Alumni Affairs proudly present

MEDS' INFORMATION DAY
DUPUIS AUDITORIUM

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 6th
1 to 5 PM

Speakers included:
The Dean of the Faculty of Health Science
The Head of Admissions of Queen's Med School

The President of the Aesculapian Society
An Obstetrician/Gynecologist
An MCAT course instructor

Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award

The Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award is the highest tribute that can be paid to a student for valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities. Any student of the University may submit a nomination. The number of students admitted to the society each year is decided by the selection committee, while maintaining the distinction and integrity of the Tricolour Award.

Nominations Now Open

Nomination Period Closes on Monday March 15

Nomination Packages Can Be Picked Up At Any Faculty Society Office

Program at the International Study Centre Herstmonceux Castle

Join us for an information session highlighting the spring program at the International Study Centre at Herstmonceux Castle.

Thursday, February 11th
from 3:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. in
Ellis Hall, Rm 332

Tuesday, February 16th
from 3:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. in
Ellis Hall, Rm 224

Find out about:

- new course offerings
- bursary assistance
- Certificate/Letter of Achievement

Plus, former students and faculty members will be on hand to answer your questions.

If you are thinking about the spring term or any term at the ISC, you are invited to attend these sessions.

http://www.queensu.ca/ipo

VOTE!!! Elections VOTE!!!

ASUS

Vote for Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Executive at ALL polling stations

Vote for UNDERGRADUATE Student Trustee at ALL polling stations

Vote for Alma Mater Society Executive at ALL polling stations

Vote for Engineering Society Executive and Senator at ONLY these polling stations:

JDUC Stauffer Douglas Ellis
Ban Righ Leonard Brockington Stirling
Kingston Walter Light Dupuis

Commerce Society votes for these positions: President, VP(Internal), VP(External), Bews stick and WIC stick ONLY at these polling stations:

JDUC Stauffer Mac-Corry Dunning
Ban Righ Brockington Leonard

February 9 & 10

Make your voice be counted! Vote here:

Mac-Corry	10-6	Jean Royce	12-7	Dunning	11-3
JDUC	10-5	Ban Righ	5-7	Walter Light	11-3
P.E.C.	11-5	Leonard	5-7	Kingston	11-3
Stauffer	10-6	Brockington	5-7	Ellis	11-3
Douglas	10-6	Earl	11-3	Stirling	11-3
Botterell	10-6	Macdonald	11-3	Dupuis	11-3
Botterell(eve)	7-8			Louise Acton	11-3

Questions? Contact the AMS Elections Team at 533-6000 ext.74815 or contact the appropriate Faculty Society

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

The Way of 102 Studio 102 presents an intellectual play

Paula Schulz despairs in the Studio 102 presentation The Way of the Pilgrim.

PLAY REVIEW
BY KATHY SKELTON

Soft jazz music played as I entered Studio 102 and was whisked away from a cold, dismal Kingston winter night. An elegant French restaurant where fine linen clothed the table and Persian rugs adorned the floor fueled my anticipation for the actors to take the stage.

The conversation begins with Lane, in town for the big football game, bragging to Franny about his splendid term paper, and one quickly discerns his obnoxiously phony, 'yuppie' college attitude.

The tension builds between these two characters when Franny tells Lane that "I am sick of just liking people. I wish to God I could meet somebody I respect," which is in essence a direct attack against Lane, and his society.

Salinger's characters provide a striking contrast to one another. Whereas Franny enthusiastically tells Lane about her new spiritual interests, underlined by the reality that she may very well be on the verge of a nervous breakdown, Lane has nothing to say in encouragement, and simply reverts back to his mindless babble about his paper.

Schultz and Shaver are able to capture, and use this opportunity to See page Pilgrim on page 20

The mic is open Grad Club open mic has potential

EVENT REVIEW
BY RACHELLE VILLANUEVA

The Bohemian Embassy hit the Grad Club last Friday for an informal open mic night. Its coordinator, Dean Voukelatos, claims that the event, which was open to any performer who wished to share poetry, thought and music, is named after a club in Toronto that once ran in the sixties for the same purpose.

The beautiful nostalgic piece was quite skillfully played with an improvised ending.

Voukelatos, who himself is a guitar player and a vocalist, states that he proposed the idea of an open mic to the Grad Club's manager because he felt the need for an open and friendly environment that encouraged amateurs to perform. Thus, on the lower level of the Grad Club, a humble "stage" was set with two speakers, two amps and two microphones.

The first group of performers was the Kingston-based band, Men on Pause, composed of Rich Ison on guitar and Jason Blakely on bongos. The East-Coast band, Great Big Sea was what first came to mind when this duo dove right into their first song, "Journey to the Sea." I was impressed by the spirit and humor in their melodies and lyrics. Songs such as "Stuck" and "Where've my pants gone?" about aliens and hangovers respectively, easily got me to tap my feet and chuckle at the choruses. The newly formed band, that has also played other open mics in Kingston, was quite enthusiastic about coming to play at the Grad Club. Both musicians agreed that it gives them a great opportunity to expose themselves and their music to audiences. After getting comfortable on stage, they were joined by friends Joanna Piatrasik in singing the melancholy, "Dark Magus" and Keitha Tuepa, who, after a bit of persuasion, did a convincing cover of Bif's "Daddy's Getting Married."

See page Opening on page 19

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

Oh, Cezanne! Art auction a great success

Closet Artists: A piece of art available at Cezanne's Closet.

ART REVIEW
BY NATALIE DIAZ

Excitement filled the crowd at the Howard Johnson Hotel last Saturday, in anticipation of the Union Day Gallery's Benefit, Cezanne's Closet.

The 1999 collection provided an extensive assortment of contemporary art work ranging from watercolour paintings to sculptures to print work. The diverse selection of style, colour and form raised opinions among the public, most of whom were amazed by the beautiful textures and quality of the works.

Refreshing beverages and snacks were available throughout the night, as well as door prizes and an intermission between the ticket draw. The intermission gave an opportunity for the audience to meet the artists and discuss the pieces of work which were in the exhibit.

The 1999 collection provided an extensive assortment of contemporary art work ranging from watercolour paintings to sculptures.

The drawing procedure consisted of a random ticket draw which entitled guests one minute to claim the work they most preferred. Although most people did not obtain their first choice, the audience overall was pleased with the art they chose, which was contributed by current and graduate students in the Queen's fine arts program, as well as professional artists.

Jocelyn Purdie, managing director of the Union Gallery, was overwhelmed by the increased attendance this year.

The event is held to raise money for the Union gallery with a yearly goal of selling 100 tickets to raise $10,000. This year tickets for Cezanne's Closet were oversold and surpassed the original goal. One hundred and twelve tickets were sold, raising $11,200.

Purdie explained that each year, the committee sends out response letters after the show for feedback regarding improvements and suggestions for future events. Audience feedback and participation is a main reason why Cezanne's Closet has become appreciated and so well attended in the Kingston community.

The audience seemed to prefer this year's exhibition because the quality of the work was better and the selection was more diverse.

As for the overall impression of the night, true art lovers found this event to be entertaining and well worth the ticket price. In fact, some of the public expressed that Cezanne's Closet should run twice a year, rather than once.

Anne Bradley, Sci '02 stated, "This is one of the most inexpensive ways to buy original art. They should definitely do it more often."

Other Queen's students agreed. "One hundred dollars is a great deal for those who truly appreciate art," said Kim Varsava, Artsci '02.

Compared to last year's show, the audience seemed to prefer this year's exhibition because the quality of the work was better and the selection was more diverse, so that the audience could choose from a number of pieces that they liked — not just a few.

Dana Tose, treasurer of the gallery and Cezanne's Closet chair expressed the feeling of "how much tension builds as the evening progresses which also builds excitement."

The Union Gallery's annual benefit has become a unique, and alluring event, attracting audiences of all ages. Because of the community and student support, Cezanne's Closet will ultimately continue to grow — providing the Queen's gallery with a viable source of money and decorating the walls of many art lovers.

ASUS ARTS & SCIENCE FORMAL '99

!ArtSci 99's!

Buy Your Formal Ticket Today

Tickets: $65 at UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core
 For information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core 183 University, 533-6000 x 75085

A&E in brief

Little man syndrome: Former Different Strokes star Gary Coleman agreed to a plea bargain last Thursday for assault and battery charges placed against him. Coleman allegedly punched a woman who was seeking his autograph. Coleman was slapped with a $400 fine and placed on probation and ordered to attend anger management classes. This is not a first for Arnold. In 1988, the 4'8" inch actor was accused of punching Tracy Field after she had asked for an autograph.

Siskel's got bad Genes: Movie critic Gene Siskel is taking a break from his hit television show Siskel and Ebert to recover from brain surgery. Siskel had emergency surgery on May 11 to remove a growth in his brain.

He Got determination: Filmmaker Spike Lee told college students that he was no overnight success. The director of Do the Right Thing and Malcolm X explained that an early failure had him go home and cry his eyes out in his bathtub. During the presentation, Lee told students "I was this close to quitting, but I decided to give it one more try."

Have a little Faith: Country superstar Faith Hill topped the list for finalists for the TNN Music City News Country Awards with seven nominations including best female artist. Her song "This Kiss" is nominated for best single, song and video.

Found his limits: International rap star and producer Master P, recently tried out for the NBA's Charlotte Hornets. The No Limit record icon was cut from the team with four days remaining before the start of the shortened NBA season.

The Campus Bookstore Travel Book Sale

(You Are Here)

The Campus Bookstore Travel Book Sale
 All Travel Guides And Maps Are 25% Off
 On Now!

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-5, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
 Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

www.campusbookstore.com

The 1999 A&E Grammy

Fill out the poll below with your best choices. The entry with the most correct will get the chance to dive into the A&E CD vault for 5 picx. Deadline is February 15, 1999. When complete, bring it on over to the Journal House, 272 Earl St. Good luck!

RECORD OF THE YEAR

- The Boy is Mine — Brandy & Monica
- My Heart Will Go On — Celine Dion
- Iris — Goo Goo Dolls
- Ray of Light — Madonna
- You're Still the One — Shania Twain

ALBUM OF THE YEAR

- The Globe Sessions — Sheryl Crow
- Version 2.0. — Garbage
- The Miseducation of Lauryn Hill — Lauryn Hill
- Ray of Light — Madonna
- Come On Over — Shania Twain

BEST NEW ARTIST

- Backstreet Boys
- Andrea Bocelli
- Dixie Chicks
- Lauryn Hill
- Natalie Imbruglia

BEST FEMALE POP VOCAL PERFORMANCE

- My Favourite Mistake — Sheryl Crow
- My Heart Will Go On — Celine Dion
- Can't Take My Eyes Off Of You — Lauryn Hill

- Torn — Natalie Imbruglia
- Adia — Sarah McLachlan

BEST MALE POP VOCAL

- Save Tonight — Eagle Eye Cherry
- My Father's Eyes — Eric Clapton
- Anytime — Brian McKnight
- Lullaby — Shawn Mullins
- You Were Meant For Me — Sting

BEST ALTERNATIVE MUSIC PERFORMANCE

- From the Choirgirl Hotel — Tori Amos
- Hello Nasty — Beastie Boys
- Is This Desire? — PJ Harvey
- Airbag/How Am I Driving? — Radiohead
- Adore — Smashing Pumpkins

BEST RAP PERFORMANCE BY A DUO OR GROUP

- Intergalactic — Beastie Boys
- Money Ain't A Thang — Jermaine Dupri Featuring Jay-Z
- Déja Vu (Uptown Baby) — Lord Tariq & Peter Gunz
- Rosa Parks — OutKast
- Ghetto Superstar — Pras Michel Featuring ODB & Maya

Name:
 Telephone:
 Email:

Opening up

Continued from page 17

The energy of the stage quickly changed to a soothing, quiet mood when Kate Gad, a Faculty of Education student, read poems by Jim Carroll and Sylvia Plath. Expressively read, I was surprised to find out later that it was her first time reading all the three poems that she performed.

Dean Voukelatos himself performed a 20th century acoustic guitar piece by the Argentinian composer, Villa-Lobos. The beautiful nostalgic piece was quite skillfully played with an improvised ending. The experience was doubly enjoyable in contrast to the spirited urban folk of Men on Pause. Voukelatos then proceeded to read his own poetry, "Siva's Final Revenge" — a funny, culture-bending poem about an disenchanted dishwasher who takes out his rage by smashing dishes.

Appropriately enough, Voukelatos also read Jim Carroll's "Guitar Voodoo" that spoke of music, drugs, delirium and fantasy. Men on Pause then played their last set of songs, one of which featured Blakeley, who sounds much like Hayden, who sounds much like Hayden, who sounds much like Hayden, who sounds much like Hayden. I was impressed once again by the parody of urban teen-age experience within their lyrics and enjoyed the aggressiveness of their music that ended the evening with a bang.

I was impressed once again by the parody of urban teen-age experience within their lyrics and enjoyed the aggressiveness of their music.

Considering the very comfortable and friendly environment of the Grad Club, I was surprised that more people didn't come out to the Bohemian Embassy's inaugural night. It's definitely an ideal atmosphere for any musician and performing artist hopefuls out there who have always dreamed of performing in front of other people but can't quite get past performing in front of the mirror.

The event is tentatively scheduled every Friday at 9 p.m. beginning in March — so to those of you out there who have thought of performing: I dare you to seize that open mic.

Easier tax filing and faster refunds for students

It's free, at your fingertips, and available seven days a week.

Check your personalized income tax package for a TELEFILE invitation.

For more information, visit our Web site at:

www.rc.gc.ca/telefile/

Focus on Environment

Build on your degree with one of these dynamic, practical, past-graduate environmental programs to enhance your qualifications in today's job market!

- ★ Environmental Management
- ★ Ecosystem Restoration
- ★ Environmental Assessment
- ★ Geographic Information Systems

These two-semester (eight-month) programs start in September

Our NEW CAMPUS located in NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, ONTARIO features state-of-the-art laboratories and facilities to complement our 68 acre on-site Living Laboratory.

The Centre For ENVIRONMENTAL TRAINING

NIAGARA COLLEGE of Applied Arts & Technology
 135 Taylor Road, R.R. #4
 Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ontario L0S 1J0

(905) 641-2252 ext. 4470

or fax (905) 988-4309
 or e-mail: enviro@niagarac.on.ca

www.niagarac.on.ca

FRANSELLY Hair & Esthetics

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St.
 549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples.
 www.Fransellyhair.com

Lost in the clouds

Contemporary artists fail to excite

CONCERT REVIEW
By DAVID McCLUSKEY

The MuchMoreMusic crowd was out in full force to catch a trio of Canada's newest adult contemporary artists at the Grand Theatre last Thursday.

The featured acts were Toronto flamenco guitarist Jesse Cook, and singer-songwriters Bruce Guthro and Amy Sky. Sky was apparently the headliner but there was no evidence of the star/supporting act hierarchy typical of most concerts. In fact, all three acts popped up regularly to support the others both musically and to serve as MC's between sets.

Amy Sky's performance demonstrated the worst tendencies of adult contemporary music.

Sky and Guthro took the stage first to introduce Cook, and their over-rehearsed banter came across as slick and insincere. Luckily, Cook and his two supporting musicians were quick to engage the crowd with music that was both playful and expertly performed. Cook's brand of flamenco, which includes elements of rumba and other world music styles, has found a wide audience in Kingston. Perhaps it's due to his exposure on the TV Guide Channel or to his set at Indigo last fall, but when he gave a short lesson on the proper time to call out "Ole!" mid-song, it was evident that many in the audience had previously been taught this lesson.

After a too short set showcasing his fluid playing and unorthodox percussion (including an extended solo on a "wooden box"), Amy Sky and Bruce Guthro joined him on his last song. Together, they performed "Fragile," the Sting song Cook originally did with Holly Cole on his album Vertigo.

Bruce Guthro's set was uneven but generally well received. The opening song "Factory Life" could have passed for Nebraska-era Springsteen, displaying his gift for narrative while allowing his voice to shine. Unfortunately, it was not a sign of things to come. Guthro and his five-piece band plowed through a handful of indistinct rockers, only finding their groove on the recent single "I've Got a Wall." It could be that the acoustics of the Grand Theatre were not designed for up-tempo rock, but when Guthro reverted to sparser instrumentation or storytelling he fared much better.

The highlight of the set was the closing song, his prodigal son ballad "Falling" from his debut album OK Your Son. Joined by Cook, Guthro and his band relaxed and for once let the material speak for itself.

Amy Sky's performance followed and it demonstrated the worst tendencies of adult contemporary music: lots of perfect, polished hits with absolutely no soul. She kept her eyes closed and spoke to the crowd infrequently (twice to ask how much local radio play she was getting), resulting in a complete failure to connect with the audience. Sky could blame her recent stage experience (appearing in Blood Brothers with David Cassidy), but her over-the-top performance did not play well in the smaller Grand Theatre.

Cook's brand of flamenco, which includes elements of rumba and other world music styles, has found a wide audience in Kingston.

While most of her mannerisms were merely annoying, dropping to her knees in a caricature of emotion during the second song was unforgivable. Her hits, such as "Waterfall," "Til You Love Somebody" and "I Will Take Care Of You," were competently performed, earning her the third standing ovation of the night.

The encore featured all three performers and their respective backing bands playing together on Guthro's song "Good Love." Everyone on stage joked around and looked relieved to be free from the pressure of the spotlight. During this stage the crowd finally seemed to be having some fun.

It's unfortunate that the crowd did not begin to enjoy themselves until the end of the evening. The show itself was satisfactory, but overall, the night could have used many more memorable moments.

102 delivers

Continued from page 17

While there is a lot of subtext involved in the dialogue between the two main characters, the end result is quite rewarding.

Adam Wolters has engineered and directed a marvelous adaptation of Salinger's rich novel, incorporating minimal staging and lighting which allows the dialogue to take center stage.

It was a shame however to see Perry Mucci, the fabulously talented star... as simply the waiter with relatively few lines, and little chance to shine.

It was a shame, however, to see Perry Mucci, the fabulously talented star of the Imaginary Invalid, as simply the waiter with relatively few lines, and little chance to shine.

A quirky little cameo is made by Brian Frommer as Ray Sorenson, which I have yet to completely figure out. The only information was provided by the director who explained the appearance as "sort of an inside joke."

If you interested in a multi-layered play that can easily be seen as a self-reflexive look at Queen's University, then check out The Way of a Pilgrim playing in Theological Hall at Studio 102 February 11 and 13 at 8 p.m., and February 12 at 7 and 9 p.m. Tickets are $3.

Get Out There!

Playing at the Cataracti Cineplex from February 9 to February 11:
389-7442

Stepmom 6:55, 9:30
Patch Adams 9:10
She's All That 7:25, 9:50
The Thin Red Line 8:15
Simply Irresistible 7:05, 9:20
Waking Ned Devine 7:15, 9:40

Playing at the Screening Room from February 9 to February 11:
542-6080
Life is Beautiful 7:05
Happiness 9:35

Movies:

Playing at the Capitol Theatre from February 9 to February 11:
546-5395

Shakespeare in Love 6:50, 7:10, 9:40, 10:00
A Civil Action 7:15, 9:50
Payback 7:00, 7:30, 9:30, 10:10
Saving Private Ryan 8:00
Varsity Blues 7:20, 10:05

Contributor Call:

On Saturday March 13, a coffee house will be held for International Women's Week. Volunteers are needed for all aspects of the event. For more information drop by the Women's Centre at 51 Queen's Crescent.

a different edge
hair & tanning salon

203 Wellington St. • 547-2057

Purchase 10 Sessions for $60.00 and receive one free session

Purchase 15 sessions for $85.00 and receive one free session

Purchase one package at regular price and receive a 2nd package for 1/2 price

$100.00 Monthly

• 20% off all hair services

LOOKING FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT? WHY NOT TRY FOREST FIREFIGHTING?

To become a forest firefighter, a pre-requisite 40 hour S-100 Certificate Course is necessary and available with Wildfire Specialists Inc. For more information contact WILDFIRE at (705) 693-0323.

Course Dates: March 28 - April 1 1999

Registration: Queen's University JDUC February 15 & 16 1999 10 a.m. - 4 p.m.

SENATE COMMITTEES NEED STUDENT MEMBERS

Academic Development, Educational Equity, Information Technology ... and more

Terms start September 1
Apply now! Do it before Valentine's Day
Deadline: February 14

www.queensu.ca/secretariat/senate/vacancy

or call 533-6D95
or visit MACKINTOSH-CORRY, B4D0

exchange

Events List

Blue Monday at Alfies $3
Valentine's Party at Alfies $4
ARTSCI Formal $65
Swing Night at Grant $5
The Way of a Pilgrim $3
Enemy of the State $3

Tickets At:
exchange

Classifieds

HAPPY 21ST B-DAY JAY BARRE!

BURGER KING

Whopper Junior every day

99¢

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families.

Hall an hour away. Visit our website www.ikweb.com/blueroof or call Kim Ondaajie at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 982-8262.

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CD's, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9036.

SAVE MONEY! Save money on your formal ticket by helping out at the Artsci '99 Formal. Volunteers are needed for setting up cleaning up, and helping out during the formal (March 6th) checking coats, dealing Black Jack hands, etc. If interested, please contact Steven at 533-6000 ext. 75085, or stop by the ASUS Core.

COMFORT FOOD! CHEAP, quick and nutritious. You can make it at our next cooking class February 10th, 5:30 - 7 at the INTERNATIONAL CENTRE. Call 533-6712 to sign up.

A Peer Health Outreach Program.

REACH OUT! To your Community, check out the Info Fair in Wallace on February 10th. To learn about opportunities for you to volunteer around Kingston 10:30 - 2:30 p.m.

BE IN CHARGE! Head House Attendant applications for the Artsci '99 Formal are now available at the ASUS Core.

ARE YOU INTERESTED in becoming a Peer Educator? We are currently recruiting volunteers for next year. There are many ways to get involved in this valuable experience. Why not look into becoming a Peer Learning Assistant, Peer Tutor, Peer Health Educator or get involved with the Peer Educator Program on Sex, Intimacy and Dating? Please come out to an information session and find out the details. Sessions will be held on Thursday February 11th, 5:30 - 6:30 p.m. and Friday February 12th, 12:30 - 1:30 p.m. Both sessions will take place at Students Counseling Services, Ground Floor of the St. Lawrence Building. For more information call Diane Nolting at 533-6712.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877-PREP-COM

COME AND MEET Howard Hampton, M.P.P., provincial leader of the NDP, and Beth Pater, local NDP candidate at 7:00 p.m., Thursday February 11th at Memorial Hall, City Hall. Refreshments, music.

ACC VICTIMS! Did the reps on campus in September tell you your $20.00 per month plan included calls to the US? Well, it doesn't - call Amy or Neil at 547-0018 to help us hold them to their word.

ATTENTION: Any FYNIRS interested in leading fresh in Orientation Week '99, applications are now available at the AMS Office (or contact us at 7152@qink.queensu.ca). It's even more fun when you're in charge.

HAVING TROUBLE in a course?? Get a tutor through MindFind, the ASUS tutoring service for only $7 per hour. Fill out a tutor request form at the ASUS Core (183 University) or email mindfind@asus.queensu.ca

HELP WANTED
EPILEPSY KINGSTON wants you! We are currently enlisting volunteers to play the parts of puppeteer. Help us educate kids about Epilepsy. Training provided. Call 542-6222 for more information.

TUTOR NEEDED!! Earn $9 per hour tutoring for MindFind, the ASUS tutoring service. Fill out a tutor sign up form at the ASUS Core (183 University) or email mindfind@asus.queensu.ca

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, water-ski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

FREE ROOM AND BOARD in exchange for help with childcare and household duties. Monday to Thursday 5:00 - 8:30 p.m. Female, experienced with references. Starting May 1st. Call 549-8565.

NEED SOME EXTRA CASH?? Be at Tutor for MindFind, the ASUS tutoring service. For more information drop by the ASUS Core (183 University) or email mindfind@asus.queensu.ca

WANTED
WANTED: Two housemates, preferably upper year non-smoking females, to share a house on Johnson and Nelson. Rent, $365 per month, ALL utilities included, 2 bathrooms, washer/dryer. Call 531-8143 for more info.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Silver/gold Swiss army watch. Lost at Clergy and Division. Reward offered. Call 536-3478.

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

Classifieds are due Friday by noon for Tuesday publications and on Tuesday by 2 p.m. for Friday publications. Call our business team at 533-2800 or stop by the Journal House at 272 Earl Street to place your ad today.

99 ???

Freak!

Trasheteria

Are You Bored?

Do you want to Gain Valuable Skills?
Become a Community Volunteer!!!

Reach Out!

Over 30 information booths on volunteer opportunities available in the community!

Wed. Feb 10th 10:30-2:30
Wallace Hall and Upper Ceildh,
JDUC

Questions? Call the Municipal Affairs Commission
533-6000 ext. 75178

MAC

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

MISSING A WILLIE

Thousands mourn deceased rodent

IN THE BEGINNING was Willie, and Willie was from Warton, and Warton was Willie, and Willie was with Warton. It's funny how a town gets an identity.

Willie is the albino woodchuck who, every year on Groundhog Day, makes the little town of Warton, Ontario famous. I join with a few other Queen's students in proudly calling Warton home, and thus have received some shadow of his strange celebrity status. Last week he made us all a bit more famous than usual by showing up for Groundhog Day dead.

To understand the full impact of Willie's passing on Warton's citizens, you have to understand that if you live in that town, there's no escaping Willie. You drive down the main street past the Warton Willie Motel and there's a billboard of a cartoon Willie saying "Welcome to Warton." You walk along Willie's Way to the park and there's a gleaming eight-foot statue of Willie standing upright in all his glory. So phallic, so idolatrous, and so perfectly beautiful.

Even if you leave town, you tell people that you're from Warton and they start sneaking. "That's the place with the chipmunk, right?" they say. "Groundhog," you reply sternly. And all the while, the melody to the theme song from the Groundhog Day festival — "Don't Touch My Willie" — drums into your brain.

The thing is, Willie has become more than a mascot for Warton — he's been an ambassador. In fact, he's the quintessential representative for our little community. As an indolent product of inbreeding, pink-eyed and with a nasty inclination to bite, he could almost be a member of my OAC graduating class.

Willie wet himself on the mayor, who promptly cleaned himself up and declared "I wash my hands of Willie." How the crowd just laughed.

They will say how on Sunday he died, and the townspeople took Willie and anointed him with spices. How they then preheated the oven to 425 degrees, but somebody told them groundhog is out of season in February, so they washed off the spices and embalmed him. People commented that he looked even whiter than he had while alive. They will talk of how a woman went to visit Willie's body at the Lazy Bones Funeral Home in Warton and was met with a wondrous site: someone had rolled away the partition in front of Willie, and the casket was empty. How driving home, the woman was listening to the radio when a voice came over the speakers. It said: "Willie saves... at your Local Knechtel's Food Market!" And she was struck by the message: Willie saves.

No matter how the stories are passed down, though, I know that Willie will live on in Warton's heart for years to come. After every trip into town, I go home and wash the white paint from my body and think about Willie. Things have worked out all right. He's in a better place now. Well, he lived in Warton all his life, so that's pretty much guaranteed.

Bob McGill's neighbours are ready for both Willie's resurrection and second coming.

And then one day I woke up and he was dead. I woke up the next morning and he's dead. The next still dead. It's like a scene from some movie.

But it's all too real: Warton Willie is gone. Some days I just want to go back to bed and sleep away my sorrow. A psychiatrist who was called into Warton to heal the mourners has concluded that many Wartonians share this desire. He calls it "the Hibernation Impulse." And that's the thing, Wartonians may have an incredible ambivalence towards Willie — we both hate and love being from the Groundhog Town — but no matter how we feel, our psychologies are as indelibly stained by Willie as is the newspaper at the bottom of his pen. Even writing about him now with such mixed feelings, I feel like I'm betraying him. I should be getting 30 pieces of silver for this column.

Then there's the agitation at knowing that the people down in Punxsatawney, Pennsylvania are actually happy that Willie is gone. They have a rival weather forecaster there: Phil, a brown groundhog who hogged the spotlight in the movie Groundhog Day. Those Americans are laughing because if their boring brown rodent ends up as roadkill they can always find any number of other boring brown rodents to take his place. But Willie was albino. What is our town supposed to do: slap a coat of white paint on some marmot and parade it around town? Warton only does that to the village idiot.

Willie's nemesis, Punxsatawney Phil (et Mayor)

the movie Groundhog Day. Those Americans are laughing because if their boring brown rodent ends up as roadkill they can always find any number of other boring brown rodents to take his place. But Willie was albino. What is our town supposed to do: slap a coat of white paint on some marmot and parade it around town? Warton only does that to the village idiot.

THE LEGEND OF WILLIE

WILLIEMAS. (will-ee-mus.) n. midwinter celebration of the edification of the albino groundhog

IN THE DEEP DARK AGES of antiquity (1956 or there about) the ancient rituals of Candlemas were replaced by the celebrations of Williemas. A secret emissary of three wise groundhogs had broken hibernation to bring the glad tidings to the small community of Oliphant. There in a shack on the shores of Lake Huron they found Mae McKenzie anticipating a message of great import.

The three wise groundhogs named Grundoon, Muldoon, and Sand Dunc told Mae of the birth of a white groundhog who would forever alter the world of weather prognostication. He would be recognized by his white coat and pink eyes and his unerring ability to correctly predict the remaining course of each winter. He would emerge each February 2 and pronounce his predictions only to those who spoke the ancient tongue of Groundhogese. With a joyful heart and the help of revelling friends Mae went forth and spread the great news. Thus from the simple message delivered on Williemas eve to the grateful residents of Oliphant has grown the true meaning of winter.... "Party On!"

your ticket to ride!

Discounts up to 40%

Valid student card must be presented at time of purchase.

For schedule and fare information call 613-547-4916 or 1-800-461-7661

trentway-wagar

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your only friends are your fellow GW editors.

For the next seven issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letters of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring.

Robin Webb, Comm '00 models in front of Building #1

Jordan Willet, Arts '00 models in front of Building #2

ROOTS KINGSTON

WINTER SALE EVENT

SAVE! UP TO 50% OFF

sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult, Kids & Baby

229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

SARAH'S RECIPE CORNER

MIXED GRILL

While it may be freezing cold, but that doesn't stop us from barbecuing. Why? Because it gives food that smoky flavour and all the nice grill marks. Oh yeah, and it saves us washing pots too.

May you have a full tank of fuel and a covered porch, fellow grill lovers.

- 1 large zucchini, ends trimmed, cut lengthwise into 1/2 cm. slices
- 1 red and 1 green pepper, halved, cored, seeds removed
- 2 cooking onions, peeled, halved
- 10 white mushrooms (or two portobello mushrooms, if you can afford it)
- 2 potatoes, microwaved until cooked, and halved
- 2 portions of raw salmon (steaks or fillets)
- Olive oil
- 1 clove garlic, crushed
- 1/4 tsp. dried rosemary leaves

1. Brush all the veggies including the potatoes with olive oil. Sprinkle the potatoes with rosemary, and rub all the other vegetables with garlic.
2. Sprinkle the salmon with lemon juice, and top each piece with 1 tsp. of butter and 1/8 cup of dill.
3. Sprinkle salt and pepper on veggies and salmon.
4. Start the barbecue, turn to medium-low. Begin with the onions, as they will take the longest. When they are half-cooked, put on the other vegetables and the salmon, skin side down if using fillets (don't flip them or they will stick).

*Also good on the grill are eggplant, catfish, green onions, cobs of corn and asparagus. You may never have to wash a pot again!

Sarah Le May's secret is she puts a little something extra in all of her dishes. Respect.

Hab Influedza?

It's influenza season again. Headaches, sore muscles, fever, chills and a cough from influenza can be downright nasty.

Feel like helping?

Kingston General Hospital and Queen's University researchers are working on a new drug to defeat this infection. We are looking for two types of participants:

Group One Children ages 5-12, with parental approval, who are normally healthy with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.	Group Two Adults and adolescents age 12 and up with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that many include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat who also have a history of asthma (and have used asthma medicines in the last year) OR have chronic bronchitis / chronic obstructive lung disease.
--	--

Please call as soon as you feel these symptoms

531-SICK (7425)

or your family doctor to find out if you qualify.

KINGSTON GENERAL HOSPITAL

reading week
will save your sanity

the tricolour express will save your money

Toronto ♦ Ottawa ♦ Montreal ♦ Kitchener ♦ London
Mississauga ♦ Oakville ♦ Burlington ♦ Hamilton

exchange
COPIES • PREVIOUS • TODAY • CENTS • BONUS • STUFF

9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JYUC • 533 2120

EXTRA

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

FOOD BANK
Open Today
Hours 4-6 p.m.

THE JOURNAL

Ticketmaster is coming to campus.

1873

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1999

Corman-Mori-Minns victorious

KGB makes appeal

BY FIONA STEVENSON

The 1998-1999 AMS Exec. welcome the incoming team with the traditional glass of scotch. From left to right: V-P (UA) Alison Loat, V-P (Ops) Gord Moodie, President Tom Stanley, incoming President Sarah Corman, incoming V-P (Ops) Owen Minns and incoming V-P (UA) Lisa Mori.

BY RENEE HUANG

Results of the Alma Mater Society election hit the streets early last night, heralding the victory of Sarah Corman, Owen Minns and Lisa Mori as the AMS executive for 1999-2000.

The Corman-Mori-Minns team captured 44.7 per cent of the vote. Ballots were cast by 2,840 students, which represents 24.46 per cent of the 11,613 students comprising the eligible voting mass at Queen's. Last year's AMS executive election turned out 28.53 per cent of eligible voters.

"We were so unprepared [for the news]," exclaimed AMS President-elect Sarah Corman, commenting on the speed with which the ballots were tallied. "We were wrapping presents for our volunteers. We didn't have any time to be stressed. We were like 'What? Who could be here?'"

After hearing the final tally from scrutineers and counters gathered in the Wallace Hall, the current AMS President Tom Stanley, Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie and Vice-President (University Affairs) Alison Loat ran to break the news to the electees with the traditional bottle of scotch and cigars.

Lisa Mori, newly elected AMS V-P (UA) repeated the Al Capone speech that had become a familiar staple in her team's classroom speeches. "You never ever go in without a plan," she quipped while puffing on a cigar. "I'm really loving the cigar," said Mori.

A group of friends, campaign volunteers and supporters celebrated with the winners in Mori's kitchen. Mori's housemate Jenn Haessler, Arts '99, was present during the ballot count. "It was very tense," she said. "My counts were 50-50."

AMS ELECTION RESULTS

Corman-Mori-Minns	44.7 %
Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry	37.5 %
Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner	16.5 %
Voter turnout (11,613 eligible voters)	24.46 % (2,840 voters)

"I'm not surprised they won at all. I was surprised it wasn't more of a landslide for them. I think it should've been. I think they'll do an awesome job," said Susy MacDougall, Con-Ed '99.

"It's a warm, smiley type feeling," said the team's campaign manager Ryan Graham, Sci '00. "Finally this whole venture of campaigning is over... Everything that I was responsible for, finally, it's done."

"In a way they were like my children. They were so excited about all the things they were learning... I'm really proud for them more than anything else," said Graham.

Owen Minns, newly elected V-P (Ops), expressed his happiness over the victory with a quiet disposition. "I'm pretty calm about most things," Minns said. "It hasn't been too harsh of a campaign," he continued, commenting on the competitive spirit among candidate teams. "I have some oversized clown shows to fill," he added.

"I'm really excited that they won. I'm sure they'll do a great job," said outgoing V-P (Ops) Moodie.

V-P (UA) Alison Loat, said she was thrilled for the new team. "I would have been happy for anybody," she explained. "They have a great experience ahead of them. I suggest they get all the sleep they can between now and May 1."

"It's going to be awesome. I wish them all the luck in the world and I hope they're well rested," said President Stanley, joking "they should join OUSA."

Things were not much quieter for the other two teams that participated in the election, and moods were positive.

"I'm drinking a giant beer, but I'm really proud because I think we ran a really good campaign and considering where we started out I think we did the best job possible," said Presidential candidate Mike Beltzner from the Queen's Pub.

"It was really a good time — it was really fun," agreed teammate and V-P (Ops) candidate Chelsea Gay.

"I was just surprised it wasn't

Please see 'Good' on next page

Amid the victory celebration of the Corman-Mori-Minns team, questions about the winners' campaign expenses were being raised.

The Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner team plans to contest the campaign finance report submitted by the CMM team, initiating an appeals process which could result in fines or disqualification of the victors.

"I plan on submitting by 10 [this] morning a complaint regarding the campaign methods of the [CMM] team. From what I know I expect that the actual candidates had very little to do with what was going on," said Presidential candidate Mike Beltzner, in an interview last night.

"We paid close attention to the campaign rules and so did the team of [Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry]. After a certain number of violations [by the CMM team], we felt they should be mentioned to the CEO," he added.

"Concerns have been brought to us," confirmed Darren MacDonald, AMS chief electoral officer. "There is a meeting scheduled [today] with the relevant parties... depending on receiving a written complaint." The meeting is scheduled for 1 p.m.

Beltzner said all three teams had to hand in itemized lists of their campaign expenses, along with receipts, by 5:30 p.m. on Tuesday. Each team was restricted to a spending limit of $400.

Along with a list of their expenses, the KGB team submitted a letter to the CEO that outlined suspected violations by the CMM team. "We also mentioned that we had heard a rumour that the CMM team would not be including their campaign manager's cellular phone as a campaign expense," Beltzner said. The AMS Policy Manual lists "electronic communication" as a form of campaigning.

According to Beltzner, MacDonald said he had previously ruled that it was acceptable for the CMM team to exclude the cellular phone from their expenses. "He told

Please see 'Team' on next page

'A good experience'

Continued from previous page

closer," Beltzner added. "We would have liked a greater voter turnout, that disappoints us more than anything," added V-P (UA) candidate Jon Krashinsky. "We offered an alternative but the electorate decided to go with the status quo," Beltzner said. "I guess we're disappointed, but that goes without saying," said Presidential candidate Nick Cheeseman.

"I always thought that we were close teams. I have a lot of respect for them and I think they'll do a great job," said V-P (UA) candidate Kate Bailey. "I'm disappointed that we lost, but I believe that things happen for a reason, so I think there must be something else out there for me."

"The people who supported us were really great. There were a lot of people who offered their support and we really appreciate it," added V-P (Ops) candidate Sue Henry. "The campaign was definitely a good experience."

Queen's students reacted with varying degrees of surprise and pleasure to the results of the election.

"I'm glad they weren't going on the goofy platform. They looked like a serious party that's actually going to do something for the students," said Mark Higginbottom, ArtSci '00. "I'm expecting something to be done from this team."

"It would have been great if KGB won, there would have been some interesting aspects to student politics for a change," said Tyler Ball, Sci '01.

Outgoing AMS executive President Tom Stanley had little advice to give to the newly elected team. "The things that help the most you can't teach," he explained. "It's raw stamina."

— with files from Rebecca Stelter, Jon Timney, Fiona Stevenson

Team awaits decision

Continued from previous page

use the avenues available for us to appeal [this decision] and this is what we are doing," said Beltzner.

"We'd just like to see a more detailed summary of their accounts," he said.

Beltzner said there have been other possible violations by the CMM team, such as posters placed on glass. "On Monday night we found unattended campaign materials at Mac-Corry [and] Earl Hall," Beltzner said. "Every other table in the atrium at Earl Hall had a 'Vote CMM' card on it... Near residence, these vote CMM cards were dropped regularly about every three feet."

MacDonald is planning to meet with Greg McKellar, AMS information officer, this morning to go over policy procedures. "My role in this is a judicial role," said MacDonald. "I don't have any opinion on this until/if all the sides... bring points forward."

AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner Dan Fabiano explained that, according to AMS policy, the university community has 72 hours after the last poll closes to challenge elements of the campaign. If the challenge involves "broad notions of democracy" it is brought directly to the CEO, he said.

"There are a number of avenues I could take," said MacDonald. "I will come to the conclusion I feel is most appropriate under the circumstance," he said. "If an official complaint is brought forward, a decision will probably come down [today]... It will be given to all teams."

MacDonald predicted that his decision will be appealed to the judicial committee. "With something of this magnitude the precedent is it is taken to the judicial committee," he said.

Violations by any team, as determined by the CEO, may result in fines to a maximum of $500, or disqualification, Fabiano explained.

"We really don't want to come across as the bitter losers," Beltzner emphasized. "If it comes down to a re-vote our team is actually going to withdraw... We just want to make sure the candidate teams were following the electoral rules."

— with files from Jocelyn Laporte

Trustee acclaimed

By LAURA MACINNIS

Students had one less choice to make at the voting booth this week, as the undergraduate student trustee campaign became, instead, an acclamation.

Shane Coblin, Law '01, was acclaimed after Trevor Ogle, Arts '99, withdrew from the race on Monday.

Ogle said he decided not to run because he was unsure that he would be returning to Queen's as an undergraduate, and the University Secretariat by-laws were unclear.

"During the campaign I got some good ideas out there," he said. "It was a valuable exercise, but it came to a point where I had to make a decision."

The Student Trustee holds a voting position on the Board of Trustees, the highest decision making body at Queen's. This board meets four times a year, and makes all decisions about finances for the university, including tuition.

Last year, the Board of Trustees approved tuition hikes of 20 per cent for undergraduates and deregulation of tuition for Law and Medicine.

The only other voting student on the Board of Trustees is the Rector, a position now held by Mike Kealy, Law '01, a classmate of Coblin's.

Coblin stressed the importance of raising student awareness about the Board. "A lot of people don't know what the Board of Trustees is... I'd like to make the position more accessible, and that way I could be held more accountable."

He said he will attempt this consciousness-raising with a new Web site and a campaign through campus media.

Coblin's main issues centred on tuition and student aid. He suggested that the Board should "take a more active role in lobbying the government" for extended student debt repayment schedules and other programmes.

"With the deregulation coming into effect, there has to be a strong voice on the Board of Trustees," he said.

He also said that Queen's should consider selling some of its properties to save money, but would not comment on specific ideas.

Coblin did his undergraduate degree in psychology at Western.

The Journal will publish Faculty society election results in tomorrow's paper.

EDITORIAL BOARD	BUSINESS STAFF	THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
EDITORS-IN-CHIEF Keith Gerein Tara Mansbridge	BUSINESS MANAGER Claudia Kraft	Thursday, February 11, 1999 • Extra • Volume 126
MANAGING EDITOR Laura Macinnis	SALES REPRESENTATIVES Suzanne Armstrong Andrew Cooke	The Queen's Journal is an independently sponsored newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by the Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community press by The Queen's University Press, 100 University Ave., Kingston, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone: (613) 533-3800; advertising: (613) 533-6711; Fax: (613) 533-4678; Email: journal@ams.queensu.ca; Internet: http://www.queensjournal.com . Circulation: 5,000. Issue 32 will be published on Friday, February 12, 1999.
NEWS EDITOR Fiona Stevenson	ADVERTISING CO-ORDINATOR Mark Fucella
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS Shawn Brimley Renée Huang Jocelyn Laporte	ADVERTISING DESIGNERS Katherine Colbourn Annie Ge Rachelle Villanueva
	SYSTEMS MANAGER Craig Thomas

The truth is out there!

(you don't have to be an engineer)

It's not too late for... TEO

The Experience Option -- co-operative education at Queen's

- Do you need to get some career-related experience that goes well beyond a summer job?
- Do you need a break from school to see how what you're learning really applies?
- Think about it during Reading Week and check us out!

NEW Employers!
Jobs!
Cities!

Look for details starting Feb. 26 - 2nd Round postings go up at Career Services <http://careers.queensu.ca>

Elections Are Over

we say

out with The Old...

...In with The New.

Thanks Stanley Moodie Loat for a great year!

exchange
Cdn. Furniture • Home • Office • Book • Staff

TRUCK MASTERS

9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays

New exec disqualified

By FIONA STEVENSON

The Corman-Mori-Minns team has been disqualified from the AMS Executive elections for exceeding the campaign expense limit, in a ruling made by the AMS Chief Electoral Officer yesterday. The CMM team was elected as the new AMS executive Wednesday evening, capturing 44.7 per cent of the vote.

The CMM team is appealing the CEO's decision to the AMS Judicial Committee, which will meet this evening.

Neil Bunn, campaign manager for the Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner team, appealed to the CEO, Darren MacDonald, yesterday morning, alleging that a cellular phone used by Ryan Graham, the CMM Campaign Manager, should count towards the CMM team's $400 spending limit.

The CEO's ruling was released around 6 p.m. last night, following a 90-minute meeting with the three teams and their campaign managers at 1 p.m.

According to MacDonald, Graham rented a cellular phone shortly before the commencement of the AMS Executive elections, at a cost estimated by Graham at $95. The CMM team submitted an expense report declaring they had spent $392.79 in the course of their campaign; however, the report does not mention the cell phone.

In a written statement of his ruling, MacDonald said, "Although the phone was not exclusively for the campaign, the use of the phone for the cam-

Please see Reaction on page 3

Walkhome management reprimanded

Assistant manager fired; manager suspended

By LAURA MACINNIS

Two AMS service managers were reprimanded this week after a six-day investigation into accounting fraud and mismanagement.

Walkhome Assistant Manager Mark Fam was fired yesterday morning for accounting misconduct and suspected infraction of the law. An internal investigation found "persistent accounting discrepancies" in payroll filed by Fam.

Walkhome Head Manager Jennifer Gresham was suspended last Friday for not fulfilling her duties as a manager, and will be permitted to return to work on Monday.

Fam has worked at Walkhome for four years.

"The people who know me won't question me, because they know my character."

— Former Walkhome Assistant Manager Mark Fam

While Fam chose not to comment on the details of his alleged misconduct, he emphasized that he is innocent of malice or wrong-doing. "I know myself not to be guilty under Canadian law in any way," he said, adding, "The people who know me won't question me, because they know my character."

Fam has not yet decided whether to appeal his termination.

Both Gresham and Fam were suspended after a meeting last Friday with Moodie and AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong, when she accounted for the payroll discrepancy in a manner which was deemed inadequate.

"There was a communication breakdown about this particular issue," said Gresham. "It came down to a miscommunication."

Please see 'Lack' on page 4

Volunteers handed out over 1,000 donations from Queen's and downtown Kingston businesses for "Random Acts of Kindness Day" in Mac Corry Wednesday afternoon. Organized by Mark Salvador, ArtSci '00 (centre), Celine Cooper, Arts '99 (left), Laura Moreland (right), Kingston Mayor Gary Bennett also helped pass on gifts to bewildered passersby.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Queen's may take over courts

By STEFAN MURRAY

Queen's School of Business is considering adding a piece of Kingston's history to campus.

The City of Kingston approached the University in the fall regarding the possibility of the Queen's School of Business taking possession of the Frontenac County Courthouse.

According to Vice-Principal John Cowan, if the university were to take possession of the Courthouse, the entire School of Business would be moved into that space. Cowan added that the Courthouse is only one of the options that the School of Business is investigating.

"[The courthouse] is not the only thing they're looking at. It is not the definite solution," he said.

"If the justice system wants to keep it up as a courthouse, it will remain as a courthouse... We certainly don't want it over other peoples' objectives," Cowan said.

Objections have been raised by the Frontenac Law courthouse since 1858. Discussions have been ongoing between the two groups but, according to Cowan, "Queen's is on the sidelines waiting for the province to decide."

Last Wednesday, Kingston Mayor Gary Bennett discussed the future of the courthouse with Charles Harnick, Attorney General of Ontario, to explore the best possible use of the building.

According to Elizabeth Cashman, Executive Assistant to Mayor Bennett, "the city is examining all of our assets to see what is in the long-term best interests of the community."

In order to adequately fit the entire school in the courthouse, additions and renovations would have to be made that Cowan estimated would cost approximately $15 to $20 million and would be funded through private donations.

The courthouse, located in City Park off Barrie Street, was acquired by the city last year when Kingston was amalgamated. It has been in use as a

Love is in the air

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Ich libe dich. Ngiyakhuthanda. Naku penda. Whether you say it in Yiddish, Zulu or Swahili, Valentine's Day is the day to say "I love you."

Valentine's Day, being celebrated this Sunday, is rooted in traditions of love and partnership. February 14 was chosen because it was believed to be the day "love birds began to mate," explained Brian Yealland, chaplain at Queen's. A similar idea also centres around the celebration of Easter, he explained, which is based on the fertility cycle and hinges on the fertility symbol of the egg.

Valentine's Day eventually "became a day in which the Roman Catholic church honoured St. Valentine," said Yealland. "He became a Saint to the Catholics because in the Roman Empire under Claudius, marriage was forbidden," Yealland said. Claudius wanted men to remain single because he believed they would make better soldiers in his army. "Priest Valentine continued to marry people... [and] became associated with the notion of human love birds," he said.

Love proved tough for St. Valentine. He was clubbed,

Please see Roses on page 4

index

Volume 126, Issue 32
www.journal.queensu.ca

News . . . 1 Science . . . 12
Editorials . . . 8 A&E . . . 19
Opinions . . . 9 Classifieds . . . 23
Features . . . 13 Misc . . . 24
Sports & Fitness . . . 15

WEATHERWATCH

Today Cloudy with showers High 7°C, Low -1°C, POP 60%	Sunday Sunny with clouds High 4°C, Low -9°C, POP 20%
Saturday Cloudy with showers High -3°C, Low -8°C, POP 60%	Monday Cloudy with rain High 3°C, Low -8°C, POP 60%

Valentines Party Saturday, February 13

Find your Valentine
at Alfie's

Prize Giveaways

Tickets On Sale
Today in the JDU

Funding towards the Sexual Health
& Resource Center

Tickets $4
Available at

UNDERGROUND EVENTS

FRIDAY

FEB. 12

TUESDAY

FEB. 16

TONIGHT
TONIGHT
TONIGHT

BLUE MONDAY
TONIGHT
TONIGHT
TONIGHT

Blue Monday

LIVE TONIGHT

Alfie's
PUB

Lushus
Chakra

Carmeta Gentles battles justice system

BY KEN BUTLAND

"Somebody must guard the guards," said Carmeta Gentles. Gentles spoke to a group of 30 Queen's students and members of the African and Caribbean Students Association in the JDUC Music Listening Room on Tuesday evening. Her speech focused on her experience with the Canadian justice system.

On October 24, 1993, in a prison cell in Kingston Penitentiary, Gentles' son Robert died of asphyxiation, having been heavily maced and held face down on his bed by five prison guards. He was 23. Since then, three of the guards have been charged — but not convicted — with being wrongfully involved in his death.

Gentles' frustration lies in the alarming uncertainty with the circumstances surrounding Robert Gentles' death, and the opposition she has faced from the justice system in her five-year court struggle.

A delayed report from Corrections Canada (held back long enough for the pathologist's report to be issued and read before any explanation was given) states that on the night in question, Robert incited other inmates to make a disturbance, refused to cooperate with guards when they came to reprimand him, and resisted their efforts to detain him, Gentles said.

According to the testimony of the other inmates, however, Robert attempted to quiet down an already noisy number of prisoners, and refused to leave his cell only because the guards made unreasonable demands that he let them take him down to the 'hole,' where there are absolutely no inmates to witness anything that might occur, she continued. Further evidence is a statement made by one of the guards that accidental suffocation is not a criminal offense, she said. The report clearly states that there was no guard holding Robert Gentles's head against his pillow and, therefore, he could not have died from suffocation. "They are always changing stories," observed Gentles. "If you tell the truth it is the same every time."

But she did not and has not given up. "However long this thing's going to drag out, I'll be there," she said. Between the lengthy and exhausting proceedings of the current hearings inquest into Robert's death, she still finds the energy to speak to groups.

"There has to be change. Too many people are dying. Too many prisoners are committing suicide. Too many things are wrong with the system. It's our duty to make sure that [guilty parties] are held accountable," she said. The Rubin Carters, David Milgaards and Robert Gentles of the last quarter-century reinforce Gentles' words.

Gentles urged people to attend the public inquest hearings held every Monday through Friday from 9:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the Frontenac County Courthouse.

Carmeta Gentles spoke in the Music Listening Room about the Canadian justice system.

PHOTO BY KEN BUTLAND

"His sentence was not a death sentence."

— Speaker Carmeta Gentles

Revised election rules considered Unforeseen 'grey areas' force re-evaluation of campaign restrictions

BY RENEE HUANG

Although this year's AMS executive elections faced more restrictions, concentrated efforts were made to increase voter awareness and election profile through innovative campaigning strategies and an initiative by the Deputy Commissioners Council.

Tighter election rules this year included prohibiting team posters and banners from the traditionally partisan student housing area. "Last year there was a problem with it. There were banners being taken down, not to mention it's against city by-law," said Cathy Brown, chief returning officer in the AMS Internal Affairs Commission.

Electronic campaigning in the form of mass e-mails was also nixed. "One of the teams wanted to do a large chunk of their campaigning over e-mail," said Brown. However, there was no by-law which outlined the rules for electronic campaigning in clear terms. "Nobody had ever really pushed the issues," she continued.

Brown and deputy commissioners Shawn Ahluwalia and Carolyn Otter hope the issues of mass e-mail campaigning will go to a plebiscite question in the spring referendum. "The intricacies of it hadn't been worked out" to allow it for this year's election, Brown said.

Another policy which required clarification revolved around candidates continuing AMS-related jobs during the election period. In both the AMS and ASUS elections, several candidates were required to temporarily resign from their on-campus jobs in to lessen their profile and influence.

Otter pointed out that students who rely on part-time jobs for "food money" should not have to resign from all their employment sources to participate in a campaign.

In the future, she said candidates would likely "[list] everything they're involved in extracurricularly and a decision should be made by the Chief Electoral Officer as to... which positions convey an unfair advantage."

Brown did not believe that restrictions in campaigning freedom affected the

CRO Cathy Brown (left), Deputies Carolyn Otter (centre) and Shawn Ahluwalia (right).

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

through a 'Vote' poster campaign. A total of 500 posters in 10 different styles were posted around campus, encouraging students to exercise their voting rights.

"Deputy Council is supposed to do a project to enhance the AMS," explained Social Issues Deputy Commissioner Lauren Sukerman. "So many people have the response that the AMS doesn't affect them, but I think it really does."

However, voter turnout for the AMS elections was only 24.46 per cent, compared with 28.53 last year.

"I'm disappointed that it wasn't more," Sukerman said, "but I think people did read [the 'Vote' posters]."

"It was pretty poor last year," said Brown of the campaign period. "You'd get three people [to] show up for open forums."

Brown, Otter and Ahluwalia said that problems associated with election rules could not have been anticipated.

"Every year you're going to have someone pull up something that's not clear cut," Brown explained. "There are a lot of grey areas."

Fines for election violations have yet to be calculated and Brown said candidates will be sent written notification at a later date. Teams also had to submit receipts and spending was restricted to $400 for AMS executive candidates.

Since all three AMS executive teams received more than 10 per cent of the vote, they will get a full reimbursement, minus the fines they incurred during campaigning.

All three teams met yesterday afternoon at 1 p.m. to discuss the possibility of fining or disqualifying the newly elected Coman-Mori-Minnis team for excessive spending beyond the given limit.

AMS assembly met last night [Thursday] to discuss other ambiguities in the election rules in an attempt to improve the election process in the future.

— with files from Fiona Stevenson

Reaction from other teams subdued

Continued from page 1

paign means that it served to give the CMM team an advantage, slight as it might be... I rule that a significant part of the cost of the cellular phone is a campaign expense... This puts the CMM team at least forty dollars over their campaign allowance."

According to AMS Policy, any team who exceeds the expense limit will be disqualified.

"In a situation where an election is over, I see no other option but to disqualify the CMM team. As such, if this ruling holds, they will not take office as the next executive of the Alma Mater Society," MacDonald's ruling reads.

MacDonald emphasized in his ruling, and to AMS Assembly last night, that he will argue to the Judicial Committee that they should overrule his disqualification, and instead issue a hefty fine.

In a statement to The Journal, written before the ruling, the CMM team argued that "Graham's personal use of a cellular phone was clearly not an influence on the electorate. The phone was never used in any manner to publicise or promote anyone's candidacy in any election."

The team stated that "the phone was not acquired for the purpose of campaigning or organizing a campaign; it was acquired to allow Graham to remain in contact with his numerous friends and obligations."

The CMM team refused to comment to The Journal on the ruling.

Reaction from members of the other candidate teams was subdued. "I'm not excited by any means. It just makes me feel uncomfortable," said Susan Henry, Vice-President (Operations) candidate for the CBH team, who captured 37.5 per cent of the vote. "We don't support disqualification by any means... They still won fair and square."

"It's what I expected," said Presidential Candidate Mike Beltzner. "I have made it quite clear both to the CEO and the other party that I was not looking for disqualification... I was hoping that Darren would rule in our favour and his decision would be appealed to the Judicial Committee for a lesser penalty."

Beltzner said he would like to see the CMM team fined and an apology issued to their constituents.

'Lack of trust' fuelled suspension

Continued from page 1

and misjudgment." Armstrong said all four Walkhome day co-ordinators were informed of the suspension by Monday. The remainder of the Walkhome staff were not told until yesterday, when they were contacted by phone.

The payroll discrepancy was found initially after Fam approached Armstrong and Moodie about giving next year's Walkhome assistant manager a pay raise. The assistant manager is now paid a partial salary and a partial wage.

"It's always been a long-standing issue at Walkhome that the assistant manager be paid more," explained Moodie.

Fam said he had proposed changing the remuneration for the position to prevent a situation where the person writing the payroll is also paying themselves.

Armstrong looked through the Walkhome records to research a change in remuneration and found a series of accounting errors. She then approached Gresham about the discrepancies, but was not given any explanation.

Armstrong and Moodie met with Gresham and Fam on Friday, to discuss the accounts. The Walkhome managers offered a reason for the discrepancies which Armstrong said "didn't make sense... we weren't confident with the explanations we were given."

The pair were suspended after the meeting, and Armstrong and Moodie proceeded to meet with individual day co-ordinators to verify the explanations offered by Gresham and Fam.

Armstrong said they did not find any support for the managers' reasoning behind the payroll difference in the day co-ordinators' stories. "It wasn't backed up with anything else we found," she said. "So, based on that we don't have faith in what we were told."

While Fam was fired for his accounting errors, Gresham was suspended because of her part in explaining the blunder.

"If we suspected the same thing of Mark as we did of Jen, they would both be fired," said Armstrong. "Jen did not benefit or gain from the error."

"There's a lack of entire trust in what we were told by Jen," said Armstrong. "It just doesn't seem legitimate."

All parties emphasized that the censure of the managers is in no way reflective of the quality of the service itself. "We hope that this doesn't discourage anyone from using our service," said Gresham. "This will not affect how the service runs... it shouldn't be a general reflection of our staff."

"We certainly don't want the service to suffer as a result of this," said Moodie. "I hope it doesn't damage staff morale."

"Obviously, morale is going to take a hit," said Gresham. "I hope to move on as soon as possible."

Continued from page 1

stoned and beheaded for refusing to submit to the Emperor.

A more contemporary Valentine's tradition is the ritual of giving flowers. While roses are often thought to be a romantic choice, the colour one chooses communicates an important message. Red and white together mean unity, pink represent grace and yellow is symbolic of joy.

As a choice for Valentine's Day, "red roses are still number one," said florist Jeff Deruiter, of Pam's Flower Garden. However, spring flowers with a few roses giving "that just picked garden look," are gaining popularity, he said.

Valentine's Day can become an expensive affair. Kingston prices for a dozen long stem roses on Valentine's Day range anywhere from $69.95 to $89.95. Dinner for two, with a bottle of wine, is estimated by the staff at both Casa Domenico and Minos as being approximately $75.

More economical choices for a romantic evening can be found with a little ingenuity. Chinese take-out for two from a local restaurant ranges in price from $15.95 to $16.75, plus tax. A new release video rental costs between $4.25 and $5.28, and a 750 ml bottle of red dinner wine ranges from $8 to $9 dollars.

Derik Burgegrof, of Blockbuster video, lists his top five Valentine's rentals as "Pretty Woman, Fool for your Love, Sleepless in Seattle, When Harry met Sally, and Holiday Inn."

Lynn Baird of Night Owl video said her top romance picks were "The English Patient, Wuthering Heights, A Room with A View, Casablanca, and An Affair to Remember."

Those without a Valentine still have time to get pointers from "The Loveshack's Best Pick-Up Lines" Web site, at www.mediasynergy.com. The site invites you to "follow the world's best lover Enrique's lead," and even rates the success rate of Enrique's lines, which include: "All those curves, and me with no brakes...and 'Can I buy you a drink or do you just want the money?'"

Roses are red

Mark Fam, Arts '99, and Jen Gresham, Arts '99

New MCRC trio shares optimism

By FIONA STEVENSON

The new Main Campus Residence Council Executive, elected last Tuesday evening, wants to increase the feeling of community between Queen's residents and raise the MCRC's profile on campus.

"The MCRC represents a lot of people... most who are first years," said Rick Stratton, newly-elected MCRC President. "We don't want residence just to be a background. We want it to be a more important part of what they see."

The team of Stratton, Kirstin

Dane, Vice-President (Discipline), and Mirna Ajanovic, Vice-President (Operations), captured 504 of 1,267 votes in the election.

The trio expressed optimism about the upcoming year and has already set a number of goals.

"We want to have more consistency across the board when it comes to rules and safety and security issues," explained Dane, a second-year Con-Ed student and Vice-President of Morris Hall.

Ajanovic mentioned having VCRs in all residence common rooms and expanding the Res Video program as priorities. The Res Video program allows residents to borrow videos from the Victoria Hall front desk for free.

"We want to expand it to other front desks," said Ajanovic, a third-year electrical engineering student and President of Adelaide-Ban Righ Hall.

Accessibility is also a key issue for the team. "We want for next year's residents to feel that we're approachable... and in tune with the residents' wants and needs," said Stratton, a second-year Spanish/computer science student and President of Leonard Hall West.

Stratton said he is looking forward to the challenges involved with working in Queen's residences. "We certainly have a unique system, especially with our student-run discipline," said Stratton. "It sets us apart from other universities in a good way."

Two other teams ran in the election. The team of Mohammed Heriba, Sinead Aikin and Firas Barikhi came in second place, capturing 477 votes. The team of Daniel Sahl, Aadil Mamuji and Julie Shaw received 286 votes.

DOES IT WORK FOR YOU?

The Queen's Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy is being reviewed. Now's the time to forward your suggestions on how it can be improved.

Write: Senate Office
B400 Mackintosh Corry
Email: hrighits@post.queensu.ca
Call: 533-6886

Deadline: March 5, 1999

LSAT
MCAT
GMAT

www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.

LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
MCAT - Start in June, July, August
GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

Faculty election results

Arts and Science Undergraduate Society

President: David Contant
VP: Erin O'Keefe

Engineering Society

President: Scott Afleck
Senator: Behn Conroy

VP Finance: Tyler Nicholls

VP Information: Phillip Steunke

VP Services: Jeremy Gaudet

VP Student Development: Victoria Cteighton

Commerce Society

President: Erin Young

Vice-President (Internal): Carrie Truman

Vice-President (External): Barry Woolcott

BEWS Snick: Ryan Couvrette

WJC Snick: Lauren Dmytrenko

1 year Senator: Chris McGinnis

'00 AMS Rep: Helen McEvoy

'01 AMS Rep: Calvin Tam

Con-Ed Students Association

President: Stephanie Dunn

Vice-President (Internal): Jill Cuttle

Vice-President (External): Jenn Dallas

Executive Administrator: Dianne Burgess

Treasurer: Andrea Kelly

Social Affairs Commissioners: Helen Hoang and Kathleen Wright

CESA reps to the AMS: Krista Koektssek and Megan Conway

Academics Commissioners: Tessa Hanmore and Kim Baldwin

'00 Rep: Rochelle Combden

'01 Reps: Helena Whittington and Rob Wandell

'02 Reps: Elizabeth Bird and Paula Dunn

WJC Snicks: Sarah Connell and Shannon Lavalley

BEWS Snicks: Ryan Heath and Drew Freeman

Student Senator: Scott Courtice

Law Students' Society

President: Ian Brisbin

Vice-President: Andrea Hill

Treasurer: Steve Portelli

Secretary: Anthony Fawcett

SGPS Rep: Andrew Fitzpatrick

SGPS Rep: Kerri Fisher

Social Chair: Sara Edwards

Joint Program Students Rep: Daniel Wong

Law '00 Permanent President: Chris Ellis

Law '00 President: Margherita Braccio

Law '01 President: Tim Kushneryk

Rehabilitation Therapy Society

President: Angela Paylor

Vice-President (Internal): Allison McGee

Vice-President (External): Bice Amoroso

Treasurer: Kim Neil

Secretary: Allison Fennell

Nursing Students' Society

Results unavailable at time of printing.

the password is:
Open Bar!

Arts and Science Formal

March 6, 1999

Tickets: $65 at UBS,
JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core

For information, including information on ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core
183 University, 533-6000 x 75085

CORRECTIONS

In the previous issue of The Journal in the Arts & Entertainment section, Paula Schultz's name was spelled incorrectly.

A photo in the Sports & Fitness section was not attributed. The photo was taken by Mike McDermend. The badminton team finished fourth after qualifying for OUA finals.

An article about Queen's Day care in the News section contained two errors. The fees per child per day range from $28.50 to $38.50; 85 per cent of spaces are reserved for Queen's students, staff and faculty.

The Journal regrets the errors.

The Sexual Health Resource Centre's

Annual Valentines Day Sidewalk Sale

Buy a truly unique gift for someone you know, or don't know!! Available in the JDUC and Mac-Corry

Today Only!! Don't miss out!

Dover's

MEN'S WEAR

IS THE OFFICIAL SUPPLIER OF MEN'S FORMAL WEAR FOR THE 99' ARTS AND SCIENCE FORMAL

BOOK BEFORE FEBRUARY 28TH TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF OUR TEN DOLLAR STUDENT DISCOUNT

DOVER'S MEN'S WEAR 155 PRINCESS ST. 544-6864

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

No plan complete without a smile

WHAT DID THE CORMAN-Mori-Minns team know that the rest of us didn't? Not even the pundits on The Journal's editorial board were confident enough to predict the winner of this election, but Corman et al. were unfazed by their win. In fact, they seemed disappointed that they didn't win by a Tom Stanley-esque landslide margin.

Owen Minn's lack of enthusiasm can be forgiven — after seven years of AMS elections one should be blasé about the whole affair. No one, however, should feel they are entitled to win an AMS election. This response reflects a disturbing attitude that plagued the CMM campaign and could hinder their success in office. An AMS executive must inspire and lead the hundreds of students who make up the backbone of volunteer government at Queen's. If Corman-Mori-Minns cannot overcome their arrogance, the AMS will not be a very fun place to work or volunteer next year.

If Corman-Mori-Minns cannot overcome their arrogance, the AMS will not be a very fun place to work or volunteer next year.

Next year will, however, be a year of much change if the new executive is able to implement the policies outlined in its campaign platform. Reducing the student activity fee is a good start to lowering the cost of education at Queen's. Other ideas, including changes to Walkhome, an expanded Skylight Lounge and a speciality coffee shop in the JDUC and much more, will keep this executive busy in the year ahead.

By setting out specific plans to improve the AMS in their campaign material, CMM proved that if you think big, students will respond on voting day. While the new executive should be congratulated for thinking big, the real test is in carrying out all those plans.

Despite some reservations, the new AMS executive has the experience and the right plans to make significant improvements to the quality of student life at Queen's.

Students may have responded to the Corman-Mori-Minns platform, but they did not do so in great number. The 24.5 per cent voter turnout meant that even fewer students voted than last year. This low turnout, however, is hardly surprising considering the lack of enthusiasm that this election generated on campus. Few students seemed to notice the campaigns (you could say more than 75 per cent failed to notice) and the candidates themselves seemed to be on auto-pilot for most of the election period. Unlike last year, the issue of rising tuition was largely ignored by all three teams and nobody seemed to care. Despite the growing evidence that students are really feeling the increased cost of education, the issue of tuition seems to have been taken off the agenda for this election. Perhaps this explains why so few students took the time to vote this year.

Despite some reservations, the new AMS executive has the experience and the right plans to make significant improvements to the quality of student life at Queen's. They must now prove that their big plans will result in actual changes to the status quo.

Before they begin the task of improving AMS services, however, they should realize that service is best served with a smile.

Anybody that wants the presidency so much that he'll spend two years organizing and campaigning for it is not to be trusted with the office.

— David Broder

Election

for the position of Editor-in-chief of the 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal

The candidates

Mark Fucella
Sarah Crosbie

Voting

This Sunday (1-7 p.m.)
Monday (8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m.)
272 Earl St. ID required

Voters List

Voting will take place at the Journal house, 272 Earl Street
Sunday, February 14 (1 - 7 p.m.)
Monday, February 15 (8:30 a.m. - 5 p.m.)
Student ID is required

If your name is not on this list and you have made 4 or more contributions to The Journal this year, please contact Keith Gerein at 533-2800.

- |                    |                   |                   |                     |
|--------------------|-------------------|-------------------|---------------------|
| Cimi Achiam        | Greg Dole         | Alex Kronby       | Nathan Sager        |
| Suzanne Armstrong  | Nicholas Du Puy   | Jocelyn Laporte   | Andria Sallee       |
| Geoff Ashenburt    | Lianne Elliot     | Sarah Le May      | Mark Salvador       |
| Galisedo Bae       | Liz Frogley       | Kristian Li       | Fiona Scannell      |
| Jesse Bellringer   | Mark Fucella      | Julietta Loeffler | Eli Schuster        |
| Crystal Bona       | Annie Ge          | Marco Lui         | Karen Simpson       |
| John Bowman        | Kristen Glazer    | Robert MacNeil    | Nick Sinclair       |
| Robin Brebner      | Chris Glover      | Mandy Marriott    | Sean Springer       |
| Shawn Brimley      | Tania Haas        | Laura MacInnis    | Rebecca Stetler     |
| Kari Brimble       | Chad Heard        | Bob McGill        | Fiona Stevenson     |
| Maggie Bohajczyk   | Paul Heisler      | Shandley McMurray | James Terjanian     |
| Ken Butland        | Alan Hesketch     | Jackie McLachlan  | Laura Thackeray     |
| Stephanie Carvin   | Sue Holland       | Owen Minns        | Craig Thomas        |
| Janice Chan        | Chris Holmes      | Erik Missio       | Mike Tiffin         |
| Jeff Child         | Renee Huang       | Gord Moodie       | Jonathan Tinney     |
| Cheryl Cheung      | Bob Huish         | Eric Morris       | Dimitrios Totos     |
| Hilary Clark       | Todd Jackson      | Jennifer Morrison | Rachelle Villanueva |
| Andrew Cooke       | Angela James      | Stefan Murray     | Adria Vukusic       |
| Katherine Colbourn | Simon Kalcchstein | Luke Mylyaganam   | Jim Whittington     |
| Sarah Crosbie      | Adam Kaminsky     | Anna Nesbitt      | Virginia Wigmore    |
| Rob DeBellefeuille | Lillian Kim       | Hil Offenberg     | D.E. Windell        |
| Rajcey Dave        | Claudia Kraft     | Sean Richmond     | Mark Woolford       |
|                    | Jon Krashinsky    | Dan Rowe          | Samson Wu           |

EDITORIAL BOARD

- |   |   |   |   |
|---|---|---|---|
| EDITORS-IN-CHIEFKeith GereinTara Mansbridge                       | EDITORIAL PAGE EDITORPaul Heisler                 | SPORTS & FITNESS EDITORAdam Kaminsky            | TECHNICAL EDITOR AND CONSULTANTJohn Bowman        |
| MANAGING EDITORLaura MacInnis   | ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITORStefan Murray          | ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITORRobert MacNeil | PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORSAlex KronbyJames Terjanian |
| NEWS EDITORFiona Stevenson  | ASSISTANT ABE EDITORSSarah CrosbieLillian Kim | MISC. EDITORKen Butland                         | WEB EDITORMarco Lui                               |
| ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORSShawn BrimleyRenee HuangJocelyn Laporte | FEATURES EDITORSean Springer                      | GRAPHICS EDITORJanice Chan                      | THE READER EDITORJesse Craig Bellringer           |
|   | OPINIONS EDITORDan Rowe                           |   |   |

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Hilary Clark, Melissa Farmer, Adam Davidson Harden, Sarah LeMay, Julietta Loeffler, Jackie McLachlan, Jennifer Paterson, Nease Sager, Eli Schuster, Kathy Skelton, Virginia Wigmore.

Photographers: Bob Hush.

BUSINESS STAFF

- |                                   |  |                                     |  |
|-----------------------------------|--|-------------------------------------|--|
| BUSINESS MANAGERClaudia Kraft | SALES REPRESENTATIVESSuzanne ArmstrongAndrew Cooke | ADVERTISING MANAGERMark Fucella | ADVERTISING DESIGNERSKatherine ColbournAnnie GeRachelle Villanueva |
|                                   |  |                                     | SYSTEMS MANAGERCraig Thomas  |

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, February 12, 1999 • Issue 32 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further advertising policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 3N8. Telephone—editors: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca Circulation 9,000 Issue 33 will be published on Tuesday, February 16, 1999

OPINIONS

Asking deep questions

IT'S ALWAYS INTERESTING TO CATCH oneself making assumptions about issues. A fact of any important matter seems to be that questions inevitably underlay questions, making elusive and unreliable that comfortable one-dimensionality we all prefer in our news, in our opinions.

However, if critical thought exists after all it's to help us with these things... What is a tuition increase, really? Or what is one student organization's complacency with an increase, in comparison to another's railing against it? Are medical students in front of the Legislature causing a disturbance, or are they saying something? If so, what, exactly?

The kind of leaders I put trust in are the kind of people who address the questions beneath questions, who aren't satisfied with a one-dimensional answer.

The kind of leaders I put trust in, whether at the university level or at higher levels, are the kind of people who address the questions beneath questions, who aren't satisfied with a one-dimensional answer to a complex and thought-demanding situation. An informed decision is always the best decision — where we can see the values or opinions involved in an issue, weigh them, and decide which to choose in a conflict. Accessible health care versus financial stability, accessible post-secondary education versus reliable, increased university revenues, whether one issue or the other, every question begs resolution in terms of values and beliefs about the type of society each of us as thinking individuals and groups of individuals want to live in.

I caught myself simplifying an issue of great importance to me just lately in terms of values and beliefs. This was the Robin Sharpe affair and the child-pornography legislation debacle, which continues as I write. At first I found myself agreeing with Sharpe's notion of rights while being repulsed by his practices through an instinctual revulsion at his lifestyle and preferences. Taking this approach, however, I found myself overlooking the real and potential victims of this man's sort of sexual ideology.

Taking in Sharpe's open reference to an affinity for trips to the Philippines in pursuit of sexual pleasures in The Globe and Mail, the issues started to merge in my mind, and I realize why I am disgusted with his position. The child-prostitution industry, fuelled by the forced, whether direct or socio-economic, sexual labour of children — is the classical model of economics' answer of supply for people like Mr. Sharpe's demand.

I openly admit that it revolts me to know that such child-prostitution rings exist — and not just for boys, which some may unjustly find particularly offensive, but of course for girls. Whether we look to the comfort women of the second world war experience under army conscription for sexual service, or to Thailand or the Philippines, where women's groups in safehouses struggle to combat the disgusting sexual exploitation of children.

The child-prostitution industry, fuelled by the forced, whether direct or socio-economic, sexual labour of children, is the classical model of economics' answer of supply for people like Mr. Sharpe's demand.

Why is it implausible to conceive that disgusting things like this happen closer to home, though out of public view? I feel I have found the values and ideas underlying the issues for myself on the Sharpe affair. As the collective expression of the moral convictions of the people of Canada, it remains to be seen what law is discarded or upheld, and what values are eventually reflected — or what questions remain to be answered with regard to values.

ADAM DAVIDSON HARDEN

talking

HEADS

Who is your AMS dream team?

"Julius Caesar, Winston Churchill, and Nobel"

Holly Lay
Sci '02

"Stalin, Hitler, and Pol Pot"

Andrew Haslip
Artsci '02

"Mon Mothma, Bruce Wayne, and Prince Charming"

Jennifer Scott
Sci '02

"Richard III, Hamlet, and Lady MacBeth"

Jamie Serran
Artsci '01

Michelle Lawrie
Artsci '00

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

Letters to the Editors

Editor-in-chief is perverted

Dear Editors,

I was really shocked at what I read in Tara Mansbridge's editorial in Tuesday's Journal. It is not natural to fulfill your sexual longings with inanimate objects, no matter what she may think. I am thoroughly disgusted with the perversion that makes a person think this is okay. Sex should be part of a loving relationship, and a vibrator is a very poor substitute.

Sex is not a physical need, it is a desire that can be controlled like any other. Maybe, in future, editorial columnists could keep their sexual practices private.

Jan Evans
Artsci '02

QP criticism

Dear Editors,

Take away the suggestion boxes! Eliminate all questionnaires! The QP is officially closed to any constructive criticism. A pub run with student money for the student body, should hear student voices! Not only does the QP management refuse to listen to any suggestions for improvement, they shake the entire foundation of good government leaders by their overly dramatic tongue-lashing of AMS candidates, Corman, Mori, and Minns. We were dismayed by the letter from the QP management that appeared in last Friday's Journal.

In federal elections, government employees are required to remain officially and publicly neutral. Shouldn't it work the same way with our student government? Even more disgusting, offensive, insulting and unwarranted (to use official QP editorial lingo) was the blatant promotion of a QP employee who just happens to be an AMS candidate on a different team. How cheesy, QP!

Molly Donohue, Janna Regina and Catharine Walsh
Artsci '00

More QP criticism

Dear Editors,

I've been to the Queen's Pub many times this year. I've enjoyed the new lunch menu and the broader draft selection — I've also been forced to wait 40 minutes for service, at a time when the pub was half-empty. I have even spoken with the staff and Jane Lee, an Assistant Manager, about this issue. Other people have had similarly poor service experiences at the pub.

In a recent letter to the editors of The Journal, the pub's management demonstrated their blindness to the concerns of their own patrons. This is proof that something is wrong and that change is required. It's also proof that we cannot expect change to come from within the pub. It may be true that the pub's kitchen needs further development, but what patrons are directly concerned with is the quality of their experience in the pub, not the size of its facilities.

Despite an attractive physical enlargement and improvements to its offerings, the pub has failed to meet my expectations. Financial success is not the only kind of performance I expect from a pub — I also expect good service.

The management of the pub has done some commendable pioneering work, but they should not be oblivious to the need for further improvements to service quality.

Ryan Graham
Sci '00, Artsci '01

ASUS election team goes too far

Dear Editors,

On Friday, February 5, the Arts and Science Undergraduate Society elections team of Carol Liao, Kate Slater, Adrien Viens and Alun Ackeray made an error in judgement. Two members of OC '98, Chris Safford and Shannon Bell were prevented from attending a private informal transition party. Chris and Shannon are also running for ASUS executive and the elections team charged that this would provide them with an unfair advantage over the other teams.

First, the very charge of partisanship was brought forth by one of the other

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Continued on page 9

Rotten food bank advertising

A critical look at who the food bank's advertising is attracting

ON THE COVER OF THE TUESDAY, February 2 edition of The Journal, the headline screamed "food bank busier than ever." Let us now take a moment to ponder why this might be. Could it have anything to do with the food bank's enticing new advertising campaign?

"How do you cut your grocery bill in HALF?" Maggie asks Steve.

"Why I shop at the food bank, like every other financial stable student that drank all their grocery money away last night, and today has decided to 'drop by [the food bank], and shop for free."

And why not? The AMS food bank has successfully tripled its number of users since September by basically saying that you do not have to be in financial need to use their service. Alison Loat seemed cheerful that this AMS service was finally getting the use it had expected, opening its doors in September of 1997, but does she question where all these new users are coming from? Eric Morris, the AMS food bank co-ordinator, stated that the food bank is getting "close to 10 new people a week," which he attributed to the increasing knowledge of the food bank's existence.

I, on the other hand, attribute this growth in food bank use to their advertising that anyone, rich or poor, can use this service. This tactic eliminates the prior reservations that financially stable students may have had about using this service, and tells students that it is okay to shop at the food bank, even if you already have enough money to put food on the table.

I gave a food donation, thinking that it was important to try and help others, especially in a university where many are struggling just to pay the price of higher learning. knowledge.

Please do not get me wrong, I think the food bank is an important service for students attending university, where the tuition alone has the ability to tender you in severe financial debt; however, I do have a problem with the food bank collecting AMS fees, and donations from students such as myself, and giving this food out to people that could, very well, be better off than I am.

Here I am, a Queen's student with a part-time job to help ensure a relative amount of financial security, being solicited at my door last year for the new AMS food bank. I gave a food donation, thinking that it was important to try and help others less fortunate than myself, especially in a university setting where many are struggling just to pay the price of higher learning, and do not have the means to feed their brains with nourishment along with knowledge.

However, this year I was appalled to see multiple advertisements in The Journal stating that anyone could shop for free. I was even further disturbed to overhear some Queen's students, after a heavy night of drinking, saying that they were going to start shopping at the food bank. Why should poor financial planners be rewarded?

Who is to say that the current users of the AMS food bank are not in dire financial need? Not I, because I know that there are a lot of legitimate users. All I say is that I see a strong correlation between the food bank's new 'sketchy' advertising campaign - pointing out that Journal advertisements are far from free - and this increase in food bank use. Students that needed this service used it before the expensive advertisements came out, and continue to use it now. The AMS does not have to prove to Queen's students that their creation of this new service was important, by canvassing anywhere for more, more users.

Students should have to show financial need, at which point I will be more inclined to give donations, and to think highly of a service that so obviously started with such high moral expectations, but as of recently, has suffered from disturbing management and advertising practices.

KATHY SKELTON
ARTSCI '00

general asian addressing asian business
raising asian awareness
promoting asian relations

ASIAN CONFERENCE '99
February 19-20, 1999
Queen's University, Kingston

Keynote Speakers and Workshops featuring

Dr. Michael Hawes (Professor of Politics, Queen's University)	Calvin Wong (Co-Founder of AsianAvenue.com)
Lorna Wlight (Canada Relations, Queen's University)	Eliot Chang (Independent Entrepreneur, NYC)
Shirley Wong (Consultant, HK Economic & Trade Council)	Vivian Li (Calgary Anchor Person)
Dr. Audrey Kobayashi (Director of Women's Studies, Queen's University)

Sponsored by

For more info, email 65t11@qmlink.queensu.ca or check www.ams.queensu.ca/qseac/conference.htm AsianAvenue.com

save your money
take the tricolour express

Toronto	$23
Ottawa	$18
Montreal	$25
Mississauga	$27
Oakville	$27
Hamilton	$30
Burlington	$30
Kitchener	$35
London	$40

exchange
CC, AT&T, Am, Sun, West, New, & East

Tickets guaranteed until noon the day before departure • Tickets and schedules available at the US Exchange • 9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Sat. • Beside the Skyline Lounge in the Upper JDUC
For more information call 533-2120 *one-way fares

More Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 7

candidates and was politically motivated. The accusation was brought up on the day of the gathering, this despite the fact that they had plenty of time beforehand to make their case. In the hearing to determine whether or not the team could attend, the other candidates were present, although they had nothing to contribute except malicious remarks.

Secondly, we believe that the election team did not have the authority to make this decision under ASUS policy. ASUS policy states that candidates must resign from all positions they hold (section C-1, e, ii). In the case of Orientation Committee members from OC '98, their term ended in September 1998. The election team has thus overstepped its jurisdiction by imposing a decision on individuals to whom the policy no longer applies.

Unfortunately, due to the ASUS election team decision, Mr. Safford and Ms. Bell missed a unique opportunity to relieve moments from Orientation Week 1998. We believe that the decision of the election team is unfair and that Mr. Safford and Ms. Bell were wronged. It is our hope that this injustice will not go unnoticed and that the ASUS election team will clean up its act in the future.

Celine Cooper, Paul Karanicolas, Danielle Brodhagen, Matthew Segal, Vincent Ballenas, Jascha Jabes, Emelyn Bartlett, Ian Dwell, Kyle Armagon, Steven Burmaster, Vitra Ramsingh, Michael Cox, Andrea Sharkey, Kathy Harger, John Mifill, Kevin Deonarine, Kendra Newell, David McQueen, Nicole Mara, Selina Liu, Julia Mittler, John Brodhead
ASUS Orientation Committee '98

The ongoing abortion debate

Dear Editors,

In the Feb. 2 issue of The Journal, Gabriel Desjardins quotes Allan Levine as saying, "the Jews and only the Jews of Europe were victims of a systematic annihilation that the world had not seen before then or since."

Perhaps Gabriel Desjardins is forgetting about the systematic annihilation of female unborn babies that has been occurring in China. Even in North America, one quarter of all pregnancies end in deliberate abortion.

Perhaps if one assumes that only postnatals are persons, one can justify Allan Levine's quotation. But there is no basis for this assumption.

If you grow vegetables, you may forget what you planted. So you may wait until you can see it above ground to decide what kind of plant it is. But to suggest that it only became that kind of plant once you can see it above ground is extremely narrow-minded. Or perhaps you need to wait until the vegetables themselves before you are capable of knowing what kind of plant it is. But that doesn't mean it only becomes that particular type of plant when you can recognize it. Thus, one needs to do no more than see what it will grow into as long as it lives long enough in order to decide what it was before you could see it. Younger does not imply less valuable.

As long as it lives long enough, a fetus will develop into a full-grown human being. Note that this is not true of a sperm or an egg. No matter how long a sperm lives, it will not become a full-grown human being unless a fundamental change (namely conception) first takes place. You were never a sperm or an egg, but once the sperm and the egg joined, and conception occurred, you became you.

Let's take another example. Suppose human cloning one day becomes possible. This means that we can take a cell off of our bodies and make it develop as a human being. How exactly is this done? It is not the genetics of the cell that changes, but rather the electrical nature of the cell that changes. Currently, each of our cells has a specific function in our body, and it is the electrical nature of that cell that tells it what to do. If the electrical nature of that cell could be "tricked" into thinking it is supposed to grow and develop as a human being. Once that fundamental change takes place, it becomes true that as long as it lives long enough, it will develop into a full-grown human being. Note that it is not the fact that there is a difference between the cells that makes one less valuable, but rather what that change implies.

I will give the same challenge I give all pro-choice supporters: find a single difference between all prenatals and all postnatals that devalues prenatals.

I cannot imagine pro-choice supporters truly believing their claim that a fetus is not a person any more than most Nazi Germans believed their claim that a Jew is not a person.

I can only assume that Mr. Desjardins would hesitate to tell abortion survivors how trivial he thinks what happened to them is.

Sindi Sabourin
PhD

The fine-al frontier

Dear Editors,

In regards to the recent debate about a $15 charge for those who forget their student cards

when writing exams, I wish to respond.

Mr. Dos Santos may think he is Mr. Spock, spouting all of his logic. But unless Mr. Santos failed Vulcan 101, I am sure he is familiar with simple economics and the concept of 'opportunity cost'. Mr. Kealy is correct when he says charging $15 will reduce the number of 'forgetful' exam writers. To what extent, one can only guess; however, reducing the number of students without ID will enable Queen's administration to focus on those who have. With over 900 persons forgetting their student cards this past exam period, it is not 'logical' to expect that the real cheaters can be caught. If that number is reduced to 200, and by possibly instating Mr. McCarthy's Polaroid idea, faith in the system could very well be restored.

Mr. Santos' preaching of logic is deliberately slanted to publicize a possible revenue source or 'cash grab' by the University. I ask him, 'would you be more satisfied if all proceeds were sent to the local food bank?'

Don't be stupid Mr. Santos. Logic clearly shows this method to be more effective than the current one. I invite you to come up with a better plan, but if you have nothing better to do than attack my (or Mr. Kealy's) logic, don't waste our valuable trees.

John Shipman
Comm '99

HIRING
HEAD MANAGER
Proposals due March 1st
12:00pm

ASSISTANT MANAGERS
ENTERTAINMENT
BAR BUSINESS
Proposals due March 3rd
12:00pm

Questions: 533-6175

FREE MONEY

Applications for the AMS Board of Directors' Special Projects Grants are due by Thursday, February 18 at NOON.

For project criteria go to the AMS front desk in the lower JDUC or call Alison Loat at 545-2729

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

SCIENCE

Leeches suck

Second of two articles on putrid, but promising, medicine

By JENNIFER PATERSON

I HAVE STUBBORNLY REFUSED TO SWIM in my Grandpa's pond for the past five years, ever since "The Leech Incident." After my brother tramped out of the murky water with a great big leech suctioned to his thigh, I vowed it would never happen to me, and I have since thought up every excuse in the book not to swim in the infested pond. I suppose that I may have overreacted a touch.

My brother didn't die, he wasn't scarred for life, and, in fact, he said it didn't even hurt. Most people who have ever been bitten by a leech agree, and now scientists are backing them up, leech bites don't hurt because their saliva contains an anaesthetic.

Leeches didn't evolve the ability to synthesize this anaesthetic for your own personal comfort, however; they did it so that they could suck your blood without your knowing. Leeches are able to synthesize many compounds other than anaesthetic to facilitate the slurping of your life-blood, and some of these may prove to be quite useful and profitable in the near future.

Let's start at the beginning. Humans have known that leeches may have the potential to overcome their parasitic status for a long time. Ancient Egyptian murals depicting leech therapy date back thousands of years, and since then, the medicinal use of leeches has been widespread.

"Clots are like getting a hairball in the sink, the leech is like Drano."

In the 18th and 19th centuries, leeches were employed as a treatment because they were thought to remove the "bad blood," while leaving the good. "Bad blood" was often believed to cause fevers, headaches, coughs, rheumatism and many other afflictions, so leech therapy was very common. Some doctors considered leech therapy to be a universal treatment, and administered the small black worms to every patient they had, regardless of specific illnesses. In fact, leech therapy became so common during this time period, that one species of leech was almost eradicated from Europe because it was harvested so relentlessly.

The advent of more modern medicine in the late 19th century brought a demand for some sort of standard in clinical diagnosis and treatment. The microbial basis for disease replaced the bad blood theory, and leech therapy was relegated to "quack" status.

Modern medicine is notoriously fickle, however. Science is currently reviving the medicinal use of the leech as fast as it had previously debunked it. The present rejuvenation of the leech stems from what has been known for centuries: leeches promote blood flow — into their guts, of course.

Ever notice how fast a paper cut stops bleeding? That's because the injury signals special proteins and factors in your blood to gather at the site of damage and clog up the wound, forming a clot. This kind of clotting is beneficial. Without it we would bleed to death from minor injuries, but other kinds of clots can cause serious damage. Some heart attacks are caused by unwanted clotting in the arteries leading to your heart. Some strokes are caused by clotting in the arteries that supply oxygen to your brain. Clotting over the stump of an amputated digit inhibits its reattachment.

If leeches promote blood flow by preventing clots, then can we somehow use their expertise in dealing with the many situations of unwanted clotting? So far, the answer is yes. As Dr. James Nappi put it in The Columbus Dispatch, "Clots are like getting a hairball in the sink, the leech is like Drano."

There are some problems with this theory, however. It is quite convenient to surround a reattached finger with a few leeches to increase blood flow, but how would you do this safely and quickly to the major arteries inside your chest? It turns out that you don't actually need the leech to prevent clotting. You just need the important parts in its saliva.

In recent years, one of the leech anti-clotting proteins, hirudin, was isolated and its amino acid sequence decoded. Synthetic variations of the original hirudin, are currently being manufactured through recombinant DNA technology and tested in clinical trials.

There is no question that leech proteins work, but are they better and cheaper than the clot-busting drugs already out there? This question has yet to be answered, but several large pharmaceutical companies are betting on the leeches.

Because of this new information, I kind of feel bad about how I used to treat leeches. They never hurt anyone. All they want is a little bit of your blood, and you do have enough to spare. They even give you some home-made anaesthetic to make the transfusion as painless as possible. This doesn't mean that I'll swim joyously alongside the leeches practising my synchronized swimming, but I do at least promise to let them live in peace.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Eros less impressive up close*

When the Near Earth Asteroid Rendezvous (NEAR) satellite made its closest approach to the asteroid Eros in December, the findings from its 222 photos and other readings weren't exactly what scientists were expecting. For one thing, Eros is smaller than expected from measurements taken from here on Earth. The asteroid is 33 by 13 by 13 kilometres, while ground-based radar estimated it to be 40.5 by 14.5 by 14 kilometres. By observing variations in light reflected off of its surface, researchers were able to determine its rate of rotation — once every 5½ hours — and to discern several surface features, including a ridge running along the asteroid's length and two large craters. When NEAR and Eros meet again in February of next year, the satellite will enter into orbit of the asteroid for a one-year survey mission.

Small packages

The Web may be growing in leaps and bounds, but the machines that it runs on are shrinking dramatically. The computer in the picture above has a 486-66 megahertz processor, 16 megabytes of RAM and 16 megabytes of ROM and is connected to the Internet by a parallel port. Yes, that is the world's smallest web server, barely 6 cm long. You can find the above picture, as well as a detailed description of how you can build your own server just like it using off-the-shelf components, at <http://wearables.stanford.edu>, a Web site that runs off this little wonder.

Next generation semiconductors

With the advent of utility deregulation, the current system of switches and relays will not be adequate for all the switching back and forth that will be going on. The solution? Engineers at the University of Florida have designed a semiconductor transistor that can switch electricity smoothly and without the "spikes" in power associated with large mechanical switches. The new design, using gallium nitride, can sustain higher voltages and temperatures than conventional transistors made of silicon.

(*Yes, I am a bitter single. What of it?)

FEATURES

A lesson in romance

FROM TARA MANSBRIDGE

I HAVE AN ADMISSION TO MAKE. I am a 100 per cent, set-in-stone romantic, and I have been ever since I first learned that Barbie and Ken weren't brother and sister. It may be cheesy, it may be unpopular, but it's the way I am, and I think that my life has been enriched by my belief in romance. Some people call me high-maintenance for that reason, but I just call them lazy.

You don't have to be as die-hard a romantic as I am, but there is no excuse for not having even a little romance in your life, even if you're single, even if you're the least emotional person on the face of the planet. Romance, in its essence, is about caring for the people around you, and being sensitive to their needs and wants.

WITH Valentine's Day approaching, a lot of people are wracking their brains for how to have a romantic evening with their partners, or they're wondering how long they have to hide out until the silly schmoozy stuff is over. Romance is an important factor in this over-commercialized, over-blown holiday (and no, just because I'm a romantic, doesn't mean I support it), but before you go rushing off to find the perfect pre-fab bit of sentiment, you should learn some of the more important rules of the road to romance.

FIRST of all, romance is a state of mind. If you have the right mindset, cleaning the bathroom together can be romantic. If you have the wrong mindset, a romantic dinner at Chez Piggy can turn into the biggest fight you've ever had. Further, you don't have to be part of a couple to be romantic. Write a note to a friend telling him or her how much you appreciate them. Send your best friend some flowers. Appreciate yourself and your life. Take yourself out for a nice meal, get a massage, buy yourself a CD. You may feel a bit foolish at first, but romance leads to increased self-awareness. When you're on the look-out for things that will make you or your partner feel well-loved, by necessity you will learn more about yourself and the ones you love.

ALSO, remember, there are two types of romance in the language of couplehood: obligatory and optional. Valentine's Day is an obligatory day of romance. If you don't acknowledge it in some way, you're often socially ostracized (either by your partner or by your friends.) The key to this holiday is not to look at it as a day when you're forced to do something nice for someone special, look at it as a day when you can do something nice without people looking for ulterior motives. Since it's obligatory, however, it's important to remember that you're not off the hook if Valentine's Day is the only day when you do something romantic for your partner. Romance on Valentine's Day is expected; romance on the 364 other days of the year is vital.

THE thing is, if you're only being romantic with your partner on Valentine's Day, you have a bit of a problem. Romance is about showing your love and esteem for the other person in your relationship. It's not about doing it because you have to or because your partner expects it. It's about showing that you're in tune to your partner's needs and supporting them in everything they choose to do. That means that romance is about anything: bringing him soup when he's sick, buying her a heating pad to help with cramps when she's having her period, surprising him at the front door wearing nothing, taking her for a romantic walk by the lake.

If you haven't been romantic in the past, make Valentine's Day your starting point. You don't have to go overboard, but keeping the romance in your life requires a conscious effort. Don't despair, though. According to psychologists, it only takes about three weeks to form a habit. If you can do one or two romantic things a week for that long, you'll get into the routine of romance. Not only will this make your partner feel special, just like smiling more, it will improve your quality of life as well.

WHICH leads me to my next point. Most of the students I've talked to about being romantic say something like: "I'd love to be more romantic, but it costs so much money!" My response to this is: Bullshit. Romance can cost as little or as much as you want. Romance is about creating hand-made cards with expressions of love, not about buying the most exotic and expensive gift you can find. Romance is about giving your partner a backrub when he or she needs it, not about paying for an hour-long massage at the local spa.

HERE'S a little exercise for those of you who think that romance costs too much. Take all the money you would regularly spend this week on beer/drinks/junk food, and buy as many flowers with it as you can. For some of you this may require a U-Haul; however, it proves my point. Being romantic doesn't cost a lot and won't break the bank as long as you prioritize it, and that doesn't take anything more than dedication.

ALL in all, romance is about the little things. It sounds rather trite, but if you've read this far you've definitely waded through quite a few clichés already, and I think you can handle it. Having a successful relationship, with your partner and with yourself, is about paying attention to the details.

THIS is not as simple as it first appears. Paying attention means that you communicate openly and honestly. Communicating openly and honestly means that you and your partner truly listen to one another, without rushing to formulate responses before the speaker has finished speaking. It means slowing yourselves down so you can take in the fine nuances of where you are and who you're with. It means a

Continued on page 14

Lame Excuses for Not Being Romantic

(with thanks to G. Godek's 1001 Ways To Be Romantic)

Excuse # 1:
"I don't have time."

Bullshit. You make time for Jeopardy, for studies, for drinking. For goodness sake, you're a student. And if you're not a student, you still have 1,440 minutes in a day that you can spend any way you wish. If neither you nor your partner rank up there with Jeopardy, then you have a problem.

Excuse # 2:
"I forgot."

Well, it happens. Just don't do it again. Doing it again is a sign that you're not dedicated to what you're doing, nor do you find it important. Is that the kind of signal you want to send to your partner? Is that the kind of signal you want sent to you?

Excuse # 3:
"I'm a student! Being romantic costs too much."

Nice try, there, buddy. Money can buy you companionship, attention, sex and status, but as the song goes, it can't buy you love. Romance can cost a fortune, but it doesn't have to. And if your partner only cares about expensive gifts, it's time to find another partner.

Excuse # 4:
"Real Men/Real Women aren't romantic."

Who the fuck says so? Did you read that somewhere? Did your parents tell you? Do you really believe that when you're all by yourself and feeling completely honest with yourself? If Real Men/Real Women aren't romantic, then Real Men/Real Women, in the words of Gregory Godek, are lonely.

Excuse # 5:
"My partner will think I'm lame/stupid/insert derogatory adjective here."

Okay, now we're grasping at straws. When was the last time someone did something nice for you and your first thought was: "Wow, that was stupid."? It just doesn't happen. Any effort is better than no effort at all, no matter how stupid it feels to you. If you don't take risks you'll never live, so get out there and be romantic!

RUB-A-DUB-PUB

1

Kirkpatrick's

Sean Springer is the resident note taker
Arrival time: 7:40

Pub Grub: After insisting that we sit on a set of cushy seats in "Kirkpatrick's," Jocelyn Laporte proves herself quite a boozier as she begins with a large draft of Strongbow. I, with the sense and class of an experienced drinker, order a modest half-pint of Hatp's from an extensive list of beverages. Jocelyn then resorts to such juvenile antics as blurring "wus!" and perpetually mocking my emaciated, ectomorphic physique and youthful spirit (she's 23, I'm 21). In order to absorb the alcohol, we load up on dinner.

The Service: I take notice of the large and muscular waiter, as does Laporte, but I pretend like I could care less. However, my pretense starts stripping away like old paint, and so, as Jocelyn orders the fish and chips, I say coolly, "Hey, can I be your Captain Highliner?" Obviously, I've struck a chord.

The Scene: Kirkpatrick's is dimly lit, relaxing and busy. The only thing missing is conversation so I turn it on with some sly charm and self-effacing charisma. "Do you have any pets?" I say. She replies, "No, I hate pets." "Me neither, I think they suck." Little is said for about 10 minutes — the time it takes the food to arrive (just in time to save a dying dialogue). Later, I prod for more. "Are you left-handed?" "No." Remembering her mockery of my half-pint I serve up another and throw it down my throat. The buzz heightens and with it, so does my self-confidence. My jokes proceed and now they're much funnier — especially my comic impersonations of Journal staffers, most notably Keith Gerein. Laughing so hard that the Strongbow squirts out of her nostrils, she excuses herself. She returns with this message which she claims she took from the bathroom graffiti: "Love comes and goes but herpes lasts forever." I'm not sure what to make of it...

A she said, he said pub review: Mood, service, drinks, lust

Royal Oak

Jocelyn Laporte is the resident note taker
Arrival time: 9:10

Pub Grub: I choose a seat for us in the large bay window in two big green cushy seats. I order a pint of Sleeman's Cream Ale and Sean, trying to prove he can keep up, orders a full pint of Alexander Keith's.

The Service: The service is prompt, and the waitress happily lists which beers they have on tap.

The Scene: The bar is extremely empty. It's quite dark, but it's a nice atmosphere for conversation. It would probably appeal most to a mature crowd. Not surprisingly, Sean seems to dislike it. Sean is babbling about himself so I take the opportunity to scope out the other patrons. There is a couple at a table in the corner appearing enthralled in romantic conversation, and a fat, drooling man at the bar. Sean starts getting very loud and obnoxious in an attempt to impress me with his wit. I think he's coming on to me so I decide to keep ignoring him and hope it will go away. I'm getting bored with Sean's antics so I go to check out the washrooms and find no graffiti on the walls but notice they smell impressively pleasant. There's a pinball machine outside the washrooms which is odd but for some reason seems appropriate here. When I get back to the table Sean has completely finished his beer and is approaching intoxication. As Sean continues his "babe-slayer" routine (this and in-chief Keith Gerein) I contemplate why I agreed to research this article with a man two years younger than me and almost half my size. It's 9:53 and the pub is getting more lively. The lone male at the bar is leering in our direction so we decide to leave for Monte's.

Monte's

Sean Springer is the resident note taker
Arrival time: 10:08

Pub Grub: Ms. Laporte is buzzing like an angry wasp and she barges into Tir Nan Og's smoking room through the doors with the coordination of a four-year-old disoriented from circle-spinning. Space is limited so she plops herself down at the bar. I follow suit. Famous for its martini menu, we make an inquiry with the bartender. He recommends the chocolate decadence and adds, "Be careful, I start to look good after the martini."

The Service: "He's cramping my style," I write in my little notepad as he and Jocelyn have a fine whine over the art of martinis. My presence evaporates into thick cigar smoke, but I pretend like I could care less. Otherwise, the service is just fine.

The Scene: A packed and chaty atmosphere does not inhibit our boisterous cackles. Now this is a sophisticated kind 'a place, so we indulge in some cigars. We decide on a couple of slim meharis and Jocelyn tries to make some sick, sick reference to Clinton.

This is also when certain secrets come out.

3

One of hers, for instance, is that she has a secret infatuation with Conrad Bain (Mr. Drummond from Diff'rent Strokes). Mine (I can't believe I'm admitting this) is that ever since I was six, I have been in love with Charles Bronson — he's so damn hot.

Jocelyn continues with the sexual cigar comments, or maybe it's me, I'm not too sure — the martini packs an inebriating punch. (The notes at this point become slightly illegible.)

Anyway, Laporte and I are feeling somewhat sophisticated in the Monte's smoking room, laying back with our sweet martini while chugging away on some proud stogies. The interior design is most elegant, particularly the stained, wooden walls and bookcase in one corner of the room, which gives a scholarly feel. Both of us later agree that Monte's is by far the most comfortable pub in Kingston to pull the pints. The crowd is mature (I'm easily the youngest there), unimposing and Jocelyn remarks that she fits in rather well. Still, she can't stop hitting on me and frankly, I'm not sure what to make of it... We jet at 11:18 for groggy skies.

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from	$349
Calgary	from	$299
Edmonton	from	$299
Regina	from	$349
Winnipeg	from	$239
Halifax	from	$249
Saint John	from	$329
St. John's	from	$299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston at Montreal
Leisure Travel 549-3553
Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3551

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

In conjunction with
Sylvat Aziz
MAQAMAAT

FORUM

Screening of Who will cast the first stone? by Sabiha Sunar Round table discussion with special guest Dr. Shahnaz Khan
16 February, 7-9:30 pm

Free admission

Joint program with the Ban Righ Foundation and the Department of Religious Studies.

Presented with the financial assistance of the Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario Arts Council and the City of Kingston.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre

238 Baine Street, Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613 533-2190 Fax: 613 533-6765
<http://www.queensu.ca/egcthy/>

Tanning Special

- 10 Sessions
- One Bottle of California Tanning Max Lotion
- 1 pair of Peepers

only $60.00
(reg. $75.00)

SOLO HAIR DESIGN • TANNING SALON
376 Barrie Street • 542-0823

Continued on next page

UP TO
50% off
Columbia Sportswear Company

Winter Parkas
DOWNTOWN KINGSTON
SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 PRINCESS ST.
542-2892

The Brew Pub

Jocelyn Laporte is the resident note taker
Arrival time: 11:17

Pub Grub: We choose a table to sit at and notice that the menu has quite an expansive list of beverage choices. Sean orders a pint of the chili beer, and I order a pint of the apple cider. We also get a snack platter of bread, crackers and veggie sticks with a cream cheese and feta dip.

The Service: The service is prompt and relatively friendly, though the waitress gets progressively annoyed with Sean's obvious intoxication.

The Scene: The pub is packed and quite noisy. The atmosphere is fun and homey, but the wooden tables and chairs aren't the most comfortable. Sean begins a philosophical conversation about his life goals and other date-like garbage. In the midst of our discussion Sean reveals he is extremely confident that he will get me into his bed later that evening and comments on how I will be impressed with both his anatomy and animal-like fervour. I burst his hubbly by insulting him profusely about his lack of maturity, obviously low alcohol tolerance and diminutive body mass. My uncontrollable laughter also seems to offend him and he begins to sulk. Our food arrives and is great. I love the apple cider brew but Sean whines that his beer is too spicy and starts drinking my cider. After running out of veggie sticks I keep eating the dip with my fingers in an attempt to revolt Sean. The tactic proves unsuccessful though, as the sight of me licking dip off my fingers apparently arouses him. I decide I'm too drunk to venture out of my seat and navigate my way to the washrooms for an inspection so we leave and head over to the Wellington.

The Wellington

Sean Springer is the resident note taker
Arrival time: 12:05

Pub Grub: My notes are hardly legible at this point and much of what I am saying is incoherent. Jocelyn appears to be in a similar state, but my perceptual powers should not be relied upon. I order a "Ginnuz" and Jocelyn grabs a "Songbo."

The Service: I have no idea. The fact that we have drinks must suggest something.

The Scene: I write, "It's crazy busy," which means that there's a lot of loud celtic music and a load of hooligans cramping my style. For a pub, the pace is a little upbeat, and is best suited for a fast kind 'a crowd. I write, "Gerry O'Kane gets funky," which indicates that I am extremely pissed drunk. My head is woozy and Jocelyn won't stop coming onto me — I think. I am sure of very little. I am also growing tired of her insults of my emaciated, ectomorphic physique and my youthful spirit.

All's well at the Wellington and, wow, I think Jocelyn really is coming onto me this time. Fortunately, I have enough brain power to defer any hot sex until a time when I can make a mature, informed decision. That time is about five minutes later at 12:32 when Jocelyn says: "Where do you want to go?" I say, "I'm easy." Jocelyn replies, "So am I." I look away, raise my eyebrows and smile.

It's now 12:33 and still not a seat in sight. Our backs are sore and we lumber out onto Princess Street. Plans to carry onto Ben's Pub are cancelled due to intense inebriation and thus, we leave.

We hail a cab and, as for the rest of the night, well, I'm not sure what to make of it...

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

The AMS will soon be hiring a...

DIRECTOR OF BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT

The Director of Business Development is responsible for marketing the AMS outside organizations as an attractive vehicle for reaching the student market at Queen's.

• Hire and motivate a small staff

• Think of and do creative new projects

• Manage a budget over $100,000

• Make your mark on this brand new position!

Applications will be available at the AMS Front Desk on February 19th, pending final assembly and board approval.

Some thoughts on romance:

"The sad thing about Valentine's Day is that we assume it's the one and only day of the year on which it's okay to display our vulnerability, to indulge ourselves in romance and sentimentality. What a waste! Romance and sentiment should be part of every day. My grandfather, a man of sound, solid common sense, always brought my grandmother her breakfast in bed, with a flower on the tray. I am sure there were other factors involved, but they remained happily married for over 50 years, and it has often occurred to me that in his courtly, old-fashioned, Edwardian way, Grandfather knew something that has escaped most of us, which is that a day that begins with a touch of romance is likely to end well."

— Michael Korda, Penthouse

"We have a built-in drive for romance. We all want to belong, to have our needs met, to be happy."

— Stan Charnofsky, PhD, California State University

"Far from producing boredom, a thorough understanding of another's inner life can lead to ever more rewarding exchanges, particularly if you've chosen your partner well."

— Dr. Jane Shaw

WOMEN'S SELF DEFENCE

4 Week Women's Self Defence Course
Mondays, 7 pm to 9 pm
March 1 through March 22
Course Fee: $25

For more information or to register

Call: Kristen 531-3747
Email: qtkd@www.ams.queensu.ca

AMS Extended Child Care Program

After-Hours Child Care

Child Care Hotline 533-6000, ext. 75645

Hours: Monday - Thursday, 6:00 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.
Saturday, 10:00 a.m. to 4:00 p.m.

Prices: Students: $2.00/hour for 1 child
$3.00/hour for 2 or more children

Faculty/Staff: $3.00/hour for 1 child
$4.00/hour for 2 or more children

Reservations must be made by 12 noon the day the service is required and by 12 noon

Continued from page 11

lifestyle change, and a major one at that, but, not only will you begin to appreciate each other more, you will begin to appreciate your life and everyone else who's in it in a deeper and more meaningful way.

Romance isn't easy but, like any other conscious improvement you choose to make in your life, it's worth it.

PAYING attention to the little things also means being ready for every romantic opportunity that comes your way. This may mean snatching up a rose on the way home from class, or simply giving him/her a phone call when you know he/she needs it most.

THIS endless list of little things can, for the more flamboyant among you, include public displays of affection. Now, I'm not talking about groping each other in a crowded room or having sex in the nearest classroom. I'm talking about whispering compliments in his/her ear while in public.

Heck, why whisper? When was the last time you told someone how lucky you feel to have that special someone in your life. With the speed that rumours travel here at our alma mater, your partner is sure to have heard about the compliment by the end of the day.

Like life, romance is not a destination, it's a journey.

DON'T be discouraged if you stumble. The important part is to try, and try on a regular basis. You may not end up making grand gestures and, hey, a dozen roses once a week gets pretty boring after a while. However, getting into the swing of being romantic will improve your life, your partner's life and the lives of those around you. You don't have to turn off the rest of your life, or tune out your friends in order to be romantic with your partner or with yourself. You just have to make space and time for one of the most under-appreciated aspects of life: romance.

Tara Mansbridge will be spending Valentine's Day with a bottle of white wine and The Queen's Journal editorial board. Sad, isn't it?

SPORTS & FITNESS

Queen's sweeps playoff opener

BY NEATE SAGER

OH, REBECCA! The most eagerly anticipated Sports Illustrated of the year has hit newsstands and it is Rebecca Romijn-Stamos gracing the cover of the 1999 Swimsuit issue. Romijn-Stamos will be joined in the annual extravaganza by SI regulars Heidi Klum and Eva Herzigova, as well as various newcomers to the pages. In addition, the most read SI of the year will include athletes and their spouses. As the tradition continues more criticism will be heard about the objectification of women, but the issue will also include many interesting articles on the Virgin Islands, which is the real reason why people pick it up.

VOLLEYBALL BUS

With a huge win in the first of a best of three series, the Queen's Golden Gaels volleyball team (see adjacent article) put themselves in an excellent position to eliminate the highly touted University of Toronto Blues and go to the CIAU championships. Fans can follow the team to Toronto on a bus that will depart at 1 pm on Saturday afternoon and return immediately following the game. Tickets are on sale at the Phys-Ed Centre wicket for $20. The Gaels only need one win to go further than they ever have before. Try and help them get there by providing some good old fashioned Queen's spirit.

LAST CALL AT THE GARDENS

The last of hockey's great shrines will close down Saturday night when Maple Leaf Gardens makes way for the new Air Canada Centre. The Maple Leafs will face the Chicago Blackhawks in the final game that is a rematch of the first Gardens' game in 1931. Over the years, memories include great concerts, political rallies and, of course, Leafs hockey. The Gardens held many Stanley Cup victories, a tortured Harold Ballard era, tragic sex scandals involving ushers and a 1990s revival. The building holds memories for generations of fans who will gather for one last party at the corner of Church and Carlton St. this Saturday night.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

The Skydome would be officially renamed the White Elephant. New Blue Jay Cecil Fielder would be able to hit his weight next season. Those that pay over $1000 for the final Leafs game would get their moneys worth.

in putting away the match with 15-5 triumph in the third set, as the befuddled Blues suddenly seemed eager to escape a hostile throng of Queen's partisans.

"U of T was overcome by what we were able to do," said Willis. "During the rallies, when we started to lose momentum, the atmosphere generated by the crowd helped pick us up."

On the court, the Gaels were paced by the effective setting of Michel Cameron. "Michel was at his best tonight," commented Willis on the second-year player who was the nerve centre for an extremely balanced squad. Despite the short duration, the Gaels registered a staggering 47 digs, indicative of the lack of precision manifested by a U of T team that was off kilter all night.

"Toronto didn't pass well," remarked Willis. "You could count on one hand the number of sharp passes they made tonight."

If the outcome was ever in

Brian English deftly tips the ball over the U of T Blues blocker

PHOTO BY BOB HUSH

doubt, it may have come early in the middle set. Varsity had taken an early lead when the Gaels, behind two service aces from veteran Frederic Cotoir (13 kills, five stuff blocks) ran off five of the next six points, taking the lead. "I'd personally like to thank the crowd," said middle hitter

Jake Magolan, who matched Cotoir's 13 kills. "It shows how big a part of the game they can be."

Now one elusive victory from a CIAU berth, the Gaels will travel to Toronto for Game Two on Saturday, and if necessary, a rubber match on Sunday afternoon.

Sailing against the world

BY HILARY CLARK

"[In Australia] there was lots of media coverage every day."

"The wind was great," said Keilty. "The best moment was in the first race, we had a great start and we came around the first mark right in front of the world champion. It was amazing to look behind us and see everyone else behind us."

Participating in the championships were sailors Bernard Luttmner, Eng '02; Stephanie Taylor, Phed. '02; Erika Vines, Phed. '98; Marty Essig, Eng '98; Andrew (A.J.) Keilty, Comm '02; Gordon Cook, Eng '01.

Keilty, who teamed up with Cook, sails a 49'er, an exciting high energy racing boat. "[A 49'er] is the Formula One of the sailing world. It is very fast and exciting to watch," said Keilty.

These were Luttmner's first world championships and he finished 97th in the field and was the fifth placed Canadian.

"I was battling with the world's best down there," said Luttmner. "The waves were sometimes over three metres high."

Luttmner, who is also trying to qualify for the 2000 games, will also be spending the summer in Europe sailing.

Taylor sailed in the Europe Dinghy, the single-handed women's only class boat.

"It is a really high tech, tiny boat," said Taylor. "The waves were so huge sometimes I would look up and see a wall of water and think, 'now how am I going to get over that?'"

Taylor finished fourth out of the Canadians competing in the field and 90th overall among all 120 competitors. Canada only sends its top female to the Olympics, however.

"I'm going to make a full-out campaign for the 2004 Olympics in Athens," said Taylor.

This was Taylor's first time in Australia and she was impressed with how huge sailing is there.

"There were pages of media coverage every day in the paper," said Taylor. "To the Australians sailing is a national pastime."

"The most amazing moment was sailing in the Sydney harbour right past the opera house," said Taylor.

Taylor will also be making a trip to Europe this summer; she will be competing in the World University Games in Spain.

Swimming coach revives program

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

Wall, Nick Poon and Erik Yuill qualified for the men's team.

The highlight of the weekend for the team, however, was Helmstaedt's award. Before his arrival, Queen's was at the bottom of the ranks in swimming. In his two years, the women's team has risen from seventh to fifth place, and the men's team has risen from ninth to fifth.

"He is so great with the swimmers," said team member Melanie van de Water. "The training has really improved. He took us to Florida the last two Christmases to train. Before him, no one really cared."

Under his guidance, every swimmer has reached new personal bests and the team has gone from sending one swimmer to the CIAUs in the year before his arrival, to this year's record of eight.

Van de Water feels that Helmstaedt is more than just a coach. "He cares for us outside the pool, he is our friend who's also there for us if we have any problems in school."

Women's captain Fulton feels Helmstaedt has helped the swimmers "become much more focused on doing the little things correctly. [Under Helmstaedt] the team really came together," she said.

Currently, the team's coaching situation is up in the air as Helmstaedt has not yet decided if he will return for next year. If he doesn't, at least he has left a long-term impression on this young team.

ON DECK

FRIDAY
Men's Hockey vs
Concordia
7:30 @ Jock Harty Arena

SATURDAY
Men's Hockey vs
UQTR
7:30 @ Jock Harty Arena

OJA Wrestling Finals
9:00 @ Bartlett Gym

THE FUN NEVER STOPS!

NOMINATION PERIOD IS NOW OPEN FOR YEAR SOCIETY POSITIONS AND ASUS REPS TO THE AMS

FEBRUARY 8, 1999 - FEBRUARY 19, 1999 AT 4:00 P.M.

Drop by the CORE @ 183 University Ave.

To pick up a nomination package that is best for you!

Much more than a football tournament

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The quest began when news of an event involving flags, snow, football and beer travelled down the 401 from Waterloo. A team was immediately assembled to participate in a women's snow flag football tournament at Wilfrid Laurier University: they were going to compete at the 1999 Powder Puff.

The motley crew of aspiring gridiron stars gathered for a meeting at the Phys-Ed Centre with three weeks until the tournament and a team was born. With the coaching help of current Gaels football players Wes Nicol and James MacLean, as well as former Gael stalwart Jon Kryzanowski, fundamentals were taught, pass routes run, positions allocated, and a juggernaut began to take shape.

As the fateful weekend approached the intensity increased. The outdoor practices saw full blocking, flagging practice and tough scrimmages. With complex plays drawn up, execution became paramount to success and the players began to buy in to the system.

The weekend finally arrived and it was time to take the field against some of the best flag football teams in the land, but the Queen's squad lacked an important element before that first game — coaches. With a mid-morning start time, the coaches were to make an early exit from Kingston, but a 5 a.m. estimated time of departure quickly became a 7 a.m. actual take-off time and speed became essential.

Despite this inauspicious beginning, the coaches arrived soon after the start of the game and the team had withstood the early confusion to remain close by half-time. The speedy pursuing Queen's defence kept the team in the game, while the offence tried to find its rhythm. The second-half was much the same, however; the Waterloo squad pulled away near the end of the game and won in what was a much closer contest than the final three touchdowns margin.

Members of the squad doing what they do best — partying

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Following that first game a team meeting was held in the dressing room and words of wisdom were written on the blackboard by receiver Meredith MacNaughton; "We may not win the games, but we will win the party."

With that inspirational phrase the team took the field against a

Queen's squad. Queen's not only ended the contest with another game in the loss column, but many suffered from bruises, twists and bangs. These various ills were nothing that couldn't be cured by an alcoholic remedy, a prescription that would certainly be filled during the evening activities.

After an evening of bonding and revelry the likes of which Waterloo has not seen, the team won a small victory by simply arriving at their 9 a.m. playoff game. The game went much like the others, with a well seasoned Waterloo team pulling away and eliminating the Gaels.

Despite the loss, the defeated squad gathered at mid-field and belted out a spirited 'Oil Thigh', which drew stares of disbelief from the competitive opponents.

As the team gathered in the very same locker room where it all began, a quick glance at the blackboard left the team with the feeling that it was mission accomplished.

Figure skating team driving for five

By SARAH CROSSIE

The Queen's Figure Skating team are no strangers to the popular skating word 'quad'. They are four-time OUA champions and will be defending their title this weekend at York University.

The 16 member team believes that they are one of the favourites because they won by such a large margin in the first invitational meet this season. Two other schools will provide strong competition for the team. "Waterloo is really strong and Guelph is definitely the big one," said Co-captain Karen Thomas.

The OUA championship is a two day event where team members compete in pairs and fouts in dance and freeskate events. There is also a precision event at the championships, which is worth the most points. The precision team will be performing a Scottish Celtic number based on Queen's heritage and traditions and our varsity team name, 'The Gaels.'

Coach Kimberly Magee believes that "if we're close in points at the end of the weekend, the title will ride on the precision number. We're hoping to be further ahead in the points so we're not relying on the precision number." The team has been practicing since the end of September and Magee thinks that, "it's going to be a successful weekend."

Thomas believes that "success isn't just based on athleticism. There's a strong personal relationship that gets the team. We're very supportive."

"Everyone should be proud with or without the championship," Magee added.

Team preparing for OUAs.

PICTURE BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Intramural Corner

Believe it or not the Intramural regular season is coming to a close and playoffs are on the horizon for many teams. Please be sure that you have signed the Code of Conduct agreement for your team if you plan to participate in playoff games. Players who have not signed this form will not be eligible to play and those who do will cause their team to forfeit that game. A copy of your team's Code of Conduct form can be signed at the Intramural office in room 201 A at the Phys-ed Centre.

Intramural Briefs
*Intramural volleyball offic ials are needed for the remainder of the season. Anyone interested should contact the Intramural office or call 533-6000 ext. 75036 for more information.

*Applications for the 1999-2000 Intramural season are due February 18, 1999 by 6 p.m. in room 204A at the Phys-ed Centre.

*The entry deadline for the BEWS/WIC badminton tournament and the BEWIC bowling tournament is Monday, February 15, 1999.

— With files from Bryan Grosvenor

Travelling outside Canada at Spring Break? Don't wait until you get to the airport to get your foreign money— you can get better rates right here, with no service charge.

WELLINGTON FOREIGN EXCHANGE
153 Wellington Street
531-8731

Check out our web site and compare:
www.wellingtonfx.on.ca

Pan Chancho

Bakery-Catering-Take-out

How about a special build-it-yourself-dinner?

Visit Pan Chancho.

pick out some fresh bread, a salad, and maybe a dessert to go with one of our new frozen entrees...

race home, pop it in the oven, and ta da!

Food...The Language of Love
Pan Chancho Frozen Foods...Lovelier

Don't forget your 15% student discount* on all food purchases!!

Pan Chancho Bakery 70 Johnson Street 544-7790 *with ID

In the game Sports news three days late

Track and field

Despite a 4:30 a.m. departure time from Queen's, the squad had a very impressive weekend on the road. The team came back from Toronto with a spectacular six gold, five silver and seven bronze medals.

Gold medals were awarded to Nicole Clarke in the 20 pound weight throw, which qualifies her for the CIAU Championships, Mike Melaney in the shot put, J.D. Kelly in the 60m hurdles, the men's 4x200m, 4x400m and 4x800m relays.

Silver medals were earned by Chris Booth in the 600m, Stephen Lemieux in the 35 pound weight throw, Mike Thorne in the shot put, Hannah Cole in the 20 pound weight throw and the 4x200m "B" squad.

Bronze medals went to Lisa Curran in the 1000m, Stephen Lemieux in the shot put, Sean Kelly in the 60m hurdles, Nicole Clarke in the shot put, Nicole Maorow in the 20 pound weight throw, the women's 4x400m and the women's 4x800m relay.

This was one of the top performances ever by the Queen's track team. The squad has now qualified two members for the CIAU championships, Nicole Clarke and Nimrod Major, at the next level.

while others are very close to meeting CIAU qualifying standards.

Fencing

This past weekend Queen's varsity fencers traveled to Ottawa to compete in the OUA, Part 2, sectional qualifying meet.

In women's epee, Sarah Hinchcliffe, Kathryn Perre, and Andrea Sommer fought a heated battle to make it into the top eight round. After another round of fencing long time epeeist Sarah Hinchcliffe, and newcomer Andrea Sommer will go on to represent Queen's at the finals.

In women's sabre, team captain Catherine Ratusny, weapon captain Amy Kaufman and Esther Erhardt will go on to represent Queen's at the finals. All tallied, the Gaels have five individual women and two teams out of three going to the finals.

In the men's events, held on Sunday, Queen's fencers got down to business and had a very successful day. In men's epee, team captain Matthieu Pinard, weapon captain Will Anderson and Kevin Laven will represent Queen's. Pinard fought a lively duel with an RMC rival, coming up on the short end, but he will still represent Queen's at the next level.

Chiropractic magic? Like it or not, it works

By JULIETA LOEFFLER

What is a chiropractor and what can he or she do for you?

Many people have heard about someone cracking their back and making it feel a lot better. Others might have heard of miraculous claims of what a chiropractor can do. Are they all true, and if so, how do chiropractors treat pain? A chiropractor enhances your body's self-healing process and helps maintain good health. But then again, so do doctors, homeopathic practitioners as well as the gym — what is it that makes them different?

First off, chiropractors are very well trained and regulated. They go through four years of intensive post-university training at a chiropractic college, meet stringent licensing requirements, follow a strict code of ethics and are approved by governmental agencies.

Second, they are mainly interested in maintaining a harmonious relationship between the joints of the spine, the extremities and the nervous system. By manipulating or applying gentle, controlled and directed pressure, chiropractors help to restore a more normal position or motion and in doing so, often relieve pain. This is, in fact, a science developed by Palmer in the late 1800s. The nervous system controls the function of every cell, tissue, organ and system of the body. Based on this information, chiropractors use a consistent scientific protocol to locate malfunctioning areas of the spine and manipulate them into normal position and motion.

adults and seniors can find chiropractic care useful. When no problems exist, chiropractors recommend monthly spinal adjustments to maintain good posture and to reduce the risk of potential illness later on in life.

Seniors who suffer from chronic pain and stiffness often find treatment effective as it deals with restoring normal movement and thereby reduces irritation of spinal joints and nerves. Some common grievances that chiropractors often provide relief for are: headaches, numbness and/or tingling in a specific body part, neck and back pain, tension, stiff joints, tendinitis, arthritis and various sport related injuries.

By manipulating or applying gentle, controlled and directed pressure, chiropractors help to restore a more normal position or motion and in doing so, often relieve pain.

The spine is made up of stacked vertebrae's which act to protect the spinal cord but also allow for movement. There are spinal nerves between the vertebrae's which go to all areas of your body, including organs. Between the vertebrae are discs that act as cushions to the bones while the muscles in the back work together to produce motion. Chiropractors can detect any loss of movement or function in these spinal joints, or in the joints of your arms and legs, which have a similar make-up, and act to correct the ailment.

Who can benefit? Children, Many athletes use chiropractic care to keep their bodies performing at the highest efficiency level possible. They use them to improve performance and avoid or treat injuries. Chiropractic care is partially covered by OHIP and many insurance companies cover a portion of this care as well. Specifically, the Queen's Health Plan covers up to $150 of chiropractic care per year.

Education into all the health care options that are available to you is important. There are other options out there that do not involve "popping pills" and this is just one of them.

THE QSCSG IS A CAMPUS-COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION MADE UP OF THE WOMAN'S CENTRE, THE ANOREXIA NERVOSA BULIMIA ASSOCIATION (ANAB), THE LESBIAN GAY BISEXUAL ASSOCIATION (LGBA) AND THE SEXUAL HEALTH RESOURCE CENTRE (SHRC)

The QSCSG is Hiring!

One co-ordinator for 1999-2000

RESUME AND COVER LETTER DUE AT THE AMS FRONT DESK BY FEBRUARY 19TH AT NOON.

FOR MORE INFORMATION, CONTACT ESTEE GARFIN, AT 533-2958

BEAN TO ANY GOOD EVENTS LATELY?

Celebrate the Campus Community Campaign at

Chilifest

Wednesday, 17 February
11:30 am to 1:30 pm
Grant Hall

Free chili & cornbread

Music
Entertainment
Prizes

www.advancement.queensu.ca/cc/intranet\_yes.html

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

German tales Theatre group hits campus

Foreign Tales: The German Theatre group performs this weekend.

PLAY PREVIEW

By VIRGINIA WIGNORE

What do coveralls, the ramming ceremony, the oil tugh and the German theatre company all have in common? They are all Queen's traditions. For 15 years, with the help of the Queen's drama department, the German theatre company has been bringing culture to Kingston, and this year is no exception. Theological Hall will be home to 30 students and their depiction of Tales From the Vienna Woods or Geschichten Aus Dien Wienerwald.

This play is actually a critique of Viennese society, a criticism of masochistic tendencies and a mocking of Strauss and his famous waltzes.

This play was written in the 1930s by Austrian playwright Odón von Horváth, who was a contemporary of Berthold Brecht.

Set in 1928, the play features a young woman who is struggling to break free from the societal constraints imposed on her by her overbearing father and the man that she is forced to marry.

In an attempt to escape, she runs off with a young man, but instead of living happily ever after, the heroine ends up pregnant, alone and forced to dance naked in a cabaret in order to support herself and her child.

While this sounds like a scholarly version of the movie Strip Tease, this play is actually a critique of Viennese society, a criticism of masochistic tendencies and a mocking of Strauss and his famous waltzes.

The German theatre company is composed of Queen's students, not all of whom are fluent in German. While some of the members are German exchange students, others have simply taken an odd German class or two and finally there are others who had never spoken a word of German until they auditioned.

Despite the differences in their backgrounds, all of the actors are very enthusiastic about this undertaking, and encourage students not to be scared off by the fact that the play is presented entirely in German.

The company has gone to tremendous lengths in order to guarantee that the audience will understand what is taking place by including a three-page, scene by scene plot in the program and by making the play a visual one.

The cast members claim that even if students are unable to fully appreciate the social commentary the play is making, they can enjoy the live accordion music, old-fashioned swimsuits and the partial nudity. Plus, as the director said, how many plays have the word Wienerwald in the title.

Even if students are unable to fully appreciate the social commentary the play is making, they can enjoy the live accordion music and the partial nudity.

Tales From the Vienna Woods is running from this Thursday to Saturday at the Rounda Theatre in Theological Hall. Tickets can be purchased at Kingston Hall or at the door and are $5 for seniors and students and $7 for general admission.

Piecing it together Mosaic concert features student talent

CONCERT PREVIEW
By STEFAN MURRAY

The Queen's School of Music is presenting the Mosaic New Music Concert Festival this weekend and according to organizer Christien Ledroit "it's not the quiet reserved Mozart bullshit anymore."

The concert series, featuring student and faculty composers, highlights a broad range of musical expression — an attempt by the school of music to bring a diverse audience to the concerts.

The concerts will showcase styles from electric-acoustic, turntabling and electronic to more conventional forms like piano and sax duets and concertos.

"We've even tried to get a rock band," said Ledroit. "But we didn't get any response."

Around three quarters of the performers will be Queen's students, including Mike Andkewicz, who will contribute a piece on saxophone. The rest of the performers will either be Queen's professors, graduates or special guests from Canada and around the world.

The most interesting aspects of the show also appear to be the most unconventional. Kristi Allik, an award-winning composer will splice electronic samples with commonplace

PHOTO BY JULIAN KIM

Different Pieces: Christien Ledroit plans the upcoming Mosaic concert.

instruments, while Ledroit himself will quarterback a Tuba Concerto and a piece called "(un)natural (dis)integration" which will include "every percussion instrument you can name," he said.

"It's not the quiet reserved Mozart bullshit anymore."

— Christien Ledroit, Mosaic organizer

Ian Revell, a graduate of the music program, will perform a solo piano piece from the soundtrack that he composed for the play The Stillborn Lover. "The show is done on a regular basis to showcase new work. It's not always incredible, but always interesting," he said.

The School of Music has been pressing to highlight Queen's composers while at the same time attracting an audience from the Kingston community. The Mosaic concert this weekend might just be the show that does it.

The Mosaic concert opens on Saturday, Feb 13 at 7:30 p.m. in Grant Hall and continues on Sunday Feb 14 at 2:30 p.m. in Dunning Auditorium and Tuesday, Feb 16 at 7:30 p.m. in Harrison-LeCaine Hall. Tickets for Saturday and Sunday's shows are $3 or $5 for both dates. Tuesday's show is free.

Rotate this!

Parkside Jones
Mind the Gap
Independent

By JACKIE MCLACHLAN

Who is Parkside Jones? Anyone, anyone? Five guys and a girl? A funk band? Disco playing fiends? A lone trumpeter? A percussionist named Spanky? A seemingly bluesy-groove band balancing precariously on the fine genre line of new age and acid jazz? Yes, to all of the above.

This Montreal-based sextet hit the music scene two years ago and have since gained a reputation as a solid band that plays original, diverse music. With music labels ranging from jazz to punk to funk and folk, this group's only accurate classification is high quality music. While still in their fledgling years, Parkside Jones has become well-known in the Montreal music scene and has opened for such acts as Treble Charger and Blue Rodeo.

Mind the Gap, Parkside Jones' debut album, exemplifies the musical diversity, groove, and spontaneity that the band is known for. Accompanying the regular lineup of drums, percussion, bass, electric, and acoustic guitars is the trumpet and fender rhodes, both played by the sole female member of the band, Ryhna Thompson. Add Thompson's Ani DiFranco-like biting vocals and one has a formidable female front-runner who contributes to the band what Shirley Manson brings to Garbage, what Dolores O'Riordan brings to the Cranberries, and what Gwen Stefani brings to No Doubt — presence.

Parkside Jones' musical talent is well-versed with gritty, hard-core lyrics that refer to the idiosyncrasies of human nature. For example, "Hang Your Head Down Low" describes an interplay between two people when ardent energy is taken to another level and pushes the boundaries that surround societal propriety.

In an era where some musical groups struggle to be identified as a specific genre, Parkside Jones relishes in blurring the lines. Groovy music, raw lyrics, and talent are simply what makes them.

Various Artists
Little Voice Soundtrack
Capitol Records

By ROBERT MACNEIL

While the movie Little Voice, starring Michael Caine in his Golden Globe nominated performance, has yet to be released

Please see Rotate This on page 20

Rotate this!

Continued from page 19

across Canada, the soundtrack is out and it's a swingin' feast for the ears. While soundtracks usually contain new releases or overplayed radio hits, Little Voice carries 11 old classics that would be hard to find anywhere else.

The tracks span the century, from the 1930s to the mid-1960s, transporting the listener back to the days of swinging jazz bands and ballroom dance halls. The star of the film, Jane Horrocks, tackles two Judy Garland numbers, "I Wanna Be Loved By You" and "Get Happy" (a bubbly song about Judgment Day). She sounds so much like Garland that it is hard to tell the difference from the three original Garland tracks that are included — "That's Entertainment," "The Man That Got Away" and "Come Rain or Come Shine" (later popularized by Don Henley on the Leaving Las Vegas soundtrack).

DGeneration Through the Darkness Columbia Records

By ELI SCHUSTER

For those of you who are fans of James Bond movies, Shirley Bassey's classic "Goldfinger" is included as well as a smokey version of "Big Spender." A further surprise on the album is a single released by Marilyn Monroe entitled "My Heart Belongs to Daddy." Backed by a jazz band, Monroe delivers a seductive performance and one that only enhances her reputation.

Closing out the jazz era is Billie Holiday with a number called "Lover Man (Oh Where Can You Be)" and the incomparable Ethel Merman with her trademark "There's No Business Like Show Business." Speaking

I know what some of you, my loyal readers, must be thinking — Eli's gone soft. It's been awhile since I did a really nasty, "take no prisoners," "let's trash this sucker" review, so maybe those record company execs have finally bought off their most fearless critic.

Well, fear not seekers of truth, I simply haven't found a suitable outlet for my berzerker rage — until now, that is. I suspect that DGeneration's "Through the Darkness" could make Gandhi want to stab someone repeatedly with a salad fork.

The bottom line is that of trademarks, Tom Jones carries the album into the 1960s with his signature tune "It's Not Unusual."

While I'm not often a big soundtrack fan, this album provides a rich sampling of music that most people do not hear enough. It's a nice little record that will be a pleasant addition to your usual brand of music, and get you through that late-night 15-page paper.

"Through the Darkness" is a piece of trash not worth purchasing. The songs all sound the same, and aren't even worth discussing. Still, I have to fill up 200-250 words, and I can hardly repeat "this sucks" 125 times. The CD cover claims the band was voted one of New York's best live bands (they sure ain't one of the Big Apple's finest recorded bands), and I guess that makes sense in a way; DGeneration might not sound too bad as background noise after a few pitchers of Old Milwaukee.

The band could certainly use a new publicist, because the press release accompanying the CD is loaded with prose which screams out for punchlines. Apparently DGeneration keeps "getting thrown out of hotels and off of stages on two continents" (now that's a ringing endorsement of the band's talent). DGeneration "has always been about one thing above all else: songs" (as opposed to what? Certainly not "talent," "creativity," or "entertainment"); And finally we should "think of [the CD] as a soundtrack for the end of the world."

Hmm, how would Dennis Miller respond to that last howler? Probably something like: "Hey, Cha Cha... if fin-de-siecle America has to listen to homogenized crap like that, maybe the world deserves to end."

Okay, one last parting shot; if I came face-to-face with the five members of DGeneration, I believe I would quote another group which uses the term "D-Generation" in its name, and tell them: "I've got two words for 'ya.'"

A&E Oscars in brief

Best Picture: The early favorite for this award is Saving Private Ryan. Elizabeth, Life is Beautiful, Shakespeare in Love and The Thin Red Line are also nominated.

Best Director: Steven Spielberg might be the "king of the world" for Saving Private Ryan. Other nominees are Roberto Benigni for Life is Beautiful, John Madden for Shakespeare in Love, Terrence Malick for The Thin Red Line and Peter Weir for The Truman Show.

Best Actress: Meryl Streep looks strong for One True Thing. Cate Blanchett for Elizabeth, Fernanda Montegra for Central Station, Emily Watson for Hilary and Jackie and Gwyneth Paltrow for Shakespeare in Love are nominated.

Best Actor: Tom Hanks looks for his third statuette for his role in Saving Private Ryan. Also nominated: Roberto Benigni for Life is Beautiful, Ian McKellen for Gods and Monsters, Nick Nolte for Affliction and Edward Norton for American History X.

Best Sound Effects Editing:
1. Ammageddon
2. The Mask of Zorro
3. Saving Private Ryan

DRAGON'S CAVE SPORTS BAR & GRILL
259 ONTARIO ST.
547-2147
FULLY LICENSED

AFTER THE GAME, SCHOOL OR WORK, TAKE TIME OUT AND BRING YOUR TEAM OR FRIENDS DOWN TO THE DRAGON'S CAVE FOR GREAT IN-HOUSE SPECIALS.

Enjoy our great menu
PLAY POOL OR DARTS.

EVEN WATCH YOUR FAVORITE SPORTS ON OUR BIG SCREEN TV.

RECEIVE WARM FRIENDLY SERVICE. SO COME ON DOWN AND SEE WHAT YOUR FRIENDS ARE TALKING ABOUT!

win a GUINNESS JACKET
come on down for a pint, or two and ask your server for details.... Cheers...!!!

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966
FOOD SPECIALS $2.49 sunday breakfast sun-tues 1/2 price wings wed 1/2 price nachos* after 2pm with beverage purchase
LIVE BANDS Fri Feb 12 Fat Cats ver...very grrroooooovy

THE SCENE

Appearing throughout the 1998-99 volume of The Journal, The Scene will highlight various facets of Entertainment culture and artistic endeavor not normally featured in the section.

FOAMING AT THE MOUTH

LOOKING FOR A WAY TO CAPP-UCINO OFF THE NIGHT? CHECK IT OUT!

BY SARAH CROSSIE

It's a tough coffee world — latté, au lait, moccachino, frappé, cappucino. Does anyone really know?

My experience? I've been addicted to the warm caffeine sweetness since I was 14. My high school existence was hanging out in coffee holes. I was voted "Most Likely to Spend the Rest of My Life in a Coffee Shop" at the end of high school. I own a home espresso machine. I can foam my own milk.

Impressed? Read on unknowing coffee drinkers. This is a list of favourite Kingston cappucino shops. The six coffee spots are rated by how the yummy the coffee is, plus some atmosphere mixed in.

Before we begin, I'll define 'cappucino' for you, so that you'll have the 'short' on the drink:

A cappucino is named for the Catholic order of Capuchin friars, whose headed robes resemble the drink's cap of foam. It is one shot espresso, half the cup filled with steamed milk, topped off to the rim with foamed milk.

All establishments are rated out of five coffee cups.

GRABBAJABBA

Total cost: $2.78

Size: Medium

Consistency: Smooth, not grainy

Status of Cup: The cup itself was clean, as was the metal spoon. Bonus points for cleanliness.

Extra Fun: Live entertainment provided (badasses and cops).

Atmosphere: GrabbaJabba's atmosphere is clean, but irritating because it's a chain. It lacks the personal touch of other coffee venues.

General Comments: GrabbaJabba's cappucino was a nice coffee. There wasn't too much foam or too much coffee. Nice proportions.

Extra Fun: Cinnamon, nutmeg and cocoa are available at a side bar so that you can add your own personalized perfect amount.

THE SECOND CUP

Total cost: $2.63

Size: Medium

Consistency: Grainy, especially near the bottom

Status of Cup: Clean cup, but presented on a plate which had seen better days. Plastic spoon? Cheap, but goes with the quality of the atmosphere.

Atmosphere: By far the dingiest atmosphere, but entertaining at the same time. The Second Cup smelled like a smokey, old Bingo hall and its clientele was anything but average. A man got kicked out for bad behaviour while I was there and eventually the police were called. Entertaining? Yes. Classy? No.

A new customer might expect a boiled wiener and RC cola from this joint.

General Comments: The Second Cup's cappucino tasted exactly like my companion's latté. For a place that specializes in coffee, there should be a difference.

Extra Fun: Live entertainment provided (badasses and cops).

INDIGO

Total cost: $2.74

Size: Medium

Consistency: Very light and smooth

Status of Cup: Regular old coffee cup — no special cappucino glass, but clean nonetheless. Real spoons, too!

Atmosphere: Bright coffee bar is situated on the second floor so you can look out the windows. Very clean. Plus the extra bonus of having a plethora of reading material available.

General Comments: The cappucino, although yummy, could have been stronger. The foam on top was very light, however. Fluffy goodness.

Extra Fun: Like GrabbaJabba, cinnamon and nutmeg were available at the side bar. Plus, watching everyone read and play on their laptops makes you feel sophisticated, classy and smart. Get out your khakis and black trimmed glasses.

THE LAUNDRY CAFÉ

Total Cost: $2.59

Size: Didn't ask what size I wanted, but smaller than the rest.

Consistency: Not as smooth as others.

Status of Cup: Cute and clean green and white matching cup and saucer.

Atmosphere: Vintage atmosphere with soft background jazz music. Most stylish of the coffee venues.

General Comments: The cappucino was slightly stronger than it should have been. The foam, however, was nice — after the fancy-goodness was done, there was just enough foam to spoon out at the end.

Extra Fun: Not much — no toppings were offered or provided at The Laundry. Refined atmosphere definitely adds to the sophistication of the coffee.

THE SLEEPLESS GOAT

Total Cost: $2.79

Size: Comparable to The Laundry's, but smaller than most.

Consistency: Light foam topping, perfect blend of foam, coffee. Not at all grainy.

Status of Cup: Clean cappucino cup with saucer.

Atmosphere: Laid-back artsy coffee shop, decorated stylishly with soothing art. Currently featuring great black and white photographs.

General Comments: This cappucino was the perfect texture and hot. It was the perfect blend of liquid fun, sweetness and caffeine. You probably won't be able to leave after just having one. Sweet treatment for your tongue and taste-buds.

Extra Fun: Cappucino can be decorated with cinnamon or cocoa. Heaven is a place on earth with the Goat.

BUKAMARANGA

Total Cost: $2.63

Size: Medium Cup

Please see O Laté on next page.

New Beer in Ontario
Colt 45 8% alc./vol.
• clear bottles
• 12 packs
NEW at The Beer Store
WARNING
CONSUME IN MODERATION. THIS BEER IS 8% ALC. VOL. WHICH IS NEARLY TWICE AS MUCH ALCOHOL AS REGULAR BEERS.

Hab Influedza?
It's influenza season again. Headaches, sore muscles, fever, chills and a cough from influenza can be downright nasty.
Feel like helping?
Kingston General Hospital and Queen's University researchers are working on a new drug to defeat this infection. We are looking for two types of participants:
Group One
Children ages 5-12, with parental approval, who are normally healthy with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that may include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat.
Group Two
Adults and adolescents age 12 and up with a fever and typical influenza symptoms that may include: joint/muscle aches or pains, headache, cough, sore throat.
Please call as soon as you feel these symptoms
531-SICK (7425)
or your family doctor to find out if you qualify.
KINGSTON GENERAL HOSPITAL

ROOTS KINGSTON
WINTER SALE EVENT
SAVE! UP TO 50% OFF
sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult, Kids & Baby
229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

O Lait!

Continued from last page.

Consistency: Very thin coffee, foam topping quickly levelled. Status of Cup: Clean cup and fun cause it's neat. Atmosphere: Bright, jungle, exporting-importing atmosphere. Non-smoking section isn't hazy like other environments.

General Comments: This cappuccino was a plain Jane. Basically flavourless, the drink tasted like a regular coffee, which I didn't feel like finishing.

Extra Fun: You get wooden sticks to stir your drink which fuses the feelings of a sophisticated coffee and a foreign outpost atmosphere.

ALL PHOTOS BY LILIAN KIM

The AMS Card

ODDS OF WINNING:
100% AMS

If we did the draw today, the odds of winning a trip for two to any of Air Canada's North American destinations would be 100%

That's 'cause only one person has submitted a completed card so far.

Dude - this contest is so easy
Fill out your cards people!

VALENTINE BALLOON BOUQUET

STARTING AT
$19.99

PLUS DELIVERY

You choose the colour & sentiment and we'll custom design the bouquet to fit.

We'll deliver any where so book early!

*Any where Local.

HARDY HAR HAR

186 Wellington St. Kingston ON K7L 3E4 www.king.igs.net/hardyharhar

548-3213

Cat Power.

Welcome to the next generation

BY LILIAN KIM

This summer may see the last of Lilith making a heavenly appearance on stage, but it doesn't mean that the industry has lost faith in one of the most booming trends of the nineties — women and music. The well-known travelling festival, which boasts the pipes and talents of the female artists, has decided to take a hiatus amidst the growing popularity of summer fests and concerts. Lilith Fair coordinator Sarah McLachlan has decided to sweetly surrender to her weariness and pulled the tour out of the race after this summer's run.

Many would agree that the birth of Lilith and similar festivals, is an opportunity for women to wrap their guitar straps around their neck, tickle the ivories and take over the stage. Most other festivals such as the H.O.R.D.E festival, Edenfest, and the brilliant Tibetan Freedom Concert, are generally male-based, so the idea was to create a forum for women and only women. Lilith played host to artists like Etyka Badu, Jewel and McLachlan herself. The festival was constantly praised as original, fresh, extravagantly estrogen and different — but not all thought of it that way.

Shirley Manson, lead singer and powerhouse of Butch Vig's Garbage, would probably be voted least likely to play a Lilith Fair set even if her life depended on it.

Shirley Manson, lead singer and powerhouse of Butch Vig's Garbage, would probably be voted least likely to play a Lilith Fair set even if her life depended on it. Manson openly criticized the festival for practicing the opposite of what it is tried to promote. That is, women and men are once again being segregated by their specific genders.

Women in music have definitely come a long way from a hip-shaking Alanis to an angst-ridden, spiritual Alanis Morissette. Of course we had Joni Mitchell and Ani DiFranco, whose presence and strength went against the sex kitten grain that made pop stars of Madonna and Janet Jackson. There really isn't a shortage of "sexy" female artist right at this moment, probably just as many as was in the eighties, but the game has taken a different perspective.

The industry has now become a mass market of artists proving themselves to their audience. The consumer who has contributed billions to the industry is now more selective when deciding who deserves their money. As bad as an example as this may seem, Milli Vanilli gave reason for the listener to question the music that they purchase. The game has required artists to be real, ingenious, original, daring and most of all, extreme.

Tori Amos, perhaps is one female vocalist who went beyond regular "cat power" and used her vulnerabilities to her advantage. A piano prodigy at the age of three, Amos was kicked out of the conservatory that she attended as a child due to "creative differences" with her professors. She went on to make her own music and grew in popularity as the industry realized her talent as a commodity and a breath of fresh air. Amos learned the hard way about stardom when she offered a lift to a fan and was raped. Since then, Amos openly discusses the horrific incident along with other personal losses to explain her treatment of her music. In many ways, Amos expresses music as a means of therapy and self-reflexivity — an opportunity to hear the true voice. Closer to home, present artists like McLachlan and Morissette created a path for women to voice their music in the great Canadian north, and the list is growing larger. Toronto indie-rock wiven Emma Gryner is climbing up the ranks both north and south of the border.

Closer to home, present artists like McLachlan and Morissette created a path for women to voice their music in the great Canadian north.

Even closer in K-town, a little bit of Lilith is spreading across the community. Thalia's Voice, a festival held in Haliburton County for women and the arts, is scouting for female artists across Ontario to perform for the concert scheduled this summer. Solo artists of any age and musical genre are encouraged to submit demos to the festival for a chance to be featured in the concert. Thalia's Voice is an outlet for small communities to expose their hidden talent.

Women in music will always be a luring phenomenon. From Lauryn Hill to Leona Boyd, the attraction is dominant and everlasting. The voice and sound is as sweet as the promising years to come for the world of music.

*Those who are interested in Thalia's Voice are asked to submit their pieces (written or song) by February 23. Send all submission to Suite 209, 427 Princess St., Kingston, ON K7L 5S9. For more information, call Sarah at 545-3402.

LOOKING FOR SUMMER EMPLOYMENT? WHY NOT TRY FOREST FIREFIGHTING?

To become a forest firefighter, a pre-requisite 40 hour S-100 Certificate Course is necessary and available with Wildfire Specialists Inc. For more information contact WILDFIRE at (705) 693-0323.

Course Dates:
March 28 - April 1 1999

Registration:
Queen's University
JDUC
February 15 & 16 1999
10 a.m. - 4 p.m.

Classifieds

Whopper Wednesday

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/bluroof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn

Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

LIMESTONE MUSIC & AUDIO buys and sells CD's, cassettes, records, video games and some audio-visual equipment. New rock posters and t-shirts. 122 Princess St., lower level, downtown Kingston, phone 542-9096.

SAVE MONEY! Save money on your formal ticket by helping out at the Artsci '99 Formal. Volunteers are needed for setting up cleaning up, and helping out during the formal (March 6th) checking coats, dealing Black Jack hands, etc. If interested, please contact Steven at 533-6000 ext. 75085, or stop by the ASUS Core.

HARASSMENT/DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT POLICY AND PROCEDURE REVIEW The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the Review Committee wish to extend an invitation to university students, staff, and faculty to offer any comments or suggestions they may have regarding the Policy.

Written responses may be submitted to the Senate Office, 8400 Macintosh Corry Hall, or the Human Rights Office, Old Medical Building (email: hrights@post.queensu.ca). Alternatively, community members may arrange to make verbal submissions

Aching feet? Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- * Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- * Free assessments/ follow up
- * 30 money-back guarantee
- * 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Cornlock Bldg.
Brookville, ON
K6V 1S9
613-498-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston
Kingston, ON
K7L 1B3
t: 545-0100 f: 545-1927

Dynamic Orthotics

to the Committee by contacting the Human Rights Office at 533-6886 and making an appointment. Deadline for all submissions is March 5, 1999.

BE IN CHARGE! Head House Attend applications for the Artsci '99 Formal are now available at the ASUS Core.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877PREP-COM

AUDITIONS: Singers, dancers, musicians, actors for a Musical-Comedy

2nd week of April. Living Soul: A Journey through the Blues, Jazz 70's Soul Stardom. For more information call 546-0432.

ESOS (EDUCATING STUDENTS ON SUBSTANCES) AND THE STUDENT CONSTABLES urge everyone to exercise moderation in their social relaxation. With this in mind, we present you Part One of our awareness challenge. Each week a new question will appear, with the correct answers being tabulated. At the end of the first week of April teh overall winners will receive a gift of monumental proportions. This week's questions: What classification of drug does alcohol fall under? Email your answers to contest@www.ams.queensu.ca.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR RENT: Room - Toronto. King at Bathurst. 10 minutes to Bay, near Queen West. Full gym on-site. Perfect with your new job! $650 plus utilities. Available May 1st. Call Jonathan at 416 703-8513.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7663.

WANTED

WANTED: Housemates, preferably upper year or graduate students, females, non-smoking, to share newly renovated house on Brock. Rent $270 plus utilities, cable included.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis technicians Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

ed. Queen's at Home installed. Call 544-3784.

WANTED: Two housemates, preferably upper year non-smoking females, to share a house on Johnson and Nelson. Rent: $365 per month, ALL utilities included, 2 bathrooms, washer/dryer. Call 531-8143 for more info.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Silver/gold Swiss army watch. Lost at Clergy and Division. Reward offered. Call 536-3478.

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6ms3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St. bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corby Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if it's yours.

Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award

The Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award is the highest tribute that can be paid to a student for valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities. Any student of the University may submit a nomination. The number of students admitted to the society each year is decided by the selection committee, while maintaining the distinction and integrity of the Tricolour Award.

Nominations Now Open

Nomination Period Closes on Monday March 15

Nomination Packages Can Be Picked Up At Any Faculty Society Office

A.M.S. Spring Referendum

Need better financing for a project???

Put a question in the Spring Referendum

Nomination period:

FEBRUARY 8, 1999 @ 11:45AM

to
FEBRUARY 19, 1999 @ 5:00pm

Nomination packages are available at the A.M.S. Front Desk

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT Cathy, Carolyn or Shawn in the Commission of Internal Affairs at 533-6000 ext. 74815

WHITE TRASH, SILVER LINING?

SO MANY QUESTIONS have provided people with hours and hours of pleasure debating at the dinner table, in coffee shops, restaurants, and cars. "Is there a God?" "Are we alone?" And most recently, "What's the deal with the Jerry Springer Show?" Here's an attempt at an answer.

Opinions are split when it comes to pronouncing enjoyment of, or declaring disgust for, the Jerry Springer Show. It is condemned by many as a forum for public filth, loathing and violence; exalted by others as the highest form of the popular genre of trendy TV talk shows. The format of the show is a simple one: Jerry introduces guests, guests reveal horrible secrets, guests fight verbally, guests fight physically, audience cheers, Jerry neatly wraps it up with a Final Thought. Although the format is simple, the reactions generated by the public are anything but. Perhaps now we will finally be able to turn the page on "The Springer Chronicles," for right here and now, we are prepared to examine both sides of that probing, eternal question we confidently know is on everyone's minds: "What is up with the Jerry Springer Show?" And why do I like it so much?" And, in the tradition of The Great Host himself, we will neatly wrap up the debate with one last Final Thought.

PRO #1

Jerry's Guests Make Us Look Good
Since the Jerry Springer Show depicts those on the lower end of humanity's attractiveness scale, we are able to walk away from it feeling as though we just had an overdose of our Pretty Pills. Not only are we not completely repulsive, but we are pretty damn good looking.

CON #1

Jerry's Guests Make Us Look Good
You'd have to wonder what we really have going for us if it takes a stripper with bleached blond hair and black roots who's missing a few teeth and wearing torn pink jeans, red leather boots and a motorcycle jacket for us to realize that we really aren't half bad looking.

PRO #2

Jerry's Guests Make Us Feel Good About Our Jobs/Friends/Families/Lives
Our bosses, professors, best friends, housemates, boyfriends, wives, children, cousins, neighbours, etc. never seem quite as bad when compared to those on Jerry's show.

CON #2

Jerry's Guests Make Us Feel Good About Our Jobs/Friends/Families/Lives
What's wrong with this phrase? "Yes! Now I know why I have a great life! It's because I don't get beat up by my boss every day, my friends don't steal from me and are not plotting my assassination behind my back, and my boyfriend/girlfriend is not sleeping with their brother's cousin's best friend's mother/father. Thank God, now I finally have the reassurance I need to go on living!"

PRO #3

We Get To See Violence On Jerry's Show
North Americans have a fascination with violence. Not everyone likes to watch the "real" violence on the 6 o'clock news, so instead we can watch violence of another kind on Jerry's show. We can also feel no shame in cheering, since everyone in the audience is already doing it.

CON #3

We Get To See Violence On Jerry's Show
Violence should not be glorified. Enough said.

PRO #4

Jerry Teaches Effective Money Making Strategies
Think profiting off other people's misfortunes and sheer stupidity is the diabolical profession of Corporate America? Think liberation of Corporate America? Think again. Is this sort of selfish advancement immoral, loathsome and repugnant? Of course not. Jerry does it, and he is a rich, rich man. Know someone with a horrible secret? Blackmail, my friend. Met someone with an incredibly shocking and unbelievable story to tell? Exploit 'em. Pretty soon you'll be giving up your position as mayor of Cincinnati to do this on a permanent basis. Just like Jerry.

CON #4

Jerry's Show Provides An Enjoyment Of Sorts
The Jerry Springer show reveals family members who hate each other, back-stabbing friends and lovers, and various other individuals struggling among those who really just don't have much going for them. And we enjoy watching this. It is enjoyable for us to watch others suffer and squirm. Just like Seinfeld, it provides us with a perverse, nails-on-a-chalkboard kind of enjoyment.

The Final Thought...

If you ever get a phone call from a certain TV studio in Chicago offering you a free trip and a national television appearance because they know someone who has a secret to tell you, I hope you'll know what to say. But hey, it's entirely up to you.

Every so often during a heated tutorial discussion, Melissa Farmer gets the urge to jump up from her chair and beat the living tar out of the TA.

PRO #5

Jerry's Show Provides An Enjoyment Of Sorts
The Jerry Springer show reveals family members who hate each other, back-stabbing

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your only friends are your of private school gang.

For the next six issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensible. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring.

Elizabeth Hunter, ArtSci '99 models in front of Building #3

Jane Earl, ArtSci '99 models in front of Building #4

MISC. CORRECTION: GEORGE REINBLATT'S EMAIL ADDRESS IS "4GAR1" NOT "4GRI" AS PRINTED IN LAST FRIDAY'S ISSUE. AS A RESULT, THE DEADLINE AS BEEN EXTENDED TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 15TH. MISC. APOLOGIZES PROFUSELY FOR THE ERROR. WE WISH WE COULD TAKE IT BACK, BUT WE CAN'T... WE JUST CAN'T.

Valentine's Day Breakfast

There is something incredibly sexy about breakfast, especially if someone else is doing the cooking. Now, if I were your Valentine, I would want exactly this: crepes with strawberries and whipped cream. If your Valentine has an allergy to strawberries (a la Fearless), use another soft fruit such as blueberries or canned peaches. I warn you: if you're planning on feeding each other, this WILL get messy.

- For the crepes:
  - 1/2 cup flour
  - 3/4 cup milk
  - 2 eggs, beaten
  - 2 tbsp. melted butter
  - 1-1/2 tsp. sugar
  - Butter
- For the filling:
  - Whipped cream
  - Strawberries, stems removed, sliced

1. Put a large plate in the oven and turn it to about 180 F, to keep the crepes warm.
2. Blend ingredients in a bowl with a whisk or a fork. Turn the stove burner to medium-high.
3. Melt a small amount of butter in a non-stick (teflon) frying pan, and swirl it around the coat the pan.
4. Using a ladle or small measuring cup, pour about three tablespoons of batter into the pan and quickly swirl the pan to make to make a very thin, fairly round crepe.
5. When the bottom is golden brown, flip the crepe. I prefer flipping them with my fingers for more control, but a spatula works as well.
6. The second side will not brown as well as the first: it will just look speckled. Place the finished crepe on the plate in the oven, and repeat this process until all the batter is used.
7. Since the crepes are warm, fill them with strawberries and whipped cream as you eat them, or they will be soggy.

*Maple syrup or honey is a nice option with these.

1. Put a large plate in the oven and turn

Sarah LeMay ♡s to cook.

THE JOURNAL

1873

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1999

Ink in the blood? Write for The Journal 272 East St. 533-2800

watch for exciting new job opportunities coming soon to the AMS!

Assault on campus Attempted sexual assault near McNeill House

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

On Wednesday evening, at approximately 1 a.m., a woman was assaulted on Queen's campus. The woman was walking outside on the north side of McNeill House when she was grabbed from behind by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent.

The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground. The assailants then fled, running west towards Collingwood Street, a report on the Campus Security Web site stated yesterday.

"This was a serious assault in our view," said Director of Campus Security Louise Fish.

The only description available of the assailants is that they are approximately 19 years old and that one was wearing jeans. "We are treating this [incident] very seriously," Fish said. Fish also stated it is believed that a sexual assault was perpetrated by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent. The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground. The assailants then fled, running west towards Collingwood Street, a report on the Campus Security Web site stated yesterday.

"This was a serious assault in our view," said Director of Campus Security Louise Fish.

The only description available of the assailants is that they are approximately 19 years old and that one was perpetrated by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent. The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground. The assailants then fled, running west towards Collingwood Street, a report on the Campus Security Web site stated yesterday.

"This was a serious assault in our view," said Director of Campus Security Louise Fish.

The only description available of the assailants is that they are approximately 19 years old and that one was

Useful Phone Numbers

Campus Security	533-6733
AMS Walkhome Service	533-2662
Sexual Assault Crisis Centre	545-6424
Telephone Aid Line Kingston	544-1771
Human Rights Office	533-6886
Sexual Harrassment Advisor	533-6095
University Grievance Advisor	533-6095
Student Counselling Services	533-2893

perpetrated by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent. The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground. The assailants then fled, running west towards Collingwood Street, a report on the Campus Security Web site stated yesterday.

"This was a serious assault in our view," said Director of Campus Security Louise Fish.

The only description available of the assailants is that they are approximately 19 years old and that one was perpetrated by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent. The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground. The assailants then fled, running west towards Collingwood Street, a report on the Campus Security Web site stated yesterday.

"There needs to be a better system in place, another link in Queen's security."

— Laura Green, Victoria Hall Residence Don

Green said Dons receive handouts and photocopies frequently from other groups on campus. "How hard is it for Queen's Security to make photocopies [of the alert] to put in out boxes... there are Don's boxes right inside the door," said Green.

"We have complained about this before," she continued. "There needs to be a better system in place, another link in Queen's security."

Please see Residences on page 3

CMM await ruling Judicial Committee delays report until morning

By FIONA STEVENSON

The Corman-Mori-Minns team's appeal of their disqualification by the Chief Electoral Officer was heard before the AMS Judicial Committee last night. The outcome was decided at approximately midnight last night but would not be released until the committee compiled its official report, to be released today.

It was unknown at the time The Journal went to press whether or not the team would appeal the decision to the Constitutional Tribunal Committee.

The team of Sarah Corman, Owen Minns and Lisa Mori was disqualified from the AMS executive election by the CEO on Thursday, for exceeding their campaign spending limit.

Corman spoke on behalf of the CMM team, beginning, "We ran a fair and honest campaign. We abided by all the existing AMS Elections Policy."

"We believe the CEO misinterpreted AMS policy regarding elections. The CEO did not interpret existing policy but created a new policy... that policy should not be retroactively applied to actions committed prior to the existence of the policy," she said.

"[The cellular phone] was certainly not used in campaigning," Corman said, and went on to define both campaigning and campaign materials, according to AMS policy.

The AMS policy manual defines campaign materials as "any items used to publicize or support a candidate or team of candidates, either on or off campus."

"Did the phone support our campaign? We believe it did not support our campaign. It was tented... by a busy individual who wanted to use the phone to organize his time," Corman said.

The team argued that the fault lies not with them but with inconsistencies in the AMS executive election policy.

If the word "support" is extended beyond campaigning, Corman argued, then other devices such as computers, software, or a new wardrobe, would have to be included in a team's list of campaign expenses. "It's difficult to draw the line," she reasoned.

"Overall we think the policy is not consistent and is certainly not clear," she said.

"This expense was not included because it was properly excluded," Corman stated. "It was beyond reasonable expectation for us to have known that it could have been counted as such."

CEO Darren MacDonald was next to speak. "I believe that a cellular phone does constitute a campaign material," he countered.

"Mr. Graham admitted that somewhere between 50 and up to 75 per cent, possibly more, of the phone calls he made with the cellular phone during the

Woman watched in Stauffer bathroom

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

On Thursday a female student covered a male watching her washrooms at Stauffer library.

While the woman was washing her hands, a man kept peering through the door to the washroom, she would back out when she noticed

"She was in the washroom washing her hands and kept peeking in."

— Louise Fish, director of Campus Security

This occurred several times and the woman saw the same man in the hallway after leaving the washroom. "She was in the washroom washing her hands and he kept peeking in," explained Louise Fish, director of Campus Security.

The woman immediately reported the incident to the Stauffer desk staff who advised her the male was most likely a custodian waiting to enter the washroom in order to clean it.

Please see Woman on page 3

The Judicial Committee met Friday evening in Dunning Hall to discuss the fate of the newly elected AMS executive. Lisa Mori (left), Sarah Corman (near left), Owen Minns (centre), Chief Electoral Officer Darren MacDonald (near right) and the team's campaign manager Ryan Graham (far right) looked on.

PHOTO BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Please see MacDonald on page 3

FREE MONEY

Applications for the AMS Board of Directors' Special Projects Grants are due by Thursday, February 18 at NOON.

For project criteria go to the AMS front desk in the lower JDUC or call Alison Loat at 545-2729

EDITORIAL BOARD
 EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
 Keith Gerein
 Tara Mansbridge
 MANAGING EDITOR
 Laura Macinnis
 NEWS EDITOR
 Fiona Stevenson
 ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
 Shawn Brimley
 Renee Huang
 Jocelyn Laporte

BUSINESS STAFF
 BUSINESS MANAGER
 Claudia Kraft
 SALES REPRESENTATIVES
 Suzanne Armstrong
 Andrew Cooke
 ADVERTISING CO-ORDINATOR
 Mark Fucella
 ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
 Katherine Colbourn
 Annie Ge
 Rachele Vilanueva
 SYSTEMS MANAGER
 Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
 Saturday, February 13, 1999 • Extra • Volume 126
 The Queen's Journal is an editorially independent newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. ©1999 by the Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Carleton Place, Ontario. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year.
 Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8
 Telephone—editorial: 613-333-2600 advertising: 613-333-6111 Fax: 613-333-8728 Email: journal@queensu.ca
 Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
 Circulation: 5,000
 Issue 33 will be published on Tuesday, February 16, 1999

WOMEN'S SELF DEFENCE

LEARN TO PROTECT YOURSELF!!

4 Week Women's Self Defence Course
 Mondays, 7 pm to 9pm
 March 1 through March 22
 Course Fee: $25

- Learn how to:
- Become more aware of your surroundings
  - Reduce your chances of being attacked
  - Defend Yourself, with practical self defence techniques

KANG DUK WON HAS BEEN TEACHING WOMEN'S SELF DEFENCE FOR OVER 25 YEARS.

For more information or to register,

Call: Kristen 531-3747
 Email: qtkd@www.ams.queensu.ca

Residences poorly informed

Continued from page 1

Green said that in the past the Dons have themselves made photocopies of the alert notices and then posted them around the residences, but commented "really we shouldn't have to."
 "I'm the only Don in Vic Hall that knows about this and that's only because I was visiting [The Journal] this afternoon," said Green.

"It hits home," said Green, "[McNeill] is an all female residence... it's disturbing."

As of Friday evening, some

McNeill Hall residents were still unaware of the assault.

"I think it's bizarre that we don't know about it," said Tracy Pennimpebe, ArtSci '02. "We should be more informed."

"We'd like to know if something serious happens... especially since we are an all girls residence," said Elissa Brookes, ArtSci '02.

Anyone with information regarding the assault is asked to contact Campus Security at 533-6733, the Kingston Police at 549-4660, or Crimestoppets at 634-8477.

Woman followed into JDUC

Continued from page 1

Fish said the woman reported the man was not wearing any sort of custodial uniform.

Later when the woman was leaving Stauffer, she noticed the man again, and it appeared that he was trying to follow her. The woman went into the John Deutsch University Centre and the suspect followed her.

Once inside the JDUC, the woman was able to hide around a corner and the man passed by without noticing her. She immediately contacted Campus Security from an assistance phone.

The man is described as being in his late thirties to early forties, with dark brown hair and thick glasses. He was wearing a mid-thigh length navy blue coat, with khaki pants.

When The Journal spoke with a Stauffer library security guard Friday evening, he was not aware of the incident.

"We're keeping an eye out," said Fish. "As far as we know he didn't say anything."

Any information concerning this or a related incident is asked to be reported to Campus Security at 533-6111.

A Stauffer washroom where a female student noticed a man watching her.

PHOTO BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

MacDonald stressed 'equality of access'

Continued from page 1

campaign were related to campaign business," he said. "The campaign is not incidental to usage of the cell phone."

MacDonald admitted the policy is vague. "I have tried to develop an interpretive framework for the existing policy... so I keep making distinctions between cellular phones, pay phones and land lines," he said.

MacDonald said land lines should not be included as campaign expenses, however, "If the land line was acquired specifically for the purpose of the campaign... even if usage of that phone was not limited to the campaign, then that should also be considered a campaign expense... it is an extra cost related directly to the campaign."

"Pay phones are not as onerous and not as unusual as a cellular phone would be," he said. "The fact that this is an emerging technology makes this a complicated issue."

MacDonald stressed that "equality of access" is an essential element of elections. "I don't think the average student has access to a cell phone."

"Convenience is a critical factor in the election campaign. Time is of the essence," he said.

The second part of MacDonald's speech dealt with the issue of an appropriate penalty for the team. MacDonald stressed that his ruling to disqualify the team was based on an explicit policy for exceeding the campaign spending limit.

MacDonald said he did not find any malice in the team's actions and the policy did not explicitly mention cell phones. He added that he does not believe "the use of the cellular phone swung 200 people one way or the other to change the result of this election," and he does not think disqualification is an acceptable penalty.

"I'm asking you... to not overturn the will of the students of Queen's University."

— Darren MacDonald, AMS chief electoral officer

"Because all three of those things were, in my opinion, absent, I'm asking you... to not overturn the will of the students of Queen's University," he said.

MacDonald suggested the maximum fine allowable, $500, as an appropriate penalty.

Following the presentations from both sides, members of the Judicial Committee and onlookers had an opportunity to pose questions and give points of information.

At approximately 8:30 p.m. the Judicial Committee left the room to deliberate, returning after 30 minutes to announce that a verdict would not be reached until late yesterday evening or today.

save your money take the tricolour express

- Toronto $23
- Ottawa $18
- Montreal $25
- Mississauga $27
- Oakville $27
- Hamilton $30
- Burlington $30
- Mitchener $35
- London $40

For Reading Week

Tickets guaranteed until noon the day before departure • Tickets and schedules available at the UMS Exchange • 9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Sat. • Inside the Skyline Lounge in the Upper JDUC
 For more information call 533-2120 *one-way fares

Valentines Party Saturday, February 13

Find your Valentine at Alfie's

Prize Giveaways

Tickets On Sale Today in the JDUC

Funding towards the Sexual Health & Resource Center

Tickets $4 Available at exchange

OPEN ALL DAY

Check out our in-house pub page for weekly events

Monday

Start your week off right with one of our tasty sandwiches... they're the cheapest on campus!

Tuesday

Tuesday Afternoon Flicks are back... And don't forget about

TWO-FIFTY TUESDAYS!

Wednesday

Join us for the Uge... Beverley Hills &

Party of 5 at 8 o'clock. get here early if you want a seat!

Thursday

Thursday Afternoon flicks are also back... HALF-PRICED-LATE Night Nachos after 11pm.

Friday

Friday Afternoon between 4 and 8 is our Acoustic Showcase... offering an open mic to those of you seeking experience or attention or both!

FLUID FRIDAYS

OUR OWN LITTLE NITE OF SIN! FEATURING LIVE LOCAL DJS AND OUR

8 DEADLY SINS.

Saturday

Live BANDS!

Checkout BRAD GARDNER

with Doug McCoy and Matt Barber Tonight!

WE'VE BEEN SAVING SOCIAL LIVES FOR THE PAST 20 YEARS!

Q&P Sandwich Eatin'

PUB WICHES

"All of our sandwiches are made fresh daily from only the finest assortment of meats, veggies and fresh baguettes baked for us daily by the Wolfe Island Bakery."

SOMETHIN' FOR DO VEGHEADS

Vivacious Veggie

"Our tasty vegetarian delight made from your choice of our assortment of fresh vegetables and cheeses."

MEDITERRANEAN DREAM

"A pub favorite... our Mediterranean is made with freshly grilled veggies, humus & tatziki then topped with crumbled feta cheese."

SOMETHIN' FOR THE CARNIVORES

"All of our meat sandwiches come with your choice of lettuce, tomatoes, either swiss or cheddar cheese and any of our wide selection of spreads."

Spam n' Cheese
Smokin' Turkey
What's your (toast) boof?

Chicken Salad
Slamming Salami
MONTREAL STYLE SMOKED MEAT

Choice of spreads: Mustard, Honey Mustard, Dijon & Mayo
All sandwiches come with a side of coleslaw

Lunchtime Monday to Friday 11:30am to 2:30pm
ASK ABOUT OUR COMBOS!

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 16, 1999

CMM appeal ruling

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Students may be heading to the polls a second time to elect their AMS executive, depending on the final decision of the Constitutional Tribunal Committee, which met last night.

The AMS Judicial Committee has overturned the decision of AMS Chief Electoral Officer Darren MacDonald to disqualify the Corman-Mori-Minns team from the AMS executive elections, ruling to fine the team the maximum allowable fine, $500, and institute a re-vote as soon as possible. The re-vote will involve no campaigning and is only open to the original candidates of the election.

The CMM team have appealed the decision to the Constitutional Tribunal. The hearing was held yesterday evening, but at the time The Journal went to press, the ruling had yet to be released.

A press release written by Dan Fabiano, AMS commissioner of internal affairs, stated that the dates for the re-vote will be selected after consultation with the elections team and the Student Constables. According to Fabiano, polling will likely take place either this week or during the week following the reading week.

The CMM team appealed the ruling of the CEO, who last Thursday disqualified the team for exceeding the campaign expense allowance of $400. The CEO ruled that the use of a cellular phone by campaign manager Ryan Graham constituted a campaign material and had to be included in the team's campaign expense account. Since CMM had already spent $392.79, the added cost of the phone, reported to have cost approximately $95, put the team over the limit.

The Judicial Committee unanimously supported the decision of the CEO, but decided to lessen the penalty from disqualification to a fine and re-vote due to the ambiguity in AMS campaign policy regarding cellular phone use.

The official ruling issued by the Judicial Committee stated that "the committee based its decision on... Election Policy which states that 'Campaign materials are defined as any items used to publicize or

Please see Re-vote on page 4
Related story on page 3

Constables patrol Vic Hall

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

As a result of loud, disruptive behaviour, and the loss of two floor seniors on an already under-staffed floor, Queen's Student Constables have been called in to maintain order on

Fourth floor Vic Hall under wraps. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Victoria Hall's fourth floor. Director of Queen's Residences Graham Brown admitted that there have been serious problems on the fourth floor this year.

"Some folks up there, a small number, are having a problem grasping the respect of others. There have been complaints from the floor above and the floor below," said Brown.

There is supposed to be one floor senior for each wing on all floors in Victoria Hall, but this year the fourth floor began with only three floor seniors, rather than four. Of the three seniors, "two have left, one about a week and a half ago for personal reasons," said Brown.

This lack of floor senior applicants has been a problem for the last three or four years, said Brown. Two years ago, a special Ban Righ committee was set up to look into the issue and decided to double the stipend the floor seniors received. However, Brown said the problem still exists.

By sending in Student Constables, Brown said he hopes to "send a message to concerned students that we care. We really needed to do something in the short run."

Student Constables Manager Scott McCann said he received word Friday that Residence Life wished to hire constables to

Please see Vic on page 3

Two women walk past one of the blue lights designed to make campus safer. Please see story on page 3. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

index

Volume 126, Issue 33
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	A&E	23
Editorials	10	Classifieds	26
Opinions	11	Crossword	27
Features	15	MSC	28
Sports & Fitness	19

WEATHERWATCH

Today	Cloudy Periods High 2°C, Low -3°C, POP 30%
Thursday	Partly Cloudy High 0°C, Low -3°C, POP 30%
Wednesday	Rainy High 2°C, Low -1°C, POP 80%
Friday	Overcast High -3°C, Low -6°C, POP 40%

Final exam schedule clashes with leases

BY CRISTINA TYRRELL

As Queen's students turn their thoughts towards final exams, some are realizing that an overlap exists between their housing lease expiry date and the final exam period.

A number of exams are scheduled for April 30, a common end-of-lease date for student houses in Kingston.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford acknowledged the dilemma this schedule poses for many students. "We are very aware of the housing related issues that arise, with many leases ending April 30 and students needing to be out of their accommodation by noon on that day," he said. "Most students with an exam that late find an earlier opportunity to do their moving. It is still a hassle."

Officially, the exam period ends May 1, but Bettyanne Gargaro, associate university registrar (records and services) pointed out that the last final examination will be administered by 2 p.m. on April 30.

Please see Late on page 6

The next regular issue of The Journal will be published on Tuesday, March 2, 1999. Have a great Reading Week, everyone.

Journal editor elected

BY ERIK MISSIO

After two years of having a pair of editors-in-chief at its helm, The Journal finds itself with just one: Sarah Crosbie. And she's more than up to the challenge.

This year's Arts and Entertainment Assistant Editor Crosbie secured 32 of the 41 votes, defeating current Advertising Coordinator Mark Fucella. Including two spoiled

Please see Crosbie on page 3

BEAN TO ANY GOOD EVENTS LATELY?

Celebrate the Campus Community Campaign at

Chilifest

Wednesday, 17 February
11:30 am to 1:30 pm
Grant Hall

Free chili & cornbread

Music

Entertainment

Prizes

www.advancement.queensu.ca/cc/intranet\_yes.html

Feasibility of off-campus blue light program examined

By CRYSTAL BONA

Recent AMS candidate platforms centring around the extension of the blue light security system into the student housing area have raised questions concerning program feasibility.

Alison Loat, Alma Mater Society vice-president (university affairs), is familiar with the issue. "The idea has been tossed around. Anything is possible, but this issue would have to be thoroughly thought through," she said.

"There are a couple of problems. One of the bigger ones is that Campus Security has jurisdiction over the campus, but not the city, so who would respond to the calls?" Loat asked. "Would it be the responsibility of the Kingston police or Campus Security?"

"Right now we don't have a mandate which includes the student village. Our mandate involves the campus specifically," said Louise Fish, director of Campus Security. "The residents of the student village are not on Queen's campus, in Queen's housing, or on Queen's land. This raises the issue of who would respond to the calls."

"In order for our mandate to be expanded to include the student village, we have to take into consideration the kind of statistics for the student village, the crime ratio, our response time, and whether or not the administration would allow us to expand and include the student village," said Fish. "It's not impossible, but issues would have to be worked through."

1998-99 Blue Light Activation Statistics
OF INCIDENTS	CAUSE
27	no known cause
19	mischievous
14	need for assistance
8	accidental

Courtesy of Louise Fish, Campus Security

Loat said another problem with extending the program would be conveying the purpose and function of the blue lights to the Kingston community.

Fish agreed with Loat about educating the Kingston community, adding that there have been incidents of high school students misusing the blue lights.

Loat was also concerned about the costs of purchasing and wiring the student housing area in order to operate the blue light program there. "Each light costs upwards of $10,000 to purchase and install. Whose responsibility would it be to pay for this: the campus or the city?" Loat asked.

"Is this where the money should be spent, or would it be better to focus on issues like lighting in the area?" she added.

Students have mixed views regarding expanding blue light system into the student housing area. "I think they would be useful in the student village because they provide a sense of security," said Sheila Singh, ArtSci '02. "It's nice to know that you have access to help that's so close by, even if you're not on campus."

"Some people still have issues about the blue lights on campus, their location and whether or not there are enough," said Patrick Brown, Sci '02. "Maybe these problems should be worked out before we think about adding lights off campus."

Vic 4 'loud and disruptive'

Continued from page 1

room the fourth floor this week. Two constables will work from midnight until 3 a.m. each night.

"We have heard that Vic 4 has been pretty loud and disruptive, and we will be making sure that people are being quiet [and there] is no open alcohol," said McCann.

McCann said the situation would be re-evaluated by Residence Life on a week-to-week basis. While the shifts for this week have all been booked, McCann said "it might be a problem to do it until the end of the year."

Fourth-floor resident Gavin Foster said his floor senior left last week to live in a different residence. "We weren't ever contacted about the problems, we just got a letter last week that our senior had left," said Foster.

"We're supposedly the worst wing, [but] we have a policy amongst ourselves that we'd tell each other [if there were problems]," said Foster.

A Don in Victoria Hall who did not wish to be identified said the fourth floor was particularly rowdy.

She blames the residence system for the problems that have been occurring with floor seniors. She said that not enough people apply, so you often get people that may not be helping the situation. She believes there is no interaction with the system, you either get the best people who want to help out or you get the worst who are just doing it for the money.

"The noise is pretty bad. Sometimes people are up until 4 or 5 a.m. every night," said fourth-floor resident Joshua Kilberg. "It hasn't been dealt with really well."

Kilberg said there is a lack of communication on the floor as "no one says they're complaining but there are still fines being brought."

The fourth-floor Don refused to comment to The Journal.

The other side of the fence

Elected, disqualified, fined; CMM share their opinions

ANALYSIS

By RENEE HUANG AND FIONA STEVENSON

The Corman-Mori-Minns team may be tired from the whirlwind of activity following their election into AMS executive office, but they are far from ready to quit.

Queen's students who have followed the controversy know of the team's election, and subsequent disqualification by the Chief Electoral Officer, and the AMS Judicial Committee's decision to fine the team $500 and call for a re-vote, along with CMM's appeal of that decision. However, most students know little of how the events have personally affected the three students, who say they want nothing more than to start their jobs in AMS office.

Presidential candidate Sarah Corman talked about dealing with the frustration of having to wait in limbo. "We were really excited to have [the election] over, then it was sort of taken away from us the next day — the happiness, the excitement... Even the night of celebration was a bit clouded," Corman said. "We were also excited to start the jobs."

"I think it reflects very poorly on the AMS... the ruling from the beginning, the way things were conducted."

— Sarah Corman, AMS presidential candidate

The team admits the time since their election last Wednesday evening has been frustrating. "It's sort of put off our return to real life," said Corman.

"We're also operating now in a state of exhaustion after giving 110 per cent on the campaign," said Owen Minns, vice-president (operations) candidate.

Despite the hearings and committee discussions which centred around their campaign manager Ryan Graham and his alleged use of a cellular phone as campaign material, the team maintains their relationship with Graham is strong. In seeking a campaign manager, "we were looking for someone we would choose as a fourth member of a team," Corman said.

"We're kind of in a unique position because we feel that we've been wronged."

— Sarah Corman

"At the same time, I find the situation very frustrating because [renting the cell phone] was something he decided as an individual and now the three of us are being hurt as a result of this," Corman added.

Even after the Judicial Committee's ruling the team remains adamant in defending their belief that they have done nothing wrong, thus they feel that an apology to the student body is not warranted.

"We were very disappointed with the [Judicial Committee's] written ruling," said Corman. "There are a number of errors. They didn't clearly address more than half of our appeal."

"This has all happened internal to the AMS... students have remained on the fringe of things," Mori said.

"I'm afraid students are going to see the AMS as a body driven by bureaucracy... we really want to see the AMS as more than that... while we need policy to operate, the object of the AMS is to deliver to the students," Mori explained. Mending the students' perception of the AMS is a major goal of the team, if they regain office.

The team is also concerned with spending precious time and resources on a re-vote they consider to be unwarranted.

"It's turning out to be a waste of time. The new executive needs to be beginning transition," said Mori. "There are a lot of implications associated with a re-vote... I just want to feel certain it was really justified."

"I think it reflects very poorly on the AMS... the ruling from the beginning, the way things were conducted," said Corman.

Mori added that a re-vote would incur a great cost to the students — approximately $2,500 Corman esti-

Please see CMM on page 7

Crosbie takes helm

Continued from page 1

ballots, there was a 44.5 per cent voter turnout for the elections, held this past Sunday and Monday at the Journal House.

After thanking Fucella for the previous month's competition, Crosbie expressed her joy at the outcome. "The chance to guide and lead the paper was just something I had to try... my spirit and love for this place will be reflected next year."

Crosbie promises that next year's journal will be "an awesome year with new staff and new contributors." She also promises a new section or two, including "Body, Mind and Soul" which she describes as a place to showcase articles on religion, fitness and stress relief.

"I think The Journal's had an excellent year, [both in terms of] staff and editorial content, but next year I hope to see an enthusiasm in The Journal House which would be reflected in the paper itself," she remarked.

One half of the outgoing editor-in-chief team, Keith Gerein, congratulated his successor: "[She'll be] excellent... I hope she enjoys her year as much as Tara and I did," referring to his co-editor-in-chief, Tara Mansbridge.

Sarah Crosbie, Journal editor-in-chief-elect 1999-2000

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Mansbridge offered the same congratulations and a bit of advice: "Listen to your heart... there's nobody who can tell you if you're right or wrong [so] it's best to ignore the critics... and those who seek to compliment you as well."

Mansbridge also echoed the advice given to her by her predecessors: "Sarah better get a lot of sleep before May 1."

With this in mind, Crosbie believes that The Journal next year will be able to maintain its current level of quality while improving in other areas: "I want it to be the paper that people want to... and need to... pick up. I want it to be the medium that [Queen's community] looks forward to every Tuesday and Friday."

AMS election campaigns may go electronic

By SHAWN BRIMLEY

Next year's Alma Mater Society executive election could be very different than the latest one. A proposal by the Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner team to use e-mail as a means to inform students of the election and their platform was rejected, but may be approved for next year's election.

Prior to the election, in a written proposal to Darren MacDonald, AMS chief electoral officer, the KGB team stated, "The best method of campaigning can be disputed by many, but of the many methods used, e-mail is one of the better alternatives. Electronic communication wastes no resources save a tiny amount of electricity and an infinitesimal amount of time."

"It started out as a campaign idea, but in the end, we just thought it had the potential to be a more interesting medium."

— Neil Bunn, former KGB campaign manager

"All we really wanted to do with this idea was to increase voter turnout," said Presidential candidate Mike Beltzner. "To explain what the AMS general elections were, why you should care about it, and our Web page address."

Voter turnout did not increase as the KGB team had hoped, as only 24.46 per cent of eligible voters cast a ballot, down from a 28.53 per cent turnout last year.

"This election was in many ways more exciting than last year's election... and the fact that we lost people over last year percentage-wise, was just unbelievably depressing for me," said Neil Bunn, campaign manager for the KGB team. "A mandate of 44 per cent from 24 per cent of the students, means that about one-tenth of the students actually cared. The fact that [2,840] votes were cast out of 11,000 eligible voters is horribly depressing."

In order to save paper, the KGB team tried to run a primarily digital campaign. "One of our campaign goals was not to use more than 250 sheets of paper, which we met completely," said Beltzner.

Instead of paper, the KGB team, using a program from the University of China, created a list of 8,929 e-mail addresses derived from the Queen's University server, (which contains an exact copy of the Who's Where) out of a total of 11,000 eligible voters.

"We slowly weeded down the list, by eliminating faculty, staff and graduate students," said Bunn. "The list turned into a fairly accurate representation of the AMS student body."

The idea was met with resistance from the other candidates, who, according to Beltzner, assumed the mass e-mails would give the KGB team an unfair advantage.

"It started out as a campaign idea, but in the end, we just thought it had the potential to be a more interesting medium," said Bunn. "We were completely willing to share this idea with everyone."

"Once the other teams were satisfied that we were willing to share this idea with them, resistance faded," said Beltzner. "But the issue of harassment came up."

After meeting with Bettyanne

Please see E-mail on page 6

Re-vote a 'pretty big expense'

Continued from page 1

support a candidate or team of candidates, either on or off campus."

Since the phone was rented by Graham approximately one week prior to the campaign period, and approximately 50 to 75 per cent of the calls made with the phone, by Graham's admission, were for campaign purposes, the committee determined that the phone was indeed used to support the team.

In their report, the Judicial Committee stated they were "of the opinion that the cellular phone supported the CMM team because it was used for communication with campus media like The Queen's Journal... [and] since it was used for organizational, advertising and publicity purposes."

They ruled that "the cellular phone constitutes a campaign expense because it incurs an added expense that land lines do not incur."

The committee stated they chose a lesser penalty than the original disqualification "because we recognise the ambiguity... regarding 'electronic communication'," within the Election Policy.

The CMM team expressed their dissatisfaction with the ruling. "We were very disappointed with their report," said candidate Sarah Corman.

"It's not our fault the policy is unclear... rules have to be clear enough to be followed."

— Sarah Corman, AMS presidential candidate

The team is concerned over the vagueness of the report regarding the decision to hold a re-vote. "A re-vote has a long list of implications... it really should have a strong justification," said candidate Lisa Mori.

"They also misrepresented us," continued Corman, "the bulk of their decision was based on the fact the policy was clear... that is something we are looking to appeal."

Corman said the cost inferred to the students for a re-vote is "ridiculous," adding she thinks "voter turnout will be lower."

Mori pointed to the problem of hitting commissioners and councils for next year, "whoever that is going to be has to start thinking about that," she said.

"We also don't think we deserve a fine," said Corman. "It's not our fault the policy is unclear... rules have to be clear enough to be followed."

Mike Beltzner, of the Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner team, expressed his team's disappointment with the decision to organize a re-vote. "I think it is a waste of time and money," he said.

"The only thing we disputed was the fact they went over their expenses," said Beltzner, claiming that his team felt the CMM team honestly misinterpreted the election policy, not consciously contravened it.

"I would recommend they keep the [original] vote," said Beltzner.

"I don't think the cost of their mistake should be passed on to the students," he said. "Since there would be no campaigning allowed, Beltzner predicted "the voter turnout would be even lower."

Sue Henry, of the Cheeseman-Henry-Bailey team, echoed Beltzner's comments. "It's a pretty big expense to students," she said.

Henry expressed concern over the Judicial Committee's vagueness about why they had imposed a re-vote. "They don't explain why they came about that decision [in their report]," said Henry.

"I don't think the cost of their mistake should be passed on to the students."

— Mike Beltzner, AMS presidential candidate

The appeal process has been difficult for everyone involved. Henry commented, "It's been trying to the teams," she said, adding, "we feel for the [CMM] team."

Henry confirmed that her team would not drop out of the race if there is a re-vote. "Our team wouldn't consider that."

She said her team originally ran because they felt they could do a good job and "that still applies now."

THE QSCSG IS A CAMPUS-COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION MADE UP OF THE WOMAN'S CENTRE, THE ANOREXIA NERVOSA BULIMIA ASSOCIATION (ANAB), THE LESBIAN GAY BISEXUAL ASSOCIATION (LGBA) AND THE SEXUAL HEALTH RESOURCE CENTRE (SHRC)

The QSCSG is Hiring!

One co-ordinator for 1999-2000

RESUME AND COVER LETTER DUE AT THE AMS FRONT DESK BY FEBRUARY 19TH AT NOON.

FOR MORE INFORMATION, CONTACT ESTEE GARFIN, AT 533-2958

puzzle piece

WHAT ARE THE ROARING 20'S WITHOUT A LITTLE LAW BREAKING?

The Contest: Win a FREE Arts and Science Formal Ticket or reimbursement!!

Complete the Formal '99 Advertisement Puzzle™ and submit it to the Core before 4:00pm, March 17

A draw will be made and the WINNER will be contacted March 18

It doesn't take an Einstein to do the math...

$60 > $60

When is $60 greater than $60?

A student gift of $60 shows a strong commitment to Queen's and packs a powerful punch when Queen's asks alumni and friends for millions of dollars to support our school.

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

ROOTS KINGSTON

WINTER SALE EVENT

SAVE! UP TO 50% OFF

sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult, Kids & Baby

229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

United Way

Spring Has Sprung

United Way Semi Formal

March 5, 1999

at the Portsmouth Harbour

8:00pm

Win a trip for two to Las Vegas

Tickets are on sale

Mon Wed Fri Mac-Corry

Tues Thurs JDUC

$15 per person or $25 for two

GOVSEY TRAVEL

CAC

E-mail 'good idea'

Continued from page 4

Gargaro, associate university registrar (records and service), the KGB team was told their idea did not contravene privacy guidelines.

However, Gargaro stated, "The notion of doing mass mailings is a much broader question than just the privacy one."

The proposal was rejected by MacDonald, who pointed to a section of the AMS policy manual which states, "The contents and methods of campaigning shall be above reproach."

In a written ruling, MacDonald stated, "Potential problems with execution and possible student alienation mean that the use of these lists is a method of campaigning that threatens the status of this election as being above reproach."

"Their was a concern expressed by all parties that this e-mail could be considered by some to constitute harassment, an invasion of privacy, or an abdication of responsibility by student leaders to consult students before making this decision," he continued. "Possible outrage over the use of such e-mail could serve to threaten the legitimacy of the election in the minds of AMS constituents. This is not acceptable."

However, MacDonald acknowledged, "A more extensive use of e-mail by the AMS to communicate with its constituents is a good idea. But it is a good idea that requires consultation with those constituents... I appreciate [the KGB team] pressing this issue that the AMS has neglected for too long."

"I was very pleased with the way Darren mentioned in his ruling that this is something that is long overdue, and something the AMS should look into for the future," said Beltzer.

Last Thursday, AMS Assembly agreed to ask students their opinions regarding mass e-mail during the spring referendum.

Tanning Special

- 10 Sessions
- One Bottle of California Tanning Max Lotion
- 1 pair of Peepers

Only $60.00
(Reg. $75.00)

SOLO HAIR DESIGN • TANNING SALON
376 Barrie Street • 542-0823

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from	$349
Calgary	from	$299
Edmonton	from	$299
Regina	from	$349
Winnipeg	from	$239
Halifax	from	$249
Saint John	from	$329
St. John's	from	$299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada Service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston at Montreal
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Exchanges on the rise

BY HILARY CLARK

More Queen's students will be packing their bags for travel overseas this fall.

An increase in the number of international exchanges means six more students will be spending either a semester or a year abroad next year.

Ulrich Scheck, coordinator of International Programs for the Faculty of Arts and Science, is excited about the trend. "Our primary goal is to see that everyone who applies to do an exchange gets a spot," he said.

Scheck said the experience of spending time abroad is an important component of a student's degree.

"The university's goal is internationalization," said Scheck, adding that, in a dream world he would like to see every Queen's student spend a semester abroad.

This year, 80 applicants in the Faculty of Arts and Science applied for 45 spots, up from 39 available spots last year.

Unlike past years, every applicant who was short-listed for an interview with the selection committee was given a spot.

"The university's goal is internationalization."
— Ulrich Scheck, coordinator of International Programs

Students applying for an exchange are chosen primarily on the basis of how they will represent Queen's abroad, which means that marks are not the only criteria. "We look for students who are involved in the Queen's community," said Scheck, suggesting that volunteer hours and community service are just as important as marks.

Queen's is working to provide more spots for students in order to meet the demand for exchanges.

"We're still two to three years away from where we want to be," said Scheck. "But we're encouraged by the increase in interest by students."

Students who obtained spots abroad were not necessarily granted their first choice. "We try to accommodate every student's choice," said Scheck. "But, for example, we have a lot more applicants to Australia than we have spots."

The most popular destination for students continues to be the United Kingdom. "We have the most spots available there," said Scheck, noting that this year there was an increase in the number of placements in the UK. The number of placements at Edinburgh University increased from 10 to 14.

"The trend continues to be moving up," said Scheck.

Scheck added there are other options, such as Herstonceux Castle, available for students wishing to get the international experience as a part of their degree.

Late end disadvantage some

Continued from page 1

"We were very conscious of the difficulties the May 1 date causes for students when leases expire April 30. This was not a particularly easy goal to achieve given the number of exams and the limited amount of exam space available. I'm happy to congratulate the exams' staff in this achievement," Gargaro said.

Every year each Faculty establishes sessional dates according to a particular formula. "There are 14 different possible academic year schedules, depending on when Labour Day falls, and whether or not there is a leap year," Crawford said.

For most Faculties and schools, classes begin the first Monday following Labour Day in September. In those years when Labour Day is late, as it was in September 1998, the first date of class is also late. The natural consequence is that all sessional dates are later, including the start and end dates of the final examination periods in December and in April, Crawford explained.

"But this is one year for which there really could be some choice in the date to start winter term," he said.

This year's winter term started on the first Monday after January 4, however, it wasn't always planned this way. In 1987-88 Queen's started the winter term on January 4, even though the fall term schedule had students writing exams until noon on December 23. "It was a mess," Crawford said of the situation which forced students to return early in January. "It was physically impossible for all exams to be marked and all grades processed. So the next time we encountered this cycle, in 1992-93, we made adjustments."

"Maybe the next time we hit this cycle we should rethink it."
— Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs

This year, although the official exam period ran until December 23, the exam office was able to produce a schedule that avoided the last day and resumed classes on January 11 rather than January 4.

"A lot of thought went into this," said Crawford. "Students love it in December/January, but as the term goes on, the late ending, with a possible exam as late as May 1 becomes unattractive. Maybe the next time we hit this cycle we should rethink it."

"It is conflicting because I have an exam on [April 30] and to move out by [May 1] means that I'm going to start packing the morning of the first," said Michael Kim, Con-Ed '01.

"I also wish the exams' staff would have consulted more students about the end date of the exam period because the majority of second and third-year Con-Ed students have to begin either a two-week or four-week practicum placement respectively in May," Kim said. "Having already lost a month due to practicum placement, the extra week lost puts us at a disadvantage as most employers try to fill their positions at the earliest possible date."

Fast Facts

In Here

Break the Silence

There is a conference being held for women with epilepsy, their care givers and health professionals. Saturday, March 6, from 9am to 4pm at the Kingston General Hospital. The cost is on a sliding scale from $3-$15 and includes coffee, breaks and lunch. Contact 542-6222 for more information.

Good Food Box

The Good Food Box Kingston is a program that offers different sized boxes of fresh vegetables and fruits at an affordable cost. Boxes are paid for at the beginning of the month and are available to be picked up on the third Thursday of the month. Call 530-2239 for more information.

CMM feel 'wronged'

Continued from page 3

mated — and delay hiring of commissioners.

Despite everything, the three have been able to keep things in perspective and see positive aspects to the appeal process. "I think it's given me that much more incentive to show the students that the AMS is more... than what they've seen," said Mori. "I think this has been a good opportunity to show our accountability to the students."

The trio said the appeal process has also allowed them to learn lessons in shared responsibility, continuing the dynamic they developed during campaigning period. "This has continued to teach us a lot about one another and ourselves," said Mori.

"We'll take turns being the motivator, the hard worker, the sad one," added Corman. "We've had some good laughs the last five days. We all tend to make up for each other... there's always someone ready to go."

"[The appeal process] is the first major thing we've done as a team after getting elected," Corman said, explaining that it could be good preparation for the upcoming term, should they continue in office.

"We're kind of in a unique position because we feel that we've been wronged," Corman said, adding that their experiences allowed them to realize the need for policy development. "We will clarify this policy... This case has illustrated it needs to be clarified."

The team is interested in communicating what happened to them to the student body. "We'd like for them to talk to us about this," said Cotman.

puzzle piece

Don't Be A Bluenose

Buy Your Formal Ticket Before Friday

It will be the Bees Knees

March 6, 1999

Tickets: $65 at UBS, JDUC Info. Centre, and the ASUS Core

For information, including information about ticket bursaries, contact the Formal Committee at the Core
183 University, 533-6000 x 75085

A.M.S. Spring Referendum

Need better financing for a project???

Put a question in the Spring Referendum

Nomination period:
FEBRUARY 8, 1999 @ 11:45AM
to
FEBRUARY 19, 1999 @ 5:00pm

Nomination packages are available at the A.M.S. Front Desk

AM'S
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

Questions?
CONTACT CARLY, CAROLYN OR SHAWN
in the
COMMISSION OF INTERNAL AFFAIRS
at 533-6000 ext. 74815

See what the campaign can do...

- 2 new changerooms
- + 4 hardwood team courts
- + 6 lane running track
- + 50-metre, 6-lane pool
- = 100,000 sq.ft. "field house"

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

SAFE BREAK WEEK '99

SUN, SNOW OR STAUFFER?

Whether you stay or whether you go, chances are you'll be partying. Here are a few tips to make your break a safe and enjoyable one...

PARTY AT YOUR HOUSE?

SKI SOBER AND ENJOY APRÈS-SKI WITH A DESIGNATED DRIVER

6 great hosting hints!!!

1. Parties need a focus: Playing pool, dancing, voting for the world's worst sci-if movie. Physical activities like swimming or skating are prone to accidents when you serve alcohol.
2. Give your guests a choice. Have low-alcohol and alcohol-free drinks available.
3. Serve snacks! It is better to eat while drinking than to drink on an empty stomach.
4. Be prepared for overnight guests - especially those who drink too much! Get those blankets and sleeping bags ready.
5. Find out how guests will be going home from your party. Be prepared to take away car keys. Know your designated drivers. Have cash and phone numbers ready for taxis.
6. Don't drink to much yourself!!! You can stay on top of potential problems better when you can think clearly and act quickly.

- Remember - snow reflects 85% of UV rays!
- Use your sunscreen!

TRAVEL CHECKLIST

- Sunscreen (SPF 15), sunglasses, hat
- Latex condoms & birth control
- First Aid Kit (Band Aids)
- Prescription medication
- Camera and lots of film
- Keep sun exposure to a minimum, especially between 11am and 4pm.
- Don't forget your lips. Use a lip balm with SPF 15 for protection.

As the host, you can be held responsible for injuries or damages that occur as a result of the alcohol you provide. You are responsible for what happens to guests when they are in your home or on your property.

- You are also responsible for your guests if you organize events which take place at other locations.
- You may be held responsible for the safety and behavior of your guests until they're sober, not just until they leave your party or function.

Adapted from Addiction Research Foundation material

- Message brought to you by -

Kingston Area Safe and Sober Community Project

Health Outreach Program
Health, Counselling & Disability Services.

Outstanding Contributors: February

MISSIO

ERIK

Erik Missio has an essay due. Erik Missio always has an essay due. But, he still manages to find time to write for the News Section and when he does, the results are fantastic. This month, Erik has dazzled us with his exciting ledes, original story ideas, and willingness to take on last-minute assignments. Erik is an exceptional writer, an aggressive reporter, and always a pleasure to work with.

PATERSON

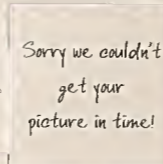

JENNIFER

Jennifer Paterson has written an article championing the cause of one invertebrate or another in every one of the last three Queen's Journal Science sections. Whether she's expounding on the virtues of bioluminescent beetles or grossing out the entire campus with stories of anthropophagous maggots, Jenn brings enthusiasm and a readable style to her articles. She is a welcome addition to the Queen's Journal Science team.

TRENHOLME

JOHN

Even though he should have been placed on the disabled list, all-star contributor John Trenholme battled pneumonia in order to provide the Sports and Fitness section with two great articles. Our section this year has been battling it out for space, so John's concise and insightful articles have really hit a home run for us. A standing ovation for Mr. Trenholme.

FREE MONEY

Applications for the AMS Board of Directors' Special Projects Grants are due by Thursday, February 18 at NOON.

For project criteria go to the AMS front desk in the lower JDUC or call Alison Loat at 545-2729

Our Bathtub Bin shouldn't Make You Blind

puzzle piece

See what the campaign can do...

- $3.4 million endowed for work study and work experience
- $5 million endowed for graduate scholarships
- $21.6 million endowed for national and international entrance scholarships
- $30 million endowed for awards and bursaries
- $60 million endowed for student assistance

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Fidogate

ELECTIONS ARE NOT WON BECAUSE of one cellular telephone — but they can and should be lost by the failure to declare the use of one as a campaign expense. Even though Corman-Mori-Minns may not have intended to violate campaign spending rules, they must be held accountable for spending more than is allowed.

Despite their incredulous claim to the contrary, the cellular phone rented by Ryan Graham was clearly used to support the CMM campaign. Graham, the campaign manager for the team, already admitted that 50 to 75 per cent and maybe even more of the phone's use involved the election campaign. The number for the phone was even given to Journal news editors as the 24-hour contact number for the team. Nonetheless, Sarah Corman tried to convince the AMS Judicial Committee that the phone was not used for campaigning. She even had the gall to claim that Ryan Graham needed the phone because he does not have a regular phone-line at home. Upon further questioning it was revealed that he does indeed have access to a regular phone line, just not one listed under his own name.

One must wonder whether the team was truly unaware that they needed to declare the phone as an expense, or if they were just caught trying to pull the wool over everyone's eyes.

The AMS election laws are very instructive about what is considered a campaign expense: Campaign materials are defined as any items used to publicize or support a candidate or team of candidates.

Since the cellular phone was used primarily to support the team, there can be little doubt that it falls within the scope of this rule. The CMM team's complaint that this was not clearly stipulated in the election law is an untenable defence. If they did not know, why didn't they ask the Chief Electoral Officer? Ignorance is not a defence for overspending.

As for the CMM argument that a cellular phone is no different from a land-line, it neglects the essential difference between the two: a cell phone is mobile and thus provides greater accessibility.

In any election campaign involving volunteers that need to be corralled and a media that wants access to the candidates, a mobile phone provides a distinct advantage. It was therefore unreasonable for the CMM team to just assume that the same rules that applied to pre-existing lines at home also applied to cell phones.

One must wonder whether the team was truly unaware that they needed to declare the phone as an expense, or if they were just caught trying to pull the wool over everyone's eyes. It would have been wiser for the team to have shown a little humility at the appeal hearing and not try to pin the blame on the election law itself. Instead, they presented a mostly specious defence and refused to dispense with the sham that "the cellular phone was not used for campaigning."

The Judicial Committee's decision to reject this defence and impose reasonable sanctions on the team is both fair and consistent with AMS policy. The best interests of students will be served by conducting a re-vote in the near future. Ultimately, the electorate must decide under fair conditions who they want as their AMS executive for the next year. It would be unfortunate if the two other teams deprived them of that opportunity by removing themselves from the ballot. While bowing out now is a noble gesture, it is also an abdication of their moral responsibility to ensure a fair election. Barring a successful appeal of the Judicial Committee's decision, a new vote with all three teams on the ballot should be held as soon as possible.

While everyone involved would have preferred to avoid the consequences of disqualifying the CMM team, few can complain about the process. Both the CEO, Darren MacDonald, and the Internal Affairs Commissioner, Dan Fabiano, have acted with integrity and honesty through the whole affair.

Unfortunately, regardless of the outcome of the re-vote it seems unavoidable that a dark cloud will hang over the AMS executive for the next year.

If CMM continues in office they will have to fight hard to regain their credibility in the eyes of the student community. After all, if they can't manage a $400 campaign, how can they be expected to run a $5 million corporation?

Opening up

I'VE FINALLY DECIDED TO THROW in the towel. After trying for a few years to get back on the horse, I've given up trying to date. The last relationship I was in lasted for two years and, at the time, was the greatest thing to ever happen to me. As I look back on it, however, I realize that it was a relationship with severe physical and emotional problems.

I'm sure most guys would not admit being abused by a girl.

As I began to talk about it with my friends, I realized that I had been abused throughout the relationship both physically and emotionally. Now I'm sure most guys would not admit being abused by a girl since it isn't the most "manly" thing to bring up. It is a serious problem though, since guys are also the least likely, on average, to share their feelings.

In my experience, I never told anyone because I believed it all to be my fault and felt that obviously I was getting what I deserved. In my mind, I felt that if I was a nice guy, I'd be treated nicely, if not, then I'd be treated like your basic jerk.

I realize that not everyone is like my ex-girlfriend. I recognize that there are probably hundreds or thousands of women on this campus that are sweet, funny and genuinely caring. To be honest, I'm probably more scared than anything else. It's a dangerous thing to have to open up again and start to place your trust in someone. I made the first mistake by starting to go out with someone before I really knew them and have vowed never to make that mistake again.

The problem I have now is that when I start to get interested, I usually make some wise-ass comments because I start to get defensive. Instead of letting the person know what I really think about something, I'll make a quick joke in order to get attention away from myself.

The problem with the abusive relationship I experienced was the guilt. I started doing nice little sweet things but eventually they turned into things that, if not delivered, meant that I was an insensitive prick. If I said something she didn't agree with, there would be a quick punch — not exactly the kind of stuff people like to brag about. If I spent any time with my female friends, I was immediately accused of being unfaithful or unloving — even after two years.

While I obviously wish the experience never happened, it has made me learn to appreciate my friends and understand and sympathize with women and men who have suffered abusive relationships.

Thanks for taking the time to listen.
Cheers,
BY ROB MACNEIL

Bons Mots: If I'm going to be trivial, inconsequential, and deceitful... then I might as well be in government.
— Joseph Heller

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gernan
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Oan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Liu

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, February 16, 1999 • Issue 33 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community Press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganouago, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston communities are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-editors-in-chief. Please inquire about further preference policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone—(416) 613-5333 ext. 2800; advertisement: 613-533-6711
Fax: 613-533-6720; Email: journal@post.queensu.ca
Circulation 9,000
Issue 34 will be published on Tuesday, March 2, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Heather Aggus, Sarah Jane Bird, Crystal Bona, James Brown, Hilary Clark, David McCluskey, Erik Misso, Ben Molson, Erik Morris, Nestie Sager, Dairde Swain, Christine Tyrrell.

Photographers: Bob Huih.

OPINIONS

talking

HEADS

How did you vote in last week's AMS election?

Scott Gagnon Sci '02
How Jun Kong Sci '02

Tara Whalen Artsci '01
Steve Sheffer ConEd '01
Heather McDonald Artsci '01

"There was an election?!"
Neil Walsworth Sci '02
Russell Ibbotson Sci '02
Mark Mylvaganam Artsci '02

PHOTOS BY CHRIS GLOVER

Spending limit is too low

IT CAME AS NO SURPRISE TO HEAR allegations that a team of AMS candidates had breached the $400 spending limit. This restriction is ludicrously low for the size of the Queen's electorate, and is practically begging to be violated. Restrictions on campaign spending need to be rethought; at the very least, the $400 figure needs drastic upward revision.

According to the February 11 Journal Extra, there were 11,613 eligible voters in the AMS election. Four hundred dollars, then, leaves just 3.4 cents per voter. In other words, even a campaign with no other costs could not afford to give a photocopied handbill to each voter, let alone pay for long distance, stickers and the like.

Competition itself almost disappears, as the grossly under-funded campaigns fail to even make a ripple in the collective consciousness of Queen's.

To put this in perspective, the last election I worked on spent more than $400 on donuts.

Someday soon, students will have to decide whether the AMS is an amateur or a professional organization. Right now, the posters reminding us to vote emphasize the magnitude of the AMS budget and the salaries paid to the troika at the top. "You are a shareholder..." etcetera. But the $400 limit tells prospective voters and candidates that this is little league, kid's stuff, nothing serious.

The motivating fiction of campaign spending restrictions is that the playing field is somehow leveled; that candidates will compete on the basis of merit rather than wealth. This has some unintended — and perverse — consequences.

With sharply restricted finances, candidates must compete on the basis of pre-campaign popularity, since they would lack the funds to build name recognition.

The wealthy get an even greater advantage than before, since they can use their personal assets, like vehicles, fax lines, scanners and workspace; meanwhile, the relatively poorer candidates, who might otherwise rent equivalent facilities, are left to go entirely without.

Competition itself almost disappears, as the grossly under-funded campaigns fail to even make a ripple in the collective consciousness of Queen's.

This last effect, in my opinion, explains the utter apathy with which AMS elections pass, like a bum shuffling down the sidewalk. The candidates for a position are the best motivated and most enthusiastic advocates of voter turnout. But the present system prevents even the best of them from creating outreach and persuasion campaign, by normal political standards. At the same time we all lose an opportunity for widespread reflection and debate on our university's direction.

If we are really concerned about level playing fields, we should set a limit on the contributions each individual is allowed to make to a campaign, but allow the campaigns to raise funds at will. This would allow fundraising to serve a gate-keeping function: we can assume that campaign teams with no popular appeal would draw no financial support. As such, if they want to waste our time, they would have to waste their own cash in doing so.

Naturally, the rules as they exist must be enforced. I hope the incoming AMS executive, whoever they are, with the $400 frustration fresh in their memory, will move to prevent future elections from being equally under-funded.

JAMES BROWN
ARTS '02

The clitoris at the centre of the campus

Dear Editors,

Having read Tara Mansbridge's opinion piece in last Tuesday's Journal, I have only one question: why did she feel the need to put this in print?

Does she really think the student populace at large has any interest whatsoever in her masturbation habits? I do not challenge her right to own and use as many vibrators as she likes; what I do challenge, however, is her misuse of a university resource. Her position as Editor-in-chief of a campus publication brings with it both power and responsibility; to abuse this power to feed her own ego and exhibitionism is frankly embarrassing. Wake-up call, Tara!

Letters to the Editors

Queen's does not revolve around your clitoris! What's next? Fascinating explorations of Tara's bowel movements? Please, people, it's a campus newspaper. Can't we stick to the news?

Mike Martelle
Arts '98

Not so subtle innuendo

Dear Editors,

We would like to commend you for printing Jen Evans' letter in The Journal, (2/12/99.) We feel that Ms. Evans really put her finger on something which is hard to get a hold of. Her probing insight into the often sticky issues concerning masturbation was thoughtful

Continued on page 12

See what the campaign can do...

165 new print journal titles
+
1,000 more new books annually
+
1,200 new electronic full-text journal titles
+
72,000-article Encyclopedia Britannica online
=
annual purchasing power of $8 million endowed for libraries

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

generAsian
addressing asian issues
raising asian awareness
promoting asian relations

ASIAN CONFERENCE '99
February 19-20, 1999
Queen's University, Kingston

Keynote Speakers and Workshops featuring

Dr. Michael Howes (Professor of Politics, Queen's University)
Dr. Lorna Wilgint (Canada Relations, Queen's University)
Shirley Wong (Consultant, HK Economic & Trade Council)
Calvin Wong (Co-Founder of Asian Avenue.com)

Dr. Audrey Kobayashi (Director of Women's Studies, Queen's University)
Eliot Chang (Independent Entertainer, NYC)
Vivian Lee (Calgary Anchor Person)

Sponsored by

for more info, email 6ast1@qlink.queensu.ca or check www.ams.queensu.ca/qseac/conference.htm

Continued from page 11

and stimulating. The helping hand she offered Tara Mansbridge in this, the loneliest time of the year, was touching.

Todd Jackson &
Robyn Thompson
Arts '99

He says what he means

Dear Editors,

I read with much amusement in last Friday's Journal that the CMM team is to be disqualified for overspending a whole $40 or so during their campaign.

Continued on page 12

New Show Speaking Volumes

curated by Oboya, Montreal, curated by Cive Robertson

18 February - 19 March

at Modern Fuel Gallery, 21a Queen Street

A library of video documents on the mediation of art practices in artists' projects, journalism and documentaries from 1954-1995.

Free admission

Presented with the financial assistance of The Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario Arts Council and the City of Kingston, in cooperation with Kingston Artists' Association

Agnes Etherington Art Centre
<http://www.queensu.ca/ageth/>

TELEFILE

Easier tax filing and faster refunds for students

It's free, at your fingertips, and available seven days a week.

Check your personalized income tax package for a TELEFILE invitation.

For more information, visit our Web site at:

www.rc.gc.ca/telefile/

Revenue Canada

Canada

OPINIONS

Food bank users are in need Food bank coordinator responds to criticism

KATHY SKELTON'S ARTICLE in last Friday's Journal, "Rotten food bank advertising," is a good example of the myths that exist on campus, and more broadly across society, about food banks. I'm all for discussing the merits of the AMS food bank's advertising — which emphasizes cutting grocery costs in half and shopping for free — as well as the food bank's policy of not asking for questionnaires and proof of financial need. That discussion, though, must be informed, must be intelligent, and must be premised upon the reality of hidden hunger on campus and not on senseless stereotypes and assumptions.

There are many programs and services in society that run successfully on an honour system, and the student food bank at Queen's is one of them.

Many students, including the author of last week's Journal article, seem concerned that the food bank is being abused by students who don't need to use it. Such critics have clearly thought through the idea of taking advantage of a food bank, getting free food from the student government and instead buying clothes, CDs and beer, yet don't do so themselves. The vast majority of students see the ads in The Journal, hear about the service through friends, yet are too honest to take advantage of a food bank. There are many programs and services in society that run successfully on an honour system, and the student food bank at Queen's is one of them.

Food bank usage tripling since September makes a lot of sense. Students, having paid for holiday presents, tuition and books for two terms, and incidentals along the way, have less money now than six months ago. One in three students at Queen's, about 4,000 students, are on OSAP or other forms of government assistance. The average student debt-load (for students with debt) upon graduation is $25,000. That's a $6,000 shortfall each year. Add to this students with bank loans, loans to parents, part-time students who fall short yet don't qualify for OSAP, and those whose parents' income is too high yet are receiving little or no support for their education, and you have a group of people who are so deeply in debt, so far from covering their expenses, that in any other community they would be considered ideal food bank users.

The challenge for the food bank remains encouraging more people to use the service. For the most part, students feel comfortable applying for OSAP, loans, and bursaries, yet feel uncomfortable using a food bank. The question becomes how to encourage students in need, students who never thought they'd need to use a food bank, and make them comfortable enough to use a service that is all too often stereotyped as being for the homeless and destitute.

Well, we know the old system doesn't work; after all, the AMS wouldn't need its own food bank if students felt comfortable enough with the city food bank. I've met students who have used Kingston's city food bank, filled out an application form and sat down for an interview in order to prove that they are in financial need. They never went back after that experience, not because they weren't in need, but because they saw it as an intrusion on their privacy and pride.

At Queen's we have a group of people who are so deeply in debt, so far from covering their expenses, that in any other community they would be considered ideal food bank users.

Challenging hidden hunger on campus isn't about lengthy application forms, credit checks, and when it's all said and done, handing out food in a cardboard box. It's about taking out housemates, classmates, and friends at their word, trusting their judgment that they're using a food bank because they need to, treating them like customers who command respect, and recognizing that people can work hard, budget properly, yet still fall short that week, month, or term.

ERIC MORRIS
AMS FOOD BANK COORDINATOR
ARTS '99

New Beer in Ontario

Colt 45 8% alc./vol.
• clear bottles
• 12 packs
NEW at The Beer Store

WARNING
CONSUME IN MODERATION. THIS BEER IS 8% ALC. VOL. WHICH IS NEARLY TWICE AS MUCH ALCOHOL AS REGULAR BEERS.

Continued from page 12

Nothing is ever going to change regardless of who's in charge that will have any meaningful impact on our lives. Every year each team runs on essentially the same platform and the "election" is more a popularity contest than anything else.

True, the arrogance and contempt which the CMM team exhibited during their campaign was insulting and repulsive. As noted in a letter to The Journal last week by the QP staff, the CMM team either lied or at least misled people about the state of the QP to try and create an election issue to help them. They never seemed to really acknowledge their opponents and preached their ideas as if they came from divine inspiration. Apparently they also broke the campaign spending limit and now seem to be more pissed off that they got caught rather than actually apologetic about the situation.

So, they're a bunch of tight-assed, arrogant pricks who sort of cheated to win. Are the other teams any better? Surely the wonderfully immature Beltzner team which was so petty it decided to say, screw the election results, let's try and get the winners on a technicality is a better choice.

Thanks for that bit of hard-core detective work guys. Way to lose with dignity. If CMM won, let them keep their jobs. I hate to break it to the other teams, but no one cares anyway. There was never much choice to begin with. However, immature, petty crap like what the Beltzner team is pulling and the arrogant, holier than thou attitudes of the CMM team are both reprehensible and both will no doubt disillusion even more voters for next year. If either team really cares about helping students get involved, they'll change their attitudes immediately.

Thanks for coming out guys. You sure are making a difference.

Brock Jones
Artsci '00

ASUS election team fights back

Dear Editors,

In response to the February 12 letter entitled "ASUS election team goes too far," we would like to make some clarifications about our apparent "error in judgement."

There was no error in judgement. ASUS policy clearly states that all candidates must take a leave of absence from all paid and/or volunteer positions held within ASUS and the AMS, unless personal financial considerations are an issue (Section C-1/e/i). Furthermore, policy gives the CEO the responsibility for ruling on any and all ASUS election campaigning, expenses and disputes (Section C-1/b/i). As well, roles within ASUS do not end until all transition has ceased. Those who have held ASUS positions are obligated, in policy, to transition with their successors as a component of their job (all of Section C-5).

It was brought forth on February 5 by one executive team that "OC Transition" was going to be held that evening and there was concern that this was an infraction of ASUS policy. Any complaint made to the CEO requires her to examine the validity of the complaint and make decisions in accordance with policy and precedent.

Head Gael, Jehn Mihill, was contacted. She informed us that the event was indeed ASUS OC Transition; that attendants at this party included old and new OC members meeting for the purposes of transition; that the candidates would be there specifically because of their role on ASUS OC '98; and that Mr. Safford and Miss Bell would be acknowledged in their role on OC by the incoming OC '99.

Therefore, the CEO had no other alternative but to inform the candidates that if they attended the event, it would be an infraction of campaign rules subject to penalties and/or disqualification. Before they were told, however, the CEO obtained the opinions of the AMS Elections Team. Based on the facts given, AMS policy supported our CEO's decision and the AMS Internal Affairs Commissioner also confirmed that her decision was appropriate and sound.

To claim that there was an "error in judgement" suggests a lack in the full understanding of the facts involved in this decision. The circumstances were fully explained to the candidates and no appeals were made after the decision was rendered.

In the future, it would be appreciated if complainants would consider approaching the Elections Team beforehand to verify facts rather than immediately issuing a letter to The Journal. This would prevent fallacious assumptions, conjecture, and arrogant judgements of character from occurring again.

Or at the very least, spell our names right the next time.

Kate Slater
ASUS Chief Electoral Officer

Alun Ackery
ASUS Chief Returning Officer

Adrian Viens
ASUS Deputy Internal Affairs
Commissioner

Carol Liao
ASUS Internal Affairs Commissioner

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Double the Power of Your Degree

Humber College has more Post-Graduate Programs than any other College in Canada!

One year of a college education designed specifically for university graduates increases the likelihood of employment. 93% of Humber's graduates find career-related jobs within six months of graduation. An information session will be available on your campus.

Wednesday, March 3, 1999

1:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m.

MacKintosh - Corry Hall room D211

"Job-ready colleges are becoming the finishing school of choice for many university grads."

Maclean's Magazine, special issue October 26, 1998

To register, please call (416) 675-6622 ext. 4791 or email: liaison@admin.humberc.on.ca

Humber
College

www.humberc.on.ca

A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE

PLAYERS RACING

FOLLOW THE TEAM: WWW.PLAYERS-RACING.COM

FEATURES

On Death Row

HIP-HOP PART III IS DEAD

The smoke rising from Tupac Shakur's death in 1996 is still clearing and has many wondering whether the late entertainer was the victim of an internal murder conspiracy in the music industry. Others maintain Shakur's death was a hoax.

By BEN MOLSON

"How Long Will they Mourn Me?"
— "How Long Will they Mourn Me" from Thug Life

TUPAC AMARU SHAKUR died Friday, September 13, 1996 from gunshot wounds he suffered seven days earlier in Las Vegas, Nevada. While standing through the sunroof of his BMW, gunmen in a white Cadillac fired 13 shots at the vehicle. Shakur's crooked producer, Marion "Suge" Knight, was grazed in the drive-by.

The rap star's death ignited a gang war which pitted two of America's most prominent gangs (the Bloods and the Crips) against each other. Many speculate that Shakur's demise was influenced by his well-known conflict with rappers Sean "Puffy" Combs and Christopher "Biggie Smalls" Wallace (who was shot and killed while in his car later in 1996). Other theories maintain the shooting was a gang-hit by Knight's rivals — some argue that Knight himself was responsible. Others even speculate that Shakur faked his death and is now living underground.

The official police investigation produced no arrests and Shakur's killer is still unknown.

"Give me a paper and pen so I can write about my life of sin"

— "Life Goes On,"
from All Eyez on Me

SHAKUR WAS BORN June 16, 1971 in Brooklyn, NY, just one month after his mother, Afeni Shakur, was acquitted of charges related to her membership in the Black Panthers. Named after an Inca chief, Tupac Amaru means "shining serpent" and Shakur is Arabic for "thankful to God."

He and his mother were often forced to live in shelters moving between Harlem and the Bronx until 1986 when he and mother moved to Baltimore, Maryland. There, he enrolled in The Baltimore School for the Performing Arts, and was described by teachers as "an extremely talented young actor." Shakur also started writing his first rap songs in Baltimore under the performing name MC New York and at 17 Shakur moved to Marin City, California, where he dropped out of school and began selling dope. "Leaving that school affected me so much. Even now, I see that as the point where I got off track."

Shakur did find success in 1990 when he joined the rap group Digital Underground and, with their hit "The Humpty Dance," he had his first break. Soon after, he tapped in his first solo album "2Pacalypse Now" and starred in the Earnest Dickerson film Juice.

"Grab your glocks when you see 2Pac. Call the cops when you see 2Pac."

— "Hit 'em up" from How Do U Want It

SHAKUR'S CAREER EXPERIENCED a boom from 1992 to 1994 — which saw him starring with Janet Jackson in the film, Poetic Justice and releasing two albums that quickly went platinum. During this same period, however, Shakur developed a long rap-sheer from his brushes with the law. In 1992 he was involved in an altercation resulting in his half-brother's arrest for the accidental shooting of a 6-year-old bystander (the charges were dropped on account of a lack of evidence.) On two separate occasions police officers were shot and the perpetrators fingered 2Pac and his music as inspiration. Dan Quayle, vice-president at the time, stated that 2Pac's music "has no place in our society."

A more credible conspiracy theory is that Shakur's producer, Suge Knight arranged the hit.

Shakur himself was arrested on several occasions, once for taking a swing with a baseball bat at another rapper during a concert, once for allegedly shooting two off-duty cops who were harassing a black morrist (the charges were dropped), and finally for a sexual assault case in which Tupac was not directly involved, but he allegedly allowed the assault to occur. It was while on trial for sexual assault that Tupac's life took a dramatic turn.

"Five shots couldn't drop me, I took it and smiled."

— "Hit 'em up"

IT OCCURRED IN NOVEMBER OF 1994. Shakur was shot five times and robbed of $40,000 in jewellery. The police concluded that the robbery was the sole motive for the shooting but Shakur thought otherwise, believing he had been set up.

The night of the shooting Shakur had been asked to rap on "Little Shawn's" album at the Quad City recording studio in New York. After arriving at the studio Shakur entered the building with three friends. Standing by the elevator were two black men in their 30s. They went straight for Shakur, pulled out identical 9mm handguns and demanded his jewellery. Shakur refused and the ensuing fight left Shakur shot twice in the head, once in the testicles and twice in the mid-section. After regaining consciousness, he went for the lobby door and, according to Shakur, there was already a police cruiser waiting. Thinking he had only been shot once, and being wary of police, he limped to the studio where he was greeted by Biggie, Puffy and others, all allegedly surprised to see him (even though he'd buzzed them saying he was coming). This, in addition to the fact that none of them offered help, is what made Tupac believe he had been set up. He then sat down, asked someone to roll him a joint, called his girlfriend, and, finally, called 911.

The responding officers were the same ones who had just testified against Shakur in his rape trial — an amazing coincidence given the number of cops in New York City. According to Shakur, the first officer to see him was smiling and, after noticing the gunshot to his groin, asked, "What's up Tupac, how's it hanging?" Shakur was taken to hospital and the gunshots were ruled as "flesh wounds." Feeling unsafe, Shakur left the hospital and went to court the next morning. He was acquitted of sodomy and weapons charges but he was found guilty in the case of sexual assault. Shakur was sentenced to four and a half years at New York's Riker's Island penitentiary.

"Well this is how we gon' do this: fuck Mobb Deep, fuck Biggie, fuck Bad Boy as a staff, record label, and as a mother fuckin' crew. And if you want to be down with Bad Boy, then fuck you too."
— "Hit 'em up"

SHAKUR AND BIGGIE had been friends prior to the shooting and Tupac had even given Biggie Smalls his start in the rap industry by letting him rap at his concerts. Their friendship, however, ended abruptly after the shooting.

While in prison Shakur heard rumours from other inmates that Biggie Smalls and Puff Daddy had known about the shooting and had provided the gunmen with information concerning his location. This solidified Tupac's belief that Biggie, Puff Daddy, and others involved with the Bad Boy record label had set him up to be killed. But why would Biggie not warn Tupac about the shooting? In an interview Tupac (referring to Biggie) said "fear got stronger than love and niggas did things that they know they wasn't supposed to do."

Makaveli, an alias of Shakur, is another spelling for Machiavelli, an Italian war strategist who faked his own death to deceive his enemies.

So who did Biggie fear? One theory points to a criminal organization in New York known as the "Black Mafia." The rumour is that this organization funded Bad Boy records in its early years and that before the label became successful, the Black Mafia demanded Shakur sign with Bad Boy. He refused and the 1994 shooting was allegedly punishment for saying no.

In October of 1995, Shakur was bailed out of prison by Suge Knight for $1.4 million. Immediately after, Tupac signed with Knight's record label Death Row. While with Death Row Tupac released songs with more of a "gangsta rap" edge than in his previous work and

Continued on next page

Out late at night?
Don't want to walk alone?
Looking for a smile to brighten your evening?
Call Walkhome.
We've already walked over 5,000 people this year.
That's more than 10,000 km.
So we think we can help.

Walkhome 533-2662
or you can still call our old number at 545-2662

This is your opportunity to Cross cultures

Pre-departure Information for Education Abroad Participants

An information session on setting goals and objectives, researching the right opportunity for you, preparing a pre-departure checklist and health and safety concerns
Tuesday, February 16, 5:30 - 7:00 pm
in the Music Listening Room, JDUC

The Regional Speaker Series Continues

Tuesday, March 2:
"China, Japan and South-East Asia"
Wednesday, March 10:
"Australia and the Pacific"
5:30 - 7:00 pm
in the Music Listening Room, JDUC

Income Tax Workshop and Volunteer Training
Volunteers are needed to assist international students during the months of March and April with filling out their income tax forms. Training will be given by Revenue Canada personnel from the local Kingston office. Advanced registration required with the Centre.

The International Centre
at Queen's University in the JDUC
just past the Queen's Pub
Tel: (613) 533-2604 Fax: (613) 533-6190
http://www.quic.queensu.ca

STOP THE VIOLENCE: A New York City mural stating: "Live by the Gun, Die by the Gun."

began to publicly threaten and humiliate Biggie and those associated with Bad Boy records. In his song "Hit 'em up" Tupac claims to have slept with Biggie's wife, Faith Evans, and threatens everyone associated with Bad Boy with lyrics such as "we gonna l'il all you mother fuckers" and "fuck you, die slow mother fucker. My fo' fo' [44 calibre handgun] make sure all yo' kids don't grow." This very public feud later fuelled beliefs that Bad Boy was responsible for Shakur's eventual death.

"Only God can judge me now."
— "Only God Can Judge Me"
from All eyes on me

SEPTEMBER 7, 1996. Shakur attends the Bruce Seldon/ Mike Tyson fight in Las Vegas with Knight and other friends. After the fight Tupac and his party are seen on casino security cameras getting in a physical altercation with another man. Suge Knight is a member of a gang known as the Bloods and this fight is apparently due to the ongoing hostility between Blood and Crip members.

According to a police informant the man on the security camera is named Orlando Anderson and has stolen the Death Row medallion worn by a friend of Tupac's, Travon Lane. Lane points Anderson out to Shakur, Shakur approaches Anderson and reportedly asks "You from the South?" (A reference to the Southside Crips.) A fight ensues but ends quickly.

About an hour later, as Death Row's entourage of cars arrive at Knight's nightclub, a white Cadillac pulls up, from which a gunman emerges firing a Glock .40 calibre handgun. The gunman shoots 11 times at Tupac's car. Tupac is hit four times in the chest and Knight's head is grazed with shrapnel.

The informant goes on to say that immediately after the shooting, Travon Lane identifies the gunman as Orlando Anderson.

Tupac's car makes a U-turn and attempts to drive to the hospital. However, it gets stuck in traffic on Vegas's "strip" and paramedics resort to transporting Shakur from traffic to the hospital by helicopter.

Continued on next page

Dover's

MEN'S WEAR

IS THE OFFICIAL SUPPLIER OF MEN'S FORMAL WEAR FOR THE
99' ARTS AND SCIENCE FORMAL

BOOK BEFORE FEBRUARY 28TH
TO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF OUR TEN DOLLAR STUDENT DISCOUNT

DOVER'S
MEN'S WEAR
155
PRINCESS
ST.
544-6864

Continued from last page

A Blood-Crip gang-war ensues. The day after the Las Vegas shooting, a white Cadillac is seen entering a Compton body shop owned by Orlando Anderson's cousin. According to the police informant, three Blood sects meet and decide on three drive-by shooting locations. Later that day, a man reportedly in the Cadillac is shot in the back. Two days later another Southside Crip member identified as an occupant of the Cadillac, Bobby Finch, is shot in Compton.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 13. Tupac Shakur dies and by the next morning seven Crips and five Bloods have been shot. One of the Bloods who has been shot tells the police that the man who shot him was Orlando Anderson.

Anderson was also fingered for an April 1996 shooting and was reportedly seen with a Glock .40 calibre handgun just prior to the Las Vegas shooting (this was an important tip since the model of the gun used had not yet been made public.) Anderson was arrested in connection with the April 1996 shooting, but no charges followed.

DEATH ROW ALL-STARS: From left (clockwise): Snoop Doggy Dogg, Dr. Dre, Suge Knight, Tupac Shakur.

To this day no one has been charged with Tupac's murder, due to a lack of evidence and witnesses. This lack of witnesses is mostly based upon the Death Row camp's unwillingness to aid the police. The direction of the police's investigation points to a Blood-Crip gang war being the probable cause of Tupac's death, but many other theories abound.

"Suge shot him"

— "Bomb First (My 2nd reply)" from Makaveli: The Seven Day Theory

THE INTERNET HAS BECOME a haven for Tupac "conspiracy buffs" and many theories have been published. Some theories point to a delayed hit by East Coast enemies of Tupac. However, this opinion has generally lost favour because no Bad Boy affiliates were identified in Las Vegas at the time of Tupac's death. A more credible view is that Knight arranged the hit.

Knight was known for being a ruthless business person whose practices sometimes broke the law.

An example of this is when he allegedly "negotiated" with Eazy-E — the late rapper who at the time was Dr. Dre's producer — for Dre's contract by threatening him with a baseball bat and metal pipes. Days later, Eazy-E granted Knight Dr. Dre's contract for virtually no compensation. In another incident Knight reportedly convinced rapper Vanilla Ice to sign over the rights to several of his songs by threatening to drop him from a 15th floor balcony.

Knight's main motive for killing Shakur would have been money. Tupac was just completing work on his third album with Death Row, fulfilling his contract. Once his contract expired, Tupac had plans to start his own record label and had over 200 unreleased songs that would become the property of his own label. However, with Tupac dead, the unreleased material went to Death Row and with the enormous publicity over Tupac's death, his market value shot up substantially.

Not only would Knight profit from future Tupac record sales, but he would keep the money that he had reportedly stolen from Tupac in the past. From the time he signed with Death Row until his death, Tupac should have been paid $517,000,000 but when he died his bank account was virtually empty and he owned no real estate, stocks or bonds.

Knight's reputation for embezzling sales from his artists stems from alleged incidents involving Snoop Doggy Dog (who is still signed with Death Row), and Dr. Dre (who as a result left Death Row, but did not press the issue.)

Knight even went so far as to tell Tupac that he owed Death Row money. Furthermore, on the surveillance camera footage shot the night of Tupac's death, Knight is seen telling Shakur to take off his bullet-proof vest (which he wore almost always when in public) because it was hot and they were going to be dancing later. After Tupac's death Knight did nothing to cooperate with police and even said publicly that if he did know who killed Shakur he wouldn't tell the police. Knight also told others from Death Row not to talk to the police. Mysteriously, the single witness who was helping with the investigation (Khadafi, a rapper who was to rap for Tupac's record label) was killed shortly after Tupac died.

Finally, a strange lyric occurs in the first three seconds of Tupac's Makaveli album: after the first bell "Suge shot him" can be heard, and the voice is reportedly Khadafi's.

Knight is currently in prison for unrelated charges and has never been announced as a suspect in Shakur's murder.

"I've been shot and murdered, can't tell you how it happened word for word, but best believe that niggaz gon' get what they deserve."

— "Niggaz Done Changed (Richie Rich feat. 2Pac)" from Seasoned Veteran

Another theory gaining popularity is

WHEN WILL ENOUGH FINALLY BE ENOUGH?

WHEN WILL ENOUGH FINALLY BE ENOUGH?: Biggie Smalls, both a one-time friend and foe of Shakur, met a similar demise to his rival only months after the shooting in Las Vegas, which led to Shakur's death.

that Shakur faked his own death. Chuck D., a rapper with Public Enemy, lent his support to this theory when he released his "Top 18 Reasons Why Tupac is Still Alive." Some of these reasons are more credible than others, but all together they do point out some intriguing inconsistencies.

Some point to the fact that corruption is still rampant in Las Vegas and thus, the necessary officials could have been bribed in order to protect the scandal. Furthermore, the Las Vegas strip was packed with cars the night of the shooting (Tupac's own car got stuck in traffic); however, the white Cadillac was able to

"Sometimes the lure of violent culture is so magnetic that even when one overcomes it with material success, it continues to call. Tupac just couldn't break the cycle."

— the Reverend Jesse Jackson

rapidly flee the scene. Others observe that Las Vegas is in the desert and ask, "How could the Cadillac have escaped without a helicopter spotting it?" A line of Death Row cars was behind Shakur when he was shot and yet no witnesses are willing to come forward.

Shakur's first album released after his death, Makaveli: The Seven Day Theory, also adds fuel to the fire. Makaveli, Shakur's new alias, is another spelling for Machiavelli, an Italian war strategist who faked his own death to deceive his enemies. On the cover of the album Tupac appears crucified, mirroring the crucifixion of Jesus Christ leading many to believe that Tupac is planning a resurrection.

Also, in the lyrics of "Life of an Outlaw" Tupac raps, "All for the street fame on how to be managed, 6 months in advance to what we plotted, approved to go on swole and now I got it."

In the interviews shortly before his death, Tupac claimed that he wanted out of the spotlight. This could be a motive for a faked death. Although this theory is not respected among popular media, it is of major interest on the Internet. One site in particular is, <http://www.ewsonline.com/2pac/> which contains a poll on his death. Currently 2,893 people have voted that he's dead, and 7,520 have voted that he's still alive.

"I will die before my time because I feel the shadow's depth so much I wanted 2 accomplish before I reached my death."

— "In the Event of My Demise" from To Produce and Create

Since his death Shakur's life and music have been misunderstood by the popular media. What Tupac rapped about wasn't always nice or happy, but it was always real — real to what was going on in his life. Jesse Jackson once said that "sometimes the lure of violent culture is so magnetic that even when one overcomes it with material success, it continues to call. Tupac just couldn't break the cycle."

Tupac rapped about violence because he lived in a violent world. However, not all of Tupac's songs were violent, many had positive, life-affirming messages. To dismiss Tupac's work because of its savage side is to ignore a segment of society that needs to be heard and understood. Furthermore, it also may contain the clues to the mystery surrounding his death and possible "reincarnation."

"I'm a human being. Like everybody else. And if I meet somebody who is perfect then they can train me. And they can help me be perfect. But there ain't nobody out there that is perfect. So we'll all just have to get along with each other. That's how I feel."

Ben Molson is notorious for his K-town drive-by water squirtings.

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free.
We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

...sad, lonely,
book we found in an old stuffy
warehouse basement

The Campus Bookstore Presents:

Homeless Academics

Beginning on Tuesday, February 16th the Campus Bookstore presents our new Homeless Academics Sale. Like our Hurt Penguins Sale (which features a huge selection of titles in nearly perfect condition at unbeatable prices) our Homeless Academics Sale will present great books from excellent academic publishers at a fantastic savings! We will be featuring titles from publishers such as Blackwell, Columbia, Routledge and SUNY. And, also like our Penguin Sale, the best selection is found at the beginning of the sale, so be sure to come early.

happy!
same book, in it's new home,
happy and well read...

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Starts February 16th

14TH ANNUAL BATTLE OF THE BANDS!

THE QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY IS NOW ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THIS YEARS BATTLE OF THE BANDS!

Application forms can be picked up from the QEA office (beside the Earth Centre in the JDUC)

Applications are Due by Friday Feb. 19th, 1999

Http://www.ams.queensu.ca/qea/

SPORTS & FITNESS

TURN OFF THE LIGHTS
ALREADY

In one of the longest, most drawn out ceremonies in recent memory, the famed Maple Leaf Gardens saw its last NHL game. The result of the game, like the first one at the corner of Church and Carlton, saw the Chicago Blackhawks defeat the home standers. It was not the game itself that was frustrating, it was the post-game festivities. The ceremony, which lasted almost 90 minutes, featured a number of former Leafs, too many tributes, a Gardens flag and one standing ovation after another. While the sentiment was good, it could have been conveyed in half the time and the brevity would have been much appreciated.

GORDON WINS, AGAIN
Jeff Gordon started and finished the crown jewel of NASCAR, the Daytona 500, at the head of the pack, but led for only 16 of the laps in between. As only the sixth driver to start at the pole position and win the race, the 27 year-old solidified himself as one of the greatest ever at a sport that is growing at an astounding rate. Gordon won his second Daytona by outdueling the "Intimidator" Dale Earnhardt all the way to the finish. Earnhardt is far and away the most popular racer on the circuit, while the young and charming Gordon wins the races. Despite the success, Gordon continues to be back in the popularity pack.

GRIDIRON HONOURS
The Queen's football team has held their annual formal and with that came the yearly awards. The Captains Awards, which are given for special merit, went to centre Barrett 'Bearcat' Preuter and defensive back Andy Miners. The Royal Todd trophy, which is awarded to the rookie of the year, went to hailing offensive lineman Jon Landon. The Lou Bruce award for the most outstanding defensive player was awarded to Jim 'the Sack Guru' Aru, while the Orrin Carson trophy for the most outstanding lineman was shared by James Osborne and Rob Chalmers. Finally, the Johnny Evans trophy for team MVP was awarded to star running back Paul Cotreale.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• Dennis Rodman would return from Vegas by game time in his new LA uniform.
• Other professional sports would have the same rabid following as NASCAR.
• The rash of injuries in the NBA would teach players that training in the off-season may be a good idea.

Drive for five complete Gaels win fifth consecutive skating title

The Gaels after winning their fifth-consecutive OUA Figure Skating title at York University
PHOTO COURTESY OF THE FIGURE SKATING TEAM

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

The Golden Gaels' ice skating juggernaut continued its domination of the 1990s. At York University this past weekend, the women's figure skating team won its fifth consecutive OUA Figure Skating Championship. The team finished with an awe-inspiring eight gold medals, and were led by fourth-year veterans and Co-captains Karen Thomas, Leanne Findlay and Tara Black. Thomas finished first in the open solo dance, first in the variation dance with partner Jordan Millar and second in the Original Set Pattern four dance with Millar, Julie Marquardt and Nicole Karki. Findley finished first in the senior similar pairs with Bonnie Lee and first in the fours with Lee and stellar rookies Jody Millar and Erin Smith. Black finished first in the senior B singles and first in the intermediate similar pairs with Julie Ouellette. The Gaels completed two additional first-place finishes with Ouellette's senior A singles win and Marquardt and Karki's senior similar dance. Head Coach Kimberely Magee, in her first season, faced a tough challenge in following up four straight championships. Queen's finished with 101 points and Guelph came second with 89. Guelph had been leading with three dances to go, but Queen's kicked on the afterburners and propelled themselves to their fifth-straight title. In recognition of her fine job, Magee was named Coach of the Year. "It was the team that got us the points," said Magee. The coach emphasized the play of her graduating skaters. "[Thomas, Findlay and Black] have had enormous effects on the team. They have provided us with the extra little push which has made our team complete," said Magee. Co-captain Thomas was almost speechless after the victory. "Oh wow, we're really proud, it was a really good competition. We had to focus, fight and skate, but we knew we could win." In each of her four years, Thomas has won the provincial title and this last championship provided an opportunity for reflection. "It's bitter-sweet, because this is the end. But it is an amazing way to end, I guess it is more sweet than bitter." It will be up to the rest of the team to carry the torch and fill the gaping hole that the absence of Thomas, Findlay and Black will create.

Gael named top OUA wrestler

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

After taking a year off due to injury, Queen's wrestling star Tara Feeney completed her comeback by winning the OUA Wrestler of the Year award this past Saturday. The third-year Phys-Ed student from Trenton claimed the title in the 65 kg weight class at the OUA championships held in Bartlett Gym on Saturday. After following behind 8-2 on points with only 90 seconds to go in the match, Feeney overpowered Ruth Frei of Western and pinned her shoulders to the mat for a thrilling victory. Queen's Coach Kevin Kazama was enthused that Feeney has "been getting stronger with every match." Feeney has been wrestling since she was in grade 10 and wrestled in her first year here at Queen's. At the end of her first season, however, she suffered bruised ribs and internal bruising which caused her to miss her second year. "The beginning of [this year] was a little hard but now I'm fully recovered. I have been training a lot more, lifting weights, and sparring with both the men's and women's wrestling teams," said Feeney. The talented Feeney plans to wrestle for the next two years and will continue her strict training regimen in order to prepare for next year's title defence. Feeney's performance has earned her a trip to Guelph on the February 26 weekend to test her skills at the CIAU championships. Also competing this past weekend for Queen's was men's wrestler Donovan Beth (who placed second in the men's 76 kg weight class), and Lara Bozablian (who finished third in the women's 61 kg weight class). Congratulations to the wrestling team for their inspiring performances.

Tara Feeney has qualified for the CIAU finals at Guelph.
PHOTO BY LILIAN KIM

Two points shy

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

"Two points: You're a hero if you win those two points and a bum if you don't." It was two points in the fifth set of the final game of the OUA East division championship to which Queen's volleyball coach Brenda Willis was alluding. These points were won by nemesis University of Toronto, which gave them a 15-13 win in the decisive fifth set and punched the Varsity Blues a ticket to the 1999 CIAU championship.

The Gaels started the best of three OUA East division championship series with a rousing 3-0 win over the undefeated Blues at the Bartlett Gym, but they then faced the daunting task of winning one of two games back in Hogtown. The squad lost their first opportunity to seize the series when they lost 3-1 in Saturday's game, one that was much closer than the final tally.

"We had a lot more confidence going into Toronto than prior to the game at Queen's," said Greg Stevenson, one of four graduating players. "We came out a bit tight in that first game, but we rebounded to play well and just came up short. Even going into [the third match] we had confidence because we have dominated them at times and Fred [Cotnoir] and Jake [Magolan] were playing really well."

In the third and deciding confrontation, the Gaels came out swinging, winning the first game 15-11, and were up 2-1 after three games were played. The team then struggled to a 11-15 loss in the fourth game, setting up the decisive fifth game, which would be scored rally-point (every rally would be scored as a point rather than only points on service wins).

The final game saw numerous lead changes, most notably ties at 10, 11 and finally 13 before U of T pulled ahead and sealed the deal. "The fast middle hit hurt us," said coach Willis. "This was part of the game plan as I didn't want [Mike] Slean and [Andrew] Esteves to beat us on the outside, but U of T picked up on it late."

The entire team played exceptionally well, but Magolan and Cotnoir once again paced the team, with Magolan 'throwing down' an impressive 26 kills, while Cotnoir had 21 kills and a dominating serve.

The match also saw a number of questionable officia-

sports experts

The following table lists the pool players for the period ended Monday, February 8. All stats are compiled based upon those published in the Globe & Mail. Any errors (spelling or otherwise) should be brought to the attention of 4rnd@qlink.

Total	Name	Faculty/Year
388	Chad Rawn	Arts '98
381	Thomas Leung	Comm '00
381	Peter Gillespie	Arts '99
381	Dave Gilbert	Arts '02
377	James Prentice	Sci '01
376	Stephen Leung	Sci '99
372	Paul Kim	Arts '02
371	Sergiy Kolosov	Arts '00
371	Cealidh Templeton	Sci '01
369	Stephen Raper	Arts '01
368	Ryan Culhane	Arts '01
367	Adam Kaminsky	Arts '99
365	Scott Snowden	Sci '01
365	Rick Schippling	Arts '02
364	Sarah Crosbie	Arts '00
364	Angelina Whiteman	Arts '00
363	Tara Harrison	Arts '02
362	Allison Malloy	Sci '01
361	Seth Cullen	Arts '99
361	Matr Murl	Comm '01
360	Dan Lior	Arts '99
360	Jeff Child	Arts '00
360	Emma Hutchinson	Arts '02
359	Ken Hawkins	Arts '00
358	Dev Patel	Sci '01
358	Dave Lanovaz	ConEd '99
357	Sean Springer	Arts '00
357	Trish Kirkwood	Sci '01
356	Sheldon S. Swick	Sci '00
354	Jon Swaine	Arts '99

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE
Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25 Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

UP TO 50% Off

Columbia Sportswear Company

Winter Parkas

DOWNTOWN KINGSTON SOURCE FOR SPORTS
121 PRINCESS ST.
542-2892

Travelling outside Canada at Spring Break? Don't wait until you get to the airport to get your foreign money- you can get better rates right here, with no service charge.

WELLINGTON FOREIGN EXCHANGE
153 Wellington Street
531-8731

Check out our web site and compare:
www.wellingtonfx.on.ca

WOMEN'S SELF DEFENCE

LEARN TO PROTECT YOURSELF!!
4 Week Women's Self Defence Course
Mondays, 7 pm to 9pm
March 1 through March 22
Course Fee: $25

Learn how to:

- Become more aware of your surroundings
- Reduce your chances of being attacked
- Defend Yourself with practical self defence techniques

KANG DUK WONG HAS BEEN TEACHING WOMEN'S SELF DEFENCE FOR OVER 25 YEARS.

For more information or to register,
Call: Kristen 531-3747 or email: qtkd@www.ams.queensu.ca

Hockey team so close

BY NEATE SAGER

The Queen's men's hockey team played Sisypus this past weekend, struggling to push the proverbial boulder up the daunting mountain embodied by the top two teams in the country.

On Friday evening, the Gaels led against the second-ranked Concordia Stingers for much of the contest, yet settled for a 3-3 tie; the following evening, with leading scorer Rob Mailloux unable to play, Queen's succumbed 4-1 to the top-ranked Trois-Rivieres Patriotes, despite a dogged effort.

Queen's 3, Concordia 3
UQTR 4, Queen's 1

"I couldn't be prouder with our effort," remarked Queen's Head Coach Chris MacDonald. "We had a lineup that wasn't our best, yet we still competed... this weekend is another example of the character we have."

The Gaels started strongly on Friday. Mixing the acrobatics of netminder Jason Skilnick with a concerted checking effort at both ends of the ice, the Gaels had the better of Concordia for two periods. The 56 penalty minutes assessed during this span testified to both the Gaels' pugnacity and the Stingers' frustration.

"I thought that 95 per cent of the game we finished our checks," estimated MacDonald. "Four or five times in the first period that created direct [scoring] opportunities."

After Jason Flynn opened the scoring, two sublime goals by Mailloux staked the Gaels to a 3-0 lead. On a power play late in the first frame, the Gaels' winger imitated a father toying with his young children on a backyard pond, stickhandling unchallenged into the slot before roofing a backhand over Stingers' goalie Benoit Richard. Midway through the second period, Mailloux struck again, beating Concordia backliner Vince Labossiere to the outside and finishing the rush by again beating Richard high.

Unfortunately for the Gaels, Mailloux was forced from the fray later in the period by a strained stomach muscle. "He was reaching for the puck, and just turned in an odd way," said MacDonald.

The Stingers came alive early in the third period, beating Skilnick twice in 20 seconds. Though the Queen's netminder made several solid stops over the next few minutes, the visitors tied the affair at 3-3 with 9:15 remaining. Thereafter, the shelling continued, as Concordia levied 26 of its 58 shots during the period. "Skilnick did a good job gathering himself after the three quick ones," MacDonald remarked. "He gave us a chance to win, which frankly, he hasn't done lately."

The following evening, the Gaels, though outplayed, gave UQTR all they could handle. Skilnick again bore up well under saturation bombing, from a Patriotes side that featured four of the OUA's top seven scorers. Trois-Rivieres nursed a 1-0 lead for two periods, before gangly centre Mathieu Sunderland flipped in his own rebound two minutes into the final frame.

Two minutes later, Gaels' rookie Wes Newton sent a long pass up the left-wing boards to a streaking Phil Lindsay, who skated in alone and bested the Patriotes' Luc Belanger with a piercing backhand. The Gaels bombarded the offensive zone during the final minutes for the equalizer, creating several good chances, but to no avail. Two empty-net tallies in the final minute were responsible for the final three-goal margin.

"We're not happy with the result," MacDonald said, "but it's good that we're playing better as we get close to the playoffs." The Gaels (4-13-7) will complete the regular season on the road this weekend against OUA Mideast foes Toronto and Guelph.

In the game

The past weekend at Queen's

Women's basketball

The women's basketball team travelled to Quebec this past weekend and split a pair of contests with Concordia and McGill. On Friday night, Queen's lost to Concordia 61-47 despite strong efforts by Jacqueline Beaudoin (17 points) and Wendy Moon (12 points).

On Saturday, Queen's rebounded and defeated McGill big-time 79-39 on the strength of another 17 points by Beaudoin and an awe-inspiring 23-point performance by Steph Glancy.

Women's indoor hockey

In women's indoor hockey action this past weekend, the Gaels results include a little bit of everything. After being shutout against the University of Toronto 2-0, the women rebounded to defeat the University of Guelph by a count of 3-2. In their final weekend match, Queen's battled long and hard in a 2-2 deadlock versus the University of Waterloo.

Track & Field

It was a successful split squad weekend for the team as half of the athletes went to Cornell University and the remainder went to an open meet at York University.

The team gathered three gold medals, one in the men's 4 X 200m relay, another in the women's 4 X 800m relay and an individual gold in the women's 3000m by Charlotte Willson.

The team also gathered in six bronze medals. A good medal haul on the part of the Gaels.

PUT YOUR DEGREE OR DIPLOMA TO WORK

Congratulations on achieving your academic goals
Now - do you want a job?

Post-graduate courses at Georgian College are just the ticket to your success!

- Addictions: Treatment and Prevention
- Communicative Disorders Assistant
- Cyberspace Security*
- Dialysis Technology
- ECE Resource Teacher
- Fundraising and Resource Development
- Human Resource Management NEW JANUARY 2000
- Logistics and Supply Management*
- Multimedia-Web Developer*
- Research Analyst
- Therapeutic Recreation

All provide experience through internships and you graduate in one year or less.

Call: (705) 722-1560
Fax: (705) 722-5170
E-mail: kmusc@central.georgiancollege.on.ca
Web: www.georgiancollege.on.ca/postgrad

See our representative at John Deutsch Community Centre, Wed., Feb. 17, 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Gaels sweep Montreal

BY AOAM KAMINSKY

Like a cat with nine lives, the Queen's Golden Gaels men's basketball team continues to revive from near eliminating losses and keep their playoff hopes alive.

This weekend the team travelled to Montreal to engage in a double bill against the nationally ranked Concordia Stingers and the struggling McGill Redmen. They came home with two wins, a result which put the team in a tie for third place in the OUA East division.

Queen's 94, Concordia 81
Queen's 59, McGill 58

The big weekend started with an impressive 94-81 Gaels victory over the Stingers on Friday, which saw five players scoring in double figures, paced by Peter Stelter's 20 point outburst, most of which came in the first half.

Queen's jumped out to a quick 16-3 lead and never looked back. Despite repeated Concordia runs, the squad was able to keep the Stingers from taking the lead at any point in the game. The win, which was the second time that the Gaels' beat the highly touted Stingers, was one of the most impressive showings of the season.

"As an entire game it probably was our best showing this year," said Derek Richardson, who chipped in 15 points in the win. "We had good balanced scoring, a lot of people got a lot of minutes, it was a good game."

John Purdy, who scored 19 points and was his usual active self on the defensive end, agreed with his teammate's assertion.

"It was our best game all year, we came out energetic and maintained it all game," said the long-maned star.

The Gaels followed up their big win at Concordia with an encore performance, this time a last-second victory over the McGill Redmen, 59-58.

Queen's won the tightly played contest on a Purdy lay-up with only one second remaining on the game clock. McGill had an opportunity to tie, but fired their in-bounds pass into the rafters, thus eliminating any chance at a comeback.

The winning basket, which immediately followed a Gaels' timeout, was executed exactly as it was drawn up.

"It was a high pick and roll, a set play we call 'Utah'. If I have the shot, I take it, if the defenders jump at me I dish it to John [Purdy] for the bucket, which is what happened," explained Richardson, who led the team with a 15-point effort.

As can be expected, Head Coach Scott Meeson was ecstatic about the results of the weekend.

"The [McGill game] was ugly, but we won it. We answered the bell when the challenge was there," explained the third-year head man. "I am really proud of these guys for winning games in the heat of the season."

The two wins, while huge in the standings, did not come as a surprise to some on the team, as they had already beaten both of these squads this season.

"We just knew we had to go out and play well," said fourth year phys-ed student Brendan Byrne, a Gael guard. "We knew that we could beat them as long as we executed our game plan, and we did."

The weekend victories gave Queen's a

Please see Big Weekend on page 22

Trasheteria
MMM.99!

NEVER ANY COVER ON WEDNESDAYS

FRIDAYS YOU COULD WIN out of the Blue

99 99 99 ALL NIGHT THURSDAYS & SATURDAYS

Interested in World Affairs and the United Nations? Then Get Involved!

Queen's Model United Nations (QMUN)

Now Hiring:

- Secretary-General (Committee Chair)
- Under Secretary-General
- Director Generals
- Assistant Director Generals
- Head of Crisis and Crisis Committee
- Operations, Delegates, Technical (Computer) & Financial Managers

Applications Due by Friday, February 19th, 1999 by 4 p.m. at the AMS Front Desk.
Job descriptions and applications available at AMS office.

Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award

The Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award is the highest tribute that can be paid to a student for valuable and distinguished service to the University in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities. Any student of the University may submit a nomination. The number of students admitted to the society each year is decided by the selection committee, while maintaining the distinction and integrity of the Tricolour Award.

Nominations Now Open

Nomination Period Closes on Monday March 15

Nomination Packages Can Be Picked Up At Any Faculty Society Office

A Cut above the rest

British music and movie mag features intriguing info and interviews

MAGAZINE REVIEW

By DAVID McCLUSKEY

John Cale. Sly Stone. The Buzzcocks. My Bloody Valentine. Booker T & The MGs. What do these names have in common? Absolutely nothing, and this glorious mess of a CD is what persuaded me to pick up the UK-based magazine Uncut: music and movies.

Like the CD that came packaged with it, Uncut has an eclectic sense of style that would put a Tarantino soundtrack to shame. Although the focus is primarily on music, there are intelligent articles on film and to a lesser extent, on books and television.

Many articles are irreverent and feature a playful use of language that is common to most British music press, but is rarely found among US critics. However, much of the writing displays a critical snobbery shared by writers on both sides of the Atlantic. It is the type of snobbery that assumes the reader is as familiar with Nick Drake and Big Star as they are with the Beatles and the Stones.

Uncut has an eclectic sense of style that would put a Tarantino soundtrack to shame.

For example, Uncut's interview with the Velvet's John Cale is a minor triumph. The interview illuminates the life and music of a man who has been in the shadow of Lou Reed for far too long. The questions alternate between probing and unanswerable (Did you ever resent your talent?), but an effusive Cale gamely tackles each one. Cale has the benefit of perspective offered by recently writing his autobiography, and the resulting conversation is more revealing than the average reader would have a right to hope for.

The cover of the magazine promises the ultimate interview with New Order, and does not fail to deliver. The story is 17 pages long, full of rare photos and exemplary writing, and perhaps most notably, undisturbed by a single ad. The interview abandons the question-and-answer format of the John Cale interview, and instead uses the band members comments and anecdotes to present a detailed history of New Order, which was formed from the ashes of Joy Division. Beginning with the current reunion, but immediately flashing back to the first gig in the wake of Joy Division frontman Ian Curtis' suicide, the article has immense scope, following the band through each album and filling in successive eras with novel-worthy detail.

Many articles are irreverent and feature a playful use of language that is common to most British music press.

Uncut's film-sections are less noteworthy than their music features, but are still insightful and a cut above most mixed-media magazines. Not satisfied to simply spout film jargon and review the latest rereleased classics, Uncut realizes a film is about context as much as content. With mixed results, a feature article on the role of Bonnie and Clyde in the social revolution of the sixties finds parallels to the cinematic breakthroughs in Europe at the time, the sexual revolution, and the Kennedy assassinations. Similarly, a review of Bonnie and Clyde producer/star Warren Beatty's newest film, Bulworth, spends as much time examining his history of leftist leanings as it does exploring the satire in the film.

The review sections are interesting. To Canadian readers, the British press often has the problem that movie and CD releases don't coincide with their release here. Over there, certain albums are released up to three months in advance, while movies are unfailingly three months behind there. Uncut overcomes this problem by taking the stance that art is art regardless of period and abandoning the notion of what is contemporary. Instead, the film section reviews

Blasting the screen

Continued from page 23

The passage of time above ground is hilariously marked by the changes to a mother and son restaurant operation which goes from a 1950s malt-shop to a 1970s dive to an early 1990s Goth hangout. Meanwhile, Calvin, Helen, and the aptly named son Adam, continue to live the lifestyle common to the early 1960s. Calvin teaches Adam everything from Latin to baseball, and they form a close bond, but Helen slowly becomes a cheerful, patient drunk, waiting for the day when she can escape the shelter and look at the sky once again.

When the 35 years are up, Calvin decides to surface for more supplies. One glance at the world, however, sends him running back for cover: he is unprepared for the homeless people, the adult video stores, and the transitive hookers, which now cover his former backyard. The family needs supplies, however, and Adam (now played by Brendan Fraser) volunteers to get them, in the hopes of meeting a "nice, non-mutant girl from Pasadena."

Fans of Kids in the Hall will enjoy seeing Dave Foley do a smarter reprise of his character from the "Steps" sketches.

Adam's 1960s innocence of course threatens to get him into trouble in the late 1990s, but he is helped along the way by a somewhat shallow yet basically good-hearted young woman named Eve (Alicia Silverstone) and her roommate Troy (Dave Foley). Along the way, Adam learns to drive, sees the sky and the ocean for the first time, and wows a couple of blonde bombshells with his dancing skills at a tetro swing club.

Hollywood has grown fond in recent years of the "man-child" character, the innocent, nice and, above all, good man, uncorrupted by the adult world around him. No one has ever quite achieved the joyous abandon Tom Hanks brought to the genre in Big, but Fraser does a decent job, most likely because it's terrain he's covered more than once, in Encino Man and George of the Jungle. His large frame and big goofy grin are childlike and yet attractive enough to make it believable that someone like Eve could fall for him. Silverstone does yet another version of her trademark role, the pouty-lipped babe with a heart of gold, and fans of Kids in the Hall will enjoy seeing Dave Foley do a smarter reprise of his character from the "Steps" sketches.

It's a little unclear what marquee stars like Walken and Spacek are doing in this essentially fluffy film, unless the idea was to find the two Hollywood actors one would least like to spend 35 years in a bomb shelter with.

Despite the fluff, however, Blast From The Past is, like its main character, cute and sweet: a good first-date film, or for that Saturday night when you don't feel like going out.

902-10: Beverly Hills 90210 is coming back next year. Fox announced that the show will return for a 10th season featuring Luke Perry, Jennie Garth, Tori Spelling, Brian Austin Green and Ian Ziering. Even though Jason Priestley left this season, the show has still been doing well in ratings. Fox also announced that Melrose Place will be cancelled after this year.

You're so Pitt-iful: The Supreme Court recently ruled that Athena Maria Rolando must stay 100 yards away from Brad Pitt for the next three years. Rolando recently climbed through a window and spent 10 hours inside Pitt's house. Rolando stated, "I'd actually like to file a restraining order against Mr. Pitt himself to stay away from me."

May the Score be with you: Sony Classical will release the soundtrack to the next installment in the Star Wars saga, Episode 1 - The Phantom Menace. The disc will feature the score by John Williams who has received Oscar and Grammy nominations for his movie compositions. The CD is expected to hit stores before the movie opens on May 21.

Who's that Girl? For her next project, Madonna is abandoning the music scene and hitting the theatres. Madonna is set to play a tabloid TV reporter in a new romantic comedy Ton 80. The movie is a love story about a reporter who falls in love with a self-help author who she is supposed to expose. Madonna will also produce the film.

Payback is All That?: Top Draws for February 5 weekend:
 1. Payback $21 million
 2. She's All That $12 million
 3. Patch Adams $4.5 million
 4. Varsity Blues $4 million
 5. Saving Private Ryan $3.6 million

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY DEPARTMENT OF DRAMA

THE 9TH ANNUAL
J. C. W. SAXTON PLAYWRITING PRIZE

VALUE $600

- Open to any student enrolled at Queen's
- The play should be at least one half hour in length
- The play may have been previously submitted for class work
- The play must not have been received prior public performance (Studio 102 productions are exempt)
- The play must not have been previously published
- Scripts with name, address and phone number should be submitted to:

J. C. W. SAXTON PLAYWRITING CONTEST
Queen's University, Department of Drama
Theological Hall
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6

DEADLINE FOR SUBMISSIONS: 31 March 1999

The decision of the judges is final

DRAGON'S CAVE
SPORTS BAR & GRILL
259 ONTARIO ST.
547-2147
fully licensed

AFTER THE GAME, SCHOOL OR WORK, TAKE TIME OUT AND BRING YOUR TEAM OR FRIENDS DOWN TO THE DRAGON'S CAVE FOR GREAT IN-HOUSE SPECIALS.

Enjoy our GREAT MENU
PLAY POOL OR DARTS.
Even watch your FAVORITE SPORTS ON OUR BIG SCREEN TV.

Receive WARM FRIENDLY SERVICE
So come on down and see WHAT YOUR FRIENDS ARE TALKING ABOUT!

A Summer Course at
McGill University
Montreal, Canada

Why Not!

We welcome visiting students

Increase your options
Enrich your program
Experience Montreal

It's all here for you!

McGill Summer Studies offers a full range of university-level courses.

Registration opens:
February 26, 1999

McGill Summer Studies
680 Sherbrooke Street West
Suite 9025
Montreal, Quebec H3A 2B7
Phone: (514) 398-5212
Fax: (514) 398-5224
E-mail: Summer@555@chah.Lan.McGill.Ca
Web: www.McGill.Ca/Summer

Please send me
1999 Summer Studies and information on summer accommodation
in McGill University Residences.

NAME: _____
 ADDRESS: _____
 CITY: _____ PROVINCE/STATE: _____
 POSTAL/ZIP CODE: _____ PHONE: _____
 UNIVERSITY/COLLEGE: _____

McGill Summer Studies

Get your TICKETS!

Chakra with Frank KOZO
$3.00 in advance

Art Sci Formal $65.00
on sale until Fri. Feb. 19th

Tricolour Express
Reading Week
Extra Destinations

exchange
Men to Fri 9am - 5pm, Sat 10am - 1pm
544-9389 / 1-800-269-6719

Get Out There!

Movies:
 Playing at the Capitol Theatre from Tuesday Feb. 16 to Thursday, Feb. 18:
 546-5395
 Message in a Bottle 7:00, 10:00
 Shakespeare in Love 7:25, 10:10
 Saving Private Ryan 8:00
 Payback 7:10, 7:35, 9:40, 10:05
 My Favourite Martian 5:00, 7:30, 9:50

Playing at the Catarqui Cineplex from Tuesday, Feb. 16 to Thursday, Feb. 18:
 389-7442
 Simply Irresistible 6:45
 Stepmom 9:10
 Patch Adams 6:55, 9:30
 She's All That 7:15, 9:20
 Waking Ned Devine 7:25, 9:50
 Thin Red Line 8:15
 Blast From the Past 7:05, 9:40

Playing at the Screening Room from
 Tuesday, Feb. 16 to Thursday, Feb. 18:
 Life is Beautiful 7:05, 9:25

Teach English Overseas

- ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses
  - Intensive 34-hour and 42-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)
  - Classroom management techniques
  - Detailed lesson planning
  - Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
  - Comprehensive teaching materials
  - Teaching practicum included
  - Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
  - Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
  - Formal certificate given upon course completion
  - Cost: $295 (34-hr course) / $445 (42-hr course)
- For More Information Call Oxford Seminars:
544-9389 / 1-800-269-6719

DOES IT WORK FOR YOU?

The Queen's Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy is being reviewed. Now's the time to forward your suggestions on how it can be improved.

Write: Senate Office
 B400 Mackintosh Cory
 Email: hrights@post.queensu.ca
 Call: 533-6886

Deadline: March 5, 1999

a different edge

hair & tanning salon
 203 Wellington St. • 547-2057
 Purchase 10 Sessions for $60.00 and receive one free session
 Purchase 15 sessions for $85.00 and receive one free session
$100.00 Monthly
 Purchase one package at regular price and receive a 2nd package for 1/2 price
 • 20% off all hair services

LSAT MCAT GMAT
 www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.
 LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
 MCAT - Start in June, July, August
 GMAT - Start every month
 Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com
Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

Classifieds

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families - Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikweb.com/blueroof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

DAYTONA BEACH SPRING BREAK '99 Party at Daytona's most popular Spring Break Hotel, Desert Inn Resort. Reserve now and SAVE up to $100 per room. Hotel only $119 or Bus and Hotel $269/night February 14 - 22. Lowest price Guaranteed. Book 10, friend go free. Limited space!! Thames Travel 1 800 962-8262.

SAVE MONEY! Save money on your formal ticket by helping out at the Artsci '99 Formal. Volunteers are needed for setting up, cleaning up, and helping out during the formal (March 6th) checking coats, dealing Black Jack hands, etc. If interested, please contact Steven at 533-8300 ext. 75085, or stop by the ASUS Core.

HARASSMENT/DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT POLICY AND PROCEDURE REVIEW The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the Review Committee wish to extend an invitation to university students, staff, and faculty to offer any comments or suggestions they may have regarding the Policy.

Written responses may be submitted to the Senate Office, 8400 Macintosh Cory Hall, or the Human Rights Office, Old Medical Building (email: hrighis@post.queensu.ca). Alternately, community members may arrange to make verbal submissions to the Committee by contacting the Human Rights Office at 533-8886 and making an appointment. Deadline for all submissions is March 5, 1999.

BE IN CHARGE! Head House Attendant applications for the Artsci '99 Formal are now available at the ASUS Core.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877PREP.COM.

ESOS (Educating Students on Substances) and the Student Constables urge everyone to exercise moderation in their social relaxation. Here is this week's question in the contest: Give us an example of a myth and truth about alcohol. Email your answers to contest@www.ams.queensu.ca

AUDITIONS: Singers, dancers, musicians, actors for a Musical Comedy 2nd week of April. Living Soul: A Journey through the Blues, Jazz 70's Soul Stardom. For more information call 546-0432.

LOVE THY COFFEE AS THYSELF! Lesbian Gay Bisexual Committee invites you to attend open mike coffeehouse at Sleepless Goat Wednesday February 17th, 8 p.m. Contact Kellie at 533-8385 if you want to perform.

DISCOVER THE BASICS IN BUDDHIST PRACTICE Wednesday evening at the Ban Rich Centre, 32 Queen's Cres., at 7:30 p.m. The evening will include meditation, discussion and a short talk on what meditation is.

WHATCHA GONNA DO WITH YOUR DEGREE? Don't know? Come to the BioScience Complex, February 16th and 17th for info on your potential future in Biology and other related fields! Woo-hoo!

ASUS PUB CRAWL - Wednesday, February 17th 9:30 p.m. Meet at Alfies for a tour of Kingston's finest bars. Buy your bracelet at the Core for $5 Monday the 15th - Wednesday the 17th.

HEY BUDDING BIOLOGISTS! Find out what to do with your degree on February 16th & 17th. University and College info! Guest speakers! Today and tomorrow in Altium of BioScience Complex!

STRESSED OUT!!! Need to party? Let us take care of the details. Call AJ's Hanger to book smokers. Pub Crawls or parties. Dates are booking last. 531-5300.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR RENT: Room - Toronto: King at Bathurst, 10 minutes to Bay, near Queen West. Full gym on-site. Perfect with your new job! $650 plus utilities. Available May 1st. Call Jonathan at 416 703-8513.

HELP WANTED

LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronnieb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

WANT TO BE IN A MOVIE? Looking for extras to act in a 16mm film on February 18th. Your name will be in credits. Free food and drinks. Contact Christina at 536-5700.

EARN MONEY for participating in a personally research study conducted by Dr. Ronald R. Holden (Dept. of Psychology). Roommates of the same gender who have lived together for over 3 months can earn $10.00 each. The study takes approximately 45 minutes and roommates must participate at the same time. Call 533-2346 to schedule an appointment.

WANTED

WANTED: Housemates, preferably upper year or graduate students, females, non-smoking, to share newly renovated house on Brock. Rent $270 plus utilities, cable included. Queen's at Home installed. Call 544-3784.

WANTED: Two housemates, preferably upper year non-smoking females, to share a house on Johnson and Nelson. Rent: $365 per month, ALL utilities included, 2 bathrooms, washer/dryer. Call 531-8143 for more info.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Missing from Jeffery Hall, room 101 on Thursday, February 11th, sometime after 9:30 a.m. a Varsity Volleyball bag containing a Varsity uniform and equipment. This equipment is of no use to anyone other than the University Varsity teams. Please return to the Phys. Ed Centre front desk or call Juliana at 533-4918 no questions asked and a reward is offered. Thank you.

LOST: Oval shaped glasses, Black frame, white letters on inside right arm. If found, call Rob at 542-4640.

LOST: Black fleece MEC women's size medium jacket. Lost at AJ's Hanger on Friday night. Reward if returned. Please call 531-3609 or 546-2477.

LOST: Silver/gold Swiss army watch, Lost at Clergy and Division. Reward offered. Call 536-3478.

LOST: Head squash racquet, Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS

ADOPTION - Loving and caring couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, call 1 800 844-8669. Home study done.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

...is back!!

- ACROSS
- 1. Blow a horn
  - 5. Liturgy of the Eucharist
  - 9. Tend the sick
  - 10. Modify fittingly
  - 12. Temporary route
  - 13. He denounced David for Unah's death
  - 15. Fermented malt
  - 16. Phonograph record
  - 18. Former French coin
  - 19. Young male horse
  - 21. Point at
  - 22. Work with
- DOWN
- 23. Has memorized
  - 25. Sticks of firewood
  - 27. Breeze
  - 29. Greek T
  - 30. Keellike ridges
  - 34. Walk pompously
  - 38. Short-eared mastiff
  - 39. Clumsy boat
  - 41. Cipher
  - 42. Bowling target
  - 43. Spirited war horse
  - 45. Colton machine
  - 46. Computer language
  - 48. Feudal vassals
  - 50. Liquid used as a pickle
  - 51. Rough path
  - 52. Jumble
  - 53. Withered
- 11. Implied but not spoken
- 12. Help with financial support
- 14. Crazy
- 17. Overall part
- 20. Singer Shania
- 22. Clumsy, awkward person
- 24. Break commandments
- 26. Musical syllables
- 28. Baby toys
- 30. "Li'l Abner" creator
- 31. False name
- 32. Kidnapper's demand
- 33. Prosecute
- 36. Archangel
- 37. A lot
- 40. Waistbands
- 43. Answer back
- 44. Terrible
- 47. Billiards rod
- 49. Teacup handle

Student Discounts Available for Formals

Classy and SYD SILVER Formals
Alexander Newman's MEN'S SHOP LTD.
214 Princess Street 546-0110
Local Owned & Operated Open 11:00 a.m. Thursday & Friday

Look for the answers to this fun puzzle in Friday's issue of The Journal

The Journal is hiring for 1999 - 2000 year.

Have your say, get involved and eat free food on Sunday and Wednesday nights. How can you go wrong?

Please contact Sarah at 533-2800.

OPPORTUNITIES

Program at the International Study Centre Herstmonceux Castle

Join us for an information session highlighting the spring program at the International Study Centre at Herstmonceux Castle.

Tuesday, February 16th from 3:30 p.m. to 4:30 p.m. in Ellis Hall, Rm 224

- Find out about:
- new course offerings
  - bursary assistance
  - Certificate/Letter of Achievement

Plus, former students and faculty members will be on hand to answer your questions.

If you are thinking about the spring term or any term at the ISC, you are invited to attend this session.

Faculty of Arts and Science

<http://www.queensu.ca/ipo>

ASUS

THE FUN NEVER STOPS!

NOMINATION PERIOD IS NOW OPEN FOR YEAR SOCIETY POSITIONS AND ASUS REPS TO THE AMS

FEBRUARY 8, 1999 - FEBRUARY 19, 1999 AT 4:00 P.M.

Drop by the CORE @ 183 University Ave. To pick up a nomination package that is best for you!

ASUS

KIDS WRITE THE DARNDEST THINGS

MISC is going to try something a little bit different this time round. For the next few issues, we will have the pleasure of presenting some of Queen's student's finest creative work. But not just any ol' crappy "I don't fit into the Queen's mold so I'm going to write bitter, self-indulgent poetry that doesn't rhyme" type work. We're talking kindergarten through grade 3 type work. So if you find anything lying around back home during reading week, please bring it in.

MISC will print the original, unedited version in all its non-linear, randomly-punctuated, hyperactive, oftentimes completely incomprehensible glory.

Springtime Fun (for a demand)

One Spring day Tiny Terror who was an alien that lived on a planet that was always Sping Wandered about in Springer forest. Not knowing about the dangers that lay ahead, Th he was part robot and part human and had laser eyes and teeth like a were-wolf. He was friend of Isiac, a Zadiac. He wandered if the Buggyman would pap up any minute. He didn't all of the sudden he fell down a hole help!!!! he screamed as grass and flowers and everthing of spring caved in. the end of part 1.

Springtime Fun (for a demand) part 2

But Tiny Terror managed to get out he walked. When he got out of springer forest he ran and ran and ran until he hame. the real end

By Kenny Butland, Age 7.

MISC BUILDING CONTEST

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your only friends are in your religious fellowship group. For the next five issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring. Note: If you've missed the last couple of issues, you've missed the first four clues. Try and find some copies left around campus.

Amy Dennis, Arts '00 models in front of Building #5

Dan Hirschorn Sci'00 models in front of Building #6

SCONES

- 1/2 cup milk
- 1/2 cup dried currants

I like to make these in the evening and have one for breakfast, but they always mysteriously disappear by sunrise. They're very easy to make, and the dried currants can be replaced with any other dried berries, such as cranberries or raspberries, which can be found at the health food store. If you can keep them out of reach of rats and/or housemates, you'll have breakfast for a week.

1. Combine flour, baking powder and salt in a large bowl.
2. Cut in the shortening with two knives until the mixture is crumbly.
3. Add the remaining ingredients and stir, but don't stir the mixture too long or the scones will be tough.
4. Shape into 1-inch thick round biscuits approximately 4 inches in diameter. Sprinkle each scone with a little granulated sugar, if desired.
5. Bake at 350 F for 25 minutes or until golden.

- Ingredients:
- 3 cups flour
  - 1 1/2 tsp. baking powder
  - 1 tsp. salt
  - 1 cup shortening
  - 1/2 cup white sugar
  - 1 egg, beaten

Sarah LeMay cooks the dishes that make the whole world drool.

EXTRA

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

FOOD BANK

Open Today 4-6 p.m.

THE JOURNAL

www.compustore.com

Sell Your Used Books Online!

1873

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1999

They're baaack

Corman-Mori-Minns reinstated; phone not 'campaign material'

BY THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

It's been a long and tiring week since the Corman-Mori-Minns team was elected as next year's AMS executive, and after numerous appeals and committee hearings, they are now officially able to rake office.

In a ruling released yesterday, the AMS Constitutional Appeals Tribunal overruled the fine and re-vote instituted by the Judicial Committee last Friday.

"We are going to put a lot of thought into how we can repair the image of the AMS..."

— Lisa Mori, V-P (UA)-elect

The team is relieved to have the first major ordeal of their term out of the way. "We're very happy that this is all over," said Owen Minns, Vice-President (Operations)-elect. "We're really excited to get things started."

"We will be doing some reflecting on what we've learned from this experience," said Lisa Mori, V-P (University Affairs)-elect. "We are going to put a lot of thought into how we can repair the image of the AMS, which perhaps has been tarnished from this experience."

The CMM team was disqualified by Chief Electoral Officer Darten MacDonald for exceeding their campaign expense limit, the day after they won the AMS election with 44.7 per cent of the vote. MacDonald ruled that a cellular phone rented by the team's campaign manager Ryan Graham was a campaign expense and when added to the team's other expenses, put them over the $400 spending limit. A six-member Judicial Committee met with the team last Friday to appeal MacDonald's decision. Following three hours of deliberation, the committee ruled to charge the team the maximum allowable fine of $500 and institute a re-vote of the original three candidate teams.

CMM appealed the ruling to the Constitutional Appeals Tribunal, which was formed at the February 11 AMS Assembly meeting. The Tribunal is made up of Student Senate Organization Chair Stacey Douglas and two representatives from AMS Assembly, Rosalie Griffith, president of the AMS President-elect Sarah Corman, Vice-President (operations)-elect Owen Minns and V-P (university affairs)-elect Lisa Mori celebrate their election victory last Wednesday. Yesterday, the AMS Constitutional Appeals Tribunal overturned a decision by the AMS Judicial Committee to fine the team $500 for spending violations and hold a re-vote of the three candidate teams.

PHOTO BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

Education Students' Society, and Keith Stewart, Engineering Society president.

The Tribunal met for the first time at 9 p.m. on Monday evening. At 11 p.m. they listened to CMM's case and invited parties in attendance to make statements. The Tribunal's decision to quash the fine and re-vote is final and not subject to appeal.

In the Tribunal's written ruling, members recommended that the AMS elections policy be clarified. "If we as a Society want candidates to work within a system of rules, it is our responsibility to ensure those rules are clear and not subject to misinterpretation," the report read.

MacDonald was not pleased with the Tribunal's decision. "I think they made some errors in ruling," he said. "They failed to deal with the specific incident of use of a cellular phone."

MacDonald addressed a statement in the Tribunal's ruling that criticised the CEO for not pro-actively seeking out potential policy infractions, and suggested it was MacDonald's duty to ensure accurate policy interpretation. "That is poor logic," he said.

"It is not my job... to hand-hold candidates. If they had asked I would have told them," said MacDonald. "That is not my responsibility. If they cannot understand policy then perhaps they should reconsider running in the first place."

MacDonald also opposed the Tribunal's reasoning that his ruling was a "retroactive application" of policy. "I think that was a mistake on their behalf," he said. "I do not think my judgement was retroactive."

"Obviously there needs to be more definition or maybe even new policy to clarify the issue," said MacDonald.

The CMM team also feels clarification of the policy is necessary.

"What it comes down to is the fact that the policy was lacking in many places," said Graham.

"The policy manual hasn't been changed in quite awhile, so we are going to bring it up to date so it can accommodate things like modern technology," said President-elect Sarah Corman.

"The Tribunal provides an interpretation of the word 'support', and in that interpretation they made a distinction between organization and campaigning that is not delineated in policy right now," said Minns.

What they said

AMS executive 1999-2000

From the appeal of AMS Judicial Committee Ruling of 1999.02.12 from Corman, Mori & Minns:

- The written decision furnished by the Judicial Committee exposes a number of elements in their reasoning which led to the development of an incorrect decision.

- We remain confident that we are no time violated AMS Elections Policy. We ask you to indicate in your decision that we did nothing wrong in our submission of campaign expenses... we contend that no penalty was warranted if our actions, at the time of their occurrence, were not wrong.

- It is possible the cellular phone gave the CMM team some advantage. This advantage was no more than the advantages we accrued through the use of own home computers, the software we had, our design skills, Lisa Mori's private landline, and so

Constitutional Appeals Tribunal

From the decision of the AMS Constitutional Appeals Tribunal:

- The Tribunal overturns the rulings of both the AMS Judicial Committee and the Chief Electoral Officer. The Tribunal rules that the cellular telephone obtained by Mr. Graham does not qualify as a 'campaign material'... and therefore that the team of Corman, Mori, Minns did not exceed the election expense limits as set by AMS Assembly. As such, the Constitutional Appeals Tribunal rules that election results of Wednesday February 10th 1999 stand.

- Denoting a cellular phone (and by extension all the other items that such an interpretation of support must include such as automobiles, gas, pay phone calls, computer software, etc.) as campaign material for the purposes of the 1999 campaign is a significant departure from the operational

AMS policy ambiguous

Continued from page 1

MacDonald agreed that the AMS lacked clear policy with regards to campaign material, but he stated that the CMM team should have sought additional council where election rules were ambiguous.

"When you do not have fair rules governing elections you do not have fair elections," MacDonald said, adding, "you do not get anywhere by breaking your own rules."

Now that the appeals process is over, the CMM team wants to shift their focus back to the students. "These events have all occurred very internal to the AMS, it comes across, I think, that the AMS is ruled by bureaucracy and policy," said Mori. "It's important to get back to student interest as the focus of the AMS, and not the internal issues."

"One thing we want to emphasize is that we are happy to talk with anyone who has questions about this issue," said Minns. "We encourage students to address their concerns with us."

"I can appreciate the concerns of students who may have lost some inspiration about the AMS. I think this team recognizes that it will be a challenge to re-inspire the students in the AMS," said Graham.

"I really want students to know that despite our frustration with this whole process, that it hasn't dampened our excitement for the job," said Mori. "We are really excited about the ideas that we have and we are looking forward to getting started. This experience hasn't detracted from our enthusiasm."

Reaction from the other teams ranged from disappointment to relief.

"I'm very, very, very disappointed and extremely disillusioned with the AMS," said Neil Bunn, former campaign manager for the KGB team.

"I was very surprised. I was expecting the overturning of the re-vote but I did not expect the [Tribunal] to undo the judgements of two respected AMS judicial bodies," said Presidential candidate Mike Beltzner.

"It is not my job... to hand-hold candidates. If they had asked I would have told them."

— Darren MacDonald, AMS chief electoral officer

"I think there are too many routes for appeal... I don't like the idea that you can just keep appealing," he continued. "It reflects the assumption... that an individual's interpretation is right when they are not necessarily the person to interpret the policy."

"What I feel is that the AMS has gone back to breaking its own rules when it's convenient for them," he said. "Throughout [the appeals process] CMM never once even acknowledged that they might have been wrong and that's very disturbing to me."

Presidential candidate Nick Cheeseman was relieved that the election process had finally reached closure. "I'd like to congratulate [the CMM team]," Cheeseman said. "We wish this could have ended a week ago."

Cheeseman expressed concerns about the excessive media coverage of the events during the past week. "My only concern... is the question of legitimacy in the eyes of the students... I feel that maybe the appearance might create a crisis of legitimacy," he said.

Quotes from the players

CMM Appeal

Tribunal Ruling

Continued from page 1

forth... To penalise one team for one such... advantage without considering what other advantages were not listed as campaign expenses by other teams is unfair.

practices of the AMS Executive elections.

The cited violations were beyond the knowledge and control of CMM, and as such the Tribunal rules in favor of CMM.

This Tribunal does not dispute that the cellular phone could qualify as 'support' for an election campaign. A cellular phone would definitely 'help or assist'.

Thus the Tribunal commends the CEO on the discharge of his duties in a difficult situation, but the Tribunal must rule that his interpretation of policy is incorrect.

It is the wish of the Tribunal to express its firm support for the team of Sarah Cotman, Lisa Mori and Owen Minns as the duly elected representatives of the Alma Mater Society.

The decision to include the cellular phone and gasoline while excluding pay phones and other items such as computer software or new clothing was without adequate justification.

CAMPAIGN COSTS

A breakdown of each team's campaign budget

TEAM	PAMPHLETS	BUTTONS	POSTERS	OTHER	TOTAL
Corman-Mori-Minns	$161	$70.67	$118.45	$42.67	$392.79
Cheeseman-Bailey-Henry	$105.90	$42	$120.25	$59.31	$327.46
Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner	$0	$32.63	$280.81	$31.86	$345.30

Back to the future

LAST MONDAY, WHEN I WAS elected Editor-in-Chief of The Queen's Journal for next year, no AMS executive was yet in place.

As of yesterday, the Corman-Mori-Minns team was re-instated and unlike the majority of other students, I can relate to what they have endured the past week.

Elections are stressful. They're not really about discovering who are your friends, but who has faith in your abilities, and who doesn't. In an election, this is more important than friendship.

Live up to your plans CMM — The Journal is watching.

Admittedly, Corman-Mori-Minns have undergone more than they ever could have anticipated; throughout the past seven days, they have had to endure the gossip on campus about whether or not they deserve to run the AMS.

In my eyes, above everything else, they democratically won the election, and thus they are the AMS executive. This does not mean, however, that the black cloud over the team now has a silver lining.

To improve their image on campus, CMM needs to develop a stronger working relationship with The Queen's Journal and the student body. The Journal needs the AMS executive and in turn, the AMS executive needs us.

Contrary to what CMM has suggested, I do not believe that The Journal has in any way misinformed students or hindered the CMM team. We are a professional student newspaper and in turn we as editors and students expect to have a professional student government.

Whether harsh feelings exist or sideways glances have been exchanged, the events of the past week are over. It's done. For now. The Journal, however, is Queen's University's major campus medium and it is our job to be the watchdog of many groups on campus, especially the AMS. The CMM team will be scrutinized, criticized and when it's due — praised.

What may be the most important issue at hand however, is how the general student body perceives the CMM team. It would be a dreadful tragedy if students allow this election scandal to halt their interest in being involved with the AMS in any capacity. Unfortunately, this is the buzz that I've heard. The AMS needs Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners and Directors, like any year; students can make the AMS a better place, a place more accessible to students, a place which does not seem independent from the student body. The AMS is our student government and needs a lot more than Corman-Mori-Minns to successfully function.

So to Corman-Mori-Minns, I will say, as Editor-in-Chief I stand behind my plans for The Queen's Journal next year, and I, like all students expect you to stand behind your plans. So take to heart the words of Tom Stanley: "The things that help the most you can't teach." Live up to your plans CMM — The Journal is watching.

BY SARAH CROSBIE

The Journal is hiring for the 1999-2000 year!

Applications will be available Monday, March 1, 1999 at The Journal House, 272 Earl St.

Call Sarah at 533-2800 for more info.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Garein
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Antie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Founded February 18, 1888 • Volume 118
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University. Editorial opinions expressed in the Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a 50% recycled paper by The Queen's Journal Printers Ltd. in Kingston, Ontario. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 3N5. Telephone—(519) 413-5333-2800. Advertising—(519) 533-6711. Fax—(519) 533-6718. Email: journal@ams.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Issue 34 will be published on Monday, March 1, 1999. Circulation 5,000.

Spring Has Sprung
United Way Semi Formal
March 5, 1999
at the Portsmouth Harbour
8:00pm

Win a trip for two to Las Vegas

Tickets are on sale
Mon Wed Fri Mac-Corry
Tues Thurs JDUC
$15 per person or $25 for two

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
CAC

the Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL 1am.

The Laundry Café is still taking reservations for Formal Dinners on March 6. Call now to reserve a space.

...sad, lonely,
book we found in an old stuffy
warehouse basement

Campus Bookstore • Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-6, Saturday 10-5
www.campusbookstore.com • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

The Campus Bookstore Presents:

Homeless Academics

The Campus Bookstore presents our new Homeless Academics Sale. Like our Hurt Penguins Sale (which features a huge selection of titles in nearly perfect condition at unbeatable prices) our Homeless Academics Sale presents great books from excellent academic publishers at a fantastic savings! We will be featuring titles from publishers such as Blackwell, Columbia, Routledge and SUNY. Be sure to come by and give a good book a nice home!

On Now!

happy!
same book, in it's new home,
happy and well read..

Campus Bookstore

The AMS has its new Executive ... again.
We've got work to do. Want to help?

Get
a job!

Experience is <sup>not</sup> required.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

Applications for Council are due by 16:30 on Tuesday, March 2.
(Council includes two directors of AMS services, and commissions of Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Internal Affairs, Municipal Affairs, and Social Issues.)

Manager, Deputy and Director of Business Development are due by 16:30 on Monday, March 8.
Assistant Manager, Co-ordinator, and Committee Chair are due by 16:30 on Monday, March 15.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

The AMS is committed to employment equity.
All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

Staff and volunteer positions will be available soon.

It's A Fact!
The Queen's Bookstore has been buying and selling used books for over 20 years.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL

since 1873

TUESDAY, MARCH 2, 1999

TAs rate poorly

BY SHAWN BRIMLEY AND NICOLE SALAMA

The AMS Academic Affairs Commission has released a report on the quality of Teaching Assistants at Queen's. The report, compiled by the AMS Teaching Issues Committee, includes survey results and recommendations to improve the quality of instruction undergraduates receive from TAs.

"We want to raise awareness on the fact that undergraduates have not been given the attention they deserve when examining the relationship between a professor, a TA and the student," said Neil McCartney, Teaching Issues Committee co-chair.

The report, a result of a survey completed by 484 undergraduates, found that undergraduates are not

Please see English on page 7

Gaels ice Blues

BY NEATE SAGER

It took seven periods and almost 100 minutes, but the Queen's men's hockey team has finally exercised its playoff demons. The Gaels defeated the University of Toronto Blues 3-2 last Saturday at Jock Hartly Arena, capturing the final game of the best-of-three OUA Mideast division semifinals.

Queen's captain Scott Richardson ended the series when his shot from the point found its way through a crowd of players in front of the Toronto net at 16:37 of the fourth overtime period. It marked Queen's first victory in a playoff series since 1993.

"We can't be much higher," said Gaels' Head Coach Chris MacDonald, whose club clawed back from a 2-1 home-ice setback in the series opener and a 2-0 deficit in Game 3. "That's the great thing about this game... that fine line between agony and defeat that both teams walked tonight."

Please see Queen's on page 19

One of the tropical paradises enjoyed by some students over Reading Week. In this case, a view from the boardwalk strip of downtown Puerto Vallarta, Mexico.

PHOTO BY RENEE HUANG

CO detector saves students' lives

BY RENEE HUANG

Last Thursday at 2:43 a.m., four female students in a house on Clergy Street woke to a sound that probably saved their lives.

Their recently purchased carbon monoxide alarm alerted the occupants to a high level of the gas inside their house and prompted them to call Kingston Fire department, said Deputy Fire Chief Neville Murphy.

The women left their house to stay elsewhere for the night, the landlord was notified and the gas line was turned off, said Murphy.

Murphy confirmed that the crew which responded to the call found carbon monoxide gas exceeding safe levels in three areas of the house. One area reached 700 parts per million.

"Ultimately it can be deadly... These people were very lucky that their detector activated when it did."

— Deputy Fire Chief Neville Murphy

"Anything above 35 parts per million would give symptoms of CO [poisoning]," he said, explaining the toxic gas "could be caused by a number of different heating appliances." Carbon monoxide gas can be created if a furnace or heating appliance is not functioning properly, Murphy explained.

Mike Baird, a Queen's professor in the department of chemistry, said carbon and hydrogen make up the fuel that is burned in an average furnace. When burned, the carbon is converted into carbon dioxide and the hydrogen is converted to water. Carbon monoxide is the result of an incomplete combustion. It can be lethal because it displaces the oxygen carried by the iron in blood and can cause a victim to suffer from oxygen depletion, Baird explained.

"CO is an odourless, colourless gas that is very toxic," Murphy said. "When it's inhaled it can be absorbed into the bloodstream" where it can cause flu-like symptoms including dizziness, vomiting, headaches and convulsions.

"Most people killed by CO are killed when they are sleeping... The gas is often referred to as a silent killer," Murphy said.

"Ultimately it can be deadly... These people were very lucky that their detector activated when it did."

Murphy said carbon monoxide often forms when furnaces are not vented properly. He also

Please see CO on page 3

SOARB accommodates Rosh Hashanah '99

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

The Senate Orientation Activities Review Board met twice last month to develop a solution for the impending problem of scheduling Orientation Week '99 around the Jewish celebration of Rosh Hashanah.

Ortin Wolpert, president of the Queen's Hillel Foundation, expressed the Queen's Jewish community's satisfaction with the decision. "We're very pleased. We're very impressed the students took out concerns seriously," said Wolpert.

"We think it's ideal, we couldn't have asked for better... we don't see the need for the September 6 through Saturday, September 11. However, all important and traditional events will be completed prior to 2 p.m. on Friday in order to accommodate students who observe Rosh Hashanah.

In creating its proposal, SOARB considered a recommendation from the Orientation Roundtable, which was submitted to Senate in January. The Roundtable recommended that move-in day be university to spend another $45,000," he said, "we're quite happy with SOARB's commitment."

"I think it's a huge move on the part of the University to meet the needs of its minority students and show they are welcome here," he added.

In creating its proposal, SOARB considered a recommendation from the Orientation Roundtable, which was submitted to Senate in January. The Roundtable recommended that move-in day be

"We think it's ideal, we couldn't have asked for better... we don't see the need for the

Please see Date on page 6

index

Volume 126, Issue 34
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	.1	A&E	.21
Editorials	.8	Crossword	.25
Opinions	.9	Classifieds	.26
Features	.15	M.S.C.	.27
Sports & Fitness	19

WEATHERWATCH

Today Cloudy with sun High 1°C, Low -7°C, POP 40%	Thursday Cloudy with sun High 2°C, Low -1°C, POP 20%
Wednesday Cloudy with snow High 0°C, Low -7°C, POP 90%	Friday Cloudy with sun High 0°C, Low -10°C, POP 40%

The
TORTURE KING

Alfie's
PUB

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1999

ELECTRIFYING

CONCRETE BLOCK SMASHING

MIND OVER MATTER

DANCING ON BROKEN GLASS

SKEWERS THROUGH BICEPS

STANDING ON EGGS

ENTEROLOGY

FIRE BREATHING

BENDING RED HOT METAL WITH BARE SKIN

FEATS OF CHI-KUNG

RIGHT BEFORE YOUR VERY EYES!

TRANSCENDING THE PHYSICAL BODY

CLASSIC SIDESHOW FEATS

SPEAR RESISTANCE

YOGI INTERNAL FLOSS

STUNT THE TOURING SHOW

SEE MIGHTY JACK HARTLEY

AS FEATURED ON GUINNESS WORLD RECORDS

SEE FLEX THE RUBBER BOY

TICKETS $5 ADVANCED
TICKETS $6 AT THE DOOR

Queen's works to attract female engineers

BY NATALIE DIAZ

With a total of 621 students, this year's first-year enrolment in the Faculty of Applied Science is a record high. Nevertheless, Queen's engineering seems to have remained largely unappealing to female applicants.

Only 28.03 per cent of first-year Queen's engineering students are women, and even less, 26.15 per cent, of engineering undergrads are female.

Alexandra Downie, special assistant to Dean of Applied Science Tom Harris, said one of the main reasons why female enrolment is so low is because, from a young age, females are not encouraged to enter the science field.

Downie referred to a survey of fourth-grade females that showed that most girls believed they had poor math and science skills. "There is a conceived perception that science is harder than English and this makes them intimidated by the courses, rather than feeling challenged by them," Downie explained. It has also been found that many women are less confident in the science areas than they are in other areas, such as the social sciences, she continued.

"There has been a huge increase of women engineers from 1975, when there was only about one per cent," said Harris. According to Downie, as of the 1979-80 academic year, overall female enrolment had increased, but only to 14.4 per cent.

Low female enrolment in engineering programs is not only a Queen's phenomena, but a provincial one as well. Female enrolment in engineering is lower than male enrolment at all Ontario schools, with the exception of the University of Guelph where there is a 50-50 split. At Ryerson, women make up only 16 per cent of the first-year engineering class, while at Laurentian only 9.5 of first-year engineering students are female.

In response, many Ontario universities are taking initiatives to attract women to the field of engineering.

Keeley Blunting, Sci '01, is the Outreach Coordinator for WISE (Women In Science and Engineering), a Queen's initiative. This year, the program is directed at educating Girl Guides, as they have not entered high school yet and still have all their academic options open to them, Blunting said.

"It consists of a three-part presentation. They first discuss what scientists and engineers do, followed by a marching game where they attempt to associate famous women scientists and engineering with what they've accomplished, and lastly, they participate in an engineering activity," said Blunting.

The program, organized by student volunteers, is designed to encourage female participation in science and engineering. "The sessions are free and the program could be extended to children of all ages in the future, if there was enough demand and interest within the community," Blunting added.

Female engineering students believe that low female enrolment in their program is a problem.

"The male/female ratio has never bothered me. I think it's sad, however, that most people think engineering as male careers just like they think of nursing as female careers," said Nicole Doucet, Sci '02. "A lot of people think engineering is a trade, and it's not."

Gemma Charlebois, Sci '02, agreed. "I think it's sad that they have to promote engineering to women simply because of the stereotypes of traditional women and male roles," she said. "I think that they should definitely be encouraged because it's a promising career and it has a lot of offers. I truly enjoy it."

Lecturer examines hockey's 'heart of darkness'

BY BOB MCGILL

The claim that Canadian hockey is a profoundly flawed institution was the controversial centre of sports journalist Laura Robinson's lecture "Beyond Hockey: Issues of Power and Abuse in Sport." Robinson spoke to a crowd of approximately 100 people on February 17 at the fourth annual Donald Macintosh Memorial Lecture.

"When someone like Jarret Reid in Sault Ste. Marie is charged with sexual assault and then three days later they're sending him out to sign autographs for Big Brothers at Swiss Chalet, that's intentional."

— speaker Laura Robinson

Robinson is the author of Crossing the Line, a book that investigates cases of abuse by coaches, hazing rituals and sexual assault in Canadian junior hockey. Crossing the Line argues that hockey institutionalizes patriarchy and violence, often turning players themselves into abusers.

Robinson told her audience that she was the first journalist in Canada to investigate sexual abuse in sport, beginning with a 1992 documentary called "Thin Ice" for CBC's The Fifth Estate. "It was like going into the heart of darkness," she said of what she learned. "I couldn't believe what I was hearing."

Communities have often protected their hockey stars against accusations, Robinson explained. "When someone like Jarret Reid in Sault Ste. Marie is charged with sexual assault and then three days later they're sending him out to sign autographs for Big Brothers at Swiss Chalet, that's intentional," she said.

Robinson also spoke about a case in Swift Current, Saskatchewan, in which a girl claiming to have been taped was actually brought up on charges of mischief while the alleged perpetrators never stood trial.

Robinson emphasized that hockey has had profound effects on both Canada's young men and women. Communities "desperate for symbols of masculinity" transform hockey players into "knights in shining armour" who bear the expectations of entire communities, she said. Meanwhile women are "seen in hockey only through their relationship to male participants," Robinson added.

Citing one case of team members having group sex with women, Robinson claimed that "there was no female sexual agency. The real relationship was between the players."

"I'm not saying that because someone's a hockey player they're going to become a gang-rape or go into really sick initiations," Robinson said. "But I'm saying these things exist and are systemic in junior hockey."

Robinson also emphasized that violence in hockey is a manifestation of problems at the societal level. "There's a very strong relationship between what's happening in sport and what's happening elsewhere... Whether it's hockey or organized religion, there's very little difference."

Robinson concluded her lecture by offering a silver lining in an often-gloomy representation of Canadian sport. "There's a new culture of guys who don't like the present culture and feel as alienated by it as girls... There are wonderful pockets of sport that work, but unfortunately there are these terrible pockets of sport, too."

Robinson argued that in order for institutions of sport to progress, they have to give up self-regulation and submit to external investigation.

Robinson's work has recently appeared in Toronto Life, Canadian Forum, and Chatelaine magazines. The first printing of Crossing the Line has sold out, and Robinson is currently working on Clearing Hurdles, a book about women in Olympic sport.

Numbers of women enrolled in engineering are dwindling.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

CO a 'silent killer'

Continued from page 1

said that portable heaters, space heaters and other fuel and oil-based appliances are often culprits in CO leaks. "Plug in types [of space heaters] don't usually create problems burning," Murphy explained.

"Anything that needs a vent or chimney, if not vented properly, creates the possibility of CO poisoning," he cautioned.

Carbon monoxide has received much more attention recently than in the past 20 years, Murphy said. "Right now there tends to be a much greater education of CO detectors and CO poisoning... I've seen proof that CO detectors have definitely saved lives."

Municipal Affairs Commissioner Sarah Corman agreed. "There have been a few issues in the student village with furnaces that are too old," she said.

Sbe urged students looking to sign leases to question potential landlords and current tenants about the condition of their furnaces. Landlords don't necessarily keep an eye on how recently furnaces have been tuned, Corman said, and with students moving in and out every year, furnace maintenance can be easily overlooked.

"It is a problem with a lot of the older houses in the student village," she indicated, adding that extra diligence on the part of house hunters will ensure proper care is given to such safety concerns.

CO detectors range in cost from $25 to $100 and can be purchased at hardware stores such as Canadian Tire, Murphy said. He stressed the importance of purchasing detectors with ULC or CSA labels.

Patrick McNeill, Town-Gown Relations, said CO detectors are "not something a lot of students know about." While he has not had any inquiries about the need to purchase CO indicators, McNeill said his office will have information available to any interested parties.

Deputy Fire Chief Neville Murphy displays a carbon monoxide detector similar to the one that saved four students' lives last week.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

$7 million fund to promote Queen's research

By FIONA STEVENSON

A new $7 million venture fund will invest in enterprises formed by Queen's researchers looking to protect, commercialize and market research discoveries in health and the life sciences.

"It's really a sign of confidence based on what they've seen from Queen's in the past."

— Suzanne Fortier, vice-president (research)

The Working Ventures CMDF Queen's Scientific Breakthrough Fund was launched February 15. It is intended to provide a local source of capital to small, high-growth businesses and to promote investment partnerships between universities and their local communities.

The new fund has been established as a partnership between Queen's, Working Ventures Canadian Fund and the Canadian Medical Discoveries Fund.

"It's really a sign of confidence based on what they've seen from Queen's in the past," said Suzanne Fortier, Queen's vice-president (research). "They're making the commitment ahead of time, at the outset, which is really wonderful."

The fund will be managed by Partners in Technology at Queen's (PARTEQ), the technology transfer office of the university.

"We're here to identify intellectual property when it arises at the university, to protect that intellectual property and find ways and means to commercialize it," explained John Molloy, PARTEQ president and chief executive officer.

One of PARTEQ's major

Please see "Dynamic" on page 7

Interested in a Career in Teaching?

Consider Montessori education. It is a child-centred approach that offers teaching opportunities world-wide. Toronto Montessori Institute has been accredited by the Montessori Accreditation Council for Teacher Education. MACTE is an autonomous international accrediting agency for Montessori Teacher Education Courses. Toronto Montessori Institute has been training teachers for 28 years.

Our course leads to 2 diplomas qualifying you to teach children 3 to 12 years old, applying Montessori educational theory and methodology.

Prerequisite: Undergraduate Degree
Course duration: August 1999 - June 2000

Enrolment is limited. For further information please call Pam Debbo, Registrar, at (905) 889-9201
e-mail: pdebbo@toronto-montessori.on.ca

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE
8569 Bayview Avenue, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3M7

Queen's to offer new cultural studies course

By ALEXANDRA DYER

Queen's is often seen as a relatively homogeneous school that does not wholly reflect the cultural diversity that is evident in Canada. However, the development of a new 'intercultural relations' course may indicate that there is support for establishing a more diverse curriculum.

Queen's psychology professor John Berry, who is developing the new course, sees it "as a concrete and important step in the move towards increased diversity, internationalization and an interdisciplinary approach to learning," he said. "Perhaps it will also stimulate the development of other courses that deal with cultural issues."

According to Berry, IDIS 307, entitled 'Intercultural Relations,' represents the university's attempt to offer course material that reflects the diversity in Canada. "The impetus for this course emerged in the late 1980s when former principal David Smith saw that Queen's needed to become a more open and diverse institution," he explained.

In response, the Advisory Commission on Race Relations, chaired by Berry, submitted more than 100 recommendations on the subject of diversity at Queen's. "One of the main issues concerned the lack of curriculum dealing with cultural issues and the need to remedy this situation," he said.

"In March of 1995, I created a proposal for a course on intercultural relations which would be designed as an interdisciplinary course, however, it didn't go anywhere," Berry explained. "In the interim, courses like 'Race and Racism' have developed within the tradition outlined by the Commission."

"About a year ago the psychology department had a visit from the Dean of Arts and Sciences, Robert Silverman, who expressed interest in making the curriculum more diverse and culturally relevant," Berry continued.

"Perhaps it will also stimulate the development of other courses that deal with cultural issues."

— John Berry, psychology professor

According to Berry, the new course will focus on the roots of intercultural relations and "emphasis will be placed on anthropology, acculturation, ethnic relations and intercultural communication... No book or course has brought all of these elements together."

Although he is developing the course, Berry will not necessarily teach it. "I am retiring in June of this year, but will ensure that someone is qualified and able to teach the course," he said.

The course is particularly unique in that "it is preferable to teach it in three to six weeks even though it is a half-credit course," he said. However, like regular half-credit courses,

"there will still be 36 contact hours of lectures and interactive seminars," he explained.

Although Berry is a psychology professor, this course is not affiliated with his department. "The psychology department is predominately geared towards experimental research and is not oriented towards issues of culture," he explained.

The creation of a new course may seem unusual at a time when university budgets are continually being reduced and courses eliminated. According to Berry, "the courses that are being added are interdisciplinary and involve diversity and an international aspect, which is why this course is being supported."

However, Berry said, "I'm still not sure of where the funds for the course are coming from, but the dean's office is supporting the course development." As this course will first be offered at Herstoncoex castle in the Spring of 2000 and will be mandatory for these students, he said he believes the funding will come out of the castle budget.

"I am unaware of what student reaction will be as there have been no surveys, but it seems that this is a course that could attract students from a wide variety of backgrounds," Berry predicted.

Jennifer Bishop, a fourth-year psychology student, said, "this sort of course would allow students to broaden their area of study with the interdisciplinary approach bringing in aspects of the other social sciences."

CORRECTIONS

In an editorial in the Feb 11 extra, Owen Minns' name was misspelled. His tenure at Queen's for six years.

In a news story in the last issue about electronic campaigns, Mike Beltzner's name was misspelled. In a news story in the Feb 11 extra, a quote by Minns should have read "I have some oversized clown shoes to fill." The Journal regrets the errors.

Get a job!

Join the 1999-2000 AMS Council.

Council is the executive body of the Assembly, responsible for providing the initiative and the responses to all political and policy matters of the AMS. Council shall attempt to clarify issues for the Assembly, identify and deal with campus problems, and handle the administrative details of the Society. The members of Council are the Commissioners of Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Internal Affairs, Municipal Affairs, and Social Issues, and two Directors, the Director of Services and the Director of Media & Services.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Experience is not required.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due on Thursday March 4 before 16:30.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Time's running short to go to Las Vegas!! Win an all expenses paid trip for 2 at the United Way Semi-Formal on March 5. Tickets on sale in the JDUC and MacCorrey. $15 person, $25 couple

Free Money! (For just causes.) Winter Cubs and Assembly Grants application forms are available outside of the AMS Internal Affairs Commission March 5th-19th. For more information please contact Dave Contant at 533-6000 ext. 74815

AMS Applications due:

Council	March 4
Manager	March 9
Deputy Assistant Man.	March 9
Committee Chair	March 15
Coordinators	March 15
Staff and Committees	After March 21

If you have something you want to tell the world then phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

Keep Left
←

Keep Left
←

Progressive Politics on Campus: A Panel Discussion

Dr. Margaret Little
Institute of Women's Studies & Department of Political Studies

Stephanie Simpson
Anti-Racism Coordinator
Human Rights Office

7:30pm
March 17th, 1999
3rd Floor Common Room, JDUC followed by the OPIRG Kingston Annual General Meeting and Election of Board of Directors

Free fair trade coffee, and snacks from the Sleepless Goat Cafe.

For info on the Board Nomination process, contact OPIRG Kingston prior to March 5th, 549 0066, The Earth Centre, JDUC

It doesn't take an Einstein to do the math...

$60 > $60

When is $60 greater than $60?
When a student gives to Queen's.

Your gift of $60 shows a strong commitment to Queen's and packs a powerful punch when the University asks alumni and friends for millions of dollars to support our school.

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

Date change would have cost $45,000

Continued from page 1

moved back to Sunday, September 5 and that all major Faculty orientation events be held before Friday afternoon. After inviting comments from interested campus groups such as the Hillel Foundation, Queen's Residences Services and the Orientation committees, SOARB decided not to include the first recommendation to push back move-in date. The board agreed that it was important for first-year students to have an opportunity to participate in key orientation events. However, they also considered other factors such as university operations, student volunteers and financial consequences of changing the move-in date.

A memorandum to SOARB from Graham Brown, director of residences, outlined some of the disadvantages of an early move-in date. Based on Graham's proposal, "the major disadvantage to a date change is the additional costs incurred in residence operations estimated at approximately $45,000," the SOARB report stated. The expense would be incurred due to the additional custodial staffing, early room preparation, and food costs. In addition, there would be time pressures placed on training for residence Dons and floor seniors. In its proposal, SOARB did include the recommendation to reschedule orientation activities within the original framework so that the most traditional events are held before mid-afternoon Friday. "It was widely accepted that orientation activities would continue to run through Friday and Saturday with minor or non-traditional events scheduled," the report stated. Such events would include things like the sidewalk sale and concert.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford, said he was "very impressed with the students involved... the orientation leaders were very willing to accommodate and compromise."

Crawford said there was never a question about rescheduling the more important and traditional events before Friday. "The students did a wonderful job of working out a schedule... It gives me a lot of optimism for Orientation Week '99."

Crawford said the SOARB committee, which included representatives from the Hillel and from ORT, found that most major Faculty events could be rescheduled. For example the Faculty of Applied Science has decided to move the greasepole event to the Saturday following Orientation Week, he said.

Jehn Mihill, Head Gael for Orientation Week '99, said Arts and Science is satisfied with the new scheduling. "Initially we looked at it as a pretty big obstacle, we now look at it as a really positive thing," she said.

Mihill said one of their goals this year was to bring a fresh approach to Orientation Week. "It's forced us to do that."

Some of the larger changes to the ASUS orientation events include the rescheduling of the tanning ceremonies, which will occur earlier in the week, and the semi formal, which will be held on the second night.

"It was difficult... it's very hard to revamp a week that's been the same for a number of years," said Mihill, but added, "we think it will be a fun event regardless."

If you're concerned about the
Year 2000
Bug...

"Together, we can beat the Bug!"

No one has all the answers.

But we can help.

Your computer

When the year 2000 rolls around, your personal computer could get confused. It could start to read the year 2000 as the year 1900. Essentially, that's the Millennium Bug. Lots of other electronic devices could catch it too, but your computer is the most vulnerable. Hardware, software, operating systems, data — all could be affected. So could printers, modems, and scanners. We can show you how to test your computer for possible Year 2000 difficulties. And we can help you to find out which products and suppliers are Bug-free.

Your finances

Canada's banks, other deposit-taking institutions and related organizations such as VISA, MasterCard, and the Interac Association expect to have their technology fully prepared. They are developing back-up systems and contingency plans to deal with any unforeseen events. If you have questions, you should contact your financial institution.

Your household appliances

You probably don't have to worry about your appliances. The Bug will hit only those that depend on dates to work properly. If you can unplug an appliance and then turn it back on without having to reset anything, it should be OK. None of your equipment should stop working altogether.

But timing devices could be a problem on some VCRs, fax machines, security alarms, digital thermostats, answering machines, and video and digital cameras. We can help you to get Year 2000 information supplied by appliance retailers and manufacturers.

Your car

Manufacturers say it is highly unlikely that the Bug will cause car problems. We can show you what several of the major car manufacturers have to say about the Bug and their products.

Don't wait until you have a problem to begin finding out about the Year 2000 Bug. Start now! Watch for the Millennium Bug Homecheck guide in your mailbox. For more information call:

1-800-270-8220

TTY: 1-800-465-7735

Or visit us at:

www.canada.gc.ca

Canada

Get
your
TICKETS!

Formal tickets
STILL ON SALE!!

$65.00
March 6th

Queen's Players
tickets...

...COMING SOON!!

exchange

Mon. to Fri. 9am - 5pm, Sat. 10am - 1pm

'Dynamic' research environment

Continued from page 4

functions, Molloy explained, is to identify pieces of intellectual property on which new companies can be built, and look for sources of funding to do so.

"In the past we have had to spend a lot of time... looking for that kind of financing," he said. Molloy said he predicts the new venture fund will reduce the time PARTEQ has to spend looking for funding, ensure easy access to funding, and provide leverage to attract investors.

"We do have a community here that thinks about ways that research contributes to, not only the university, but also to the society."

— Suzanne Fortier, vice-president (research)

"It really makes the research environment at Queen's a very dynamic one, where we're able to look at all aspects of the research," from discovery to implementation, said Fortier. "We do have a community here that thinks about ways that research contributes to, not only the university, but also to the society."

The fund will make initial investments of up to $250,000 and follow-up investments of up to a total of $1.4 million in companies with less than $1 million in assets. The fund will focus on the areas of biotechnology, health and life sciences, however, researchers from other technological fields may also be eligible.

Initial capitalization of the fund consists of $5 million from Working Ventures Canadian Fund, Canada's largest national venture capital fund, and $2 million from Canadian Medical Discoveries Fund, the largest venture investor in Canada's life sciences sector.

PARTEQ spin-off companies have raised more than $55 million during the last three years to develop technologies discovered through research at Queen's. PARTEQ has helped create more than 125 jobs and estimates the value of its transfer efforts above $175 million.

The Scientific Breakthrough Fund is the second fund to be launched under the Ontario Government's Community Small Business Investment Fund Program.

English TAs praised

Continued from page 1

satisfied with the quality of teaching assistants in certain performance areas, and that university standards concerning TAs are lacking.

"Undergraduates are the last group that anybody thinks of when giving out teaching assistant positions," said McCartney. "There is a real lack of concern of the fact that these teachers are going to be in charge of a good portion of a student's education, especially in the early years."

According to the report, 48 per cent of students surveyed felt their TAs do not have sufficient teaching ability.

"The 48 per cent negative response raises concerns that the needs of some undergraduates are being neglected at the expense of providing teaching experience for graduate students," the reports reads. "Surely, more than half of undergraduates should be satisfied with the abilities of their TAs."

"There really isn't any university-wide standards for training TAs," said TIC Co-Chair Andrew Dalrymple. "Departments should be forced to provide at least some preliminary training that could benefit all TAs."

Maria Quattro, ArtSci '01, agreed adding "when they [TAs] have our futures in their hands, they must have the knowledge to mark our papers."

The discrepancy between the professors and the TAs is also an issue, said Krista Galbraith, ArtSci '01. "What they [TAs] want and what the professor wants can be two different things."

Both Dalrymple and McCartney said they believe the English department provides some of the best training for teaching assistants.

"The department of English is a great example of a department that actually gives mandatory courses in teaching skills and pedagogy," said McCartney.

The report also reveals that 64 per cent of undergraduates feel that some TAs have insufficient ability to speak English. A total of 84 per cent of engineering students feel their TAs have trouble communicating in English.

"This is a real concern, and I think it shows a disregard for the needs of undergraduate students," said McCartney. "Many lower-year courses are handled by TAs almost exclusively, and if the students can't understand the material on purely linguistic grounds, what hope can they have of getting their money's worth out of their education?"

Chris Hales, president of the Society of Graduate and Professional Student said "criticism is important and needs to be channeled constructively." One needs to "look at why [criticism] is there and at it from all perspectives," he added.

For Julienne Patterson, a sociology TA, there is "some validity to certain concerns [because] we are in training." She believes that TAs are an "integral part of the university process" and she hopes that TAs are seen as "another resource, like going to the library."

The report makes several recommendations, including standard English testing and mandatory training for all TAs.

"I'm really impressed by this report, it provides a new avenue for discussing internal academic issues at Queen's," said AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek. "The ability to communicate effectively and the transmission of knowledge and ideas are critical elements to receiving a good education at Queen's."

Attention all News Contributors!

Meeting on Friday,
March 5 @ 4 p.m.

Come to the Journal House lounge for food, prizes, peace and love

ROOTS
KINGSTON

WINTER
SALE
EVENT

SAVE!
UP TO 50% OFF

sweats shirts shoes bags & more for Adult,
Kids
& Baby

229 Princess Street - Open Weeknights & Sundays

See what the campaign can do...

2 new changerooms
+
4 hardwood team courts
+
6-lane running track
+
50-metre, 5-lane pool
=
100,000 sq.ft. "field house"

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Made in Canada

LEST THEY SHOULDN'T FORGET WHO their masters are, the CBC has been ordered to begin using the Canadian government's logo. In an effort to ensure that taxpayers know what they're paying for, the government ordered the CBC last year to begin using the logo on press releases and other correspondence. Previously protected by an exemption for cultural institutions, the crown-owned broadcaster is currently being pressured to acquiesce to the government's vain request.

While the CBC is indeed funded by the federal government, it should clearly not be subject to the same requirements as other federal services.

While the CBC is indeed funded by the federal government, it should clearly not be subject to the same requirements as other federal services. The CBC cannot maintain its unique position as an autonomous public broadcaster and a cultural institution if it must sport a government logo on its correspondence. Since its inception in 1936, the broadcaster has maintained an arms-length relationship with the government. Any change in this status would compromise the journalistic integrity of the CBC.

Canadians do not need to be reminded by a logo that their tax dollars fund the CBC. If anything, the logo will only confuse Canadians who are unclear on the role of the government in running the CBC. If the perception of the CBC as autonomous from the government is altered, this would only undermine the broadcaster's credibility in the public eye.

If the motive of the order is really to make the government more visible to Canadians, why place it on CBC correspondence at all? It seems more likely that the new policy is part of an effort by the federal government to re-inject the independent broadcaster. Since the logo would only harm this important cultural institution, the CBC should continue to resist using the logo.

Spare a dime?

HOW UNJUST. THE POOR LITTLE rich boy of NHL hockey, Senators owner Rod Bryden, actually has to pay his fair share of taxes. Between the GST, a 10 per cent entertainment tax, and another five per cent road maintenance tax, Bryden is burdened with a whopping 22 per cent in taxes each year. Unless his plight is ameliorated by huge tax breaks, he has threatened to pack up and move the entire franchise south of the border.

His argument for lowering his tax burden is simple: the government protects other Canadian industries with tax breaks, why not professional hockey? Also, his American counterparts already enjoy generous tax breaks and heavily subsidized arenas. In other words, all the other millionaires don't have to pay taxes, how can we possibly afford to stay in Canada if we do?

While many Canadians would certainly mourn the loss of the Senators, this is not a compelling enough reason to give Bryden or other NHL owners a multi-million dollar hand-out. If he cannot achieve financial viability with a sold out arena every night, then he needs to get his costs under better control.

Perhaps he should spend less time lobbying Ottawa and more time avoiding ridiculous expenditures, such as the Alexandre Daigle fiasco.

Unless Canadians express an interest in bailing out hockey teams, the government should not start subsidizing sports teams. While many Canadians may love hockey, they would prefer to spend the money on health care.

Bons Mots:

Broadcasting is really too important to be left to the broadcasters.

— Tony Benn

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Flora Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heiser

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Beltinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Krantz

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourne
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Tuesday, March 2, 1999 • Issue 34 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community Press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further privacy policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800, advertising: 613-533-6711. Fax: 613-533-6719. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 35 will be published on Friday, March 5, 1999.

Bursting the bubble

ILIVE IN A BUBBLE OF GENDER equality. This is what I am told when the plight of women is brought up in an argument.

I have never questioned the obvious gender inequalities that have existed for years, but I often argue that progress is occurring at an astounding rate — a rate that may someday see the working world feature a workforce divided not by sex, but by ability.

Never did I expect this sort of disregard for the intelligence of women.

This view is advanced by an upbringing where my mother runs a company, my sister is an accountant and virtually all my contemporaries, male and female, have found themselves in search of higher education. This is my bubble.

It is from this standpoint that I bark and yell about gender equality. Armed with random statistics that I have accumulated over time, I list off the number of women in university classrooms, courtrooms, operating rooms and boardrooms, and how many more there are today than there were yesterday.

It only took one small, seemingly insignificant event to remove me from my comfort zone, to invade my bubble.

The event occurred as I walked home from a bar in Waterloo with a female friend and two males we had recently met. As we strolled towards our destination, one of the guys asked us "Where exactly is The Shot in Kingston?" My friend gave a detailed description of the location of the popular watering hole, but her answer didn't seem to satisfy him and he repeated his question.

My companion once again responded clearly and concisely, at which time there was silence followed by his asking the question a third time. This time I repeated my friend's answer, and my response was met with a nod of the head and a few words of agreement from the same guy who was confrontational moments before.

It was immediately clear to me what had happened and I turned to my friend and voiced my concern. "They didn't listen to a word you said," I commented.

While the obvious snub on the part of our new friend was surprising to me, the reaction of my companion was distressing. "This happens all the time," she explained.

My bubble had burst. My naivety had never been so obvious. I have long sympathized with the constant threats to the safety of women, but never did I expect this sort of disregard for the intelligence of women.

This observation won't lead me to become a crusader for women's rights, nor will I ever truly understand the plight of women, but, now, the least I can do is listen.

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

OPINIONS

The end of Ontario

talking

HEADS

What was your favourite meal during Reading Week?

"Green curry." Josh Rubenstein Sci '00

"Your mama." Jack Chang Law '00

"KGH cafeteria special." Darryl D'Costa Meds '00 Paul Wilson Meds '00

PHOTOS BY KEVIN LORIMER

WHAT IS THE OPTIMUM SIZE for a province? Every few years, someone proposes merging the four Atlantic provinces in order to achieve economies of scale or greater political clout. While provinces that are too small may be undesirable, the opposite extreme is also unhealthy. Beyond a certain point, diseconomies of scale emerge. Major reasons for having a federal system include bringing decision-making closer to the people and protecting local cultures. But when a province is too large, these purposes are frustrated.

This is the case in Ontario today. In order to bring government closer to the people and improve the functioning of Canada as a whole, Ontario should be broken up into a number of smaller provinces.

One argument often advanced for decentralizing power from Ottawa to the provincial capitals is that provincial governments are closer to the people. When it comes to Prince Edward Island or even British Columbia, this is true. With Ontario, it is false. In the next provincial election, provincial ridings will correspond with federal ridings; in Ontario, the constituent-representative ratio will be the same for both Members of Parliament and Members of Provincial Parliament. With this change, those who would maintain that Queen's Park is closer to the voter than Parliament Hill will have lost a major argument.

Ontario's regions have diverse problems as well as diverse cultures. Regions with different economies need different economic strategies, these are best provided by having their own government.

Federalism provides a way in which local identities can be recognized and protected. The province of Ontario, however, sprawls across regions that are as different culturally as provinces, smothering local identities. Ontario's regions have diverse problems as well as diverse cultures. Regions with different economies need different economic strategies, these are best provided by having their own government.

Eastern Ontario's economy resembles that of the Maritimes: heavy dependence on federal spending and slow growth. Kingston's 20 per cent unemployment rate contrasts vividly with economic conditions in other parts of the province.

Southwestern Ontario (telephone area code 519) is more like the Prairie provinces in its vibrant economy, its Bible-belt and the polyglot ethnic make-up of the original settlers. There is even the occasional oil-well down there.

Toronto and "the 905 belt" seem a world apart from either 613 or 519 country.

Northern Ontario has often expressed dissatisfaction with being treated like a colony; recently a northerner outraged with Queen's Park's decision to cancel the spring bear hunt founded a northern Ontario separatist party with the aim of making the north its own province.

Breaking Ontario up roughly along telephone area code lines would allow the people of each region to make policies reflecting local values and dealing with the specific economic problems of their region. In case anyone argues that this would be too expensive, let's remember that Saskatchewan (area code 603) is a model of efficient and effective governance.

Breaking Ontario up roughly along telephone area code lines would allow the people of each region to make policies reflecting local values and dealing with the specific economic problems of their region.

Canada as a whole would benefit from the division of Ontario. People in other regions of the country often complain about Ontario throwing its demographic weight around when it comes to issues like gun control and economic policy.

Breaking Ontario up won't give Alberta more seats in the House of Commons, but it will allow people to see that Ontario is not a monolithic entity.

Regional dispires will become more complex, muddying the waters as to where the dividing lines between "Central Canada" and other regions of the country actually are. And while only about a 10th of Ontario's population is francophone, this population is concentrated in such a way that perhaps two of the new provinces would be about as bilingual as New Brunswick; a blurring of the lines between "English Canada" and Quebec would be achieved. If Quebec were subdivided too, the picture would be even more complex.

What would the mechanism for breaking provinces up be? We've already had too much top-down governance in this country, so politicians or so-called experts demarcating new interprovincial boundaries are the last thing we need. Instead, let's entrench in the constitution a process by which the inhabitants of an area of a province can hold a referendum on becoming their own province. The minimum population requirement for any region wishing to do this would be the population of the current smallest province.

We owe it to our country to partition this province. We also owe it to ourselves.

ANDREW SMITH
ARTS '99

See what the campaign can do...

- $3.4 million endowed for work study and work experience
- +
- $8 million endowed for graduate scholarships
- +
- $21.6 million endowed for national and international entrance scholarships
- +
- $50 million endowed for awards and bursaries
- =
- $60 million endowed for student assistance

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Natalie Olaz, Alexandra Dyer, Tara Haas, Bob McGill, Jason Miller, Annastasia Palubski, Adam Prosser, Nicole Salama, Andrew Smith.

Photographers: Bob Hush, Kevin Lorimer.

Letters to the Editors

AMS Elections

Harsh words for new AMS executive

Dear Editors,

You can't blame me for being nostalgic. I was bored, it was Friday, and I went to The Journal home page to see if anything was different at my old school.

Big fucking surprise — not a thing has changed. One of the teams screwed up — having found to be cheaters — and are disqualified. Nothing really unusual there (just check the rafters of the CORE to see the remains of past election scandals) but it's the dirty rumour that they'll be reinstated that bothers me. Now, I'm not an angry person as a rule. Really, ask people who know me and they'll say, "Justin? Naw, he ain't angry. He loves life." But it's times like this when I'm forced to put down the sticky bun I'm eating and just vent.

Oh, I know all about the sparkly things the AMS does for us, but let me be blunt: I've an active and passionate dislike for the AMS and feel it's my duty to give their collective backsides a verbal kicking every time they fuck up. Jesus, no one else seems to be willing to do it.

This election, like the others I've 'covered', reeks of arrogance and an utter contempt for the intelligence of the people who will pay their exorbitant salaries.

This election, like the others I've 'covered', reeks of arrogance and an utter contempt for the intelligence of the people who not only will pay their exorbitant salaries, but also put up with their endless shit for the year to come. At least it's good to see the AMS doing the one thing it does best: fucking the students of Queen's up the ass while smiling into their faces.

Here's a little something I found in The Journal that really speaks to the heart of what I'm talking about. Corman mentions, in detail no less, the "team's goal of functioning as a 'consistent voice' between students and administration." How admirable is that? Huh? The only problem is that it's a partial truth (like everything else in the AMS). They aren't at all interested in consistency between themselves and the electorate. Nope, just between students and administration. Crafty that. Just look at their statement concerning the mobile phone that got them disqualified. Sarah, et al, say "the phone was not acquired for the purpose of campaigning or organizing a campaign; it was acquired to allow Graham to remain in contact with his numerous friends and obligations."

— they aren't), instead of just whining about it, the team should publish an un-expunged record of every call made from the phone of shame and show everyone that Ryan never once used it to call anyone connected to the campaign — just his numerous friends and obligations.

We'll all be stuck with them (CMM) running rough-shod over us and embarrassing themselves and the school, and we'll all think back to when we first realized that they were untrustworthy.

Oh... look at that. "Friends and obligations." I wonder if that's another crafty partial truth. Because, really, wouldn't the campaign be one of his obligations? And wouldn't the voters all be his friends? Looks like a loophole waiting to be exploited (if they use this, I get a 10 per cent commission — you read it here first). I can see exactly what's going to happen. They are going to moan and bitch about this whole thing and come up with some bullshit lame excuse like the one I just made up and get back into office because everyone but the candidates are too apathetic to care. We'll all be stuck with them running rough-shod over us, fucking up and embarrassing themselves and the school, and we'll all think back to when we first realized that they were untrustworthy and shouldn't be in power and just cringe. Collectively. All at the same time. In a sort of Jungian uber-shame.

Shit Ryan, that makes you sound like an asshole. More to the point, why isn't this statement from Mr. Graham instead of from his handlers? (Ryan, just between you and me, I hardly let my mother fight for me anymore.) Even if this backhanded compliment were true, the damn thing was purchased right at the start of the campaign and by the campaign manager no less. It's deeply suspicious. It's also bordering on that arrogance and contempt I mentioned earlier to ask the students of Queen's to actually believe that Captain Popular never once used that ridiculous fashion accessory for the campaign.

The simple fact is that there is only one offence that can get a team disqualified: overspending. It's a simple, simple rule that it should be easy to follow. If you go over the budget, you are removed from the race. Now if the Corman team is truly serious about clearing their goodish name and gettin' back their hard-won office, (and if the AMS is serious about due-process and people being innocent until proven guilty — ah, let me place an odds-on bet here ment meetings last year, the zeal and spirit of self-congratulation with which our representatives reviewed and revised our electoral regulations, and unsurprised by the indifference of 76 per cent of our student population to this scandalous AMS election, I humbly recommend the following: disenfranchise us.

I haven't the precise figures, but I strongly suspect that the 24 per cent of the electorate which voted does not greatly exceed the proportion who either hold positions with or volunteer for student government on campus. They are bound to care about their management and policy. Let them vote. Leave the rest of us out of it. Frankly, we have better things to do.

I laugh, justifiably, with scorn at the thought that reducing the franchise would allow the AMS to run roughshod over my rights or to destroy my university life. In my four years here, no AMS government has made any remarkably unique or useful impression on my existence, neither has any team distinguished itself significantly from its forebears.

Did I read the candidates' materials? Yes. Did I believe that any team would make a significant difference to student life? No.

Did I vote? Yes. Did I care who won? Not a whit.

I propose the following: restrict the AMS executive voting to all members of student government committees and AMS volunteers. Any student who does not fulfill either of these qualifications should be excluded from voting.

Yes, I realize that there may be students here who want to vote but lack the time to participate in even the least of student government groups. Fine! Establish a Students Obstructing Tyranny committee, under the AMS Internal Affairs Commission, dedicated to allowing its members to vote at AMS election time. Advertise the SOT widely. This group will make no demands on its members' time — all they will ever do is vote, come February.

Continued on page 11

1 OLYMPIC HOUR PHOTO
QUALITY 1 HOUR PHOTO FINISHING
 Everyday Give-A-Way
 Free film
 or Free 2nd Set
 or
 Free 5 x 7
 C-41 35mm Full Frame, See store for Details.
 Film, Cameras, I.D. Photos, Photo Accessories.
 346 - Princess • 545-5998

Got an Ink-ling?
 Be part of the Queen's Journal next year!
 Applications are now available for all Editorial Board and Business Staff positions.
 Pick up an application at the Journal House, 272 Earl Street. For more information call Sarah at 533-2800.

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:
 Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
 Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.
 Visit the student food bank.
 There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free.
 We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.
 Basement, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division)
 533-6972

More Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 10

No one will be unfairly excluded and no one will be left saying: gee, maybe I should have voted. All those with strong opinions and interests will be able to participate.

I can see beneficial results of such a policy: there may be an enormous upsurge in volunteers for AMS and other student government activities. It might even result in informed voter participation. Besides which, The Journal and other student services already use a similar system, and no one suggests that they thereby become either despotic and irrelevant products or ruthless and dangerous institutions.

In short, let's all stop wasting paper, time, money and energy. Far too few of us can be moved to care.

Jonathan J. Weisman
 Artsci '99

Doctors, doctors: Give us the news

Dear Editors,

I would like to congratulate the Corman-Mori-Minns team on their victory in the recently concluded AMS Executive election. They must have run an exciting and brilliant campaign. But then again, how would I know? Actually, how would any of the 300 medical students here at Queen's know?

Not a single team decided it was worthwhile to spend some time promoting themselves and their platforms to any of the four medical classes. I can hardly blame them; the effort would probably be "low yield." Why waste the time and energy on an insignificant portion of the total votes out there (but, man, too bad Cheeseman and co. didn't put in the effort because it could have been really close)?

Now, I do realize that it is up to every individual student to make sure they're informed as to the issues and candidates. And I do not expect anyone to go out of their way to placate every single person on campus. Maybe I am just upset because this was the first time in six years I didn't vote because I had not a clue. But the lack of concern for the medical student vote is exactly the crux of the recent call for medical students to leave the AMS and join the SGPS.

Not a single team decided it was worthwhile to spend some time promoting themselves and their platforms to any of the four medical classes.

Many medical students felt that the AMS did not represent their needs and being such a small group in the large student government does not allow for our specific concerns to be easily addressed. That winning our votes wasn't worth the effort simply makes me think that being heard in the AMS assembly is an incredibly difficult task. That's the feeling I get, anyway. Maybe we made a mistake in deciding to stay in the AMS. Maybe we should have joined the Law and Grad students. Who knows? Oh well, I guess we can always have another referendum next year.

Rob Tanzola
 Artsci '97, Meds '01

Journal is incestuous and over-sexed

Dear Editors,

I do not presume to know what the Queen's student population finds interesting and desires to read in their student paper, but I will speak for myself. It seems that The Journal is insistent on writing/publishing mundane signed editorials where Journal staff members blab-ber on about any irrelevant piece of their lives that they feel is important enough to reach the entire student population. The editors are in a position to reach many intelligent readers, yet consistently choose to write on the minutia of their outrageously ordinary lives. Perhaps no other issues interest the editors? Well, there are lots of topics I am interested in reading about, but I don't especially care that a bagel station has moved or that the co-editor-in-chief is intensely proud of her vibrator ownership. Although not written by a staff member, I am equally uninterested in an exceptionally poorly written Opinion article where Natalie Diaz straggles before my eyes to decide whether "picking up" is a fun thing to do or an empty experience. More recently, my annoyance peaked upon reading the hideous article by Sean Springer and Jocelyn Laporte, two Journal staffers who enthusiastically reveal their fascinating night of getting piss drunk and getting it on with each other. I guess it is no longer a secret that The Journal editorial board is more akin to a partner-swapping, self-congratulatory in-group than a professionally run newspaper (perhaps the AMS should pay them with beer and condoms instead of our costly student activity fees).

In specific, I would like to add some insight missing from the editorial by co-editor-in-chief Tara Mansbridge. It seems that Ms. Mansbridge is not only "sexually healthy" but feels strongly that The Journal is an appropriate forum to talk about the vibrator discrimination that she has fallen victim to on numerous occasions. I would like to surprise Ms. Mansbridge by telling her that I am not "shocked" or even "enormously curious" about her confessions of vibrator ownership and enjoyment. And thank you for alleviating my "disillusionment" that she is neither a nymphomaniac nor "really, really lonely." Indeed I don't feel that it is "confidence" that led to such a trite and uncontroversial editorial as Ms. Mansbridge suggests. I would like to go out on a limb and suggest that people react with surprise when she yammers on about her vibrators, not from prudish intolerance, but from the uncomfortable position she has put them in by "boldly" discussing a very private matter. There is a reason why the words "private" and "personal" are often attached to these parts of our lives. This is not because of shame stemming from systematic discrimination against women and/or the desire to keep women from "sexual liberation;" it is because we don't need to know what sexual games and aids/toys Ms. Mansbridge purchases and enjoys.

I guess it is no longer a secret that The Journal editorial board is more akin to a partner-swapping, self-congratulatory in-group than a professionally run newspaper.

Her vibrator ownership is not shocking or surprising in our sexually liberated world; in fact, it is not even slightly unusual. I know few women ashamed of shopping in a sex shop (and would find a piece on the lack thereof in Kingston a much more professional and informative editorial than "I love my vibrator" girl) but I know equally few who are determined to share their sexual toy of choice with their entire student population.

NOW OPEN
 JAMES Coiffure BRETT
Advanced Haircutting and Styling Colour and Highlighting Specialist
 Helping you create your most desired formal Updo's
 Downtown Kingston
 Your Sebastian - Wella Salon
 432 Princess 542-2427

See what the campaign can do...
 165 new print journal titles
 +
 1,000 more new books annually
 +
 1,200 new electronic full-text journal titles
 +
 72,000-article Encyclopedia Britannica online
 =
 annual purchasing power of $5 million endowed for libraries
 Now that's genius.
 THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

More Letters to the Editors

Way to go, Tara

Continued from page 11

Please, dear co-editor-in-chief, don't fall prey to mistaking a tattered page in your diary for a well thought-out, insightful and intelligent article. And don't disguise your lack of interesting ideas by masquerading as a post-feminist crusader for the sexual liberation of women. No one cares that you use a vibrator. I don't care if you stick one in each orifice and dance the hokey-pokey. Use the space you are given to write about something that is mildly interesting or even something that is truly controversial (an actual controversial sexually-related topic? Imagine!). And get your staff to do the same.

Lynn Davidson
Arts '99

I am writing this letter to congratulate Tara Mansbridge on her honesty. Mansbridge's article in the Feb. 9 edition of The Journal was wonderful. I wish that more people were able to speak openly about sexuality in all of its facets. I would also like to take this opportunity to suggest that those who have criticized Mansbridge that they grow up. In his response, Mike Martelle stated that students don't care about Mansbridge's sexual activities.

While this may be true of some students, some of us are very interested in increasing communication about sexuality in general and about women's sexuality more specifically, which is exactly what Mansbridge has done here. Martelle also asked "Can't we stick to the news?" Perhaps Martelle did not notice that this article was printed on the Opinions page which is usually a forum for opinions concerning current issues, not necessarily hard news.

Many Queen's students see providing a forum to become comfortable with their sexualities and express their views on the topic as a function of campus media.

I would also like to point out that increasing awareness about sexuality is news. There are many students here at Queen's that see providing a forum to become comfortable with their sexualities and express their views on a topic as a very function of campus media. In addition, the author of a previous letter attacked Mansbridge by suggesting vibrators are unnatural. What is so unnatural about sexual pleasure? In my opinion, it is more unnatural to repress one's sexual desires and to silence discussion on the topic than to have a little fun with a sex toy.

Taryn McCormick
Arts '99

The moon, the sun and self-gratification

Dear Editors,

I would like to give a rebuttal to Jen Evans' letter to the editor in which she criticized Tara Mansbridge's editorial on the subject of vibrators.

First, I would like to congratulate Ms. Mansbridge on her courage in trying to shatter the taboos surrounding masturbation whether it be with an "inanimate" vibrator or not. Second, I was shocked by the ignorance Ms. Evans expressed in her letter. Evans wrote, and I quote, "It is not natural to fulfill your sexual longings with inanimate objects." This quote makes no sense to me. It is not natural to use condoms. Condoms are inanimate objects and should be used in this day and age to fulfill sexual longings. Should we stop using condoms because they are not "natural?" I hope everyone, including Ms. Evans, would answer "no" to this question. If this is the case then it is all right to use unnatural condoms, but not unnatural vibrators. Where do we draw the line Ms. Evans?

It is not natural for man to walk on the moon. Should we stop the space program?

It is not natural to cure illness and disease because life saving medication does not usually occur naturally on the earth. Should research being done at Queen's University and other institutions be stopped due to its unnatural nature?

The point is that if human beings stopped doing everything that was unnatural we would be living in a cave, eating our food raw, and having sex simply for survival of the species. Do you see what I am getting at Ms. Evans? People do and use unnatural things everyday. What is natural for human beings? What is human nature? Perhaps Ms. Evans has the answer.

In conclusion, I would like to enlighten Ms. Evans on the fact that the university environment is an environment that should be tolerant and sensitive to diversity whether that diversity be sexual, cultural, racial or something else (obviously Ms. Evans was not paying attention to one of the main purposes of Frosh Week). People have the right to express themselves as long as they do not infringe on the rights of others. Ms. Mansbridge has not infringed on the rights of anyone. However, Ms. Evans has no right to publicly chastise someone for her lifestyle. If Person A wrote an article on how great it is to be homosexual and Person B had written a letter similar to Ms. Evans', Person B would be labeled a homophobic. Since people love labels so much, what we can label a person who is against people who use vibrators? A vibrator? An anti-vibrator? What do you think, Ms. Evans?

Jason Andrews
Arts '01

Praise & Criticism

Tupac too late

Dear Editors,

This letter is in response to Ben Molson's article "On Death Row," which appeared in the February 16 issue of The Journal. While it's always nice to see hip-hop getting some coverage in the campus media, it's a shame that Mr. Molson chose to write a simple rehash of such a dated topic as the Tupac Shakur murder. The Tupac slaying (and the conspiracy theories surrounding it) has been analyzed in great depth by numerous publications and television programs in the past couple of years, to the extent that anyone who had enough interest in the subject to want to read Mr. Molson's article probably already knew all of the information it contained. The article didn't give any new insight into the subject — it couldn't have, since there have been no breakthroughs whatsoever in the two-year-old case — so it was old news, especially to its assiduously intended audience of hip-hop fans.

Anyone who had enough interest in the subject to want to read Mr. Molson's article probably already knew all of the information it contained.

Furthermore, some small but obvious mistakes in the details of the article suggest that perhaps Mr. Molson isn't really knowledgeable enough about the subject of hip-hop to be writing such an extensive piece under a heading claiming "Hip-Hop Is Dead." For example, he reports that "Snoop Doggy Dogg... is still signed to Death Row," but Snoop left Death Row, dropped the "Doggy" from his name, and signed with Master P's No Limit Records almost a full year ago, an event that even a relatively casual follower of hip-hop should be familiar with.

There's nothing wrong with doing some follow-up on an unsolved mystery, but without something new to report, there's no story. And since Mr. Molson obviously can't be expected to dig up any new information about such a well-worn subject, he should let sleeping dogs (and slain rappers) lie.

Continued on page 13

More Letters...

Continued from page 12

Mike Keast
Sci '98

Gimme shelter

Dear Editors,

Ryandale Shelter for the Homeless would like to thank the diverse community leaders, volunteers and the Kingston Community Credit Union for participating in the Adversity Challenge on January 30. Their presence on that sunny Saturday morning expressed an earnest solidarity with the poor.

All of us were deeply distressed and personally challenged by the workshop's real-life predicaments. They revealed the true faces of poverty so often hidden behind the statistics: men, women, and children crying out for a sense of dignity and self-worth.

We urge the citizens of Kingston and surrounding area to join us in rebuilding the dignity of our more vulnerable community members.

As our facilitator attested, we must now ask ourselves, "So what?" Poverty can be overwhelming for the concerned individual, but as the Toronto Task Force on Homelessness concluded, it is beatable if we focus on long-term, preventative measures.

We urge the citizens of Kingston and surrounding area to join us in rebuilding the dignity of our more vulnerable community members. Each one of you has a unique set of skills and resources that enables you to make a difference. You can share your concerns with your family, friends and coworkers, and find in these groups creative solutions to the poverty crisis. Remember, even the smallest action has a ripple effect.

Not sure where to start? You are more than welcome to visit us at Ryandale Shelter for an informative tour and discussion, or we can visit your group to present our work and vision.

There will always be a need for shelters like Ryandale, but to what degree is up to us. What we as a city and as a country, choose to do about the poor — help them or reject them — is up to us. Now is the time for decision-making at all levels of government; now is the time for individual reflection and action.

Michelle Dickson
Director, Ryandale Shelter for the Homeless

Wit and hijinks from Vic 2D

Dear Editors,

I read with righteous and mounting anger your last issue's "story" of the rowdy doings a-transpirin' on Vic 4. It is well known throughout this building that the residents of Vic 4 are "yellow-bellied tenderfoots," according to one resident, while Vic 2D is the "bad ass mutherfucker floor," as another stated. Much like The Journal's Editor-in-Chief, Vic 4 is blatantly and pathetically exhibitionist, while the residents of Vic 2D, through devious long range planning and ruthless efficiency, have managed to amass over $418.09 in fines for damages occurring there in only the first term of the school year. This is over 3.28 times the total charges for the entirety of Vic 4! The howling rabble that is Vic 2D shall not take this Journal-istic injustice measure.

Continued on page 14

Student Discounts Available for Formals

Classy and SYD SILVER Formals

Alexander Newman's MEN'S SHOP LTD.

214 Princess Street Locally Owned & Operated. Open 11:00 a.m. Thursday & Friday. 546-0110

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)

Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Tanning Special

- 10 Sessions
- One Bottle of California Tanning Max Lotion
- 1 pair of Peepers

Only $60.00 (reg. $75.00)

SOLO HAIR DESIGN • TANNING SALON

376 Barrie Street • 542-0823

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS

St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions:

Stewardesses
Deckhands
Assistant Cruise Directors
Galley Assistants
Bartenders

Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduating students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

ST. LAWRENCE CRUISE LINES INC.

ASUS

NOW HIRING!

The Arts & Science Undergraduate Society is hiring 1999-2000 Commissioners.

Application forms are now available at The Core (183 University Avenue). For more information please contact Jo-Anne Lorway, ASUS Office Manager, @ 533-6278.

Application deadline is Friday March 5th, 1999 at 4:00 p.m.

ASUS

Trasheteria

MMM.99!

99 99 99
NEVER ANY COVER ON WEDNESDAYS
ALL NIGHT THURSDAYS & SATURDAYS
FRIDAYS YOU COULD WIN out of the Blue

Here Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 13

lying down: we insist that articles be written on how unruly we ate! We also officially lay down the gauntlet to the test of Victoria Hall. In the future we expect The Journal to research their issues fully, rather than relying on hearsay and gossip, as they have so often in the past.

Stephen "Southpaw" Hennigar
Sci '02
Darrell "Hooley" LeHuillier
Sci '02
Andrew "Postman" Tracy
Arts '02

Enquiring minds want to know

Dear Editors,

As noble as it may seem to take moral

'high-ground' concerning media coverage of Chelsea Clinton, your article lacked both substance and any real understanding of the issue.

When a politician decides to run for the highest office in the land, he or she accepts that they are not only exposing their own life to media scrutiny, but the lives of both their spouse and children. The Clinton's accepted this reality, and gave up their lives not once, but twice. True, the decision has not been Chelsea's to make and I do agree that the media must recognize certain limits when covering the children of politicians.

However, Chelsea Clinton, at eighteen is no longer the braces-clad middle-American family daughter of the 1992 campaign. She has surfaced at extraordinarily important moments during the Clinton presidency. Recently, she emerged from the White House holding the hand of both her parents after Mr. Clinton admitted to his sordid lust affair. With her help, White House 'spin doctors' were able to prevent Mr. Clinton's 'family values' platform from crumbling.

Chelsea has also adopted a more active role internationally, travelling with her mother on trips overseas. Chelsea's political role alone makes her fair game for the media.

Moreover, your article stated that the public's fascination with the private lives of politicians does not justify putting the 18-year-old Chelsea into the spotlight. Indeed... however, the public's fascination coupled with the constitution of the United States together justify that end. You demeaned the People article, saying that it does not meet the criteria of a genuine news story. However, historically, the relationship between 'first-children' and 'first-parents' has been considered genuine news. The relationship between Teddy Roosevelt and his children was highly publicized. The daughter of the longest serving American president, Franklin D. Roosevelt used to substitute as a hostess when her father was sick. The relationship between the Kennedy's and their children (when the children were in their most formative years) became a model for American parenting. Why then, should we denounce People magazine for publishing a positive cover piece on the relationship between Chelsea and Hillary when it is considered to be of genuine interest to the American public? How is the American public suppose to know if the Clinton's are good parents or even good people (people are reflected to a large degree in their children) when Chelsea is labeled as off-limits to the press?

The Clinton's chose public office, and the media has certainly respected Chelsea's right to a private upbringing. However, Chelsea's come of age, and the public has a constitutional right to know what kind of a woman the 'first-daughter' has become. Instead of looking over her shoulder at the media, she should look them straight in the eye, and finally say hello to a country she's been shielded from for so long.

P. Razi
Comm '02

Get a job!

Experience is not required.

Who'll be hired next?

- ▶ AMS Council
Please see another advert in this paper for more information about AMS Council.
- ▶ Director of Business Development
Responsible for marketing the AMS to corporations and Alumni to recruit external sponsorship and support. Efforts will be focused on a national and local level, and projects will involve all aspects of the AMS.
- ▶ Deputy Commissioners
Aids the commissioner in carrying out the objectives of the commission. Responsible for additional initiatives of your own, and as directed by the commission. Directly oversees the activities of the commission's committees.
- ▶ Service Managers
Directly responsible for all aspects of service operations, including long term planning, budgeting and daily work. (Positions include the Business Managers of Studio Q, The Queen's Journal, and the Tricolour Yearbook and the Project Manager of the Who's Where and What's Next.)

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

Application due dates

- ▶ Applications for AMS Council are due Thursday, March 4th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Deputy Commissioners, Service Managers, and the Director of Business Development are due Tuesday, March 9th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Assistant Managers, Committee Chairs, and Co-ordinators (Communications, Foodbank, and Extended Child Care) are due Monday, March 15th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Service Staff and Committee Member positions are due Wednesday, March 24th at 16:30.

FEATURES

Virtual poverty

At the Ryandale Home for the Homeless, the Adversity Challenge — a "game of life" — showed participants the realities of living in poverty

BY TANIA HAAS

HERE HE WAS AGAIN. This was my second time seeing him, and again, he was looking through the papers, quickly, briskly. Talking aloud, he seemed completely unaware of the distraction that he was causing to the students attempting to study. Soon enough he came by the table I was sitting at and before he could ask, I stated: "Sorry no papers here." I caught him off guard. It was as if he hadn't expected to be acknowledged. He stood agape for one moment, perhaps to collect his thoughts. For the next 30 minutes, I learned a lot about a man that I'll call Rob.

Rob appeared to be close to 65, but his age was never officially revealed. What was revealed was an abridged autobiography of a man whose story probably has many duplicates, but hardly any exposure to the general public. In appearance, Rob was stereotypically poor: layers of old, unwashed, used, tattered clothing, holes in places where there shouldn't be, foul odour, layers of dirt in the palms of his hands, nails and wrinkles. Rob only had one visible tooth.

Somewhat curious about his presence at Stauffer Library, I was pleased to hear what was on his mind. It turned out to be more of Rob telling, and me listening.

The following was what I could understand: He was born in London, Ontario to a teenage girl and was handed over to an Ontario orphanage at the age of five. Throughout his late childhood and early adolescence, Rob transferred from orphanage to orphanage, which he recalled as a "bad time." From what Rob described haphazardly, this "bad time" was the continuous sexual and physical assault by older boys at the orphanages. When Rob was old enough to leave the orphanage, he worked on several farms, traveling across the province, relying on physical labour for pay.

Rob said that he was "in the liquor" at one point, but while sitting with me on this December evening in 1998, Rob claimed he was not abusing alcohol anymore.

During the game, one man had justified theft and would have acted upon his thoughts if given the opportunity. This man was Sergeant Rick Carter of the Kingston Police Force.

BEFORE ROB LEFT, HE SAID: "Those Queen's boys think they know everything. But they know nothing about real life." I could have ignored this comment; however, I knew inside that Rob was right. The average Queen's student is not aware of the poverty and the homeless situation in Kingston — the only "real life" that Rob knew.

With the last comment and a handshake, Rob and I ceased conversing and separated. I haven't seen Rob since that cold December evening.

My educational encounter with Rob motivated me to find out more about people like him. It was through a workshop hosted by Kingston's Ryandale Home for the Homeless that I came to better understand a life like Rob's.

Ryandale House was named after Stuart Ryan, a professor of Law at Queen's University. It provides emergency shelter for people in a housing crisis and information about community resources to assist its users in finding permanent, affordable housing.

Ryandale House is supported by the United Way, and donations from the community. It is staffed primarily by volunteers. Use of the shelter is open to anyone, but being the only accommodation of its kind, its effect on the problem of homelessness is minimal.

Reality Check, Telling Our Stories of Life on Welfare in Ontario is a collection of perspectives on Ontario's social welfare giving insight into the realities of living in poverty in Ontario.

Over a four hour period, every participant was given the identity of a person dependent on social assistance or someone in a vulnerable position. The characters ranged in ages, cultures, histories, physical and mental ability, and education.

My character, Claudia, was an unemployed but educated woman who left her abusive husband, rendering her the sole guardian of her two children aged 5 and 7. She had trained as a kindergarten teacher in her native country, but poor communication skills — she had immigrated to Canada without English education — left Claudia unemployed. She was also socially isolated, having limited friends and no family.

A three-hour portrayal of a woman balancing the responsibilities of motherhood and consequences of being unemployed was an awakening experience.

CLAUDIA STARTED THE GAME in January with limited funds. Being a citizen entirely dependent on social welfare,

Continued on next page

Kingston's Newest Adventure!

ATRIUM MALL
541 DAYS ROAD
KINGSTON, ONTARIO

LAZER'S EDGE...
is a heart-pounding, adrenaline pumping full immersion interactive laser game. It is a cross between traditional tag and 20th Century Cops and Robbers. It is played in a labyrinth filled with special effects.

As you experience the latest in interactive games equipment, you will wish that you came sooner!! It's great for all ages and levels of physical ability.

LAZER'S EDGE...
will challenge your mind, your coordination, your reflexes and especially your survival instincts!

For more info...
Regular and group rates

Extreme Indoor Fun!
(613) 634-8366

Continued from last page

the financial organization at first appeared easy. There were the monthly expenditures (electricity, rent, telephone bills, food) and I thought that the remaining money could be used toward training or a "special treat" for the children. With a positive outlook, and realizing that there were many "Claudia's" out there, I confidently rolled the die.

To my dismay I landed on a bad spot, payment for a damaged telephone line. Thinking that Claudia's children could not live in a house without a functioning phone, the $50 payment was essential. The result was an additional monthly increase on the phone bill. After the first turn, Claudia was almost broke for the month and with that, my optimism started to crumble. With every roll of the die necessary money expenditures crept up: fixing a leak in the roof, a tent increase, school trips, cost of growing children and a lost wallet. Of course, I had to balance all this while learning a new language, improving job skills, and staying independent and in control of Claudia's life. Personal happiness was not an option.

As the game progressed, Claudia started each month with less money, no new skills and became even more socially isolated. The game of life was not about happiness, it was about survival. The Adversity Challenge had only begun to demonstrate its effect. By the month of March, Claudia's welfare payments left a whopping $5 for spending money. Also, only specific "players" were allowed to socialize, leaving the other players, including Claudia, feeling even more socially isolated than before.

The author's "Feelings Graph" measures Claudia's (her character's) overall emotional state at each week of the month. After peaking in March, she gradually declined below "0" (average) to "-5" (miserable).

Throughout the game the alarming sound of a whistle notified all participants that the month was finished, and that monthly expenditures were to be collected by the bank representative who sat at the table with the rest of the participants. A financial worksheet was provided to record the continual financial transactions. Also, once a week all participants would write down feelings they were experiencing at that time, and graph their feelings on a chart.

Some words on Claudia's sheet included: embarrassment, frustration, tension, hope, stress, paranoia, regret, despair. Other board members expressed similar attitudes of distress.

For example, the character Grant, who sat at my table of three other characters and one banker, had been experiencing several shortcomings like unemployment, which brought on little cash flow, restricted visitation rights to see his daughter (who he was paying child support for) and a lack of motivation since he went blind. Grant's player became visibly frustrated throughout the game. He personified his character's beleaguered emotional state and expressed frustration over the setbacks of finding work with a disability.

At one point in the game, when Grant's player was presented with the annoying problem of a rowdy neighbour, Grant became so enraged that he threatened to attack the loud neighbour if they didn't quiet down.

He also neglected his personal hygiene and contemplated suicide.

But, Grant was not alone. Many other participants were emotionally tested by the game. Aggression, tension and lack of perseverance were the overall emotional responses resulting from a simple board game.

In real life only three and a half hours had passed, and in the game five months had gone by. Claudia had continually suffered financially, socially and emotionally.

IN CHARACTER, ALL PARTICIPANTS were invited to enjoy a lunch provided by a local shelter. As we munched on day-old muffins, cold coffee and diluted juice drinks, I couldn't help but feel my sense of dignity stripping away.

To the relief of all participants the game ended at 12:45 p.m. The character descriptions we had been following were put away and other actors, such as the bank managers and tax collectors, wore smiles of relief. The elevated tension diminished in the enclosed room.

Out of character, the participants were then encouraged to share their opinions of the Adversity Challenge. One man described how the continuous uphill battle with poverty caused him to think twice about this lifestyle. Not only was his character suicidal, but he had also justified theft and would have acted upon his thoughts if given the opportunity. This man was Sergeant Rick Catter of the Kingston Police Force.

John Gerttetsen, MPP of Kingston and the Islands also considered theft. He described feeling "angry" and explained it was "unfair that some players were supported by friends while others weren't." Peggy Davidson, acting president of Kingston's chapter of the United Way felt socially isolated and was "consumed at watching the money go in, and the money go out."

Harry, an unemployed Queen's graduate, brought up the point that the challenges posed by this game are what people live through everyday of their lives, not just a few hours.

Her summary of the experience was shared by many of the participants: "No matter how good your intentions, without resources and community, you can't make a change."

Overall, the workshop successfully attained its goal of showing its participants the elusive reality of another person's world. The Adversity Challenge was developed to create a realistic outlook on poverty. In essence, it put a face to the poor.

One participant, Harry, a graduate of Queen's, was critical of the game's format and financial figures. Harry was well aware of the provincial role in welfare and the challenges of poverty, not because he studied it in school, but because he lived it.

Harry is an unemployed Queen's graduate, class of '89. "It's difficult to even get a job interview," he said. Today, he keeps busy in Kingston as a community organizer and fundraiser for poverty awareness issues. He brought up the

Continued on page 18

AWARDS

Université d'Ottawa
University of Ottawa

in the Strategic Areas of Development for Graduate Students and Postdoctoral Fellows

SOCIAL AND CULTURAL CHALLENGES OF CANADA

HEALTH

INFORMATION TECHNOLOGY

MOLECULAR SCIENCES

If your research interests are in one of our four Strategic Areas of Development (SAD — listed at left) you are eligible to be nominated for one of the following prestigious awards:

1. SAD Graduate Admission Scholarship in any of the Strategic Areas of Development (for Master's and Ph.D.)
2. Strategic Areas of Development Postdoctoral Fellowship in the Humanities and Social Sciences

Nominations are made by the academic unit following an application by the candidate. The deadline is March 19th for the 1999-2000 Academic year. We will consider later nominations subject to the availability of funds.

Fostering excellence in our Strategic Areas of Development is pivotal to our continued success. This initiative is part of our quest to assume leadership in areas of priority, by building on our established strengths, and by fast-tracking the development of emerging areas of research. The University of Ottawa is a university for the leaders of tomorrow!

For more information:
School of Graduate Studies and Research
Contact person: Manon Gauvreau
tel: 613-562-5800 ext. 1248
e-mail: manong@uottawa.ca
www: http://www.uottawa.ca/academic/grad-etudesup/ae/sad.htm

EXCELLENT TODAY, EXCEPTIONAL TOMORROW

University of Toronto

SUMMER COURSES

CHALLENGE YOURSELF
EXPLORE EXPAND JUMP AHEAD
CATCH UP

Whether you are returning home to the Mississauga area this summer or coming to explore the many job opportunities available in the region, consider the advantages of adding course credits toward your degree.

For course offerings... Visit our website www.erin.utoronto.ca/sum99 or call 905-828-5399 ext. 0

Application and registration are simple and a letter of permission from your university registrar assures that your UTM credit transfers to your home university easily.

LAW SCHOOL BOUND ?

How to get into Law School and become a Lawyer in Canada and the U.S.

- Why is it a perfect time to apply to law?
- Why are the career prospects for lawyers so exciting for the 21st century?
- Why is it essential to use a different application strategy for each school?
- How can you avoid getting bad letters of references?
- How can personal statements make or break you application?
- U.S. law schools - are they an option?
- U.S. bar admission - is it possible with a Canadian degree?
- Canadian bar admission - is it possible with a U.S. degree?
- The LSAT - are there changes - can you avoid developing bad habits?
- How can you use 2nd, 3rd and 4th years to prepare for law?

The Lecture Of The Year For Future Lawyers!

Who: John Richardson, B.A., LL.B., J.D.
•Author of Canada's #1 LSAT Prep Guide, Mastering The LSAT
Friday, March 5 - 3:30pm - 4:45pm, Mac-Corry B201

Bonus!! Receive a FREE copy of "Guide to Law Schools in Canada" ($16.00 value - while supplies last)

• For a FREE monthly Law School Bound email newsletter and to reserve your copy of "Law Schools in Canada" - send an email to learn@prep.com

The next LSAT is June 14
"Chance favours the PREPARED mind"
U. of T. - Mastering The LSAT starts May 1 and 8
U. of T. - Weekend programs start May 1, 8, 15, 22, 29 & June 5

1-800-410-PREP or www.prep.com
LSAT - GMAT - MCAT - GRE

Carleton University

SUMMER 1999

SPEND THE SUMMER IN CANADA'S CAPITAL

A wide range of courses in Public Affairs and Management Science and Computer Science
Arts and Social Sciences

Specialized summer schools in Criminal Justice and Social Policy, Political Economy

Flexible and convenient Courses are available during the day, evening or by instructional television

Courses taken on a letter of permission are transferable to your university degree.
Enrich your learning experience at Carleton University this summer. We welcome visiting students.

For a copy of the summer supplement, contact:
School of Continuing Education
Carleton University
302 Robertson Hall
1125 Colonel By Drive
Ottawa, ON K1S 5B6
Tel: (613) 520-3500
Fax: (613) 520-4456
Email: conted@carleton.ca

www.carleton.ca

So much more than Journal-ism...

The 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal needs you.

Applications are currently being accepted for the following positions:

Editorial Board

- Managing Editor
- Production Manager
- News Editor
- Assistant News Editors
- Editorial Page Editor
- Opinions Editor
- Arts & Entertainment Editor
- Arts & Entertainment Assistant Editors
- Sports & Fitness Editor
- Sports & Fitness Assistant Editor
- Science Editor
- Features Editor
- Body, Mind & Soul Editor
- MISC Editor
- Photography Editors
- Graphics Editor
- Supplements-Magazine Editor
- The Reader Editor
- Web Editor

Business Staff

- Business Manager
- Advertising Manager
- Sales Representatives
- Advertising Designers
- Systems Manager

GOT AN INK-LING?

Pick up an application at The Journal, 272 Earl Street. If you have any questions or need more information call Sarah Crosbie, Editor-in-chief elect at 533-2800. Applications for all positions are due on Friday, March 12 at 4 p.m.

Continued from page 16

point that the challenges posed by this game are what people live through everyday of their lives, not just a few hours.

Participants were allowed to leave at 1 p.m. — many returning to their homes, their families and probably a better lunch. It is safe to say that everyone of those participants, including myself, were challenged to think twice about social issues and the local poverty situation. We were all asked: What now?

INDEED, WHAT NOW? Nationally, poverty has become an issue hard to ignore any longer. The Kingston Whig-Standard recently reported that "last fall, Toronto city council declared homelessness a national disaster. Vancouver, Ottawa-Carleton, Windsor and Nepean (have all) followed suit."

Toronto has had numerous cold winter warnings to help prevent the inevitable deaths of homeless people living on the streets. However, despite the warnings, deaths occur. On February 5, the Toronto Star reported the body of a homeless man, found on a heating grate near Queen's Park. On March 25, Toronto Mayor Mel Lastman will host a summit on homelessness for federal, provincial and municipal officials to work on ways of mending this "national disaster."

Poverty and homelessness is a national issue, yet are we at Queen's ignoring the poverty situation that is presented to us while walking down Princess Street? Or is it something that we as students, many of us struggling financially to keep ourselves in school, are unable to improve?

For me, my brief but educational encounter with Rob forced me to consider that everyone has a story to share, a life that has brought them to their current situation. Whether anyone is interested in those stories will determine whether any action will be taken, whether any change will be made. Or do we have to get used to poverty?

Look for Part II of "Virtual Poverty" in the March 19 issue.

Depo-Provera vs. the Pill

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

By ANNASTASIA PALUBISKI

THE FIRST TIME I HEARD of Depo-Provera was during my very first visit to Student Health. At the time I declined this new drug as a birth control option because I felt a little skeptical and very uninformed. However, it definitely sparked an interest that has led me to do my own research into this form of contraception that originally sounded too good to be true. What I found out was that it may not be the "wonder contraception" that my doctor portrayed it to be, but it is definitely a great new option for women.

How does it work?

Depo-Provera is a progesterone hormone that is injected every three months. It works much like the Pill, stopping the release of an egg from the ovaries each month. If taken on time every three months it is over 99.5 per cent effective (as effective as female sterilisation), but decreases in effectiveness if injected late. As well, it offers no protection from Sexually Transmitted Infections.

Depo-Provera does not contain estrogen, the hormone that causes many adverse reactions in women who take the Pill.

If Depo-Provera is so highly effective then why does it continue to be controversial and highly studied? The main debate has been over whether or not Depo-Provera causes breast cancer. The conclusion from many studies is that it probably does not directly cause breast cancer, but could be involved in speeding up the growth of tumors. On the other hand it appears to reduce the risk of uterine and ovarian cancers. Depo-Provera could also play a role in the contraction of osteoporosis, a condition where bone density decreases.

More common side effects are much like those experienced with the Pill: breast tenderness, mood changes, dizziness, headaches and weight gain (approximately 3-5 pounds every year of use).

There are two major side effects that seem to be the most common causes for discontinuing use. First is that menstrual bleeding can become very irregular for the first few months and will often disappear all together after one year of use. Second, it is important to note that this is a long-term method of contraception, and fertility may not return until two years after the last injection.

There are two major differences between the Pill and Depo-Provera. The first is that Depo-Provera does not contain estrogen, the hormone that causes many adverse reactions in women who take the Pill. As well, the effects of injection are irreversible for three months, so if you do experience adverse reactions you'll just have to wait it out.

If you think that Depo-Provera is an option to you it is available for Queen's students through a doctor at Student Health. As with other prescriptions, students covered under the Queen's health plan will receive 80 per cent off the prescription price.

If you have other questions about Depo-Provera or any other methods of birth control you can contact the Sexual Health Resource Centre at 533-2959.

SPORTS & FITNESS

Gaels blow into Toronto

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Since the first game of the season the Queen's women's basketball team has been looking forward to an odd March vacation destination — Thunder Bay. While there is no sun and sand in Thunder Bay, there is a CIAU Championship tournament and the Gaels now find themselves one step away.

The layover point en route to Northern Ontario is York University, the host school for this year's OUA East division tournament, where the winner receives a ticket to the big Thunder. The Gaels enter the divisional play-down with a 14-6 regular season record and third place overall, which gives them a first round date with their nemesis, second place University of Toronto, on Thursday afternoon.

The Gaels spent the last week-end of the season splitting games on the road. Queen's lost at first place Laurentian on Friday night, and then rebounded the next day with an easy win against York.

The game in Sudbury, which ended with a 65-52 Laurentian win, was much closer than the final score. The Gaels trailed by four points at the half and kept it close all game, until finally the Lady Voyageurs, led by guard Stephanie DeSutter, put the Gaels away. While the loss was disappointing, the absence of Jacqueline Beaudoin due to injury and Jenn Jackson for family reasons certainly hurt the Gaels' cause.

The final game of the season, against bottom feeding York, went as expected, with the Gaels winning 64-43.

Immediately following the game, the team began to focus on their first round foe, the Varsity Blues, a team with which the Gaels split their two regular season games.

"They're a good team. They have improved a lot since the first time we played them [which the Gaels won]," said wing player Beaudoin, who is expecting to return from her ankle injury. "We have a lot of confidence that we can play with them on Thursday."

Queen's vs. U of T Thursday, 1 p.m. live on CFRC 101.9 FM

Point guard Deane Shelley exudes some of the confidence that Beaudoin spoke of.

"We know we can beat them, we are expecting to beat them, but we need to show up as a team. It is not going to be easy," explained Shelley.

In preparing for the vaunted Toronto offence, which is rated in the top-five in the country, Head Coach Dave Wilson is very clear about what the team has to do.

"We must stop their transition offence, they like to run and if we allow them to run we will be in trouble and we must shut down guard Rachel Ellison, she can penetrate and we must contain her," he explained.

Defeating the Varsity Blues in the past had been an extremely tall order, but wins in two of their last three encounters has left the Gaels much less fearful of their rivals.

"The big stigma attached to U of T is gone. This is not to say we don't see them as a challenge, but we no longer see them as big scary Toronto," said Beaudoin. "If we play a good solid defensive game, everything else will flow."

With a bronze medal in the OUA tournament last year, and a strong season which included

Please see Excited on page 20

SOUNDS OF SPRING

With the Clemens trade, Spring Training officially opened in Florida and Arizona. The Dodgers will be paying close attention to their $100 million man Kevin Brown. The Mets spent millions on Mike Piazza, Al Leiter and Rickey Henderson. The Arizona Diamondbacks forked over huge wads of dough to guarantee the services of Randy Johnson. In terms of management, the Expos hope the signing of manager Felipe Alou will help the push for a new stadium and provide them with another overachieving squad. Optimism reigns supreme as every team is in first-place until Opening Day.

FLAMING AVALANCHE

On Sunday, the Calgary Flames pulled the trigger on a deal which sent their all-time leading scorer to the Colorado Avalanche. Theoren Fleury, along with Chris Dingman, was traded in exchange for Rene Corbet, Wade Belak and future considerations. In the short-term, the Flames are the big losers because they have traded Fleury at a time when they are only two points out of a playoff spot. Meanwhile, the deal means that the Avalanche are strong Stanley Cup contenders. Fleury had vowed to test the free agent market at the end of the season. Instead of losing him for nothing, at least the young prospects might be able to keep the flame burning.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY

Wells and Clemens would meet in a deciding game and we could see who really won the trade. The young and talented Ottawa Senators would not be the next Nordiques and win a Stanley Cup south of the border. Felipe Alou would be blessed with a team that matches his talent.

The women's basketball team fights hard in their second to last home game of the season. They defeated Ottawa U 69-46.

PHOTOS BY BOB HUISS

Queen's advances to finals

Continued from page 1

Richardson was ecstatic about the goal and the victory which ended years of playoff frustration at the hands of the Blues.

"The goal was a bit of a relief because of the length of the game," he said. "I have never advanced to the second round of the playoffs so that was a relief as well."

Varsity took the opener on February 23, behind earnest penalty-killing, tight checking and the heroics of Toronto rookie netminder Rocco Marinaccio. Marinaccio was particularly impressive in the middle period, repeatedly frustrating Gaels' shooters in protecting a 1-0 lead, which stood until Blues' captain Joel Zinn ported the eventual winning goal in the first minute of the final frame by besting Gaels' goaltender Jason Skilnick on a breakaway. Less than three minutes later, Queen's forward Matt Thorne made the score 2-1, but Varsity kept the Gaels at bay the rest of the game.

MacDonald cited his club's resiliency as the key to the Gaels evening the series in Toronto two nights later. "What was amazing was how fast we got over the loss... we discussed it immediately afterwards, the guys were able to not dwell on it."

Skilnick backed Queen's to victory, turning aside all 32 Toronto offerings, while first-period talks by blueliner Wes Booker and Thorne, followed by two goals from rookie Matt Reid, gave the Gaels a 4-0 win to set up the rubber match.

Stymied in seven power-play attempts in Game 2, Varsity capitalized on its lone man advantage of the third game, with winger Greg Dellio drawing first blood early in the opening period. Five minutes later, Toronto's Shane Poupart hammered home a rebound for a two-goal bulge, as the Tricolour appeared slow to find its bearings.

"The players see someone willing to skate through the pain, and they realize that they can [overcome]."

—Captain Scott Richardson

However, as the first period gave way to the second, the gods of momentum gradually began to favour the Gaels, who began to test Marinaccio from all angles, putting the Toronto end of the ice under siege.

With 1:45 remaining in the middle period, Phil Lindsay secured the puck during a scramble and fired from the high slot; the shot went wide, but caromed off the back boards to linemate Paul Lang, who deposited the disc into the cage.

"Lang's goal really helped us," MacDonald commented. "It gave us a jump entering the third period."

Early in the final period, Gaels' leading scorer Rob Mailloux, severely encumbered by a strained abdominal muscle and limited to power-play duty, passed from behind the goal to winger Dave Gallo, who banged in the tying goal.

Richardson felt that Mailloux's play inspired the team to new heights. "The players see someone willing to skate through the pain, and they realize that they can [overcome]."

Thus the stage was set for overtime, which turned into four periods of thrilling sudden death hockey. The two factions battled with tenacity and vigour that

Please see Playoff run on page 20

ATTENTION
SECOND YEAR MATH & SCIENCE STUDENTS
WOULD YOU LIKE TO BE A TEACHER?
JOIN US FOR AN INFORMATION SESSION MARCH 3rd, 5 TO 6 PM
JEFFERY HALL, RM 128
PRESENTED BY: THE FACULTY OF EDUCATION

DRAGON'S CAVE
SPORTS BAR & GRILL
 259 ONTARIO ST.
 547-2147
 fully licensed

AFTER THE GAME, SCHOOL OR WORK, TAKE TIME OUT AND BRING YOUR TEAM OR FRIENDS DOWN TO THE DRAGON'S CAVE FOR GREAT IN-HOUSE SPECIALS.

Enjoy our GREAT MENU PLAY POOL OR DARTS.
Even watch your FAVORITE SPORTS ON OUR BIG SCREEN TV.

Receive WARM friendly service. So come on down and see what YOUR FRIENDS ARE TALKING ABOUT!

loyalist college
Put Your Degree to Work!
 With a degree, you can earn a hands-on college credential in 8-12 months!

Graduate programs include:

- Architectural Technology
- Environmental/Chemical Technology
- Civil/Survey/Construction
- Computer Programmer/Analyst
- Electronics Technology
- Police Foundations/Law & Security
- Paralegal
- New Media Journalism/Production
- Media Marketing & Sales
- Broadcast, Print or Photo Journalism
- Radio or Television
- Advertising
- Business Administration
- Social Service Worker
- Developmental Services Worker
- Early Childhood Education

To research our programs/placement outcomes, contact:
 Office of Graduate Studies
 Loyalist College
 P.O. Box 4200, Belleville, ON K8N 5B9
 Tel: 1-888-LOYALIST (569-2547)
 e-mail: graduate@loyalist.on.ca web site: http://www.loyalist.on.ca

loyalist college

ATTENTION: ESL STUDENTS

- Full Time, English Immersion Program
- 9:00am to 3:00pm, Monday through Thursday
- Continuous Enrolment Program
- Maximum 10 students per class

Improve these Skills:

- Listening
- Oral Grammar
- Conversational English
- Pronunciation
- Vocabulary

Special Offer!! : Come in and spend a day in class to see if you like the program - NO CHARGE!!
BRING IN THIS COUPON AND RECEIVE $200.00 OFF THREE MONTH TUITION
LIMESTONE CITY ENGLISH LANGUAGE SCHOOL
 322 Princess St., Suite #5 - 536-3480

Teach English Overseas

ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses
 Intensive 36-hour and 42-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)

- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Comprehensive teaching materials
- Teaching practicum included
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
- Formal certificate given upon course completion
- Cost: $295 (36hr course) / $448 (42hr course)

For More Information Call Oxford Seminars
 544-9389 / 1-800-269-4719

Playoff run continues

continued from page 19

belied their sub-500 regular season records, with Skilnick and Marinaccio both making breathtaking saves.

Late in the second overtime, Mailloux intercepted a Toronto pass and bore in on goal, faked Marinaccio to his knees, but rang his shot off the post. In the third extra session, Varsity had consecutive point-blank chances on Skilnick, who made two stellar stops.

MacDonald cited the sequence as a watershed point. "[Those saves] are what you have to have in the playoffs," he said. "You could see the confidence increase on our bench after that... they knew the degree to which Skilly was there for us."

Finally, with the clock approaching midnight, forechecking by forwards Jason Flynn and Aaron Knight generated a scoring chance. Knight dug out the puck from a maze of limbs and sticks to feed a pass to the point, where Richardson fired the shot that vanquished Varsity, to the delight of a large and vocal gathering of Queen's partisans.

The Gaels will have a week of recovery before opening the Mid-East division final, a best-of-three showdown with the first-place Guelph Gryphons, commencing this Friday.

Saturday's and, if necessary, Sunday's games will definitely be broadcast on CFRC 101.9 FM, while Friday's game is still undecided. See Friday's Journal for confirmation of times and dates.

'Excited for the chance'

Continued from page 19

wins against nationally ranked Manitoba, Winnipeg and New Brunswick, the team enters this championship on a roll against ranked teams.

"We know what it takes to beat the big teams. The entire team has contributed to the wins over the nationally ranked teams," said Shelley. "This is going to serve us well against the tough teams in the OUA East."

With three wins in their last four games, the squad seems to be peaking at the perfect time.

"I'm pretty comfortable with where we are. Our level of execution has been pretty good, although we are always looking to improve in this area," explained coach Wilson.

Standing between the Gaels and their ultimate goal of the CIAU Championships are U of T and most likely defending OUA champion Laurentian Voyageurs, who have to beat fourth place Ryerson. It will be a tough road, but Queen's is ready.

"I think that everybody is ready to leave nothing behind. We are all pretty sure that we will end up on top. I don't think we're scared of anybody," said Beaudoin, who has had her most statistically impressive collegiate season. "Everyone is excited for the chance to go to the nationals."

Coach Wilson gave a much more analytical explanation of how things will unfold.

"If we can continue with the execution of the game plan, which has been solid for the last few weeks we will do well," he explained.

The squad will test their collective mettle at 1 p.m. on Thursday afternoon, when their run for the nationals begins.

One game short

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Close, but no cigar. The Queen's men's basketball team made their most impressive drive for a playoff spot in recent history, but came up short in the regular season's final weekend, losing on the road to Laurentian and York. The two losses left the team with a 9-11 record, their highest league win total in history, and in fifth place in the competitive OUA East.

The dismal weekend began with a difficult game in a difficult place to play as the Gaels visited Sudbury to take on the Laurentian Voyageurs. The first place Voyageurs exacted revenge for the loss they suffered in Kingston earlier this season by thumping the Gaels 80-52, in a game that saw Laurentian jump out to an early lead and hold on the rest of the way.

"We got hammered on Friday night," said disheartened coach Scott Meeson. "[Laurentian Centre Ted] Doegellmans was unstoppable, everything he shot went in. They were hitting everything, it was pretty frustrating."

As can be expected in the friendly confines of Ben Avery Gymnasium, the officiating was rather one-sided, but quite simply the team didn't play its best game.

"We came out flat against Laurentian and never recovered," said Gaels' guard Brendan Byrne.

Despite the loss, Queen's had an opportunity to sneak into the playoffs with a win at York and a perfect set of circumstances in other divisional games, but it wasn't to be as the Yeomen outgunned the Gaels 85-79. This would prove to be Queen's final game of the season, but they didn't go quietly.

Led by Derek Richardson's 32 point performance and point guard Mike Gleeson's steady hand, the team kept the game close only to see York answer every Queen's run with a key basket.

"They just shot the lights out," said Byrne, who commended York star Dean Laboyan for an outstanding performance.

"York had a smaller unit and we constantly tried to mix and match," explained coach Meeson.

This was the first opportunity for this group of players to make the playoffs, but it was not nerves that let to the defeat.

"We were confident, but we never got flowing. The whole weekend we never really got going," lamented potential all-star John Purdy.

Even with the obvious disappointment of losing two games in the last weekend of the season, some players on the team gained perspective.

"This is the best season we had so far. I wish we would have made the playoffs, but it was really exciting," said Purdy, who is looking to come back for another year.

Byrne sees the playoff run as a great experience, but felt that the abrupt ending was a little bit hard to swallow.

"It's almost harder because in the past we knew that February 18 would be our last game. Now we had the chance and [the end] just suddenly hit us. We weren't ready for it to end," said Byrne, who is also hoping to return for a fifth year.

With a successful season behind them and most players returning, things look promising for the squad. That said, this past season is a big step forward and, despite not making the playoffs, should not be deemed a failure.

"At least we made a real push and I was really happy with the things we did," said Meeson.

For all great basketball teams there is an ascension to prominence, this could very well be the first step for the Queen's program.

In the game

University athletics during the break

Women's Water polo

February 20 and 21, Queen's hosted the 1998-1999 women's water polo championships. Unfortunately, the Gaels did not qualify for the tournament that saw the Ottawa Gee Gees crowned OUA champions. One bright spot in the week-end tournament, however, was the naming of Gael Ketsi-Li Kuutan to the OUA second all-star team.

Track and Field

On February 19, the Gaels started their Reading Week with a bang as they claimed 13 medals at the University of Western Ontario Open. Gold medal performances were turned in by Stephen Lemieux in the shot put, J. David Kelly in the 60m hurdles and the men's 4x200m relay (Nick Daube, Andrew Spiro, Justin Medved and Dave Potter). Silver medal performances were achieved by Shawn Brady in the 1500m, Kelly in the pentathlon and the women's 4x200m relay (Karen Rawson, Heather Graham, Sue Holland and Sarah Armsstrong).

The Gaels cleaned up in the bronze medal category with a total of seven medals. Jennifer Greenaway was third in the shot put, Christine Dorey in the long jump, Julia Thomas in the 100m, Graydon Raymer in the 200m, Joanne Postma in the high jump and the women's 4x200m relay (Dorey, Mary-Helen Mahoney, Crystal Dunn and Andrea Proulx).

Also at the meet, there were three all-time Queen's top-10 performances. Heather Pettingill recorded the second best pole vault distance and Andrea Poux finished with the third-best pole vault record ever at Queen's. Greenaway rounded out the excellent results with the eighth-best shot put distance for a Queen's athlete.

CIAU Volleyball

While the Queen's Golden Gaels men's volleyball team came up a little short in their quest for the CIAU volleyball crown, the tournament went on without them.

The CIAU championship, which was held at the Université de Laval, saw the fourth-seeded Saskatchewan Huskies upset the third-seeded home team, the Laval Rouge et Or in three sets to win the crown.

The Alberta Golden Bears, who entered the tournament seeded number one, beat their provincial rival, the Calgary Dinosaurs, in four sets to win the bronze medal in the consolation final.

The University of Toronto Blues and University of Western Ontario Mustangs, who were the OUA representatives, did not fare very well at the tournament. Both squads were eliminated in the first round of the championship.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Blue Sundays Midtown Kingston's new House of Blues

CONCERT REVIEW

By STEFAN MURRAY

The Midtown Manor is "muddy"-ing the musical waters of Kingston.

Every Sunday night, the Manor opens its doors and its stage to those with a little bit of the Delta in their blood.

The Electric Dirt Band, plays the first sets of the night, as they have every Sunday since December, to warm up the crowd.

Last Sunday, the makeshift band, playing with a sit-in drummer and bassist, demonstrated both aggressive Chicago blues and a little bit of country-rock to the sparse crowd at the Manor. Opening with a Booker T-ish jam, the band settled into some edgy blues, capped by George Thorogood's "Who do you love."

"It's not a talent contest," said harp player Tom Harpell. "It's for those who really enjoy the blues. It's not head music, it's heart music," he added.

After the Dirt Band engaged the crowd and loosened up the closer-Claptons, the floor was open to anyone who had brought enough courage and something that will plug into the wall. Sometimes musicians sit in with the Dirt Band, and other times entire outfits will show up to play to the roadhouse crowd.

"It takes a lot of guts to get up on stage after only playing in your living room. Some nights are real magic, some are less than magic," explained Harpell.

The popularity of Blues night at the Midtown Manor has grown since its inception in December and has welcomed several students to the seats and the stage, including those from Queen's and St. Lawrence.

For the most part, the Dirt Band and the Manor welcome the students to Blues Night.

The Electric Dirt Band rocks out on Sunday evenings.

Be Touchy Exhibit preys on senses

PHOTO BY LILIAN KIM

ART REVIEW

By SARAH CROSBIE

Art is a culture that is surrounded by the phrase, "Do Not Touch." Even though art provokes all the different human senses, it is something that is to be admired from afar.

As an audience, we have learned to distance ourselves from art, so that a glance can be enough to satisfy. A glance, however, will not be enough to satiate one's artistic appetite at the Union gallery's most recent display, Touch.

Touch, the work of three Queen's BFA students, Kathleen Piercy, Sarah Key and Rosamund Oxlade, is an exhibit that, through different mediums, touches both something inside the soul and tempts one into wanting to touch the works.

At the entrance of the gallery, set on a small table, are small leather pouches with different rocks sprawled out from the bags. Each rock has a different word written on it, such as self, healing, existence and touch — and touch is exactly what I did. I glanced quickly around the gallery and with no one looking I picked the rocks up and felt their smoothness in the palm of my hand. The sensation of being able to handle something in a gallery became addictive and lasted throughout the visit.

The three artists' works is

Please see Jungle on page 23

200 Cigarettes can kill you

New 'hip' movie suffers from poor characterization and insipid script

MOVIE REVIEW

By TARA MANSBRIDGE

The trailers are cute, kitchy almost. The images promise a swirl of heady eighties nostalgia, a wistful look back at that crazy time before we thought AIDS was a real threat and co-ordinating colours were cool.

And who could resist the call of the credits? Nicole Parker, Angela Featherstone, Kate Hudson, Jay Mohr, Ben Affleck, Casey Affleck, Christina Ricci, Gaby Hoffman, Courtney Love, Paul Rudd and Janeane Garofalo all parade across the opening credits in time-killing succession.

Sandwiched between the good fashion statement.

The first scene opens with one of our couples whining and smoking in the back of a cab. The cab driver, Dave Chappelle, and his leopard-skin upholstered cab are a central feature of the film — a majority of the characters spend at least some time breathing the pot fumes and advice wafting back from the front seat.

The real tragedy of this movie is that it could have been good.

Unfortunately, whining, smoking and the taxi cab are about all the characters share. Unless you're playing close attention to the insipid and irritating dialogue, something that's difficult to do because of the film's general lack of plot, you would easily miss the fact that all four groups of friends are headed for the exact same New Year's Eve party. And if the dropped hints or common address scribbled on napkins with lipstick sailed by you (as it did the people who fell asleep during the film) each group could be headed to a distinctly different party. It is New York City, for goodness sake. It's a pretty safe bet that there's more than one big party going on.

There are a few saving graces in this movie. Ben Affleck struggles to make the most of the shallow and limited role of The Bartender. You'd think, after starring in Good Willing Hunting and Shakespeare in Love, the producers of 200 Cigarettes would at least give his character a name. The only other decent performance is given, surprisingly, by Courtney Love, who plays a woman caught in the "friendship" category with a guy she'd really rather fuck. Unfortunately, neither Love nor the object of her affection, Paul Rudd, are given enough screen time to really explore their characters. Their possibly moving performances are reduced to witticisms ("You know I don't have ugly people for friends!") hurled at each other over bad eighties music.

The real tragedy of this movie is that it could have been good. Eighties nostalgia plugs into today's rising tide of narcissistic recklessness, feeding a desire to return to a (non-existent) time when sex was safe and thrills were cheap. Instead of foregoing a plot in favour of colour and kitch, the director and producer could have used the star power of their cast to explore the depths of desperation and depravity which underpinned early eighties hedonism. MTV Productions, unfortunately, couldn't choke down the hypocrisy of funding a film that explored the dangers of hedonism, so the hapless audience was left with this worthless film-cum-commercial.

Even the somewhat-cute cameo appearance of Elvis Costello couldn't lighten the mood, and the totally inadequate amount of time spent focusing on the party itself, the final scene of love, destruction and denouement hosted by the socially paranoid Monica (Martha Plimpton), left the viewer feeling ripped off. Which, all in all, is an adequate reaction to this poor excuse for a film.

Camera Kingston
foto source™

one hour photo .. video ..
passport photos ..

..ask about your CLUB CK discount card

second set of prints

FREE

35mm or APS film at time of development
see store for details

our downtown location is open
7 days a week

114 Princess@Wellington Bath@Gardiners Rd
549 3747 384 3747

BICYCLE ENFORCEMENT

Students and staff who ride bicycles on campus are asked to park their bicycles properly using the variety of stands and racks that are provided throughout the campus. Bicycle stands and racks are the only locations where bicycles may be legally parked. Bicycles found improperly parked will be removed and impounded and storage fees will be charged.

Bicycles cannot be parked:

- on or against access ramps
- on Emergency phone posts
- on any stairs
- on any handrail or door
- inside buildings
- against trees, shrubs, sign posts, lamp posts, parking meters or any other object not designed or intended for bicycle parking

Physical Plant Services attempts to keep the campus as safe and accessible as possible and bicycles improperly parked can seriously impede the snow removal process.

For a copy of the university Bicycle Regulations please contact parking and Grounds at 6979.

Double the Power of Your Degree

Humber College has more Post-Graduate Programs than any other College in Canada!

One year of a college education designed specifically for university graduates increases the likelihood of employment. 93% of Humber's graduates find career-related jobs within six months of graduation. An information session will be available on your campus.

Wednesday, March 3, 1999
1:00 p.m. - 2:00 p.m.
MacKintosh - Corry Hall room D211

"Job-ready colleges are becoming the finishing school of choice for many university grads."

Maclean's Magazine, special issue October 26, 1998

To register, please call (416) 675-6622 ext. 4791 or email: liaison@admin.humberc.on.ca

www.humberc.on.ca

A&E in brief

Ellen, George Michael and Tinky-Winky?: Reverend Jerry Falwell says he is not guilty of 'outing' Tinky Winky, a Teletubbies character, as gay. He does however, defend a warning in his National Liberty Journal newspaper telling parents to be cautious of the show. The conservative Falwell said, "As a Christian, I believe that role-modeling the gay lifestyle is damaging to children."

Rap Sheet #3: ODB was recently arrested for wearing a bullet proof vest — something those with a violent history are prohibited to do. The Wu Tang Clan rapper was arrested when he was pulled over for driving erratically and the police saw the vest. ODB has also been arrested for shooting at police officers, not paying child support and shoplifting shoes.

Semile Place: Aaron Spelling is shocked at the sexual content in some soon to be released teen movies. In Newsweek he stated, "I abhor some of these teenage movies. If they're going to have sexual affairs, I'd like to see condoms." An article in the same issue featured stories on Cruel Intentions and Go, two new teenage flicks. Didn't Tori star in the movie Co-Ed Call Girl in 1996? And what about 90210 and Melrose? Good grief.

Brady Boobs: Former Brady Bunch mom Florence Henderson is suing a company for selling t-shirts featuring her picture with the words Porn Queen underneath. The marketer, Serial Killer Inc., produces items featuring celebrities. Its mission statement is: "Serial Killer is a clothing company that doesn't give a fuck what your parents think. Our product is an expression, a statement of reality. SK products are funny and make old people upset."

Water World: (Top Movie Draws for February 19)
1. Message in a Bottle $10.3 million
2. Payback $10.3 million
3. My Favourite Martian $6.7 million
4. Blast From the Past $6.1 million
5. October Sky $6 million

Jungle party

Continued from page 21

each very different, and yet at the same time complement each other, preying upon different senses. Rosamund Oxlade's different displays are both confusing, intriguing and brilliant.

One exhibit is a display of 12 different grey boxes containing a picture and either "Do Not Lick this Page," "Never Assume" or "Do you trust yourself" imprinted on the box. Each picture is a different type of berry or fruit, which corresponds to a legend that states whether it is non-toxic, poisonous or edible. The berries and fruit appeared to have been crushed, dripped and watered onto the page and the results are magical. Nature's gift provided images which, to me, appeared to be women kissing, a bleeding bear, a demon, playful birds and angelic jellyfish — but it's art and subjective, defying the limits of what the eye and imagination will see.

A jungle? Commentary on the status of homosapien? I'm not sure, but the painting draws you in — taunting you to figure out its message.

Piercy's paintings are captivating. A small boy examined one of her pieces, Strong at the Broken Places, which is mixed media, oil on canvas and began to state the concepts which he saw. Her piece held the concentration of an elementary school child — probably longer than most other visual stimuli could. The piece is a puzzle, forcing one to attempt to see the different items in the painting to make the whole. The piece has blurred colours. Bright splashes of cream, white and muted yellows in the middle of the painting draw your eyes away from the fringes of the painting. A jungle? Commentary on the status of homosapien? I'm not sure, but the painting draws you in — taunting you to figure out its message.

Piercy's piece held the concentration of an elementary school child — probably longer than most other visual stimuli could.

Lastly, Key's Amendments III, V and VII are a set of three paintings, oil on canvas, which makes the viewer look at the paintings in a series and then retrace one's steps to look at them in order again. The paintings contain brilliant flowers and a shell set in a dark, tropical background — blacks, greys and browns highlight the life in the picture. The third painting offers a resolution to the viewer because you are presented with a close-up view of the flower and shell, to fully examine its intricacies. These paintings make you want to touch the life in the paintings — to pull it out of the darkness.

The finishing touch to the display are different words which grace the bottom of the walls: secret, echoes, veils, courage, waves and hope. The words correspond to the pieces, offering descriptions for art, is so emotional, it is difficult to describe.

The mission statement of the collection is, "The 3 artists bring connections and reverberations, loss and hope to their image making." One can disagree this is not what the collection is about, but it is undeniable Piercy, Key and Oxlade have brought something interesting and enjoyable to the Union gallery. If it doesn't touch something deep within, then at least touch the rocks and become a part of the exhibit. You'll never view "Do Not Touch" again in the same way or respect the authority of the slogan, which is so prominent in the art world.

Touch is showing at the Union Gallery until March 16.

A ray of light Canadian zine shines brightly on target

MAGAZINE REVIEW

raygun
Ray Gun Publishing

BY LILIAN KIM

We finally get to see some April in March.

As the weather becomes subtly warmer, the climate is not what's causing the mercury to rise. It's francophone singing diva April March who is changing the season of this month's issue of raygun. The New York based crooner is dolled up in classy wooly garb and fed raw tuna while revealing her new album's association with Dust Brother's Ideal label. April March is all style and trend while her presence capsulates raygun's approach.

The magazine is attractive and completely functional, leaving no holes when it comes to accentuating the beautiful entities who make the music scene.

What the zine introduces is the "style of sound." No sightings of Madonna to be found on these glossy pages. raygun centres itself within the real players, the ones who are naturally cool without any effort. The musicians who are true musicians, those who set trends that are difficult to imitate.

On the cover, trippy collective Underworld is the foundation of this month's featured artists. Among them include Claire Danes's rising star boytoy Ben Lee, eccentric small-city band Citizen King, and A Tribe Called Quest's successors Slum Village. Pretty much every expose-deserving music group who rarely receive at least a meaty paragraph in pseudo-alternative mags like Spin, get the star treatment, finally, in raygun.

This month's reviews feature artists such as the Beta Band, whose music not only samples various beats and noises, but also captured the attention of hip-hop veterans, Beastie Boys. Along with Sebadoh, Sleater-Kinney and a slew of noteworthy low-key bands, the descriptions are much more insightful and legendary, not to mention commercialized.

Here's something to be proud of. It's Canadian. raygun is 100 per cent pure maple sporting a campaign for Canadian Camels, pretentiously spelled with a K. With a fashion section titled "White Out," the magazine emphasizes everything charmingly "freezing cold" about the great north.

The magazine is attractive and completely functional, leaving no holes when it comes to accentuating the beautiful entities who make the music scene much more promising. Plus, how many other zines have a collage of decrepit, decomposing fruits and vegetables as their final word?

Department of Medical Biophysics
University of Western Ontario
London, Ontario

GRADUATE POSITIONS AVAILABLE

The Department of Medical Biophysics has over 20 positions available for prospective graduate students. We are a world renowned, multi-disciplinary department with principal research fields in:

- Medical Imaging
- Medical Biophysics in Cancer Research
- Microcirculation and Cellular Biophysics
- Orthopedic Biomechanics and Biomaterials
- Hemodynamics and Cardiovascular Biomechanics

If you have an honors degree or an M.Sc. in Physics, Engineering, Computer Science, Mathematics, Biology, Medical Sciences, or a related field and interested in graduate research, you are invited to apply to our graduate program. Priority will be given to applications received before March 15, 1999.

Requests for information and graduate application packages can be directed to:

Graduate Student Program
Department of Medical Biophysics
Medical Sciences Bldg. (Room M115)
University of Western Ontario N6A 5C1
E-mail: medicalbiophysics@uwo.ca
Tel: 519-661-2111 (ext. 6550)
Fax: 519-661-2123

www.uwo.ca/biophysics

Curry Village

Bringing you Kingston's finest Indian Cuisine for 13 years

Recommended by The New York Times,
The Globe and Mail, Toronto Life and the
Where to Eat in Canada Guide (1987 - present)

169A Princess Street (upstairs), 542-5010
Kingston, Ontario

20% Discount for Students, Sun. - Thurs. (Food Only)

Montessori Teacher Education Program

(Early Childhood Level)

Apply Now for June 1999.

New Post-graduate Program at Sheridan College

Prepare for career opportunities nationally and internationally in the growing field of private education.

To receive information: Call: 416-480-1320

Email: sheridan@minacs.com

Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/edserv/montessori.htm

Approved by the Ministry of Education and Training.

Sheridan

A&E's 1998 Grammy Poll Winner!

Congratulations to Katherine Waller! Katherine successfully predicted 6 out of 7 awards from the 41st annual Grammys held on Wednesday, February 24. You know what that means, Katherine. Five Free CDs from our heralded CD vault. Call Stefan, Sarah or Lillian at 533-2800 to inquire further. Thanks to all who entered. Jeff Child, Arts '00 finished last in the contest, only able to predict one winner. Way to go Jeff.

Skills you can put to work!

Did you know that more and more university students are learning the value of pursuing their studies at college? Sir Sandford Fleming College has programs designed specifically for university graduates, to help you open up your career opportunities with the hands-on skills and applied learning that today's employers demand.

Post-Diploma Programs - Admission to these 2 or 3 semester programs normally requires a university degree in a relevant field, or the equivalent:

Ecotourism Management
Hullington (2 semesters)
Start date: September

Expressive Arts
Hullington Start Date: Summer 99

Geographical Information Systems - Applications Specialist
Frost Campus, Lindsay (2 semesters)
Start dates: May, September, January

Geographical Information Systems - Business Applications Specialist
Frost Campus, Lindsay (2 semesters)
Start date: May

Geographical Information Systems - Cartography
Frost Campus, Lindsay (3 semesters)
Start date: September

Museum Management and Curatorship
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (3 semesters - 3rd semester is a full-time internship) Start date: September

Natural Resources Law Enforcement
(2 semesters) Start date: September

Are you thinking of changing your study or career path? Here's a few of the Sir Sandford Fleming College programs that offer eligible university students advance standing:

Career and Work Counsellor
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field practice)
Start dates: September and January
Program also available as a Diploma - All Distance, through print-based distance learning, audio conferencing, and/or the Internet

Drug and Alcohol Counsellor
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field experience)
Start dates: September and January

Educational Assistant
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field practice and evaluation)
Start dates: September and January

Police Foundations
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters)
Start dates: May, September, January

Trent-Fleming Nursing
(4 years) Students graduate from the program with a Special Emphasis Degree from Trent University and a Nursing Diploma from Fleming College
Start date: September

For more information, a calendar, an application, or to request a campus tour, please contact Marion Hermes, Liaison, mhermes@flemingc.on.ca. (705) 749-5546.

FLEMING
SIR SANDFORD FLEMING COLLEGE
www.flemingc.on.ca

your ticket to ride!

Discounts up to 40%

Valid student card must be presented at time of purchase. For schedule and fare information call 613-547-4916 or 1-800-461-7661 trentway-wagar

Coffeehouse

Queen's Amnesty International (QAI) is hosting a coffeehouse at Indigo Books on Sunday, March 7 at 6:00 pm (in accordance with International Women's Day which falls on March 8th). We would be delighted to have more people read their own poetry or poetry which has inspired them, at this function. If you are interested in reading poetry which relates to the topic of womanhood, please call Jenny at 531-0647. This invitation is open to both sexes.

a different edge hair & tanning salon

203 Wellington St. • 547-2057
Purchase 10 Sessions for $60.00 and receive one free session
Purchase 15 sessions for $85.00 and receive one free session
Purchase one package at regular price and receive a 2nd package for 1/2 price
$100.00 Monthly
• 20% off all hair services

Siskel mourned Major loss to movie-goers

PROFILE/OPINION

By JASON MILLAR

In an industry hopelessly befuddled in its own attempts to recognize and promote quality films, the recent death of movie critic Gene Siskel has probably reduced Hollywood execs to sucking their thumbs for comfort.

For years now, a movie approved by the Siskel & Ebert duo with an enthusiastic "Two Thumbs Up" was destined for success at the box office. In video stores, the quote was usually printed in a larger font than the title of the film — proof of the influence the two had in the industry, and of the marketing tool they inadvertently formed.

They were the stamp of approval that moviegoers had learned to trust over any of the big-budget (and often misleading) advertising campaigns, which so characterize an industry littered with new releases. Siskel & Ebert were known as critics who could generally separate the good from the bad, and in the case of a disagreement you could take your chances based on whose thumb was up.

Foreign films also found an audience with the duo, perhaps lending them some added credibility, and providing a platform from which such films as Atom Egoyan's The Sweet Hereafter could launch an Oscar campaign in the American market. I'm sure their annual Top 10 episode was a veritable crib sheet for those highly respected intellectuals of the Academy, when it came time to cast their ballots every spring.

But what's to become of Hollywood now that half of the duo has ceased to exist? Can one thumb suffice in the other's absence?

Left to their own device, the Hollywood execs are obviously an unreliable source of advertisement (I'm thinking of last summer's so-called blockbuster, Godzilla)—we just don't trust them. But for the industry to accept the lone Roger Ebert as a valid source of advertisement could prove to be an unwise move. After all, to most of us "One thumb up" simply doesn't give us enough confidence to fork over the cash for an over-priced movie ticket.

And so, Roger Ebert may retreat to his post as movie critic for the Chicago Sun-Times and eventually drop out of the limelight altogether, where his name will share the same fate on a movie box as any hack from the sticks.

On a more frightening note, the elimination of the Siskel & Ebert factor may come as fabulous news to those they have criticized in the past. Second rate actors and directors — composing the bulk of the industry — can breathe a temporary sigh of relief in the absence of their greatest critics. Decisions can be made loosely.

By losing Gene Siskel, we have lost one of our only checks in the balance of Hollywood's power, which may mean a resurgence of Keanu Reeves films or, god forbid, a sequel to The Avengers.

Siskel often challenged the peddlers of schlock to ask themselves the question, "Is my film more interesting than a documentary of the same actors having lunch together?" It may seem redundant or even pretentious coming from a critic, but it is clearly not asked often enough by the actors, or by the producers in the industry today.

Siskel & Ebert were of a rare breed in Hollywood, able to make or break a movie simply by being honest in their opinion. And although they were celebrities, like those they criticized, they were unique. Unlike most celebrities, when Siskel & Ebert spoke, people actually listened.

In the meantime, Roger Ebert plans to continue the show, by substituting guests weekly, undoubtedly at the request of the industry. Whether or not this succeeds, one thing is certain: the balcony, as we know it, is forever closed.

FRANSELLY Hair & Esthetics

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St. 549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples. www.Fransellyhair.com

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Cnpple
5. TV show compère
9. 'A Fish Called ...'
10. Piano key
12. Bell ringer
13. Charitable aid
15. "___ Lay Dying"
16. Goods cast overboard
18. Compass point
19. Immediately following
21. School of whales
22. Lions and tigers
23. Cracklings
25. Gauchos' weapons
26. A Musketeer
28. Forefinger
31. Litter
35. "The Beverly Hillsbillies" actor
36. Singer Croce
37. Joining bar
38. Tax group: abbr.
39. Cut gem side
41. 502, in Rome
42. Dividing wall
44. Thin sword
46. Pickle
47. Topple
48. Makes bows in
49. Compos

DOWN

2. Hymenopteran insect
3. Object of worship
4. Steward
5. King of Tyre
6. Baking chamber
7. Musical syllable
8. Threefold
9. North Sea tributary
11. Gossipy woman
12. Vocalized melodically
14. Actor Parker
17. Pertaining to the stomach
20. Become gradually

- mentis
thinner
22. Comedian Bill
  24. ___ populi
  25. Short haircut
  27. Arm bone
  28. Wading bird
  29. Nostnlis
  30. Autocrat
  32. Antiseptic
  33. Went downhill
  34. Inhenlor
  38. Mr. Cagney
  39. Melt
  40. Bark of the paper mulberry
  43. Parson bird
  45. Quill

Mickey's BAR & GRILL

the Cocamo

Brandees RESTAURANT & LOUNGE

present...

Charity Day '99

All Sales - All Tips - All Monies Collected

Groups appearing at:

Brandees RESTAURANT & LOUNGE

- Blue Monday
- The Cometz
- Beats Workin' with David Hurley
- The Change
- Georgette Fry & The B Side Blues Band

Donated to:

HOSPICE KINGSTON

KGH KINGSTON GENERAL HOSPITAL Nco-Natal Intensive Care Unit
PARTNERS IN MISSION FOOD BANK

Groups appearing at:

the Cocamo

- The Swing Cats
- Smitty
- Bumble Puppy
- Travel Agent

• Great Food • Great Entertainment • Great Cause! - 178 Ontario Street • 549-1496 • Visit our Web Site At www.whatsonkingston.com

Classifieds

Whopper Junior every day

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.ikwab.com/bluroof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

HARASSMENT/DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT POLICY AND PROCEDURE REVIEW The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the Review Committee wish to extend an invitation to university students, staff, and faculty to offer any comments or suggestions they may have regarding the Policy.

Written responses may be submitted to the Senate Office, B400 Macintosh Cory Hall, or the Human Rights Office, Old Medical Building (email: hrrights@post.queensu.ca). Alternatively, community members may arrange to make verbal submissions to the Committee by contacting the Human Rights Office at 533-6886 and making an appointment. Deadline for all submissions is March 5, 1999.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1-877-PREP-COM.

INTERESTED in health issues? Enjoy working with others? Want to perfect your presentation skills? If this sounds good to you, consider volunteering with Peer Health Outreach next fall. Applications available now at Student Health and Student Counseling Service. Due Friday, March 5th by 4 p.m. For more information call Diane Nolting, Health Educator at 533-6712.

FEEL LIKE CRAP? Get a handle on a healthier lifestyle. Check out the Fantastic Lifestyle Checklist at www.queensu.ca/sndc.

WANT TO TEACH? State University of New York, Potsdam (30 minutes from Cornwall) offers teacher education training for Canadians. Info Session: March 3rd, 7 p.m. John Orr Room, JDUC.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE Wellington Foreign Exchange buys and sells currencies at very competitive rates, without service charges. Check www.wellington.on.ca for daily rates, or visit us at 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

AUDITIONS: Singers, dancers, musicians, actors for a Musical Comedy 2nd week of April. Living Soul, A Journey through the Blues, Jazz, 70's Soul Stardom. For more information call 546-0432.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resumerelay.com

DO YOU SUPPORT ABORTION? Queen's Pro-Life Club challenges you to watch a video of an actual abortion. McLaughlin Room, JDUC, Saturday, March 6th, 7:30 p.m. Open discussion will follow.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE FORMAL TICKET: One ArtSci formal ticket. Best offer. Call Andrew at 547-3923.

ROOM - TORONTO: King @ Bathurst, 10 minutes to Bay, near Queen West. Full gym on site. Perfect with your new job! $650 plus utilities. Available May 1st. Call Jonathan at 416 703-8513.

HELP WANTED
LOOKING FOR EMPLOYMENT? The 1999 Canada Student Employment Guide and The Canadian Job Directory contain valuable job search and employer information! Now available at your university bookstore.

LOST: Oval shaped glasses. Black frame, white letters on inside right arm. If found, call Rob at 542-4640.

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850.

SUMMER CAMP JOBS, LAURENTIANS: Swim, sail, windsurf, waterski, canoe, gymnastics, tennis, basketball, football, wall climbing, archery, hockey, baseball, arts & crafts, pottery, beadmaking, photography, drama director, jazz instructors. E-Mail resume to ronneb@generation.net or fax to (514) 481-7863.

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewardesses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

WANTED
THREE SECOND YEAR students are looking for a fourth to share our 4 bedroom house, starting May 1st. Ten minutes from campus; laundry, large bedrooms; $269 per month. Call Chris, Kristin or Steve at 549-0607.

LOST AND FOUND
FOUND: One blue Notre Dame ball cap in a locker in the men's change room at the PEC. To identify please call 547-3354.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS
PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1-800-844-8669.

WELCOME BACK: Good to have you back Jim! From the Boys at 356 Johnson.

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
  - Proven Test-Taking Strategies
  - Personalized Professional Instruction
  - Comprehensive Study Materials
  - Simulated Practice Exams
  - Personal Tutoring Available
  - Free Repeat Policy
  - Thousands of Satisfied Students
- Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: One blue Notre Dame ball cap in a locker in the men's change room at the PEC. To identify please call 547-3354.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS
PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1-800-844-8669.

WELCOME BACK: Good to have you back Jim! From the Boys at 356 Johnson.

VOICE MONITORING

AND TELL HIS PARENTS! UNCLEAN! UNCLEAN! This was not ameliorated at all by my editor's sensitive choice of title and tasteful pictorial accompaniment. [see issue 22/01/99 of The Queen's Journal] kidneys to finance our education, or the unavailability of controlled substances. Or, for that matter, the need to sell our kidneys in order to obtain controlled substances.

This whole thing out. That's it! What happened to the good old days, when monarchs personally helped keep the level of smut and opinion down in literary works? When you could count on the governing bodies entire extended family being lauded to the skies, and their enemies being portrayed as hunchbacked child molesters? The writer never had to worry about making a fool of himself back then. He only had to worry about making a corpse of himself.

Speaking of controlled substances, what was my point again? Oh yeah. Whiny students. Well, all I can do is call for a radical

Well, anyway, I managed to avoid embarrassment by faking my own death, but I need to make provision for this kind of thing in the future. I would swear off writing columns, but of course that wouldn't stop me. I'd be back at it in a week, my hands shaking, relaxation only setting in at the moment of release when I hit the "send" button on my e-mail program. Instead, what I'm suggesting is something far more radical. I want the government to step in. I want a regulating of public venting of opinion in college newspapers.

At any rate, within a few weeks of this program being implemented, there will no doubt be college students thronging the streets, ranting at the top of their lungs to relieve the pressure. The only remaining difference between college students and homeless people will be the gold teeth. College students can't afford gold teeth. And I'll be out there with them. Oh, I'll make an ass of myself yet. There's just no stopping me. But for the sake of you all, I hope that you will not encourage me by throwing coins.

S TOP ME BEFORE I WRITE AGAIN. Seriously. I have a problem, and I need to be stopped.

If you'll recall, I wrote my first column for MISC a few weeks ago, on the subject of pornography in Disney movies. This was clearly a mistake, as it turns out that the column was actually read by a number of people, which was not my intention. My intention was simply to give the MISC editor an excuse to publish naked pictures of Disney heroines. But a lot of you read the actual article, as it turns out, and could see for yourself the kind of damage that can be caused from watching too many cartoons, namely, you start writing obsessive columns about pornography in Disney cartoons.

Within days, I had discovered an interesting phenomenon: anything that you write at one o'clock in the morning, on no sleep, with your common sense at its lowest ebb, and with the potential for maximum embarrassment, will almost immediately find its way into the hands of your parent's friends. "Oh look!" They'll exclaim. "That nice young Prosser boy has written an article for a university paper! His parents must be so proud! Let's just see what he's... HOLY MOTHER OF GOD! BURN IT! BURN IT!"

Lord knows it's well past time. Students have always been the source of much of the unrest in this and other free countries, the loose thread in the carefully knitted sweater of our society. We're always complaining about something, whether it be our leader's willingness to deploy nuclear weapons to break up protests, or the need to sell our rethinking of 1st amendment rights, and. Hey, wait a minute. This is Canada. We don't have constitutional amendments! What the hell do we have? I'm relatively sure that we're allowed to speak our mind, since this article is getting written.* But maybe that's just, like, a sort of unwritten understanding. Maybe the law says otherwise. Maybe it's time we let the Queen sort

It's the only way I'll learn.

*Sort of.

Adam Prosser might be coming soon to a street corner near you.

ASUS Your Student Government MindFind
The Arts and Science Undergraduate Society

WANNA MAKE SOME EXTRA MONEY?

Be a tutor for MindFind (ASUS tutoring service) and get paid $9/hour.

We desperately need tutors for Organic Chemistry, 1st year Calculus, 1st year Chemistry, 1st year Economics, Statistics (in all disciplines), 1st year Physics, CISC.

Come by the ASUS Core (183 University) and fill out a tutor sign-up form.

For more information email mindfind@asus.queensu.ca or phone 533-6278 ext 0.

If you need a tutor fill out a tutor request form at the ASUS Core (183 University) or on the MindFind web site - www.asus.queensu.ca/~mindfind

Tutoring only costs $7/hour.

ArtSci / Con-Ed / Phys-Ed Student Government

MISC BUILDING CONTEST

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your only friends are your husband the drummer, and your parents: Mr. and Mrs. McLachlan.

For the next five issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring. Note: If you've missed the last few issues, you've missed the first six clues. Try and find some copies left around campus.

Jim Thorpe & Friend, Arts '02 model in front of Building #7

Mike Zook, Arts '02 models in front of Building #8

KIDS MAKE THE DARNDDEST THINGS

This week, MISC features a glimpse into the early visual work of Sarah Kim, Arts '99 (pictured left). Bear in mind the originals are much bigger and much more colourful, so you're gonna have to use your imagination.

If you've got any childhood artwork or writing that you'd like to share, please bring it to The Journal, 272 Earl St. We need it. We need it like Alanis and the Pope need a clue.

"Get Crackin" -age 9

"Snowflake" -age 11

Queen's homegrowns Transient Therapy (left) headlined a Wednesday night show at Clark as Travel Agent (right) performed for Charity Day at Cocamo's.

du Maurier
ARTS

Supporting 215 cultural organizations across Canada during the 1998-99 season

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1999

Queen's homegrowns Transient Therapy (left) headlined a Wednesday night show at Clark as Travel Agent (right) performed for Charity Day at Cocamo's. PHOTOS BY LIJIAN KIM AND ALEX KRONBY

ALERT

Officials have reason to suspect rohypnol (the 'date rape' drug) has been used recently in more than one incident in Kingston. Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford cautions students to exercise care with their drinks and advises them not to leave drinks unattended under any circumstances.

Queen's students in the drink

CAMPUS LIFE AND DRINKING AT QUEEN'S: PART I

By CRYSTAL BONA

A survey conducted at Queen's by the Ontario Addiction Research Foundation raises questions about the levels of student alcohol consumption.

Approximately 1,100 undergraduate students participated in the first survey, which was conducted in 1993. A follow-up survey was conducted in 1998, and will be released early next year.

"[Drinking] is a serious problem. It is one that we have put significant resources into addressing and will continue to do so," said Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs. "I would want students to be aware of the effects on marks, the effects on relationships, and the serious effects such as date rape. Students rationalize that it won't happen to them, but it does," he continued.

Queen's was selected to take part in the first survey, along with various universities across the province. However, Queen's requested to participate in the second study, Crawford explained.

"We chose to take part because, since the last survey, there have been a number of initiatives put in place on campus," said Diane Nolting, health educator. "This is an opportunity to see what changes, if any, have occurred since the last study as far as frequency of drinking, consumption levels, and lifestyle patterns."

"Also, this is a whole new group of students since the last survey. This will give us an idea of what current students patterns are," Nolting added.

The 1993 survey revealed that 96 per cent of Queen's students drank alcohol during the previous year. First-year students were found to have the highest level of alcohol consumption, followed by third-year students, second-year students, and fourth-year students respectively.

"The higher levels in third year raise some interesting questions, and there are several scenarios for this," said Nolting. "One is that because they're now living off campus, they've gotten past the bar scene, and they tend to be drinking at home, and it's not that they're necessarily drinking more, but they have more occasions to do so."

"As well, some students felt that they survived first and second year. Third year was their final chance to have fun before they buckle down for their fourth year," Nolting hypothesized.

Nolting offered a number of explanations for the high level of alcohol consumption at Queen's. "Students appear to be drinking to relieve stress, to fit in, to socialize, as a way of letting off steam, or as an escape," Nolting said. "There is a work hard, play hard mentality, which is not only a tradition at Queen's, but elsewhere. Sometimes the way that this comes out is through binge drinking."

According to Nolting, the trend is not unique to Queen's, but is common across post-secondary institutions.

Please see Students on page 7

Qlink access denied

By FIONA STEVENSON

Information Technology Services is issuing warnings to approximately 2,500 Queen's students, informing them that their qlink passwords are insecure.

"There's 2,500 open doors into qlink and I want to get them closed as fast as I can," said Rick Pim, senior systems programming specialist for ITS, "and I'll do whatever I can to get that done."

Insecure passwords have been spotted by a password-guessing program, run by ITS. Bad choices for passwords include modifications of any part of a dictionary word, name or other personal information, acronyms, and algorithms. Good passwords are based upon non-dictionary words, with the best passwords being random strings of letters, numbers and special symbols. Passwords are harder to guess if they are longer and if they mix the case of letter and have digits and punctuation characters along with letters.

"On a moderately fast modern computer, you can run about 250 fiddles of 150,000 words in about eight minutes," Pim said.

ITS began running password-

Please see Insecure on page 4

Third-year students have highest rates of alcohol consumption, a 1993 study at Queen's found. PHOTO BY GEOFF ASHENHURST

Cross examination

Reference letter reveals personal info

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

A document found in the temp file of a law library computer has upset many law students and attracted the attention of both faculty and the Law Students' Society.

The document, which appears to be a series of letters addressed to individuals at a few law firms, makes suggestions as to who the firms should invite to dinner after an Articling Career fair that took place on February 8. Law firms often invite students they may be interested in recruiting to dinner following the fair, although there is no direct link between the dinners and the hiring of law students. Dinner appointments are occasionally made on the recommendation of third-year students who have already

Please see Faculty on page 2

Hate

what you read on the editorials page?

Wanna contribute to your student newspaper but don't wanna write anything? Come to The Journal's Annual Open Editorial Board — a yearly opportunity for you to help us write the editorials. Grad Club (Barrie and Union Streets) Everyone welcome! Tuesday, March 9 at 6 p.m.

index

Volume 126, Issue 3S www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Features	15
Editorials	8	Sports & Fitness	19
Opinions	9	A&E	22
In Focus	12	Classifieds	26
Science	13	M&C	27

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High: 5°C; Low: -13°C; POP: 20%	Sunday Sun with clouds High: 1°C; Low: -8°C; POP: 30%
Saturday Light snow High: -1°C; Low: -10°C; POP: 80%	Sunday Partly cloudy High: -1°C; Low: -11°C; POP: 10%

MONEY FOR NOTHING!

The Winter Clubs & Assembly Grant forms are here! Application forms and complete criteria are available outside of the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs (CIA) office. Forms are due back on March 19th, 1999

You MAY be eligible for a grant if you are:

- Part of the Queen's Student Community;
- From a non-profit cause, organization or society and your activity does not already receive AMS funding.

Complete Criteria, along with application forms, are available at the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs.

For more information please contact Dave Contant, CIA Deputy Commissioner, at 533-6000 ext 74815 or cia@ams.queensu.ca

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings (with the purchase of a beverage)

Faculty moving on

Continued from page 1

secured an articling position. The document discloses personal information about several second- and third-year law students, including phone numbers, e-mail addresses, academic performance and attractiveness. The letters also include information regarding students' summer placements.

Some of the comments beside the female students listed in the document include "very, very, attractive," "hottie," "rather attractive," and "married (oh well!)." The document also lists three individuals as "cute chicks." Some other adjectives used to describe listed students include "nice," "smart" and "first rate."

The document was delivered to The Journal by an anonymous law student or group of students and included a cover letter outlining their concerns. These concerns included that "women are being treated as sexual objects," and that the document could be "closing off career opportunities — by stating which students already have summer jobs."

Many individuals wish to put the controversy following the discovery of the document last month behind them. According to Don Stewart, associate dean of law, the third-year male student who prepared the document has since come forth and apologized. Now the focus has shifted to dealing with future situations like this.

"This has been widely discussed within the law faculty. We have had the widest possible debate. The students are willing to learn from the event and move on," said Stewart.

Many law students were reluctant to comment on the issue. One law student, who wished to remain anonymous, insisted that the student who prepared the document was a good individual. "He has been tortured over this," she said.

"It's been blown out of proportion... This is just one e-mail fiasco after a long line of e-mail fiascos," she added. In October, the dean of law unintentionally sent an e-mail to the Faculty's listserv, which many students believed showed preferential endorsement of two law students.

In response to this event, the Law Students' Society is in the process of passing new guidelines for "addressing similar concerns in the future," said LSS President-elect Ian Brisbin. "Everyone is well aware of the guidelines. There is output going out and everyone put something in [the policy]... it's been well discussed."

Brisbin said he was generally satisfied with the outcome of the situation. "The past [LSS] president did a good job dealing with the situation... We have done well to emerge with a good comprehensive way to deal with situations like this one in the future," he said.

CLARIFICATION

In the previous issue of The Journal, a news story incorrectly identified Rosh Hashanah by the Christian calendar. The correct year of Rosh Hashanah this year is 5760. The Journal regrets any confusion.

STUDENT AWARD

The Norman, Ian and Lorna Rogers Scholarship and the AMS Letter Award

Who can get this award?

Individuals who usually receive little recognition in their positions despite their outstanding contributions, are team players, and uphold the AMS' mission statement are eligible. They may be committee members, chairs, managers, faculty reps or volunteers, but not Council.

How do I nominate someone?

Nomination Forms are available at the AMS front desk in the JDUC and are due back by Friday, March 13, 1998

For further information, please contact Alison Loat, VP/UA (AMS) at 533-2729 or at email address vpua@ams.queensu.ca

NOMINATE SOMEONE TODAY!

Is Queen's campus accessible? Awareness tour identifies problematic areas

By SARAH CROSBIE

Wheelchair ramps, washrooms designated as wheelchair accessible and electronic door devices — the presence of these features on campus does not necessarily mean that Queen's is an accessible university for students with disabilities.

Disability Awareness Week was held between Monday and Friday to promote awareness of the inaccessibility of some areas on campus. As part of the week's activities, the Accessibility Task Force outfitted Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), in a manual wheelchair for three hours Wednesday afternoon. Loat toured around inaccessible locations on campus in an attempt to understand the challenges an individual with a physical disability may endure in an average day.

"The sign on the ramp says to contact Equity Services if there's a problem, but Equity Services doesn't exist anymore."

— Alison Laot, vice-president (university affairs)

Loat was led by Ryan Taylor, a first-year Arts and Science student who uses an electric wheelchair. Taylor and Loat began the tour in Macintosh-Corry Hall, which appears to be one of the most inaccessible buildings on campus based on Loat and Taylor's experiences.

Loat discovered that the women's washroom located on the second floor, although designated as wheelchair accessible, is not. The entrance to the washroom is wide enough to get a wheelchair in, however there is no stall large enough in which to manoeuvre a wheelchair.

Travelling inside Mac-Corry is a critical problem for students with disabilities, due to a flight of stairs in the hall on the main floor. Although an electronic lift can be activated with the use of a key, Taylor said, "the ramp is completely inaccessible. The lift doesn't work and no one knows how to use it. A light and siren go off when it's activated. Why?"

"The sign on the ramp says to contact Equity Services if there's a problem, but Equity Services doesn't exist anymore," Loat added.

Another problem on campus Taylor described was the size and height of automatic door buttons. The buttons are often located where a person who uses a wheelchair cannot reach them. A button to activate automatic doors in Douglas Library was missing so that it was impossible for either Loat or Taylor to open the heavy doors without assistance.

In the John Deutsch University Centre, around the corner from the Publishing and Copy Centre, a button exists to open the doors from the Lower Ceilidh into the main entrance of the JDUC. Taylor was unable to use the door however, because four recycling boxes had been placed in front of the button.

Another inaccessible site is Kingston Hall. A ramp exists to allow students to get into the bottom of the building, however, the ramp itself is inaccessible to most disabled students. To allow for water drainage, a speed bump placed at the bottom of the ramp makes the transition from the ramp into the building a difficult task, even for Taylor.

Another major problem Taylor described is that many of the wheelchair ramps on campus are located at the back of buildings. Taylor said he appreciates the aesthetic value of the front of old buildings like Ontario Hall, but wishes he was able to enter the front of buildings with his friends. "All buildings are somewhat accessible, but [administration] really needs to work on the front doors," he said.

Taylor and Aaron Wong-Sing, members of the Accessibility Task Force, are vocal about what needs to be done on campus. "We need level ramps. There's a lack of consultation. We raise money for the Biosciences Complex, Ban Righ Cafeteria and Stauffer Library, why can't we expend a bit more effort on making campus accessible?" Wong-Sing asked.

"The Accessibility Task Force says a lot about students, but administration needs to do more. The administration needs to make the university an accessible experience for everyone," Loat said.

One of Queen's Capital projects this year is to renovate the Kingston Hall ramp. Renovations include the removal of the concrete wall to the right of the door and speed bump and the addition of an automatic door. Improvements will also be made to the existing elevator. The transformation to improve accessibility will cost $11,000, with students and the university each paying half the cost. The renovations are set to commence as soon as the weather improves.

Aaron Wong-Sing (left) and Ryan Taylor (right). PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Campaign enjoys successful start

By CHRISTINE TYRRELL

Canadian universities are feeling the effects of severe government cuts to their funding, with recent operating grants being slashed from approximately $137 million down to $108 million. The Queen's community is taking matters into its own hands with Campaign For Queen's, an intense initiative to raise a large amount of private dollars during a relatively short period of time.

"It's generating enthusiasm and that gives us hope."

— Mary Fraser, Campaign For Queen's co-chair

Since January of this year, a volunteer team of students, faculty, staff and retirees have been actively raising funds to help strengthen the university and compensate for the lack of government funding. So far they have received pledges for more than $12.7 million towards a $17 million goal by soliciting donations from within the Queen's community.

According to co-chair Mary Fraser, everyone involved in the campaign is pleased that money has been raised so quickly. "It's generating enthusiasm and that gives us hope," she said.

"This is by far the most ambitious campaign ever undertaken," said Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs) and campus community vice-chair (students). "If Queen's wants to maintain its position as a top university it has to find new sources of revenue. We have to find the funds to support the programs that we want to have. The money just isn't coming from the government anymore," Loat said.

"You start your campaign in the internal community before you go outside because you want to be able to say to the major donors outside that you have the support of the campus community," said Fraser.

Loat agreed, saying "the campus community campaign is very important because if there's a high percentage of participation and a large amount of money raised, it sends a very powerful message to external donors."

Students are being targeted for a pledge of $3 million, and can expect to see a question in the upcoming referendum proposing a $60 fee, subject to individual opt-out on a sliding scale, to replace the current Millennium Fund Fee of $45.

Staff, faculty, and retirees are being asked to meet a goal of $2 million. The rest of the $17 million is expected to come from members of the Board of Trustees.

Funds from the campaign will be used to improve the overall quality of education at Queen's, both academic and life services. Priorities include building a new athletics/student life centre, a chemistry building, which will be built in the location of the Aboriginal Student Centre, to replace the Gordon and Frost buildings, library acquisitions, and program enhancements.

New children's lit course a success

By REBECCA STELTER

English Professor Shelley King came to Queen's in 1991 after teaching courses in children's literature at the University of Toronto and Trent University, wondering if there would be any interest for such a course at Queen's. Then, the answer was no.

Queen's department of English already offered a course in fantasy literature, and King said she believed "if one could teach fantasy, one should be able to teach children's literature." Eight years later, after much consideration and a series of proposals by King, the Faculty Board finally decided the course was acceptable. The course was offered for the first time last spring, and is now in its second run this term.

King disagreed with critics who said the course had little academic value. "It is most valuable for the perspective it should give students on our constructed ideas of childhood," she said.

According to King, there is a degree of criticism about the academic validity of a course on children's literature in the Queen's English curriculum, and this criticism comes "from all sides."

"Service courses, such as short story, fantasy, and perhaps women writers courses, fill an interest market but do not fulfill requirements for the major,"

she said. "It is a luxury to be able to offer this course which doesn't fit into the majors curriculum," King said.

Another professor who has received attention in Queen's academic circles is Carolyn Smart, who instructs creative writing and prose fiction classes. While her courses are offered through the department of English, they only count as electives, not as courses required to complete an English degree.

"It is a luxury to be able to offer this course which doesn't fit into the majors curriculum."

— Professor Shelley King

Although the courses do not receive formal academic recognition at Queen's, Smart remains satisfied.

"I love teaching my class and I really enjoy teaching the students at Queen's," she said. "It would be good for the students at Queen's to receive academic recognition for the course but it really doesn't matter to me."

One aspect of King's children's literature course is that it "demonstrates the degree to which children's books are propagandistic," King said. For example, she explained that R.M. Ballantyne's The Coral Island was used to illustrate to children how the superiority of white British males was natural and innate.

"The purpose of the course is to get students to think about children's literature as an archive of attitudes," said King.

"The broader academic factor is that this is not a mainstream element of a Queen's degree. The University of Calgary offers a graduate degree in children's literature, and the University of Toronto offers it as an undergraduate concentration."

"The course offers a marginal position in terms of academic respectability. The perception is that the course is not very challenging, and that there is a light reading load, but if you ask any student in the course right now, I'm sure that they would tell you otherwise," King said.

The course has been positively received by students, based on its high enrolment. "With 90-some students, the course is a little more lecture driven than I would like it to be, but in general people have been positive," King said. In any case, "it is the first to fill in terms of enrolment, and I have already received student inquiries about the course for next year."

Committee examines viability of UBS

BY ERIK MISSIO

A special Viability Review Committee has completed its final set of recommendations in a report on the Used Book Store Exchange.

The committee, chaired by Roger Scott, will present its findings to the Alma Mater Society Board of Directors alongside a similar report on Alfie's Pub, at the next general meeting. Both of the AMS services were evaluated this year as part of a new initiative of the Strategic Planning Committee, of which Scott is a member.

According to SPC Head and Chairman of the AMS Board Trevor Ogle, each year, two services will be selected by the board for an evaluation conducted by an independent committee. While financial concerns were not the sole reason for the selection of the UBS and Alfie's, they were decisive factors, as both suffered disappointing losses last year. "Everyone's cognizant that the AMS isn't a traditional business... that it's a non-profit organization," Ogle explained. "That said, we still have a mandate to serve the students... we shouldn't be losing the students' money."

The UBS Viability Review Committee was given carte blanche for its analysis, in an attempt to determine how to improve the efficiency of the service. For the report, both surveys and an interview with current manager Vanessa Gruben were used in the formulation of recommendations.

"One of the things you have to do in a report like this, is to not focus on the positives. It's not like you'll be making any friends," Scott said.

The surveys were completed by more than 220 students, with results indicating that approximately 25 per cent had never purchased anything from the UBS, and only 31 per cent of students had ever tried to sell their books there.

Recommendations on a better allocation of advertising resources to reach first-year students, as well as changes to the UBS policy regarding consignment sales stemmed from the survey.

Current UBS procedure is to hold cheques for the owners of sold books, but without any sort of notification. If the cheques are not claimed, they are incorporated into store revenue. In fact, the Report reveals that the UBS budget already allocates over $4,000 in uncollected cheques as an expected revenue.

The report recommends that "the UBS phone customers when their consignment cheques have been issued [and that] the UBS Exchange stop retaining so-called 'overdue' cheques in order to increase and, therefore, inflate... revenue."

Other recommendations based on the findings of the survey include the creation of an Internet "Virtual Bookstore" which would not only list the required and recommended texts for each course, but allow students to reserve the books online and the suggestion that sales representatives take "a more customer oriented, inter-active role while working." As 90.96 per cent of the students surveyed indicated that they visit the UBS the most at the beginning of the semester, a recommendation was also made that more temporary staff are hired during September and January only, as opposed to the more costly hiring of year-round staff.

The report also states that the "UBS is, at this point, a very fragile service [and its] management is poor in any of the upcoming years, [it] could be run into the ground." That said, the report further recommends that current manager Gruben be part of the committee that hires next year's management as she has been responsible for many current improvements.

The report concludes that while the UBS has potential for better revenue and product expansion, it remains a service still strongly supported by students.

Ogle said he has thus far been pleased with the success of the Viability Review Committee. "Their work provides us with an effective tool to provide a new perspective on a specific service, allowing us to operate it better and provide more value for students. There's a perceived tendency that services like the UBS exist primarily because they simply always have... we need to make sure it's providing value, if not, we need to change it," he explained.

Scott agreed: "These reviews are definitely a step in the right direction... they allow the Board to step back and see how services are performing and how to make them more efficient. I think the UBS was a grass roots success, looking at specific weaknesses and using lots of student input."

The report of Alfie's Pub has a tentative release date of March 17.

Students 'play hard'

Continued from page 3

"Research shows that people in universities and colleges tend to drink more than their peer group not attending university," she said. "This says something about the culture of university life that says when you're at university it's okay to drink and it's okay to drink a lot, and this is the wrong message to be conveying."

"Gender equality goes out the window when it comes to alcohol."

— Diane Nolting, health educator

The study defines a person who has five or more drinks in one sitting as high risk. The 1993 survey found that more than 80 per cent of Queen's drinkers had engaged in heavy drinking at least once in the year prior to the survey.

According to the survey, on average, Queen's males drink 11 drinks in one sitting, while females consume 4.6 drinks. "Gender equality goes out the window when it comes to alcohol," Nolting explained. "If you take a 140-pound man and a 140-pound woman who both consume the same amount of alcohol, at the end of two hours, the man will have a lower blood alcohol level."

"First of all, men have enzymes in their stomach that work to break down alcohol, women don't. Secondly, when alcohol is absorbed into the blood stream, women have less fluid volume to dilute the blood alcohol," she said. "Thirdly, when the alcohol gets to the liver, women have fewer enzymes to break it down. Women get drunker quicker, and they take longer to sober up."

The 1993 survey found that 67 per cent of students drank once or twice a week, 19 per cent drank three times a week and 14 per cent drank four or more times a week. A quarter of students were found to consume 15 or more drinks per week.

The Queen's Journal Alcohol Awareness Survey

We surveyed 100 randomly selected Queen's students in Stadler Library. This is what they told us:

Male: 51	Female: 49	Do you think you drink too much?
How many alcoholic drinks do you have per week?	No: 81	Yes: 11
0-5: 50 6-10: 25 11-20: 11 20+: 6	Have you ever felt pressured to drink?	No: 51
Per night?	Yes: 38	How many times per month do you go to a bar and not drink?
0-5: 63 6-10: 17 11-20: 4 20+: 0	never: 42	1-5: 39 5+: 3
Usual reason for drinking:	Where do you do most of your drinking?	home: 11
stress relief: 7	taste: 3	bar: 53
depression: 2	peer pressure: 2	restaurant: 3
fun: 54	other (or more than one): 16	party: 6
How often do you drink per month? (days)	0-5: 79	6-10: 10
0-5: 79	6-10: 10	11-20: 2 20+: 0
		other (or more than one): 12

* some ballots, or portions of ballots were spoiled

THE TED REEVE MEMORIAL AWARD

Established by friends and associates of Ted Reeve, who was a football coach and a long-time friend of Queen's.

Awarded in the Fall to upper-year students to recognize outstanding academic achievement and demonstrated qualities of courage, team loyalty and fair play on an intercollegiate team. Preference will be given to members of the Queen's Senior Football team and to students who do not hold awards of equal or higher value.

Application by letter should be made prior to March 31st to the Associate University Registrar (Student Awards). The applicant should list two persons who have been asked to submit confidential letters about his or her academic ability and qualifications, plus an official transcript. The recipient will be chosen by a Selection Committee, including representatives of former Queen's Football players, the Chair of the Senate Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid, and an additional member of the Scholarship Committee.

Value: $ 1,500

The 1998 recipients were: Beau Howes, James Osborn, Andrew Tewsley and Jonathan Taylor.

Student Discounts Available for Formals

Classy and SYD SILVER Formals
Alexander Newman's MEN'S SHOP LTD.

214 Princess Street 546-0110
Locally Owned & Operated Open 11:00 a.m. Thursdays & Fridays

Insecure accounts to close

Continued from page 1

guessing programs through the system last summer, after many of the university's post accounts were broken into from out of the country. Further investigation revealed that "all of the accounts that had been logged into [from foreign countries] were accounts with crappy passwords," said Pim. ITS also found copies of password files for various hosts, including post, and password-guessing programs on some of the compromised accounts. ITS disabled every insecure account on post and sent account holders e-mails informing them to change their passwords.

"I knew that our 'friends' would move elsewhere... at Queen's or to some other institution," said Pim. "I started keeping track of how many passwords on qlink were bad." In early February, a password-guessing program revealed that between 2,500 and 3,000 qlink account holders were using insecure passwords. "I knew we had to start cleaning up the guessable passwords on qlink," he said.

A mass shut-down of insecure qlink accounts would not have been practical, Pim said, as ITS is not equipped with the resources to deal with 3,000 potentially irate students at once. Instead, Pim began e-mailing warnings to account holders to change their passwords, starting with accounts beginning with the numbers three, four and five. At the beginning of this week, Pim began disabling accounts of holders who have already received two such warnings. As of yesterday afternoon, 81 accounts beginning with three, 188 accounts beginning with four, and 19 accounts beginning with five had been turned off. Insecure accounts beginning with six will be shut down within the next week.

Many students were surprised this week to discover they could not log in to their accounts. "I had a fair number of complaints that the e-mail I sent out never said I would do anything if they didn't change their passwords," Pim said. "I was hoping warnings would be enough." Pim said he is revising the warning to be more explicit. Students can call the ITS help desk or visit an ITS advisor to re-enable their disabled accounts. "Every user ID that has been sent to me has been re-enabled within half an hour or 60 minutes," Pim said.

Pim said strict measures are necessary to ensure the security of the system. "If you're on the outside, you have a limited number of places where you can attack the system. On the inside... you have more venues to attack qlink and other machines on the net." System security is a shared responsibility and relies on good passwords, he added.

"If it's a Queen's person who decides they want to exploit the system, if we track them down we can actually do something," he continued. "When you have somebody from Brazil that pounds their way through... there's not a whole lot you can do."

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

- It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!
- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Teach English Overseas

- EST. Teacher Training Certificate Courses
- Intensive 34-hour and 63-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)
- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Comprehensive teaching materials
- Teaching practicum included
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
- Formal certificates given upon course completion
- Cost: $395 (63-hour course) / $445 (34-hour course)
- For More Information Call Oxford Seminars 544-9389 / 1-800-267-6719

A Night At

Alfie's PUB

You Will Remember the Next Morning

PLANNING A PARTY OR SPECIAL EVENT?

Let our CAMPUS EVENTS DEPARTMENT Help You
Matthew Segal - (613) 548-4688

It doesn't take an Einstein to do the math...

$60 > $60

When is $60 greater than $60?
When a student gives to Queen's.

Your gift of $60 shows a strong commitment to Queen's and packs a powerful punch when the University asks alumni and friends for millions of dollars to support our school.

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

A NOTICE TO ALL MEMBERS OF THE AMS

The annual corporate general meeting of the Alma Mater Society Inc., will be held on Tuesday, March 16th, 1999 at 6 PM in the McLaughlin Room, JDUC.

At this meeting, the 1999-2000 Board of Directors will be elected. All incoming and outgoing AMS Assembly members may vote. Proxy forms may be obtained from the AMS front office beginning Wednesday, March 10th. Only written proxies will be permitted.

With regards,

Trevor Ogle
Chairman,
Alma Mater Society Inc.

All AMS members are eligible for Board positions

Vacancies:

2 year director (2 vacancies)
1 year director (2 vacancies)

Potential candidates: Please submit a CV and cover letter to the AMS office by Monday, March 15th, noon. Please direct all inquiries to Trevor Ogle, Board Chair, xt. 74814.

Just Facts

In Here

Queen's wins Shinerama Award

Queen's students are the winners of the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation's first annual National Shinerama Award for Most Improved Campaign. Approximately 2,000 volunteers participated in fund-raising efforts for cystic fibrosis in the month of September, raising $34,000 in 1998, an increase of $14,000 over 1997. Queen's surpassed their campaign initial funding goal by $10,000 and also established a year round CF awareness committee.

Award-winning playwright speaks at Queen's Irato-québécois playwright and translator Marco Micone will speak in the JDUC's McLaughlin Room next Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. As the Michener Visitor 1998-1999, his lecture is entitled "Québec as a metaphor: Understanding Québec from an immigrant perspective." Admission is free and everyone is welcome.

Rideaucrest Mattress Campaign

The Council on Aging is hosting a campaign to raise funds to replace aging and uncomfortable critical care mattresses for Rideaucrest Home. The current mattresses were brought from the old Rideaucrest and are in desperate need of replacement. The Council on Aging needs volunteers to help with the campaign. For more details, call Bill Bleackley at 542-1336.

Big Sisters seeks members

Big Sisters Association of Kingston and District is looking for new people to join its Board of Directors. No experience is necessary. The commitment is to attend monthly meetings and support Board committees and objectives. Call 542-9202 or send an application including a letter and resume to: Big Sisters of Kingston, 417 Bagot St., Kingston, ON, K7K 3C1. Fax: 547-9101 or e-mail: bsak@kos.net

Student aid to benefit

Continued from page 3

"It's important for the university to be able to give its present students and future students the very best possible education, teaching, learning facilities, life facilities, and student support," Fraser said.

The campaign also aims to allot approximately $60 million towards student assistance in the form of scholarships and bursaries. This means that the capital investment is not touched, but the income on the investment is used.

"The most important aspect of the campaign for me is the opportunity to contribute to the future experiences and enrichment of students who will attend Queen's in the years to come," said George Dyke, campus community campaign vice-chair (students).

"Truly, I have been involved in a multitude of things throughout my Queen's career and the opportunity to finish off with an effort to strengthen the Queen's community for tomorrow is a great honour," said Dyke.

After the campus community campaign ends in May there will be follow up as the Campaign For Queen's continues efforts to keep donations coming.

It's cold out there!
Stay warm with our huge
OUTERWEAR
SALE
20% -50%
OFF everything

TRAILHEAD

237 PRINCESS STREET
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B3
PH: (613) 546-4757 FAX: (613) 546-5243
WEBSITE: <http://www.TrailHeadCnd.com>
MAILBOX: Kingston@TrailHeadCnd.com

AS SEEN ON TV

The TORTURE KING

TONIGHT

TICKETS
Advanced $5
At The Door $6

Alfie's
PUB
LIVE FRIDAYS

See what the campaign can do...

2 new changerooms
4 hardwood team courts
+
6-lane running track
+
50-metre, 8-lane pool
=
100,000 sq.ft. "field house"

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

A case of bad judgement

FEMINIST PIONEER NELLIE McClung must be turning in her grave over the controversy surrounding her grandson Justice John McClung.

Taking a large step backwards for women's rights, Justice McClung acquitted a known sex-offender in part because the 17-year-old victim was not "in a bonnet and crinolines." He later added insult to injury by remarking that the girl "wasn't on her way home from a nursery." After the Supreme Court overturned his ruling, McClung responded with a derisive letter to the editor at The National Post, lashing out at Supreme Court Justice Claire L'Heureux-Dubé and even going so far as to attribute the rising suicide rate in Quebec to her convictions.

Clearly, this vitriolic attack on another judge in a public forum is an unacceptable breach of conduct for a judge. While he denies knowing it, McClung's comments were especially hurtful since L'Heureux-Dubé's husband committed suicide. The letter to the editor, which McClung now acknowledges as a horrible mistake, was in response to L'Heureux-

Dubé's written ruling in which she chastised his 'inappropriate' reasons for acquitting Steve Ewanchuk. Indeed, McClung's ruling does appear rooted in the stereotype that when a woman says no to a sexual advance, she doesn't always mean it. L'Heureux-Dubé and her seven colleagues unanimously rejected this myth and made it clear that implied consent is not a legitimate defence for sexual assault.

This vitriolic attack on another judge in a public forum is an unacceptable breach of conduct for a judge.

Even if McClung was dissatisfied with this ruling, he should not have responded in such a public forum. His inappropriate letter has embroiled the entire legal community in the controversy and has brought the justice system into disrepute. Not only has he exercised extremely poor judgment in writing the letter, but his comments reveal an anachronistic attitude about sexual assault that has no place on the bench.

Hunting bunnies at Dal

SIGHTINGS OF A CERTAIN notorious bunny, and we're not talking about the Energizer bunny, have snared up quite a hornet's nest of protest at a Canadian university. A women's group at Dalhousie University in Halifax has recently taken a stand against the presence of student representatives of Playboy magazine on campus.

The Dalhousie Women's Centre, which is virulently opposed to the use of the Playboy bunny on campus, has taken to destroying the posters advertising parties that are organized by the two volunteer representatives. While their opposition to the bunny as a symbol of gender stereotypes is understandable, their destruction of the posters is indefensible. Instead of engaging the two students in dialogue, or protesting the existence of the offending bunny peacefully, the group has undertaken a malicious campaign to sabotage the work of other students by defacing or ripping down the posters.

Surely, the legal representatives of Playboy magazine have the right to advertise a party using the Playboy logo without threat of vandalism. The problem, however, is that for some women at Dalhousie the Playboy bunny is more than just another corporate logo. This issue was compounded by a professor of English and women's studies who argued that the Playboy bunny is a symbol in the same way that the swastika is a symbol.

While professor Majorie Stone presents a compelling argument for why the logo is offensive and distressing to some women, she was wrong to compare it to the swastika. Unlike the internationally recognized symbol for nazism, the bunny is not a deliberate or a recognized symbolic representation of the oppression of women. If some students associate the logo with misogyny then they should boycott the parties or complain through the proper channels.

If enough students complain, then the Playboy representatives will eventually give in and stop using the logo on their posters. After all, a party with no women is not what they intended.

NOW THIS IS HOW EVERY LADY SHOULD DRESS.

Don't lose the Beat

WE SAW THE BEST MINDS OF our generation destroyed by madness, starving hysterical naked," torn from the womb of academia and abandoned to the corporate world. Like unfortunate lemmings, too many of our peers threw themselves off the ivory tower into an abyss of cubicles and fluorescent lighting. With money in their pockets, and car payments on their shoulders, few if any will find their way back to the dog days of learning.

If we find our true selves at university, why lose the beat after graduation?

In a four, sometimes five... maybe six... year journey, they embraced a vainglorious individualism that was removed from the grit and blood of the daily grind. During these wonder years, all they did was learn the beat of "isms" and "ologies" — picking and choosing ideals that fit their green minds. So green, so free of the toxic wants and needs that pull apart the man on Yonge street. It couldn't possibly have lasted forever; at the end of the last semester they hit the beginning of the asphalt street and it's run or be run over. Bay Street is calling; IBM is calling; imported beer and steak dinners are calling; a home and mortgage is calling.

But these poor lost souls are no longer green. Subdued by debt and exhaustion, they have become the corporate stormtroopers of the skyscraper orbit.

One minute they're eating stale pizza and pints, two minutes and would you like an olive in your martini? No, really. Of course I would. But what choice is there? School ends and debt mounts and no one can travel forever and few can survive off the crumbs of art. But why kowtow to the rough excesses of the corporate agenda for a buck or two? If we find our true selves at university, why lose the beat after graduation? Too many minds undergo a corporate lobotomy that wipes out the last vestiges of dissent. Perhaps they were too green and had too many "isms" that shook the world, but they never stood in line for more than half an hour at the bank. They never wore their plaid suit innocently. They never looked back.

Our putsch is a ways off; the revolution is probably not just around the corner, but that doesn't mean resistance is futile. As a new crop of lemmings approaches the edge of the cliff we shout: Don't forget to look back occasionally. The road we travel after university may be long but it doesn't have to be narrow.

*Many thanks to Allen Ginsberg.

By JOCELYN LAPORTE AND PAUL HEISLER

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gernin
Tara Mansbridge
MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis
NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim
FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer
OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky
ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil
MISC. EDITOR
Ken Burland
GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan
THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Belfringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman
PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian
WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft
SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke
ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella
ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Aimee Ge
Rachelle Villanueva
SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 5, 1999 • Issue 35 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 778 East Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8 Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800; advertising: 613-533-6711; circulation: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca; jznews@post.queensu.ca. Issue 36 will be published on Friday, March 12, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Crystal Bona, Chris Carson, Stephanie Carvin, Heather MacDonald, Vivik Mehta, Erik Missio, Erin Nicholson, Jennifer Paterson, Mark Salvador, Nease Sager, Eli Schuster, Dimitrios Tsotos, Christine Tyrrell, Virginia Wignora.

Photographers: Geoff Ashenburt.

OPINIONS

talking HEADS

What question would you ask Monica Lewinsky?

Andrew Spiro
Comm '99

Shannon Spicer
Keltie Moore
PHE '01
PHE '00

Q Hoppie
ConEd '99

Chris Dorey
PHE '99

Leaders without ethics

AS PROFESSIONAL POLITICIANS, political pundits and their ilk gather this week for the Canadian Conference on Ethical Leadership at Queen's, our country's social values lie in shambles. We are currently tacked by a hodgepodge of scandals in leadership. From politicians being found guilty of kickbacks, to the APEC quagmire, to the Olympic uproar, to the Livent fracas, to our Walkhome executive, it is clear that leadership is not synonymous with ethics.

Due to the sheer volume of scandals, Canadians have lost faith in the leadership of many of our valued institutions. We have become cynical about all politicians and indeed almost anyone in authority. Quite naturally, we are blasé about any new news exposing more scandals.

Despite all this there is hope. I refuse to believe that all motives are ulterior. Although I accept that the present paradigm has created a lethargic atmosphere, an answer exists.

There is a quiet revolution underway. Change is occurring around the ways in which we, as a society, approach the subject of work and leadership. Many people are seeking new and better ways of integrating work with their own personal and spiritual growth. They are seeking to combine the best elements of leadership based upon service to others, as part of a concept called servant-leadership.

Servant-leadership is being applied by a growing number of individuals and institutions as both a philosophy and a working model. In recent years, a number of for-profit companies (e.g. Mercedes-Benz) have jettisoned their old hierarchical models and replaced them with a servant-leader approach. This model advocates a group-oriented approach to analysis and decision making as a means of strengthening institutions, and of improving society. It also emphasizes the power of persuasion and seeking consensus over the old "top-down" form of leadership.

Some people have compared this to turning the hierarchical pyramid upside down, so that in the mind of the servant-leader, the needs of his or her employees, customers, constituents and community become the most important reason for a company's existence. To a considerable extent, the servant-leadership approach is one that is best exemplified by the Japanese model of management and leadership.

At the heart of the servant-leader concept is the importance of leaders to nurture both the institution and those individuals affected by the institution. The object is to remove the alienation between groups of individuals making service the foundation of everything (business, government, and personal relations) that exists.

There is a sense that "ethical leadership" proposes a notion that people can be "real leaders" of organizations, as opposed to "mere" administrators, officials, authorities or managers. In addition, to distinguish themselves from others, such leaders will conduct themselves in a "ethical" manner. This has a particular appeal to those dismayed by the present state of our social systems.

Due to the sheer volume of scandals, Canadians have lost faith in the leadership of many of our valued institutions. We have become cynical about all politicians and indeed almost anyone in authority.

This learning begins from the moment we identify with the norms of society and the goals we hope to achieve in our lives. Thus the current scandals have always had root with us: We are taught, subconsciously and consciously, that the best lifestyle is the wealthiest lifestyle. We are given heroes that represent the materialistic and greed-oriented values that seem to control our society so completely. We are told that those people who do not succeed in their economic strivings fail by their own faults. We are taught to hate and blame the victim and pardon the victimizer. And all of these lessons are taught under the guise of acting "for the good of the country."

What we need is not one person with courage to confront the problem. Rather we need many people to follow this goal. Our society faces so many overwhelming problems of injustice that no one person can handle it. Our society is paralyzed by the incredible fear of change. The biggest challenge facing the leaders of our future is overcoming this paralytic fear and convincing the Canadian people to envision a future for themselves and their surroundings.

On the way toward answering the question of whether ethical leadership is possible, the Canadian Conference on Ethical Leadership this week will say much that is interesting and much that is true. However, that which is interesting is not always true, and that which is true is not always interesting.

The answer doesn't lie in conferences or seminars with the goal of creating more academic jargon. This kind of thinking simply teaches more societal isolationism.

MARK SALVADOR
ARTS '00

Pocket pool shark bites back

Dear Editors,

I'd like to take this opportunity to respond to some criticism I received in your pages recently from Taryn McCormick, regarding my previous letter discussing the now-sadly famous Mansbridge editorial.

Firstly, Taryn feels it important to correct me by stating that Mansbridge's piece was printed in the Opinions section, and therefore need not meet my criteria of actual "news." In fact, Taryn, you're quite wrong: Mansbridge's self-indulgent expose appeared on the editorial page, which is what primarily aroused my ire. What's the difference, you ask? Well, opinion pieces are just that: personal opinions. However, in journalism, an editorial is traditionally an unsigned article, representing a moral stance or opinion of the entire paper. A good example would be the London Times' editorial during WWII, condemning the invasion of Poland by Hitler.

In this comparison, the laughability of an editorial proclaiming "I like vibrators!" should become readily apparent.

Taryn's other major remark thrown my way was to "grow up." Actually, Taryn, I think that's exactly what you and Mansbridge need to do. Admitting that we all masturbate is a phase the rest of us went through in high school; it's simply pathetic that young adults in their late teens/early twenties still find this subject the least bit controversial or

Continued on page 10

See what the campaign can do...

$3.4 million endowed for work study and work experience
+
$6 million endowed for graduate scholarships
+
$21.6 million endowed for national and international entrance scholarships
+
$30 million endowed for awards and bursaries
=
$60 million endowed for student assistance

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 9

newsworthy. Apparently, in the sheltered world of Queen's, one can now become a campus hero by admitting to masturbation. Well, hell, better throw some accolades my way too! I love a good game of pocket pool as much as the next man!

I'll expect some congratulatory letters from my peers, admiring my honesty and courage for admitting to such a thing, by your next issue.

Mike Martelle
Arts '98

Vic 2D hoods not so tough

Dear Editors,

In response to ring leaders,

Aching feet?
Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- Free assessments/ follow up
- 30 money-back guarantee
- 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Conestock Bldg
Brockville, ON
K6V 1S9
613-459-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston!
Kingston, ON
K7L 1R3
t: 545-0100 1545-1997

Dynamic Orthotics

Speaking Volumes

circulated by Olson, Montreal, created by Clive Robertson continuing to 19 March at Modern Fuel Gallery, 21a Queen Street

6 MARCH

PANEL DISCUSSION 2 pm

Flagging Interest:

The news media and contemporary art

with Clive Robertson, Barbara Fischer and Will Straw

RECEPTION 7-9 pm

Free admission

Presented with the financial assistance of The Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario Arts Council and the City of Kingston, in cooperation with Kingston Artists' Association.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre

<http://www.queensu.ca/ageth/>

shutkickers, and you sure as hell aren't nihilists. I bet you were whimpering like puppy dogs when you had to call up your old man to ask him to send money to pay the fine for that diabolical leaner you set up after ritual.

Rule #3 — Shitting in sinks, passing on floors, throwing vacuum cleaners out the window and carrying open alcohol containers in the hall are not the pinnacle of being a bad ass. Spend a night in Kingston Pen and you'll find out what being a bad ass is all about — the Hard way.

Rule #4 - Remember despite what you think it has all been done before, we've all had to have conferences with the anal retentive floor vice president. This school has a long history of mischief in Residence. You are victims of formulaic and predictable hijinks, afflicted by delusions of grandeur.

In closing, Stephen "Southpaw" Hennigar, Darrel "Hooley" LeHouillier, Andrew "Postman" Tracy, you've been exposed. You're hype. You're nothing. So take off your red and blue gangsta bandannas, slip those stained purple jackets back over your shoulders, slink back to your rooms, call your mothers to wish them a good night, finish your calculus solution sets and go to bed. The jig is up fuck bunnies.

Jeff Child
Arts '00

Job fair discrimination

Dear Editors,

I think that I share many of the same concerns as many other Queen's students when looking for a summer job. I am looking for a job that pays above minimum wage for many reasons. Firstly, Queen's has the second highest undergraduate tuition in Canada and I need to be able to support myself for the upcoming school year. Secondly, I would like a job that I find challenging and enjoyable. So, I began my search by attending the job fair in January which was composed predominantly of opportunities for tree planting and camp counseling.

I am not stranger to corporate arrogance — having switched faculties from Commerce to Arts.

So, not having seen any jobs that appealed to me at the first job fair, I attended the QFIT job fair in Grant Hall on February 5. This is where my story really begins. Many reputable corporations were there to solicit information about summer jobs for students. I walked in and it seemed like any other job fair. I know the routine: look around, read signs, approach booths, read literature, and talk to representatives. Actually at the first job fair, I found the representatives quite eager to speak to me, to offer me literature, and to get my name and email address in some cases (which were followed up — Thanks S&MG).

The QFIT job fair was quite different. Representatives were not eager to speak to me and they did not offer me literature. In fact, many of them turned around and assuming that I can accurately interpret body language, did so, so that I would not approach them. I was feeling the cold shoulder. Since, I had many friends who have worked for these companies in the past I thought that maybe I was just imagining these responses. So

Continued on page 11

More letters...

More ASUS election reaction

Continued from page 10

finally, I went to the TD booth where I asked what was on the computer... the representative came around the booth, turned the computer towards herself and told her co-worker that it must be broken!

The only logical conclusion I can hypothesize for ignoring me was that I was not wearing a Commerce jacket, nor was I wearing a suit and tie. Actually, I was one of four females in the room. I was misled by the first job fair to believe that I was attending a job fair and not a practice run for any upcoming interviews.

I cannot deal with their corporate arrogance. They know that I need them to provide me with a well-paying summer job and they know that not many other summer jobs are nearly as lucrative. They exude an aura of superiority because they know I need them more than they need me (so far... just give me a few years). The way I was treated was appalling and I am confident that it must have occurred to others of the day who were not dressed in generic, cookie-cutter fashions. I am disappointed that I was treated like an outsider from the moment that I walked into the room because I was genuinely interested in working for one of these companies. Sadly enough, I once again donned my rose-coloured glasses as I am not a stranger to corporate arrogance — having switched faculties from Commerce to Arts.

Sarah Stuart
Arts '01

Dear Editors,

I want to commend the ASUS Orientation Committee '98 for their insistence on making public the circumstances in which Shannon Bell and Chris Safford were unjustly excluded from the annual transition event. When I learned of the incident from a friend last week, I must admit that I was shocked. I was appalled even, by the very thought that a competing team would dare come up with such an immature and contemptuous ploy as this.

In my opinion, a fun evening among friends is hardly cause for concern. Shannon and Chris would have had no more favourable influence on anyone during the transition party than they could have had at Alfie's, A.J.'s or at a variety of other social gatherings on any other occasion during the campaign.

Transition is a time of celebration, not a time to procure allies for upcoming elections. Both individuals undoubtedly put a great deal of work into Orientation Week '98 and thus deserve every chance to celebrate a job well done, regardless of the political circumstances.

It's a shame that Shannon and Chris had to miss out on a unique opportunity for the sake of rules and regulations which may not even have been valid. I just hope the accusers are ashamed of what they did — after all, they're the ones who acted unfairly.

Alison Busby
Artsci '00

See what the campaign can do...

- 165 new print journal titles
- + 1,000 more new books annually
- + 1,200 new electronic full-text journal titles
- + 72,000-article Encyclopedia Britannica online
- = annual purchasing power of $5 million endowed for libraries

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

Get a job!

▶ Help us manage the AMS in 1999-2000. ◀

Director of Business Development

Responsible for marketing the AMS to corporations and Alumni to recruit external sponsorship and support. Efforts will be focused on a national and local level, and projects will involve all aspects of the AMS.

Deputy Commissioner

Aids the commissioner in carrying out the objectives of the commission. Responsible for additional initiatives of your own, and as directed by the commission. Directly oversees the activities of the commission's committees.

Service Manager

Directly responsible for all aspects of service operations, including long term planning, budgeting and daily work. (Positions include the Business Managers of Studio Q, The Queen's Journal and the Tricolour Yearbook.)

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Experience is not required.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due on Tuesday March 9 before 16:30.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

Reading Week...
Mexico and Barbados style

Renee Huang

Alex Kronby

Alex Kronby

Renee Huang

Renee Huang

Alex Kronby

SCIENCE

Gathering Intelligence

BY VIVEK MEHTA

IMAGINE YOURSELF BROWSING THE Internet looking to purchase that book or CD you just can't seem to find in any of the local shops. The moment you access a particular Web site, information pertaining to that page and how it will be displayed on your monitor is being sent to your computer, perhaps from a server located thousands of miles away.

Now imagine that this same Web site is withdrawing personal information from your computer, allowing the company to compile data regarding your preferences and practices as a consumer. With companies likely sharing information with one another, it is only a matter of time until a virtual user profile can be put together.

That is precisely the kind of commercial practice Intel is endorsing with their new line of Pentium III processors. All chips are currently being shipped with a unique 64-bit processor serial number (PSN) that is digitally encoded within the hardware, and that can easily be retrieved or transmitted by a company with the use of Internet-enabled software. Given the widespread practice of downloading and installing of software, it is likely companies could get their way with little need for coercion.

Intel claims the reason for incorporating such an identification number in each of its processors is to enhance security over the Web for the general public.

Critics of this serial number have been quick to lash out against Intel, calling for a boycott of any product bearing the "Intel inside" logo.

With the emerging popularity of online e-commerce transactions, a sense of authenticity is becoming a crucial element for businesses and consumers alike. For years, Web sites have used cookies, text files that are stored on the visitor's hard drive, to log details about the user. These files are used to tailor the Web page's content each time the user returns to the site. Reasons for using cookies range from the ability to personalize information (like on My Yahoo or Excite), or to help with on-line sales/services (like on Microsoft), or simply to keep site content fresh and relevant to the user's tastes (like on Amazon Books).

Unlike cookies, which are usually unreadable by any other site, the PSN is a recognizable standard that will remain the same and cannot be deleted or easily changed. The advertising and marketing industries have already been pursuing a Web-wide synchronization of cookies, so that information about individual consumer behavior in cyberspace can be shared between companies.

A hardware PSN used in the majority of computers would allow companies to finally pin a particular ID number to one particular household or user. The only solution would be to change the processor or computer. It comes as no surprise then that more than 30 companies have

Please see Chips on next page

Queen's researches CF bug

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

MOST OF US HAVE HEARD ABOUT the amazing success of Shinerama this past September; Queen's students raised over $32,000 for the Canadian Cystic Fibrosis Foundation. Many people, however, don't know about the cutting-edge research that Queen's professors and students are doing all year round to combat cystic fibrosis (CF).

Jamie Tibbo is one of several researchers involved. He came to Queen's University this past September from Memorial University in St. John's Newfoundland, where he grew up. He has never shied away from a challenge, and certainly isn't now, as he tackles Pseudomonas aeruginosa, the bacteria that eventually kills many CF sufferers.

This rod-shaped microbe is the subject of intensive research because of its fundamental role in CF, and also because it is extremely resistant to whole classes of antibiotics, including penicillin and tetra-cycline, as well as many chemicals, such as mercury and chlorine.

CF is an inheritable genetic disease, in which mucus cannot be cleared out of the lungs, and forms a gel-like film in the air-ways. P. aeruginosa colonizes the weakened lungs, and is able to use this environment to its advantage, evading the body's defences and most drugs that it is challenged with.

Queen's University researchers are making significant contributions in the quest to discover how this bacterium can evade so many of our weapons.

P. aeruginosa doesn't just make its home and live in it peacefully, however. It causes extensive tissue damage, and eventually kills most of its victims. This is an enormous death toll, considering the fact that about 60 per cent of all CF patients are infected with the bacterium, and about 85 per cent over the age of 28 are infected.

It's not hard to figure out how these bacteria became so adept at evading our drugs. Time is on their side. Increasing availability and efficiency of antibiotics has dramatically increased the average lifespan of CF patients, but at the same time, this increased life span gives P. aeruginosa all the time it needs to adapt to the antibiotics we keep dousing it with. So the better our drugs get, the better they get at evading them.

Queen's University researchers are making significant contributions in the quest to discover exactly how P. aeruginosa can evade so many of our weapons. In 1993 in Botterel Hall, Dr. Keith Poole discovered a pump near the surface of the P. aeruginosa. If an antibiotic manages to enter the tough outer surface of this deadly bacterium, the pump is often able to recognize the foreign molecule and drive it out of the cell before it gets any further.

Please see Infection on next page

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

New field of chemistry born among the stars

Something strange happens when stars explode. Yes, something besides that whole hydrogen-and-helium-condensing-into-heavier-elements thing. Specifically, carbon acts strangely and the explanation for its behaviour has created the foundation for a new discipline: kinetic chemistry. The chemical equilibrium theory predicts that gaseous carbon in supernovae should not condense into solid carbon. Instead, all those free carbon atoms should combine with the excess oxygen to form carbon monoxide. Why then do we find graphite "star dust" inside ancient meteorites? The answer lies in the incredible amount of radiation released in a supernova. Energetic charged particles can rip apart the strong carbon-oxygen bond, leaving atomic carbon to form solid particles. This and other odd characteristics of supernovae are best described by the new kinetic chemical theory.

Tainted love

Love is obsessive. And compulsive. So says a group of Italian scientists who have been studying the blood chemistry of people in love. The University of Pisa study shows that blood samples taken from people in love contain 40 per cent less of a certain protein than normal. This protein is associated with the normal function of the neurotransmitter serotonin. Curiously, this lower level is also linked to obsessive-compulsive disorder, a mental illness whose victims are compelled to perform specific tasks such as collecting or arranging objects, repeating words, or washing their hands. One difference between love and OCD, says the study, is that the protein deficiency is permanent in OCD. After a romantic relationship ends, however, the protein levels return back to normal after six to 18 months.

Seen any black glass hands lately?

Paleontologists at Cornell University are puzzled by black glassy hand-like fossils like this one and are looking for the public's help to collect more samples. The fossils could be the remains of Devonian glass sponges or of an organism previously unknown to scientists. For more information and pictures, point your browsers to <http://www.geo.cornell.edu/glass sponge.html>

Chips to ship with PSN off Infection common risk

Continued from last page

already committed plans to use the PSN. Critics of this serial number have been quick to lash out against Intel, with several of the lobby groups calling for a general boycott of any product bearing the "Intel inside" logo. There is an overwhelming sense that privacy and a sense of anonymity on the Internet are some of the privileges being violated with this controversial feature.

Under fire, Intel has agreed to ship all subsequent P III processors with the PSN disabled by default, but included with the processor is a software package that allows the user to turn the feature back on at any time. Speculators claim that because this privacy protection scheme relies on a software patch that must run each and every time the user turns on the computer, it is susceptible to tampering by other software programs.

Programs such as word processors or Web browsers which must be installed on systems could easily disable the patch in the installation process. Web-based Java applets could also be used for this purpose. Most damaging to this scheme is an idea proposed by a German computer magazine, which claims that PSN spoof-programs are already being developed, and would allow the users to mask their identity to companies.

What these reports seem to suggest is that, far from rendering businesses and customers a safer e-commerce environment, PSNs may end up creating a falsified blanket of security, one that has the potential to be easily manipulated.

Is it reasonable to believe a corporate giant such as Intel would have blundered to such a degree, or could there be some hidden agenda behind their moves? Perhaps it is an effort to crack down on software piracy, or an attempt to dissuade retailers from overclocking and reselling processors for higher value.

While we wait for the answers to these questions, it is safe to say customers will be more cautious in ringing up sales for Intel and their Pentium III processors in the upcoming year.

Continued from last page

It was this exciting research that initially attracted Tibbo to Queen's University. As Tibbo explained, "I was looking to research antibiotic resistance in bacteria, and the Poole Lab had been extremely successful and had made a substantial mark in the field in a relatively short time."

Tibbo and a few other grad students are currently trying to piece together the three main parts of the pump. This is a very important area of research, because it appears that this pump may be able to drive out many different antibacterial agents.

If Tibbo and his fellow researchers can figure out how the pump works, a new drug could theoretically be made that would block this pump, and if the pump was broken, P. aeruginosa would suddenly become susceptible to not only one, but several antibiotics that have been deemed ineffective.

If we then hit this disabled bug with all those long abandoned antibiotics, could we possibly turn the tide in our favour? For a little while, probably. But it seems as though time will always side with the bacteria. No matter what we do, they can always wait it out until they evolve a new way to resist our drugs.

Tibbo has considered this, and like most other researchers, he finds it a little scary. But that's only a reason to try harder. Our knowledge of the molecular causes of diseases, such as cystic fibrosis has never been growing as rapidly as it is today, and there are no signs of slowing down. The full genome of P. aeruginosa is scheduled to be completely sequenced this May, and the human genome is scheduled to be mostly completed in a couple of years.

So maybe we do have a reason to be optimistic. Tibbo seems optimistic. His research is coming along well so far, and he may eventually try for a PhD. Although no cure is in sight, research like Tibbo's and fund-raisers like Shinerama can only increase our odds in the fight against cystic fibrosis.

FEATURES

A symbol of change

SPEAKING OUT: On the elimination of the Dean of Women

STORIES BY LAURA MACINNIS

IN THE SPRING OF 1996, Queen's University was awash in feminist debate. The decision by Principal Bill Leggett to eliminate the Dean of Women as a senior administrator at Queen's sparked a widespread debate about the status of women at the university, the relevance of women's issues on the administrative agenda and the best way to address equity issues in the 1990s.

Queen's women responded to the 1996 announcement by joining together in protest. Alumnae exerted much pressure on the university to uphold the position. Women faculty compiled petitions and met with Principal Leggett to argue the need for the Dean of Women.

The Dean of Women's office closed in January 1996 with the end of Pamela Dickey-Young's tenure in the position. In September 1998, Mary Margaret Dauphinee came to Queen's as the University Advisor on Equity, a role associated with promoting the needs of all under-represented groups on campus.

Three years after Queen's lost the Dean of Women, the campus is relatively quiet. Most undergraduate students have never known a Dean of Women. The two-year hiatus between the posts has been described as "the loss of institutional memory about women" at Queen's. However, the feminist debate surrounding the Dean of Women continues to unfold in discussions among concerned students, staff, faculty and alumnae. Only now the question is, what is the next step?

In HER 15 YEARS AT QUEEN'S Christine Overall, Associate Dean of Arts and Science and Professor of Philosophy, has known two Deans of Women. She was active in mobilizing women faculty in response to the news about the Dean of Women being eliminated in 1996. Overall described the role of the Dean of Women as three-fold: providing counselling, developing policy and serving as a symbol to validate and support Queen's women.

"One of the most important functions of the Dean of Women, and especially for Elspeth Baugh (Dean of Women from 1980-1993), was to provide a kind of safe place for women with various needs," she said. Overall said that women were able to walk into the dean's office and talk about issues related to being a woman at Queen's, and the dean did much to help women grow in self-esteem and self-worth.

The Dean of Women was a support person and resource for female students, faculty, and staff, who often spoke out on behalf of other under-represented groups. Overall said the Dean played an important role in supporting women faculty, who remain in the minority at Queen's.

As a senior administrator, the Dean of Women was able to ensure that women's issues were talked about in circles of power. She also played a significant role in advocating women's issues in policy, including generating support for Women's Studies, addressing sexual harassment and pursuing employment equity.

Despite her privileged role, the Dean of Women did not necessarily wield much influence on campus. "They had to rely on persuasion and advocacy," said Overall.

Overall described the role of the Dean of Women in the 1989 "No means Yes" incident at Queen's, where first-year male students in Gordon residence turned a consensual sex education cam-

Continued on page 17

"The biggest challenge was a system that didn't want to change, when it was my job to change it."

— Pamela Dickey-Young, Dean of Women 1993-1996

"I believe the course we took was necessary... I do regret the anxiety and the pain that was associated with the change."

— Bill Leggett, Queen's Principal

"It's a surprisingly quiescent time right now, regrettably so."

— Christine Overall, Associate Dean of Arts & Science

Remembering the Dean of Women, 1911 - 1996

THE DEAN OF WOMEN meant different things to different people. The role the dean played at Queen's changed dramatically as the number of female students increased, and as the prominence of other equity issues rose on campus.

When Caroline McNeill began her tenure as the first Dean of Women in 1911, there were 325 women at Queen's, making up one fifth of the total student population. When Pamela Dickey-Young ended her tenure as the last Dean of Women at Queen's, women constituted more than half of the undergraduates.

The Deans of Women held positions with varying responsibilities, depending on the needs of the generation and the politics at the time of their tenure. Some lived in Ban Righ apartments alongside female students, and presided over their formal meals and afternoon luncheons. Some provided one-on-one counselling for women on academic, social and personal matters. Some undertook initiatives on employment equity, curriculum development, day care and safety issues. All the women held a position rich in symbolic and literal meaning on the campus, and held a privileged role in administration and campus life.

Debates about the end of the position in 1996 elicited a passionate response from women students, staff, faculty, and alumnae, all of whom had different reasons for wanting the position to stay.

Three years after the decision to end the position, the Dean of Women remains close to the hearts of many women, particularly in the alumnae community. When alumnae gathered on February 7 to discuss their memories about the women deans, there was an air of consensus that no matter the individual, no matter the time, the Dean of Women played a pivotal role in their education at Queen's.

The 14 women, spanning several generations, met in the Tower Room of Ban Righ Hall on a frigid Sunday afternoon to hear the history they already knew, and to share memories they held dear.

The centre of attention at the gathering was Maureen Garvie, MA '71, a reporter with The Queen's Gazette who is writing a book about the Dean of Women expected to be released this fall. The book, tentatively named Guardians of Co-education, has grown from a history thesis published last spring by Jennifer Johnson, Arts '98.

Garvie has spent the past year entrenched in the Queen's archives, trying to piece together the history of the women deans. She came to share her research with the alumnae, many of whom were witness to the history she has been researching.

Queen's alumnae have also been asked to submit their recollections about deans of women to Garvie, who has used these personal recollections in the text of the book. Garvie said the contributions of alumnae have been invaluable in piecing together the stories of the deans. "It's really interesting how a chance remark will solve a question that I really can't figure out," she said.

In the Tower Room, alumnae were eager to share their perspectives on the history Garvie had compiled. The author read what she called "skeletal chapters" on certain deans, plus some of the recollections she had received, and then asked the women to comment and add their own memories of the women deans.

Garvie began with an excerpt about Winnifred Kydd, Dean of Women from 1934 to 1939. Kydd, a worldly woman with flaming red hair, was a prominent Canadian with many honours in public service. While at Queen's, Kydd lived in a

Continued on next page

Get a job!

Experience is not required.

Who'll be hired next?

- ▶ Director of Business Development
Responsible for marketing the AMS to corporations and Alumni to recruit external sponsorship and support. Efforts will be focused on a national and local level, and projects will involve all aspects of the AMS. Work will be accomplished with the aid of two staff members.
- ▶ Deputy Commissioners
Aids the commissioner in carrying out the objectives of the commission. Responsible for your own additional initiatives towards the goals of the commission. Directly oversees the activities of the commission's committees. A dozen deputies will be selected for the 1999-2000 year.
- ▶ Service Managers
Directly responsible for all aspects of service operations, including long term planning, budgeting and daily work. Managers report to AMS Service Directors, supporting the objectives of the student government as a whole. (Positions include the Business Managers of Studio Q, The Queen's Journal, and the Tricolour Yearbook, and the Project Manager of the Who's Where and What's Next.)

Application due dates

- ▶ Applications for Deputy Commissioners, Service Managers, and the Director of Business Development are due Tuesday, March 9th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Assistant Managers, Committee Chairs, and Co-ordinators (Communications, Foodbank, and Extended Child Care) are due Monday, March 15th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Service Staff and Committee Member positions are due Wednesday, March 24th at 16:30.

More specific information about each position is available with the application form.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

Ellen Merrin, Arts '39, talks about her memories of Winnifred Kydd, Dean of Women 1934-1939, with 14 other Queen's alumnae in the Tower Room of Ban Righ Hall. The women met on Sunday, February 14 to share their perspectives on the history of the dean of women.

PHOTO BY LIJUAN KIM

Continued from page 15

Ban Righ Hall apartment alongside women students, and prevailed over an afternoon tea and formal dinner each day. Manners and decorum were paramount, and Ban Righ was considered the centre of women at Queen's. Men were not permitted to enter the residence, and women had to sign themselves in and out.

"What we've seen over this century is a remarkable trajectory of women's place in society, and certainly at Queen's the dean of women played an important role in that."

— Maureen Garvie, author of a book on the Dean of Women

During Kydd's tenure as dean, some male students broke into Ban Righ Hall as a frosh week escapade. The so-called "pajama raid" of the residence, including Dean Kydd's room, led to a special meeting of the Alma Mater Society whereby student leaders declared "no more pajama raids." Dean Kydd was sent a letter of apology and a bouquet of flowers.

Four women at the meeting said they remembered Dean Kydd, and offered recollections of the woman they knew.

Ellen Merrin, Arts '39, came to Queen's as a freschette in 1934. She went to visit Dean Kydd after failing three of her four fall-term exams. "It was comforting to speak with her," she said. "I felt I could never fail again... I realized you couldn't just be there for a good time."

"I remember her being quite elegant and fashionable, perhaps room much for Queen's at the time," said Bea Corbett, Arts '44 and MA '95. "For some of the unsophisticated freschettes she could be very intimidating... I thought she was simply gorgeous."

Several alumnae shared memories of Alice Vibert Douglas, Dean of Women from 1939 to 1959. Dean Douglas was most remembered for her unwinding humour.

Kathy Perkins, Arts '53, said that Dean Douglas often spoke in puns which made students laugh. At an afternoon tea for freschettes, she encouraged the students to engage in "social intercourse" while at Queen's.

Maureen Garvie reads excerpts from her upcoming book, tentatively named Guardians of Co-education.

PHOTO BY LILIAN KIM

She suggested that sick students "get into bed with a hot lemon;" 'lemon' soon became slang for 'man' among the students.

When one student in Ban Righ became pregnant, Dean Douglas called her in to speak with her. "If the girl was indeed pregnant she had to leave the university," said Perkins. The student told the dean that she was pregnant, but it was not her fault. She blamed the swimming pool, where men had been swimming without bathing suits in gym class. The student said she was accidentally impregnated when she went for a swim after the men had left. Dean Douglas sent an order that the pool be drained, and it was so done in 1956.

Others spoke of the more caring, thoughtful side of Dean Douglas. Marie Jeanna Coleman explained how after a female student's father died in Africa, Dean Douglas arranged for the student to spend time away from the university to rest and recoup. "It was very matter-of-fact, like she was. She cared a great deal, but she didn't show it very much."

Douglas also started up service to help women with the transition to life at Queen's. She set up "the listening post," an informal counselling service available to women three afternoons per week. The listening post disbanded once Queen's Student Counselling became more established on campus.

Garvie also read alumnae memories about Dean Beatrice Bryce. "I realized that Dean Bryce always knew what her girls were doing," wrote Gwen Pace Paterson, Arts '65, who said the dean seemed to know when students' assignments were due and when the girls were home for the weekend. "What a memory she had."

Sarah Jane Nee Connell, Arts '66, recalled the Dean of Women presiding over formal meals at Ban Righ Hall, where all students dressed in heels and a skirt. "The highlight of the year was when you were asked to sit at her table for dinner," she wrote.

Dean Evelyn Reid placed an emphasis on enriching students' cultural experiences, said Garvie. The dean organized concerts, art exhibits, and plays for students. She also started the French-only residence floors at Victoria Hall, and created French-speaking tables in the dining room to encourage women to practice the language.

Garvie explained that Dean Reid had to work hard to implement the French floors. "There was quite a bit of resistance, not among the students, but among the powers that be," she said. The conversation included reference to seven deans, spanning more than 70 years of Queen's history. While the women had different experiences as Queen's students, and had very different relationships with the deans, they shared a sense of closeness with the Dean of Women as a symbolic and literal figure at the university.

Garvie suggested that the history of the deans of women reflects the history of women at Queen's and in post-secondary education in Canada. "What we've seen over this century is a remarkable trajectory of women's place in society and certainly at Queen's the dean of women played an important role in that," she said.

Merrin called the dean of women "the linchpin in the history of Queen's."

She spoke of the Levana Society, a women's association of which every female student was a member between the years 1888 and 1967. A student in her second year at Queen's would sponsor a first-year female student, and would accompany her to the traditional Candlelighting ceremony The Alma Mater Society became co-educational in 1966, and the Levana Society was disbanded the following year.

She blamed her pregnancy on the swimming pool, where men had been swimming without bathing suits in gym class. Dean Douglas sent an order that the pool be drained, and it was so done in 1956.

Merrin also referred to the merging of the Alumnae Association with the Alumni Association in 1990. There is now simply a standing committee on women in the Alumni Association.

Merrin said the loss of the Dean of Women position in 1996 was symbolic of the changes in women's status at the university that she has observed since her graduation in 1939.

"There is a tremendous history," she said. "This century has been a very significant one for women."

Garvie said The Guardians of Co-education will be "a piece of Queen's history, and certainly an interesting read."

The book will be launched this fall alongside a scholarship founded in the name of the women deans.

"It's a triumph," said Garvie of the project's realization. "It's been a real eye-opener to me what a group of dedicated women can achieve when they set out to it."

Mixed reactions over the Dean of Women's end

Continued from page 15

Young said that the organizational structure at Queen's makes it difficult for any individual to have a broad influence on policy-making. "There isn't a lot of central coordination, and that makes it really hard for equity work, because everything has to be done nine or 10 times instead of once," she said. "The few times I tried to make proposals to the Deans, what I was told was 'that's the Dean's job.'"

The incident galvanized the campus. The Dean of Women ordered that the signs come down, and feminist students sat in on Principal David Smith's office in protest. Overall said the Dean of Women played a big role in the incident, on both symbolic and literal levels. "I know that for those students the Dean of Women was very important just for the legitimacy of their own struggle," she said. "I was really proud of our women students. I think they were very brave."

The "No Means Yes" incident occurred just months before the Montréal Massacre at the École Polytechnique, where 14 female students were murdered for being women. Overall said the presence of the Dean of Women was a comfort to women students in 1989, in what was "a very, very heavy fall."

PAMELA DICKEY-YOUNG was Dean of Women from 1993 to 1996, and is the only former dean who remains at Queen's. Young is now department head of religious studies.

Young has mixed memories about her tenure as dean of women. She indicated that the Dean had very few clear responsibilities, and was often not able to exercise any significant authority on women's issues.

"The biggest challenge was a system that didn't want to change, when it was my job to change it," said Young.

Young said it was never made clear to her what the Dean of Women was supposed to do. "Some of the women in the alumnae wanted the Dean of Women to be the figurehead women," she said. "Others would have been happy had I continued to see one student at a time, one faculty member at a time. But in the absence of that, no one knew what they wanted me to do."

"In the end it was never clear to me what the Dean of Women was supposed to do, except 'promote equity.'"

Young agreed that having a woman in a highly visible and static administrative role is an important part of legitimizing women's issues at the university, but cautioned not to overestimate the power of an opinion.

"I'm not as naive as I once was about how much you can accomplish with a voice," she said. "Having an opinion is important, but it won't by itself solve equity problems... advice is only as good as the person taking it."

While recognizing the symbolic importance of having a Dean of Women on campus, Young believes such a position must be backed up with real authority or power to initiate change.

"As somebody who occupied the place-keeper for women symbol, I found it, for myself, not a very satisfying role," she said. "It felt like I was keeping a spot warm for women without really being allowed to advance women's interests in the university in the way I hoped to."

Young believes there is a need for women at Queen's to receive counselling on women's issues, but does not believe that a Dean is the best person to deal with these concerns.

"More and more, there was good feminist counselling available to women at Student Counselling... Do we need a dean to do the kind of counselling that historically the Dean of Women had done? I'm not convinced," she said. During her tenure as Dean, Young paid for a feminist counsellor to work one more day a week at Student Counselling.

"I think Mary Margaret [Dauphinee] and I would agree that as important as one-woman-at-a-time's problems are, dealing with the problems one woman at a time is like a band-aid solution to a systemic problem."

"What happens when it's not just a personal crisis, but the personal crisis is in part created and exacerbated by a system that deals with men and women differently?"

"My role is to identify where the gaps are, and to find ways to fill them... If I find that there is a gap with respect to women's issues, I will address that."

— Mary Margaret Dauphinee, Queen's Equity Advisor

Young agreed that having a woman in a highly visible and static administrative role is an important part of legitimizing women's issues at the university, but cautioned not to overestimate the power of an opinion.

"I'm not as naive as I once was about how much you can accomplish with a voice," she said. "Having an opinion is important, but it won't by itself solve equity problems... advice is only as good as the person taking it."

While recognizing the symbolic importance of having a Dean of Women on campus, Young believes such a position must be backed up with real authority or power to initiate change.

"As somebody who occupied the place-keeper for women symbol, I found it, for myself, not a very satisfying role," she said. "It felt like I was keeping a spot warm for women without really being allowed to advance women's interests in the university in the way I hoped to."

YOUNG IDENTIFIED several major issues related to women on campus, which she feels need to be addressed at the systemic level.

Regarding academics, Young said the university needs to look at curricular issues such as the reasons why women are not choosing some fields, and the balance of men's and women's perspectives in course content related to literature, history and philosophy.

"We don't really have any policies that would allow a student to talk to a faculty member about what's missing in a course," she said.

Young did, however, say Queen's has made some large advances in the field of employment equity in recent years. "I think we've come a long way on those issues, but we need to keep attending to them or we may fall back into old patterns," she said. "Today we have several women deans, and five years from now we may have none again."

She also referred to child care and safety issues as needing continuous attention, as issues which differentially affect women on campus.

"I still think that women experience the university differently than men do," she said. "Although we've come an awfully long way, women are still not normative citizens at this university. We need to keep asking ourselves: what does it mean to be not the norm?"

In January 1995 she retired from the position of Dean of Women to be effective January 1996. However, following her resignation "nothing happened for 11 months."

Young left the post the next January amid uncertainty regarding the future of the Dean of Women. "When we closed up the office in July of 1996 we didn't know there was going to be an equity advisor, we didn't know what was going

Continued on next page

FRONTIER COLLEGE
QUEEN'S STUDENTS FOR LITERACY
PRESENTS...

THE 4th ANNUAL SPELLING BEE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 10
7 pm
CLARK HALL PUB

COME OUT TO SEE THE JOURNAL and GOLDEN WORDS
BATTLE FOR THE SPELLING BEE CHAMPIONSHIP TITLE !!!

Cave... C-A-V-E...
Cave.

Oh, sure... I'll probably get 'Australopithecus'

Primitive spelling bees

St. Patrick's Day
wed march 17
the count down is on...
only 12 more days to practice..

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
$2.49 sunday breakfast
sun-tues
1/2 price wings<sup>1</sup>
wed
1/2 price nachos<sup>1</sup>
(after 2pm with beverage purchase)

LIVE BANDS
Fri Mar 5
Madcaps
Groovy
funky, bluesy R & R

South Pacific Trailfinders

'Odyssey Travel is your South Pacific Travel Expert'

- ✓ Oz/Kiwi Experience
- ✓ VIP Backpackers
- ✓ YHA Cards
- ✓ Air passes
- ✓ Bus/Rail passes
- ✓ Computer visas
- ✓ Tours-Connections, Contiki, Trek

Long Reach	$1979
via Europe, Asia
Coral Route	$1799
via South Pacific
Boomerang	$1929
via Asia
Circle Pacific	$2499
via South Pacific, Asia
Aussie Special	$1499

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553
Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE
Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

the Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN TIL 1am.

Sweet combo
Cheesecake & Cappuccino
$4.95

SURGEON GENERAL'S WARNING: Ignoring This Advertisement Will Cost You Money!

WEDNESDAYS = NEVER ANY COVER

THURSDAYS & SATURDAYS = 99 ALL NIGHT

FRIDAYS = WIN OUT OF THE Blue

DON'T WAIT UNTIL IT'S TOO LATE, ACT NOW AND ACT FAST.

Trasheteria

Continued from last page

to happen with the position," she said. "All the files were sent to the archives. There was nothing, until Mary Margaret started."

In November of 1995 a senate committee was struck to review the position of the Dean of Women. Among the members on the committee were Associate Dean of Arts and Science Roberta Hamilton and Law professor Virginia Bartley, who both later resigned in protest. The committee recommended to abolish the position, and Principal Bill Leggett accepted the recommendation and announced the end of the Dean of Women to Senate on May 23, 1996.

Upon hearing word of the intended end to the Dean of Women, more than 30 faculty women mobilized to prevent the change. They gathered signatures on petitions from both female and male faculty, and met with Principal Leggett at a meeting to express their concerns.

Overall said this activism by faculty women was based on several substantial issues about the status of women and the importance of strong representation of women in senior administration. However, some tried to diminish the significance of the women's concerns. "I think there was an attempt to depict us as overly-traditional, or something," she said. "It wasn't just a tiny little old fashioned minority that was protesting this."

Many Canadian universities have done away with their

Deans of Women in recent years, many on the premise that we have reached a point as a society where a Dean of Women is not needed. "I think that's false," responded Overall. "We haven't gotten to that point yet."

"By retaining the Dean of Women, an institution signals that it is very concerned with the status of women faculty, staff and students," she said. "I would rather have the equity advisor in addition to the Dean of Women."

Since the loss of the Dean of Women, Overall said faculty women are carrying a heavier load.

"We have had to pick up the pieces, for students in particular," she said, adding that women faculty tend to do much of the counselling with individual students previously done by the Dean of Women.

When Overall was hired as an Associate Dean, she was told by Arts and Science Dean Bob Silverman that she would have to fulfill some of the roles previously played by the Dean of Women.

"The challenges of being a woman at Queen's have not gone away," said Overall. "It's clear that the needs are still there."

Overall attributes the muted debate about the status of women at Queen's to the extra strain placed on women faculty since the loss of the Dean of Women. "A lot of women are so overburdened right now... It's harder to have time for political organization and advocacy," she said.

"It's a surprisingly quiescent time right now, regrettably so." Overall said the current cohort of students are not aware about the significance of the Dean of Women. "The alumnae know what's been lost, women faculty members know what's been lost."

"It's hard for me not to feel discouraged on this issue."

"The challenges of being a woman at Queen's have not gone away... It's clear that the needs are still there."

— Christine Overall

Principal Leggett said the decision to make the new position an Equity Advisor, and not a Dean of Equity, was made in order to make equity issues part of everyone's portfolio. He suggested that when there is a dean responsible for something, everyone else tends to leave it to them to solve, which is not appropriate for equity issues.

Leggett said that women's issues continue to be discussed at the senior administrative level, by both male and female faculty. "They're certainly being brought forward regularly," he said. Leggett also said that other under-represented groups on campus have been raised more frequently since 1996.

Leggett said that it is too early to judge the success of the Equity Advisor position in addressing problems on campus. "We need to give the position and the individual time to assess what the needs are," he said.

Leggett does not regret the decision to eliminate the Dean of Women from Queen's, and said the move has helped Queen's re-focus its equity efforts to the whole community. "I believe the course we took was necessary," said Leggett. "I just believe very, very strongly that the issue of equity for everyone is very important."

The principal said, however, that he has reverence for the fact that many were upset over the loss of the Dean of Women. "I do regret the anxiety and the pain that was associated with the change," he said. "It was a deep and important and powerful tradition here."

MARY MARGARET DAUPHINEE came to Queen's last September, leaving a position as employment equity officer at Dalhousie University. A jovial and friendly woman, Dauphinee said she has received much support in her first six months, particularly from Principal Leggett. "Everyone has been very, very kind. If anyone had any problems they did show up on my doorstep."

Dauphinee does not believe the Queen's Equity Advisor is meant to fill in for the Dean of Women. "I am not here to replace the Dean of Women," she said. "I would not have applied to be the Dean of Women had the position been available. I see my position as very different from the Dean's position."

For Dauphinee, the essential difference between her role as advisor and the dean position is her emphasis on policy development and change. While the

Dean of Women was primarily occupied with one-on-one counselling with women, the Equity Advisor is focused on developing strategies to make equity a priority for all under-represented groups on campus. "My role is to identify where the gaps are, and to find ways to fill them," said Dauphinee. "If I find that there is a gap with respect to women's issues, I will address that."

"I am not a counsellor. I am a policy person," she added. "Certainly I would never turn anyone away... but if I devoted all my time to counselling, I couldn't get at the systemic issues." Dauphinee suggested that several other services on campus, including the Human Rights Office and Student Counselling, could fulfill the need for counselling, adding "certainly I would never turn anyone away."

As for future initiatives in the equity office, Dauphinee said she is busy meeting with groups and trying to identify what is needed at Queen's. She is in many ways starting from scratch; the office she moved into was bare, as the files from the Dean of Women's Office were moved to the archives when Young left the post in 1996.

Dauphinee said she hopes to make equity well-known on campus, and particularly among students. She said she has plans to provide several student jobs in the Equity Office. "I want to fill this office with students, to provide opportunities for them to learn and to get the word out about equity," she said.

SPORTS & FITNESS

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

By NEATE SAGE

ANOTHER BIG 'OH'

March 6 is the deadline for the Montreal Expos to buy out team President Claude Brochu, bring in new supporters, and continue the plan for a new downtown stadium. Brochu is discouraged because he doesn't believe the stadium plan has any chance of succeeding without government help. Recently both the provincial and federal governments have declined to offer aid. If no help can be found, the latest rumours have the team being moved to either Washington or Virginia in time for the 2000 season. With a strong nucleus of young players, the Expos are considered to be a strong contender within two years, if they can perhaps get off to a quick start, maybe attendance would rise and the team can save itself — without the government.

Conventional hockey wisdom is that strong goaltending is essential for postseason success, and this was verified once again last weekend, by Queen's Golden Gaels goalie Jason Skilnick, The Queen's Journal Athlete of the Week.

The first-year economics student earned the honour after backstopping the Gaels to a series triumph over the University of Toronto Blues in the OUA Mideast division semifinals last week, including a quadruple-overtime 3-2 Queen's victory.

"It was something that was great to be part of," said Skilnick, from Melville, Saskatchewan, of his first playoff exposure with Queen's. "It was my first time in a game that long, and it was a complete team effort."

Skilnick, with a 1.11 GAA and .963 save percentage in the series with Toronto, certainly merits special attention; Gaels' Head Coach Chris MacDonald views Skilnick's effort versus Varsity as the culmination of a season-long process.

"Since our last home weekend, Jason's gotten better and better," MacDonald said. "Right now, the puck looks really big to him. He'll be the first to tell you he had an up-and-down first half to the season, but he's done a great job gathering himself as the season's gone on."

"My confidence has snowballed recently," said Skilnick. "With goaltending, if you have relatively good success for three or four games in a row, you begin to really believe that you'll play well."

At the same time, Skilnick acknowledges that his improved play has been facilitated by an improvement in the play of the Gaels in their own end of the ice. "We've had increased our emphasis on guys picking up their man more consistently, to cut down on the number of quality shots and rebounds we're giving up."

The recent confluence of confident goaltending and astute defence (and timely offence) has allowed MacDonald to bestow high praise on his rookie netminder, likening Skilnick's confidence and focus to veteran NHL net-minder Glenn Healy, whom MacDonald played with at Western Michigan University in the 1980s. "The way he's playing now reminds me of how we felt with Glenn in the net... he resembles him more and more in terms of confidence. He's also a good student of the game and he competes very hard in practice."

"Goaltending is a position of preparation," said Skilnick, in reference to recounting a crucial overtime save against Toronto, where he committed grand larceny on Varsity's Shawn Holloway. "I really don't have any idea how the puck came in front of the net, but I went down and stacked the pads and it hit me and I covered up."

After an often trying regular season, the Gaels begin the OUA Mideast division final today in Guelph. The Gaels will rely on Skilnick to give them an opportunity to beat the first-place Gryphons.

Gaels' face tough playoff test

By ADAM KAMINSKY

'SUPER' MARIO SAVES DAY? Former Pittsburgh Penguins star Mario Lemieux, who is owed $31 million from his former team, wants to rescue it from bankruptcy. Lemieux is trying to raise money and gather investors in order to assume the team debts and acquire control. He has said he is willing to exchange some of the money he is owed in exchange for equity in the team. The Penguins owe various creditors over $125 million, which is more than what the franchise is valued at. Judge Bernard Markowitz has a hearing set for March 19 and has threatened to place the team in receivership unless he sees a plan for reorganization.

North American rinks). "Guelph is really built to play on this large rink and they have a lot more experience on it," said Cunningham, who mentioned that Queen's is trying to offset this advantage by practising at the larger Kinsman ice surface in Catawaqui Township.

With game one coming up on Friday night, the Gaels will have had five days off since their exhausting playoff series, while the Gryphons enjoyed a first-round bye, and thus will not have played in almost two weeks.

Coach Cunningham feels the varying layoffs portend well for his team. "[It] may work to our advantage. Our physical conditioning is pretty awesome. We've been at that playoff intensity level and they haven't," he said.

On the other hand, Cunningham is quick to point out that Guelph has been along this playoff road before. "They are a proven entity at this time of year," he said. "They have great goaltending in Chris Gowan and a solid forward in Paul Rosebush, who contributed heavily in their previous OUA championship."

Along with Rosebush, who was a second team OUA East all-star, Mike Van Volson, Jamie Boyd and Marcel Kars are all players the Gaels must watch carefully.

Queen's also features an extremely talented line-up, but one that is seriously depleted. With assistant captains Damien Gilbert and Darcy O'Shea definitely out for the series and first-team all-star and leading scorer Rob Mailloux day-to-day, the team will enter hostile territory undermanned.

nessed during the deciding game of the first-round series.

With the injury bug biting, more pressure to perform will fall onto the shoulders of talented centre Jonathan Bishop, enigmatic forward Dave Gallo and second-team all-star defenceman Wes Booker, who is logging unbelievable amounts of ice time. The squad has also been bolstered by goaltender Jason Skilnick, who won this week's OUA athlete of the week on the strength of a 1.11 goals against average in the playoffs to date.

The team realizes that they are facing a tall order in competing on the road against a traditional CIAU hockey power.

"We know that it will be really tough with all three games on the road. We have a lot of character on this team, so we can overcome it," said Cunningham.

Captain Scott Richardson, who scored the first-round series winning overtime goal, feels that the team is ready to play.

"I think we're confident. We're happy with the win versus University of Toronto, but we are looking further. With a healthy team, we like our chances," he said.

With games on Friday, Saturday and possibly Sunday, the Gaels are going to have to get on the Gryphons early in the series, or it will be a long ride home.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
 •The government would fire striking CBC workers and we could all watch HNIC.
 •Mike Tyson would remember to take his 'happy pills' before watching television.
 •For $250 million the Air Canada Centre would have good ice.

SERIES AT A GLANCE
 Guelph University (11-10-5)
 Queen's University (5-14-7)
 Guelph leads season series 1-0-1
 All three playoff games are in Guelph.

Gryphons to watch
 Paul Rosebush — all-star forward with scoring touch
 Mike Van Volson — a solid offensive defenceman.
 Mark Gowan — goalie and a key to Guelph's success.
 Marcel Kars — a 6'5" 228 pound forward. Enough said.

Gaels to watch
 Rob Mailloux — leading scorer, but is doubtful with a stomach injury.
 Wes Booker — all-star defenceman who is a real workhorse.
 Jonathan Bishop — the dynamic Gael must provide offence.
 Jason Skilnick — goalie must continue his great play

"It's like we have a six-shooter with two bullets in it," Cunningham quipped. The assistant coach was also quick to credit Mailloux, who has torn abdominal muscles, with one of the "greatest athletic feats with serious injury" he has ever wit-

HOCKEY PLAYOFF MADNESS

Friday @ 7:30 p.m. Game 1 of the OUA Mideast final vs. Guelph
 Saturday @ 7:30 p.m. Game 2 vs. Guelph
 Sunday @ 2 p.m. Game 3 vs. Guelph (if necessary)

STAY TUNED TO CFRC 101.9 FM FOR LIVE COVERAGE

PRESTIGE PORTRAITS BY LIFETOUCH

Graduation Portraits

Monday, March 8th to Friday, March 12th 1999

BOOK YOUR SITTING NOW!
 (Only 1 week remaining).

For Appointment Phone: 533-2737

Location: Red Room of Kingston Hall

Sit Fee: $10.00

Jays open camp with questions

ANALYSIS

BY CHRIS CARSON

The following table lists the top 33 pool players for the period ended Monday, March 1. All stats are compiled based upon those published in the Globe & Mail. Any errors (spelling or otherwise) should be brought to the attention of 4rnd@qlink. The contest ends with the results published in the March 12 Journal.

Total Name	Faculty/Year
457 Chad Rawn	Arts '98
453 Thomas Leung	Comm '00
450 Peter Gillespie	Arts '99
445 Ryan Culhane	Arts '01
443 Ken Hawkins	Arts '00
442 Stephen Leung	Sci '99
441 Stephen Raper	Arts '01
441 Sarah Crosbie	Arts '00
437 Scott Snowden	Sci '01
436 Dave Gilbert	Arts '02
436 James Prentice	Sci '01
436 Sergiy Kolosov	Arts '00
435 Paul Kim	Arts '02
434 Seth Cullen	Arts '99
433 Dan Lior	Grad
433 Jeff Child	Arts '00
432 Angelina Whiteman	Arts '00
431 Tara Harrison	Arts '02
431 Sean Springer	Arts '00
430 Rick Schipping	Arts '02
430 Adam Kaminsky	Arts '99
430 Sheldon S. Swick	Sci '00
430 Ceilidh Templeton	Sci '01
429 Corbin Puhl	Arts '00
428 Dev Patel	Sci '01
428 Allison Malloy	Sci '01
424 Saylo Lam	Sci '99
423 Mike Lloyd	Sci '99
423 Kevin Cymbalisky	Sci '02
423 Irish Kirkwood	Sci '01
422 Aaron Collins	Arts '99
420 Ron Death	Comm '01
420 Dave Lanovaz	ConEd '99

After a tumultuous off-season, the Toronto Blue Jays have headed south for training camp with a disposition to match the Florida weather: sunny. The squad is eager to put the winter's problems behind them, and they have taken significant strides to do so.

The headaches began for the Blue Jays brass in November, when manager Tim Johnson admitted that he'd lied to his players about fighting in Vietnam. This brought Johnson's credibility into question just one year after being carefully hand-picked by General Manager Gord Ash. Reports suggest Johnson was asked to resign, but he pleaded for a second chance and the team complied.

Soon after Johnson's confession, Jays' ace Roger Clemens demanded a trade. The five-time Cy Young Award winner said he wanted to play for a contender, but as trade talks progressed, the pitcher's ulterior motives surfaced. He was seeking a restructured contract in the neighbourhood of $15 million annually to replace his outdated $8 million salary.

Just before spring training began, Ash granted Clemens his wish, pulling the trigger on a blockbuster deal with the dominating New York Yankees. In return, the Jays received Yankees' star David Wells, reliever Graeme Lloyd, and second baseman rookie Homer Bush. With Clemens' power over any deal, the Jays were lucky to have received such a quality package in return. Clemens vetoed at least two prior deals the Jays had made involving him because the teams he was destined for did not, according to Clemens, have a viable playoff shot.

Despite his obvious ability as a pitcher, by off-loading the disgruntled star the squad has solidified its team chemistry — an intangible that the New York Yankees proved to be a key ingredient for success last season. Even after this tumultuous off-season, the Jays have reason for optimism as they embark on the '99 campaign. The team finished last year with an impressive 88 wins and three games out of a Wild Card berth.

The Jays' hopes in this year will be supported by a strong pitching staff. In Wells, they have an adequate replacement for Clemens, and the fact that he's a left-hander is a huge plus. One preseason forecast magazine has pegged Wells as the favourite to win the 1999 Cy Young Award. He will be joined in the rotation by a healthy Pat Hentgen, ex-Padre Joey Hamilton, rookie sensation Kelvim Escobar, and possible future ace Chris Carpenter.

In the bullpen, the addition of Lloyd will give the Jays another effective left-hander in the bullpen to complement lefty Dan Plesac. Inconsistent Robert Person must prove that he can be strong in the role of closer.

The Jays' young outfield should be productive. Shawn Green blossomed last season with 35 home runs, 35 stolen bases, and 100 RBIs last season, but must lower his embarrassingly high strikeout total. Shannon Stewart should ignite the offence, improving on his 51 stolen bases of last year. After an outstanding season in winter ball, management is expecting big numbers from centerfield phenom Jose Cruz Jr.

The team's infield could be stronger. The addition of Bush might be the answer at second base. He's a speedy young player, who Ash describes as 'feisty' for the grit and effort he puts into his game. Newcomer Joey Cora and utility-man Craig Grebeck will challenge Bush for the starting job. Veteran Tony Fernandez will be responsible for the hot corner and prospect Tom Evans or free-agent signee Willie Greene backing him up. The Jays are waiting for Alex Gonzalez to improve his offensive statistics as the starting shortstop. The one lock in the infield is superstar first baseman Carlos Delgado.

At the DH spot, the team hopes that veterans Cecil Fielder and Geronimo Berroa will resurrect their careers as the now-departed Jose Canseco did a year ago.

The Jays should still be in the thick of the playoff hunt once Homecoming Weekend rolls around. Clemens doesn't know what he's missing.

In the game

Men's rugby

During Reading Week, the Queen's men's rugby army invaded Ireland and conquered the three teams they played. Their 1999 Irish Tour included victories against Colraige (47-0, 22-3), Galway (28-13) and Donegal (18-8, 11-0). Special mention goes out to Peter Kort, Andrew Thompson, Roger Tuminciri, Emmet Connelly and Ed Johnson who were named 'players of the tour.'

Women's volleyball

This past week the OUA announced its 1998-1999 first and second team female volleyball all-stars. Making the first team middle was Queen's Kristine Spekkens and Lindsay Barrett was named second team left side. Cheers to the two cornerstones of the women's volleyball team.

Track & Field

On February 26, the Gaels' Track and Field team travelled to the University of Toronto in their final tune-up for the CIAU championships. Nicole Clarke (20 pound weight throw and shot put) won two silver medals, and Mike Thorne (shot put) and Mike Melaney (35 pound weight throw) each won silver medals. Chris Booth won a silver in the 1000m and as part of the men's 4x800m relay along with Drew Freeman, Bob McGill and Graydon Raymer. Raymer also won a bronze medal in the 600m. Jennifer Greenaway (20 pound weight throw), Julia Thomas (600m), Nimrod Major (high jump) and the men's 4x200m relay team won bronze medals as well.

Wrestling

At the 1999 CIAU wrestling championships, three Queen's athletes finished with respectable results. Donavan Bedi finished fourth in the 76 kilogram category, Tara Feeney finished fourth in the 61 kilogram category and Lara Bozabalain finished seventh. Congratulations to these athletes for their competitive performances.

Intramural corner

Queen's Intramurals will be holding an open forum for BEWS hockey on March 18 at 5:30 p.m. in room 205 at the PEC. The goal of the meeting will be for current players, officials and administration to suggest ideas and offer solutions to improving the Queen's Intramural hockey program. Everyone is welcome to attend.

The intramural season is coming to a close which means nominations for major individual awards are being accepted. The Silver Whistle Award is for contribution to the program as a referee or convenor. The BEWIC Cup is awarded to one male and one female BEWIC participant. WIC participants who have displayed outstanding skill and athletic ability are eligible for the ASUS Award for Athletic Excellence. The Rehab 1986 Award is given to a WIC participant who continually displays sportsmanship, enthusiasm, leadership and fairness. The PHESA Award will be given to the WIC participant who has significantly contributed to the intramural program over her years at Queen's. BEWS participants are eligible to win the Edwards Trophy for outstanding BEWS contribution. The monthly RAP Award nominations for BEWS and WIC participants will also be accepted. Nomination forms can be picked up and submitted to the intramural office in room 201A. The deadline for nominations is March 19.

The deadline for the BEWIC Open Volleyball tournament is March 15. The tournament will take place March 27 and will be limited to 12 teams.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

102 plays Fizzle out

Fizz, Yma Dream and Lice end with little pop

PLAY REVIEW

BY VIRGINIA WIGMORE

As university students we are constantly being challenged to question reality, alter paradigms and reject what is considered to be normal or true. Sometimes this approach succeeds and new ideas emerge, but more often than not it only results in meaningless babble.

Unfortunately, this seems to be the case with this year's last run of Studio 102 plays.

Studio 102 plays are student run productions and in this last group of shows, two of the three plays are written by Queen's students.

Playing it up: Students perform last plays in the Studio 102 series.

PHOTO BY GEOFF ASHENHURST

I found that Lice consisted mainly of philosophical drivel, simply leaving me waiting for the end.

The first play is entitled Fizz and is a compilation of the efforts of the two writer/directors, Lenny Epstein and Liam Karry, as well as the actors. Epstein and Karry's basic goal was to produce a play that looked cool, and this objective was achieved by employing various lighting techniques and sounds from the band Bumble Puppy. The end product is a confusing and disjointed commentary on pop culture, alienation, bureaucracy, consumption, capitalism and communism. There is, however, an attention grabbing opening scene involving partial nudity, fondling, a very long kiss and Mr. Rogers — to show a statement about the excessive amounts of sex we are exposed to daily.

The second play, titled Yma Dream was written by Thomas Meehan and directed by Gregg Wade. Not only was this the shortest of the three plays, but it was also the only one that was not written by a Queen's student. The premise of this play involves a young man who is hosting a cocktail party for Yma Sumack, the four octave Peruvian soprano, in his dreams. There is a twist however. He is unsure of who he invited to this soirée, so when the doorbell starts to ring, distress ensues. Kudos must be given to the lead actor for being able to recite the tongue twisting lines with apparent effortlessness. It was this light-hearted and amusing play that made seeing the Studio 102 production worthwhile.

The third play, Lice, was written and directed by Ivan Satori. Satori wrote this play for an OAC project and when the play was chosen for the production he decided to see his vision through to completion by directing it. Lice is a take on the play Waiting for Godot and as such, the two main characters sit discussing such topics as what is reality, what is knowledge and is it possible to express emotions while waiting for something to happen. Personally, I found that Lice consisted mainly of philosophical drivel, simply leaving me waiting for the end.

It was this light-hearted and amusing play that made seeing the Studio 102 production worthwhile.

Please see Travoltas on page 22

High fever

Travoltas slide at AJ's

CONCERT REVIEW

BY DIMITRIOS TSOOTS

I find it strange that, at AJ's of all places, I would be inspired to fondly reminisce about the airbands at my high school. Every year, members from all the social castes would drop their walls and get together to ham it up as flamboyantly dressed versions of Kiss, the Village People and the Spice Girls.

The show opened with a disco-beat remix of the Star Wars theme song, with coloured lights flashing and rotating off of the disco ball over the dance floor.

The inspiration for such nostalgia was the Travoltas, "Canada's premiere disco band," whose act consisted entirely of covers from hit songs of the seventies.

Please see Travoltas on page 22

Rotate this!

Julian Lennon Photograph Smile Columbia Records

BY STEFAN MURRAY

His surname isn't the only thing that Julian Lennon borrowed from his father John. John's eldest bi-passed innovation on his newest release Photograph Smile, and instead sampled some Abbey Road and Magical Mystery Tour into a 14-song release.

From his soft vocals and poppy progressions to the string and piano heavy ballads, Julian's effort is definitely not entirely his own. You can even hear the piano notes of "Jealous Guy" buried in the melody of the track "I should have known." Fortunately, Julian picked the right person from which to frame his style, and the album is actually quite good.

The first track "Day after Day" is the model of a perfect ballad-pop song which sets the Beatle-esque tone and song-writing standard for the rest of the album. "Crucified" displays Julian's vocal range and the harmonies on "I Don't Wanna Know" and "Good to be Lonely" will convince even the biggest skeptic that Julian Lennon is an honest and evocative songwriter.

The album is brimming with quality tracks and intelligent, introspective lyrics that highlight the talent of this maturing musician.

The album is brimming with quality tracks and intelligent, introspective lyrics that highlight the talent of this maturing musician.

Photograph Smile is an album that will not set Julian apart by any means but is an ear-opener for those who await the BBC to discover more "lost" sessions.

Paul Westerberg Suicaine Gratification Capitol Records

BY KEN BUTLAND

Overtop a blue background, stuck to the cover of Paul Westerberg's latest, Suicaine Gratification, is what really looks and feels like pieces of masking tape with the artist and title written in black marker.

The CD's front and back covers sport a couple of snazzy "rugged and relaxed" pictures of Paul (one strumming on a 12-string, the other posing on top of a piano) taken by Don Was (from Was (Not Was)), who co-produced and played bass on a bunch of tracks.

Opening up the non-jeweled, little-plasticity-thing-snap-off-proof case, the listener is greeted by nine pictures of Paul and the CD itself. It didn't go anywhere, really. He sounds like Tom Petty and writes like Matthew Sweet (or vice versa, I can't remember which).

Listening to Paul Westerberg is a little like hearing your Dad tell a mediocre joke you've already heard a bunch of times: you humour him because he's old and trying really hard to entertain, but you'd rather be doing something else.

Listening to Paul Westerberg is a little like hearing your Dad tell a mediocre joke you've already heard a bunch of times.

The topside of that analogy is that with Suicaine Gratification you can skip ahead to Shawn Colvin's so-so vocals on "Born For Me" or to "Tears Rolling Up Our sleeves," which Paul mixed and recorded drums, bass, keyboards, vocals and guitars all by his lonesome at home in sunny California.

Other than that, Suicaine Gratification is a shrug.

Mythos Mythos Virgin Records

BY ELI SCHUSTER

Feeling just a little too happy these days, and want to do something about it? Thinking about sado-masochism, but can't quite find the inspiration to whip yourself? Well, look no further loyal readers, I've found something to take care of those mid-winter cheers.

I'm talking about Mythos, self-titled recording of 16 mind-numbingly monotonous and depressing New Age (or at least New Age would appear to be the most appropriate category) tunes. This CD left me wanting

Please see Rotate This on page 25

LAW SCHOOL BOUND?

How to get into Law School and become a Lawyer in Canada and the U.S.

- Why is it a perfect time to apply to law?
- Why are the career prospects for lawyers so exciting for the 21st century?
- Why is it essential to use a different application strategy for each school?
- How can you avoid getting bad letters of references?
- How can personal statements make or break your application?
- U.S. law schools - are they an option?
- U.S. bar admission - is it possible with a Canadian degree?
- Canadian bar admission - is it possible with a U.S. degree?
- The LSAT - are there changes - can you avoid developing bad habits?
- How can you use 2nd, 3rd and 4th years to prepare for law?

The Lecture Of The Year For Future Lawyers!

Who: John Richardson, B.A., LL.B., J.D.
 • Author of Canada's #1 LSAT Prep Guide, Mastering The LSAT

Today, March 5 - 3:30pm - 4:45pm, Mac-Corry B201

Bonus!! Receive a FREE copy of "Guide to Law Schools in

• For a FREE monthly Law School Bound email newsletter and to reserve your copy of "Law Schools in Canada" - send an email to learn@prep.com

The next LSAT is June 14
 "Chance favours the PREPared mind"
 U. of T. - Mastering The LSAT starts May 1 and 8
 U. of T. - Weekend programs start May 1, 8, 15, 22, 29 & June 5

1-800-410-PREP or www.prep.com
 LSAT - GMAT - MCAT - GRE

photography contest

The theme is your choice — anything!
Prizes to be won!

Drop off your pictures to The Queen's Journal (272 Earl St.) with your name, faculty, year and phone number.
Deadline: March 19, 1999

For more info call Alex or James at 533-2800

Staying alive

AJ's goes back to the disco days

Continued from page 21

It's perfectly natural that, at the mention of a live performance of disco music, you would wince and scrunch your nose up in partial disgust. I did too, but the Travoltas really weren't that bad. In fact, they were kind of fun.

The show opened with a disco-beat remix of the Star Wars theme song, with coloured lights flashing and rotating off of the disco ball over the dance floor.

These die-hards could easily be seen as all were decked out in outrageous retro-closet fashions of polyester clothes that, amazingly, clashed with themselves.

At the end of the song the band strutted onto the purple and silver-streamer stage, and, decked out in shiny, purple and silver, caped and sequined outfits, the two guitarists, two doowop girls, drummer and lead singer got the small, but enthusiastic, crowd going with pumping, excitable renditions of "Staying Alive," "Macho Man," and "Freak Out," to name a few.

Playing these songs, it was obvious that the band had a lot of experience performing. Each rendition sounded, to my untrained ear, to be very close to the originals, with enduring drum beats and guitar picks, and the CD-quality sound of the lead singer and doowop girls.

With each new song, the audience was spurred on to slowly migrate from the upper levels down to the dance floor to take part in the kitschy grooves being dished out by the band's fans. These die-hards could easily be seen as all were decked out in outrageous retro-closet fashions of polyester clothes that, amazingly, clashed with themselves.

A few of the concert goers appeared as if they had been old enough to enjoy disco when the majority of the population actually thought it was cool. If their reaction could be used as testament then the Travoltas had done a fairly good job at getting the night rolling. This fact became blaringly obvious to me when when of these older people stumbled over to me and, with liquored spittle, insisted I come back to her table to have some drinks, and keep her, and her friends, company.

A few of the concert goers appeared as if they had been old enough to enjoy disco when the majority of the population had actually thought it was cool.

Later on that night, as I got into a cab with granny, I couldn't help but think how great a show the Travoltas put on, and contemplated if, in 20 years or so, some kitschy group called the Dicaprios would come strutting along to play the hit songs of yesteryear.

Computer Book Sale

All Computer Titles 25% Off

From Monday March 8th until Saturday March 20th

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 - 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

www.campusbookstore.com

UPDATE FROM THE TASK FORCE ON STUDENT FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

At the request of the Principal, The Task Force on Student Financial Assistance, a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Scholarships and Student Aid (SCSSA), was struck last March. The Task Force, which has been meeting, and continues to meet regularly, has concentrated on reviewing Queen's financial assistance as it relates to and impacts upon student recruitment, admission and retention. This review includes a thorough analysis of existing Queen's financial aid programs, in addition to researching government and external student aid packages as they relate to all students undergraduate, post-graduate, full-time and part-time, domestic and international, across all years, programs, disciplines, faculties and schools).

We are currently focusing on defining a set of core principles to guide the future allocation and distribution of Queen's student financial assistance. Ultimately, the work of the committee is expected to help increase the profile of student financial assistance at Queen's in recognition of the significant influence that financial aid may have in achieving the University's mission. As a result of the magnitude and complexity of the above issues, producing a comprehensive report embracing the current state, future prospects, and goals for student financial assistance at Queen's is taking longer than originally anticipated.

The task force is still interested in hearing from the Queen's community if there are any questions, concerns or issues you would like to see considered. Letters may be directed to: Attention: SFA Task Force, University Registrar's Office, Richardson Hall, SFA@post.queensu.ca, Fax: 533-2068. Contributions to the Task Force will be considered in confidence, at the writer's request.

8mm doesn't quite measure up

Director lacks vision with a script that had potential

MOVIE REVIEW

By Keith Gerein

There is a moment in 8mm when the street-wise Max California (Joaquin Phoenix) turns to Tom Welles (Nicolas Cage) and offers this clichéd warning: "You dance with the devil, the devil don't change... the devil changes you." After hearing this, one wonders how many times Satan has done the foxtrot with Andrew Kevin Parker, the film's writer.

Parker, whose previous writing credits include the chilling Se7en, has again produced a dark, disturbing story that attempts to delve into the blackest depths of human depravity.

Se7en worked because director David Fincher chose subtlety over gratuitousness. Although the film was full of graphic images, they were shown in shadows or at the periphery of the screen, and usually only for brief moments. It was a powerful technique that forced the audience to construct the hideous pieces in their own minds, making the overall film experience truly horrifying.

Schumacher has no qualms about ramming repulsive images down the audience's throat. What results is a film that isn't so much horrifying as it is merely grotesque.

Unfortunately, 8mm doesn't have Fincher for a director, it has Joel Schumacher, whose latest claim to fame is warping the Batman series. Unlike Fincher, Schumacher has no qualms about ramming repulsive images down the audience's throat. What results is a film that isn't so much horrifying as it is merely grotesque.

It's too bad that Schumacher chose to take this path, because the gratuitousness really detracts from what is an enjoyably frightening, thought-provoking story. Instead of letting the viewer ponder the dark issues the script presents, 8mm overwhelms us with revolting visuals that seem to be shown for no other reason than shock value.

The main subject of 8mm is the snuff film — pornography that features the real murder of at least one of the participants.

Welles is a private detective commissioned by a rich, elderly woman who finds a reel of 8mm film in her late husband's safe. On the film is a pornographic movie that shows what appears to be the brutal stabbing of a teenage girl at the hands of a masked man. Welles initially dismisses the idea of snuff films as an urban myth, believing all such movies to be fakes. Nevertheless he agrees to watch the old lady's film and is so disgusted, or so intrigued, by what he sees that he accepts the job to determine the film's authenticity.

Welles' investigation soon turns into an unhealthy obsession to find the film's creators and supposed victim. With the help of the likeable Max — a Hollywood sex shop clerk who'd rather read Truman Capote than his store's selection of literature — Welles begins to interact with the creatures who inhabit the realm of underground pornography. As he sinks more and more deeply into this world, we watch as his values and beliefs begin to unravel to a point where he is able to commit his own horrifying acts, blurring the line between good and evil.

There are some truly terrifying characters in this movie. It is through these individuals that Parker's script is able to deliver its most powerful message — evil in the world is not committed by the insane or the sick, but by normal, rational individuals who do it simply because they can and because they enjoy it.

8mm overwhelms us with revolting visuals that seem to be shown for no other reason than shock value.

The story touches on this human connection to the macabre at several points. It even goes so far as to suggest that Welles is confronting some of his own black desires as he becomes increasingly drawn to a world that he can't comprehend, a world where people get off by watching someone get knifed to death.

Cage is quite good as the tormented Welles, but the strongest performances come from the supporting players, especially the savvy Phoenix and Peter Stormare, who portrays the creepy film producer Dino Velvet, a man who specializes in creating pornography that pushes the boundaries of taste and legality.

With solid performances, a provocative script and smooth pacing, one would think that 8mm would be a memorable thriller. That's the sad thing. This could have been a great film, but due to the director's style the most memorable thing about 8mm is the nausea induced by a parade of grotesque images.

For his next project, if Schumacher hopes to make an impression the way that Se7en did, he needs to learn that a little restraint goes a long way.

Caged Animal: Nicolas Cage burns up the screen in 8mm.

Have to cram an entire year's work into six weeks?

Piece o' cake

Or lunch, or Sunday brunch, or dinner, or drinks and nibbles.

It's all brain food. It digests in megabites.

Chez Piggy. Excellent food for crammin' in at a 15% student discount.*

Chez Piggy 68R Princess St. 549-7673 *with ID

FRANSELLY Hair & Esthetics

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St.
549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples.
www.Fransellyhair.com

THE SCREENING ROOM MOVIE THEATRE

(20) Princess St.

Starts Friday, March 5, 1999

SCREEN 1

7:05 p.m. LIFE IS BEAUTIFUL (PG)

9:30 p.m. HURLY BURLY (R)

7:10 p.m. & 9:35p.m. HILARY AND JACKIE (AA)

SCREEN 2

Matinee Sat. & Sun.

4:00 PM. HURLY BURLY (R)

4:15 p.m. HILARY AND JACKIE (AA)

24 Hour Movie line-up 542-6080
www.moviesinkingston.com

Fresh new talent invades Clark

Campus pub gets a taste of student sounds

Hot Wax: Waxing Gibbus warm up the Clark crowd last Wednesday.

CONCERT REVIEW

BY ERIN NICHOLSON

The walls of Clark Hall were shaking this past Wednesday with the sounds of two newly formed bands: Waxing Gibbus and Transient Therapy.

Having performed before only twice, Waxing Gibbus started their stage potation of the evening off with a kicker, performing their newly recorded and released single "Freezing Up."

Their next song "Sister Edsina," a song written by the band's lead singer, Terry Kelly, mixed in gospel vocals, resulting in a hauntingly eerie groove. After speaking with Kelly, I learned what the song was about; it reflected the experiences the band's lead vocalist's father had with nuns as a child.

Andrew Toms, one of the band's six members, brought a strange but well-suited and complementary mix to the music with sampling from his turn tables. The only drawback of Waxing Gibbus' set was the ability of the vocalists to relate with the audience because the amplification was impaired by a shortage to the main speakers. The energy carried by the band was not impaired however, as the songs that followed the first carried the same energy and intensity, and I felt myself smiling and tapping my foot as I listened. The wattness felt may have also been due to the interaction the band had with their audience which was filled with friends and fans.

If you missed the chance to see Waxing Gibbus Wednesday night, you are in luck because Kelly will be interviewed live on CFRC next Tuesday and the band will be competing at Battle of the Bands, held at Alfie's later this month.

Late on in the evening, another crowd, of the Gateful Dead/Phish type streamed into Clark to see and listen to the main attraction, Transient Therapy.

Halfway into the show and to the requests of dedicated fans, the band gave the crowd the gift of their interpretation of Pink Floyd's "echos" and did not disappoint.

Jammin' with songs from artists like Bob Dylan, Floyd and Steve Miller Band to name a few, the band took the crowd.

I was surprised when I learned the band had only been together since September, as they played with such unity and confidence. Having performed at Clark, The Tash and at The Shot previously, Transient Therapy played their last show ever as a group, as some members are graduating, to the great disappointment of die hard fans. Their break-up is unfortunate because with Travel Agent leaving Queen's fans at the end of this year, Transient Therapy would seem to be the ideal substitute. Perhaps the band's first and second year members, Tom and Steve, will stay together and find some new talent to fill the graduating members' places.

The crowd at Clark shared the same view as myself Wednesday night, invigorated and entertained.

Surrounded by the company of a few friends, a pitcher and the jam of two great bands, Clark Hall was not a bad way to spend a Wednesday night.

A Charity Day at the Cocamo

Local bands perform at K-town bars in support of charities

CONCERT REVIEW

BY HEATHER MACDONALD

This past Wednesday the Cocamo Night Club and Brandeas Restaurant played host to the first annual Charity Day. The event consisted of a variety of bands who performed at one of the two locations. All profits earned from the $5 cover charge and from food and drinks was donated to four different charities: Kingston Regional Cancer Centre, Hospice Kingston, KGH Neo-Natal Intensive Care Unit, and In Mission Food Bank Partners. As well, the entire bar and wait staff worked for free, generously donating their wages and gratuities.

Operations Manager for the Cocamo, Enzo Bracciodieta, hoped that the event would raise funds in the $20,000 range. Charity Day was brought to life by primary organizer David Kidd, who took the idea from a similar event in London that he ran last year. Both Kidd and Bracciodieta hope that the Charity Day will continue in Kingston for many years, and believe that in future years, the event will be able to raise more money to give back to the community.

As for the entertainment side of the evening, there were four acts playing at the Cocamo, and five at Brandeas. At the Cocamo the evening got underway at about 9 p.m., starting with a solo performance by Smitty, otherwise known as Jay Smith. Armed only with his guitar and a microphone, Smitty began his selection of original pieces and cover songs from bands including Blue Rodeo (one of his personal favorites), Matchbox 20 and, surprisingly, Van Morrison as well. Although Smitty flew solo, his music filled the room with energy and harmony. Kidd had asked him to perform after seeing one of his regular shows every Sunday and Monday at The Brass. Smith was more than glad to perform in the event, and stated that the event was a great way to raise money for the local charities. While Kidd is currently putting together his first album, he hopes to perform for the event again in the future.

The next band to perform was the Swing Cats, a swing music band and a regular headliner at the Cocamo. This band of nine turned the room upside down with their highly motivational music. Right from the get go their energy could be felt with each note produced, it made me want to dance the night away, however, my dream of becoming the dancing queen soon faded as I realized that I didn't know how to swing dance, especially without a partner. The band played mainly cover songs originating from Colin James and the David Seltzer Band, the hit of the evening being the ever so famous "Jump, Jive, and Wail." In regards to the event itself lead singer from the cats stated that "These type of events are a great way to put back in to the community. As residents of Kingston we may use the settings that charities provide, and by playing here tonight we are helping ourselves as well as others."

Free Agent: Travel Agent was one of the many bands who offered their talents for a good cause.

The third band to perform was Bumble Puppy, another local band. With their entrance the style of music changed to a more alternative tone, somehow taming the excited crowd after the exit of the Swing Cats. The band played mostly original works, that shifted from mellow to exciting. The comic element of their performance was the Kleenex covered microphone, intended to dampen the vocal effects of the songs. While on stage the lead singer said that they felt privileged as a band to be able to perform in the Charity Day, and that it was a great way to serve their community.

The final band to perform was Travel Agent. They closed the evening with an amazing set of songs, uniquely put together to keep the crowd on their feet. As tired as I was after a hard day at the office (okay, school) Travel Agent's performance kept me attentive and entertained the whole time. Travel Agent also expressed their pleasure to perform in such a positive event while on stage, and that they hoped to return one day as well to further help these charities.

Overall the evening was a great success for all. The final amount was not available at the end of the evening, however Bracciodieta felt positive that they reached their goal. Charity Day '99 was a sensational event that will hopefully achieve all of its goals, and continue to do so for years to come.

"Enjoy Career Success Beyond Your Dreams"

Start training for an exciting new career as a MICROSOFT CERTIFIED PROFESSIONAL

Join the over 135 graduates of Loyalist College who have achieved career success beyond their dreams in North America's hot information technology (IT) industry. Last year, Loyalist's Microsoft graduates found great jobs and were earning an average annual salary of $40,000 within 9 months of graduation.

Limited Seats are available in our April 1999, MICROSOFT CERTIFIED SYSTEMS ENGINEER & INTERNET program. NO computer experience necessary! During the past 3 years we've maintained a 0% drop-out rate in these programs.

LOYALIST TRAINING & DEVELOPMENT CENTRE
Helping You Get Where You Want To Go

966-8121 or 1-877-88-SUCCESS

Speaking of art

Modern Fuel presents unique exhibit

PHOTO BY ALEX KRIBNY

ART REVIEW

BY VIRGINIA WIGMORE

Call me conservative in my views, but personally, when I see a room, audio visual equipment and video tapes, I tend to think of an excessive home entertainment system — not art. It didn't help that I was splashed by a passing truck, while walking in the rain on the way to the gallery. However, once I towelled off and learned to ignore the smell of wet duck that was wafting from my sopping feather filled vest, I surprised myself by finding the exhibit fascinating.

In almost every livingroom in Canada there is a television; can this be considered art?

Speaking Volumes is being shown at the Modern Fuel Gallery until March 20. This exhibit is a mediation of art practices shown through artists' projects and documentaries and consists of a collection of 16 hours of documentaries, television spots and magazine clippings. All of this information has been gathered by Clive Robertson and is intended to encourage the viewer to examine the various approaches taken by artists in order to gain publicity and the underlying design behind each of the documentaries. The videos are divided into four sub-categories, which include: art schools and art museums, defining art scenes, art politics and journalism, and, finally, artists and communities.

This exhibit is intriguing not only because of the topics discussed in the videos, but because it raises the question as to what constitutes art.

The first video I watched fell under the category of art politics and journalism, and was an interview conducted in 1995 out between David Turpin, the artist of an exhibit entitled "La crise d'octobre chronology," and CTV's Canada AM. This video clip discussed the censorship of Turpin's work due to the possible impact it may have had on the Quebec Sovereignty Referendum in relation to a statement made by the National Gallery that it is a place of art and not politics. The second video I watched was written and directed by Derek May, and was entitled "Off The Wall." Falling under the category of defining art scenes, this video addressed the issue of whether or not artists are eccentric, or if they are only living and expressing themselves in the manner in which they see fit.

In almost every living room in Canada there is a television; can this be considered art? Or with this exhibit, is Clive Robertson merely trying to assure people that the hours spent fester in front of the TV can be equated with reading Shakespeare, viewing a Monet or listening to Mozart. Perhaps one day, Must See TV will have its own room in the Louvre or the National Gallery.

This is the reality despite the CD cover's claim that the band successfully mixes together "rich classical melodies" with "traditional Oriental and Middle Eastern tones" and African tribal rhythms to "create a sound that is unique, otherworldly and elegant." The whole experience left me feeling bummed out.

Rotate this!

Continued from page 21

to play "76 Trombones" from "The Music Man" over and over again as a detoxification measure.

I guess I should have known better when I checked out the CD jacket.

A few of the songs (there's no actual singing on the album) might be useful in short snippets for a movie soundtrack (think of Harrison Ford lurking around chinatown in Blade Runner II), and "Angels Weep" is an artful classical guitar piece, yet on the whole, there's nothing terribly distinctive about them.

Really? Pardon me, but when I buy a CD, I want to be entertained, not have my consciousness taised. No wonder those clowns don't seem to be having a good time.

SARAH MICHELLE GELLAR RYAN PHILLIPPE and REESE WITHERSPOON

In the game of seduction
there is only one rule,
never fall in love.

CRUEL INTENTIONS

What you can't have, you can't resist.

COLUMBIA PICTURES PRESENTS AN ASSOCIATION WITH ORIGINAL FILM AND NEW MARKET CAPITAL GROUP A NEAL H. MORITZ PRODUCTION
A FILM BY ROGER KUMBLE STARRING SARAH MICHELLE GELLAR RYAN PHILLIPPE AND REESE WITHERSPOON "CRUEL INTENTIONS" SELMA BLAIR
CO DIRECTED BY WILLIAM TYLER BRUCE MELLON CHRIS J. BALL MUSIC BY EDWARD SHEARMUR COSTUME DESIGNER MICHAEL FOTRELL SCREENPLAY BY ROGER KUMBLE
SUBJECT TO CLASSIFICATION PRODUCED BY NEAL H. MORITZ AT THEATRES SOON DIRECTED BY ROGER KUMBLE COLUMBIA PICTURES

www.cruelinrentions.com

DRAGON'S CAVE
SPORTS BAR & GRILL

259 ONTARIO ST.
547-2147
fully licensed

AFTER THE GAME, SCHOOL OR WORK, TAKE TIME OUT AND BRING YOUR TEAM OR FRIENDS DOWN TO THE DRAGON'S CAVE FOR GREAT in-house SPECIALS.

Enjoy our GREAT MENU
PLAY POOL OR DARTS.

EVEN WATCH YOUR FAVORITE SPORTS ON OUR BIG SCREEN TV.

RECEIVE WARM FRIENDLY SERVICE.
So come on down and see what your friends are TALKING ABOUT!

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOFF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.kweb.com/bluerooft or call Kim Ondaalje at 544-7147. Transportation can be arranged.

HARASSMENT/DISCRIMINATION COMPLAINT POLICY AND PROCEDURE REVIEW The review of the Senate Harassment and Discrimination Complaint Policy and Procedure, initiated February 1998, is nearing completion. Members of the Review Committee wish to extend an invitation to university students, staff, and faculty to offer any comments or suggestions they may have regarding the Policy.

Written responses may be submitted to the Senate Office, 6400 Macintosh Cory Hall, or the Human Rights Office, Old Medical Building (email: hrights@post.queensu.ca). Alternatively, community members may arrange to make verbal submissions to the Committee by contacting the Human Rights Office at 533-6886 and making an appointment. Deadline for all submissions is March 5, 1999.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson • 1-877-PREP-COM.

LOSING SLEEP? Counting sheep just doesn't cut it? Check out the Healthy Lifestyles web site for sleep suggestions at www.queensu.ca/sndc.

DO YOU SUPPORT abortion? Queen's Pro-Life Club challenges you to watch a video of an actual abortion. McLaughlin Room, JUC, Saturday March 6th, 7:30 p.m. Open discussion will follow.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE Wellington Foreign Exchange buys and sells currencies at very competitive rates, without service charges. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates, or visit us at 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resumelay.com.

FEEL LIKE CRAP? Get a handle on a healthier lifestyle. Check out the Fantastic Lifestyle Checklist at www.queensu.ca/sndc.

ESOS (Educating Students On Substances) and the Queen's Student Constables urge everyone to exercise moderation in their social relaxation. Here is this week's question in the contest: Two students, Sally and Jim are of equal weight, height and fitness level. Generally speaking, which student will feel the effects of alcohol sooner and why? Please email your answer to contest@ams.queensu.ca

HAVE YOU EVER had a question on race relations? We can answer it! Come to the JUC Music Listening Room on Friday March 5th. Refreshments will be provided by Windmills Cafe.

ARTSCI '00: Time to wake up, breathe in some fresh air, and shed some layers - we are throwing a Party! Portsmouth Yacht Club, semi-formal dress, March 19th.

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS BEER WITH PROFS @ OP Wednesday, March 10th. Food and beverages will be provided! Chat with professionals in the field. All are welcome.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE FORMAL TICKET: One ArtSci formal ticket. Best offer. Call Andrew at 547-3923.

HELP WANTED
CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewaresses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

CONGREGATION Iyr-Ha Melech is seeking Hebrew language teachers to teach Hebrew at Sunday School (10-12:30 a.m.). If interested please call Karen Grossman at 549-3110.

MOTHERS Helper needed for late afternoon or evenings. References required. Call 549-8565.

WANTED
DO YOU WANT TO LIVE IN A DUMP? Well neither do we! We are looking for a male or female student to join us at a FAT pad for $225 per month plus utilities (Corner of William and University). Give Steph a call at 531-8138 to set an appointment to see the place.

THREE SECOND YEAR students are looking for a fourth to share our 4 bedroom house, starting May 1st. Ten minutes from campus; laundry; large bedrooms; $269 per month. Call Chis, Kistin or Steve at 549-0607.

HOW ABOUT WAKING UP AT 8:28 TO GET TO YOUR 8:30! We are looking for a male or female student to join us for $225 per month plus utilities (corner of William and University). Give Steph a call at 531-8138 to set an appointment to see the place.

SUMMER SUBLET one bedroom apartment 1/2 block from lake Ontario on Beverly St. 4 minute walk from campus. Available May - August. $380 per month, negotiable. Call Richard at 546-1481.

LOST AND FOUND
LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Phys-ed Centre. If found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

LOST: A pair of silver framed glasses, lost around Dunning Hall or the JUC on Wednesday, March 3. Urgently needed! If found please call 546-7101

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th. (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St. bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS
PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1 800 844-8669.

VOTE LAURA MACINNIS for Arts and Science One-Year Senator. Voting takes place March 16 and 17 - get involved, be informed!

SUPER STAR CONTRIBS! The Journal wants you! No experience required. Pick up applications for all available positions at 272 Earl St. Due March 12, 1999. Call Sarah at 533-2800 for more details.

BURGER KING
Whopper Wedn. 99¢
Whopper Junior every day

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis. Recommended by Physicians.
HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

NEIL WATCH
Seeing as how his current solo tour will be immediately followed by a Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young reunion tour and a new CSN&Y album, and then a long awaited all-acoustic solo album, and after that the first quarter installment of a 32-disc retrospective boxed set, we figured it was imperative that MiSC provide the Queen's community with a weekly Neil Young update so's it don't get left out of the overwhelmingly hopin' Youngin' loop. You can stop scoffing right now.
• Neil Young kicked off his Canadian/American tour Tuesday and Wednesday with brilliant back to back soldout performances at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre in Vancouver.
• Accaring to friends and family, David Crosby is currently straight and sober. Cangrats!

FORMALE A TROIS!

A Surprising Final Twist To The George Reinblatt Formal Contest Affair

AFTER MUCH BITING OF NAILS, twisting of hair, and fiddling with jewelry, George Reinblatt [above right photo] has finally made a decision as to who he will take to the Arts and Science Formal. The entrants were pretty nervous too. George ended up picking a two-some of ArtSci '01 students, Nikkita Smulders [above left in left photo] and Carrie Milne [above right in left photo]. Thanks to all those who entered, including the girl who submitted naked pictures of herself, another who included letters of reference from former sexual partners, and two Journal staff members. Cha-gehill!

MISC BUILDING CONTEST

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your favourite Neil Young song is "Sweet Caroline." For the next three issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring. Note: If you've missed the last few issues, you've missed the first eight clues. Try and find some copies left around campus.

Greg Frankson
Con Ed '97
models in front of
Building #9

Karen Thomas
Arts '99
models in front of
Building #10

MISC CORRECTION: LAST ISSUE, MATT HOFFARD WHO WAS IN THE BOTTOM RIGHT-HAND PHOTO OF THE BUILDING CONTEST WAS INCORRECTLY IDENTIFIED AS MIKE ZOOK. MIKE ZOOK IN TURN WAS MISIDENTIFIED AS JIM THORPE'S "FRIEND" IN THE UPPER LEFT-HAND PHOTO (BUT AS FAR AS WE KNOW THEY ARE ACTUAL FRIENDS). MATT HOFFARD WAS FURTHER MISIDENTIFIED AS ARTS '02 WHEN HE IS IN FACT SCI'99, IT'S MIKE ZOOK WHO IS... OH FUCK IT TO HECK.

No money...? No Problem...
NO COVER!
ALL NIGHT!
FRIDAY NIGHT!
FREE FOR ALL!
D.J. DANCE PARTY!
SUPER LITE TILL 10:30!
SUPER LIGHT DRAFT ALL NIGHT!
BIG SCREENS - QBI - 5 POOL TABLES - LIVE BANDS! - www.thehub-kingston.com INFO LINE 531-5025
TO BOOK A SMOKER OR PARTY CALL JESS OR SUE 531-5300 - WEEKDAYS 6:00 - 7:00 P.M.

COX-DAVIES PRODUCTIONS
The Company That Brought You Last Spring's Smash Hit "Grease" Proudly Presents
"FOREVER PLAID" Another Toe-tapping 50's Musical Full of Fabulous Well-known Hits.
Forever PLAID
The Heavenly Musical Hit!
Written by Stuart Ross
Musical Arrangements by James Raitt
HILARIOUS
Wall Street Journal
Director - Moira Davies
Show runs March 11th through March, 20th with curtain times at 7:30 pm
GRAND THEATRE • Tickets available at the Box Office (613) 530-2050
Adults-$17.00 • Students-$15.00
Children (under 12) $13.00 • Plus GST
HOMESTEAD Lend Leasing Limited GLASSY FORMAL WEAR RENTAL & SALES
CORPORATE SPONSORS
FOREVER PLAID IS PRESENTED THROUGH SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS WITH MUSIC THEATRE INTERNATIONAL DON'T GET CAUGHT WITHOUT A TICKET!

Women's Concert Series 3
Sarah Harmer
of
Weeping Tile
Meredith MacNaughton
Sarah Sleen
Friday, March 5
Saturday, March 6
discjuz: house, techno, funky beats
Clark Hall Pub

Food for Fines

March 8-12, 1999

Queen's University Libraries will accept food donations to local food banks in lieu of library fines

For every non-perishable food item you donate, you can reduce your fine by $1 (up to a maximum reduction of $10) Contributions will help the needy locally and in the Queen's community

Food items in demand

- peanut butter
- canned fruit and vegetables
- rice or pasta
- cereals
- canned meat or fish

Please drop off items 9 a.m.-5 p.m. at any of the following circulation desks

- Stauffer Library
- Bracken Library
- Education Library
- Law Library
- Engineering/Science

Donations gratefully received from everyone, including those without fines.

AMS Food Bank
Open Mondays & Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.
Basement, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division) 533-6972

reader

March 1999

POETRY

ryan boggs
emily truman
Leyla Mahdavian

QJR Challenge No. 4

Spring Contest Listings

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Own a piece of Queen's history.

QUEEN'S/KINGSTON COMMUNITY COMMITMENT AWARD

FOR STUDENTS WHO DEMONSTRATE DEDICATION AND COMMITMENT IN THEIR INVOLVEMENT IN THE QUEEN'S AND KINGSTON COMMUNITIES

NOMINATE YOURSELF OR A FRIEND!
NOMINATION PACKAGES ARE AVAILABLE
OUTSIDE THE AMS FRONT ENTRANCE AND DUE: THURSDAY MARCH 18TH
BY 5PM IN THE AMS FRONT OFFICE

THE JOURNAL Reader

To be really mediaeval one should have no body.
To be really modern one should have no soul.
Oscar Wilde

Time had a special significance for a certain juvenile and incorrigible words who thought nothing of fishing for two words in a stanza, or even a line, that he would not throw away. He was spinning sea of language where there was only a line, but the one he wanted. There were strange and impossible words that would seize the bait and swallow the hook and all but drag the excited angler in after them. Like that famous catch of Hiawatha's, they were gone for the fish he wanted. He wanted fish that were shining and subtle, and very much alive, and not dead. He waited, and presently, after long patience and many rejections, they began to bite.

EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerain
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

ADS CO-ORDINATOR
Mark Fucella

ADS DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourne
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

CONTRIBUTORS
Ryan Boggs, Leyla Mahdavian,
Anna Pheasant-Cox, Emily Truman

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL READER
Friday, March 5, 1999 - Issue 5 - Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone --- editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca Circulation 9,000 Issue 6 of QJR will be published on Thursday, April 8, 1999 Cover and Interior Design by J.C. Bellringer & T. Mansbridge

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY AMS ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING STUDENT GOVERNMENT

mind your own business

tuesday, march 16th
7:30 pm
mclaughlin room, jduc

reports and motions due by march 10 in the commission of internal affairs

all members of the alma mater society are eligible to vote

agenda packages available on march 12 at the infobank and ams office

...this likely means YOU!
and ten thousand of your friends and neighbours

Upcoming Literary Contests

4th Annual GREAT CANADIAN STORY CONTEST 1998.

Entries: For Canadian citizens or residents. Length 2,000 - 6,000 words. Writers may send as many as four manuscripts per envelope. Type the word count, your name, address and phone number in the upper left hand corner of the first page. Stories must be the kind that could happen "only in Canada" and preferably with an uplifting or positive theme. MSS. will be returned only in your SASE.
Fee: $5 per story, payable to TYO Communications.
Prizes: Cash prizes (to be announced) and publication of winners and honourable mentions in STORYTELLER.
Information: (613) 592-2776.
Send entries to: STORYTELLER Magazine, 43 Lightfoot Place, Kanata ON K2L 3M3.
Deadline 15 May 1999.

6th Annual People's Political Poem Contests (Winter & Spring).

Entries: political poems that exhibit a passionate humanity, sensitivity to the human condition, love and moral conviction. Up to two poems of any length may be entered. Include a brief biography. Fee: a minimum donation of $15 to People's Poetry to help support its programs, publication and awards for poets, includes a year's subscription (3 issues) to The People's Poetry Letter.
Prizes: Five poems selected in each contest. $200 in cash and book prizes to winners in each contest. Winning poems are featured in The People's Poetry Letter.
Information: See http://webhome.idirect.com/~tp_lantos/ or e-mail Ted Lantos.

Send entries to (with fee payable to People's Poetry), or SASE for Entry Form: The People's Poetry Letter, Box 31, 2060 Queen St. E., Toronto, ON M4E 3V7.
Deadlines: Winter Contest, March 15, 1999. Spring Contest, June 15, 1999.

4th Annual Pottersfield Portfolio Compact Fiction /Short Poem Competition.

Entries: Stories of up to 1,500 words and poems of up to 20 lines. Enter up to 3 poems or 2 stories.
Fee: $20 for first entry in either category (includes one year of Pottersfield Portfolio) + $5 for each subsequent entry in the same category. Entry in both categories includes a two-year subscription.
Prizes: One prize in each category of $150 + publication in Pottersfield Portfolio (Autumn '99). Include optional SASE for competition results.
Information: See announcement at the Pottersfield Portfolio Web site. Send entries to: Compact Fiction / Short Poem Competition, Pottersfield Portfolio, PO Box 40 Station A, Sydney, NS Canada B1P 6G9. No Email or fax entries.
Deadline May 1, 1999.

ARC: Canada's National Poetry Magazine 4th Annual Poem of the Year Contest.

Entries: Max length of each poem is 100 lines.
Fee: $15 for entry of up to four poems, includes one-year subscription.
Prizes: $1000-$750-$500 plus publication in ARC Autumn '99.
Information: send e-mail to John Barton.
Send entries to: Poem of the Year Contest, ARC, PO Box 7368, Ottawa ON K1L 8E4.
Deadline 30 June 1999.

CPA VERY NEXT POETRY CONTEST.

Entries: Submit poems of up to 40 lines each. Include SASE for contest results.
Fee: $5 per poem, payable to Canadian Poetry Association.
Prizes: First Prize $100 and two Second Prizes of $50 each, plus publication in POEMATA Magazine. Winners TBA in July, 1999.
Information: send e-mail to John Barton.
Send entries to: CPA, P.O. Box 22571, St. George P.O., Toronto ON M5S 1V0.
Deadline: 30 April 1999.

Zygote Erotic Writing Contest.

Entries: Short fiction up to 1000 words or poetry up to 50 lines each (maximum three poems)
Fee: $16.00 payable to Zygote Magazine includes a one year subscription (four issues).
Prizes: Prize is publication of top poem and story in our Spring 99 issue as well as $75.00 prize money for each winner.
Information: Send e-mail to cjlittle@escape.co.
Zygote Publications, 1474 Wall St., Winnipeg, Manitoba R3E 2S4.
Deadline: May 1, 1999.

The Canadian Journal of Contemporary Literary Stuff Advising The Minister - A Literary Contest.

Entries: Stuff is soliciting advice & opinions for the Minister of Canadian Heritage on the state of literary culture in Canada (whether she likes it or not). Open to all forms of writing - poetry, fiction, essays, letters, humour, etc. Max 2000 words. Copies of all entries will be sent to the Minister.
Fee: none
Prizes $100 - $25 - $0 + publication in and one year of Stuff.
Enclose optional SASE for list of winners.
Information: For full contest guidelines, address below.
Send entries to: Stuff, PO Box 53106, Ottawa ON, K1N 1C5.
Deadline March 31 1999.

The QJR Literary Challenge no. 4

Something different this month: identify each major author from only a single piece of biographical information.

1. I was born in Ottawa, am a Sagittarius and attended U of T's Victoria College.
2. I was born December 3rd, 1957 in Berdichev, Poland (now Berdichev, Ukraine).
3. I died in Paris, France, on November 30, 1900, having lost a now infamous battle with my rooms' wallpaper ("Either it goes or I do," he/she reportedly said as death approached).

There will be two winners this month, chosen at random from the correct answers. To qualify, all three questions must be answered correctly.

Please forward all responses to:
QJR Literary Challenge
272 Earl Street
journal@post.queensu.ca

All responses must be received by Thursday, April 1, 1999

At this time, two correct responses will be chosen (at random) and be awarded one gift certificate each in the amount of $10 from Wayfarer Books. This month's Challenge is authored by the editor of The Queen's Journal Reader.

Last Month's Answers: Leonard Cohen and Michael Ondaatje
Congratulations to Last Month's Winners:
Colin Stephenson and Margaret Pycherk.

Each will receive a $10 Gift Certificate from Wayfarer Books.

Estimated Number of Deaths in Toronto, Ontario, each year: 18,000

Internet Connections per 1000 people: In Canada: 852,242 In Russia: 86,281 In Vietnam: 2 (AS OF JULY 1997)

CRAZY 3S
3 BOOILY FUNCTIONS THAT TAKE OVER ONE'S AWARENESS:
1. LAUGHTER
2. SNEEZING
3. AN ORGASM (A MEDICALLY ACCURATE LIST)

(more) crazy 3s
William H. Sheldon's 3 body types:
1. Ectomorph
2. Endomorph
3. Mesomorph (corresponds to thin, round and athletic) no other words in the english language rhyme with month orange silver or purple

Licking a stamp will give you  $\frac{1}{10}$ th of a calorie

There are 6 languages native to North America. They include Inuktitut, and Inuktitut. These languages differ more from each other than English does from French, or English from Ukrainian the word IRRITATE was created by Sir Thomas Elyot in 1531. His friends had no word to describe him before that point.

NOW OPEN

JAMES Coiffure BRETT

Creating your most desired formal Updo's

Advanced Haircutting and styling

Colour and Highlighting Specialists

Your Sebastian - Wella Salon

432 Princess

542-2427

JOIN THE 1999 - 2000 MCRC!!!

Live on Campus:

- Treasurer / Secretary:
- MCRC Executive Member
  - Choice of any room in residence

- Education / Events Advisor:
- Run campus-wide events
  - MCRC Executive Member
  - Choice of any room in residence

Live anywhere:

- Appeals Coordinator:
- Coordinate the MCRC appeals system

- Orientation Chairperson:
- Organize residence orientation days with assistance of Vice-President (Operations)

Each position includes a monetary honorarium.

All applications are available at the Victoria Hall front desk and are due back by Friday, March 12th. Call 533-4571 for more information.

What would you do if I came to you now,
tonight
in the light of the moon body undressed
heart unbuttoned
soul undone
Would you indulge me?
Drink me in?
Love me again?
If these sweet endings were guaranteed
I would gladly give up my safe warm bed for my car keys and a full tank of gas.

EXPOSE

EMILY TRUMAN

Intramural BEWS Hockey Review Open Forum

Change It?
Keep It As Is?
Drop It?

Have your say...
Thursday, March 18
5.30-7.30 p.m.
Room 205
Phys Ed Centre

Modern Ladybug In Me Tragedy

1. while I'm sleeping Ladybugs crawl into My Mouth and They burrow into My Cheek to (I suppose) hibernate.
2. I am not insensitive towards the evolutionary Cause of the Ladybug but I am hunched and vexed by the incurred Nausea and if I actually did throw up They might be purged and that would certainly cause specific Regression and induce a pervasive Diffidence within all Ladybugs, but probably
3. especially within the modernist Ladybugs (aware of being drunk and drugged) Who flicker Their Wings so that Their wings will break off and either I'll spit Them out or They'll wade in the Blood pooling in

My stomach, awaiting the imagined Potential

(I Suppose)

Ryan Boggs

HE HAD THE WORLD in the palm of his hand

WHAT DID HE DO WITH IT?

campus crusade for Christ presents... hockey legend PAUL HENDERSON

WEDNESDAY MARCH 10TH @ 7:30 PM
in the auditorium, Queen's University

Nominate

your Prof!

Do you know of an enthusiastic and outstanding professor? Nominate them for the AMS Frank Knox Award for Excellence in Teaching.

Nomination Packages are available at the AMS office and all Faculty Offices

Nominations due Friday March 12, 1999

photography contest

The theme is your choice — anything! Prizes to be won!

Drop off your pictures to The Queen's Journal (272 Earl St.) with your name, faculty, year and phone number.
Deadline: March 19, 1999

For more info call Alex or James at 533-2800

Anna PheLAN-Cox

Untitled

A song. Kaya. A perpetual reminder of the autumn heat, impregnated with moisture. It's humid in an apartment made claustrophobic by uncharacteristic optimism. And this song will always force my memory back.

Legs immediately come to mind. One pair long, tanned; the other shorter, paler. Both shaven. Sleek. Swooshing against long skirts, grazing each other under tables or side by side in darkened movie theatres. On one such occasion, Kama Sutra-visually stunning.

— No, a beautiful film on all counts (adamantly).

— I disagree. Decadent images, yes, but the script...

A restrained smile. A short silence. A squeeze and all is forgotten. Then back to the apartment where Bob Marley is awaiting our return. "Turn me loose. Turn me loose..." his voice demands of us through clouds of marijuana smoke. In the corner, an incense stick burns slowly down to its wooden leg and dots the soil of the potted plant as we nonchalantly flick the remnants of a joint into an ashtray and make faces which have become funny with time. "Got to have Kaya now..." Tea. And honey. We don't notice the cat hair being transferred from a blanket onto our clothes. The room is illuminated by candles which dictate good-night as the last drop of wax solidifies without the heat of the flame.

Now, lying together on the bed. My breasts are bigger. "I never sleep in pyjamas," she tells me. But tonight we lie side by side fully clothed. A bed-time story: Ferlinghetti, Neruda (read aloud), we privately boast to ourselves. Once, shirts unbuttoned in the dark, we compared chests. It was her turn first. Small, firm, ideal, I thought. No, she assured me against protest, mine were nice too.

***
We are sitting in a café (our favourite) on the terrace
It is Goldylocks'
porridge-filled oasis in the middle of a concrete forest.
Over coffee
(literally) we watch cigarette smoke mingle with steam.

sitting for hours,
days even, while the waiters learn our names. It is here we always retreat after an appetizer of near-hysterical laughter over badly cooked vegetarian meals, expertly botched in a small white kitchen with a gas stove. Often, we lean in towards each other very close when he passes by, so confident that he is utterly oblivious to our excited eye movements and communicative silences interspersed with wide grins and poorly stifled laughter. He is a "transcendental angel," we decide. We would both like to fuck him.

***
"I feel so high, I even touch the sky, above the falling rain..."

Another apartment now. This one mustard, red. Matisse peers at us through the eyes of a reclining pink nude.

We have been introduced to our host at that same café by a bold move involving a matchbook and a telephone number.

Here, too, the music is playing. A different man (he is not our angel) hungrily eyes my friend and I don't pretend not to notice as I mouth the words to the song. He is a decade older but none the wiser. Later, we will laugh at his idiosyncrasies, his smell. For now though, we spend hours laughing only at things we don't mock, while outside, the season has changed. Someone is giggling, but it is not us.

"I feel so good in my neighbourhood, so here I come again. Got to have Kaya now..."

The laughter permeated the room, mixing with the music until it became the chorus to the song. This is the soundtrack to October.

Let him wake up in this gray,
be surrounded by indifference.
Let the rain fall down around him,
not in wild abandonment,
but a slow and steady downpour,
and let him walk out into this hopelessness walk forever with his helplessness.

"Don't ask me what I think"

Sitting in the last haven of intellectual discourse,
I watch you sip your coffee while letting your words sink into me.
I try to discover your eloquence as you gaze at me through the dimming lights.
Your words flow around us,
slowly sinking under shifting chairs.
I search for your ease,
style,
elegance.
I search...

your nose is too big.

Leyla Mahdaviyani

dearest,
show yourself to me
in all the ways you come,
and all that surrounds you,
and completes you.
I need to stop seeing you in everything,
seeing everything in you,
need to turn around,
because, dear,
you blend, these days
you blend into me too easily.

So much more than Journal-ism...

The 1999-2000 volume of The Queen's Journal needs you.

Applications are currently being accepted for the following positions:

Editorial Board

Managing Editor
Production Manager
News Editor
Assistant News Editors
Editorial Page Editor
Opinions Editor
Arts & Entertainment
Editor
Arts & Entertainment
Assistant Editors
Sports & Fitness Editor
Sports & Fitness
Assistant Editor

Business Staff

Business Manager
Advertising Manager
Sales Representatives
Advertising Designers
Systems Manager

GOT AN INK-LING?

Pick up an application at The Journal, 272 Earl Street. If you have any questions or need more information call Sarah Crosbie, Editor-in-chief elect at 533-2800. Applications for all positions are due on Friday, March 12 at 4 p.m.

SUE JOHANSEN

Host of the Sunday Night Sex Show on WTN

Presented by the Sexual Health
Resource Centre

Monday, March 8
7:30

Ellis Auditorium

In association with LifeStyles Condoms

$1 - at the door

CAMP OUTLOOK

Summer 1999 Information Seminar

Wednesday, March 10

John Orr Room, JDUC @ 7:30 pm.

Come see a professional slide show of majestic Algonquin Park.
Refreshments provided. Chat with former Outlook Staff.

Camp Outlook is a Tripping Camp for at-risk and under privileged youth, ages 13-17. We have four rounds of 10 and 15 day Canoe Trips in Algonquin Park.
No experience is necessary.

We offer you:

- An Ideal Leadership and Outdoor Education Experience
- Free Room & Board in Kingston, June 1 - August 31.
- Over Fifty (50) Days in Algonquin Park
- Bronze Cross Swimming and First Aid Certification

INTERVIEWS BEGIN MARCH 20

Applications available at the Camp Outlook Office JDUC Rm. 341

Tel: (613) 544-6444 Fax: (613) 544-6285

"What's up with my education?" week

Education Survey

Help the AMS advocate on your behalf! Fill out a survey on debt and quality of education issues to establish what academic priorities the AMS should be dealing with in the upcoming year, both internally and externally.

Fill out a survey, and have an opportunity to win credits toward your tuition and the bookstore, as well as giveaways from AMS services.

Tuesday, March 9th

12:00 to 1:30, Music Listening Room, JDUC

"LOAN REPAYMENT AND THE FUTURE"

Graduating with a whopping student debt? Or even just a little one? Here's some advice on how to best approach repayment to put yourself in a solid financial position in the future.

Wednesday, March 10th

"INVESTMENT ADVICE FOR UNIVERSITY STUDENTS"

12:00 to 1:30, Music Listening Room, JDUC

- |   |  |
|---|--|
| What are bonds good for? What is equity?                      | What sort of insurance should you buy?   |
| How do you go about getting some mutual funds?                | Why should you care about RRSPs now?   |
| How should you figure out what tax breaks might work for you? | Find the answers to these questions and more... prepare yourself for the "real world!" |

Thursday, March 11th

"THREE-PARTY DEBATE ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION"

11:30 to 1:00, Wallace Hall, JDUC

With a provincial election expected in the spring, find out where the Conservatives, Liberals and NDPs stand on the issues surrounding post-secondary education. Farmer Liberal leader Lyn McLeod, now the party's education critic and Blaine Marin, the NDP's critic for post-secondary education, have both confirmed their attendance.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 12, 1998

Students shun SGPS elections

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

A Queen's student recently reported to Campus Security that she had been the victim of sexual assault in mid-January as a result of Rohypnol. The victim was prompted to report her case when she saw a woman passed out shortly after reaching her residence and awoke to find herself being sexually assaulted by the man who was drinking with friends at a popular "hub" area establishment. After moving to a

BY REBECCA STELTER

The Society of Graduate and Professional Students is having trouble finding people interested in running its government next year. The Society recently completed its executive election campaign and all the positions were either uncontested or unfilled.

According to Kevin Brown, chief returning officer for the SGPS, the "nomination period began on the 18th of January and elections were scheduled for the 9th and 10th of February."

However, due to lack of interest, there was a necessary three week extension of this period in order to fill positions. One position still remains unclaimed.

The reason for this small turnout is time commitment, said Chris Hales, current SGPS president. "I think that there is a divided interest. We are not given any leave time from our studies and have to keep a full course load, which makes it hard to get people to commit."

"The idea of staying an extra year to fill an executive position in student government, delaying one's finishing date, is not as appealing to grad students who are ready to move on in life," Brown added.

This does not mean that graduate students are not interested in student council. "Even at this stage, the dynamic has changed with the introduction of law students into the SGPS. We have seen a much greater interest in the day to day activities of the society, and that can only be a positive thing," said Michael Rusek, SGPS president-elect.

Please see News on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 36
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	25
Science	13	A&E	32
Editorials	14	Crossword	41
Opinions	15	Classifieds	42
In Focus	18	MISC.	43
Features	21

WEATHERWATCH

Today Cloudy High -1°C; Low -8°C; POP 30%	Sunday Cloudy High 0°C; Low -6°C; POP 40%
Saturday Cloudy High 1°C; Low -9°C; POP 20%	Monday Cloudy High 2°C; Low -6°C; POP 40%

USEFUL NUMBERS

Kingston Police	549-2111 or 911
Kingston Sexual Assault Crisis Centre	544-6424
Queen's Human Rights Office	533-6886
Students Counselling and Health Services	533-2893

probable that a sedating drug, such as Rohypnol, was administered to [the victim's] drink sometime that evening."

The victim reported to authorities that when she awoke "she felt disassociated from her body and was completely limp, unable to speak or move. She suffered partial amnesia but did not have any symptoms of a hangover the next day."

second establishment she met a male acquaintance who walked her home. The woman passed out shortly after reaching her residence and awoke to find herself being sexually assaulted by the man who walked her home.

The alert stated that "it is very

Please see Administrators on page 4

ArtSci '99 formal raised the roof at the Memorial Centre Saturday night as students partied to the groove of a "Roaring 20's" theme. From left to right: Jessica Pautz, Bianca Partington, Kate Sullivan, Amy Gowland and Kathy Yung.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Students fined for keg party

BY JENNIFER MORRISON

Last Thursday, seven second-year Queen's students were fined $1,000 for the traditional homecoming "kegger" they organized at their Johnson Street residence, otherwise known as 'The Mansion.'

Last September, the Kingston police laid charges against the students for violating the Liquor Licence Act of Ontario. The residents were charged with three counts of violating Ontario's liquor licence act, specifically selling liquor without a permit.

Although Mansion resident Andrew Thompson did admit to having kegs of beer at the party, he explained that it was not the beer they were selling. "We technically sold tickets for the party, and not for the booze," he said.

Kingston Police Constable Mike Shultz stated that the residents were warned of the potential ramifications and dangers, but went ahead with the party anyway. He said, "We've put up with it this long, we're not going to put up with it anymore... if they don't listen, they do so at their own peril."

On March 4, the group of seven students appeared in provincial court to answer to the charges. Second-year student Chris Grubb entered a guilty plea on behalf of the seven co-accused and a fine of $1,000 was levied.

Thompson explained that Grubb took responsibility for the group because "[the police] felt that he was the ringleader of the whole thing." All seven residents are planning on splitting the fine between them.

Although Shultz could not comment on whether the fine was fair, he did recall a case that happened eight to 10 years ago that involved a group of bootleggers who were fined $700 each for violating the Liquor Licence Act.

Thompson spoke for the group, claiming that they had no plans to fight the fine. "We're just going to take the fine and suck it up," he said. "There's not much we can really do anymore. They did a lot of undercover work."

He admitted to being surprised at the amount of effort the police went to in investigating them. "It basically shows how much time the Kingston police really has... I think they wanted to make an example of us," he said.

Residents of the Mansion pose on their balcony.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

ATTENTION

Arts & Science Undergraduates

ARE YOU IN THE RIGHT ACADEMIC PROGRAM?

CONCERNED ABOUT CAREER OPPORTUNITIES AFTER GRADUATION?

INTERESTED IN AN APPLIED PROGRAM?

WHY NOT CONSIDER TRANSFERRING INTO CHEMICAL ENGINEERING OR ENGINEERING CHEMISTRY (OR DOING A DUAL DEGREE WITH YOUR CURRENT PROGRAM).

The award-winning department of Chemical Engineering is a dynamic department with an outstanding record of excellence in teaching and research, with many links to industry.

Well qualified students can expect credit for completed CHEM, MATH, H&SS, GEOL and Laboratory courses.

Your transfer will be smooth and painless!

For information contact:
Dr. David Lawrence, #208 Dupuis Hall
lawrence@chee.queensu.ca
533-2763

AMS lobbies for QUEST release

By FIONA STEVENSON

The AMS, in cooperation with Faculty societies, is lobbying for the universal release of Queen's University Evaluation System for Teaching evaluations. At present, only 62 per cent of QUEST evaluations are released to students.

"I think it's unacceptable that students don't have that information at their hands," said AMS Academic Affairs Commissioner Milan Konopek, adding that the forms are universally released at most other Canadian universities.

QUEST surveys are handed out to students by Departmental Student Council representatives. Completed forms are returned to the Registrar's office and then directed to the respective course instructor. Written comments will only be read by the department head if students include their signatures on their forms; otherwise, department heads only have access to quantitative data. According to Konopek, less than a quarter of students sign QUEST forms.

In the 1996-97 year, the policy on QUEST forms was that all evaluations were to be automatically released to students, unless an instructor indicated that he or she wished for the information to remain private, said Konopek. That year, the release rate was 96 per cent.

"The following year, through the result of a collective bargaining agreement, that default position was eliminated," he continued. That year, the release rate dropped to 70 per cent.

The academic caucus, made up of Konopek and academic representatives from all Faculty societies, has compiled a position paper stating why it believes QUEST evaluations should be universally released. The paper is presently being distributed to the administration and the Faculty Association.

"We've received support from the administration on this," Konopek said. "I certainly support it. I've been at universities in the past where they release it and it seemed to benefit students," said Dean of Arts and Science Robert Silverman.

The administration and the Faculty Association are currently in the process of negotiating the university's collective agreement, which is up for renegotiation every two years. Konopek hopes the new agreement will make the automatic release of QUEST evaluations to students mandatory while including provisions for when the forms will not be released.

However, obstacles exist. According to Konopek, "There seems to be a push from certain elements in the Faculty Association to eliminate QUEST for the wrong reasons... Some feel that QUEST only reflects superficial popularity of professors, and not their actual ability to teach in a challenging academic environment. That couldn't be further from the truth."

"On the whole, if a professor is consistently receiving poor evaluations, that is probably indicative that they need some improvement in their teaching

Please see Students on page 4

Communications Commission dissolved

By STEPHANIE CARVIN

After years of debate, the Alma Mater Society Assembly voted at its last meeting to dissolve the AMS Communications Commission.

"Things were not working out as well as they should be," said Angela Pilas, current AMS communications commissioner. "We found that the structure did not let the commissioner do what was wanted."

The restructuring proposal passed by Assembly outlined several reasons why dissolving the commission was necessary. It suggested that the commission has been saddled with too many diverse responsibilities and lacked a clear mandate. It also mentioned the commission encompasses too many service-oriented functions, including the Queen's Inquiry Committee, the Infobank, the AMS Web Page, the Graphic design unit and promotion of the AMS.

According to the proposal, these problems have left the commissioner little time to focus on true interactive communication with the student body. The proposal also indicated that efficiency in advertisement production, dissemination and Web design could be improved. "The commissioner ends up doing daily work of the commission and not enough of long-term planning with the AMS," said Pilas.

Tom Stanley, AMS president, said the structure of the commission was a problem. "No matter how good the people were or the resources, we could not seem to crack this," he said. The committees and responsibilities of the communications commission will be distributed among other areas of the AMS. The Assistant Manager (Design) of the Publishing and Copy Centre will now oversee the Web Page Design Unit and the Graphic Design Unit. The Internal Affairs Commission will now oversee the Queen's Inquiry Committee and the Infobank.

"The philosophy behind this is decentralizing," said Stanley. "We give the commissions the tools they need to communicate."

Stanley said he felt positive about dissolving the commission. "I think it is great," he said. "There will be a period of transition naturally." He predicted problems during transition may arise from the "miscellaneous things that the commissioner did."

The only new position created in the restructuring is the communications co-ordinator, who will be responsible for promotion of the AMS. The co-ordinator will work full time in the summer and as a volunteer during the rest of the year, working on media campaigns and helping commissions promote events. Pilas said she was pleased with the restructuring decision. "[The restructuring] is going to be fantastic," she said. "The co-ordinator can focus on individual campaigns... and be creative and innovative."

"I talked to past commissioners and they completely agree [with the restructuring]," Pilas said. "We couldn't do what we wanted for structural reasons. People generally agree. They realize that the commission had much potential but just couldn't do it."

Solar team unveils new car

By FIONA STEVENSON

The Queen's Solar Vehicle team officially unveiled their revolutionary new car at a ceremony in the BioSciences Complex on Saturday afternoon.

Business Team Manager Alexis Tremblay called the car "the culmination of 10 years worth of experience and dedication to the solar car... it is faster, lighter and more efficient than any car we've ever made."

According to Tremblay, the team hopes the new vehicle will enable Queen's to be a front runner in solar challenges throughout the world. "We're expecting big things from this," he said.

Employing new solar car technology, the vehicle can travel up to 70 km/h on the power required to toast a piece of bread, Tremblay said. "The new car is extremely aerodynamic," he explained.

Approximately 40 people were involved in the construction of the vehicle, the cost of which rests between $200,000 and $300,000, Tremblay estimated.

The car will compete in two races this year. The first, Sunrayce '99, begins in Washington, D.C. and ends in Orlando, Florida. It takes place June 20 - 29. The second race,

The World Solar Challenge, will be held in Australia in October. Approximately 15 students will attend each race, which are both held every two years.

Queen's solar cars have performed well in both events in the past. At Sunrayce '97, Queen's was the highest placed Canadian team. At the 1995 World Solar Challenge, Queen's placed higher than any North American team in the competition's history. Of the Canadian university teams, including University of Waterloo, University of Toronto and McGill University, "we're the number one team," said Tremblay.

"We have two goals or missions for the solar car: to have a good time developing new technology and racing the solar car and to educate people about the merits of renewable energy," he said.

Queen's Solar Team was formed in 1988. It is funded by Queen's, the departments of mechanical and electrical engineering and engineering physics, the Class of Sci '44, and corporate sponsors, including Panasonic, Acan, Hexcel, Michelin and 3M. It is also supported by a $0.35 opt-outable student fee.

"Without [our sponsors] this project wouldn't really get off the ground," said Tremblay.

"The culmination of 10 years... of experience"

The Queen's Solar Team poses next to their newest car, unveiled Saturday in the BioSciences Complex. The car is set to compete in races later this year in Washington, D.C., Florida and Australia.

PHOTO COURTESY OF QUEEN'S SOLAR TEAM

New exec position created

Continued from page 1

"We get an incredible turnout at our executive meetings," Brown said. "At the council level there is a lot of interest, however there is a drastic jump in time commitments from that of council members to that of the SGPS executive."

The new SGPS executive members feel that involvement in the council will be well worth the time commitment necessary. "It's just like any activity on campus — if it is something that is important to you, you will make time for it," said Rusek.

"It takes a desire and an interest in student politics to be willing to fit [being a part of the SGPS executive] into your schedule," said Karlheon Cowick, vice-president (communications)-elect. "I feel that it should be equal with the commitment to academics, as you are learning so much in both arenas."

The fact that there is little interest in being a part of the SGPS executive "speaks to the nature of graduate studies in that your main focus is on academics," Rusek stated.

"You are also accountable to a number of different things such as a TA-ship and deadlines with your professor," Cowick added.

The introduction of law students into the SGPS has effectively created a new executive position, that of vice-president internal professional, Michael Fahkri. "My biggest challenge is defining what this position is while I go along. Obviously there is a need for the position — I still have to see what that is," Fahkri said.

As for the remaining opening in the SGPS executive, "there have been a lot of potential candidates who have expressed an interest," Rusek said, "and we're excited to see who will be filling the position."

According to Hales, "we have never had any unfilled positions so next year's SGPS executive should be as just as effective as that of this year."

AMS exec hires new council

By RENEE HUANG

After receiving 17 applications for seven available AMS council positions, the new executive has completed their first major task — hiring the people they will work most closely with next year. Five commissioners and two directors for the 1999-2000 AMS council were hired Monday evening.

"The quality of applicants was absolutely outstanding," said Sarah Corman, AMS president-elect.

Rodger Scott will be the new Academic Affairs commissioner. A third-year economics student from Oakton, Virginia, Scott is chair of the Frank Knox teaching award committee this year and sat on the strategic planning committee.

Second-year economics student Lisa Pasquin will serve as next year's Campus Activities commissioner. A Montreal native, Pasquin was Charity Ball chair and has been involved in the CAC for two years.

Carol Liao, a third-year politics and economics student from Vancouver is the new Internal Affairs commissioner. Originally from Vancouver, Liao is Arts and Science Undergraduate Society Internal Affairs commissioner this year and was ASUS Chief Electoral Officer the year before.

The new Municipal Affairs

Commissioner is Walkerron, Ontario native Ingrid Larsen. A student constable and member of Queen's Security, Larsen is the MAC deputy commissioner of community outreach and is in her third year of a biology major and health minor.

Karen Hindle will be the new Social Issues commissioner. A third-year sociology student from Montreal, Hindle is deputy social issues commissioner and vice-president of Chown Hall.

The AMS executive hired Shawn Brimley as next year's Media and Services director. A third-year history student, Brimley comes from Mississauga and is a student constable and former assistant news editor at The Queen's Journal.

Susan Henry, a fourth-year chemistry and economics major, will be the new services director on next year's council. A Fredericton, Nova Scotia native, Henry is assistant manager of the Used Bookstore Exchange and was orientation chair (academics) this year.

Since the Communications commission was recently dissolved, no commissioner was hired.

Council is currently conducting interviews to hire managers and chairs to administer on-campus services and groups.

AMS council 1999-2000: (left to right) Rodger Scott, Carol Liao, Susan Henry, Lisa Pasquin, Ingrid Larsen, Shawn Brimley, Karen Hindle.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

No money...? No Problem...

NO COVER!

ALL NIGHT!

FRIDAY NIGHT!

FREE FOR ALL!

D.J. DANCE PARTY!
SUPER LITE TILL 10:30!
SUPER LIGHT DRAFT ALL NIGHT!

SAT. NIGHT

D.J. DANCE PARTY!!
SUPER LITE TILL 10:30!!
SUPER LITE DRAFT ALL NIGHT!!

BIG SCREENS - QB1 - 5 POOL TABLES - LIVE BANDS! - www.thehub-kingston.com INFO LINE 531-5025
TO BOOK A SMOKER OR PARTY CALL JESS OR SUE 531-5300 - WEEKDAYS 6:00 - 7:00 P.M.

St. Patrick's Day Party!

with the luck of the IRISH you could

WIN*

$1000

Pot O'Gold!

D.J. Chico!
SuperLite till 11:00!

WED. MARCH 17
Green Beer!
Irish Specials!

LIVE!

SUN. MAR. 14
CRASH TEST DUMMIES

WED. MAR. 24
WIDE MOUTH MASON

WED. MAR. 31
QUIET RIOT

ADVANCE TICKETS AVAILABLE AT A.J.'S, THE GRIZZLY GRILL and HMV (Cat. Twn. Ctr.)

Administrators and campus groups concerned

Continued from page 1

The victim is adamant about alerting students that sedating or date-rape drugs are circulating in the Kingston area and are being used to facilitate sexual assault.

The recent rumours of Rohypnol abuse on campus and in the surrounding Kingston area have administrators and campus groups concerned for student safety.

Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs, said administrators have been informed of several recent incidents involving the drug. "I have heard [rumours] of four," he said, adding, "we know there's at least two [confirmed incidents]."

Since the warning last week, "at least one other person has come forward," said Crawford. "It's entirely complaint driven."

"It was specifically in the city, it was off campus," confirmed Crawford about the recent incident, but said rumours have been circulating that a date rape drug was used at one of the campus pubs.

"We haven't had any experience dealing with [sedative drugs on campus]," said Head Queen's Student Constable Scott McCann. However, he also mentioned the unconfirmed case of a

STAYING SAFE...
 • Do not leave beverages unattended
 • Do not accept beverages from someone you do not know and trust
 • At a bar accept drinks only from bartender or server
 • At parties do not accept open-container drinks from anyone
 • Stay in control of your alcohol consumption

Rohypnol-type drug being used at a campus establishment.

McCann said students need to "make sure they know who they are going out with and make sure that their drink is left with friends." He specified that if you must leave your drink for any reason that it is left directly in the hand of a friend and "not just on a table with friends."

McCann also emphasised that if students suspect a substance has been placed in their drinks that they notify a constable immediately. Keeping students safe is "our main responsibility," he explained.

Naomi Brunemeyer, AMS social issues commissioner, also stressed the importance of taking precautions when drinking at public establishments. "If people are buying you drinks, make sure they are coming from the bartender," she suggested.

Brunemeyer also warned about the danger of students not taking warnings seriously, because they are broadcast frequently. "That is what makes us vulnerable, when we forget it is a problem," she said.

Security advises students to take precautions to prevent themselves from becoming vulnerable to a situation involving sedative drugs. They advise accepting drinks only from the bartender, server or someone you trust and not leaving your drink unattended. At parties they recommend students avoid accepting open container drinks.

Their report stresses that students "be alert to the behaviour of your friends and ask them to watch out for you. Anyone appearing extremely intoxicated after consuming only a small amount of alcohol may be in danger."

There are several substances which can produce symptoms similar to Rohypnol which may be used in an effort to facilitate sexual assault, such as GHB, amphetamines and marijuana.

A report issued by the Addiction Research Foundation in Toronto lists the dangers of benzodiazepine products such as Flunitrazepam, commonly known as Rohypnol, as sedation and the induction of amnesic properties. Its toxicity is increased when combined with alcohol and, although it is unlikely to be lethal, fatalities have been reported.

In a similar report drug gamma hydroxy butyrate, or GHB, was outlined as a drug that's popularity is rapidly increasing, causing some authorities to fear it may replace Rohypnol as the date-rape drug. It has been known to surface at "rave" parties where it is often referred to as "Liquid Ecstasy" or "Liquid X."

GHB, like Rohypnol is odourless and tasteless and its toxicity increases when combined with alcohol. It produces sedative effects and the dose causing amnesia is not much lower than a dose which could result in death due to respiratory depression, the report states. Other serious effects of this drug include vomiting, loss of consciousness, seizures and coma.

Students 'intelligent'

Continued from page 2

skills," Konopek said.

"I think there is some concern in our thinking that if the QUEST is being used for evaluation purposes, that there be some attempt to put it in context and use it in relation to other means of evaluations," said Faculty Association President Marvin Baer. "There's some concern among the faculty that it not be used automatically without some consideration of the type of course being taught," and other relevant factors, he added.

"I believe most students are intelligent and have the capabilities of making real choices based on what they think of their instructor's teaching ability," said McKay Savage, vice-president (student development) of the Engineering Society. "Students need to feel that the QUEST evaluations are being used and their comments are making a difference."

OTHER TIPS...

- If you or a friend feel dizzy, confused or have other unexplained symptoms, go to a safe place immediately and contact a friend, family member, Queen's security, the police or phone 911.
- If you think you have been drugged, go directly to a hospital emergency room. The body eliminates most sedating drugs within 24 hours.
- If you think you have been drugged and sexually assaulted go directly to a hospital emergency room or contact the Kingston Sexual Assault Crisis Centre.
- You can also receive assistance and support from the Queen's Human Rights Office and Student Counselling and Health Services.

Programs promote responsible drinking

CAMPUS LIFE AND DRINKING AT QUEEN'S: PART II
 BY CRYSTAL BONA

A 1993 report compiled by the Addictions Research Foundation, which identified high levels of alcohol consumption at Queen's, has helped initiate a number of measures to promote responsible drinking on campus.

After the report was published, the University Council for Substance Abuse Prevention (UCSAP) was formed, incorporating staff, students, faculty and members of the community. The goals of the council are "to make the campus healthier and safer by encouraging low-risk drinking, by changing the campus culture so that people were more comfortable drinking less or not drinking at all, and to coordinate our efforts," said Diane Nolting, health educator.

UCSAP has implemented several measures to inform students about responsible drinking. "We published the Queen's specific data from the Addictions Research Foundation and got the information into the hands of students, staff and faculty," said Nolting. "A survey of Faculties was conducted to find out where students were learning about alcohol issues in their courses [and] copies of the ARF report were made available to these profs."

"The alcohol industry never shows the negative side of drinking," Nolting said. "Our challenge is to present a program that promotes responsible drinking, on the merest fraction of the money that the alcohol industry has, and to do it in a way that is respectful and non-preachy."

Among the other initiatives are educational programs, both in residence and on campus, which are "focused on promoting responsible drinking as opposed to the message 'don't drink,'" said Nolting.

This program includes "Drink-Tac-Toe," a game which is played in residences to educate students about alcohol related issues. Part of the Peer Outreach Program, the game was "developed by the peer education team. We've shared this game with 10 other universities. Students enjoy playing the game, and by playing, learn something new," Nolting added.

Another initiative was to increase the training of volunteers at the Campus Observation Room. "Volunteers at the COR got expanded training that incorporated not only the care of highly intoxicated students, but also a broader understanding of alcohol and alcohol-related issues on campus," she said.

Since its start in 1991, the COR has admitted 335 students for observation, and the number of students admitted each year has been steadily decreasing, she added.

"We continue to work with student leaders, Dons, house councils and within Faculties to inform them, because the need is still there. The results of the next survey will teach us a lot about what we need to do," Nolting said.

Nolting explained that the alcohol industry is a barrier which has to be overcome in sending out a message of responsible drinking to students. "The alcohol industry is a $90-billion industry that spends $2-billion on advertising alone." Much of this advertising is aimed at students, she added.

"As an example closer to home, Labatts brought their Road Scholarship program to Queen's. The program was aimed at promoting responsible drinking and defensive driving," Nolting said. "According to their accounts manager, this program was offered at 15 universities across the country. At each university, 180 students could take part at a cost of $1,600 per student to Labatts."

Nolting identified two motives behind the program: "First, the message 'Don't drink and drive,' and secondly, for brand recognition. They're willing to spend that amount of money for a market share."

Human Rights Office releases '97-'98 report

Clients satisfied by HRO performance; news issue of transgender and sexual identification addressed

BY FIONA SCANNELL

Contrary to Tuesday's mock publication of The Journal created by Golden Words staff, the Human Rights Office is not closing its doors. In fact, the office's 1997-98 Annual Report suggests that an increase in services would also increase the office's effectiveness.

The recently released report shows that the HRO is being well used at Queen's. The number of cases the office dealt with in 1997-98 did not change significantly from the previous year, and has been fairly consistent over the past three years.

An increase in violence and threatening and obsessive behaviour is disturbing, but it is reassuring that the people affected call upon the HRO in these situations, said Director Irène Bujara. In 25 per cent of sexual harassment cases brought to the HRO, some form of obsessive behaviour or abuse was involved.

According to the report, all cases were resolved informally, rather than formally, in 1997-98. "We believe that most of them were resolved to a fair satisfaction of clients and everyone involved," said Bujara.

In this period, new issues arose involving transgender and sexual identification. Queen's is currently investigating ways to revise its policies in a pro-active way.

According to the report, 74 per cent of racism complaints brought to the HRO were made by women or on behalf of women. The report stated that this figure suggests that women of colour are more vulnerable to acts of racism, and this is likely due to the broader social condition which puts women overall in weaker economic and political positions.

"It's positive to see the people who witness harassment take action."

— Irène Bujara, Human Rights Office director

The number of third parties who bring concerns to the HRO was also an area of interest in the report. "It's positive to see the people who witness harassment take action," Bujara said.

Two areas where people have frequently taken action for others are incidents that involve heterosexism and disabilities. Bujara explained that these are areas where people are vulnerable. The concern expressed by people

See More on page 7

Andrea Floria

LIVE FRIDAYS

Opening Acts
Meredith MacNaughton & Sarah Cockram

UNDERGROUND EVENTS

Tuesday Mar. 16  ANDREL DJ PANDA	Wednesday Mar. 17 St. Patrick's Day 	LIVE FRIDAYS March 19 2PM-2AM Travel Agent John Coakly Franklin's Fault Reno's Hitmen Bumble Puppy And Others 2'Till 2 Smoker
---	---	--

Camera Kingston
 foto source™

Your one - hour, one - stop formal photo shop

ask about your CLUB CK discount card

second set of prints

FREE

with this coupon

35mm or APS film at time of development see store for details

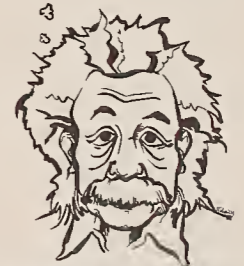

our downtown location is open 7 days a week

114 Princess@Wellington Bath@Gardiners Rd
549 3747 384 3747

It doesn't take an Einstein to do the math...

$60 > $60

When is $60 greater than $60?
 When a student gives to Queen's.

Your gift of $60 shows a strong commitment to Queen's and packs a powerful punch when the University asks alumni and friends for millions of dollars to support our school.

Now that's genius.

CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

ASUS

ARTS & SCIENCE - CON-ED - PHE - BMUS - BFA
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

NOW HIRING!

Marketing Director
Deputy Commissioners:
Finance (2)
Internal Affairs
Formal Convenor

Chief Returning Officer (CRO)
Chief Elections Officer (CEO)
Systems Manager
ASUS Movie Theatre
DSC Co-ordinators (2)

Committee Chairs

- |                            |                        |
|----------------------------|------------------------|
| ▶ Frostweek                | ▶ ACE (Environment)    |
| ▶ Jockets                  | ▶ After-school Buddies |
| ▶ Kids 4 Kids              | ▶ Aids Awareness       |
| ▶ Sociol                   | ▶ Cystic Fibrosis      |
| ▶ Mind Find (Tutoring)     | ▶ Heart & Stroke       |
| ▶ Future Link (Mentorship) | ▶ Lost Paws            |
| ▶ Leadership Conference    | ▶ Mosaic               |
| ▶ Speakers                 | ▶ Prison Visitation    |
| ▶ Triple-A (Alzheimer's)   | ▶ Teen Outreach        |
| ▶ Student Issues           | ▶ Women's Empowerment  |

Application forms are now available at The Core (183 University Avenue.) For more information, please contact Jo-Anne Larway, at 533-6278.

Applications are due Thursday, March 18th at 4:00 p.m.

Rehab PhD in works

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

The school of rehabilitation therapy is hoping to introduce a PhD program in rehabilitation science. Queen's Master of Science (Rehabilitation) program currently has more than 55 graduates every year, and the Faculty of Health Sciences believes the school could both support and benefit from a doctoral program.

"We are very excited about this," said Barry Smith, dean of the Faculty of Health Sciences. "The need for physical and occupational therapy services is growing."

"Increased leadership is going to be needed in this country," said Smith, explaining that the program will allow for the advancement of both the academic and clinical areas of the field.

If the proposal is passed, the two main areas that will be central to the program are motor performance, which deals with the physical ability to function, and disability in the community, which addresses how individuals and communities relate to disabilities.

Of the 13 Canadian universities offering undergraduate programs in physical and occupational therapy, only three offer a doctoral program in rehabilitation. There are, however, several Masters programs throughout Canada producing approximately 38 graduates each per year. This provides a substantial pool of applicants for the doctoral program, before factoring in applicants from related disciplines.

Approximately 10 - 15 per cent of graduates from Master of Rehabilitation programs pursue doctoral degrees. Often they are forced to select a related discipline, which does not always provide knowledge specific to the field of rehabilitation science.

Smith said the demand for the program represents the desire by those in the field to pursue the growing niche developing for it in Canada. "I think it reflects... an increasing desire of many to advance their training."

According to a Senate report, factors contributing to the growing need for rehabilitation specialists include an aging society with increased disablement, a shift to community-based care, a growing concern for quality of life, and growing populations with disabilities.

A survey of all 13 Canadian universities offering rehabilitation programs indicated that a doctoral program at Queen's would prove beneficial, especially in terms of faculty development. There are approximately 11 unfilled academic faculty positions in physical and occupational therapy programs in Canada, and projections for the next five to 10 years estimate approximately 27 vacancies in the field.

Another benefit of a rehabilitation doctoral program would be the training of clinical researchers who will contribute to developments within the profession.

Smith said there have not been many doctoral programs available in the past because of the recent "transition of rehabilitation therapy from a technical discipline to a more academic one."

A proposal to introduce the PhD program at Queen's was referred by Queen's Senate to both the academic development and budget review boards for consideration. Both passed the proposal and it is scheduled to be brought back to Senate again next month.

Pro-Life Club shows film of live abortion Goal 'to educate people about the humanity of the unborn child'

By SARAH REDEKOPP

A real-life abortion was shown on video by the Queen's Pro-Life club last Saturday evening.

The club's chairperson Sindi Sabourin, explained that the purpose of showing the video was to "make it real that abortion does kill a child" and that abortion is not merely a means to ending a pregnancy.

The purpose of showing the video was to 'make it real that abortion does kill a child.'

— Sindi Sabourin, Queen's Pro-Life club chairperson

Approximately 25 people gathered in the McLaughlin room of the JDUC at 7:30 p.m. on Saturday to watch the 20-minute video and then discuss the controversial topic of abortion. According to Sabourin, most of the people in attendance were pro-choice advocates.

The video, called "Eclipse of Reason," was obtained from the Campaign Life Coalition, a Pro-Life organization in Kingston. It depicts the abortion of a four and half month-old male fetus and is described by Sabourin as a "pretty graphic" film. She explained that the video is meant to heighten awareness of the unborn child's perspective, as many people tend to consider solely the pregnant woman's perspective.

The discussion following the video lasted almost two hours. A mediator was eventually designated, to prevent everyone from talking at once. The discussion remained quite calm, though Sabourin said she was uncomfortable when the word "selfish" was used by a pro-lifer to describe the pro-choice advocates.

The Pro-Life Club is new to Queen's campus, having formed late last term. The club became an official AMS-recognized club after presenting its constitution to AMS Assembly last term. The Clubs Consideration Committee and Assembly normally debate proposed constitutions before clubs are ratified.

AMS Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer said "there was some concern about allowing a club like that being associated with the AMS," but that the AMS is here to "serve and represent the diversity of students at Queen's." She indicated that the pro-life cause is not one that the AMS would necessarily promote and that she felt that showing the video was a radical move. She added that it is important, however, to be open-minded and to understand and respect where such groups are coming from.

Sabourin said approximately 30 people signed up to join the group on club's night; however, the club's meetings have been slow to gain a following, with an average turnout of only two or three students per meeting. Sabourin speculated that the club will likely not meet or partake in any more activities for the remainder of the term but will reconvene next fall.

Sabourin explained that "the main goal of the club is to educate people about the humanity of the unborn child." The club focuses on publicizing its position by putting up posters on campus with pro-life messages. Sabourin has also published some opinion articles and letters in The Journal to express her views.

"One thing that disturbed me at the [Saturday] meeting was that when people see pictures of unborn babies they automatically think of abortion," said Sabourin. "I want to promote the life aspect [of the unborn fetus and promote the] joy of seeing a child at the earliest stages of life."

More hate literature in town

Continued from page 5

indirectly involved with an infringement of human rights shows that more people are becoming aware of the importance of recognizing human rights on campus, said Bujara.

One of the difficulties the HRO continuously faces is finding an effective method of telling the Queen's community where the office is, in the Old Medical Building, and when it should be used. A directional sign is finally on the way, after two years of proposals and fund raising. According to Bujara, the sign, which will cost the office "a couple of thousand dollars" will be placed at the end of the building's wheelchair ramp. There is also a new display case in Macintosh-Corry Hall.

The report recommends that more senior levels of administration need to request human rights information, that advertising for the office reach more mainstream publications to "normalize the actions that sometimes have to be taken," and that a strong message come from senior administrators against hate crimes. Bujara said there is an increase in hate literature available in Kingston each September.

Due to recommendations made by the Principal's Advisory Committee in 1997

during the office's five-year review, the HRO has seen the creation of the half-time education coordinator position, the acceptance of a half-time continuing (rather than contract) anti-heterosexism coordinator, and the transformation of the sexual harassment coordinator's half-time position to full-time.

The report states that the office received this information with relief since "it reflected a recognition of the work involved with the generally higher number of cases and consultations in the area of sexual harassment."

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

Walkhome hours change.

As of Monday March 22 Walkhome will be opening at 7:00pm. We are still open Sunday to Wednesday 'till 2:00am and Thursday to Saturday 'till 3:00.

Here for the summer?

Hundreds of opportunities to volunteer in the community: seniors homes, health organizations, hospitals and

more!!
Call the MAC for more info.
533-6000 ext.75178

The Lesbian Gay Bisexual Association's annual general meeting will take place Sunday, March 21 at 7pm in the JDUC (Wallace Hall). All are welcome. For more information call either 533-2960, the LGBA office or 531-8981, the support line.

Commemorate Tibetan National Uprising Day!

Sunday, March 14 at 1:30 in Dupuis Hall: OPIRG Free Tibet is hosting Sonam Wangkhong to talk about Tibet. Suggested donation: $3

Free Money!

Winter Clubs and Assembly Grants application forms are available outside of the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs. March 5th-19th.

If you have something you want to tell the world then phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

COX-DAVIES PRODUCTIONS

AUDITION Grease!

Director - Moira Davies

At The Grand Theatre
Monday Mar. 15 & Tuesday
Mar. 16, 6-8pm

Adults 16 years & over

Strong Singing, Dancing and Acting Required

Please bring prepared song with music

For Further Information: Moira Davies. 389-1590

Playing Dates: July 2-10 at the Grand

See what the campaign can do...

$3.4 million endowed for work study and work experience
+
$5 million endowed for graduate scholarships
+
$21.6 million endowed for national and international entrance scholarships
+
$30 million endowed for awards and bursaries
=
$60 million endowed for student assistance

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

AMS Spring Referendum Questions

Groups submitting questions for the AMS spring referendum were given a 300-word space to represent themselves, needed, to the student body.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL

VOTE YES FOR QUEEN'S AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL!

On March 16th and March 17th, vote yes to the continuation of a 0.25$ opt-outable fee for Queen's Amnesty International (QIA). Your money will be used to help combat human rights violations worldwide, and will help ensure such inalienable rights and freedoms as the right to life, freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom of association. Amnesty International (AI) is a worldwide voluntary activist movement that works impartially to prevent violations of people's fundamental civil and political rights. AI demands the release of prisoners of conscience, the practice of fair trials, the prevention of torture and ill-treatment of all prisoners, the abolition of the death penalty, and the end of all political killings and "disappearances".

Here at Queen's we work in three main areas. We write letters to government heads, or others in positions of power, urging them to use their position to change the situation. We also raise funds for AI Canada, so it can continue combating such human rights abuses as outlined above. Finally, we raise public awareness on campus and in the Kingston community about human rights and international issues. We host speakers, run general meetings and conferences, host coffeehouses and an annual Human Rights Benefit Concert, and discuss contemporary issues.

So remember us on Referendum day!

QUEEN'S FIRST AID

Queen's First Aid Team

This past year has been quite an exciting and active one for Queen's First Aid. We took on eleven rookies and have built a solid foundation for the future. We have new, complete first aid kits including oxygen and suction devices, and continue training to higher standards. The On-Call system trial was the highlight of our year, increasing our visibility and accessibility. Queen's First Aid is a non-profit emergency response team consisting of forty hard-working and dedicated volunteers. We provide first aid at intramural and special events such as formal, football games, and frosh week, plus an on-call status. Applications for membership go out in twice per year.

We receive funding from the students; your $1 keeps this vital service running at top-notch standards. Not only do we provide first aid, we also offer first aid and CPR training with St. John Ambulance certification. Our courses this year include Standard First Aid/CPR courses as well as a FREE CPR Level A certification (March 14). Courses are offered based on student demand.

Training is not limited to the general student population; this year we trained the volunteers at COR (Campus Observation Room) and the Student Constable's Seniors. Our own unit training is to the Brigade Training System Level 1 of St. John Ambulance, Oxygen Administration and a modified Emergency First Responder course.

It must be emphasized again that Queen's First Aid is a completely non-profit organization made up of trained and dedicated volunteers. Each member puts in at least and often more than four hours a week of duties.

Please vote yes in the upcoming AMS referendum to keep Queen's First Aid receiving $1 of the student fees. If you only use our services once in your whole time at Queen's, it will have been worth it.

Q.S.C.S.G.

The Queen's Student and Community Services Group (QSCSG) is an association of four non-profit service agencies that provide support, information and referrals to the Queen's and Kingston communities. All services are confidential, free and available to everyone. The QSCSG services are located in the Grey House. The member groups are as follows:

- The Anorexia Nervosa and Bulimia Association (ANAB)
- The Lesbian Gay Bisexual Association (LGBA)
- The Sexual Health Resource Centre (SHRC)
- The Women's Centre

We are asking students to vote to renew our mandatory student fee of $3.21. The QSCSG has been receiving money from student fees for over 25 years and the mandatory fee was established in 1993 and last went to referendum in 1997.

Some of the services offered by the QSCSG are:

- ✓ The CHEAPEST photocopies on Queen's Campus (5 cents)
- ✓ Cheap safer-sex products
- ✓ GREAT libraries and resource centres with information on sexuality, sex, feminism and eating disorders
- ✓ Queer theme Friday night movies
- ✓ Information and peer support phone lines
- ✓ Presentations and speakers on topics including body image, violence against women, alternative hygiene products and resources in the queer community
- ✓ Reflections, a newsletter by ANAB
- ✓ A women's only space
- ✓ An inviting place in the Grey House to hang out or hold meetings

The Grey House ... home to so many great services!

Vote to Support the QSCSG on March 16 and 17!

KINGSTON YOUTH SHELTER

The Kingston Youth Shelter Project is a shelter for homeless youth under 25. We're asking Queen's students for an $ 0.85 opt-outable fee to support the shelter. The shelter, which opened in February, offers food, shelter and a referral service for those who need more help. The shelter also operates a Youth Employment Initiative, which employs homeless young people to give them an income and enable them to find permanent housing, and gives them valuable work experience.

According to a 1998 study by the Social Planning Council of Kingston, there are an estimated 80 homeless youth in Kingston, and about 800 who occasionally need accommodation. The Kingston Youth Shelter Project helps them with immediate needs, and works to help youth get off the streets in the long term. The shelter relies on donations from the community to operate. The support of the Queen's community will make a big difference to homeless youth in Kingston. Anyone who wants more information about the shelter or our referendum campaign can contact Liz or Christie at 544-9698.

TELEPHONE AID LINE KINGSTON (TALK)

Telephone Aid Line Kingston (TALK) is a confidential and anonymous distress, crisis, befriending and information phone line serving Queen's students and the Kingston community since 1973. TALK is open 365 nights a year from 7pm until 7am and until noon on the weekend. As an accredited member of Distress Centres Ontario, we provide our community with a unique service.

TALK receives in excess of 6500 calls annually, including such topics as suicide, loneliness, abuse or those who simply want to share a story. We also offer many volunteer opportunities to both students and community members and help to build a good relationship between Queen's and the Kingston community.

TALK is a 100% volunteer run organization. Your $0.75 would go directly to providing our volunteers with a portion of the necessary resources to maintain our service. By supporting TALK you are helping to provide a valuable service where callers from the Queen's and Kingston communities can speak with a trained volunteer through the night when most other resources are not available.

We believe that listening makes a difference, by supporting us with your $0.75 you can make a difference too.

AMS DENTAL PLAN

The AMS Dental Plan offers a unique and affordable costs for students to save money on dental costs. Through a combination of insurance and discounted rates provided through a national network of dentists, we offer an unusually high level of coverage for a relatively inexpensive fee.

The AMS Dental Plan covers 100% of up to 2 check-ups and cleanings per year, 90% on fillings, and 70% on wisdom teeth — all for less than the full cost of a single check-up. Further, your dental plan provides for a high maximum annual coverage benefit of $750; this is certainly a deal for the $83.00 fee.

To receive maximum savings from the AMS Dental Plan, one must visit a dentist that is part of a national network. With 15 dentists in the immediate Queen's area, 25 in Toronto, 10 in Ottawa, 120 in Montreal, 20 in Vancouver, and many others throughout Ontario, this will be no problem for students. In the rare case that a student can not visit a dentist on the rapidly expanding network (it is tripling every year), the plan also provides very competitive levels of coverage with any dentist.

This is a dental plan uniquely designed for students that delivers unprecedented value to those without dental coverage. Students at McGill, UBC, York, Laval, and the University of Montreal all use a plan similar to ours design. You can use your student card at dental offices for immediate coverage, and a website and toll-free line will be set up to provide all necessary information.

If you have coverage, you can opt-out of the plan - but it is still worth voting yes in order to allow other students the opportunity to save hundreds of dollars on exorbitant dental fees. For these reasons, on March 16th and 17th, vote yes for the AMS Dental Plan.

THE UNITED

The United is a unique, student-run newspaper at Queen's University in its inaugural year of operation. True to the paper's uniqueness, its article contribution base not only exists at Queen's but also transcends international boundaries with contributors from a growing global media network.

Our mission is to: 1) bring into focus international stories and issues which have profound influences on how we view ourselves within the context of an increasingly globalized "village" and 2) provide a medium for the various campus clubs, organizations, and individuals which may wish share their unique knowledge and experiences in a forum which celebrates the richness of diversity within Queen's and to a greater extent, Canadian society. In fact, a unique feature of The United is the Club's Board which provides free space to all eligible campus organizations within which they may convey club specific news in a common campus medium. Hence the phrase, "The United Colours of Queen's." By supporting The United, you are helping support the interests of over 100 AMS affiliate clubs and organizations.

With the inherent costs of production, The United has the full intent of using these funds to not only continue to produce the newspaper but also to further develop and expand its operation. Our goals of expansion in terms of size and number of issues and for greater financial sustainability depend on the establishment of a greater resource base.

In conclusion, we are asking for your support of The United so that we can continue to support the ethnic and cultural needs of the Queen's community as the universal voice of

Please see Referendum on page 12

See what the campaign can do...

- 2 new changerooms
- +
- 4 hardwood team courts
- +
- 6-lane running track
- +
- 50-metre, 8-lane pool
- =
- 100,000 sq.ft. "field house"

Now that's genius.

THE CAMPAIGN FOR QUEEN'S

Are you thinking about a career in technology?

Sir Sandford Fleming College Centre for Applied Computing and Engineering Sciences Sutherland Campus, Peterborough University graduates who combine their degree with a diploma from one of these programs are in demand!

These programs are usually 4 or 6 semesters long - but with your relevant university studies, you may be eligible for significant credit.

For more information on these programs and the career opportunities that training in these fields can offer you, contact Prof. Ron Walker, Academic Team Leader, technology@flemingc.on.ca (705) 749-5530, ext. 1215

For a copy of the 1999-2000 Academic Calendar, an application, or to request a campus tour, please contact

Marion Hermes, Liaison, mhermes@flemingc.on.ca (705) 749-5546

Visit us at: www.flemingc.on.ca

Computer Support Technician Start dates: September and January

Computer Programmer Analyst Start dates: September and January

Electronics Engineering - Information Networks Start dates: September and January

Electronics Engineering - Telephone Systems (Telecommunications Specialist) Start dates: September and January

Electrical Engineering - Controls Start dates: September and January

Electrical Engineering Technology Start date: September

Electro-Mechanical Engineering - Robotics Technician and Technology Start dates: September and January

Electronics Engineering Technician Start dates: September and January

Electronics Engineering - Microcomputer Start dates: September and January

Electronics Engineering - Computer System Start date: September

TEACH AND TRAVEL

- ✓ Jobs Guaranteed
- ✓ Great Salaries
- ✓ Pay Student Loans
- ✓ Get Accredited
- ✓ Get a Job

Next TESOL Training Course

Kingston	March 31 - April 4
Cornwall	April 7 - 11
Ottawa	April 14 - 18
Montreal	April 28 - May 2

1-800-344-6579

www.teachandtravel.com

are you interested in a career in journalism?

would you like to hear professionals in the field give you some free advice?

If so, you're invited to The Journal's

Journalism Roundtable

On Saturday, March 27 at 2:30 p.m. former Journal staffers who are currently professional journalists will be visiting 272 Earl St. to offer advice and answer questions about the world of journalism.

Organizations represented will include The Globe & Mail and Southam Inc., among others.

Anyone who is interested in this field, or who would simply like to come and listen is invited to attend.

Space is limited. Call Tara at 533-2800 to confirm your attendance

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

AMS Spring Referendum Questions

Continued from page 10

diversity and unity (Hence, the origin of the paper's name), indicative of Canadian society. So on March 16 and 17, please vote yes to The United.

"Give us Two Quarters and We'll Give you the World"

QUEEN'S CAPITAL CAMPAIGN

The Campaign for Queen's:

Queen's is embarking on its most ambitious fund-raising campaign ever, and students will play a vital role in it. On March 16th and 17th, a question will appear on the referendum ballot asking you to support the campaign through a proposed opt-outable fee of $60, on a sliding scale, for AMS members and $25 for SCPS members. Your participation is essential, because a high student participation rate encourages corporations, foundations and alumni to contribute millions of dollars needed to reach the campaign goal.

Among many other examples, the Campaign will:

- Endow $60 million for student aid
- Create a 100,000 sq. ft. multi-purpose athletic/student life facility
- Revitalize the Chemistry building
- Endow $5 million for Library Acquisitions
- Help create new centres, including: - Integrated Learning Centre (Applied Science) - Management of Knowledge-Based Industries (School of Business) - Centre for Democracy (Graduate Studies and Research)
- Fund more than 35 academic chairs and professorships

Continuing a Legacy

This campaign is unquestionably about the future. However, Queen's students have generously given back to the university for decades. Some recent examples of student-supported projects include past Phys. Ed Centre renovations, a QLINC Centre in the JDUC, over $325,000 in scholarships and bursaries, a Bracken Library endowment, a Student Art Gallery, the AMS Foodbank and the Ban Righ Centre.

Please contact the Student Vice-Chairs if you have any questions:

Alison Loat,
Arts '98 - 544-5354
aal@qlink.queensu.ca

George Dyke,
Sci '98 - 547-2694
4gd@qlink.queensu.ca

QUEEN'S CARGO AIRCRAFT TEAM

Every year the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics and Cessna host a design competition in the U.S. Teams are asked to build a radio-controlled model airplane that will be able to carry the maximum amount of cargo (this year it's water, though it's been steel in other years) around a set course.

Queen's is the only Canadian university that participates, but that's not to say that this is a small event. This year, there are 33 teams from the United States (including MIT and West Point), a team from Turkey, and a team from Italy. We've traditionally done very well in this competition, coming in 8th last year (MIT was 11th), but there is a chance our position will slip unless we get your help. Several teams have secured big sponsors over the last few years. How big are the sponsors? Well Lockheed Martin Skunk Works - a maker of the stealth fighter is one of them. We're starting to find that we need more and more expensive technology to stay competitive.

This is where the students of the AMS come in. More than 600 people have already signed a petition supporting the creation of a 15 cent student fee (subject to individual opt-out) for our team and on Tuesday and Wednesday the rest of the AMS will have a chance to vote on this question. If you think that 15 cents is a small price to pay to support an internationally acclaimed team, then vote 'Yes' for Queen's Cargo Airplane.

Help Wanted!

The John Deutsch University Centre is hiring student House Managers for the 1999-2000 academic year. House Managers keep the JDUC ticking after the regular staff has gone home. They also are the 'Friendly People with Helpful Answers' who staff the Queen's Information Desk and Lost & Found.

If you know everything there is to know about the JDUC and Queen's and are endowed with creativity, curiosity and exceptional independent problem-solving and customer service skills, this may be the part-time employment you're seeking. Applications can be picked up at Queen's Information and Visitor Centre, JDUC Room 144.

Completed applications are due Monday March 22nd by 4pm.

SCIENCE

On a wing and a prayer

Little-known Queen's Cargo Aircraft Team flies proudly against world-class competitors

BY SONJA GRGAR

YEARS OF DILIGENT STUDY IN A specific discipline can leave us believing that the God of Knowledge resides strictly within the confines of a classroom. Moreover, that deity's ambition seems to be aimed towards torturing our youthful vitality with an endless procession of labs, essays and presentations. We've all known that unsettling feeling to some extent, and there is nothing more refreshing than discovering a particular activity that allows one's knowledge to "take off" from the classroom for a little while.

This merging of theory and practice into an exciting intellectual adventure is what the Queen's Cargo Aircraft Team is all about. The only club at this university devoted to aeronautical design, it has existed for nine years in relative anonymity. Club member David Young, Sci '01, reveals that a significant amount of effort went into raising awareness about the club this year. This effort focused on designing and test-flying a model airplane, and subsequently entering it into an international competition. This year, the competition will take place at the end of April at a military base in Maryland. In last year's effort, Queen's rated eighth among approximately 20 teams, even beating prestigious MIT.

David Young of the Queen's Cargo Aircraft Team holding the wing assembly of this year's entry.

PHOTOS BY CHRIS GLOVER

also as a great opportunity to meet people and establish a greater interaction between students in different years. He emphasizes that, although the time commitment may prove challenging at times, the whole experience is also a lot of fun.

The beginning of second term usually finds the club busy purchasing materials such as balsa wood (which is extremely light, and forms the base material for the model), kevlar (a very strong material used in bullet proof vests), carbon fibre (that strengthens certain sections of the wing), aluminum, plywood, as well as some industrial glues. Once that is completed, individual pieces of the plane are cut, and then assembled.

Although the participants build on the experience from previous years, there is always an element of uncertainty that motivates the meticulous and determined work. "Right now we have all the pieces cut out for the wing, and the tail is done... we are getting ready to cut out the pieces for fuselage — the body of the plane," says Young. The finished airplane will be about 120 cm long, with the wing span measuring approximately 240 cm.

The model is controlled in flight by radio waves. After the outgoing signal is picked up by the receiver inside the model, the receiver activates servos, small motors that both move the control surfaces in the plane and activate the plane's electric propeller motor.

The team plans to finish the entire airplane by mid April, and turn it over to a pilot who has been testing the Queen's Cargo Aircraft's projects for years, on a special model airplane field. And then, the big moment — the club will be heading down to Maryland to test their creation against a field of increasingly international competitors; this year representatives from Russia, Italy, and Hungary are expected to join for the first time.

The models are designed to carry water, and the principal challenge in the competition is to fly the plane around a designated course for 10 minutes. In that time the teams stop their planes several times to load a new water supply in an attempt to maximize the total amount of water transported in the ten minute interval — the team achieving the highest amount wins the competition. Queen's team's plane is designed to carry about three litres at a time, and the group is aiming for an overall total of ten to twelve litres after the multiple loads. Weather is a significant factor, since rain necessitates lighter loads within a single round.

Young relates that every year the competition features new ideas, and that even just observing the models is fascinating since no two planes look alike, as there may be anything from bombers to futuristic styles. The Queen's team apparently has the reputation of doing all the work on their plane by themselves, whereas some of the wealthier schools hire professional engineers from the aircraft industry to help out. The amazing thing is that the Queen's team still manages to be competitive even in the prestigious company of institutions such as CalTech, MIT, and West Point, thanks to the incredible determination and knowledge of the Cargo Aircraft Team members. Even if something goes wrong with the plane, "we show up... we are not afraid of getting our hands dirty, and we know exactly what to do if the plane breaks," says Young.

Young also did not hesitate one bit when asked about the benefits of joining this club. "I think it's great because it's getting [the Queen's] name out, and that will help people get jobs afterwards. The competition also helps with the American/Canadian relations. It gets us talking."

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

"Eighty per cent chance of plasma storms..."

The Soft X-Ray Telescope (SXT) was prepared by the Lockheed Palo Alto Research Laboratory, the National Astronomical Observatory of Japan, and the University of Tokyo with the support of NASA and ISAS.

It seems that solar eruptions that throw billions of tons of ionized gas into space are, like Sesame Street, brought to you by the letter "S." These sigmoid structures on the Sun, revealed by the X-ray imager on the Japanese spacecraft Yohkoh, appear to predict when and where an eruption will occur. This information would be useful to administrators of power grids, communications networks and satellites, as all of these systems are affected by such solar activity.

Cavefish makes a rare appearance

Scientists on a caving expedition in northern Georgia have made a rare encounter with the small, white, eyeless cavefish that live in waters deep beneath the earth. Only two other specimens of the cavefish have ever been caught in Georgia, in 1969 and 1973. So little is known about the fish that ecologists don't even know how abundant the creatures are. The underground waterways of Georgia may be swarming with cavefish, but humans only encounter them by exploring the underground lakes that can be reached through caves. Even then, though, special weather and seasonal circumstances must occur for the cavefish to appear.

NASA no longer WIRED

Only three days after its launch, NASA announced Monday that the Wide-Field Infrared Explorer (WIRE) has been lost. The satellite was to have been part of a four-month mission to explore the very distant — and very early — universe to better understand the history of star and galaxy formation. The telescope on board WIRE was encased in solid hydrogen to prevent heat from the satellite's machinery from interfering with infrared signals from space. This cryostat was to have lasted for the entire four months, but it melted soon after its deployment and the gaseous hydrogen began venting into space, sending the satellite spinning out of control.

"We design everything ourselves, and spend a lot of time in the libraries doing all sorts of calculations."

— David Young, member of the Queen's Cargo Aircraft Team

Each September, the club begins its year with a recruiting drive. Although the group's current membership consists mainly of engineers, no previous experience is required to join, and diversity among participants is greatly encouraged. Team spirit and the idea of a unified effort are stressed right from the start. After collective brainstorming, the club's members plunge into research in order to create a design for the plane. "We design everything ourselves, and spend a lot of time in the libraries doing all sorts of calculations," says Young. Once the design is solidified, the group moves onto mechanical desktop, a complex graphics program intended for drafting and 3D modelling, to construct a full scale plan for the model. This stage is usually completed by the end of the first term. Young describes the work as not only a "nice way to do something practical, as opposed to what we learn in class, which is almost all theoretical," but

Want to help create next year's edition of Queen's Journal Science? Call 533-2800 and ask for Sarah.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Why GO UNDERGROUND?

AFTER ONLY A FEW BEERS AT Alfie's pub, the cheesy dance beats actually begin to resonate, the anxiety of drinking in a dark underground pub dissipates — and viability is a distant concern.

On sober reflection, however, the continued existence of Alfie's pub is no more assured than that of any other AMS service. While the pub's projected loss this year is not staggering, it is hardly a model of good fiscal health.

Next week, a sub-committee of the AMS board of directors will release a report on the future of the pub in the second of a series of viability reviews of AMS services. Rather than polling students directly, the committee relied on an ersatz survey that tried to assess the level of customer satisfaction with the pub. Those that stumbled across a copy of the survey were asked to evaluate the quality of Alfie's in a series of categories that ranged from customer service to drink selection.

While the survey may yet yield some useful information for improving the subjective Alfie's experience, it cannot fully gauge the real value of the pub for students. Unlike the competition downtown, Alfie's viability is not a function of the bottom line. Despite a reported loss of nearly $9,000 last year, the pub's value to the student community should not be judged as a net loss. Not only is the pub a valuable training ground for its student employees, it also provides a safe environment for students to drink and socialize at reasonable prices. As long as Alfie's continues to serve the community in this manner, its viability should not be measured in dollars and cents.

This does mean, however, that Alfie's management should abdicate fiscal responsibility for the pub — Alfie's is not Walkhome, it would not be outlandish for it to turn a profit. Hopefully, the committee's report will provide insight into how the pub can be improved. For one, it would not be surprising if the survey results indicate a general feeling of dissatisfaction with customer service. Also, despite a chronic problem with long line-ups, the pub is failing to attract large segments of the student population.

Regardless of the committee's report, the pub must begin to focus on establishing a niche for itself as a legitimate destination for all students. The myth that Alfie's is a staid upper-year hangout will only be dispelled once the pub begins to promote and market itself more effectively.

Younger offenders

LIKE IT OR NOT, THE CONCEPT OF an age of majority has become obsolete in Canada today. Under the upcoming federal Youth Criminal Justice Act, Canadians as young as 14 can be tried in adult court for serious crimes. The lowering of the age from 16 to 14 reflects the reality that many youths today are forced to grow-up much quicker than in the past. Canadians younger than 18 are no more insulated from the harsh realities of society than their parents. Youth today are saddled with more responsibilities and forced to confront serious issues such as sex and drugs at a younger age.

While it's hardly desirable to relegate 14-year-olds to the mercy of the criminal justice system, they are old enough to be held accountable for violent crimes such as murder or sexual assault.

Unfortunately, not every part of the new legislation, which was introduced yesterday by Justice Minister Anne McLellan, is consistent with this principle. Under the new law a parent will be charged with an indictable offense if a young offender under their supervision commits a serious crime. Penalties range from a steep fine to up to two years in prison for parents who fail to prevent their child from re-offending.

Some people may indeed be negligent in their parenting, but holding them criminally accountable for their children's actions will not reduce youth crime in Canada. Parents who choose to have young offenders reprimanded into their custody cannot possibly be expected to monitor their child's every move. Bad parenting is only one factor in a complex problem that will not be solved by shifting the responsibility away from the young offenders.

While scrapping the Young Offenders Act and introducing reforms is a good start, the government must not ignore the social inequities that are a major cause of youth crime.

What's so funny?

LAST FRIDAY, AT THE U.S. COMEDY Arts Festival, a panel of eight accomplished comedians (Janeane Garofalo, Martin Short, Penny Marshall, Mario Joyner, James L. Brooks, Neil Simon, Moon Zappa) slammed their collective comedic heads together with the goal of answering the comedian's definitive question: "What is funny?"

Humour can take the form of a grown man talking out of the crack in his ass.

The New York Times' account of the event suggested a few possibilities that would qualify objectively as 'funny'. However, "it became perfectly clear that no one really knew. So, it was obviously a bad question. After all, if they didn't know, who would?"

Probably no one. The reason for this is because the constraints on comedy permit an infinite variety of humour — humour that can take the form of a grown man talking out of the crack in his ass, or an American elbowing his friend to say, "Hey, you should know there isn't just snow in Canada. There's ice, too!"

But to deny an objective realm of humour is to deny that there is no tangible component to the comedy of, for example, the world's most widely approved comics. The consistent appraisal of a comic from his devoted audience indicates that the essence of the humour lies not in the subjective interpretation of a joke's delivery, but rather, it lies in the realm of absolute truths.

'Things' are funny for a reason, and one of the most common errors a sense of humour will commit is to rule an intentionally funny moment as "insufficiently funny" without justification. Conversely, calling a joke 'funny' also requires justification.

For example, the panel wavered over whether it's reasonable to tell a joke about HIV or, as a Washington DJ did recently (and was fired because of it), tell the joke: "No wonder they drag them behind trucks," — an insult to a song by Lauryn Hill, which contains a reference to the racially motivated murder of a black man in Jasper, Texas.

Without thinking the joke through, some might giggle and guffaw at the DJ's punchline; however, a case must be made against the proclaimed humour in the joke for it violates a rule in our culture that when it comes to racial humour, anything beyond certain constraints is unacceptable and not funny. The reason why the joke isn't funny is because the joke radically demeans a group of people based upon the premise that a member of that group was tortured and maliciously killed. And not just the joke, but the subject itself is impermeable from ridicule due to its overtly sensitive nature.

Of course, if anything is relative to humour, it's the historical/cultural movement of comedy that shifts the flow of laughter from one cultural generation to another. Within a time frame, within a culture and even within the appropriate circumstances, what's funny is conditionally funny — one just has to say why and the other doesn't have to agree.

When asked, "Steve, what is comedy?" by comic legend Henry Youngman, Steve Martin responded by giving what is the only real constraint one can apply to comedy: "Comedy is the ability to make people laugh without making them puke."

BY SEAN SPRINGER

EDITORIAL BOARD

- EDITORS-IN-CHIEF: Keith Garsen, Tara Mansbridge
- MANAGING EDITOR: Stefan Murray
- ON temporary leave: Fiona Stevenson
- NEWS EDITOR: Sean Springer
- ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS: Renée Huang, Jocelyn Laporte
- EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR: Paul Heiser
- ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR: Stefan Murray
- ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS: Sarah Crosbie, Lilian Kim
- FEATURES EDITOR: Sean Springer
- OPINIONS EDITOR: Dan Rowe
- SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR: Adam Kaminsky
- ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR: Robert MacNeil
- MISC. EDITOR: Ken Butland
- GRAPHICS EDITOR: Janice Chan
- THE READER EDITOR: Jesse Craig Bellringer
- SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT: John Bowman
- PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS: Alex Krupby, James Terjanian
- WEB EDITOR: Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

- BUSINESS MANAGER: Claudia Kraft
- SALES REPRESENTATIVES: Suzanne Armstrong, Andrew Cooke
- ADVERTISING MANAGER: Mark Fucella
- ADVERTISING DESIGNERS: Katherine Colbourn, Annie Ge, Rachelle Villanueva
- SYSTEMS MANAGER: Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 12, 1999 • Issue 36 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganouanque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about our advertising policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Elm Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800; advertising: 613-533-6711. Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journals@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 37 will be published on Friday, March 19, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Crystal Bona, Ian Bribbin, Paula Bush, Stephanie Carvin, Sonya Dal Cin, Jeff Child, Melissa Farmer, Sonja Gagar, Michael Colby-Lorenzo, Heather MacDonald, Erik Massio, Jennifer Morrison, Sarah Radecokopp, Neate Sager, Fiona Scannek, Rodger Scott, Rebecca Stelzer, Edrick Thy, Dimitrios Tsotos, Mary Wade, Virginia Wignone.

Photographers: Robin Bredner, Cheryl Cheung, Chris Glover, Jill Offenbeck.

OPINIONS

A requiem for boxing

TOMORROW NIGHT, I'M going to be glued to a large television set, beer in hand, hooting and hollering at two sweaty men fighting in nothing but a pair of shoes and shorts. When I tell most of my friends of my intentions, they give me a strange look that screams both horror and disgust.

Yes, mea culpa, I am a boxing fan. And I fully confess, for us boxing fans, that this Saturday's rare legitimate heavyweight championship fight between Evander Holyfield and Lennox Lewis will have its share of horror and disgust. But both those things are central to why I love boxing.

Norman Mailer once remarked that boxing is the perfect balance between art and war. In a sport traditionally followed, supported and waged by men, it seems fitting that boxing melds violence and artistry together in a such a seductive way. They combine for a sometimes lethal brand of elemental sport. Moment upon moment offers guilty pleasure to the audience.

Nothing is more indelible than that moment before the action even begins, when both boxers are called to centre ring to exchange deathly glares, staring deep into the other man's eyes, shunning and trying to invoke fear.

Nothing is more exciting than an early round punch that wavers the champion, spraying blood, and bringing everyone to their feet.

Nothing inspires more empathy when, late in a fight, a boxer's trainers are hurriedly trying to stop a deep cut, feverishly applying a cold press, Vaseline and words of strategy.

Nothing is more humorous than the champion trash-talking his fallen victim and the loser trying in vain to save face.

Boxing's detractors say it is pure inhumane brutality. And it probably is, and that is what makes boxing irresistibly fascinating.

When I watch a big fight, I feel like the mob must have felt back at the Coliseum when the lions were released in sport.

Boxing's detractors say it is pure inhumane brutality. And it probably is, and that is what makes boxing irresistibly fascinating.

I must feel like the warriors of ancient Greece that took a pause from war to practice the craft of battle in the first Olympics.

I must feel like the person who bangs the Plexiglass during a fight in our national sport, hockey.

And to the critics of boxing, I must feel like you, the ones who slow down to watch a traffic accident, or clear space to watch in the cold as two people brawl after close on a Saturday night.

We all admit and practice and teach that violence is wrong, but at the heart of sport and humanity, there is that love of a little bit of violence. That is what makes it so enticing. Boxing allows us to vent our anger through two strangers who smash the life out of each other in the confines of a ring.

In our civilized world where the act of striking another is assault, where dominance is oppression, we allow violence to happen on TV and in arenas because it strikes at our primal soul. We are the pack of wolves. We want our big wolf to win.

So I ask all of you before you go knocking another boxing fan, particularly this weekend, to examine deep inside you not just why it is repulsive, but why we all are in the big picture guilty of it. Ask why professional wrestling is exploding in North America. Ask why the brawling on Jerry Springer is so cool. Ask why you aren't at the bar with me, beer in hand, complicit to the whole grand spectacle of it all.

MIKE PODGORSKI
CON-ED '01

talking

HEADS

Do you think Internet porn should be banned?

"No, because then all the guys on my floor would be bored."

Monica Dingle
Comm '02

"No, because if it's banned it is an infringement on our rights and freedoms. Yeah, porn!"

Andrew Milne
Comm '02

"What's the Internet? Can I get your number?"

Geoff Sura
Artsci '02

"Yeah, then maybe we'd get off our computers at night and get some sleep."

Jason Choi
Artsci '02

Adam Fraser
Comm '02

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Jehn Mihill
House Attendant
Artsci Formal 1999

The fur flies

Dear Editors,

Everybody knows that February 14 is Valentine's Day. But how many people know that February 12 and 13 have been set aside for the past ten years by animal protection groups all across Canada to raise awareness of the fur industry's inhumane treatment of animals?

Continued on page 16

Roaring '20s; spewing chunks

Dear Editors,

I promised myself I would smile and not say a thing, but for the sake of my volunteers, I feel this needs to be said. I was one of the House Attendants at the Artsci '99 formal and as such, along with my team of volunteers, we're basically in charge of running the entire evening.

For the most part, the evening was a grand success, and I was happy to hear that most of you had a great time. Hey, I'll be the first to admit, that's what the evening is all about — the grads having an amazing time. However, the grads having a good time does not need to include abusing the volunteers.

As volunteers, we didn't mind dealing with hundreds of drunk people. We didn't mind cleaning up when you vomited on the carpet, the curtains, the sofas — and let's not lie, many of you did. We even smiled when over two hundred of you forgot your coat check tickets and we had to look through 1,400 jackets for "a long black coat."

We expected that, we didn't mind it, we had fun with it. But many of you not only became drunk, but drunk and abusive. You complained when you couldn't smoke anywhere you wanted, you complained that it was too light or too dark, you screamed at us in coat check when we took more than five minutes to find your grey petty coat when you were the one who lost the ticket. Some of you stood two feet in front of the opened doors and screamed that you were freezing and we should turn up the heat. For your information, the heat was at maximum — snowstorms and minus forty weather we simply can't control.

As volunteers, we didn't mind dealing with hundreds of drunk people. We didn't mind cleaning up when you vomited on the carpet, the curtains, the sofas — and let's not lie, many of you did.

You screamed at us at the door, in coat check, and all throughout the evening. And after having spent 48 hours with no sleep getting ready for your formal, and after another 24 hours carrying tables, chairs, sofas, rolling curtains, carrying 500 pound bars and cleaning up your vomit — I only have one thing to say for your performance: you suck!

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 15

A small number of concerned Queen's students and I made it our goal to bring this information to campus. All we needed was the space of one table upon which to set our display. Unfortunately, the Queen's AMS has refused to grant us this simple request. We were recently informed that there was not a single solitary table on the campus that could be made available to us.

We found Ms. Brunemeyer's attitude to be shockingly out of line, especially because her Social Issues Commission statement claims that, "There's a place for everyone."

This lack of tables came as quite a surprise to us, because three weeks prior to February 12, Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer informed us that she would have no problem successfully handling the administrative process of getting us a table.

Very discouraged by the AMS's unwillingness to help promote Anti-Fur Day, we asked Ms. Brunemeyer if an exception could be made due to the relevance of our cause. At this point, much to our dismay, Ms.

Brunemeyer became extremely unprofessional. Among other things, she stated quite impolitely that she had already done more than enough for us, and that she was not about to go "bitch and moan" (her words) for an extra table. The conversation continued at some length, and revealed more of Ms. Brunemeyer's incompetence as Social Issues Commissioner.

We found Ms. Brunemeyer's attitude to be shockingly out of line, especially because her Social Issues Commission statement (in the Who's Where 9/8/99, page 29) claims that, "There's a place for everyone."

Leah Murray
Arts '98

Women athletes want coverage

Dear Editors,

Following the Sports Section's lead, I'd like to enter my bid for the "If Christmas Came Early" category. For me, a varsity athlete, an early Christmas gift would include the editors of The Journal getting their priorities straight when reporting sporting events. How lovely to see that the men's hockey team won their semi-final game for the OUA Mid-East playoffs. My warmest congratulations to them and their coach. However, this is not front-page news. Perhaps the editors are under the impression that the men's hockey team had a great sporting accomplishment worthy of such attention. I, however, beg to differ.

Instead of lavishing front page attention on men's teams that are performing in a mediocre/adequate fashion (ie. football and hockey), how about giving some of the incredible women's teams at Queen's the recognition they deserve. I am referring to the women's tennis, synchronized swimming, and lacrosse teams that won their OUA banners — not merely some regional play-off spot. Or how about recognizing the women's cross-country team, of which I am a member, that won the bronze medal at nationals? Are these achievements not worthy of the front page?

Instead of lavishing front page attention on men's teams that are performing in a mediocre/adequate fashion, how about giving some of the women's teams at Queen's recognition.

Sadly, and somewhat obviously, the answer is a resounding "no." Until The Journal, which represents an institution comprised of over 50% women, realizes that women's sporting accomplishments deserve at least a proportional amount of recognition, we cannot expect to even start to challenge the status quo of women in sport at this institution.

Audrey Giles
PHE/Arts '01

UBS is doing just fine

Dear Editors,

As many students know, the UBS Exchange has been recently reviewed by a sub-committee of the AMS Board of Directors. The review was geared toward constructive criticism in order to provide suggestions for the service. It is perhaps not surprising then that as I read over the coverage of the review, some of the positive steps the service has taken this year were not emphasized.

Last year, the Used Book Store Exchange lost $52,000. This year, by installing new point-of-sale software that keeps better track of inventory, revitalizing Tricolor Express, installing Ticketmaster, and generally working very hard, the managers and staff have had a dramatic impact on the bottom line. Indeed, as of the beginning of March, revenues are up by 22% (despite a bad year for used books), costs have increased by less than 10%, and the service is in a position to come close to breaking even by year-end.

For a service management team composed of students with little retail experience and many other commitments to juggle, such a turnaround is phenomenal. Their hard work, combined with some of the ideas in the Board Review, will result in further success for the UBS in the future.

Gord Moodie
Vice-President (Operations)
Alma Mater Society

Be a part of the solution

Dear Editors,

I have some advice to give: Stick to sports Adam Kaminsky, because social issues, not to mention human decency, are clearly not your forte. In response to your unfortunate editorial "Bursting the bubble" I have just one question to pose: what exactly was the point of your editorial? Did it have one?

Forgive me if I missed something major, but from what I gathered you took advantage of an opportunity to say absolutely nothing. You brought to light the fact that inequality for women is a part of the everyday, only then to conclude that "this observation won't lead (you) to become a crusader for women's rights."

Why were you writing then? To let everyone know that if it doesn't affect you directly then who cares? You were better off in your bubble where at least there you could claim ignorance. With an opinion similar to that of a caveman I wouldn't go around publicizing it. Not only have you "never questioned" gender inequality but it is apparent, from your own testimony, that you have no intentions of ever acting on behalf of what you deem to be a women's problem.

Continued on page 17

More Letters...

Continued from page 16

You were better off in your bubble where at least there you could claim ignorance. With an opinion similar to that of a caveman I wouldn't go around publicizing it.

True, no one can force you to have a commitment to what is right or fair, nor can anyone force you to act for the good of others. However, one can take the time to try to show you how flawed and disappointing your attitude is. Not only does your way of thinking cease to challenge the present status quo but it can only act in a fashion that sustains and perpetuates it.

How do you propose that the working world one day focus on ability rather than sex? Certainly not with your passe attitude. See, you have to actively work towards something in order for it to happen. Get it? All social progress up to date can be seen as a result of a loyalty to what is just. Now, does this form of logic extend to all other forms of injustice or is it just the plight of women that you find particularly uninspirational?

Finally, I hate to resort to calling upon other words of wisdom, however, the old adage seems particularly fitting in this situation: "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem" — and you Mr. Kaminsky, along with others who share your way of thinking, are part of a huge problem, it's called patriarchy. But I guess you wouldn't care about that.

Martha L. Hinton
Artsci '00

Be a part of the solution — Part 2

Dear Editors,

I don't know where to begin my response to Adam Kaminsky's op-ed, "Bursting the Bubble." For now, though, I think I will stop myself from gleefully thanking him for his willingness to "listen" to women discuss their "plight." I'm not sure why, if he recognizes and disagrees with systemic sexism, he's still not willing to do something to affect some change. Listening, though better than nothing, does not really contribute to the progress he believes is happening — a progress towards "a workforce divided not by sex, but by ability." (By the way, if a man believed your female friend incapable of giving directions, is it not possible that a male human resource director might see a female as incapable of, say, leading a university class?)

My biggest problem, however, is that Mr. Kaminsky still seems to be living in a bubble that prevents him from seeing his 'classism.' In trying to prove the existence of gender equality, he lists the presence of women in "university classrooms, courtrooms, operating rooms, and boardrooms." (Let's for the purposes of keeping this letter short, ignore that such numerical gender equality in these "whatever"-rooms, does not take into account traditional power structures and other such institutional discrimination.) What I'd like to point is that upper-class women of a WASP background usually fill such occupations. This is clearly an inadequate reflection of the economic and ethnic make-up of society as a whole, and does nothing to illuminate the fact that too many low-status jobs are still mostly held by women.

I suppose one should be glad that Mr. Kaminsky is no longer naive about gender inequality. But being aware of one aspect of an issue so complex and intricate, is just a start, and by no means a reason to pat oneself on the back.

Leyla Mahdavian
Artsci '00

David McTavish
Director, Agnes Etherington Art Centre

CONSERVATION AND CONNOISSEURSHIP:
New Discoveries in Italian Art
at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre

SPEAKING ABOUT ART LECTURE SERIES

Sunday, March 14
2 pm
Admission is free.

The Interim Agnes

218 Barrie Street, Queen's University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613 545-2190 Fax: 613 545-6765
http://www.queensu.ca/ageeth/

Sponsored by Walter and Duncan Gordon Foundation.

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

Swing over to Chez Piggy for drinks and snacks, soup and a sandwich, a great pasta dinner, or the best Sunday Brunch in town.

Put away the rope.....

with our everyday 15% student discount* you can do it on a shoestring.

Chez Piggy 68 R Princess Street 549-7673 *with ID

Homework and exams got you at the end of your rope?

Rebate. Rebate. Rebate.

Right now, you can take advantage of a $50.00 airtime credit when you buy our dual mode PCS Sony phone. Combine this saving with any of our affordable plans including our unlimited local evening and weekend option and you're all set to go wireless. This offer is valid from Feb 1 to March 31. Pick one up at your campus bookstore or reach us at www.clearnet.com/student or 1-888-248-5968. The future is friendly.

*Must activate within 10 days. Phone must be activated for a minimum of 30 days. **Trade-in value based on offer from Clearnet Communications Inc.

Write for Opinions

Do you support a position which needs to be talked about? Send your opinion of 500-600 words to The Queen's Journal and we'll send it to everyone else. Let your observations resonate through the community. Call Dan at 533-2800.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5555

South Pacific Trailfinders

Odyssey Travel is your South Pacific Travel Expert!

- ✓ Oz/Kiwi Experience
- ✓ VIP Backpackers
- ✓ YHA Cards
- ✓ Air passes
- ✓ Bus/Rail passes
- ✓ Computer visas
- ✓ Tours-Connections, Contiki, Trek

- Long Reach $1979 via Europe, Asia
- Coral Route $1799 via South Pacific
- Boomerang $1929 via Asia
- Circle Pacific $2499 via South Pacific, Asia
- Kiwi Special $1099

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Camp Manitou-wabing Summer Job?

LOOKING FOR A STIMULATING, CHALLENGING AND FUN SUMMER?

Then why not join the Camp Manitou team? We are looking for staff who enjoy working with children ages 8-17.

June 26 to August 23

Seeking Counselors in various positions: Basketball, Soccer, Tennis, Golf, Volleyball, Eco-Adventure (including Hiking, Climbing, Fishing, Orienteering and more), Swimming, Canoeing, Kayaking, Sailing, Waterskiing, Wakeboarding, Dance, Theatre, Horseback Riding, Painting/Drawing, Pottery, Photography, Printmaking, Sculpture and Radio Broadcasting. Also Registered Nurses, ESL, Bus Drivers (License required), Maintenance and Kitchen positions available.

Call: 416-245-0605
Fax: 416-245-6844

Email: camp@manitou-online.com
www.manitou-online.com

The '20s Roar at the ArtSci Formal

This page photos by Alex Kronby

This page photos by: Renée Huang, Alex Kronby and James Terjanian

Food for Fines

March 8-12, 1999

Queen's University Libraries will accept food donations to local food banks in lieu of library fines

For every non-perishable food item you donate, you can reduce your fine by $1 (up to a maximum reduction of $10) Contributions will help the needy locally and in the Queen's community

- Food items in demand
- peanut butter
  - canned fruit and vegetables
  - rice or pasta
  - cereals
  - canned meat or fish

- Please drop off items 9 a.m.-5 p.m. at any of the following circulation desks
- Stauffer Library
  - Bracken Library
  - Education Library
  - Law Library
  - Engineering/Science

Donations gratefully received from everyone, including those without fines.

AMS Food Bank
Open Mondays & Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.
Bathurst, 272 Earl St. (between University and Division)
533-6972

Winners of Optional Meal Plan Draw

L - R Fernando Tavares (Director of Residence Operations), Aaron West, Michael Ha, Jeff Bird, Peter Lou, Missing from picture Ian Dewell

- R.E.D PRESENTS -

GET CULTURE ID

AT CANADIAN CULTURE FESTIVAL

The First Event of Anti-Discrimination Week

*Tuesday March 16, 1999
Wallace Hall 7 p.m. to 9 p.m.*

AMS COMMITTEE AGAINST RACISMS AND DISCRIMINATION

- R.E.D -

Features

Get up, stand up

Standing up for what you believe in

STORY AND PHOTOS BY MICHAEL COLBY-LORENZO

THE FIRST THING I can remember seeing were the flames billowing out from the stars and stripes below the war monument on University Avenue. The dark clouds overhead threatened rain, but no amount of bad weather could dampen the spirits of the approximately 2,000 Serbian protesters, most bearing signs strewn with vicious anti-American war slogans. One in particular caught my eye, stating simply, "NATO don't end a war by starting another."

I couldn't help but pull my car over, grab my camera and race into the lobby of the Colonial Hotel to purchase some film. When I came to, the scene was strangely calm, the protesters gazing intently at the Serbian rally leader as he bellowed into the microphone in his native tongue. The crowd raised their fists and cried out in the name of Greater Serbia. I looked on as the second American flag was torched, the jet black swastika scrawled over the linen cutting and disintegrating in the heat of the flame.

For some years now, Serbia has attempted to maintain control over its various provinces and control the destiny of its nation as a whole. The province of Kosovo, however, with its ethnic Albanian population, desires the freedom of self-determination and the ability to self-govern. Some might argue that the Serbian presence in the province of Kosovo is both unnecessary and overtly oppressive, yet the Serbian regime seems devoted to keeping its homeland intact.

The nationalist sentiments of the Serbian people, combined with their desire to maintain solidarity, appear to be the roots of a worthy cause, but the ethnic Albanian people of Kosovo also have very strong feelings which draw them towards the promise of sovereignty.

One might assume that the clash between the two Balkan groups was isolated to their region of eastern Europe. This is not the case. The Serbian population of Toronto has come out in droves this year to support Serbian solidarity, in the streets and in front of some of our nation's most prominent government institutions — flag waving and voices raised in opposition to the involvement of both NATO (North Atlantic Treaty Organization), and the US military in their domestic affairs.

The brutality of the Serbian occupation forces can be easily matched by the random, but effective terrorist activities of the Albanian resistance, the Kosovo Liberation Army. Even now, with more than 4,500 Serbian troops massing on the borders of Kosovo, the ethnic Albanian people refuse to surrender and deliver their weapons to the

2,000 Serbian protesters rally on University Avenue in Toronto to support Serbian solidarity and show opposition to the involvement of both NATO and the US military in Serbia's

Serbian authorities. Compared to the Serbians, their anguish is less publicly displayed — we hear a mote refined and silent cry for help.

Today, NATO is on the verge of launching more air strikes against Serbia in retaliation for their aggressions in the Kosovo region, and although this conflict seems isolated, resistance movements and militia activity are most definitely not confined to the Balkans. Just as Serbia has Kosovo and its defenders to deal with, Britain has the terrorist based Irish Republican Army, and Israel keeps tight security to protect its civilians from the threat of cross-border and internal strikes by Palestinians and Islamic fundamentalists.

WE ALL HAVE OUR QUALMS as human beings with those who do not share our points of view, and in the case of the Serbian-Canadian demonstrators, they have the right, as we all do, to vent aggression in a non-violent manner.

The concept behind flag-burning is simple; you have the ability to publicly denounce the policies and actions of a nation's government while keeping your guns at home. Something about that appeals to me. Protests allow us to speak our minds, voice our opinions and bring about the hope that our words will be heard by those who oppose us.

Women's Suffrage has proven

Please see Right on page 23

Previous Frank Knox Award Recipients

1997-1998

Dr. Jim McLellan (Chemical Engineering)
Dr. Kevin Munnhall (Psychology)

1996-1997

Dr. Robert "Bob" J. Hill (School of Physical Education)
Dr. Gordon Cassidy (School of Business)

1995-1996

Dr. Tina Pranger (Occupational Therapy)
Dr. Catherine Hooley (Geography)

1994-1995

Dr. Anthony Marshall (Classics)
Dr. Gloria D'Ambrosio-Griffith (Spanish & Italian)

1993-1994

Dr. Rosemary Jolly (English)
Dr. Gerald Tulchinsky (History)

1992-1993

Dr. Peggy Cunningham (School of Business)
Dr. Paul Christanson (History)

1991-1992

Dr. Robert Belton (Art History)
Dr. Jed Rasula (English)

1990-1991

Dr. Jim Whitney (Mathematics)
Dr. John Holmes (Geography)

1989-1990

Dr. Caroline Millet (Sociology)
Dr. Gerald McGrath (Geography)

1988-1989

Dr. Ronald J. Delisle (Law)
Dr. Richard L. A. Plant (Drama)

Student's pet

The Frank Knox Award for Excellence in Teaching recognizes professors who demonstrate an outstanding commitment to the education of their students.

By RODGER SCOTT

NOTE TO ALL STUDENTS: NOMINATIONS FOR THE FRANK KNOX AWARD FOR EXCELLENCE IN TEACHING HAS BEEN EXTENDED TO TUESDAY, MARCH 16.

ONE OF THE PRIMARY goals of the Academic Affairs Commission of the Alma Mater Society is to promote the issue of the quality of teaching at Queen's. This goal follows from the basic premise that students who join the Queen's Community demand an education of the highest quality, and that they should do everything in their power to nurture the quality of education they seek.

At a time when professors and faculty members are receiving added responsibilities, while at the same time experiencing a decrease in real earnings, it has become more important than ever for students, who are the beneficiaries of good teaching, to demonstrate their appreciation for those who teach well. It is absolutely imperative that students act responsibly and show that we care a great deal about the abilities of the teachers who are entrusted to aid in our intellectual development during our progression through Queen's. The Frank Knox Award promotes this recognition.

The implementation of The Frank Knox Award for Excellence in Teaching in 1989 has been one of the most direct ways in which students can help protect and improve their quality of education.

Every year, for the last 10 years, the AMS has honoured two professors with this award (see chart inset here for previous winners). It recognizes and acknowledges professors at Queen's who demonstrate an outstanding commitment to the education of their students. This award is the most prestigious honour given to instructors by their students.

THE AWARD WAS NAMED in honor of Dr. Frank Albert Knox, a professor of economics who taught at Queen's from 1924 -- 1960. Throughout his years at Queen's he became a teaching legend by showing tremendous dedication to undergraduate economics students. This performance serves as a reminder to us all of the necessity for the strong commitment which professors must contribute to maintain high standards of teaching performance.

In order to nominate a professor, one must be a Queen's student currently enrolled in the class of the potential nominee. To be an eligible nominee, an instructor must be in at least their second year of instruction, regardless of level of appointment. In your nomination you must include 1) a covering letter from the primary nominator that explains why the instructor is better than others; 2) at least one other letter in support of the nominee.

The fundamental selection criteria is teaching excellence with a focus on real learning and an enduring commitment to the educational experience of students at Queen's. The information provided in each nomination package serves as an initial indication of the professor's potential. A heavier weighting is given to the in-class evaluation procedure, whereby the selection committee goes to the nominee's class and has the entire class fill out an in-depth assessment/questionnaire form.

Since it is inherently difficult to decide what specifically constitutes an exceptional professor, the committee formulates its own criteria based on five axiomatic questions, which are:

1. How well does the instructor motivate their students with enthusiasm for learning?

2. Has real learning taken place under the instructor? Is the instructor not simply a popular person enjoyed by the students?

Please see Symbol on page 23

Looking for an out this summer

Camp Outlook gives underprivileged children an opportunity to experience a summer on the bounds of discovery

By STEFAN MURRAY

Algonquin Provincial Park — a busy beaver slaps its rail as a lone moose forages on the lush lily pads of a calm inlet. The towering Jack Pines sway and stretch toward the blazing sun hanging overhead, while a lone canoe peacefully drifts down the winding river. As visions of summer slowly creep into our wintery minds, many of us may be planning trips to the wilderness to escape harsh urban realities.

More than 150 youths from a diverse range of backgrounds will also experience the wilderness this summer, but they will be doing it with a Camp Outlook canoe with a passion for adventure. For 10 pristine days they will burst into Canada's oldest provincial park and leave their realities at the mouth of a three kilometre portage.

Camp Outlook focuses on underprivileged youths and youths with attention deficit disorders from around Kingston, but draws from all over Ontario.

Camp Outlook campers soak up the beauty on the waters of the Barron Canyon.

PHOTO COURTESY OF CAMP OUTLOOK

The camp is designed primarily to provide an experience, an escape from a troubling world and an opportunity to develop skills and discover hidden talents; self-discovery with a 60-pound pack.

In 1970, a Queen's medical student attempted to help a troubled youth by removing them from a poor environment and introducing them to an exciting one. During the past 30 years the organization has grown not only in size, as it now also offers winter programs, but in reputation, earning the respect and support of the Kingston and Queen's community. It is composed of a four-member executive that plans and fundraises throughout the winter months along with a contingent of dedicated volunteers.

The Camp is primarily funded through the agencies that refer youths to the camp; while private donations and discounts from Algonquin park makeup for a substantial percentage of their budget.

Interested in becoming a Camp Outlook staff member? Looking to offer an underprivileged child an enriching journey through the great outdoors? The camp emphasizes that no experience is necessary even though a background in camping, canoeing and working with children and teenagers couldn't hurt. The camp provides training for swimming and first aid skills, dealing with anger management and crisis situations.

A typical summer for a Camp Outlook volunteer consists of three weeks of training in Kingston during June, and a series of five to 10 day trips that occur throughout the rest of the summer.

Although a summer spent in the wilderness working with people is by far a more rewarding experience than minimum-wage in a sweltering warehouse, rising costs of living and relentless tuition increases make it a difficult opportunity for some summer students to seize. However, the experience is tremendous and those who really want to work with people and enjoy the outdoors can find ways to become part of the program. According to Matthew Struthers, Camp Outlook staff member, some students spend May and part of June tree-planting to subsidize the rest of their summer of unpaid work.

Camp Outlook is always searching for volunteers. It takes commitment, a dedicated spirit and a lot of hard work. The love of nature and a disposition toward helping out are key to the program's success, but the rest is up to you.

Applications are due Monday, March 15th in the Camp Outlook office, third floor of the JUC.

Sheridan

Get Marketing Career Training!

Marketing Management Post-Graduate Program

- One-year full-time professional Program in marketing, advertising and promotion management.
- Experience on-the-job learning with a four-month paid work placement.
- Benefit with an IBM ThinkPad® computer for duration of Program.
- Study with university graduate peers.
- OSAP available for approved applicants.
- Start September 1999.

To receive a Calendar and application form, call: (416) 480-1320 or (905) 815-4008 or Email: sheridan@minacs.com

Contact Program Coordinator Derek Barnes at: (905) 845-9430, ext. 2887
Email: derek.barnes@sheridanc.on.ca
Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/business/marketmgmt/mrktmgmt.htm

"I Want Success"

Start training for an exciting new career as a MICROSOFT CERTIFIED PROFESSIONAL

Join the over 135 graduates of Loyalist College who have achieved career success beyond their dreams in North America's hot information technology (IT) industry. Last year, Loyalist's Microsoft graduates found great jobs and were earning an average annual salary of $40,000 within 9 months of graduation.

Limited Seats are available in our April 1999, MICROSOFT CERTIFIED SYSTEMS ENGINEER & INTERNET program. NO computer experience necessary! During the past 3 years we've maintained a 0% drop-out rate in these programs.

MICROSOFT LOYALIST TRAINING & DEVELOPMENT CENTRE
Helping You Get Where You Want To Go!

966-8121 or 1-877-88-SUCCESS

CITY REVIVAL

Quality Recycled Designer Clothing from Toronto

39 Montreal St., Kingston
613-531-9090

A symbol of excellence

Continued from page 21

3. Does the instructor use innovative instructional methods in attempting to convey material to their classes?

4. Is the instructor available outside the classroom for interaction?

5. How has the instructor demonstrated a true commitment to the education of Queen's students over and above the norm?

Nominations for the winter semester close on March 13, and the winners of the award will be announced April 12, at a banquet held in their honour. Also, the winners will be announced at the Annual General Meeting of the AMS and at Convocation held at the end of this academic year.

By taking the time to nominate a worthy professor one accomplishes a number of key components in preserving our quality of education. First, those professors who are nominated and those who win the award will feel that their commitment and dedication to teaching is being recognized. Second, we as students send a message that we care about the quality of our education, and that improving teaching quality is a true student initiative. Third, the award acts as symbol of excellence, which all professors and faculty members should strive for.

This award is now in its 10th year and has been awarded to some of the very best teachers at Queen's. If you have a professor that has continually taught above and beyond your expectations, please consider them for this award.

DR. FRANK ALBERT KNOX
B.A.'23, LL.D.'65, F.R.S.C.

A NATIVE OF ORONO, ONT., Dr. Knox taught public school in Oshawa and Orillia and served with the Canadian infantry overseas (1915-1919), before coming to Queen's as a student of history and economics.

Upon graduation he was offered a lectureship at Queen's in the department of economics, which marked the beginning of a career in teaching that would span 40 years. His area of specialty was economic theory and was labeled one of the 'Skelton Boys' which was described by one author as being "that group of highly selected citizens, the intellectual elite of the Dominion, many of whom have had important and responsible roles to play in the development of Canada." Knox made a number of important contributions to the economic literature and economic policy in Canada, which included pioneering the development and analysis of the Canadian balance of payments.

He was a first-class researcher, yet his ability to teach always seemed to overshadow everything else because his methods were so natural. In his 40 years of teaching, the actual courses that he taught did not change, but the content and manner of teaching changed every few years. As a result, his teaching was never unwieldy or boring, it was constantly refined towards the objective of achieving a perfect teaching methodology. He hunted for ways to set his students on fire, believing that there must be better ways to expound particular puzzles, provoked into change by recent literature and events. As a result his teaching was lucid and elegant, always alert to, but never dominated by, contemporary thought and events. He taught students to think on their feet.

Frank Knox, whose Queen's teaching credits span 40 years, established himself as a pre-eminent educator in the university community.

By the time he retired in 1960, Dr. Knox had taught a generation of Queen's students, trained and counseled numerous faculty members in the art of pedagogy, and had established himself as one of the pre-eminent teachers in the university community.

"When I first signed on to do some junior teaching, I asked Prof. Knox to give me a little advice," recalls David Slater (Arts '47). "He had worked extremely hard at pedagogy and teaching all his life... He virtually never went into a lecture without doing at least a couple of hours of rehearsing the material immediately beforehand, even though he had written, researched and prepared all the material over a number of years."

"After every lecture he would sit down for a while and make notes on the lecture — what went well, what didn't go well, what questions came up, that sort of thing... I don't think I ever heard him give what I would call a bad lecture. This reflected the care and intensity of his preparation and the work that he had done in taking teaching seriously."

Rodger Scott, Arts '00, is the Chairperson for the Frank Knox Teaching Award.

Right of self-expression

Continued from page 21

to be one of the most effective and socially altering movements in the history of the world. The "million man march" allowed black Americans and US authorities to avoid the chaos and devastation of the Watts Riots of the early nineties.

The old excuse of "It was in the best interest of the people" will no longer be tolerated by those who are as informed as the government superpowers. Someone once told me that as sure as people die, empires will crumble and the world will change. Protests and public demonstrations alter our perspectives and add a new dimension to the world of politics.

Our futures are never carved in stone, and neither is the future of government. The more we work to change the way they think, the more honestly we can say that we have not lost our humanity.

Sizing up the tampon alternatives

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

By SONYA DAL CIN

I never knew I had a choice. The whole time it was either pads or tampons — not much in the way of variety. The manufacturers would have you believe otherwise: "Super-absorbency," "ultra-thin with wings." In the end, it all comes back to the grassroots: tampons and pads.

Recently, Queen's Environmental Studies students organised a symposium on health and the environment. The SHRC was asked to contribute information regarding alternative feminine hygiene products. In the course of researching the topic, we learned a lot of shocking things about tampons and pads. They pollute. I suppose if you think about the sheer number flushed and thrown away by women every day, this seems pretty obvious. But then we learned that the bleaching processes produce dioxins — chemicals that pollute the environment, kill animals, and end up in these cotton- rayon products women put into their bodies.

So we looked at the alternatives, which breakdown as follows.

The Keeper:

This is a reusable menstrual cup made from natural rubber. One keeper lasts 5-10 years, and is sold at the SHRC for $40. The Keeper is inserted inside the vagina and is held in place by suction.

Reusable cotton pads:

Generally made from cotton fabric with a nylon liner to prevent leakage, reusable cotton pads can be purchased at health food stores and on the Net. Competent sewers can buy the fabric and make their own, patterns are available on the Internet. Really, these are pretty much what women used before the age of disposable everything.

Sponges:

Most drugstores stock "cosmetic sponges" — small natural sea sponges.

These can be cut with scissors to fit, and used like an applicator-free tampon. Some women stitch dental floss into the sponge to make a removal cord. There are a few cautions though: firstly, sponges should be boiled before and after use. Secondly, sponges that are grown in polluted waters such as the Mediterranean Sea may still retain these pollutants (look for Caribbean sponges, grown in cleaner waters). Natural sponges last about three months with proper care, and being organic, degrade when thrown away. Synthetic sponges have been offered as an alternative, but these are made of plastics, and it is unclear what toxins might remain from the manufacturing process. Plus, they are less absorbent.

Instead:

These are a fairly new product on the market, disposable menstrual cups that sit near the cervix (much like a diaphragm). The manufacturers claim it can be left in for up to 12 hours, and can be worn during intercourse. However, Instead DOES NOT provide protection against either pregnancy or STDs, meaning you still have to use condoms. They can be found at certain drugstores in packages of four (about $5) or ten (about $11). In terms of environment-friendliness, these don't have much of an advantage over tampons. They are not reusable and non-biodegradable. They also take practice to insert and remove, and some women still find that they shift, causing leakage.

IN THE END, each alternative has its pros and cons. The product to use is very much a personal choice. For more information on menstruation and related issues, I recommend visiting the "Menstruation Museum" at www.mum.org, a great site with links and women's opinions.

Looking for more information on the alternatives presented in this article? Call or visit the Sexual Health Resource Centre, located in the Grey House next to Victoria Hall.

ROOTS KINGSTON

WHILE QUANTITIES LAST

Men's Modern Straight Leg
$34.99
reg. $69.95

Women's Stretch Flair
$39.99
reg. $79.95

Roots Winter Sale Event

Denim Blow-Out

229 Princess Street • 546-7668 • Open Sundays

A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE

PLAYER'S RACING

FOLLOW THE TEAM: WWW.PLAYERS-RACING.COM

SPORTS & FITNESS

FIGHT NIGHT
In the most anticipated heavy-weight fight (not involving Mike Tyson) of the decade, Evander Holyfield takes on Lennox Lewis to unify the heavyweight title belts. The fight, which will take place at Madison Square Gardens in New York City, will be the most competitive in recent memory. Ex-Canadian Lewis has a great deal of size (6'5", 250 pounds) and a tremendous reach advantage. Holyfield has the heart of a lion, which makes up for whatever physical shortcomings he may have. Holyfield has predicted Lewis to fall in three, The Gallery thinks the old man has lost his marbles. His only chance to win is with a decision, and that won't happen. Holyfield will fall in six.

FLYING NO LONGER
After entering 1999 on a winning wave, the once dominant Philadelphia Flyers have entered their end of season swoon, and general manager Bobby Clarke is doing his best to stop the bleeding. Despite calling up an inexperienced netminder to shake up the team, making numerous minor trades and spreading rumours about the firing of coach Roger Neilson, the team continues to lose and tie teams they should beat. With the recent acquisition of Montreal superstar Mark Recchi, Clarke is hoping to provide even more offence to a defenceless team. These problems were supposed to have been solved by John Vanbiesbrouck, but only time can tell.

RODMAN MAKES SPLASH
Two weeks ago the Los Angeles Lakers stood at 6-6 and were searching for an identity. With the firing of Head Coach Dell Harris, the hiring of Kurt Rambis to fill his shoes and the signing of the ultimate rebounding freak, Dennis Rodman, an identity was created. Since the rash of changes, the squad has won seven straight games and basketball fever has again infected the Great Western Forum. Despite misgivings from just about every pundit, Rodman has played inspired basketball and could make Jerry Buss, the Lakers owner, look like a genius. He will only be a genius if his team, led by a rebounding genius, wins the NBA title.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
• Yankees manager Joe Torre would make a quick recovery from prostate cancer.
• There would be no biting, holding or low blowing during the Holyfield-Lewis title fight.
• The unending televised curling would stop.

Track team shines 21 athletes to go to CIAU Championships

PHOTO BY SUE HOLLAND

By ROBERT MACNEIL
The Golden Gaels' track and field team competed in the OUA championships this past weekend in Windsor and enjoyed their second-best result ever. Twenty-one athletes qualified for the CIAU championships in Montreal which begin today.
The Gaels had nine athletes who were named OUA all-stars: Julia Thomas (1000m), Bob McGill (3000m), J. David Kelly (60m hurdles), Charlotte Wilson (3000m), Nimrod Major (high jump) and the women's 4x800m team consisting of Willson, Thomas, Lisa Curran and Jenny Clarke. While not being named an all star, Stephen Lemieux concluded the exceptional individual performances with a bronze medal in the shot put.

In addition to these athletes, 12 more students qualified for the CIAUs. Chike Madueme (triple jump), Mike Thorne (shot put) and the men's 4x800m relay team of McGill, Shawn Brady, Graydon Raymer and Chris Booth. Also qualifying for the men's team were Mike Melaney (shot put) and the 4x200m relay team of Nick Daube, Andrew Spiro, Justin Medved and Q Hoppie.
Joining the female CIAU qualifiers were Nicole Clarke (20 pound weight throw and shot put), Jennifer Greenaway (20 pound weight throw) and the 4x400m relay team of Curran, Clarke, Willson and Sarah Armstrong.
Commenting on the results from the meet, Head Coach Melody Torcolacci said that she had been hoping for "between 20 and 26 bodies" to qualify for the CIAUs.

Torcolacci has been head coach for 10 years at Queen's and said that this year's team "is the best squad of the 1990s in terms of hardware and all-conference performances. [We have] a very tight team, one that is very good and balanced."
So far this season, the 31 female athletes and 42 male athletes have recorded a total of 94 medals and 205 personal bests. All this has been accomplished without proper training facilities.
"Our goal going into the CIAUs is to be one of the best non-facility schools and if we finish in the [overall] top-10 it would be phenomenal," said Torcolacci.
Today the Gaels will look to culminate their successful season by loading up on hardware in Montreal.

Gaels gain respect

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Queen's 5, Queen's 0
Queen's 7, Guelph 6
Guelph 4, Queen's 2

Re-e-s-p-e-c-t. A simple word to spell, but one that has been very difficult for the Queen's men's hockey team to earn on the ice over the past few seasons. Even a riveting, three-game playoff victory over the University of Toronto Varsity Blues did not grant them respect from their next playoff opponent, the vaunted Guelph Gryphons.

"We were a little tentative and did not come out with an edge to our game," explained Gaels Head Coach Chris MacDonald. "We realized after the first game that we needed to play a little more like they were playing."
The second game of the series was one for the ages. Queen's elected to dress ailing star Rob Mailloux, who did not deciding game of the series, 4-2.

For the Gaels, the series opened with a whimper. The Gryphons took control of the play early and spirited the Gaels with two quick goals at the start of the second period by winger Scott Smith. Guelph did not let up, running the score to 5-0 by the final buzzer, a score that could have been much worse had it not been for goaltender Jason Skilnick's heroics.
"We were a little tentative and did not come out with an edge to our game," explained Gaels Head Coach Chris MacDonald. "We realized after the first game that we needed to play a little more like they were playing."
The second game of the series was one for the ages. Queen's elected to dress ailing star Rob Mailloux, who did not play in game one, but his presence was shortlived after he was given a game misconduct for an altercation with Guelph defenceman Ken Stark. Stark cross-checked Mailloux in the stomach (he is suffering from an abdominal injury), which sent the Queen's star over the edge — he attacked the Guelph player which led to his expulsion.

MacDonald saw the cross-check as premeditated and was unhappy with the whole situation. "I think that [Stark] was well aware of what was going on with Rob's injury. I am not condoning Rob's reaction, but I am disappointed by them going after him," he said.
MacDonald was particularly appalled at Gryphon coach Marlin Muylert who shouted a number of choice words at

Too much offence

By ADAM KAMINSKY

In the OUA East division semi-final, when Queen's, one of the top defensive basketball teams in the country, took on the University of Toronto, one of the top offensive teams something had to give. With U of T hanging 86 points on the board, it was the Golden Gaels who relented and were eliminated.

U of T 86
Queen's 71

After a 14-6 regular season and impressive tournament performances, the Gaels enjoyed a top-10 ranking most of the year and had dreams of a CIAU championship berth. These dreams were short lived, as their old nemesis the Varsity Blues outscored them 86-71 and ended what many thought was the first Queen's march to the nationals.
Despite the huge offensive output on the part of U of T, Queen's Head Coach Dave Wilson was quick to credit the Blues offence, rather than discuss poor defence on the Gaels part.

"Regardless of how [the season] finished, it was a great season for us. We've been able to build a program which was in the top-10 all year long."

— Head Coach Dave Wilson

"I thought we played reasonably well, but they executed extremely well and hit their shots," he said. Wilson was also surprised by how well the Blues shot the three pointer, hitting six of nine, as this is usually an achilles heel for the Toronto squad.
One reason for U of T's success from deep was Suzanne McAlpine, who scored 19 points on four of four shooting from behind the arc.
"She was a nine per cent three-point shooter all season, we chose not to defend her at the beginning out there and she hit everything," lamented coach Wilson.
The Gaels were paced by Jacqueline Beaudoin's 20 point, seven rebound performance in what was to be their last game of the season.
"Regardless of how [the season] finished, it was a great season for us. We've been able to build a program which was in

Joltin' Joe has left and gone away

By NEATE SAGER

With the passing of baseball legend Joe DiMaggio early last Monday from complications arising from his lung cancer surgery last October, a portal to baseball's past is now forever closed.

For a sport whose cherished history is often likened to classical mythology, the Yankee Clipper in his dotage as baseball's greatest living player, was a perfect bridge to the grand old game's irretrievable past.

In a simpler era, DiMaggio was a symbol of the American dream: Born to Sicilian immigrants, the son of a San Francisco fisherman channeled his hopes and dreams into baseball as an antidote to working on his father's fishing vessel, later explaining, famously, "A ballplayer's got to be kept hungry to become a big-leaguer. That's why no boy from a rich family ever made the big leagues."

When Joltin' Joe was a minor-league standout in his hometown at the height of the Great Depression, his father would turn to the morning newspaper's sports page to see how many hits his son had made in the previous day's game. Seeing two or three hits besides the family name helped quell the worries he harboured for his son's future.

The sight of DiMaggio rounding second base spoke better for baseball than statistics ever could.

When he ascended to the Yankees, the most storied team in professional sports, and given number five to represent the line of succession that began with Ruth (number three) and continued with Gehrig (number four), DiMaggio's comportment on the diamond defied him amongst fans and sportswriters.

Yankee Stadium's expansive outfield was the perfect stage for him to ply his trade as a centerfielder nonpareil, while he remained mum on the home runs it cost him. By all accounts, there were never any exhibitions of emotion or frustration, only graceful, unhurried and fluid movements, accompanied by a shy, self-effacing humility.

His pat answer to why he always gave fully of himself became the epitaph for his career, and a far cry from the moanings of today's millionaire mediocrities: "There is always some kid who may be seeing me for the first or last time. I owe him my best."

At a press conference this week, teammate and fellow Hall of Famer Yogi Berra said with characteristic brevity, "He never walked out to his position."

Ballplayers, once revered icons, were rendered disposable celebrities, meaning DiMaggio's appearances at Opening Day... took on greater significance in his final years.

As such, DiMaggio's rapture lay not in his statistics, which included a .325 lifetime average. Paraphrasing one scribe of the day, the sight of DiMaggio rounding second base spoke better for baseball than statistics ever could.

In the summer of 1941, DiMaggio set an unassailable

Please see Where on page 29

Aching feet? Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- Free assessments/ follow up
- 30 money-back guarantee
- 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Cornwall Bldg
Brookville, ON
K6V 1S9
613-498-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston
Kingston, ON
K7L 1B3
1-545-8100 1-545-1987

Dynamic Orthotics

Get a job!

Experience is not required.

Who'll be hired next?

- ▶ Assistant Managers
Since managing most AMS services takes more than one person, the AMS offers a number of assistant manager positions. Some are full-year opportunities that include the summer, and others require an on-campus presence only during the academic year. All Assistant Manager positions include both planning and operational involvement.
- ▶ Committee Chairs
While a Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner spreads their attention across a number of interests, Committee Chairs are able to devote their energies to specific issues or events within each AMS Commission. Dozens of Committee Chair positions exist in Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Internal Affairs, Municipal Affairs and Social Issues.
- ▶ Co-ordinators
Directly responsible for all aspects of planning and operations for one of three services: the AMS Foodbank, AMS Extended Child Care, or AMS Communications. These paid positions offer individuals the chance to manage important elements of what the AMS offers to Queen's.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

Application due dates

- ▶ Applications for Assistant Managers, Committee Chairs, and Co-ordinators (Communications, Foodbank, and Extended Child Care) are due Monday, March 15th at 16:30.
- ▶ Applications for Service Staff and Committee Member positions are due Wednesday, March 24th at 16:30.

More specific information about each position is available with the application form.

March Madness

The resident hoop junkies take their best guess at the Final Four

By ADAM KAMINSKY

Like a game of musical chairs with 64 participants, the music will begin with every team having a chance to win it all and end with only one sitting in the seat labeled "Champion." The NCAA Division I men's basketball tournament, affectionately known as March Madness, began on Thursday afternoon and as always will conclude at the end of the month on a Monday night with a group of young men cutting the nets. It is the time in between which will feature many shining moments that make this tournament all the more memorable. Enough about the magic, here are the picks.

By DAN ROWE

East — There isn't a team in the East Region that should beat Duke. The Blue Devils are led by All-American center Elton Brand and swingman Corey Maggette, the most talented freshman in the country. What makes this bracket even slightly interesting is that the only team to beat Duke all year is in the East, the #3 seed Cincinnati. The Bearcats have had early round trouble in the past. This year their road to the Sweet Sixteen is easier, but once there they will have to deal with a tough #2 seed from Miami(FL).

West — Stanford and UConn are on a collision course to meet in the West Region Final. Even though UConn won the game between these two teams on Stanford's home court, Stanford's experience and determination will leave UConn coach Jim Calhoun on the outside looking in. In the early rounds of this bracket look for an upset by #10 Gonzaga, which led by guard Matt Santangelo who has drawn comparisons to Gonzaga alumnus John Stockton.

South — Auburn is the most suspicious #1 seed in the entire tournament. While they should make the Elite Eight with little trouble, the Final Four is beyond the reach of the Tigers. Maryland and potential NBA top pick Steve Francis will fall short against the Red Storm. St. John's is well-coached and finally has talented players living up to their potential, most notably forward Ron Artest. Defence minded Detroit could upset UCLA and George Washington will make Bobby Knight's head as red as his sweater.

Midwest — The Midwest is far and away the most interesting bracket. Lamar Odom will lead Rhode Island to a first round upset only to lose in the second round to #4 Arizona. Come the Sweet Sixteen, the top four seeds will be left. Arizona's Jason Terry will outplay Michigan State's Mateen Cleaves at point guard. On the other side, Rick Majerus will finally get Utah past Kentucky only to lose to Arizona who's only National Championship came two years ago as a #4 seed.

Final Four — Duke's depth will be too much for Lute Olson's Arizona Wildcats and St. John's will outlast the gritty Stanford Cardinal. This sets up a rematch of the mid-season game in which St. John's took the Blue Devils to overtime only to lose. Once again, the Red Storm will come up short in a game that is close until the last few minutes.

East — Duke is the best team in the country and its path will be eased by having the weakest second seed, Miami, in their draw and a third seed, Cincinnati, that was strong at the beginning of the year (handing Duke their only loss of the year) but closed out the season very slowly. The darkhouse in this draw is Temple. This John Chaney coached team features a match-up zone that creates nightmares for opponents and a lot more talent than many think. However, this is all moot as the Duke juggernaut will cruise through this region.

Midwest — The Midwest is wild this year, as this region features the top three point guards in the land. Top-seeded Michigan State's Mateen Cleaves, second-seeded Utah's Andre Miller and fourth-seeded Arizona's Jason Terry, are on all of the All-America lists and deservingly so. Despite all this point guard talent in the bracket, it will be point guard Wayne Turner, who had a down year this season, who will lead his Kentucky Wildcats out of the region.

South — Home of the weakest number one seed and a cast of hungry characters. Auburn will be the first top seed to go when they are bounced in the second round, but after that things are much less clear. The final four ticket will be decided in the bottom of the bracket, where second seeded Maryland will battle third seeded St. John's. Maryland and super Juco transfer Steve Francis will prevail and go to the final dance. Watch for UCLA who have a great deal of talent, although injuries have created fear of damaged goods. If UCLA plays their athletic game, they could upset anybody.

West — This region will see the seeds hold firm most of the way. UConn will hold court with its number one seed and move right through the bracket, beating all comers along the way.

Second seeded Stanford will cruise from the bottom of the bracket, although it's regional semi-final game against North Carolina, a team it lost to this season, could be interesting. UConn will beat Stanford, a team it has already beaten on the road this year and give coach Jim Calhoun his first trip to the Final Four. Watch Florida in this bracket, they are coached by

Please see Pure on page 30

$0.06 Copy

$1.10 Chips

$2.50 Pizza

$0.25 Pen

Free trip to any of Air Canada's North American Destinations. Including Hawaii and the Caribbean.

The AMS Card

AIR CANADA

Contest ends March 20, 1999. Opened open to members of the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University in Kingston, ON, Canada, excluding employees paid over $5,000, and Directors of the AMS Board of Directors. Odds dependent on number of valid entries. Prize of two (2) Air Canada "Holiday Long Haul Promotional Passes" is valued at approximately $2,500. Submit a 2,000 word essay on the history of the AMS services (no reproductions) for no purchase entry. Winner must correctly answer a 98-question question. Full contest rules are available at the AMS Front Desk. JUC

...in Toronto for the Summer!

Join the University of Toronto in the Faculty of Arts and Science as a Visiting Student

Take courses for credit towards a degree at your home university. Choose from over 275 courses offered on the downtown St. George campus. Both day and evening courses are available. Enjoy full access to U of T facilities.

Summer Session 1999
(May 10-August 13)

Applications will be accepted as space permits. For Visiting Student application booklet and summer timetable email: info@wdw.utoronto.ca or call 416-978-4444 | FAX: 416-978-4088

Course descriptions at: www.library.utoronto.ca/www/arts\_and\_science/

Woodsworth College | University of Toronto
119 St. George Street, Toronto, ON M5S 1A9

TELEFILE

Easier tax filing and faster refunds for students

It's free, at your fingertips, and available seven days a week.

Check your personalized income tax package for a TELEFILE invitation.

For more information, visit our Web site at:

www.rc.gc.ca/telefile/

Revenue Canada | Revenu Canada | Canada

Queen's comes up a bit short Always next year

Continued from page 25

Mailloux as he skated by. "Coaches should never talk to the other team's players, that is one thing that really upsets me," explained MacDonald.

The altercation seemed to rally the Queen's players, who, after trailing 2-0 in the first period, came roaring back.

Defenceman Wes Booker scored Queen's first goal of the series on a two-man advantage with 38 seconds remaining in the period, sending the teams to the dressing room with the Gryphons leading 2-1. Booker then opened the scoring in the second period with a laser from the point, beating Guelph goaltender Mark Cowan high to the stick side. After Guelph made the score 3-2, Scott Richardson responded for the Gaels on an exceptional short-handed effort, tipping in a Paul Lang pass and tying the score 3-3.

It was at this point that things got a little wild. With a little more than a minute remaining in the second period, Guelph's Scott Sweitzer, a first-year forward, careened into Queen's goaltender Jason Skilnick and received a five-minute major charging penalty. Before the intermission, the Gaels were able to light the lamp on the power play courtesy of Jason Flynn, who took a deft feed from Aaron Knight behind the net.

After a quick breather, the Queen's power play came out on fire in the third period, scoring three goals in the final three and a half minutes of the major penalty. Matt Thorne tallied twice during that time and Scott Richardson scored his second goal of the game. Things were not all rosy for Queen's, as in the midst of their goal run, James Boyd was able to tally a shorthanded goal for the Guelph Gryphons. When Sweitzer returned from his five minute banishment, the

"We had zero respect at the start of the weekend and I am sure that they respect us much more now that the series is done."

—Head Coach Chris MacDonald

Gaels led 7-4.

Guelph continued to pressure the Queen's net, with Skilnick once again standing on his head to keep the puck out. Finally the Gryphons were able to squeeze two goals past the hot goaltender and with just under two minutes remaining Guelph trailed by one goal and had all the momentum. After a veritable flurry of good chances, and one scintillating save, time ran out on the Gryphons and it had now become a one game series.

"We were all up and ready to go [for game two]. Our power play started to work very well," said forward Matt Thorne. "I was just standing in front of the net and I wacked a couple of pucks in. The puck seemed to go our way in this one and the bounces hadn't really gone our way all season."

If the squad was excited for game two, they were flying for game three. Both teams came out and provided entertaining end-to-end hockey, but again it was the Gryphons who opened the scoring in the first period and went to the break leading 1-0.

The second period was more of the same, but again the Queen's power play clicked, with sniper Matt Thorne potting two goals in the session, the second of which came with one second remaining in the period.

The Gaels emerged from the intermission with a 2-1 lead and only 20 minutes separating them from a division crown. That was about 10 minutes too long, as the Gryphons came out and scored the tying goal midway through the period and then Paul Rosebush, an OUA all-star, was able to stake

Guelph to a 3-2 lead. Gryphons' captain Boyd scored an empty net goal to ice the game with under 20 seconds remaining, and ending the Gaels championship dreams.

"We came out hard in the third period. We had them in a vulnerable situation, but when they started taking the play to us, we went into a shell," said coach MacDonald. "In hindsight, we had the opportunity to go up 3-1 and really put the pressure on because they weren't playing disciplined hockey, but we hit posts and couldn't convert."

While disappointed by not advancing to the next round, MacDonald is very happy with how the team overcame adversity. "I think we have moved the program a great distance. We have won a playoff round, we have taken Guelph right to the brink and you can't teach that. After having gone through injuries and off-ice personal problems, we will be a stronger team for it," he said.

The coach was also beaming about the team's playoff performance. "I was really proud of the way we played against Guelph," said MacDonald. "We had zero respect at the start of the weekend and I am sure that they respect us much more now that the series is done."

Six letters has never meant so much to a hockey program.

Continued from page 25

the top-10 all year long," said Wilson.

As has been the case in recent years, the squad is expecting the return of a good number of players, although the program is definitely losing all-conference fifth-year captains shooting guard Steph Glancey and post player Wendy Moon. Point guard Deanah Shelley and the ultra versatile Andrea Thomson are pondering their options with regard to coming back, while the remainder of the team is already decided.

With this wealth of talent preparing for another season, many of the experiences gained this year will serve the program well in the future.

"We can take stuff from this season and move forward and strive to get better next season. If we are better next year we will have another crack at it," said coach Wilson.

With the talent that has been coming to this program over the years, it has become more a question of when the squad will head to the CIAU championships than if the team will make the trip.

Intramural Corner

Queen's Intramurals will be holding an open forum to discuss the future of BEWS Hockey on March 18 from 5:30-7:30 p.m. in room 205 @ the Phys-Ed Centre. Anyone participating or interested in the program is invited to attend.

Queen's intramurals will be accepting nominations for monthly awards as well as end of year major awards until March 19. There are six major including the Silver Whistle, BEWIC Cup, Edwards Trophy, Rehab 86 Award, ASUS Award and PHESA Award. Nomination forms can be picked up and submitted to the intramural office in room 201A @ the Phys-Ed Centre.

The Queen's Intramurals Banquet will take place on Tuesday, March 30 from 6:30 - 8 p.m. in the Singing Frog @ AJ's. Intramural participants, winners and representatives are encouraged to attend as all major individual and team awards will be announced during this occasion. Tickets are available starting March 18 at the PEC wickets for $3 or at the door for $4. Your ticket will include food and admission to any Hub establishment that night.

All intramural participants who wish to take part in playoff action must have signed the Intramural Code of Conduct Agreement before their first playoff game. Teams who use ineligible players will be subject to forfeiting that game.

The winter Bewic Volleyball tournament will take place March 27. The entry deadline is Monday, March 15 and the maximum number of teams for the tournament is 12.

— With files from Brian Grosvenor

Where have you gone?

Continued from page 26

standard for consistency by hitting safely in 56 straight games, captivating a nation vacillating over whether or not to enter World War II.

Baseball was then the only major US professional sport, in a far less fragmented society; consequently, the excitement generated by the streak probably far exceeded last year's home run chase.

DiMaggio's legacy was later furthered by his ephemeral marriage to Marilyn Monroe. It was captured in prose in a memorable passage in Hemingway's The Old Man And The Sea, and in song by Simon and Garfunkel's "Mrs. Robinson," written in 1967, at the nascence of a sociological revolution that would tear down heroes of DiMaggio's magnitude.

Ballplayers, once revered icons, were rendered disposable celebrities, meaning DiMaggio's appearances at Opening Day at Yankee Stadium to throw out the first ball took on greater significance in his final years.

The Bronx Bombers' return to their traditional dominance, presently seeking their third World Series crown in four years as one of their immortals is eulogized, concurs with the notion of baseball as a paradigm for life. Life will of course go on, but something has been altered inexorably for sports fans.

Joltin' Joe has left and gone away.

Queen's Native Students Association is proud to present Aboriginal Awareness Week

Special Readings and Performances by:

Ian Ross
Beth Brant
Gloria Eshkibok
Lee Maracle
Drew Haydon Taylor

Special Events

Pancake Breakfast
The Kanata Dance Troupe
Closing Ceremonies Social
Panel Discussion
QPID Presentation
Social

Watch for details on times and locations of the events

or
Call the Four Directions Aboriginal Student Centre for details @ 533-6970

or
Stop by the Four Directions Aboriginal Student Centre
(The house just across from Vic Hall @ 72 Queen's Crescent)

All Students Are Invited to Attend The Events Free!

March 22 to March 26

CAREER QUESTIONS?

Use your Queen's Connection!

Introducing two new mentoring programs brought to you by the Queen's Alumni Association

Take a Student to Lunch

We'll match you up with a Queen's grad from your home town who works in your field of interest. Then the two of you make an appointment for lunch in May when you return home.

E-Mentoring

We'll match you up with a Queen's grad from anywhere in the world who works in your field of interest. You can chat with this mentor by e-mail throughout the school year.

Sign up now!

mentor@post.queensu.ca

Student Team on Alumni Relations

Out late at night?

Don't want to walk alone?

Looking for a smile to brighten your evening?

Call Walkhome.

We've already walked over 5,000 people this year.

That's more than 10,000 km.

So we think we can help.

Walkhome 533-2662

or you can still call our old number at 545-2662

QUEEN'S/KINGSTON

COMMUNITY COMMITMENT

FOR STUDENTS WHO DEMONSTRATE DEDICATION AND COMMITMENT IN THEIR INVOLVEMENT IN THE QUEEN'S AND KINGSTON COMMUNITIES

NOMINATE YOURSELF OR A FRIEND!
NOMINATION PACKAGES ARE AVAILABLE OUTSIDE THE AMS FRONT ENTRANCE AND DUE: THURSDAY MARCH 18TH BY 5PM IN THE AMS FRONT OFFICE

Pure madness

Continued from page 27

young and dynamic Billy Donovan and have a team that matches his personality.

Final Four — Short and painless. That is the prognosis for the Kentucky-Duke game, a rematch of last year's regional final. Duke will be clinical in its quest to make up for last year's second-half debacle and will beat the Wildcats soundly. The other game will be extremely entertaining, but Rip Hamilton will make the difference, shutting down Francis on one end, and scoring big buckets on the other. UConn will beat those very same Blue Devils in a tightly played contest. Once again the backcourt combination of Hamilton and Khalid El-Amin will step up, and the Huskies will be comfortably seated when the music stops for the very last time.

BY IAN BRISBIN

The Duke Blue Devils are universally recognized as the most prohibitive favourites since the 1990-91 UNLV squad seeking to repeat as national champions. Of course, any casual observer remembers the Saturday in Indianapolis which saw Dean Smith ejected and Duke stun the to-that-point undefeated Runnin' Rebels. All of which goes to illustrate that for the next three weeks, college basketball fans would do well to expect the unexpected.

The traditional "power" conferences, while consistently placing strongly in the polls over the course of the season, have been disappointing in terms of their performance. In a season trumpeted as their return to national prominence, the Big East has not performed to the lofty standards of Connecticut, Miami and St. John's, a team which while strong, to this point remains best known for a game it didn't win.

The Big Ten put 7 teams into the field, however the "parity" which has characterized the conference this season (with the exception of Michigan State, who deserves a top seed, and perhaps Ohio State) seems more the product of mediocrity than achievement. The ACC, which seems a solid choice as consistently the most accomplished conference of the decade was segregated into the haves and the have-nots, clearly shown by the refusal of the Selection Committee to allow a fourth, decidedly undeserving team into the field.

Even the mighty SEC sees the Auburn Tigers earn a surprising top seed, which most pick as the most likely of the four not to matriculate in St. Petersburg, and must be satisfied with defending champion Kentucky being granted a very dangerous 3 seed.

But keep your eyes on the PAC-10. Until UNLV broke the string in 1990, no team from west of the Mississippi had won a championship since the last of the UCLA titles in the mid-70s, and in the 1990s, it would seem that the balance of power has moved west. While UCLA and Arizona seem marked for a quick exit (Detroit? Rhode Island?), Stanford, and Utah seem capable of long tournament runs. Even inconsistent Washington has all of the ingredients for tournament success. So with what are we left?

Upsets, particularly from those schools which dominated small conferences. While Duke is undoubtedly the best team in the country this season, the College of Charleston showed that they weren't afraid of the ACC with their performance against a hot North Carolina squad. While Duke could well romp, I'm keeping an eye on the Cougars by virtue of them being the most difficult 8 seed to draw in the tournament. Tennessee is undeserving of a 4 seed and will be exposed by a solid, if small, Delaware team. Indiana and Iowa fans should tune in early because that may be their only opportunity to see their teams. Even Kansas, finally unsaddled by top-seeded expectations needs to tread lightly in their opening round match-up with the Purple Aces of Evansville.

Final Four picks? I will stick with the Blue Devils, Michigan State, Connecticut and Maryland (don't miss any chance to see Steve Francis), although I expect Rhode Island to emerge as the darlings of the tournament and Lamar Odom to write his lottery ticket for a jump into the NBA draft. Duke is the obvious choice to cut down the nets Monday, but that's why they play the games...

LaSalle sports experts FINAL STANDINGS

And so it ends... Congratulations, Chad Rawn on being our Grand Prize Winner! Your pool picks have earned you a replica hockey jersey Chad had the following team: Jagr, Leclair, Lindros, Lidstrom, MacInnis, Hasek, and Brashers. Great picks up front and on the blue line, considering that Hasek isn't on LaSalle Sports Experts. His absence was noted by a large portion of our players, as they contributed for the past two weeks. Also, a big shout-out is due to Thomas Leung, who earns the runner-up prize of a gift certificate to watch their relative pool placing drop.

The ideal team would have been to have Jagr, Lindros, and Selanne up front. Selanne came back in style after his injury earlier this season. On the blue line, the men to have were Al MacInnis and Niklas Lidstrom. Despite his absence of late, the Dominator squeaked out the most points from our slate as well. This was due, in no small part to his eight (count 'em!) shutouts. The man in the penalty box for us this year was Florida's Paul Laitz, with close to 200 PIM to make him stand out among our goals.

We must once again thank the folks out at LaSalle Sports Experts for once again sponsoring the pool, and providing the prizes. Best of luck to everyone, and see all you returning students in September for us this year was Florida's Paul Laitz, with close to 200 PIM to make him stand out among our goals.

The following table lists the pool players for the period ended Monday, March 8. All stats are compiled based upon those published in the Globe & Mail.

Total	Name	Faculty/Year	418	Mauro Lo Dico	Grad
473	Chad Rawn	Arts'98	417	Chris Bodali	Arts'00
470	Thomas Leung	Comm'00	417	Lyndsay Holam	Arts'99
464	Ryan Cullin	Arts'01	416	Sean Morency	Arts'99
464	Stephen Leung	Sci'99	415	Rob MacNeil	Arts'99
463	Ken Hawkins	Arts'00	415	Shawn Smith	Sci'02
462	Peter Gillespie	Arts'99	415	Ken Iwasa	Meds
461	Stephen Raper	Arts'01	415	Will Lee	Sci'01
458	Paul Kim	Arts'02	414	Dan Iwachiv	Comm'01
458	Dave Gilbert	Arts'02	414	Sven Mascarenhas	Arts'01
457	Sarah Grosbie	Arts'02	414	Paul Joblin	Arts'00
455	Allison Malloy	Sci'01	414	Gabe Taylor	Sci'00
454	James Prentice	Sci'01	413	Rob McMurrich	Arts'01
453	Angelina Whiteman	Arts'00	413	Nick Sinclair	Arts'99
451	Rick Schippling	Arts'02	413	Laurie Richardson	PHE
451	Seth Cullen	Arts'99	413	Franklin Say	Comm'01
451	Geillid Templeton	Sci'01	412	Eugene Lei	Comm'01
451	Sergiy Kolosov	Arts'00	411	Jaime Puschak	Comm'99
449	Jeff Child	Arts'00	411	Derek Jackson	Sci'01
449	Sean Springer	Arts'00	411	Jonathan Kerr	Arts'02
449	Scott Snowden	Sci'01	410	Pete Cameron	Comm'99
448	Adam Kaminsky	Arts'99	410	Greg Holohan	Comm'01
447	Corbin Pahl	Arts'00	410	Wade Williams	Law
447	Tara Harrison	Arts'02	409	John Ford	Sci'00
447	Dan Lior	Grad	409	Gail Bouchette	Sci'01
445	Sheldon S. Swick	Sci'00	408	Anthony Firman	Staff
442	Trish Kirkwood	Sci'01	407	Ken Russell	Staff
441	Camron Kenalty	Arts'00	407	Jason Townsend	Arts'01
440	Jeremy Gaudet	Arts'01	407	Matthew Thompson	Arts'00
440	Ann Evans	Comm'98	407	Karen Callery	Grad
440	Matt Murl	Comm'01	406	Blake Shaffer	Arts'00
440	B. Flande	Sci'98	406	Jon Powell	Arts'01
440	Saylo Lam	Sci'99	405	Neil Timney	Arts'00
439	Dev Patel	Sci'01	404	Matt McCloy	Sci'01
439	Dave Lanowaz	Comm'99	404	Mark Rogers	Sci'01
438	Kevin Cymbalista	Sci'02	404	Eric Tam	Sci'00
437	Mike Lloyd	Sci'99	403	Parrick Connolly	Comm'00
435	Ron Deahl	Comm'01	403	Karin Prochazka	Arts'01
435	Aaron Collins	Arts'99	402	Chris Elvidge	Grad
434	Michael Casey	Arts'02	402	Scott White	Sci'00
433	Todd Hoare	Sci'01	401	Carolyn Russell	M.Sc.
433	Ridge Cola	Arts'99	401	Bryan Grossvenor	PHE'99
433	Dr. Ronald Holden	Faculty	401	Stefan Murray	Arts'00
433	Krista Galbraith	Arts'01	401	Jesse Shantz	Arts'00
432	Adam Watchorn	Sci'02	401	Eric Tremblay	Arts'00
432	Amy Deleite	Arts'02	400	Steve Gannoy	Arts'99
432	Barry Woodart	Comm'01	400	Andrew Guy	PHE'99
432	Jay Fitzsimmons	Arts'01	399	Rob Hutcheson	Arts'02
431	Jon Swane	Arts'99	398	Anne Brodie	Arts'00
430	Eric Trought	Sci'00	398	Aaron Chan	Law
430	Eric Langlais	Arts'02	397	Kevin Brown	Grad
430	Jim Gui	Ph.D	397	Jessica Cole	Arts'02
430	Bob Ewart	Staff	397	Gordon Thomson	Grad
430	Erin Rees	Comm'99	396	Mike Rossier	Sci'01
429	Ben Drory	Arts'99	396	James Leonard	Arts'02
429	Michelle Kelly	Arts'01	395	Kim Foreman	Arts'00
429	Deirdre Horgan	Arts'99	393	Chris Toivonen	Comm'99
429	Nikolins Mladrak	Arts'99	392	Harold Yntema	Staff
428	Lasmarie Picken	Arts'00	392	Mark Crawford	Law
428	Lawrence Lau	Sci'01	390	Laura Stewart	Sci'02
428	Derek Broomfield	Sci'98	389	Jackie Penford	Arts'99
428	Mike Fenwick	Arts'01	389	Jeff Fairbairn	Sci'99
427	Karlus Adam	Arts'00	388	Karen Beattie	Arts'00
427	Alex Chan	Sci'01	388	Lawrence Hsieh	Comm'01
426	Steve Chong	M.Sc.	387	Kirsten Graham	Arts'99
426	Sarah Routledge	Comm'99	387	A. D'Alessandro	Staff
425	Steven Lowe	Grad	386	Ila Dalcourt	Staff
425	Emma Hutchinson	Arts'02	386	Harley Lefton	Arts'01
424	Vivick Mehta	Sci'01	385	Liz Moxington	Arts'99
424	Karlchen Meyer	Comm'99	384	James Terjuntan	Arts'00
424	J. Errin Starzynski	Arts'01	383	Rod Kyd	PHE'01
424	Kate Kearney	Arts'02	382	Gallitiedo Bae	Arts'99
424	Eitan Shapiro	Arts'02	379	Jon Lillie	PHE'01
424	Nicole Liasis	Arts	378	Perry Lao	Arts'99
423	Peter Phillip	Arts'00	378	Tavin McLachlin	PHE'00
423	John Trenholm	Arts'01	373	Neil Akharya	Arts'01
423	Jon Grossman	Arts'01	373	Brian Luke	Arts'99
423	Robert Walker	Arts'01	373	Kaston Leung	Sci'01
423	Peter Graham	Comm'00	370	Jay Bondar	Meds
422	Laura MacHardy	Sci'00	369	Brad Greatrix	Arts'00
422	Jim Whittington	Arts'00	368	Nick Cheeseman	Arts'99
422	L. Dmytrenko	Comm'00	367	Julie Lorenzini	Nurs'01
422	Rick Kargus	Law	366	Wesley Hung	Staff
421	Cammie Guest	Arts'01	365	Dennis Davidson	Staff
421	Mar Casbon	Arts'01	362	Douglas Kwong	Sci'01
421	Carmen Tse	Arts'99	362	Julie Gair	Arts'99
421	George Pfaff	Sci'99	361	Jesse Cullen	Grad
421	John Fagnou	Sci'99	352	Margot Leney	PHE'02
420	Anne - Michelle Ryder	Arts'01	348	Nathan Sager	Arts'00
420	Dave Mossington	Arts'02	347	Cynthia Fekken	Faculty
419	Greene Martin	Comm'01	343	Marina Gully	Arts'00
419	Jeff Garard	Sci'98	338	Mike Belzner	Comm'99
418	Mike Keasr	Sci'98	338	Dan Gratto	Staff
418	Allison Ryan	Comm'00	331	Shawn Desbois	Sci'00
418	Laura Shearer	PHE'99	328	Doug Gerula	Arts'00
418	Garry O'Neill	Staff
418	Andrew Boeking	Sci'00

Intramural BEWS Hockey Review Open Forum

Change It? Keep It As Is? Drop It?

Have your say...
Thursday, March 18
5.30-7.30 p.m.
Room 205
Phys Ed Centre

THIS YEAR...
~ Did you play on an Intramural league or tournament team?
~ Were you an Intramural individual or team winner?
~ Is your Faculty or Unit leading the points race?
~ Do you like to have FUN?

If 'YES' to any of the above, your presence is a MUST at the...

Annual Intramural Awards Banquet

Tues. 30 March
The Singing Frog
6:30 - 8 pm

Tickets: $3 in advance (PEC Wickets starting March 18th) or $4 at the door

Admission includes cover at any Hub establishment that night.

Food & Fun

Spring is right around the corner & it's time for....

Queen's Summer Leagues

Grad Soccer (m/w) & Coed Softball

Team entry packages now available at the PEC (front lobby)

Grad Soccer League

Team Registration: Deadline April 16 @ PEC wickets (With $25 deposit)

Manager's Meeting: April 20, Grad Club @ noon

Official's Meeting: April 21, Grad Club @ noon (paid positions!)

1st League Games: May 3rd (Sundays-Thursdays)

League Ends: Mid July

# Teams: 6 Women's/12 Men's depends on # teams, but about $150/team

Team Fees: $150/team

Sponsored by: SPGS, The Grad Club, & Queen's Athletics

Check out the Grad Soccer League Website at: qink.queensu.ca/~3dj15/gsl/

Coed Softball League

Team Registration: Deadline April 29 @ PEC wickets (With $50 deposit)

Manager's Meeting: May 10, Rm 205 PEC, @ noon

1st League Games: May 25 (Sundays-Thursdays)

League Ends: July 29

Annual Tournament: Aug. 7/8

# Teams: 32 (maximum); first come basis (min. 5men/5women per team)

Divisions: Rec & Competitive depends on # teams, but about $185/team

Team fees: $185/team

Sponsored by: SPGS & Queen's Athletics

Check out the Summer Softball League Website at: <http://civil.queensu.ca/indivd/brown/softball>

WINTER

STILL NEED A SHOVEL?

YOUR STREET CAPTAIN'S GOT ONE.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Let the Battle begin

All around great efforts spoiled by bad sound system

CONCERT REVIEW

BY DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

I've always had a deep respect for anybody with the will and dedication to learn to play a musical instrument. Personally, I've had to come to terms with the fact that I have not a single musical bone in my body. My musical talents could be summed up as follows: running around as a small child singing "skinamaringkadinkadink" while banging two spoons, hoedown style, against my knees, and later being told by a music teacher, during an audition for a high school musical, that my singing sounded like someone was stringing up a dead cat.

So, naturally, I was pumped about the Queen's Entertainment Agency's annual Battle of the Bands, where I could see the local talent of the Queen's community twist and churn out music in their own funky, hoedown manner.

For that small contingent of readers

Members of Franklin's Fault and The Prototype rock out on Wednesday.

who don't yet know about the Battle of the Bands, know just this: previous winners of The Battle have been the local Kingston band Hedone, The Inbreds, and, most famously, The Tragically Hip.

Peddling their musical wares on the first night of the competition were Uncle Fish's Technicolour Remedy, Franklin's Fault, The Prototype, and Reno's Hitmen.

First to come on stage was Uncle Fish's Technicolour Remedy. Composed of a drummer, a female vocalist playing the tambourine, a male vocalist on rhythm guitar, and also a bass and lead guitar player, the band sandwiched their own songs between the opening and closing performance of a funkadelic version of "Dancing In The Street."

Listening to the music, I couldn't help but conjure up a mental picture of some bell-bottomed, bleary-eyed hipster strutting down some redbrick alley, bouncing along to Uncle Fish's music.

The band had a good sound with the most shining element being the guitar playing, but I found that, as a whole, they seemed to lack the familiarity and cohesion essential for a standout performance.

Immediately following Uncle Fish was Franklin's Fault, a high energy, seven person ensemble consisting of a drummer, guitarist, keyboardist, trombone player, trumpeter player, and male and female vocalist. From the outset, the band had an amazing amount of energy as they pumped up the crowd with exciting renditions of the Ghostbusters theme song, "Video Killed the Radio Star," as well as a number of their own songs.

Of all the groups, Franklin's Fault elicited the best audience participation. As the band played original songs like "Housemate Loving" and "Run and Hide," fans cartwheeled and did bodyslides across the dance floor.

It seemed that, throughout their performance, the dancing, laughing, twisting and smiling Franklin's Fault were actually having more fun than the audience.

Providing a stark contrast to the two previous performances was The Prototype, the more hardcore, in-your-face element of the night. The guitar, bass, drummer and keyboardist blanketed the room in a metal-velvet curtain of sound while the audience was deluged with the awesome alternating strong and certain, and controlled and shaky voice of lead singer Ian Shackleton. You couldn't easily dance to this hard rock kind of music, but only sit back and appreciate what you were feeling in even the folds of your clothes.

PHOTOS BY SEAN RICHMOND

The Prototype gave an excellent performance but it is likely that they will have a harder time advancing to the finals than some of the other bands. This seemed apparent to quite a few people as I couldn't help but overhear some people at the table behind me state that this kind of music wouldn't be properly appreciated by a Queen's audience.

Rounding out the night was Reno's Hitmen. It appeared as if it was going to be a good performance, but, due to tech-

Please see Battle on page 40

Is Bueller here? Bueller?

Queen's Players set to chock up the laughs

Members of Queen's Players wait for Bueller.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

SHOW PREVIEW

By EDRIK THAY

Puzzled as to what you'll get if you cross Top Gun, Ally McBeal and Ferris Bueller's Day Off with some retro eighties music and Top 40 hits? Your prayers have been answered.

From March 17 — 27, the Queen's Players will be putting on a little show called Ally McBeuller's Day Off within the intimate confines of the Clark Hall Pub.

Spung from the fertile, twisted minds of Ben Birchard, Kris Bruun and Tim Evans, Ally McBeuller's Day Off is the product of a month and a half of preliminary writing, followed by an intense month of rehearsals, and what Birchard describes as a "collaborative effort amongst the writers, cast and directors."

It is the first script for these self-described "virgin writers," and Birchard considers the experience a "very nerve-racking thing when people were reading through and no one was laughing. But it's evolved and I find it funny still." Bruun maintains that the play "is not exactly great literature... but it's very simple, very drunken, and easy to understand."

"Every number will be a show-stopper."

— Music Director, Chris Hicks

The play sounds perfect for the usual Queen's Players audience, don't you think?

Ally McBeuller's Day Off is, in the words of director Lyraanda Martin-Evans, "all about saving Ferris from the fate of his detention. The show is about having a good time... we poke fun at pop culture and at Queen's."

The play is set within the Queen's Law program, which was recently lambasted by Maclean's. This Queen's Law program, however, is a little different. According to musical director Chris Hicks, this law school is the "Top Gun school of law," one, presumably, that will take the best of the best and make them better. The show itself boasts 12 characters, each receiving equal billing, with a cast that Hicks describes as being a "mix of talented vocalists and people who are damn funny."

There is also a 10 piece band thrown into the production, and for the first time ever, a full brass section; Hicks guarantees that the "sound will be enormous. The full brass arrangements were time-consuming, but it'll be worth it. Every number will be a show-stopper."

For Martin-Evans, this play is the culmination of her four years as a Queen's Player, her "final show, final hurrah." The final curtain goes up on March 27, but as Martin-Evans points out, "every night can be a different show... we feed off the audience and their energy."

As if that were not enough pressure, this year marks the 20th anniversary of the Queen's Players. On March 20, various Queen's alumni will descend upon the QP for a pre-play, semi-formal gala event to celebrate that milestone.

"[The play] is not exactly great literature... but it's very simple, very drunken, and easy to understand."

— One of the creators of the show, Kris Bruun

Tickets are $10 — not a bad price for drink, party and play. The March 19 show has already sold out, but tickets are still available for other dates.

There are still opportunities to see the Queen's Players torch passed from Martin-Evans to Hicks, to witness the first ever production of a Birchard-Bruun-Evans play, to hear a full brass section, and, if nothing else, to have a few drinks and be entertained. After all, Bruun just wants the audience, in the words of Hal Johnson and Joanne McLeod, to "keep fit and have fun."

Devil with a white dress?

Queen's Drama major Blood Wedding a minor success

Battling it out, Actors perform in Blood Wedding.

PHOTO BY ROBIN BRENER

PLAY REVIEW

BY DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

I had the opportunity to attend the opening night of Blood Wedding, the second of two annual Queen's Drama Department productions. To be quite honest, I'm not sure that, as a whole, it was really either good or bad. I don't want this to sound like I'm fence-sitting or something equally worthless because that's not what I'm trying to do. Mainly, my problem with the play comes from considering the production in light of what the playwright Lorca wanted the audience to experience.

Written in 1933 by Federico Garcia Lorca, a Spanish playwright and poet, Blood Wedding is a fact-based play that takes place in a region of Spain called Andalusia.

The audience was presented with a few trees and shrubs of emotion when, really, Lorca was trying to paint the picture of an entire forest.

The main thrust is the exploitation of the forces of human need in relation to the vagaries of love and loss. This is shown with the conflicted character of the Bride, played by Lianne Hodgson, who is confronted with making a choice between the love of her youth, and the commitment of her Groom. It is also augmented by the lament of the groom's mother, played by Jodi Essery, over the loss of her husband and one of her sons to the loathsome brutality of mankind.

My problem lies in the fact that too many of the cast members seemed to force emotions, trying to fill the void of what they thought the characters might be feeling. This suggested to me that they didn't properly feel or understand who their characters really were. I'm not saying that the cast had absolutely no understanding of the characters, only that, due to their youth, they couldn't have had the life experience needed to relate to and understand the predicaments of the hard-lived peasant characters in the play.

My problem lies in the fact that too many of the cast members seemed to force emotions into filling the void of what they thought the characters might be feeling.

The audience was presented with a few trees and shrubs of emotion when, really, Lorca was trying to paint the picture of an entire forest.

There was, however, a lot about the play that I did like.

The simple yet striking design of the set, a kind of whitewashed sidestreet of a typical Spanish town, with its clean combination of neutral tones of off-whites, taupes and grays, made the play a visual pleasure. I didn't realize until halfway through that this was done to help affect the audience's mood by allowing different colours, or prints of interlocking branches, to seemlessly mingle on the set and suggest an emotional depth within the setting itself.

I also really enjoyed how the scenes flowed into each other. This was greatly aided by the Guitarist Towns Person (played by Rick Belchior), who sat on the upper level of the set and picked away at his acoustic guitar, the quiet actions of the cross bearing beggar woman, (played by Esther Batlow) and the Moon, played by Anthony Farrell.

The one thing about Blood Wedding that I thought was absolutely wonderful was the singing. The cast had great voices and provided us with many opportunities to appreciate them. One scene I wouldn't mind seeing again is the one where Leonardo's Wife, (played by Jennifer McGetrick), and the Mother-in-Law (played by Lora Cotter), sang a soothing, liquid-silk lullaby to Leonardo's Wife's baby.

Another positive element of Blood Wedding that jumped out at me was how well written it was. You could tell that Lorca had been a poet because there were so many great lines. One line that keeps bouncing around in my head was said by the Bride, in regards to her indecisiveness and how it caused the death of Leonardo, the love of her youth (played by David Ritchie) and her Bridegroom, (played by Andrew Shaver). She talks about their dead bodies and mouths broken with fists full of snow, but you'd probably have to be there to appreciate that particular line.

Weighing the options, I would have to say that, despite its weaknesses, Blood Wedding is a worthwhile experience and should be seen for all its positive reasons. This play isn't perfect, but it is, I suppose, a bit more good than bad. But don't take my word for it. Find out for yourself.

HEART AND STROKE FOUNDATION OF Queen's

Presents:

A Recertification Course in Basic Rescuer CPR
Saturday, March 20
$25 Cost
For Information and Registration
Email 8CL@Qlink.QueensU.Ca

LSAT
MCAT
GMAT
www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.
LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
MCAT - Start in June, July, August
GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

Footloose
in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)

Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

St. Patrick's Day

Last chance to practice...
St. Patrick's Day Wed. Mar. 17
...slanté....

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS

$2.49 sunday breakfast
sun-tues
1/2 price wings*
wed
1/2 price nachos*
*after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS

Fri Mar 12
Kidd Rasta
and lite PeaceMakers
reggae..reggae..

HARD CORE Headstones

Kingston's own Hugh Dillon leads his band at AJ's

Headstrong. Hugh Dillon gets nasty with the crowd at AJ's last Wednesday night.

PHOTO BY JILL O'NEILL

CONCERT REVIEW
BY ERIK MISSIO

Wednesday night, I was spat on, cut by shards of glass, suffered a minor case of whiplash, and was handed a free bottle of Molson Canadian. Which of course, all translates into an awesome performance at AJ's Hangar by the Headstones, fronted by Kingston's own Hugh Dillon.

There's something about Dillon's stage presence and something about his musical persona that defies explanation. People who have seen the Headstones in concert know what I'm talking about, as does anyone who saw him in the film Hardcore Logo. Hugh Dillon is Hugh Dillon, and like him or hate him, he's not bound to change. Storming the stage with a look of defiantly passionate apathy, Dillon is the show. He's got attitude, panache and guts to spare.

Dillon commands attention. From his mock assassination attempts of the concertgoers on AJ's upper floor to his physical gestures regarding either masturbation or suicide, all eyes are focused on the band's frontman.

Whether offering drinks to the crowd, or shattering bottles with his microphone stand, Dillon commands attention. From his mock assassination attempts of the concertgoers on AJ's upper floor to his physical gestures regarding either masturbation or suicide, all eyes are focused on the band's frontman.

Which is almost a shame.

The Headstones boast one of the tightest, most competent rock musicians this reviewer has heard. Dale Harrison's intense drumming combines with Tim White's stellar base lines to provide the skeleton for the roar of Trent Carr's guitar.

And, man, does the guitar roar. Carr played puppeteer with the crowd, enticing them to jump, head bang, or (at least for one guy) body surf. Both the careful strumming of his acoustic guitar and the loud, thrashing jabs of his axe united with Dillon's tight, often snarly, voice to create the perfect ambience of bar-room rock 'n roll.

And rock 'n roll is what the Headstones are all about. For those unfamiliar with their sound, my best offering is to envision a drunken, very angry Frank Sinatra joining forces with a powerfully punkish metal band.

In any case, from the opening chords of "Picture Frame of Rage" to the closing of the first set with a phenomenal performance of "Unsound," the band blasted the collective audience through the head and never once stopped firing.

Both "Cubically Contained" and "When Something Stands for Nothing" became sing-a-longs, while the frenetic, downright scary "Oh My God" possessed the crowd, driving them into a fury.

Beyond playing songs from their three albums, the Headstones also offered a few covers, be they snippets from the Hip, a revamp of Cheryl Crow ("All I Wanna Do is Buy a Gun") or a brilliant rendition of the Travelling

Willbury's "Tweeter and the Monkeyman" with the infamous line "In Kingston, where everything's legal as long as you don't get caught."

Hugh Dillon is Hugh Dillon, and like him or hate him, he's not bound to change. Storming the stage with a look of defiantly passionate apathy, Dillon is the show. He's got attitude, panache and guts to spare.

Surprisingly, the opening band, which is now called "Color," made just as strong an impression on this reviewer. Both original songs and an inspired performance of the Police's "Message in a Bottle" were ample showcases for this band's capable musical backing and excellent lead vocals.

The lead singer's ability to shift from a cooing, lullaby falsetto to a screeching growl while singing impressive, introspective lyrics was a breath of fresh air compared to many Kingston opening acts as of late, and his charisma could not go unnoticed. He did his best to get the seemingly passive crowd involved, but one particular battle with an uncooperative microphone stood out, as he threatened and mocked its stubbornness.

Hugh Dillon, on the other hand, probably would've just smashed the bloody thing and kept on singing.

Flor-ing the crowd

Andrea Florian hits campus

Canadian songwriter Andrea Florian takes on the Alfie's crowd tonight.

CONCERT PREVIEW
BY STEFAN MURRAY

In a folk music world constantly soul-searching and trying to find its place, one of its inhabitants is clearly grounded.

Andrea Florian, a singer-songwriter from Toronto who is playing at Alfie's Friday evening, has found her place as a personal-political songstress in the rapidly redefining genre, all at only 23 years of age.

Her music, characterized by honest and heartfelt lyrics, has a definite political slant, reflecting her feminist values and concerned nature.

"I think that personal has a lot to do with political and it's really important to do the things I believe in," said Florian.

Florian, playing with a four-piece outfit, which she described as the "kings of groove," has recently released her third album, SomeHurryGood and is currently touring Eastern Ontario and Quebec in support of it.

"The response [to the disc] has been phenomenal, it has sold out in many stores in Toronto," said Florian.

Her tours have brought her to campus's in Guelph and Montreal and Friday's show marks her first visit to Queen's. Florian claims that the venues in the university circuit can often garner the best responses.

Florian found her place as a personal-political songstress in the rapidly redefining genre, all at only 23 years of age.

"I think that students are really struggling to figure out what they want to do, and that is the music I am trying to write."

Florian believes that her music is very headstrong and important, Friday's show at Alfie's will test that claim.

Andrea Florian will be performing at Alfie's tonight.

Kingston's Newest Adventure!

LAZER'S EDGE

ATRIUM MALL
541 DAYS ROAD
KINGSTON, ONTARIO

LAZER'S EDGE... is a heart pounding, adrenaline pumping full immersion interactive laser game. It is a cross between traditional tag and 20th Century Cops and Robbers. It is played in a labyrinth filled with special effects.

As you experience the latest in interactive games equipment, you will wish that you came sooner!! It's great for all ages and levels of physical ability.

LAZER'S EDGE... will challenge your mind, your coordination, your reflexes and especially your survival instincts!

For more info... Regular and group rates extreme indoor FUN!!

(613) 634-8366

King of freaks

Torture King astounds and disturbs

SHOW REVIEW
BY JEFF CHILD

Ever since the first conjoined twins toured the countryside as Barnam & Bailey's main sideshow attraction, audiences around the world have been intrigued by the oddities that lie on the outer fringes of society.

As we enter the 21st century, sideshow entertainment continues to satisfy our craving for the unbelievable, unnatural and inhuman aspects of life.

On Friday, March 5, one of the world's only remaining and authentic sideshows set up its big top in Alfie's Pub for a spectacle that the audience would not soon forget.

One by one, The Torture King penetrated his forearm, bicep and mouth with the sanitized instruments.

The stage was set for an incredible show. Organs ground out mechanical music, while the ringleader teased the crowd's craving for human oddities. The brightly painted curtains advertised the main attractions of the show. Caricatures of Zamora the Torture King, Mighty Jack the strongman and Flex the rubber boy enticed the audience and stirred their yearning for the deviant performers that hid behind the backdrop. However, despite the build-up, the crowd had no indication of how strange the show would be.

Dressed in a jet-black karate gi, the ominous Torture King emerged on the stage. Glaring at the crowd and with a serious tone he warned that, "The performance is for your entertainment. Some of the things you will see before you may disturb you and as the evening progresses each act will become increasingly stranger."

As a skeptic I simply brushed off the Torture King's warning as a technique used to capture the crowd's attention. In my mind the show was just going to consist of some clever hocus pocus to make us feel that we got our money's worth.

Two hours later I was gasping for air. After the Torture King swallowed several swords whole and took a razor sharp cleaver to his bare chest in efforts to dice various vegetables, the crowd pleaded for more.

The freak show took a twist, literally, when Flex the rubber boy took the stage with a tennis racket in hand. With a snap, crackle, pop, Flex dislocated his shoulders and hips to fit through the small opening of the racket. The audience cringed in disbelief as Flex distorted his thin frame into progressively smaller confinements. For his climactic exit, Flex squeezed into a minuscule box, which resembled an oversized briefcase.

While Flex wooed the audience with his odd ability, Mighty Jack failed to intrigue the audience — bending metal rods and pulling nails out of two by fours with his mouth did not seem to satisfy the audience's urge for unnatural acts. The crowd seemed more impressed by Mighty Jack's over-emphasized manly package that bulged the fabric of his nut-hugging bicycle shorts, than his outstanding strength.

While the sideshow presented shocking acts, the crowd was not prepared for the gruesome finale. Zamora took three skewers from a sterilized package and warned the crowd to look away. Of course, Zamora's warnings only heightened the audience's attention to the silver skewers. One by one, The Torture King penetrated his forearm, bicep and mouth with the sanitized instruments.

Those who were skeptical of the validity of the show were soon covering in the arms of acquaintances, but human nature took over: the crowd's curiosity for the extraordinary got the better of them. Screams of horror and disbelief were soon followed by laughs and applause.

"Some of the things you will see before you may disturb you and as the evening progresses each act will become increasingly stranger".

— Zamora, The Torture King

The Torture King and his cohorts successfully challenged our perceptions of rational thought and proved once again that contemporary entertainment still profits from the shocking and unbelievable fringes of human existence.

COLEMAN-ELLIS LECTURES
UNDERGRADUATE COLLOQUIUM
Free Probability Theory

by
Dr. Jamie Mingo
Queen's University

Abstract

A random variable is a function from the set of possible outcomes of an experiment to the real numbers. For example, if the experiment is to toss a fair coin  $n$  times,  $S_n$  could represent the number of heads observed. In 1733 Abraham De Moivre found the "bell" or normal curve, i.e. given  $n \ll \infty$  the probability that  $\frac{S_n - n/2}{\sqrt{n/4}}$  is asymptotic to  $\frac{1}{\sqrt{2\pi}} \int_{-\infty}^{\infty} e^{-t^2/2} dt$ .

A  $n \times n$  gaussian random matrix is a self-adjoint matrix with entries which are independent normal random variables. The eigenvalues of such a matrix can be used to model the energy levels of atomic nuclei. In 1958 Eugene Wigner proved that the expected proportion of eigenvalues in the interval  $[a,b]$  is asymptotic to  $\frac{1}{2\pi} \int_a^b \sqrt{4-x^2} dx$  as  $n \rightarrow \infty$ . This law is now known as Wigner's semi-circular law.

I will explain how to make these ideas precise and how it leads to Voiculescu's theory of "free probability" where independence is replaced by "freeness" (in the sense of free groups).

8:00pm, Wednesday, March 17, 1999
Jeffery Hall, Room 118

Less is more

After 5 questions women

ART REVIEW
BY VIRGINIA WIGNORE

Striptease starring Demi Moore introduced stripping into mainstream Hollywood. After 5, a collection of paintings by Martha Markowsky provides us with another — in art.

Markowsky's view however, is much less sensational. The strippers and dancers in her pictures are released of their glamour and simply presented for what they are — aging women whose stomachs protrude, whose arms are flabby and whose backs ripple with fat. As a result, the strippers become less of the focus and merely provide the background colour for other interactions.

Markowsky is fascinated by people, and the various activities that have shaped and continue to influence their lives. Her most recent work focuses on the many changes that occur when night falls, in that costumes are donned and identities are altered. Within the paintings, each individual seems to possess a unique story. The theme to each of these stories seems to be the idea of feeling isolation in a crowd. All of the women in the paintings are scantily clad, with little distinguishing the dress of the customers from the dress of the strippers.

Overall, a sense that each woman is simply waiting to be rescued by her Prince Charming pervades; an impression that is almost comical, considering that the majority of the figures in Markowsky's paintings are female.

In the painting entitled "The Club," crimson, electric blues and blacks are used to help tell the stories of the forgotten women. The backdrop is provided by three faded strippers, each indistinguishable from the next, and rows of colourful liquor bottles. In the forefront is a middle-aged man, a solitary figure dressed all in black who is sitting at a table smoking and nursing a drink. The sorrow, frustration and pain he exudes are almost palpable, and one is left contemplating the underlying story. Behind the man, are two women, each of whom is sporting a skimpy dress, long painted fingernails and high heels. The overall effect is the portrayal of two middle-aged women who are unsatisfied with their solely female interactions, and are waiting to be liberated from their monotonous and lonely lives.

In another corner is an inebriated man, and like all the other individuals, appears alone. Only this time instead of sorrow, there is a look of confusion on his face, as he stares off into space, lost in his own thoughts. "The Club" describes the bar scene as one facet of nightlife, and in doing so, reveals both its endeavours and its shortcomings.

Martha Markowsky's work has appeared in multiple solo and group shows. Her current exhibit entitled After 5 is on display at the Eclectica Gallery until Sunday March 21.

Casinos, bars and brothel scenes? It's worth a look.

PHOTO BY CHRIS GLOVER

DRAGON'S CAVE
SPORTS BAR & GRILL
259 ONTARIO ST.
547-2147
fully licensed

AFTER THE GAME, SCHOOL OR WORK, TAKE TIME OUT AND BRING YOUR TEAM OR FRIENDS DOWN TO THE DRAGON'S CAVE FOR GREAT IN-HOUSE SPECIALS.

Enjoy our GREAT MENU
PLAY POOL OR DARTS.

EVEN WATCH YOUR FAVORITE SPORTS ON OUR BIG SCREEN TV.

Receive WARM FRIENDLY SERVICE.
So come on down and see what your friends are TALKING ABOUT!

My Definition, My Definition Is This!
The Queen's Entertainment Agency Proudly Presents:

ARRE

TUESDAY MARCH 23RD

Esthero
with Emm Gryner
and Sarah Slean

@ Grant Hall

FRIDAY MARCH 26TH

THE DREAM WARRIORS
& GUEST OPENER

@ Alfie's Pub

TUESDAY MARCH 30TH

King Cobb Steelie
& Ghetto Concept
@ Clark Hall Pub

3 Free Concerts, 2 Episodes of Battle of the Bands = One Last Blowout Before Finals

On Monday, Tuesday & Wednesday March 15-17th
 600 Free Tickets to the Esthero Show
 300 Free Tickets to the Dream Warriors
 140 Free Tickets to King Cobb Steelie & Ghetto Concept
 will be provided on a first-come first-served basis
 @ the Used Book Store (UBS). While everyone may pick up a ticket to Esthero & Guests, they must choose only ONE of the remaining two shows.
 Tickets are free for any student who DID NOT Opt-Out of the QEA Opt-outable Fee (You must present your Student Card).
 On Wednesday @ 12:00 noon, some tickets may be made available @ the UBS for SALE, additionally a limited number of tickets *WILL* be sold at the door of EACH show.

Questions?
 E-mail Us :
qea@ams.queensu.ca
<http://ams.queensu.ca/qea/>

Women, Weep no more

Sarah Harmer and crowd soothe the soul at Clark

CONCERT REVIEW

By PAULA BUSH

Candle-light, a packed house, only the sounds of drinks being served and small talk as background noise. Sound like a Friday night at Clark Hall Pub to you?

I was equally surprised to find the atmosphere so laid back when I walked into Clark last Friday for the third show in the Women's Concert series, featuring Sarah Harmer of Weeping Tile.

I have to admit I was unsure of what to expect, having not seen the first two shows. I quickly learned that I had missed quite a lot.

The first performer was Queen's own Muredith MacNaughton, who was armed with only her guitar and powerful voice. MacNaughton began her set with a warning about her tough voice, having woken up only an hour prior to the show, before singing "Good Boy" by the Barenaked Ladies. The set consisted mostly of covers, including renditions of songs by Neil Young, Jewel, Indigo Girls and Sarah McLachlan. Although visibly nervous due to the crowd and the mysterious camera crew, MacNaughton's voice displayed a maturity far surpassing her stage presence.

With vocals similar to Jewel, MacNaughton's voice ranged from light and melodic to rich and soulful. Performing new material for only the second time, MacNaughton displayed great promise with her folk-like melodies and lyrics, although at times the latter were cliché.

A quiet woman sitting at her keyboard followed MacNaughton and proceeded to capture the audience with her witty autobiographical introductions and beautiful voice.

Performing songs from her two-year old album Universe, Sarah Slean demonstrated a genuine expression of her music through captivating melodies maintained by her powerful voice.

Introducing one particular song as her "nasty song" and explaining her philosophy on relationships as "go big or go home," Slean held a natural rapport with the audience.

Having taken the year off from her studies at University of Toronto, Slean expects to release her independent full length CD in April, an album she has been working on for a year.

I waited to speak with Slean after her set only to find a large roadblock — the line to purchase her CD. The varied crowd waited patiently for her to sign their CDs and free posters. As she borrowed my pen, I stood next to her and watched each person exclaim how much they enjoyed her performance. One girl put it best when she handed Slean her CD and said, "We came early to get seats for Sarah Harmer and we're so glad we got to see you."

Next, the headliner, Kingston's own Sarah Harmer, unassumingly took the stage and with the first strains of "good fortune" was greeted with enthusiasm from the crowd. Playing a mix of her own songs from her new album Songs for Clem, and those from her group Weeping Tile, Harmer performed admirably with her smooth voice and borrowed guitar.

Harmer's style ranged all over the map from guitar picking folk to soulful alternative, all glazed with a Canadian flair. With vocal stylings comparable to Sarah McLachlan, Harmer casually strummed and swayed through tunes such as "Pretty Little Cemetery" and a new song called "Lode Star," based on a D.H. Lawrence poem.

Each performer contributed to the momentum that carried the show from start to finish.

Although several of the tables had long since cleared by the end of Harmer's set, at 1:30 a.m. those that stayed were satisfied from a enjoyable evening of female artists that will hopefully be seen and heard again and again.

Lilith Fair at Clark?: Muredith MacNaughton (above left) and Sarah Slean provided great entertainment last Friday.

PHOTOS BY JILLOFFENBECK

Anti-Discrimination Week

Monday March 15
 8:30pm
 Earl 1101

POSSE (Project Outreach for Secondary School Education) Performs. Reception to follow.

Tuesday March 16
 7:00pm
 Wallace Hall, JDUC

Canadian Culture Festival. Queen's very own World Exposition

Wednesday March 17
 7:30pm
 Music Listening Room, JDUC

Cultural Experiences and Queer Life! What happens when cultural and sexual identities intersect?

Thursday March 18
 7:30pm
 3rd Floor Common Room, JDU

Women of the World Speak Out! Discussion group on women and culture

Thursday March 18
 7:30pm
 McLaughlin Room, JDUC

Speakers on Discrimination and Mental Health

Friday March 19
 2:00pm
 Lower Ceilidh, JDUC

Show, debate with the Queen's Debating Union on political correctness!

Grand evening KSA soars with Mozart

CONCERT REVIEW
By MARY WADE

Kingston's exceptional musical talents were displayed last Friday night when the Kingston Symphony Association presented a very exciting concert at the Grand Theatre.

The performance, which was a part of the Friday Night Live series, presented music by Mozart and Schumann, which Glenn Fast, director of the KSA, explained as "music very close to my heart."

The concert opened with Mozart's "Overture to The Marriage of Figaro," guest conducted by amateur musician and Queen's graduate Alan Gran. The orchestra played very well together in a style true to Mozart. Grant and the KSA did a fine job with this well-loved piece of music, starting the concert off on the right foot.

Next on the program was a performance by the 1998 Kingston Symphony Association/Queen's University concert competition winner, Chun-Wei Kang, playing the first movement of Schumann's concerto for piano and orchestra. Chun-Wei, who is a gifted fourth-year performance major at Queen's School of Music, executed the concerto with precision and musical sensitivity.

Chun-Wei played with so much finesse that it was clear that every note of the concerto was considered and studied with musical accuracy. Her outstanding performance of this challenging piece was appreciated in great measure by the audience, who responded with enthusiastic applause. It was exciting to hear an emerging pianist with so much talent from our own School of Music.

The concert continued with another Schumann concerto, this time for cello and orchestra, performed by the KSA principal cellist Wolf Tormann. Tormann's brilliance shone as he performed difficult music with passion and expertise. Tormann, who is an accomplished musician, has studied with celebrated teachers and performed in many orchestra and chamber ensembles in Europe and North America.

The concert ended with Mozart's Symphony no.40 in G minor, which was played melodically by the orchestra. The orchestra's mastery of the symphony was impressive, with good sound and sensitivity.

Glenn Fast's interpretation of the work produced satisfying music with the members of the orchestra playing with cohesion and good classical phrasing attributed to Mozart. The symphony was very enjoyable, with the orchestra having demonstrated great amounts of talent and appreciation of the music. The music itself is one of Mozart's best known symphonies, as it is very colourful and always pleasurable to listen to.

The concert delivered great performances from the moment it began right through to the end. Listening to the talents of Chun-Wei Kang, Wolf Tormann and all of the members of the Kingston Symphony Association was a delight for the Kingston and the Queen's community.

A new beginning Queen's opens up to opera

CONCERT PREVIEW
By JEFF CHILD

Queen's Student Opera is making a "pitch" to revitalize a dying art on Queen's campus.

For many of us opera involves the bellying of Italian and German prima donna's — to be enjoyed by the upper class and music enthusiasts; however, Queen's Student Opera is attempting to challenge our perceptions with I am, an original 20th century composition composed by Brantford, Ontario's, Ronald Beckett.

The work is based on the gospel of John and follows the preaching career of Jesus Christ. Through wonderfully orchestrated vignettes the story unfolds and draws the listener in. Phil Addis, a music department voice major, highlights the talented cast of 23.

As Jesus, Addis fills and brings intensity to the chorus. With a young and vibrant voice, Addis's potential as a soloist is obvious. Susan Gouthro, a performance major, gives an equally strong solo as the Woman of Samaria. While there are great standout performances the cast brings volume and strength to the piece.

I am is a unique production, which incorporates extraordinary vocal talent with some of the strongest musicians Kingston has to offer. The orchestra consists of 11 accomplished players. Karherine Fraser, the string quintet's first violist, is also a member of the Kingston Symphony Orchestra and brings experience and poise to the piece.

PHOTO BY CHERIE CURRIE

The music community is excited about the re-emergence of opera on campus and expects that the city's intense craving for the music will be satisfied.

While Kingston is familiar with professional opera, I am will display some of Queen's best talent and offers an alternative to the normal type of music with which most of us are familiar.

Meg Logue, the director of I am, expects that "the quality of music and high calibre musicians ability to play difficult music" will be pleasing the audience.

If you've never been to an opera before, don't be afraid. Head down to the Sydenham Street United Church on Sunday, March 14 at 8 p.m. The price of admission is $10 for adults and $6 for students.

Ease on down the road The different paths in life make all the difference in Yellowwood

Choosing the right path: Sam (Griffen), Louise, (Rakos), Carl, (Douglas) and Annie (Jones) endure the trials and tribulations of life in Yellowwood.

PLAY REVIEW

By HEATHER MACDONALD

This past Wednesday I played witness to the dress rehearsal of the student-written play Yellowwood. The play was written by Queen's student Brian Frommer and was originally a one act play entitled Smokestacks. Through a series of rewrites, however, it has become the full-length phenomenon playing at the Baby Grand Studio tonight and tomorrow night.

As director David Nugent (also a Queen's student) states in his program notes, the play deals with a group of young adults facing important decisions, and living with the consequences. With a cast of only six characters, Yellowwood starts off on prom night of a small town high school. Carl, a success-driven student played by Brad Douglas, tells his high school sweetheart Annie, played by Carly Jones, that he is leaving in the morning for Toronto to attend university — without her. Three years later, he returns to find his home town of Yellowwood and all his friends in shambles. It is here that the characters must make the decisions that will affect the rest of their lives.

I felt as though I were watching the scenes unfold from within Carl's livingroom.

What I particularly enjoyed was the interactions between characters Sam, played by Sean Griffen, and Louise, played by Michelle Rakos. Sam refuses to move on with his life, being the last of his circle of friends to remain in town, whereas Louise is a student from Toronto. Besides the dialogue of their scenes being exquisitely written, the charisma flowing between the two can be felt throughout the theatre.

As a viewer I felt as though I were watching the scenes unfold from within Carl's livingroom, with the audience as a part of the atmosphere. The two interacted with such vitality that it was nearly impossible to believe that they were only acting.

The title of the play itself was derived from a poem by Robert Frost, "The Road Not Taken." In the classic poem the author makes reference to having to choose between the two roads in a yellow wood, one more travelled and one less.

The poem (which is printed in the program) is symbolic to the conflict of the plot; one must make the choice between taking an easier road, or a more difficult road — the less travelled.

The correlation from poem to play is magnificently crafted and the closing line of the poem "And that has made all the difference," is the essence of the decisions made in the town of Yellowwood.

Nugent, a first year drama major, is not new to the world of directing. In previous years he has directed such productions as Guys n' Dolls, and The Adding Machine.

In my opinion, both Nugent and Frommer have done an excellent job with the production.

Yellowwood is an entertaining and inspirational play, that warms the soul with its charming antics and effective symbolism.

No Experience Required.

The Queen's Journal is hiring for next year!

Editorial Board

Managing Editor
Production Manager
News Editor
Assistant News Editors
Editorial Page Editor
Opinions Editor
Arts & Entertainment Editor
Arts & Entertainment Assistant Editors
Sports & Fitness Editor
Sports & Fitness Assistant Editor

Science Editor
Features Editor
Body, Mind & Soul Editor
MiSC Editor
Photography Editors
Graphics Editor
Supplements-Magazine Editor
The Reader Editor
Web Editor

Business Staff

Business Manager
Advertising Manager
Sales Representatives
Advertising Designers
Systems Manager

The deadline has been extended for all applications except Managing Editor and Business Manager which are due today by 4 p.m. All other applications are due Wednesday March 17 by 5 p.m. Applications can be picked up at The Journal house at 272 Earl Street on Monday-Friday between 9-4 p.m., Saturday March 13 between 10-2 p.m. and Sunday March 14 between 2-5p.m. Questions? Need more information? Call Sarah Crosbie, Editor-in-chief-elect at 533-2800.

You know you want to...

APPLICATIONS

NOW AVAILABLE FOR
A.M.S.
PART-TIME
RECEPTIONIST/OFFICE ASSISTANT

Responsibilities include AMS Front Desk reception and other duties as required.

The position may require approximately 20 hours a week with a flexible weekly time schedule starting date September, 1999 to April, 2000.

No experience necessary, however - priority will be given to individuals who have had office work experience and word processing skills.

More specific information about the position available with the application form.

APPLICATIONS DUE
APRIL 9TH, 1999 BY 4:30 P.M. IN THE AMS OFFICE
(Applications may be sent by fax to 545-9565 or courier to the AMS Office)
INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD THE WEEK OF APRIL 12TH,
AND CAN BE FLEXIBLE

Photography Contest

The theme is your choice — anything!
Prizes to be won!

Drop off your pictures to The Queen's Journal (272 Earl St.) with your name, faculty, year and phone number.
Deadline: March 19, 1999

For more info call Alex or James at 533-2800

Experiencing India

Sounds of India Concert highlights unique talent

CONCERT REVIEW

By MARY WADE

The sounds of India were brought to Grant Hall on Saturday evening.

The concert was a landmark event as Lakshmi Ranganathan and Aruna Narayan Kalle, two female musicians, performed together for the first time on instruments traditionally played by men. These two talented women and their accompanying musicians introduced the Queen's and Kingston communities to both northern and southern classical Indian music.

The stage at Grant Hall was transformed, decorated with colourful Indian props, and the musicians were dressed in beautiful Indian garments.

It was obvious that the event was different from traditional western presentations in many ways; the concert was longer than most classical western music events, starting at 8 p.m. and closing at around 11 p.m. The stage at Grant Hall was transformed, decorated with colourful Indian props, and the musicians were dressed in beautiful Indian garments and played their instruments while seated on the ground.

The performance began with music performed by Ranganathan, who also teaches courses at Queen's School of Music, playing the veena, a stringed instrument from South India.

Her performance was accompanied by S.Ganapathy playing the Mrudangam, a two-headed drum, and by Gayathri Bhaskaran on tambura, which is a stringed instrument used all over India for drone accompaniment. These two instruments traditionally accompany the veena, although it may also be played solo.

Ranganathan performed three Karnataka Sangeetham (South Indian) pieces, from time periods ranging from the 16th to the 20th century. The music was very interesting for those who are used to western sounds.

The rhythms, sounds and the improvisatory style of veena music is very distinct and exciting to listen to. Ranganathan's virtuosity on her instrument was striking and her vocal capacities were impressive.

Kalle performed next on the Sarangi, a stringed instrument with many strings and frets played with a bow. She presented Hindustani Sangeetham (North Indian music), accompanied by Gurudit Singh playing Indian drums called tabla and by the tampur, an instrument resembling the tambura.

The highlight of the concert occurred after intermission, when all of the musicians performed together on stage, playing a piece called "Jugalbandi."

Kalle was taught by her father, who revolutionized the Sarangi; consequently, she is the only woman who plays this instrument. Her presentation was exceptional, and although she played music from North India which has rhythms and a style very different from the southern performance, it was equally enjoyable. Her artistry was obvious, even to an audience unfamiliar with the instrument.

The highlight of the concert occurred after intermission, when all of the musicians performed together on stage, playing a piece called "Jugalbandi," which means "dialogue between the musicians." The performers played in turns until finally they all played collectively. The sound produced was very powerful and exciting when every instrument played together. The performance by the musicians was outstanding.

The audience was initiated even further into Indian culture when we were invited to share in complementary Indian hors d'oeuvres at intermission and at an open reception following the concert.

The concert as a whole was a very refreshing change from western music events some of us may be used to attending. It was a very interesting and enjoyable way to experience some authentic Indian culture.

The music, design, and food presented at this event appealed to every sense, making this concert a very memorable experience.

Intrigued? Searching for outstanding music? Check out the upcoming Spring concerts by dropping by the Performing Arts Office, located in the upper JDUC.

Battle call

Continued from page 32

nical difficulties, they didn't have the opportunity to truly display their abilities.

As a result of these technical problems, the judging panel will let Reno's Hitmen play at the next round. Also, the method of judging will be modified. Instead of choosing the top two finalists from each show, the judges will choose the overall four best bands from the group of eight.

This complication will definitely add to the problem of choosing the best bands for the final round, but will likely add to the excitement at the next show.

I personally recommend that you check out the next show, at Alfie's, on Wednesday, March 24. The quality of the bands makes it totally worth it. And besides, maybe in 10 years you can tell friends you saw (FILL IN THE BLANK) before they become really big.

Watch for Dimitrios Tsotos's continuing coverage as the Battle lines are drawn.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

ACROSS

- 1. Madonna initials
- 4. Corvine bird
- 8. Used a crowbar
- 10. Wait near at hand
- 12. Actress Durbin
- 13. Spanish romance hero
- 15. Sea eagle
- 16. Adam's abode
- 18. Leah's son
- 19. Unreal images
- 21. Roman law
- 22. Vega's constellation
- 23. Impurity added to a pure substance
- 26. Ruminant's food
- 28. Negative word
- 29. Distinct stages in a development
- 32. Be dressed in
- 35. Grief
- 36. Don Juan in "The Fair Penitent"
- 39. Building extensions
- 41. Mental picture
- 42. Make a request
- 43. Fallen angel in "Paradise Lost"
- 45. Baby birds?
- 47. Christmas VIP
- 48. Gilbert and

Teasdale

- 49. Adam's third son
- 50. Meshed fabric

DOWN

- 1. Eau de vie
- 2. Wine. Fr.
- 3. Agamemnon's brother
- 4. Intimate ballad
- 5. Computer memory
- 6. Egg-shaped
- 7. Skiing technique
- 8. Jeopardy
- 9. Pedestal part
- 11. Metal pin
- 12. Fourth letter
- 14. Half a dozen
- 17. Last part
- 20. Killer whale
- 24. Pocahontas' father
- 25. Geographical

- 27. Samson's mistress
- 29. Magnet ends
- 30. Ancient Greek name of Greece
- 31. Turf
- 33. Landing place of Noah's Ark
- 34. Dangerous chances
- 35. Spider's network
- 37. Hardy heroine
- 38. Authorizes
- 40. Acute angle function
- 44. Lawyer. abbr.
- 46. Native metal

The people who do the crossword will look at this ad 86 times.

There are still many ad spaces on this page in upcoming issues available. Call 533-6711 now to make sure your advertising gets in.

ASUS

COME OUT AND VOTE
MARCH 16 & 17
FOR THE FOLLOWING POSITIONS:

ASUS REPS TO THE AMS
1 YEAR SENATOR
'02 SECRETARY

MAKE YOUR VOTE COUNT!

ASUS

Law School Info Session

Saturday, March 13, 1999

1:00 p.m.

Walter Light Hall

Get info on:

- ✓ Studying for the LSAT
- ✓ Queen's Law School admission requirements
- ✓ Law school from a student's perspective
- ✓ Law from a Judge's perspective
- ✓ Law from a Crown Attorney's perspective
- ✓ Law practice in a small firm
- ✓ Law in a hospital setting

Refreshments served!

ASUS Futurelink Committee

THE HO-HUM

STOP FLOCKING AROUND!

TONIGHT
FRIDAY MARCH 12TH
FRANKLIN'S

CD RELEASE PARTY
$3 AT THE DOOR OR $10 WITH CD

DOORS OPEN AT 9:00 p.m.
FREE APPETIZERS - SO ARRIVE EARLY

Trasheteria

Classifieds

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kelyie at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.lkweb.com/bluroof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE - www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877PREP.COM.

VOTE MARCH 16TH & 17TH! Arts & Science students - ASUS elections are being held for ASUS Rep to the AMS, 1 year Senator and 02 secretary. VOTE VOTE VOTE VOTE

FOR THE MOST up-to-date information on sexually transmitted diseases check out the Health Canada A-Z link at www.queensu.ca/sndc - click on sexual health.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE Wellington Foreign Exchange buys and sells currencies at very competitive rates, without service charges. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates, or visit us at 153 Wellington Street, 531-8731.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resume-relay.com.

FEEL LIKE CRAP? Get a handle on a healthier lifestyle. Check out the Fantastic Lifestyle Checklist at www.queensu.ca/sndc.

QUEEN'S JAZZ and BALLET CLUBS annual recital at Duncan McArthur Auditorium, March 19th at 7 p.m., March 20th at 1 p.m. and 8 p.m. Tickets $5 at Performing Arts Box Office in JDUC, $6 at the door.

TEACHER TRAINING! State University of New York, Potsdam (30 minutes from Cornwall) offers teacher education training for Canadians. Info session rescheduled to March 18th, 7 p.m. John Orr Room, JDUC.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington, 531-8731.

THE LESBIAN GAY, BISEXUAL ASSOCIATION'S annual general meeting takes place March 21st at 7:00 p.m. in Wallace Hall (JDUC). All are welcome. For more information, contact the LGBA at 533-2960.

FOOD THAT MAKES CENTS! The last class of the year is March 17th, 5:30 - 7 p.m. at the International Centre. Learn how to make delicious asian vegetarian dishes. Call 533-6712 to sign up. Sponsored by Health, Counselling and Disability Services.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

REBUILT BIKES FOR SALE, bike repairs, winter tune-ups and bike rentals. Call us at 542-0964 or visit us at 132 Ordance.

HELP WANTED

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewardesses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

SALESPERSON REQUIRED for upgrade Shoe Store. Employment available from end of school term in Spring to Labour Day weekend. Possible part-time employment beyond Labour Day. Previous experience not necessary. Please send resume to: Jack McCalpin C.Ped. Manager, Walkwell Shoes, 179 Wellington St. Kingston, ON K7L 3E3.

STUDENT SUPERVISORS REQUIRED! to supervise up to 15 high school students in the Enrichment Mini Course Program in extra-curricular activities from May 9th to May 14th and/or May 16th to May 21st. Weekly salary $250.00, includes breakfast, dinner and room in residence. Applications at Continuing and Distance Studies, Mackintosh-Corry Ft. Applications due April 2nd, 1999.

WANTED

SUMMER SUBLET one bedroom apartment 1/2 block from lake Ontario on Beverly St. 4 minute walk from campus. Available May - August. $380 per month, negotiable. Call Richard at 546-1481.

BIKE COURIERS WANTED All-weather riders, reliable, adventurous, part-time is okay. Call us at 542-0964 or visit us at 132 Ordance.

WANTED: HOUSEMATES, preferably upper year students, females, non-smoking, to share newly-renovated house on Brock Street. Rent $270 plus utilities. CABLE included. QUEEN'S AT HOME installed. Call 544-3784.

SAILING and TENNIS INSTRUCTORS WANTED! The Beaumaris Yacht Club is looking for tennis and sailing instructors for the months of July and August. If you are interested please contact Ginny Clark at (613) 530-3711 or send resumes to 1-437 Johnson Street, Kingston, ON K7L 1Z3.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Missing from Jeffrey Hall, room 101 on Thursday, February 11th, sometime after 9:30 a.m. a Varsity Volleyball bag containing a Varsity uniform and equipment. This equipment is of no use to anyone other than the University Varsity teams. Please return to the Phys. Ed Centre front desk or call Juliana at 533-4918 no questions asked and a reward if offered. Thank you.

LOST: Head squash racquet. Lost Thursday, January 28th near the Physed Centre, if found please call Jeanette at 533-2895.

LOST: Mini Photo Album (with cartoon bears on the cover). Lost around Kingston Hall on Monday, January 18th. High sentimental value. Please call Janice or Tam at 542-5850. Thanks!

FOUND: A camera and carrying case in a cab the night of the ArtSci Formal (March 6th). Please call 533-7981 to identify.

FOUND: At the ArtSci Formal, non-disposable camera. Contact 4eat to identify.

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on

BURGER KING

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside Mac-Corry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS

VOTE LAURA MACINNIS for ASUS Senator. I am enthusiastic, informed, and know the issues. Voting takes place this Tuesday and Wednesday!

PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 6:30 p.m. at 1 800 844 8669.

JOHN BRODHEAD for ASUS SENATOR. Vote on March 16th and 17th.

VOTE LAURA MACINNIS for ASUS Senator. I am enthusiastic, informed, and know the issues. Voting takes place this Tuesday and Wednesday!

DAWN - Good luck in Toronto this weekend!! ♥, T, L and the cats.

VOTE LAURA MACINNIS for ASUS Senator. I am enthusiastic, informed, and know the issues. Voting takes place this Tuesday and Wednesday!

MISC. TECH CHECK

NOTHING is ever good enough for us. Everything is inadequate. Look around you. I'll bet you can pick out at least 17 things that need improving. Everything is too slow, too difficult, too much trouble. We need stronger, we need faster, easier, smarter, nicer, better, prettier, more powerful, more innovative, more wonderful, more, more, more. If it takes half a brain to operate, it's too much work for us.

Our self-inflicted technological overloading is making our lives easier, yet, for some strange reason, people are concerned with what this is doing to our minds. They think it's wrong that we now rely on 5DD megahertz, 128 megs RAM and a 15 gig hard drive to do a job that good old-fashioned know-how used to handle just fine. So, I decided to humor these trash-talking, progression-fearists, and did some research in this area. Now you can all rest assured and sleep easy tonight because the results are not as bad as you'd think.

"Hey," you may ask, rising dramatically up from your seat, "these people are right, this surge in information technology is creating a society of computer-dependent, illiterate, reclusive bores!" Well, sit back down my friend. Illiterate bores have been around since television was first invented, so don't blame new technology. No way will it ever induce the mind-numbing boredom and morosism inspired by television. No siree, we can take all the credit for that ourselves. Sure, there's a whole slew of research claiming that kids growing up in this Great Electronic Age have an "unusual increase in problems with focusing on written material, vocabulary, and understanding books departing from direct plot." Now, if you're one of those kids, that might be a little too dense for you, so here's the Coles Notes version: we are getting dumber. So they say. I, however, insist that we look at this empirical evidence from a different perspective.

Our growing technology is in no way dumbing down our society. Granted it may be making us less attractive.

Let's dissect the phrase: (a) "problems with focusing on written material" One of the inalterable laws of our society is that people grow tired of things very quickly. Books have been around since the fourth century, and we're only just beginning to tire of them? I'd say that's quite an accomplishment. So what if we no longer want to put all our focus on written material? It's too much work and it's been done for way too long. Short, concise, to the point works just fine. The less writing, the better. We're developing new ways to convey our ideas. It's called innovation, and we're working on it.

Moving on, (b) "problems with vocabulary" Alright, let's face it, building a bigger vocabulary is tough. Why should I try to broaden my vocabulary? I think in an era of mass wastefulness, we need to conserve. I am simply being word efficient. Thesaurus, schmesaurus.

And finally, (c) "problems understanding books which depart from direct plot" Heck, what kind of a book departs from direct plot? I like direct plot. I like being able to follow a story without all sorts of complex sub-plots getting in the way. This criterion is certainly no measure of our dumbness, but rather proves that we will no longer tolerate irrelevancy. And it's about time! Incessant rambling gets nothing accomplished, and we like accomplishment! We are more goal-oriented than ever! This is a good thing!

Our growing technology, then, is really beneficial. It is in no way dumbing down our society. Granted, it may be making us less attractive: drab complexions (that constant glow of the computer screen), hunched backs (sitting in front of the computer for hours and end wrecks havoc on the spine), carpal tunnel syndrome (obviously), but we'll be able to design one hell of a computer program. Sure, we might not be that good at holding intelligent conversations, or getting through a Dickens novel, but we can write memos and drop e-mails better than ever before. And we might not be able to stay awake to read our history textbooks, but who cares, eventually we'll figure out an easier way to connect with the past and pass our values to the future.

We're really not getting dumber, after all, we're just evolving to a more intellectually-challenged, technologically-advanced era. And there is a difference. Really.

Melisea Farmer killed the literary star

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or you steal tomatoes from your housemate's fridge. For the next two issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and one-inspiring.

Note: If you've missed the last few issues, you've missed the first 10 clues. Try and find some copies left around campus.

Some guy, looks kinda like my friend Rob, but it's not, models in front of Building #11

Some other guy models in front of Building #12

STUDENT AWARD

What Award?

The Norman, Ian and Lorna Rogers Scholarship and the AMS Letter Award

Who can get this award?

Individuals who usually receive little recognition in their positions despite their outstanding contributions, are team players, and uphold the AMS' mission statement are eligible. They may be committee members, chairs, managers, faculty reps or volunteers, but not Council.

How do I nominate someone?

Nomination Forms are available at the AMS front desk in the JDUC and are due back by Friday, March 13, 1999

For further information, please contact Alison Loat, VP/UA (AMS) at 533-2729 or at email address vpua@ams.queensu.ca

NOMINATE SOMEONE TODAY!

Do you need Organic Chemistry? (or any other course?)

Why not take it at the The University of Western Ontario this spring?

Western offers Organic Chemistry 213 & 223 during Intersession (May 10 - June 22). Many other courses in different faculties are also available and open to letter of permission students.

Get the courses you need while enjoying a brief stay at Western, one of Canada's most scenic and prestigious universities.

For more information call Alyson, Office of the Registrar, phone: (519)-661-2108, e-mail: reg-records@julian.uwo.ca

MISC. BUILDING CONTEST

Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or you steal tomatoes from your housemate's fridge. For the next two issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and one-inspiring.

Some guy, looks kinda like my friend Rob, but it's not, models in front of Building #11

Some other guy models in front of Building #12

VOTE!!! AMS Spring Referendum VOTE!!!

IN SOME COUNTRIES
YOU CAN GO TO JAIL
FOR NOT VOTING!!!

WE'RE NOT THERE
YET...

March 16 & 17

Make your voice count!
Vote here:

Mac-Corry	10-6	Jean Royce	12-7	Dunning	11-3
JDUC	10-5	Ban Righ	5-7	Walter Light	11-3
P.E.C.	11-5	Leonard	5-7	Kingston	11-3
Stauffer	10-6	Brockington	5-7	Ellis	11-3
Douglas	10-6	Earl	11-3	Stirling	11-3
Botterell	10-5			Dupuis	11-3

QUESTIONS?
CONTACT THE AMS ELECTIONS TEAM
AT 533-6000 EXT. 74815

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 19, 1999

Student charged in child porn case

BY CRYSTAL BONA

As a result of a search warrant which was exercised last Thursday, Adrian Viens, an ArtSci '01 student, has been charged with one count of possession of child pornography. Viens is set to appear in court on April 20 to enter a plea.

Viens is this year's deputy commissioner of Internal Affairs for the Arts and Science Undergraduate society, as well as an ASUS representative to the Alma Mater Society.

Details of the case cannot be released at this time by officials from any of the Kingston and Ontario Police departments or Queen's University.

"The charge relates to child pornography and computer systems."

— John Cowan, vice president of operations and finance

"There is a publication ban on all information [regarding the case]," explained Detective Constable Derrick King from the Child Pornography Unit of the Ontario Provincial Police Department. "I can't comment on anything that was talked about during his appearance."

"This is not only to protect the person charged, but any victims as well... I can tell you that it was a fairly lengthy investigation," King added.

"The problem [in releasing information to the public] is that not only is the matter sub-judiciary, but a plea has not yet been entered," explained John

Please see Related on page 4

Students drowned themselves in day-long drinking celebrations at the Wellington on Wednesday in honour of St. Patrick's Day as favourite local Irish musician Gerry O'Kane (above) set the tone with his rousing renditions of old and familiar tunes.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Admin closes QP for two days

BY RENEE HUANG

St. Patrick's Day celebrations went sour at the Queen's Pub Wednesday when management was forced to shut its doors early due to violating conditions of the pub's operating agreement.

At approximately 5:30 p.m., John Deutsch University Centre Director Jack Sinnott approached Queen's Pub Assistant Manager Mark Soules and informed him that the pub was to be closed until further notice, Soules said yesterday.

The decision was made jointly by Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford and Sinnott. "They weren't shut down because of noise," Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford said. The QP was closed, he continued, because they violated an agreement concerning the grad residences and pub noise.

Sinnott said the agreement was created to address concerns brought by grad students about noise levels, and stipulates that, "live entertainment is limited to Friday and Saturday night."

According to Soules, it was his understanding that the operating and noise agreement "suggested we just couldn't have live bands on evenings during the week."

QP staff were given one hour to notify patrons of last call and clear the bar for closure. "It was pretty much a full house," Soules said. "It wasn't full all day but it was pretty close to capacity" when it closed, he explained. "We're going to lose a lot of money but the real concern is when we're going to open back up," he added.

"... A pub on the first floor and a grad residence on the second level are incompatible uses."

— Jock Sinnott, JDUC director

Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations), and AMS Services Director Sarah Armstrong are upset and confused by the fact that no AMS student representatives were consulted about the pub's closure. "Was it really that hard to find one of us and talk about the issue? That's what I find very unacceptable and insulting," Moodie said.

"It's an infringement on the administration's part," Armstrong added.

Moodie agreed, saying "It's frustrating to go through all the cooperation and to have one party use all its cards when it feels uncomfortable."

According to Moodie, the QP had made $3,000 before it closed. "Last night would've been their biggest night yet," he said.

"It's just frustrating to have all those people coming by in green outfits and looking for green beer and not getting any," Moodie said.

"I'm very angry because what they did violated the way the AMS operates within Queen's," he continued. "For the Dean of Student Affairs to issue orders directly to a service there should be an imminent and consequential danger of not doing so... Neither of those existed Wednesday."

"No effort has ever been made to inform me," said Armstrong, early yesterday afternoon.

"I can understand why [Crawford would] want to close the pub, what I can't understand is why he wouldn't contact us," said Moodie, saying he received only one voice message that he should call Sinnott. To run a pub within a few feet of

Please see Confusion on page 7

index

Volume 126, Issue 37
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	25
Editorials	8	A&E	29
Opinions	9	Classifieds	36
In Focus	14	Crossword	37
Science	17	MISC.	38
Features	19

WEATHERWATCH

Today Mix of sun and cloud High 2°C, Low -3°C, POP 10%	Sunday Mix of sun and cloud High 4°C, Low -7°C, POP 30%
Saturday Cloudy with sun High 3°C, Low -8°C, POP 0%	Monday Cloudy High 7°C, Low -4°C, POP 10%

Engineering tuition may increase by 20%

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

Earlier this month Tom Harris, dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, sent an e-mail to all engineering students informing them that he is recommending to David Turpin, Queen's vice-principal (academics), that engineering tuition be raised next year by 20 per cent. The increase will raise tuition fees for current students from $3,856 to $4,627, an increase of $771. For the class of 2003, tuition fees will be approximately $5,000.

In the e-mail, Harris said the increase is necessary to keep Queen's competitive. "To ensure that Queen's remains among the leading engineering schools... it is essential that additional resources be spent to improve our facilities, to strengthen our staff, and to develop and implement innovative programs."

"Tuition is increasing at all engineering schools. Ontario has the lowest funding in the country per resident student in the country. The funds that are available [for program improvement] are extremely low," Harris said. "At some point you have to put first class

Please see Increase on page 6

Fees to increase

BY QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS STAFF

As a result of this week's spring referendum, Queen's student opt-outable fees will increase by $127.24.

The AMS referendum questions were voted upon by 1,459 of 11,613 possible voters, a 12.53 per cent turnout for the election.

All new opt-outable fees on the ballot were approved, including support for Queen's Red Cross, the Kingston Youth Shelter Project, Telephone Aid Line Kingston, and the Shinerama Campaign for Cystic Fibrosis.

Please see Ultra-Violet on page 7

photography contest
The theme is your choice — anything!
Prizes to be won!

Drop off your pictures to The Queen's Journal (272 Earl St.) with your name, faculty, year and phone number.
Deadline: March 19, 1999

For more info call Alex or James at 533-2800

ITS issues computer virus warning

By FIANA STEVENSON

Queen's Information Technology Services is warning students, staff and faculty that it has seen a dramatic increase in the number of computer viruses affecting the university. Currently, a warning automatically appears on students' Qlink accounts after they log into the system.

"We try and get the word out," said Andy Hooper, ITS manager, data networks and systems. "This can affect a lot of people and cause a lot of nuisance."

According to Ralph Prichard, associate applications analyst for ITS, most of the viruses encountered by the Queen's community are delivered as attachments to e-mail messages. "We haven't had any viruses on semi-public or public sites this year," he said.

"This can affect a lot of people and cause a lot of nuisance."
— Andy Hooper, ITS manager, data networks and systems

Happy 99 is presently the most common virus encountered by ITS. If a user opens the virus, included as an e-mail attachment, a fireworks display appears on the computer screen. The virus then modifies the system so that a copy of the attachment is sent to all of the user's future outgoing e-mails.

"Preventative testing can save them a headache later on."

— Ralph Prichard, associate applications analyst for ITS

Prichard said the virus is inert until activated. "So long as you don't run it you're okay," he explained. "People need to be cautious when they receive a document... get a virus scan to check the document first... Preventative testing can save them a headache later on."

ITS has licensed Dr. Solomon's program to provide virus protection to the university. It is distributed through Packman to the Queen's community free of charge and is upgraded monthly. It can be copied at any ITS public computer site and requires five blank high density disks.

"Happy 99 has been a relatively easy virus for us to deal with," said Prichard. "The version of Dr. Solomon catches it with no trouble."

CORRECTIONS

In the previous issue of The Journal, a News story about the new AMS council misidentified services director Susan Henry's hometown. Henry is from Frederickton, New Brunswick.

In an Arts and Entertainment story about the women's concert series at Clark Hall Pub, Meredith MacNaughton's name was misspelled. The Journal regrets the errors.

APPLICATIONS

NOW AVAILABLE FOR
A.M.S.
PART-TIME
RECEPTIONIST/OFFICE ASSISTANT

Responsibilities include AMS Front Desk reception and other duties as required.

The position may require approximately 20 hours a week with a flexible weekly time schedule starting date September, 1999 to April, 2000.

No experience necessary, however, priority will be given to individuals who have had office work experience and word processing skills.

More specific information about the position available with the application form.

APPLICATIONS DUE
APRIL 9TH, 1999 BY 4:30 P.M. IN THE AMS OFFICE
(Applications may be sent by fax to 545-9565 or courier to the AMS Office)
INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD THE WEEK OF APRIL 12TH,
AND CAN BE FLEXIBLE

ASUS Winter Grants

Want some ...

CASH?

We can help.

Help fund your project or organization through ASUS Grants (Winter Round).

Applications due at The Core (183 University Ave., 533-6278) by Tuesday, March 23 @ 4:00 p.m.

Campus theft on rise
10 thefts reported last weekend

By FIANA STEVENSON

A recent increase in the number on-campus thefts has prompted Campus Security to issue a warning to members of the Queen's community.

A total of 10 thefts were reported to Campus Security last weekend, most of which involved jackets and vehicles. In one case, two students living in residence awoke during the night in time to see a male intruder leaving their room with a number of expensive items.

In this case, Director of Campus Security Louise Fish said the issue is not necessarily the security of Queen's residences but the fact that people consistently leave their doors open. "There are people who are not supposed to be in residence... If people want to get in they can," she said.

Four vehicles were also broken into. Jacket theft, however, is quite common. "They seem to be vanishing consistently," said Fish. Ski jackets, often priced between $200 and $800, are most frequently targeted.

Items left unattended are vulnerable to theft.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

this weekend. Two of the four vehicles were stolen and later recovered. In every case, the driver's side window was smashed, valuable items were stolen and the ignitions were damaged.

The number of thefts involving vehicles this weekend is unusually high. "We haven't seen very much motor vehicle theft at all," said Fish.

Security recommends the university community use vehicle alarm systems, consider purchasing a steering/accelerator locking device, and ensure that valuable or attractive items are never left unattended inside a vehicle.

Jacket theft, however, is quite common. "They seem to be vanishing consistently," said Fish. Ski jackets, often priced between $200 and $800, are most frequently targeted.

Fish said people often leave their jackets in unsupervised cloak rooms, thinking they are safe. She recommends people never leave their jackets unattended and if they do, "at the very least take anything valuable out of the pockets," including wallets, keys and cellular phones.

In 1998, approximately $240,589 worth of property was stolen from Queen's. Of this total, $158,953 worth was university property, and $81,636 worth was stolen from private individuals. Theft occurred most often in the John Deutsch University Centre, where 24 thefts were reported, followed by Stauffer Library, in 23 cases, and Mackintosh-Corry Hall, in 18 cases.

Studio Q executive elections questioned

By ERIK MISSIA

This year has not been a good one for elections: first there was the Alma Mater Society spending fiasco, and now it appears that next year's Studio Q Executive has come under fire.

Studio Q Productions is responsible not only for a bi-weekly television show, but also for Video Factory, which is films and edits facilities for various Queen's special events. The subject of a memo issued by AMS Media and Services Director Owen Minns, Studio Q has drawn fire for its proceedings in Monday's election of Bart Bonikowski and Peter Carr as next year's Co-Executive Producers.

The memo challenged Studio Q's electoral process, citing that they failed to comply with three AMS corporate bylaws in their selection of a producer. The memo claims that no voting list of eligible voters was ever compiled, that the Chief Returning Officer of the AMS was never asked to conduct the election and that no All-Candidates Meeting was ever held.

Minns believes these infractions of policy were unintentional oversights, but still demands that a new election be held. "I want to emphasize that [this decision] doesn't reflect on the people who ran, [rather] it is a concern that proper process is being followed," Minns asserted.

Studio Q's Executive Producer Ariel Goldblatt admitted the electoral process did not satisfy certain AMS bylaws, but she affirmed that a voting list did indeed exist. Although the bylaw says that any contributor who has worked on five or more shows is eligible to vote, Goldblatt claims that this number is no longer fair.

"The bylaws are incredibly outdated and reflect a totally different Studio Q program than the one we work so hard to maintain," she stated, referring to how the show has changed from a weekly to bi-weekly format.

"The bylaws are incredibly outdated and reflect a totally different Studio Q program than the one we work so hard to maintain."

— Ariel Goldblatt, executive producer of Studio Q

To compensate for this change, Goldblatt adjusted the voter list requirements to include anyone who contributed to two or more segments. While she admitted the voting list was never posted publicly, Goldblatt remains confident that she informed everyone of their franchise through e-mail, phone or word of mouth.

"We allowed many people who consistently demonstrated commitment and interest in [Studio Q] to determine [its] future and allowed them to feel their contribution would not go unnoticed," Goldblatt responded in reference to the

Please see Goldblatt on page 5

Applications for AMS positions down this year

By REBECCA STELTER

Applications for Alma Mater Society commissioner and manager positions are down this year, and many positions remain unfilled.

Only 17 people applied for AMS commissioner positions this year, compared with 28 applicants last year. Only one person applied for manager at both Walkhome and the Publishing & Copy Centre. Manager positions at other services, including Queen's Entertainment Agency, Hoods & Gowns, and Who's Where/What's Next, have had to be reopened because no one applied.

"The timing of everything this year had caused for quite a rush for people to get their applications in," said AMS President-elect Sarah Corman, in accounting for this year's smaller applicant pool.

Despite the low turnout, Corman said the AMS executive was "very impressed with the quality of applicants. Numbers are not an indication of quality."

Corman said she was not disappointed with the turnout because "the people who applied were fantastic." Some members of the AMS have suggested that events surrounding this year's AMS executive elections may be, in part, responsible for the lower turnout.

Following their electoral victory, the new executive was briefly disqualified from office for excluding their campaign manager's cellular phone from their declared campaign expenses. The team was reinstated by the Constitutional Appeals Tribunal, which ruled that the cellular phone did not constitute campaign material.

"It would be naïve for us to think that the scandal had no influence," said Lisa

Mori, vice-president (university affairs)-elect.

"I think that the scandal influenced students' perception of the AMS and perhaps their desire to run for council, but I think that this is only in part with a number of other factors," Mori continued. She identified an application deadline close to Reading Week as another influential factor.

Corman admitted the AMS executive was "worried that it would look bad on the AMS and that people would think it was a bureaucratic mess."

Owen Minns, AMS vice-president (operations)-elect, also felt "some concern about how people would perceive the AMS after the big scandal."

One of the positions that the AMS is having trouble filling is that of QEA manager. "It's unfortunate because QEA had a really good year and we were expecting a better turnout," said Sue Henry, AMS services director for next year.

"It would be naïve for us to think that the scandal had no influence."

— Liso Mori, vice-president (university affairs)-elect

Henry said the events surrounding CMM's election might have influenced student apathy toward the position "to a small extent because it was quite dragged out, but I think there was a bigger issue beneath it. Students don't seem to be informed or participate to a great extent."

"Hopefully, after pushing back the deadline, there will be a QEA director by next Monday," Henry said.

The position of business director, new this year, received only one application. Minns said he doubted controversy surrounding the cell phone is responsible for low interest in the position.

"I would guess that it had little effect. I have the impression that it will be a relatively demanding position, and that the people who are interested would not be put off by political scandal," he said.

Minns said the position will be reopened to applications in hopes of expanding the applicant pool.

Applications for business manager of The Queen's Journal were due last Friday afternoon, however, the deadline was extended to next Monday when no applications were received.

Editor-in-Chief Sarah Crosbie said, "I think one of the major problems with low numbers of applications is that people just aren't aware that the jobs exist."

Turn out high for SGPS referendum

By JOCelyn LAPORTE

The Society of Graduate and Professional Students' were pleased to have one of their highest voter turn outs in recent history, with almost 16 per cent of members voting.

Chris Hales, SGPS president, said in a press release that they were extremely pleased with the voter turnout and the results of the referendum.

"I think the important thing is that it's broad based," said Hales about the results.

The release attributed the high turnout to an active SGPS membership that is interested in their student society.

The item receiving the most votes was the establishment of an SGPS dental plan. A total of 76 per cent voted in favour of the plan, with 78 per cent voting for the plan costing $97 and providing full coverage. "We're thrilled about that," said Hales.

The graduate students rejected an increase in the mandatory bus-fee by a vote of 60.6 per cent, and tilted down an opt-outable contribution of $25 towards the Campaign for Queen's by 64 per cent.

The release stated that the rejection of the Campaign for Queen's fee by members sends a clear message to Queen's administration that the graduate and professional students are unable and unwilling to continually bear the cost of post-secondary education, either through tuition or ancillary fees.

Hales said in the release that he believed members were willing to support the campaign in other ways, and added that he was glad the other organizations who had questions on the ballot will have the support of the graduate and professional students.

Aboriginal awareness week larger than ever

By MANDY MARRIOTT

The Queen's Native Students Association is preparing for its fifth annual QNSA Awareness Week, which will take place from March 22 to March 26. This year's event is expected to be larger than other years in terms of special guests, performers and events.

Denise Helmer, an education student who is doing her alternative teaching placement through the Faculty of Education and the Aboriginal teacher education program, is one of the members of the QNSA helping to coordinate the event.

"A lot of people at Queen's have never had an opportunity to go to a native community, so we are trying to bring a small bit of the native community to Queen's."

— Denise Helmer, QNSA awareness week coordinator

Helmer said she believes the QNSA Awareness Week is important because "a lot of people at Queen's have never had the opportunity to go to a native community, so we are trying to bring a small bit of the native community to Queen's." Helmer said the QNSA is important because "in the past few years Queen's has committed itself to attracting more aboriginal students to campus... in order to make the campus more comfortable to aboriginal students we need to educate the everyday Queen's student to the concerns, issues and culture."

Promotion for the events is being done through posters and e-mail. Helmer said departments such as drama, English and women's studies, in particular, have done a good job of getting the message sent out through their classrooms.

Eric Sherbert, last year's QNSA president, took the initiative to begin planning the event by applying to the Canadian Council for the Arts for a grant to attract speakers at this year's event. The grant enabled QNSA to invite a series of literary speakers to campus to speak next week.

Helmer said the Alma Mater Society, the Queen's Aboriginal Council, the Gay/Lesbian Association of Kingston, the Four Directions Aboriginal Student Centre and the Committee against Racial and Ethnic Discrimination also provided funding.

Helmer emphasized that "the entire week has been a real student-driven event." Students belonging to the QNSA and staff members of the Four Directions Aboriginal Centre are helping to minimize costs by billering guests, cooking meals for them and using their own vehicles to pick guests up from the airport and train station. Helmer explained that in native communities these are called "donations in kind, and they are a common way that Native people donate."

Five literary speakers are coming to campus to speak: Ian Ross, author of FareWell, Gloria Eshkibok, who will be performing her one-woman play, Drew Hayden Taylor, author of the play Dreamer's Rock, Lee Maracle, author of Sundogs, and Beth Brant, author of Mohawk Trail.

Other special events taking place during the week include an Art Exhibition by Native Artists, a Kanata Dance Theatre, and a $2 pancake breakfast, which takes place on Monday between 8:30 a.m. and 10 a.m. at the Four Directions Aboriginal Centre.

On March 24, there is a reception for those interested in studies and research on native issues, and a Three Sisters Feast. The meal will consist of traditional Mohawk dishes such as corn, beans and squash.

The closing ceremony will feature Master of Ceremonies Christina Bomberry, a renowned dancer and model, as well as live drums and dancers. More information on where and when events will be held can be obtained by contacting the Four Directions Aboriginal Centre at 533-6970.

Related incident at Brock

Continued from page 1

Cowan, vice-president of operations and finance at Queen's.

"There has been a charge against a Queen's student... the charge relates to child pornography and computer systems. The only action we've taken relates to computer access," Cowan said, adding, "More information will be available some time next week."

Cowan said there is an established policy at the university for dealing with students under investigation in criminal cases. "The university does have certain privacy rules... there are instances where invasion of privacy can be justified," he said. "First, when issues of safety and security are involved, and secondly, to assist in any investigation concerning Queen's, or which involved the use of Queen's property."

"The director of ITS has the authority to suspend access to computer facilities," he added.

"The director of ITS has the authority to suspend access to computer facilities,"

— Andy Hooper, ITS manager of resources

A similar case involving possession of child pornography recently took place at Brock University. Donald Delaney, chief of campus police service at Brock, said, "The investigation originated almost a year before [the charges were laid]... This came to our attention through American law enforcement officials."

"We were notified by the Ontario Provincial Police, Project P [Pornography Unit], in early January that a student of ours had been identified as collecting and distributing pornography. A search warrant was executed at [his] residence by the OPP... computer equipment was seized... the student was arrested at that time and charged with two counts of possession and one count of distribution of child pornography," Delaney explained.

"The student resigned from all his courses, and from residence, on his own free will. There was no evidence that he was using Brock University lines and equipment," Delaney added.

Detective King could not comment on whether aspects of the two cases are related.

"The university does have certain privacy rules... there are instances where invasion of privacy can be justified,"

— John Cowan

Andy Hooper, manager of resources and systems for Information Technology Services, explained the procedure ITS follows when a student is in violation of the computer user code. "Generally if someone is violating the code of ethics, a procedure is followed. First, a warning is issued, second, an interview is conducted, and finally disciplinary action is

QPID embarks on initiatives in India

By MANDY MARRIOTT

Queen's Project for International Development will send two students, Sajani Swamy and Juliette Pitts, to India this summer for three months to do a search of potential QPID development projects.

In the past QPID has sent students to Bolivia, Guyana and Northern Ontario where they have worked with non-governmental organizations in order to carry out various development projects.

Swamy, a third-year biochemistry and computer science student, said she believes that it is her background knowledge of India that helped her obtain the opportunity. Swamy's parents are of Indian background and her family still lives there, so she has visited India many times. "I have grown accustomed to India and I am an experienced traveller there," she said.

Once in India, Swamy and Pitts will be travelling the country in search of future projects. Their assignment will be funded by a non-government sponsor. Pitts said their job "will be to scope out potential projects while trying to get a sense of where QPID fits in India."

Swamy feels said she and Pitts will work well together in India because "my experience travelling in the country and her experience with development work is a good combination."

Bryan Wills, General Director of QPID said, "as an organization QPID has a mandate that is twofold." He went on to say that the organization seeks to "raise awareness about issues facing developing communities." Second, QPID strives to partner capable Queen's students with non-governmental organizations that are already established in a developing country.

The types of projects the students are involved in vary from community to community. Wills said that some of the projects "involve small scale engineering projects" that use appropriate technologies like water distribution or irrigation systems.

Wills stressed that "QPID is not about engineering alone." The organization "addresses diverse development needs and projects," he said. Consequently, students from a variety of academic backgrounds are encouraged to participate.

Although it is not in QPID's mandate to focus on expansion, the organization was interested in sending students to India for a few reasons. "India has the highest development concentration anywhere in the world and that gives QPID some very good opportunities to become involved in partnership," Wills said.

The organization was also interested in expanding into a country where students did not necessarily have to be familiar with the native language. Wills cited Bolivia as an example of a country where the students who are co-operating on projects must either know Spanish before they leave or learn it quickly while they are there.

Goldblatt eager to rectify situation

Continued from page 3

accusal of a lack of voting list and the fact that there was no 'official' All Candidate's Meeting.

The candidates were given five minutes to present their platforms before answering questions, however, this is still not recognized by the AMS as an All Candidate's Meeting, which must be held at least one day before Voting Day. Goldblatt points out this process is nothing new. "Based on my experience with Studio Q... this is how it's been done in the past... candidates [always] speak on the same day," she said.

Still, Goldblatt is eager to rectify the situation. "We need to establish Studio Q as a significant service... by showing we accept the Board of Director's decision [to have a re-election] we are establishing ourselves as a respectable member of the Queen's community... despite the fact I feel the outcome may remain the same."

"We need to establish Studio Q as a significant service."

— Ariel Goldblatt

To this end, Minns and Goldblatt have decided upon a course of action. A voter's list will be posted on the door of the Studio Q's offices in the John Deutsch University Centre and posters will be put up advertising the position, which is available to all Queen's students.

An official All Candidates Meeting will take place sometime between March 25 and 28 to be followed by the elections on March 29.

The Alexander Ian Vorres Hellenic Fellowship 1999 Competition (Valued at $3,200)

The fellowship was established by Ian Vorres (BA'49). The award will be made to an upper year undergraduate or to a graduate student at Queen's intending to pursue original work in Greece during one year or two consecutive years in philology, art history, art conservation, archaeology, history, political studies or philosophy, or to attend a full year program at an approved institution, or to participate in a summer session or excavation in Greece sponsored by the Canadian Archaeological Institute in Athens or other approved institution. Applicants should forward a letter of application with CV and project description, along with the names of two referees to: Dr. D.K. Hagel, Head, Department of Classics, Room 506, Watson Hall. The award will be adjudicated by a committee from the department.

Final date for applications: April 15, 1999

Skills you can put to work!

For more information
(705) 749-5546

Did you know that more and more university students are learning the value of pursuing their studies at college? Sir Sandford Fleming College has programs designed specifically for university graduates, to help you open up your career opportunities with the hands-on skills and applied learning that today's employers demand.

Post-Diploma Programs - Admission to these 2 or 3 semester programs normally requires a university degree in a relevant field, or the equivalent.

Ecotourism Management
Haliburton (2 semesters)
Start date: September

Expressive Arts
Haliburton Start Date: Summer '99

Geographical Information Systems - Applications Specialist
Frost Campus, Lindsay (2 semesters)
Start dates: May, September, January

Geographical Information Systems - Business Applications Specialist
Frost Campus, Lindsay (2 semesters)
Start date: May

Geographical Information Systems - Cartography
Frost Campus, Lindsay (3 semesters)
Start date: September

Museum Management and Curatorship
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (3 semesters - 3rd semester is a full-time placement) Start date: September

Natural Resources Law Enforcement
(2 semesters) Start date: September

For more information, a calendar, an application, or to request a campus tour, please contact Marion Hermes, Liaison, mhermes@fleming.on.ca (705) 749-5546.

FLEMING
SIR SANDFORD FLEMING COLLEGE
www.fleming.on.ca

Are you thinking of changing your study or career path? Here's a few of the Sir Sandford Fleming College programs that offer eligible university students advance standing.

Career and Work Counsellor
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field practice)

Start dates: September and January
Program also available as a Diploma in Distance, through print-based distance learning, audio conferencing, and/or the Internet

Drug and Alcohol Counsellor
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field experience)
Start dates: September and January

Educational Assistant
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters - 4th semester is a full-time field practice and evaluation)
Start dates: September and January

Police Foundations
Sutherland Campus, Peterborough (4 semesters)
Start dates: May, September, January

Trent Fleming Nursing
(4 years) Students graduate from this program with a Special Emphasis Degree from Trent University and a Nursing Diploma from Fleming College.
Start date: September

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL NEWS TEAM WOULD LIKE TO THANK EVERYONE WHO CONTRIBUTED TO THE SECTION THIS YEAR. WE LOVE YOU GUYS!

EXTRA! EXTRA! READ ALL ABOUT IT!

The Afterschool Buddies SKATE-A-THON in support of the Boys and Girls Club is finally here!!!!

JHA Sunday March 21st 3:30-5:00

Pick up your sponsorship form at MacCordy, the JDUC, Bon Right or Leonard or pay $3 at the door

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

The Future is Wide Open

Become part of the AMS. With over a hundred different opportunities to offer, from Alfie's Bartender to Women's Issues Committee, there's something here for you to believe in. Email us at newexec@ams.queensu.ca Experience your University.

Walkhome hours change.

As of Monday March 22 Walkhome will be opening at 7:00pm. We are still open Sunday to Wednesday 'till 2:00am and Thursday to Saturday 'till 3:00.

ASUS Movie Theatre Presents:
A Civil Action

Sunday, March 21, in Dunning Aud. 7:00 & 10:00. Tickets: $3

Like to Skate? Come out to the After-school Buddies skate-a-thon.

JHA, 3:00 to 5:00, Sunday March 21

Here for the summer?

Hundreds of opportunities to volunteer in the community: seniors homes, health organizations, hospitals and more!! Call the MAC for more info. 533-6000 ext. 75178

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

Queen's Native Students Association is proud to present Aboriginal Awareness Week

Special Readings and Performances by:

Ian Ross
Beth Brant
Gloria Eshkibok
Lee Maracle
Drew Haydon Taylor

THE CANADA COUNCIL LE CONSEIL DES ARTS
FOR THE ARTS DU CANADA
SINCE 1957 DEPUIS 1957

Special Events

Pancake Breakfast Panel Discussion
The Kanata Dance Troupe QPID Presentation
Closing Ceremonies Social

Watch for details on times and locations of the events
or
Call the Four Directions Aboriginal Student Centre for details @ 533-6970

Stop by the Four Directions Aboriginal Student Centre
(The house just across from Vic Hall @ 72 Queen's Crescent)

All Students Are Invited to Attend The Events Free!

March 22 to March 26

Increase 'a surprise'

Continued from page 1

programs in front of students. The reality is that if we are going to have the programs that we need to have, tuition will have to increase. The bottom line, although it sounds hard edge, is that right now students will pay for it," he added.

According to Harris, 30 per cent of all tuition increases are allocated for student aid and a large portion is designated for improving existing programs and to provide new facilities.

Improvements to facilities outlined in the e-mail are the complete renovation of Ellis Auditorium during the summer of 1999 and "the development of a spectacular new learning facility" for integrated learning to provide a more expansive education to students, according to Harris.

Last Saturday, Dean Harris spoke with approximately 30 students at a meeting on the issue. "The students had very good questions," Harris said. "My objective was to explain the details of what tuition would be... and why tuition is increasing," he added. "I don't know if they were happier, but I am sure they now know why [he is recommending the increase]."

"I am not overly enthusiastic about the increase in tuition but I feel it has to be done," said Scott Afleck, president-elect of Engineering Society. "I don't like it but it is something we have to do to maintain the high standards we have already."

Because of the recent transition between this year's and next year's EngSoc executive, Afleck indicated that Harris' announcement was unexpected.

"[The announcement] comes as a bit of surprise. It came at a time of transition when we didn't know what was going on," he explained.

Afleck said he felt the situation was "handled in the best way it could have been... I think [Dean Harris] is doing the best job he can."

Afleck indicated that the best thing for concerned students to do is to contact the Student Aid Office or EngSoc. "There were several bursaries that went unclaimed this year and there will be many more bursaries next year," said Afleck. "If any student is concerned about the increase in tuition they can see myself as well," he added.

Some engineering students, while not happy about an increase, seemed to resign themselves to the fact that it was necessary. "I am in a position where I can still afford it but I don't think that it is fair to the people that can't," said Ernst Marten, Sci '01. "I can see why they want us to pay more, but the people who don't have the money are getting their chances taken away all of the time."

"There's not much you can do," said Craig Braund, Sci '02. "No matter how high they put [tuition] up they will still have people enrolling."

Engineering students could face unexpected tuition hike. PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Ultra-Violet fee increase fails

Continued from page 1

The fees up for renewal were all passed, including continued funding for the Queen's Student and Community Services Group, Queen's Amnesty International, the Tricolour Yearbook and the United Way.

Ultra-Violet magazine did not receive support from students for its proposed increase in opt-outable fees from 65 cents to 99 cents. This is the only change in fee which was not approved, with 53.1 per cent of voters refusing it.

Some fees passed with a relatively small margin. The new AMS dental plan passed by 63.9 per cent, The United by 64.3 per cent, and the Cargo Aircraft Team by 63.4 per cent. Also, the Student Health request for a fee increase was approved by 58 per cent of voters.

"The trend in opt-outable fees has been directly upwards for the past few years."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations)

in," so that students can choose whether to contribute instead of doing so by default.

"Possibly there should be some sort of voter threshold, or a certain turnout needed to make a referendum valid."

— Gord Moodie

There is also some debate over "the ability of totally non-student affiliated off-campus groups to have fees on referendums," said Moodie. Groups such as the Kingston Youth Shelter Project and the United Way fall under this rubric. "There are so many worthy off-campus groups, but the question is whether it's our role to facilitate donations to those groups," he said.

Moodie said low voter turnout in referendums is also an issue in determining student fees. "Possibly there should be some sort of voter threshold, or a certain turnout needed to make a referendum valid."

Confusion over closing

Continued from page 1

residences involves both cooperation and good will, Moodie said. "This type of unilateralism strains that good will."

Armstrong said the AMS and administration worked to establish a healthy relationship that accommodated graduate students' need for a quiet atmosphere in the evenings. "I'm just really upset. I can't begin to tell you how hard we tried... It was really poorly handled."

According to Armstrong, the band was scheduled to complete their musical act by 6 p.m., so as not to violate any noise agreements. The agreement did not clearly state that live music was prohibited in the middle of the afternoon, she explained.

Yesterday afternoon, Sinnott told The Journal that the decision to close the pub was made following "a plea from the graduate residence to assure them the agreement would be adhered to" and "that there would be no violations that evening."

When Sinnott was informed Wednesday that a band was playing in the pub, he said his immediate reaction was to "approach the AMS and ask them to take steps to resolve the matter." Following an a failed attempt to contact AMS representatives at 4 p.m., Sinnott and Crawford decided to take action.

"Our first reaction was to have the AMS and QP management solve this problem [of violating the agreement]," Sinnott said. "That did not happen and with the benefit of 20/20 hindsight now, I will acknowledge that I should have widened that effort to contact appropriate officers within the AMS."

"I take what has happened very, very seriously in terms of its implications. It was not a decision made lightly," he continued. "I'm frankly feeling so saddened by the events of the last day."

Sinnott and Crawford expressed interest in meeting with Moodie, Armstrong and pub managers sometime today. "I anticipate and look forward to discussions with the AMS and Bob Crawford to reach an agreement that will allow the pub to reopen [today]," Sinnott said.

Moodie and Armstrong are unsure about how this will affect the relationship between the AMS and administration. "Right now there doesn't even seem to be a relationship," said Armstrong. "For the amount of effort we put in we saw nothing that has been reciprocated."

Moodie said Crawford has been involved in negotiations with the AMS and services before, "but he won't be any longer."

"I don't know what the point of meeting [with Crawford and Sinnott] is," Moodie said. "We don't co-manage the pub with the Dean of Student Affairs."

"I'm very reluctant to get into more micromanagement with Bob [Crawford]. I think he's done enough of that now," he continued. "Sarah and I and the pub managers are doubly committed to figuring out the problem on our own."

Long-term solutions are in sight to solving the tension between the pub and graduate residence. "I think we would really look in the long term into expanding the JDUC into the grad space," Crawford speculated.

"There's absolutely no question in my mind that a pub on the first floor and a grad residence on the second level are incompatible uses," Sinnott continued.

In the meantime, Moodie, Armstrong and Soules expressed concern for the QP staff members who had relied upon scheduled shifts for sources of income. "Hopefully we're going to find some way to compensate them," Soules said.

"Enjoy Career Success Beyond Your Dreams"

Start training for an exciting new career as a
MICROSOFT CERTIFIED PROFESSIONAL

Join the over 135 graduates of Loyalist College who have achieved career success beyond their dreams in North America's hot information technology (IT) industry. Last year, Loyalist's Microsoft graduates found great jobs and were earning an average annual salary of $40,000 within 9 months of graduation.

Limited Seats are available in our April 1999, MICROSOFT CERTIFIED SYSTEMS ENGINEER & INTERNET program. NO computer experience necessary! During the past 3 years we've maintained a 0% drop-out rate in these programs.

MICROSOFT AUTHORIZED ACADEMY LOYALIST TRAINING & DEVELOPMENT CENTRE
Helping You Get Where You Want To Go!

966-8121 or 1-877-88-SUCCESS

Call Now!
Next Course Starts
April 5, 1999

No money...? No Problem...
NO COVER!
ALL NIGHT!

FRIDAY NIGHT!
FREE FOR ALL!

D.J. DANCE PARTY!
SUPER LITE TILL 10:30!
SUPER LIGHT DRAFT ALL NIGHT!

LIVE!

WED. MAR. 24
WIDE MOUTH MASON

WED. MAR. 31
QUIET RIOT

WED. APR. 14
Grace Ladder - Flood
COLOR (aka The Vibewell)
A FUND-RAISER TO BENEFIT THE KINGSTON YOUTH SHELTER PROJECT

SAT. NIGHT

D.J. DANCE PARTY!!
SUPER LIGHT TILL 10:30!!
SUPER LITE DRAFT ALL NIGHT!!

ADVANCE TICKETS AVAILABLE AT A.J.'S, THE GRIZZLY GRILL and HMV (Cat. Twn. Ctr.)

Aching feet?
Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- Free assessments/ follow up
- 30 money-back guarantee
- 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Comstock Bldg.
Brockville, ON
K6V 1G9
613-498-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston!
Kingston, ON
K7L 1E3
t: 545-0100 f: 545-1997

Dynamic Orthotics

Volunteers Needed

Staying around this summer?
Looking to get involved in the community outside of Queen's University?

Join Kingston and District Immigrant Services' HOST Program, a community befriending program for Newcomers to Canada. Volunteer HOSTs are matched with Newcomers in order to help them adjust to life in Canada.

HOSTs and their Newcomers can meet for a couple of hours each week to shop, practice English, explore Kingston, share cultural knowledge, or simply chat over a cup of coffee.

All volunteers receive orientation, are welcome to KDIS workshops and social activities, and have access to our resource library.

Join a whole New World of Friendship. For more information, contact Stephanie at 548-3302.

Kingston and District Immigrant Services, 322 Brock St. Kingston, ON K7L 1S9

South Pacific Trailfinders

'Odyssey Travel is your South Pacific Travel Expert'

- ✓ Oz/Kiwi Experience
- ✓ VIP Backpackers
- ✓ YHA Cards
- ✓ Air passes
- ✓ Bus/Rail passes
- ✓ Computer visas
- ✓ Tours-Connections, Contiki, Trek

- Long Reach $199 via Europe, Asia
- Coral Route $1799 via South Pacific
- Boomerang $1929 via Asia
- Circle Pacific $2499 via South Pacific, Asia
- Kiwi Special $1099

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lance Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

THE JOURNAL

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

The danger is real

WARNING: don't look now, but the person standing over there may be responsible for using Rohypnol or another date-rape drug at a campus pub.

In fact, if the unconfirmed reports that the date-rape drug was used at a campus pub are true, then it could be anybody we see in our classes, in our labs, in our libraries... in our student community. The harsh reality is that Rohypnol is here on campus. Despite an awareness campaign in the media and on security boards, there seems to be a prevalent attitude that Rohypnol is a distant threat. But the reality is that over the last year the use of date-rape drugs has been documented in Kingston, and now possibly on campus as well and that means Queen's students will become victims.

One victim came forward recently to report that she was sexually assaulted when she saw the Rohypnol alert in last Friday's Journal. How many other victims have not yet come forward because they are unaware or underinformed about the nature of date-rape drugs? How many have not come forward because they are frightened that society will blame them for something that is so obviously, painfully not their fault?

Until it actually registers in the collective consciousness of students that the threat is real, too many people will neglect to take adequate precautions. Until students recognize that assault and abuse happen almost daily, right under our noses, women will continue to be afraid of society blaming them and will continue to suffer abuse. The student community needs to start talking about these horrendous abuses, and, in so doing, allow the victims to feel safe in coming forward and saying "no" to assault and abuse.

In the meantime, the administration must continue an awareness campaign to inform the community about date-rape drugs. If it weren't for the vigilance of Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford, last Friday's warning about Rohypnol would not have been printed in The Journal. Indeed, despite the damage this action may have caused to the university's reputation, Crawford's brave late night telephone call to The Journal on a press night indirectly led to the reporting of a sexual assault — something for which Crawford should be commended.

The sad reality of our commendation is that this kind of communication about sexual assaults and abuses rarely happens. In fact, it is only when the rest of the Queen's community starts to take the threat of Rohypnol as seriously as the dean of student affairs will Queen's be a safer place.

Pro-life pro-debate

DOES A FETUS SCREAM DURING AN abortion? The AMS Pro-Life Club thinks so, and is bent on convincing other students in an aggressive poster campaign.

Graphic posters and a video of an actual abortion that the club screened last week have stirred controversy on a campus where a consensus of pro-choice opinion is usually taken for granted.

Nothing, however, should be taken for granted when it comes to abortion issues. While some students may find the pro-life posters offensive, others can no doubt sympathize with the message they convey.

As AMS Social Issues Commissioner Naomi Brunemeyer observed, the AMS is here to serve and represent the diversity of students at Queen's. Clearly, club-chairperson Sindi Sabourin is not alone in holding pro-life beliefs at Queen's. It is therefore appropriate that there is an AMS club to promote dialogue on the issue and provide students who share similar beliefs on abortion an opportunity to express their views, especially in an environment of pro-choice opinion which may make them feel unwelcomed or marginalized.

While few students would question the right of such a group to exist, some have questioned the appropriateness of using graphic and often disturbing posters and a video to promote its beliefs. While some of the group's material may be offensive and even hurtful to women who have made a choice to have an abortion, the material does not cross the line between acceptable and obscene. Just as other clubs with politically charged agendas promote their views in the JDUC, the pro-life club has every right to spread their views on abortion in the manner they have chosen.

No matter how you feel about their cause, the presence of the Pro-Life Club on campus is a positive move — one which gives voice to a minority group and stirs legitimate and peaceful debate.

You know you're getting old, when...

GUESS WHO'S GETTING MARRIED? Not me. But that's what I was asked a few days ago by a childhood friend. Looks like I'm going to be part of a post-millennium wedding celebration in process as of this moment.

So, here's the deal. It's not about feeling old, but realizing that being younger is more of a challenge. I remember splashing in puddles, getting high on bubble tape and fighting ridiculous fights with these friends. Now they're in the mist of creating their own little replicas of themselves to imitate the exact same motions that made us dream the days away.

I've come to the realization that I probably can't pull the same shit as I did a few years ago, and it's all about getting stressed out over things that will infest us for the next 40 years or so.

It's difficult to just let things happen without much direction, but spending living time worrying about the next big thing is probably even more detrimental to our future.

So, why the big deal? Well, number one, nobody wants to be left in the dust. I mean, four years at a high rated institution where everything that was done was done hard-core doesn't compare to a career of living at home feeding mom's cats for 60 years.

It's hard to explain how to develop a solution to the aging process. On one hand we could wish for simplicity and innocence once again, but then the PUC hill has to be paid by Friday. Denying it will only cause late marks and recognizing it will only induce an ulcer.

There's no real point, no bitching about how things suck, nothing to complain about, just accepting the fact that in a few years I'm going to have to ditch the sneakers for heels and attempt to catch the bouquet.

Other than my friend getting hitched, there were other things that set off this whole revelation. As I flipped through a music magazine during one of my numerous study breaks, I scanned a historical profile on everyone's favourite kids — the Beastie Boys. The article examined the recklessness, the sleepless nights and vicious pranks. But the grand finale assumed a role of maturity. All three have gotten beyond their wild years and taken on the position of adulthood. Even the people who we think live a stress free lifestyle and full of antics have their fair share of responsibilities. Obviously, but it was always nice to think that perhaps there was a possibility to get to a certain level of youth, even when you are considered "old."

It's not about being scared to face the brave new world of supporting one self

I've come to the realization that I probably can't pull the same shit as I did a few years ago.

BY LILIAN KIM

EDITORIAL BOARD

- EDITOR-IN-CHIEF: Keith Gerain
- MANAGING EDITOR: Laura MacInnis
- NEWS EDITOR: Fiona Stevenson
- ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS: Renée Huang, Jocelyn Laporte
- EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR: Paul Heisler
- ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR: Stefan Murray
- ASSISTANT ARTS EDITORS: Sarah Crosbie, Lillian Kim
- FEATURES EDITOR: Sean Springer
- OPINIONS EDITOR: Dan Rowe
- SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR: Adam Kaminsky
- ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR: Robert MacNeil
- MISC. EDITOR: Ken Butland
- GRAPHICS EDITOR: Janice Chan
- THE READER EDITOR: Jesse Craig Bolinger
- SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT: John Bowman
- PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS: Alex Kronby, James Terjanian
- WEB EDITOR: Marco Lui

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Mike Beltzner, Crystal Bona, Kevin Butler, Alison Chan, Theo dos Santos, Douglas Reid Gierula, Bob Hsieh, Micoon Lavy, Mike McDermott, Jeremy Newhook, George Pflaff, Natalie Pitre, Natasha Poushinsky, Eli Stuster, Nick Sinclair, Isabelle Skabudis, Rebecca Spaulding, Hannah Varro

Photographers: Mike McDermott, Sean Richmond

BUSINESS STAFF

- BUSINESS MANAGER: Claudia Kraft
- SALES REPRESENTATIVES: Suzanne Armstrong, Andrew Cooke
- ADVERTISING MANAGER: Mark Fucella
- ADVERTISING DESIGNERS: Katherine Colburn, Annie Ge, Rachelle Villanueva
- SYSTEMS MANAGER: Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 19, 1999 • Issue 37 • Volume 126
 The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.
 Copyright ©1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganouque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions.
 Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further preference policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8
 Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6718 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca
 Circulation 9,000
 Issue 38 will be published on Friday, March 26, 1999.

OPINIONS

The press on the media

THE FREE EXCHANGE OF IDEAS IS AN instrumental component within any modern democratic society as it allows for the uninhibited expression of individual thought. Be this in the form of a quasi-radical political debate between friends or a middle-of-the-road editorial in a small town paper, ideas are the intellectual cornerstone of human growth and development. Thus it remains that the gate-keepers to this societal quintessence bear a particular responsibility to ensure the values that free expression assumes, remain a reality.

With this in mind, I would like to relay an incident that occurred at a South African university, The Peninsula Technikon, this past fall. As with any occasion that impedes the efforts for free expression, this incident stressed upon me a sense of intense disparity for this developing democracy. This incident occurs as follows: An article was run in the September 24 issue of the school's newspaper, The Mail and Guardian, entitled "Sex For Sale on Campus." Within the piece, student-journalist Max Hamata made allegations that sex services were available from certain female students on campus. The article made no attempt to identify any of the individuals involved in the alleged circumstance, nor did it suggest that all of the school's female students took part. Hamata's story was based on unidentified sources involved in the alleged Pentech sex-trade, also making reference to ads placed around campus soliciting customers for the business — "Customers will be treated confidentially and will receive preferential treatment," reads one ad.

Consequently, the Pentech administration initiated a disciplinary hearing against the student-journalist, during which he was not permitted legal representation. Hamata was subjected to what the Freedom of Expression Institute (FXI) has called a "blatant harassment of journalists." Hamata was questioned and accused by the Vice-Chancellor of being "disloyal to the institution." He was also interrogated by campus security who tried to force him to reveal the names of his sources. Hamata refused on the basis that doing so would be a breach of confidentiality. FXI has also stated that it believes the incident has had a multiplier effect, drawing attention to another student-journalist at an internship with a major Cape Town newspaper refusing to cover the story.

It is a distressing matter of fact that media ownership in North America is growing increasingly exclusive.

To some, this incident may seem unfortunate, yet insignificant, appalling, yet distant. I believe that the almost prophetic words of Bernard Shaw speak directly to such sentiments: "Whatever can blow man up can blow society up. The history of the world is the history of those who had courage enough to embrace this truth." With this in mind, it is important to observe that media control and the influence of media content is not a foreign phenomenon, a mistaken assumption which is all-too-often made.

For example, it is a distressing matter of fact that media ownership in North America is growing increasingly exclusive. At last count, over 60 per cent of the Canadian print-media market was under the control of Hollinger International Inc., with a handful of other companies controlling the remainder.

Exactly what are the implications of such a media structure upon the exercise of our societal values? In 1992, Peter C.

Newman conducted an interview with Hollinger's President, David Radler, during which Radler adamantly declared that if one of his papers were to run a story contrary to his political agenda, he is "ultimately the publisher... and if editors disagree with [him], they should do so while they're no longer in [his] employ." Radler has also said that he "will ultimately determine what the papers say and how they're going to be run."

A similar statement was made John Bassett, former publisher of the Toronto Telegram. In a TV interview, Mr Bassett was asked, "Is it true you use your newspaper to push your own political views?" To which he replied, "Of course. Why else would you want to own a newspaper?"

It remains that between information and power resides an intimate relationship, exemplified by the particular influence yielded by the mass media upon the formation of public opinion. This position bears no exception to any other of significant power, and must assume the responsibility that is manifestly related to its actions. The sad fact is that in most cases this is not the norm, and perhaps is not even an option.

A few years ago, former CBC National News anchor Knowlton Nash addressed an auditorium of university students, during which he asserted the ideal that "the media is the hinge of democracy... the glue that holds together our democratic society." He proclaimed the media to be a "socially and professionally responsible agent of the public... militant in guardianship of the public interest and aggressive in the pursuit of truth." This ideal must be realized and maintained as the embodiment of all that is democratic.

JEREMY NEWHOOK
ARTS '01

Letters to the Editors

Date rape drug inspires sobering thoughts

Dear Editors,

As I read the front page story in last week's Journal about Rohypnol and a recent sexual assault I grew increasingly angry. Whenever assaults are reported in the media, they are often accompanied by a sidebar instructing women on how to protect themselves. I am frustrated that women can't feel safe. I realize that such tactics have become necessary and that they do a great service to women. I am frustrated that they are needed. I am frustrated that as women walk back from night classes they face fear. I am frustrated that a woman can not be as relaxed during a night out. I am frustrated that someone is supposed to walk her home.

Perhaps what overwhelmed me most about this incident is that the woman's attacker was also supposed to be her protector. Who can a woman trust? I am moving out on my own next year. When I mentioned this to a good friend he said, "Just make sure someone walks you home at night." While I appreciate his concern for me, I am frustrated that such concern is common.

I am frustrated that women are not safe. It really upsets me that I must watch my drink constantly. I must take it with me into the bathroom. I must not accept drinks at parties. All these limitations because I am not safe at night. Somewhere down the line, these limitations became the norm for women. I am frustrated that this is taken for granted. I am frustrated that this is expected. I am frustrated that this is accepted without a second thought.

Until everyone steps forward and says that they will not accept sexual violence on campus it will never go away.

It is unacceptable. And until everyone steps forward and says that they will not accept sexual violence on campus, and until everyone takes a firm stance against it, it will never go away. Sidebars, and walking buddies are only temporary solutions. By following these sidebars I am subtly accepting these limitations. If I do not follow them, I am unsafe. Speak out. It is your campus. We can not accept that women lead restricted lives. For the safety of women, we must not tolerate sexual violence. Together, our voices can resolve this issue.

"The power depends on the silence."

Michelle Teixeira
Con-Ed/Arts '02

Step up, Mike

Dear Editors,

With a provincial election expected to be just around the corner, we feel obligated to ask the question: where are the Tories?

The Queen's University Alma Mater Society, representing 11,000 undergraduate students, recently organized a debate on education issues. Each party was given the opportunity to present their education platform to he students and citizens of Ontario. Unfortunately, the Conservative Party MPP's refused to attend. This follows on the heels of an education-focused debate in Hamilton on February 10 that the Tories shied away from, and another in Toronto on February 25 that the Tories skipped.

This absence leaves us to wonder why

Continued on page 10

talking

HEADS

What is your definition of soul?

"James Brown, eating some fish in South Korea, sporting some new Nikes." Rob Arntfield Arts '01

"Something we don't have!" Deanna Lambert Arts '99
Cammie Guest Arts '01
Lisa Parquin Arts '01

"The sweet soulful lovin' I get from Sean Richmond." Susan Inman Arts '01

"A tie between momma's homecooking and Gael Group 58." Mark Andrews Arts '01

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 9

Mike Harris does not want to talk about the record of his government and what their future plans are. Rather than participating in low-cost open forms, it seems the only time Mike Harris is willing to talk to the citizens of Ontario is through $90 million worth of taxpayer-funded partisan advertisements.

Mike Harris owes it to the people of Ontario to be forthcoming on his education record, which includes cuts of over $1 billion, skyrocketing tuition and broken promises on student aid reform. Does this government believe in a two-tiered education system and complete deregulation of tuition fees? If so, it is incumbent upon them to submit this plan to the public for debate.

A healthy democracy is built on a foundation of open debate and dialogue. This is impossible to achieve when the governing party refuses to engage in any type of open discussion. Mike Harris should stop hiding and tell Ontarians what he plans to do to our education system.

Milan Konopek,
Academic Affairs
Commissioner

Aaron Lazarus,
Deputy Academic Affairs
Commissioner

Apology to the Student Constables

Dear Editors,

In my letter to The Journal dated March 12, 1999, I expressed concern over the volunteer abuse that took place at the ArtsSci 1999 formal. The purpose of the letter was simply to let people know that volunteers are hard working individuals and should be treated with respect. However, I took a personal shot at the Student Constables stating that they "did not do their job" correctly. I would like to sincerely apologize for this. Though I feel the situation was mishandled, I realize it was a very tough situation. The Student Constables at Queen's are unbelievably hardworking and have a very difficult job to do. In all instances during the formal, and at all Queen's events for that matter, they are extremely helpful and friendly. In my attempt to jump to the defense of my volunteers, I inappropriately insulted the Student Constables. I fully admit that I am way out of line, and hope that the Student Constables can accept my sincere apology.

Jehn Mihill
House Attendant
ArtsSci Formal 1999

Racing the clock

Dear Editors,

I'm taking time out of my busy schedule to write a direct response to U of T representative Johnathan Nightingale's misinformed letter entitled "Loat's Bubble Burst" (Tues., Feb. 9) because he seems to have mangled the issue enough that it requires a little clarification. In this article he states that "...the process of initiating a nuclear explosion... requires absolutely everything to go right" and somewhat vaguely concludes that no nuclear bombs will explode on Jan. 1, 2000 because if something were to go wrong (due to the Year 2000 Bug — or Y2K Bug) the bomb would not function correctly and therefore not explode. Well, I hate to rain on your parade but that's not the issue with nuclear bombs and the Y2K bug.

The issue is not whether a nuclear bomb will detonate on Jan. 1 2000 when its clock mishandles the millennium. There is no clock in a nuclear bomb. Why would you put a clock in a nuclear bomb? The only two possible reasons I would put a clock in a nuclear bomb are:

(a) to make an action movie, and have the clock count down to "one" before the hero manages to defuse it and save the day, or

(b) for precise delivery of the bomb through which the clock would be used as a timing device to measure lengths of route "legs" towards the target. Nuclear bombs targeted in this manner would be told to travel in "this direction" at "this speed" for "this time" and the aforementioned clock would measure "this time."

Now, if you screw up the clock in a nuclear bomb guidance system, will it explode? No. So why worry about it? Instead the problem lies in the non-Y2K defense systems of countries like Russia.

The issue is summed up quite nicely in a report by Reuters in which it states that "some experts have warned that... a [Y2K] error could provoke an accidental nuclear alert in Russia, though the Russian Defense Ministry says there is no chance of missiles being triggered by mistake."

So Johnathan, do you see what we're getting at? The bombs will be fine. You're absolutely right, the Russian President (who is in no shape to do so at the moment — or in the foreseeable future) would have to "turn a key" (or something similar) to launch a nuclear bomb, and we've already outlined why they won't blow up on their own.

The problem lies in the ancillary defense systems which, as the year 2000 rolls around, may go haywire or even stop functioning entirely.

In such a case, military jockeying by hostile countries is likely to be met with a hysterical and paranoid response from the military of the non-functioning systems, as they would no longer have any means by which to protect themselves or possibly to tell what is going on near their borders. All of a sudden you have a crisis on your hands during which a nuclear bomb might be used as more than a threat by a desperate military power. That's the problem. I believe that's what Allison was trying to say when she mentioned that the Y2K Bug would cause archaic systems to "perceive an attack even when there is none, forcing them to launch a retaliation." ("Pop Goes the World", Feb. 5) The only fault with this statement is that these systems (in any country I know of) don't force a retaliation, but merely tell the military powers that they are under attack when they are not.

It's up to those people to overreact to the situation — not an entirely unthinkable situation when you consider how many conflicts are initiated by misunderstanding or miscommunication.

Because this letter is already long enough and I have other things to do, I'll leave with one parting comment and that's that if Russia is in this predicament (and we know this to be a fact), what do you think might happen on Jan. 1, 2000 (or any time thereafter) regarding those many, little, bankrupt "breakaway" republics who "inherited" nuclear weapons from Russia (on account of the Russian silos being in their land), but never inherited the accompanying safeguards? (While we're at it, let's also toss India and Pakistan in there too, since they seem to want global attention lately.) So if you really want to worry about nuclear bombs on the millennium, focus your attention on those countries and watch to see — if and when their radar screens go blank and their missile warning systems stop functioning — exactly what they do.

Or heck, go get pissed-drunk and party hard that night, so if the bombs do hit you'll go out with a bang.

Jonathan Mesiano-Crookston
ArtsSci '99

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Own a piece of Queen's history.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

THIS YEAR...

- ~ Did you play on an Intramural league or tournament team?
- ~ Were you an Intramural individual or team winner?
- ~ Is your Faculty or Unit leading the points race?
- ~ Do you like to have FUN?

If 'YES' to any of the above, your presence is a MUST at the...

Annual Intramural Awards Banquet
Tues. 30 March
The Singing Frog
6:30 - 8 pm

Tickets: $3 in advance (PEC Wickets starting March 18th) or $4 at the door

Admission includes cover at any Hub establishment that night.

Food & Fun

HISTORY PRE-REGISTRATION 1999

INFORMATION MEETING

An information meeting will be held Thursday, March 25, 7:00pm Dunning, Hall, Rm 14

Students intending to pre-register for seminars in History may wish to obtain:

COUNSELLING

Counselling session dates & location: March 29, 31, April 5, 7, 1-3pm, and during Undergraduate Chair's regular office hours (Mon. and Wed. 1-3pm) in Watson Hall, Rm305

CONSIDER A CAREER IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Is your degree in the arts, natural or social sciences, humanities or a profession? Complement it with our MPA or diploma in public administration. Governments are hiring talented people. Watch the doors open.

DALHOUSIE UNIVERSITY
Master of Public Administration
Halifax, Nova Scotia
Canada B3H 3J5
(902) 494-3742
Fax: (902) 494-7023
E-mail: dalmpa@dal.ca
www.mgmt.dal.ca/spa

Toward excellence in the Public Service

Curry Village

Bringing you Kingston's finest Indian Cuisine for 13 years

Recommended by The New York Times, The Globe and Mail, Toronto Life and Where to Eat in Canada Guide (1987 - present)

169A Princess Street (upstairs), Kingston, Ontario 542-5010

20% Discount for Students, Sun. - Thurs. (Food Only)

Surf on by:
www.journal.queensu.ca

The International Centre

in the John Deutsch University Centre just past the Queen's Pub.
Tel: (613) 533-2604 Fax: (613) 533-6190
<http://www.quic.queensu.ca>

Made last minute plans to go abroad this summer?

We have all the resources you'll need to help make your experience a successful one.

... We're open NOW
We're open ALL SUMMER.
And we invite you back in September after you return so you can share your experiences with us and other students.

A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE

PLAYER'S RACING

FOLLOW THE TEAM: WWW.PLAYERS-RACING.COM

Freak show not the real deal

IN RESPONSE TO THE REVIEW OF Zamora, the Torture King's "Circus of the Scars" freakshow, I would like to offer an alternate explanation for what people were seeing — or, for that matter, not seeing — and why, with regard to this, his show was less than successful.

Both the Torture King and Jeff Child draw upon the fact that the Freakshow is a dying art, a culture of the past that in contemporary times has been a rarity. I, on the other hand, believe that this art and culture is still very much alive, but, as anything is prone to do over time, it has developed. The Torture King's show, albeit amusing, fell short of portraying what a modern "freakshow" is about.

Freakshows, throughout history, have been about more than simply a group of physically deformed people on display, or unusually "gifted" people performing feats to make the mainstream audience gag and squeal.

Freakshows have also been very much about a culture consisting of people with abilities or inclinations that do not correspond to what is deemed normal. A culture of "freaks" offers a context in which certain people may exhibit their otherwise unacceptable or "insane" behaviour. With this definition in mind, it is obvious that the culture is still very much alive, perhaps more so now in the late 20th century than ever before.

Within or alongside every culture there exist sub-culture and counter-cultures, and ours is no exception. Many of our youth cultures, in this fine age of multiculturalism and political-correctness, have been absorbed into the mainstream; they are generally accepted as something different, a bunch of kids trying to be "kooky" and thus something to be studiously ignored. Although this misses the point of sub-cultures, or "scenes," it allows for them to happily co-exist alongside a mainstream.

The overall context of our society allows for pierced, tattooed, shabbily-dressed punks, the baggy pants and bright colour wearing ravers, the made-up and elaborate garb of the "dark and depressed goths, as well as the baseball-capped, Gap-sporting, Dave Matthew's-listening mainstream. However, there are sub-cultures that will never be accepted into the mainstream — the contemporary "freak" cultures.

One of the larger ones, that shows like the Torture King and Jim Rose associate with, is the fetish scene, famous mostly for its hardcore version, the sado-masochism scene.

Fetish is a scene that will never be integrated because the values it is based on pertaining mostly to sex, pain and the body are diametrically opposed to fundamental mainstream values. Whereas sex and one's body are generally deemed sacred and private, the fetish scene views them as instruments and toys for public amusement. Whereas self-induced pain and mutilation of one's own, or another's body, is generally seen as a taboo, to the fetish scenester, pain is celebrated and the body is appreciated in terms of its resilience.

The values laid out by the fetish scene, and portrayed in a Fetish Show, are the same values Zamora the Torture King adopts for his Circus of the Scars. The only distinction between a fetish show and Zamora's freakshow is the Torture King's lack of artistic integrity and an outdated and tame repertoire.

I wonder if Zamora's lack of success was partly intentional. I wonder if the show was tamed down on purpose, for the sake of the audience. In a town such as Kingston, at a school such as Queen's, I'd imagine a full-blown fetish show would cause riots in the streets.

I am not picking on the fact the Queen's population is mostly made up of sheltered, middle-class, private school kids who couldn't possibly handle a display of true torture and mutilation. Not at all. I am picking up on the fact that due to the cultural sterility of Kingston, a fetish show, an exhibition of marginalized values corresponding to a truly underground culture, would be so severely out of context, the audience would not be amused or entertained, but appalled, horrified and angry.

The artistic element would go unnoticed, the pleasures would not be appreciated. People, although happy to witness the rehearsed performance of a man impaling his bicep with a sterile metal skewer, would generally not appreciate watching a man, of his own free will, take off a finger with a cleaver just to see if he could do it.

The Queen's population enjoys watching a man lie on broken glass or a bed of nails, and get up completely unscathed — it's amazing what the human body can put up with. To the fetish show-goer, it is even more amazing what the human mind can put up with, when a volunteer's entire body is covered with four inches of plaster, left to set and hear up, then be beared with metal poles, baseball bats and large boots, and have the fragments pulled off along with clumps of skin and hair. To the mainstream freakshow-goer, this behaviour is cruel and twisted. To the fetish-show goer, it is quality entertainment and, depending on the performance, artistic.

Instead of watching a man light up a neon sign of a camel with his bare hand or light a torch with the electricity that runs through his mouth, I would rather watch Dr. Perverto, a Montreal fetish performer, perform his torch act. Dr. Perverto traces designs onto a woman's bare chest with a burning torch. I like the combination of the lines of flame, the movement of one arm applying it, and the other arm following a short distance after it clearing the canvas to make room for more. The light, the colour, the body — all supply the artistic elements celebrated in quality works of art. Quality, artistic... perhaps. Yet unappreciated by any who do not understand the culture from which it arises.

Sword swallowing, pulling bits of string from one's stomach, a man squeezing through a tennis racket... impressive? Perhaps, when seen in a certain context, but in a larger context not entirely accurate. "Freakshows" are still abundant and "freak" culture is still very much alive. Perhaps Zamora the Torture King's circus was a nice piece of recreated history, mirroring, however slightly, the freakshows of the past. However, by doing so he betrayed his own "culture" or perhaps he just took the audience into consideration. That evening at Alfie's was certainly entertaining, outlandish and sensational, but had Alfie's been a fetish bar we would have seen culture.

ISABELLE SKABURSKIS
ARTSCI '02

Back by Popular Demand!

Travel & Teach ESL

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
44 HOUR CERTIFICATION COURSE

Classroom Teaching Practicum Included

Crash Course A: 1 week	Course B: 6 weeks
Time: May 3 - 7, 1999 9:00 - 5:00 Monday - Friday Practicum May 8 10:30 - 2:30	Time: May 10 - June 17, 1999 6:00 - 9:00 p.m. Mondays & Wednesdays Practicum June 5 & 12 10:30 - 2:30

Location: Queen's Campus

Cost: $359.00/44 hour course
(5% discount if registered before April 23, 1999)

REGISTRATION INFORMATION

Phone 384-6194 or email sbromstein@bigfoot.com

YOUR SPRING BREAK!

ROOTS KINGSTON

Save
10-40%

off selected items of Spring Merchandise

Sweats, Shoes, Shirts,
Shorts, Bags, Boots,
Outerwear, Pants, Hats
& everything else!

Modern Straight
Leg
Jean

Regular $69.95
NOW $34.99

229 Princess Street - 546-7668 - Open Sundays

An Evening in Paris à la Comm '99

Photos by Renée Huang

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

In Focus goes on the town for...

ST. PATRICK'S DAY

Photos by Sean Richmond

New Show CRIME & PUNISHMENT

curated by Jennifer Rudder

20 March - 6 June

OPENING RECEPTION 20 March 7-9 pm

PANEL DISCUSSION 21 March 2 pm

"Expert Witness: Representing the criminal in art"
Moderator: Jennifer Rudder with Jonathan Eeles, Kyo Maclear, Louise Noguchi and Jeanne Randolph

Free admission

Presented with the assistance of The Canada Council for the Arts, the Ontario Arts Council, the London Arts Board and the City of Kingston.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre

218 Barrie Street, Queens University
Kingston, Ontario K7L 3N6
Tel: 613 533-2190 Fax: 613 533-6765
<http://www.queensu.ca/ageth/>

International Project Management

a NEW 12-month post-grad certificate program

- conceptualizing, developing and writing international project proposals
- employing effective cross-cultural communications skills for working overseas
- developing an in-depth knowledge of major international funding organizations and securing project funding
- managing human and financial resources for overseas international development initiatives
- employing sustainable development practices
- managing international project review and evaluation

The program includes an 8-week field placement or applied research project which may be completed overseas or in North America. For admission, a university degree or three-year college diploma is required, and a second language or overseas work experience is preferred.

Contact: The Business School at Humber College
205 Humber College Boulevard, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M9W 5L7
Tel: 1-416-675-6622, ext 9703 - Fax: 1-416-675-2188

www.business.humberc.on.ca

...in Toronto for the Summer?

Join the University of Toronto in the Faculty of Arts and Science
as a Visiting Student

Take courses for credit towards a degree at your home university. Choose from over 275 courses offered on the downtown St. George campus. Both day and evening courses are available.

Enjoy full access to U of T facilities.

Summer Session 1999
(May 10-August 13)

Applications will be accepted as space permits. For Visiting Student application booklet and summer timetable email: info@wdw.utoronto.ca or call 416-978-4444 | FAX: 416-978-4088

Course descriptions at: www.library.utoronto.ca/www/arts\_and\_science/

Woodsworth College | University of Toronto
119 St. George Street, Toronto, ON M5S 1A9

Last Ring Days Before Convocation

are being held at the Campus Bookstore

March 23rd and 24th

On Tuesday March 23rd and Wednesday March 24th come to the Campus Bookstore for the last Jostens Ring Days before Spring Convocation. A representative from Jostens will be at the Campus Bookstore to help answer all your questions about Jostens rings. Jostens rings offer unmatched quality and they provide a full guarantee and insurance on all their products. The Campus Bookstore offers Jostens rings in a variety of styles and designs. Don't miss your last chance to see the Jostens representative before Convocation and find the perfect ring!

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

www.campusbookstore.com

We Don't Call it the MONSTER SALE for Nothing!

The Campus Bookstore's Biggest Sale of the year, A.K.A. "The Monster Sale" starts Monday March 22nd!

75% off
Selected Stationery

20% off
Regularly Priced Sportswear

$15
Selected Knapsacks

$10
Assorted T-Shirts

$25
Sweatshirts

Don't be afraid of the Monster, be afraid of missing the MONSTER SALE!
Sale ends Saturday March 27th.

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

www.campusbookstore.com

SCIENCE

Big picture, big sound

BY MIKE BELTZNER

Reading journals, reports and reviews in order to stay abreast of the latest developments used to be a job reserved for academics. In the modern Information Age, however, where technological advances cause computer power to be doubled approximately every two years, if you want to understand what's going on in a field like home entertainment, you'd better read up. Recently, technology has become readily available that allows an average consumer to put together a home theatre with digital picture and sound quality that is identical to that used in a real movie theatre. The only catch is that with new technology hitting the market every few months, it can be difficult for the "average consumer" to predict what standards will be embraced by the industry, and which will go the way of BetaMax.

The pictures

Fashionable video stores now have entire sections dedicated to movies that are in "widescreen" format. This refers to the width-to-height ratio of the picture. A standard television broadcast is more or less square, using a ratio of 1.33:1, while movies made with Panavision lenses — credit watchers will recognize that name — are filmed with a wider ratio of 2.35:1 or 1.85:1. Watching a widescreen video on a normal television results in "letterboxing," meaning that two black strips appear at the top and bottom of a smaller, rectangular image that appears in a film's original widescreen format. While purists insist that the smaller image size is an acceptable price to pay for the wider, more complete image, letterboxed movies aren't widely accepted by the majority of viewers who don't like the reduced picture size.

Now, though, television manufacturers are beginning to build sets with wider screens that will display movies in their original aspect ratios. When displaying regular television broadcasts, the extra width is either left blank or used for menus, preview windows displaying the contents of other channels or — with the advent of digital television — an Internet browser. The idea, however, is that television broadcasts themselves will shift to a wider format to allow directors more freedom and space. This move is planned to coincide with the shift from standard broadcasts to the digital High Definition Television (HDTV) format.

"High definition" refers to a resolution enhancement in television screens and broadcasts. Televisions work by having an electron gun fire beams of electrons at a phosphorescent screen and lighting up red, green and blue points called "pixels." The electron beam scans along horizontal lines from top to bottom. By increasing the number of scan lines a television has, the resolution can be increased. The HDTV format features 1440 scan lines as opposed to the 300 lines that television sets currently have, and will be displayed at a higher refresh rate, delivering a sharper, clearer image.

The new Sony Wega is the first HDTV to be commercially available, and is widescreen as well. Although television is still only broadcast in 300 scan line resolution, Wega owners will still see an improvement. Sony has invented a process using embedded computer graphics processors to artificially extrapolate additional scan lines for standard television broadcasts.

Toshiba has also released a widescreen HDTV and other manufacturers are expected to follow suit. However, if you're looking to buy a television in the near future (helloooooo, graduates!), you should probably steer clear of the HDTV/widescreen market for now. Industry standards are still being set, and there is always the risk of getting caught with a piece of equipment which is top of the line and obsolete, all at once.

The sound

Historically ignored by home entertainment manufacturers, the field of audio reproduction has advanced in leaps and bounds in the past decade. Good movies are visually appealing, but great movies make good use of sound. There's a difference between hearing Godzilla's footsteps plod through New York City and feeling them actually shake the room. Being able to hear objects whiz past your head while seeing the image on the screen heightens any film experience.

Sound is recorded in separate "channels," with a larger number of channels providing for more dynamic and controllable sound field. Mono refers to a single channel of sound, meaning that the same sounds come out of all speakers at the same intensities. Today, however, the only things that exist in mono are old movies and AM radio. Mono was pronounced dead more than two decades ago, when the stereo revolution came about. Stereo allowed for two discrete channels of sound, normally assigned as left and right. While this doesn't seem all that exciting now, this revolution brought with it an army of foley artists (credit fanatics will also recognize that name — these are the people who create the audio effects used in a film) and sound producers who exploited stereo to create more realistic sound effects.

The late eighties and early nineties saw Dolby Laboratories, who had already made a name for themselves with noise reduction standards and film audio recording techniques, take the reins of the entertainment audio technology horse with their creation of Dolby Surround. The Dolby Surround system produced four channels of sound: left, right, centre and surround. The center channel was to be primarily used for voice audio, and the surround channel was for background noises and music. Stereo effects from the left and right channels would localize sounds that related to action on the screen.

The digital convergence — which refers to the trend to make all electronic devices based on discrete digital information instead of the less clear, continuous, analog information — and the desire for more control over the localization of sound inspired the creation of the latest audio reproduction technology, Dolby Digital. Also known as Dolby 5.1 or Dolby AC-3, this format features five audio channels (left, centre, right, rear left and rear right) plus a separate channel solely for a "bass effect speaker" (subwoofer) which make up the 5.1 channels. Unlike Dolby Surround, the 5.1 channels are discrete, meaning that separate audio information goes to each of the speakers. Further, the sound information is digital instead of analog, which yields a sound quality difference analogous to the difference between an audio cassette and a CD player.

Part 2 will appear next week, featuring the latest technological developments in audio and video reproduction, as well as the new digital media.

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

The Moon's just a chip off the old block

The Moon, one theory says, formed at the same time as the Earth from a cloud of rock and dust. Another theory supposes that the Moon was wandering around space when it was snagged by Earth's gravity and pulled into orbit. But it's a third theory of the Moon's origins that gained support this week thanks to scientists analysing data from NASA's Lunar Prospector. That theory postulates that a body the size of Mars struck the Earth early in its formation and that the Moon formed from debris torn off the Earth in that collision. The data from the space craft revealed that the core of the Moon contains less than four per cent of its mass. If the Earth and Moon had formed together, the Moon's core would be similar in proportion to that of the Earth. The Earth's core contains approximately 30 per cent of its mass. The explanation put forth by the NASA scientists is that interplanetary collision occurred after the Earth's core had formed and that the Moon formed from the relatively iron-poor material of Earth's outer shell.

Glowing octopus? Run for your lives!

An article earlier this year in The Queen's Journal Science section explored how animals create light. Now another bioluminescent creature has been found, but it's certainly no mere firefly. The discovery in the Gulf of Maine of a deep-sea octopus whose suckers produce a bright blue light has caused such a stir that it appeared on the recent covers of both Nature and Science News. Although bioluminescence among other cephalopods — squids and cuttlefish — is quite common, only two other species of octopus that produce light have been identified. A study of the anatomy of the octopus' suckers showed that many of the muscle cells had evolved into light-producing cells.

Solid? Liquid? Both?

In general terms, a liquid is a substance whose molecules are disordered and a solid is one whose molecules are arranged in an orderly pattern. But what happens when a liquid comes in contact with a solid? According to physicists at Northwestern University, something very strange indeed. The researchers reflected high intensity X-rays off a thin layer of a liquid called TEHOS spread on a flat silicon surface and observed the resulting interference patterns. A liquid would produce no pattern at all, just a slightly wavy line. A solid would produce sharp spikes corresponding to its regular molecular structure. The layers of TEHOS in contact with the silicon produced broad humps, indicating that the molecules were in an intermediate physical state, neither solid nor liquid. It is hoped that the findings will aid in the development of lubricants and thin film coatings.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING
 STUDENT GOVERNMENT

notice

As per section 9.01.08 of the AMS Constitution, this advertisement constitutes due notice of a lack of quorum at the AMS Society Annual General Meeting of March 16, 1999.

Should any members of the Society disagree with any decision made at the meeting, they may present a petition of one hundred signatures by March 30 asking for a replacement Society Special General Meeting.

Questions, comments, concerns should be made to the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs.

NOW HIRING...

AMS JUDICIAL COMMITTEE

Chair

Alternate Chair

Committee Members (3)

Clerk

AMS PROSECUTORS OFFICE

Chief Prosecutor

Deputy Prosecutors (2)

Applications due March 29th
 See AMS Internal Affairs for info

FEATURES

MARCH 15 — 19 IS ANTI-DISCRIMINATION WEEK

The endless struggle to free Tibet

By ALISON CHAN

MARCH 10 WAS THE 40TH anniversary of the Tibetan national uprising population of Tibetans: 7.5 million exiles; 6 million in Tibet.

To date, 1.2 million Tibetans have died as a result of Chinese occupation.

It has been 40 years since the Dalai Lama began his exile. During that time, Tibetans and their supporters across the world have been pushing for the autonomy of Tibet from Chinese rule. Despite international pressure, and the well-known, documented evidence of human rights abuses, the Chinese remain unmoved. China has consistently maintained that Tibet rightfully became part of its territory in the 13th century. Most members of the United Nations, however, (excluding the communist bloc) accept that Tibet was an independent state from 1913 to China's 1949 invasion.

China's direct involvement in Tibet began soon after the People's Republic of China was established. In 1949, the People's Liberation Army began invasions into Tibet with the aim of 'liberating' Tibetans from 'imperialist forces' and from what they described as oppressive 'feudalism.' On September 9, 1951, 3,000 Chinese troops marched into the capital, Lhasa. By 1954, there were 222,000 members of the People's Liberation Army (PLA) stationed in Tibet. At first, the Chinese controlled their use of force in an attempt to convince the people to cooperate. However, as protests mounted and revolts became more violent, the PLA resorted to physical coercion. They began bombing and pillaging monasteries in Eastern Tibet, arresting nobles, senior monks and guerrilla leaders, and publicly torturing and executing them to discourage resistance.

In 1966 only 550 monasteries still existed out of 2,700 that were in existence in 1959. By the end of the Cultural Revolution, only eight remained standing.

During the final unsuccessful revolt in March of 1959, more than 87,000 Tibetans (by China's count) were killed. It was at this moment that the Dalai Lama finally left the country and escaped to India. In April of that year, His Holiness made the famous statement known as the Tezpur Statement in which he repudiated the 17 Point Agreement signed "under duress" in May 1951 in Beijing. In essence, the Agreement placed Tibet under Chinese jurisdiction.

APPROXIMATE TIBETAN POPULATION WORLD-WIDE

Tibet:	6.1 million
South India:	30,000
Central India:	8,000
Uttar Pradesh:	6,500
Himachal Pradesh:	21,000
North-east India:	8,000
West Bengal and Sikkim:	14,300
Ladakh:	5,600
Nepal:	20,000
Bhutan:	1,500
United States:	3,000
Canada:	560
Switzerland:	2,000
Australia and New Zealand:	120
Japan:	40
Scandinavia:	90

SINCE THE BEGINNING of Chinese rule, the eradication of Tibetan Buddhism has been a major goal of the authorities. Because Buddhism is inseparable from political and cultural spheres in Tibet — the highest religious leaders are often also political officials — the Chinese systematically target monasteries and monastics. According to Buchung Tsering, a former vice-chairman of the Tibet Autonomous Region (TAR) government, in 1966 only 550 monasteries still existed out of 2,700 that were in existence in 1959. By the end of the Cultural Revolution, only eight remained standing. Thousands of Buddhist nuns and monks have been arrested, tortured, or killed for resisting the authorities. Just this month, officials launched a three year campaign to aggressively promote atheism in the country and decrease the Dalai Lama's influence on Tibetans. The campaign also aims to eradicate the traditional relationship of the people with their lamas (religious teachers). Despite evidence to the contrary, the Chinese government still claims to be protecting the religious freedom of all its citizens.

Continued on page 24

A scene from the Tibetan Freedom Concert held in Washington, D.C. last June. PHOTO BY SEAN SPRINGER

The hidden face of health

By NATASHA POUHINSKY

What health issue affects more Canadians every year than all other health problems combined (including cancer and heart disease)?

Mental health problems, an answer that may surprise you.

THEY ARE THE SECOND LEADING cause of general hospital admissions among people aged 20 to 44. Prevalence of mental health problems ranges from 1 in 3 to 1 in 5 people depending on the definitions used.

Why, then, are there still so many myths about conditions like schizophrenia and depression? Still more importantly, how are these misconceptions affecting people with mental health issues?

The greatest barrier to people with mental health problems is societal attitudes. We all have them to some degree or another, whether they are based on fear, misconceptions or ignorance. Cliché or not, we fear what we don't know or understand. As reported in a recent article in the Canadian Psychiatric Association, the present attitudes towards people with mental health issues is comparable to past attitudes towards people with cancer.

Until very recently, mental health was only referred to in the media when in conjunction with criminal and/or violent behaviour.

"Integration" is the catch word used in conjunction with people with disabilities. In some ways, society is much further along in integration of people with physical disabilities than it is with people with mental health problems. Looking at Queen's campus and its wheelchair accessibility gives a good idea to what extent society is analogously "accessible" to a person with mental health problems. As Jackie Shannon, the president of the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, stated in her address to the United States commission on civil rights in 1998,

"many people with severe mental illnesses overcome the most debilitating symptoms of their illnesses only to discover that doors to employment and other aspects of life in the community are barred to them because of attitudinal barriers and unjustified fears of mental illnesses."

AS DEFINED BY the Canadian Mental Health Association, a mental health consumer is "a person who has experienced significant mental health problems and has used the resources of the mental health system." Mental health consumers encounter trouble getting housing, employment and insurance policies; all things that society takes for granted. Consequently, people frequently avoid seeking treatment partly because of their fear of being stigmatized. Their cautiousness in seeking treatment may also be a result of disillusionment with the system because of past treatment. Obtaining a diagnosis is important in that the consumer then receives access to governmental services. At the same time, however, the public stigma attached to the diagnosis may well socially disadvantage them.

Part of the major problems involved in integration are the perceptions associated with mental health consumers. Until very recently, mental health was only referred to in the media when in conjunction with criminal and/or violent behaviour. The reality is that violent crimes are no more common among the mental health consumer population than they are among the general population. Additionally, when the de-institutionalization movement began in the 1960s, people were being taken out of psychiatric hospitals, but without the community infrastructure in place to provide them with adequate levels of support. It's

Continued on next page

FEATURES CORRECTION:

In the last Features section, the application due date for Camp Outlook volunteers was incorrectly listed. Applications are still available for all interested in the Camp Outlook office in the JDUC.

Continued from last page

not surprising that integration was laden with problems. This experience significantly contributed to society's general fear and misconceptions about mental health consumers and, consequently, can partly explain the backlash in response to the present ministry of health's decision to close psychiatric beds.

Because of public pressure, the hospital restructuring commission has recommended the government put a moratorium on closing psychiatric beds until there is sufficient community support in place for recently released patients of these hospitals. As well, part of this support is the necessary education of community members, service care providers and mental health consumers and their families about mental health issues. These include the available services, support groups, and objectives of de-institutionalization.

The present attitudes towards people with mental health issues is comparable to past attitudes towards people with cancer.

— Canadian Psychiatric Association

There has been a lot of public outcry about the recent provincial psychiatric hospital closures, but I'd like to offer another viewpoint on these hospitals. "Chris," a person with schizophrenia, spent 14 years in a psychiatric hospital. He was told by more than one doctor from this hospital that he would not ever be a functional or productive member of society. He not only left the hospital, but lived independently in his own apartment and developed a peer support network for other people with schizophrenia. On top of this, he acted as a consultant for various planning aspects of mental health services. There was such an incredible demand for the peer support network that he became overwhelmed, moving to a new community and living on the street for the better part of a year. But Chris is now living in housing that provides access to 24-hour support and has started to re-establish himself in terms of being an active participant in community mental health planning.

Chris is not an isolated case. He is representative of many of the stories that are now coming to light as more and more people with mental health problems are becoming, or attempting to become, integrated into the community.

This situation illustrates two important points about people with mental health problems. As both the general population and service providers are becoming more educated about different mental health issues, the once hidden, but very real discrimination towards patients of psychiatric hospitals is coming to light and myths about the impossibilities of integration are being slowly deconstructed. However, Chris' story also demonstrates how we've underestimated how much informal mental health support is worth. These groups are not only economical but establish trust relationships that may never be achieved with traditional service providers. They will actually go into the hospital and initiate the link with the mental health consumer so that there is a support network already in place when the person leaves the hospital setting.

GRAPHIC BY JANICE CHAN

UNDER THE LAW of most jurisdictions, no one (including family, doctors, or police) can legally impose assessment on anyone, unless the person in question is perceived as in "imminent danger" to themselves or others. There is now a move afoot to modify the Mental Health Act to include community treatment orders. Treatment orders could require mandatory treatment for people who may be in danger at some time to themselves or others and/or who would benefit from treatment. These treatment orders could impose significant lifestyle changes for consumers. This is a major shift from past practices because the focus is no longer on imminent danger, but much more broadly defined. In fact, a private member's bill for just such a condition was recently defeated. Instead, the government is holding community consultations about the current mental health act to determine potential amendments to the legislation.

With the changes in psychiatric hospitals and closures, a comprehensive assessment is being done. The assessment is performed on current patients in psychiatric hospitals which are either closing or realigning services. The findings will be used to identify best practices of services/support that meet the needs. Best practices provides research evidence of service models which demonstrate positive client outcomes. As well, the provincial government has just released a policy framework based on reinvestment into these best practices, that has gone out for public consultation.

These changes bode well for the future of mental health services, provided that both the energy and money remain committed to them. But, of all these services, perhaps the most important will be that of public education. Recognition of the fact that the statistics testify to the fact that all of us will know at least one friend or family member who experiences some kind of mental health issue, and that these issues can be overcome with the right attitudes, services, and support networks. I think the most important thing to take away from this article is Chris' experience, and that it is not unique or outstanding. He is a prime example of how important it is to recognize the inadequacies both of our present system and how we, as a society, approach mental health issues. Fair and appropriate decisions must be made that will allow everyone the opportunity to live a life where their individual rights are respected, and their chances are equal to those of anyone else.

Peddling through Queen's

A pre-Spring primer on campus cycling issues

BY REBECCA SPAULDING

WITH THE FIRST HINT OF spring, hundreds of bicycles migrate back on to campus. So do the perennial frustrations around bicycle parking at Queen's. To many cyclists, there never seem to be enough bike racks, and when there are some, they may not be near the desired building entrance or are of a type that will not accommodate the current bicycle design.

Queen's Parking Services impounds more than 300 bicycles annually.

Added to these inconveniences is the enforcement of the campus bicycle regulations. Bicycle stands and racks are the only locations where bikes can be legally parked. They cannot be parked on or against access ramps, emergency phone posts, any stairs, handrailings, doors, trees, shrubs, sign posts, parking meters or any other object not designed or intended for bicycle parking. Bikes are also not allowed inside buildings. Bicycles parked improperly run the risk of being impounded.

Although common sense might suggest that an access ramp railing is not a place to lock a bike, someone running late for class might make it their parking spot. Later, they may discover that a campus parking official has snipped their bike for illegal parking. Retrieving an impounded bicycle costs $10 plus $1 per day storage fee, and Parking Services does not cover the replacement cost for the lock they have cut.

PHYSICAL PLANT SERVICES' Parking Services sympathises with cyclists' concerns and is attempting to do something about them.

The addition of new bicycle stands is now included in the design considerations of all new building construction and renovations and is also part of the matching fund program in the current Capital Campaign fundraising initiative. The older style racks are gradually being replaced by the University standard loop type bike stands.

The loop bike style rack accommodates all bicycle designs and is now the standard installed at Queen's.

The current number of racks can accommodate hundreds of bikes at one time; however, many remain empty while others are overloaded. Finding a convenient bike stand is therefore an ongoing challenge. One of the most popular spots is the front entrance of the Phys. Ed. Centre and is an example of an area with no room for additional racks.

A short walk takes a biker to the frequently empty stands on the West side of the JDUC. Some of the best bike parking on campus is not in obvious locations. For instance, the racks on the West side of Humphrey Hall are located under an overhang which offers excellent protection from the weather.

Like motorists, cyclists don't like to have to walk any further than they have to. Portability is one of the advantages of a bike, making it possible to park centimetres away from a destination. That means that bike racks not located by main entrances are often empty while the closer ones are over full to the point where bikes are parked illegally. Frequently without warning, improperly parked bicycles are impounded.

Queen's Parking Services impounds more than 300 bicycles annually. Bicycle parking is permitted only in areas designated by stands/racks that specifically provide for storing bicycles and/or the presence of signs identifying an area as a bicycle parking area.

KEEPING THE CAMPUS accessible and safe were key issues behind the Queen's bike rules. The University's bike regulations came out of concerns around campus accessibility, and health and safety issues. About 10 years ago, a committee of students, staff and faculty was formed to develop bicycle regulations for Queen's. Campus bicycle parking rules are outlined in the Queen's Parking Regulations which can be obtained free of charge, through Parking Services, in Physical Plant Services on the Second Floor of the Rideau Building. These regulations will also appear soon on the Physical Plant Services' web page scheduled to be on-line this Spring.

The Queen's Grounds crew responded to the February thaw by clearing snow built up around bicycle racks to encourage cyclists to lock-up to racks rather than vulnerable trees.

Parking Services is now more active in impounding bicycles locked to trees. Three separate arbor studies indicate that bicycles parked against campus trees and tree guards are causing significant damage and contributing to their decline. The current ill health of many trees is linked to bicycle damage done approximately 15 years ago, Queen's lost 121 trees during the 1998 ice storm and another 560 trees are in decline due to storm damage. Bicycles parked against trees adds additional strain on already stressed trees.

Queen's welcomes cyclists to the campus and recognizes that bicycles are an important mode of transportation for many. Knowing and cooperating with the rules of road and bicycle parking regulations will make for a happier cycling season for all.

Rebecca Spaulding, Waste/Information Coordinator, Physical Plant Services, is also carless and relies on her bike to get around.

PHOTO COURTESY OF REBECCA SPAULDING / TOP PHOTO BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

ASUS Your Student Government Kids4Kids

COVER YOUR CREST

MARCH 31/99

Hosted by K4K
(All proceeds go to the Child Life Programme @ KGH)

Smoker at Clark the evening of March 31/99
(cover goes toward individual year totals)

ArtSci / Con-Ed / Phys-Ed Student Government

ONLY 2 DAYS LEFT!!

Great Seats
Great City
Great Game
Great Deal

$40 with Coach

$27 without coach

tickets available at
exchange

9:00 to 9:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JH11 • 533-2120

the Laundry Cafe

291 Princess St.
542-2282
OPEN 11am-1am.

Cheescake &
Cappuccino $4.95

$0.06 Copy
+
$1.10 Chips
+
$2.50 Pizza
+
$0.25 Pen

Free trip to any of Air
Canada's North American
Destinations. Including Hawaii and the Caribbean.

AIR CANADA The AMS Card

Contest ends March 20, 1999. Contest open to members of the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University in Kingston, ON, Canada, excluding employees paid over $5,000 and Directors of the AMS Board of Directors. Odds dependent on number of valid entries. Prize of two (2) Air Canada Hospitality Long-Haul Promotional Passes. Is valued at approximately $2,500. Submit a 2,000 word essay on the history of the AMS services (no reproductions) for no purchase entry. Winner must correctly answer a 50-question quiz. Full contest rules are available at the AMS Contest Desk, JDUC.

LSAT MCAT GMAT

www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.
LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
MCAT - Start in June, July, August
GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

photography contest
The theme is your choice — anything!
Prizes to be won!

Drop off your pictures to The Queen's Journal (272 Earl St.) with your name, faculty, year and phone number.
Deadline: March 19, 1999

For more info call Alex or James at 533-2800

NO EXPERIENCE?

NO PROBLEM!

The Journal still needs applications for its 1999-2000 editorial board and business staff.

Call 533-2800 and ask for Sarah or Stefan for more information.

Hey '99s!

Have you applied for the STAR "Excellence in Leadership" Award?

This scholarship is awarded annually to two graduating students who have made a significant contribution to Queen's through their extracurricular involvement.

Each award is worth $400.00 and to apply, all you have to do is fill out this application form, drop it off to the address at the bottom of the form, and keep your fingers crossed.

Questions? Call Laurie McMann, STAR Commissioner, at 533-6000, ext. 77520. Good luck!

1 List the activities in which you participated during your time at Queen's (if necessary, please attach an additional page).

2 Which of the above activities did you find the most rewarding, and why?

3 In your opinion, what are the qualities of a good leader? How do you exemplify these traits?

4 STAR is throwing a dinner party in your honour. List the four people, living or dead, that you would invite to sit with you at the head table and (briefly) describe your choices.

Please drop off the completed form to:

Student Team on Alumni Relations (STAR)
Summerhill, front desk
(the big white mansion-type building by Theological Hall)

It's a Keeper!

Part II of Tampon alternatives

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

By HANNAH VARTO
External Educator at the SHRC

WHAT'S A KEEPER? This is one of the most common questions asked at the Sexual Health Resource Centre. My personal answer is that it is the best thing ever invented for women. Anyone who's squeamish about talking about menstruation should stop reading. The Keeper is a reusable menstrual cup. It is made of a non-porous gum rubber that significantly decreases the risk of toxic shock syndrome (TSS) and pelvic inflammatory disease (PID). This is because the cup is non-absorbent, which makes fewer places where bacteria can grow. This is just one of the many benefits that the Keeper offers women.

Just like the first time a woman tries tampons, the Keeper takes some practice putting in and taking it out, but once she knows how it's supposed to fit, it's easy. Another advantage of the Keeper is that it doesn't need to be emptied (or changed in the case of tampons) every four to six hours. It can be worn safely for 12-24 hours because it is large enough to collect about 1.5 tablespoons of blood. Most women only bleed approximately 2 tablespoons through their entire period anyway.

This last fact may seem somewhat dubious, but that's because tampons and pads become saturated with fluids and diffuse throughout the product thus making the amount of blood look enormous. Some women find it fascinating to see exactly what and how much is being expelled from their own bodies.

The best part about a Keeper is probably that you never have to worry about leaking as long as it's in properly. You can pee and have a bowel movement without having to empty it — something that always should be done with a tampon. It's so great to go to a party and not have to worry about there being a garbage can in the bathroom or worry about pets getting into your sanitary napkins in front of your partner's parents! Because the Keeper is reusable you never have any garbage — an environmental plus — and you never have to worry about remembering to bring "something" with you when you go out. Also, you can go swimming with it in and not worry about rushing to find a bathroom because your tampon is soaking wet.

If you're still reading you're most likely curious as to how to clean the Keeper properly. It's so simple! Every time you remove it and empty it you just rinse it off in the sink or shower (if you're in a public bathroom you can just wipe it with toilet paper). Then put it back in. Between periods it is recommended that you soak the Keeper in diluted vinegar for about 15 minutes just to keep it clean and fresh.

I'm promoting the Keeper because I personally can't get over how great it is, but also I have testimony from many friends and other volunteers at the SHRC. This is not to say that some people just don't like it or can't figure it out — it's the same with tampons/pads, and it's not for everyone. If you're interested in purchasing a Keeper they are sold at cost at the Sexual Health Resource Centre for $40. This may sound like a lot of money but the Keeper lasts for 10 years! It's a huge savings when you consider how much money you spend in just one year with disposable products.

What if you don't like the Keeper? The great thing about purchasing a Keeper from the Sexual Health Resource Centre is that they have a three month full refund policy. You have three months to try the Keeper and if you want to return it there's no problem and we'll give you your $40 back. For all of you who think that's disgusting — we do not resell used Keepers, we send them back to the company (Eco-Logique) where they are melted down and used in other plastic materials.

If you are interested in the Keeper (an alternative menstrual product) call or drop by the Sexual Health Resource Centre located in the Grey House beside Vic. Hall — 533-2959 and talk to a friendly volunteer.

Rebate. Rebate. Rebate.

Right now, you can take advantage of a $50.00 airtime credit when you buy our dual mode PCS Sony phone. Combine this saving with any of our affordable plans including our unlimited local evening and weekend option and you're all set to go wireless. This offer is valid from Feb 1 to March 31. Pick one up at your campus bookstore or reach us at www.cleARNET.com/student or 1-888-248-5968. The future is friendly.

Network technology by Lucent Technologies
Bell Labs Innovations

clearNET
pcs

* Must activate within 10 days. Phone must be activated for a minimum of 30 days.
* Trade marks used under licence from Decnet Communications Inc.

Chez Piggy Restaurant

Even a genius needs a prayer at exam time.

May your head be filled with whatever you need to know.
May your tummy be filled with bites in our cosy bor, great soup 'n sandwich lunches, and the best Sunday brunch in town.....
May you profit from our 15% student discount*.

May you pass.
Amen.

Chez Piggy 68R Princess Street 549-7673 *with ID

Unifying Body & Mind

The rise of Jesse Ventura

By MALCOLM LEVY

"Win if you can, lose if you must, but always, always cheat."
— Jesse 'The Mind' Ventura
(Slate, November 5, 1998.)

IT'S BEEN a long time coming, but now it seems that good old 'wrestlin', and all that it stands for, is finally attaining the international clout it properly deserves.

The explosion of support and excitement over Jesse Ventura's victory has come from the very heart of America: those who never vote in elections. Many 'intellectuals' have quickly labeled this election victory as a case of the masses swerved in a mislead direction. These arguments, using the logic that innocent civilians felt inclined to cast a vote for Ventura as a flip-off to the other parties, just doesn't hold true. Voter turnout in Minnesota was massive, and in most cases voter registration lines were longer than the polls. 'Experts' claimed that 'The Mind' was running without any concrete stance on any of the issues. This analysis of the situation is based purely on some sort of preconceived notion of what makes an issue. As opposed to rambling on ambiguously about what he was prepared to do about the good ol' deficit, Ventura actually discussed issues which voters seemed to relate to. I guess that supporting the decriminalization of drugs isn't a 'serious' issue in these days and times.

The Governor also says that Minnesota should consider new approaches to dealing with prostitution, including the possibility of legalizing it in red-light districts. Again, it seems that dealing with the world's oldest profession is again seen as irrelevant. These issues seem to hit home with a wide spectrum of Minnesotans, who were able to see beyond the bullshit of the Elephants and Donkeys, and actually vote for an independent.

It finally appears that someone has undermined the whole 'What did you do in the Sixties?' bullshit which has become synonymous with stupid-ass, irrelevant smear campaigns in a number of elections in the past few years. Maybe it's time that these two political animals start looking at the issues that the people are actually interested in? During his years as a wrestler and commentator in the WWF, Ventura was able to see what interested and entertained the American public. There is no doubt that he is bringing a straight-up approach into politics. During the final debate between Ventura and his two opponents, he was faced with a question to which he had no answer. Instead of spewing the usual ambiguities in an attempt to dance around the point, Ventura simply answered 'I don't know.' Maybe it's time more wrestlers got into politics, or more politicians got into wrestling....

Malcolm Levy is The Journal's Montreal correspondent.

What can you do to help?

- Write protest letters to government officials (PRC, Conodo), the media
- Circulate petitions about Tibet and Tibetans
- Boycott products made in China; educate the local store owners about boycotting them
- Write articles for local media
- Make posters and flyers and distribute them
- Talk to everyone you know about Tibet's situation
- Join OPIRG Free Tibet (549-0066), or start your own support group

Continued from page 19

Since 1949, human rights abuses on the part of the Chinese authorities have been regular occurrences in Tibet. Despite the signing of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the Chinese government continues to repress freedom of speech, religion and press in China and Tibet. And since China's 1988 signing of the United Nations Convention Against Torture and Other Cruel or Degrading Treatment or Punishment (CAT), 60 people have reportedly died from torture while in detention. Suicides under duress and deaths of pro-independence demonstrators number in the dozens. The World Tibet News Network reports that arbitrary arrest, imprisonment and torture have actually increased in Tibet in 1998. Most at risk are political prisoners, many of whom die while imprisoned or shortly after release. Most of the prisoners are tortured.

A report by the Tibetan Centre for Human Rights and Democracy describes a number of torture techniques, "including use of electric shocks, aerial suspension, sexual assault and attacks by fetocious dogs. Over the years, testimonies have indicated that techniques have become more sophisticated. The infliction of internal injuries tactfully cover up visible signs of torture. Other results [include] mental anguish, permanent disablement and death."

The Chinese government's eugenics project has targeted Tibetans since the late eighties, with the intention of severely limiting the population.

In addition to being physically abused or tortured, many women are also forced to undergo abortions or sterilization as part of routine policy. Tibetans, as a national minority, are considered by China to be 'racially inferior' to Chinese. The government's eugenics project has targeted Tibetans since the late eighties, with the intention of severely limiting the population.

Although China's 'one child' policy does not officially apply to Tibet (its population is too small to qualify), it is enforced anyway. The Chinese have pro-

66,000 attended the Tibetan Freedom Concert — the second largest benefit concert in history, second to 1985's Live Aid.

PHOTO BY SEAN SPRINGS

For More Information on Tibet and what you can do:

OPIRG Free Tibet can be found in the Earth Centre, JDUC. Please call 549-0066 for more info. www.tibet.org — Tibet Online Resource Gathering www.tibet.com — The Government of Tibet in Exile www.milarepa.org — The Milarepa Fund www.tibet.org/SFT/ — Students for a Free Tibet www.tibet.ca — Canada Tibet Committee See especially: <http://kafka.uvic.ca/~vipirg/SISIS/links/Canada.html> for letter-writing addresses and action tips.

Recommended reading:

My Land and My People — First autobiography of His Holiness the Dalai Lama
Freedom in Exile — Second autobiography of His Holiness the Dalai Lama
In Exile from the Land of Snows — John Avedon
Tears of Blood — Mary Craig
Tibet: Environment and Development Issues 1992 — DIIR
Tibet: Its History, Religion and People — Thubten Jigme Norbu & Colin Turnbull

The Dalai Lama is now 64. Three quarters of his life have been dedicated to rectifying his people's situation, but with little response from Chinese authorities. Although he has always stood for a peaceful process of negotiation, and believes that his moderate stance will ultimately result in autonomy, it seems as if a growing number of his people are losing patience with the Chinese. Frustrated with the Chinese government's recalcitrance, Tibetans may eventually turn to violence as the only effective means of protest. Passivity is looking less and less attractive to a people who have waited half a century in vain. As Tibet's spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama has a crucial centralizing role. His Holiness is both leader of the Tibetan community and a beacon of their hopes for freedom. Will his death open the way for a divided community and jeopardize the fragile gains made over 50 years? It appears even more imperative to achieve Tibet's autonomy during his lifetime.

ACCORDING TO A STUDY by the Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Foundation, Tibet's situation qualifies as colonization. The study concludes that if the rate of Chinese immigration into Tibet continues unabated, the process of colonization "will become irreversible all over Tibet and Tibet's distinct cultural and ethnic identity will be permanently replaced by the identity imported by Tibet by the Chinese denies Tibetans access to their own resources. By making Tibetans into a minority population, China is succeeding in undermining their claims to autonomy.

Sources: World Tibet Network News (online), January 1999; World Tibet Network News (online), January 25, 1999; Tibetan Centre for Human Rights and Democracy press release, January 5, 1999; cited from World Tibet Network News (online); January 6, 1999; Tibet Support Group UK fact sheet: "Birth Control Policies in Tibet"; Tibet Support Group UK fact sheet: "Population Transfer"; Unrepresented Nations and Peoples Foundation. "The Tibet Mission Report: China's Tibet: The World's Largest Remaining Colony"

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
 20¢ wings
 (with the purchase of a beverage)

SPORTS & FITNESS

Colour Night

Queen's varsity athletes honoured

CANADIAN JUGGERNAUT

On Sunday afternoon in Finland, the Canadian women's hockey team won its fifth-consecutive World Championship. Canada defeated its arch rival, and only true competition, the United States by a score of 3-1. With the victory, the female juggernaut finished the 1999 tournament undefeated in World Championship play. There was revenge in the minds of the women, after their heartbreaking loss to the US in the 1998 Nagano Winter Olympics. The oldest member of the team, 40-year old forward France St-Louis, has been around since virtually since the beginning of the women's program and announced her retirement following the victory.

BY ROBERT MACNEIL AND ADAM KAMINSKY

Last Wednesday, Queen's honoured the best varsity athletes and coaches from the past season at the 63rd annual Colour Night.

The athletes all gathered at the Ambassador Hotel with their heartbreaking loss to the US in the 1998 Nagano Winter Olympics. The oldest member of the team, 40-year old forward France St-Louis, has been around since virtually since the beginning of the women's program and announced her retirement following the victory.

how to be the best they can be. "It's pretty exciting, it's kind of new to me. [The season] was great, everything went smoothly," said Tom.

Award of Merit

Presented to the female athlete who, through an exceptional contribution to her team, best displays the qualities of leadership, sportsmanship, dedication and all-round performance.

Wendy Moon (Basketball)

Wendy Moon returned to Queen's for the 1998-1999 season and responded with a spectacular performance. She averaged 13.5 points per game and snated 7.8 rebounds. Moon claimed her third consecutive OUA all-star award this year. Head Coach Dave Wilson praises her leadership and called her "the finest post defender [I have] ever coached."

"It's a big thing, considering Queen's has so many outstanding teams," said Moon.

Jim Tait Trophy

Given to the graduating male athlete who best displays the qualities of leadership, sportsmanship, dedication, and exceptional contribution to interuniversity team sports.

Jim Aru (Football)

Jim Aru has been the heart and soul of the Gaels defence for the past five years, and has claimed two All-Canadian and four all-OQIFC awards over his career. He ranked in the top three in the conference in sacks and tackles for losses. An athlete who is dedicated to physical conditioning, Aru set the tempo for his teammates both on the field and in the off-season. Head Coach Bob Howes laments Aru's retirement from CIAU football by saying "no graduating player will be missed more than Jim Aru."

"It caps a great career at Queen's, to be honoured like this — I'm speechless," said Aru, who was recently tendered a contract by the CFL's Toronto Argonauts.

Marion Ross Trophy Awarded to the graduating female athlete in an individual sport who displays exceptional qualities of leadership, sportsmanship and dedication.

Karen Thomas (Figure Skating)

As a member of the Figure Skating dynasty for the past four years, Thomas has claimed five silver and four gold medals at the OUA competitions. Coach Kim Magee said Thomas' contribution to the team is not just measure by athletic skill, but also her coaching of the precision event. She took on the task of teaching several new skaters the routine and conducted practices.

"It's amazing, it's been a great career at Queen's and I attribute a lot of this award to my Co-captains Leanne Findlay and Tara Black," said Thomas.

Jack Jarvis Trophy

Awarded annually to the outstanding male graduating athlete in an interuniversity individual sport.

Bruce Precious (Fencing)

Bruce Precious is a nationally-ranked competitor, and has served as team captain for three of his four years at Queen's. He has been a two-time OUA all-

SEVEN MAJOR AWARD WINNERS

Alfie Pierce Trophy
 Jon Landon and Claudia Tom

Jim Tait Trophy
 Jim Aru (Football)

Marion Ross Award
 Karen Thomas (Figure Skating)

Award of Merit
 Wendy Moon (Basketball)

Jack Jarvis Trophy
 Bruce Precious (Fencing)

PHE '55 Award
 Sharyl Fyffe (Synchronized Swimming)

Jenkins Trophy
 Bob McGill (Track and Field and Cross country)

star and has competed internationally in France and the United States. Precious' OUA medal count includes three bronze and three silver. Fencing Coach Hank Pardoel applauds Precious' dedication to his sport and his demonstration of the true spirit of sport.

PHE '55 Alumnae Award

Awarded to the final-year female athlete who has brought the most honour to Queen's by her athletic and scholastic achievements.

Sharyl Fyffe (Synchronized Swimming)

Sharyl Fyffe has been an OUA all-star for all of her four years of competition and has been twice awarded the Sea Queen Trophy for MVP of the OUA.

Please see Athletes on page 28

Fine finish for Track & Field

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

Last weekend, the Queen's Track and Field team closed out its 1998-1999 season in style with a strong finish at the CIAU championships at McGill.

Nimrod Major won a silver medal in the high jump with a distance of 2.06m and was named an all-Canadian. Nicole Clarke joined her teammate on the medal podium when she captured a bronze medal in the weight throw event with a distance of 16.33m.

There were other positives that could be taken from this weekend as well. Julia Thomas (1000m) narrowly missed out on a medal with her fourth place finish, while Queen's finished in fifth place in five events: Clarke (shot put), Mike Melaney (shot put), J.D. Kelley (60m) and the 4x800m women's relay team of Thomas, Jenny Clarke, Lisa Curran and Charlotte Wilson.

Recording seventh place finishes were Jen Greenaway (weight throw), Stephen Lemieux (shot put) and the men's 4x800m relay team of Bob McGill, Shawn Brady, Graydon Raymer and Chris Booth. McGill also finished eighth in the 3000m and Melaney finished eighth in the weight throw. The men's 4x200m relay team of Nick Daube, Andrew Spiro, Justin Medved and Q. Hoppie recorded a 10th place finish and Chike Madueme (triple jump) finished in 11th place.

The women's 4x400m relay team of Curran, Clarke, Thomas and Sarah Armstrong ended in 12th place, while Mike Thorne finished 13th in the shot put category.

Head Coach Melody Torcolacci was quick to praise the performances of both Major and Clarke.

"For [Major], there is no higher honour than all-Canadian, and Nicole really worked hard, she just missed a silver medal by 5cm." Torcolacci praised the entire squad, who "performed at or above their rankings going into the meet, and really showed they belong."

As far as next season goes, the Gaels will be losing a lot of veteran leadership. For example, the men's 4x800m relay team and half of the women's 4x800m relay team is graduating.

"We have a good core of young athletes, and some will have to step up and lead the squad. While some may expect a rebuilding year, we could surprise a lot of people," said Torcolacci.

Boxing KO'd again after bizarre finish

Analysis

By Nick Sinclair

A fix. A gross injustice. Another black eye for boxing. You can take your pick to describe Saturday's world heavyweight championship unification bout in New York. In case you slept right through the weekend, missing the biggest fight in seven years, Evander Holyfield and Lennox Lewis battled to a draw on the judges' scorecards. The problem, as it turned out, was that by early Sunday morning one had a better chance of running into a courteous New Yorker than finding an individual who agreed with the decision; with the notable exception of course, of two judges who sat at ringside.

Funny isn't it, how a sport marred by scandal, ear biting, and unscrupulous promoters, managed to shoot itself in the foot on the very day that it was finally about to crown an undisputed champion for its most glamorous division. However, much to the chagrin of the world's many boxing-haters, the sport will live on. Although many think it is disgusting, the fact is that most honest citizens will admit that there's something irredeemably enticing about two men pounding the living daylights out of one another in a controlled environment.

That being the case, there is one man who has the power to right the wrong of Saturday night and get his sport back on track sooner rather than later. With a few small gestures of good sportsmanship towards his opponent, Evander Holyfield could actually stand to benefit from this whole mess. Because he holds two belts to Lewis' one, he is the fighter who will determine how quickly, and under what terms, a rematch is arranged.

First and foremost he should concede to staging Lewis-Holyfield II in London. Why should the Englishman be forced to prove himself twice on foreign soil?

Secondly, and this might require divine intervention, Evander should not stand in the way of an evenly divided purse. If nothing else, Lewis gained enough respect at MSG that most will now regard Holyfield as the challenger. Put in those terms, an even payout seems quite reasonable.

For three years Holyfield dodged Lennox Lewis before finally stepping into the ring with him on Saturday. Although most knowledgeable observers knew he was actually scared, the self-proclaimed "Real Deal" used to have a vast array of reasons for not fighting Lewis. Time and again, Holyfield borrowed excuses from Riddick Bowe, another fighter terrified of the Canadian-turned-Brit. One after the other they suggested that Lewis wasn't that good (usually overstating his one loss against Oliver McCall); that there were better, read more lucrative, opponents, or that it was he, not they, who was standing in the way of a contract. Meanwhile, Lennox Lewis just waited for his chance to let his fists do the talking. For his patience he came out on the losing end of one of the most controversial decisions in boxing history.

Now that there are no more excuses to hide behind, Holyfield must do something with which he is unfamiliar, the right thing.

The march continues

By Adam Kaminsky

While the NCAA division I men's basketball tournament has long been associated with mental illness, but this year's edition could use Jack Nicholson's character from One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest as its mascot. With the field of 64 whittled down to a more workable 16, things have been as wild as ever in this annual rite of Spring.

All of the top seeds are still around to taste the sweetness of the regionals, but they will be joined by upstarts and underdogs who have defeated college basketball's royalty. These upsets have surpassed the regular excitement of David versus Goliath with miracle finishes and otherworldly performances.

With three second seeded teams studying for exams and two of the third seeds looking forward to fall practice, the cast of characters that remain are intriguing to say the least.

Miami has fought its way into the Midwest regional semi-finals, no surprise you may say, but this team is from Ohio, not the highly touted squad from Florida. Led by Wally 'world' Szczerbiak, a 6'9" all purpose forward, they defeated the Washington Huskies and the Utah Utes to set up a date with the Kentucky Wildcats, the defending national champions. The Midwest also features another upstart squad, this one from the University of Oklahoma. The Sooners, who are a thirteenth seed, were the last at-large bid granted for the tournament and have made the selection committee look very wise. With Michigan State on the horizon for Oklahoma it looks like the clock is close to striking midnight.

Other party crashers at the big dance are Gonzaga, previously most famous for alumni John Stockton. That may have changed with the monumental upset of Stanford and the exceptional play of Matt Santangelo. The Bulldogs now take on the Florida Gators in the West region's semi-final. The Gators squeaked in with an overtime win over possible tournament Cinderella, Weber State. The top half of the West region's draw is extremely interesting with top-seeded UConn taking on fifth-seeded Iowa, who are trying to win one for their coach, Dr. Tom Davis, who is moving on after the tournament.

Southwest Missouri State, Purdue and Temple all have made unlikely runs in the East region, but to their chagrin the fourth team remaining in the region is the vaunted Duke Blue Devils. The number one team in the land has not only been winning thus far in the tournament, but doing so by large margins, embarrassing quality opponents.

The South region has maintained its form, which could be the most surprising result of all. Fourth seed Ohio State will play top-seeded Auburn, who many believed to be upset fodder. With Maryland and St. John's playing in the other semi-final, the talent throughout this region is without peer in this edition of the march to the Final Four.

Speaking of the Final Four, the favourites will be the teams making the trip to the St. Petersburg. The jig is up for the underdogs as Maryland, UConn, Kentucky and Duke will survive this weekend and live to fight another day.

Despite this prediction, things will not go smoothly for the favourites. Near misses and exciting games are the prognosis for the regionals, so saddle up beside a television and enjoy the stories, enjoy the games and discover your own 'one shining moment.'

The 'Ultimate' tournament

By Mike McDermitt

Kevin Touhey goes all out for the 'disc' during an outdoor game in the fall. PHOTO BY MIKE McDERMIT

On Saturday March 6, despite hazardous driving conditions extending travel times in some cases to over five hours, eight teams from Ottawa, Montreal, Toronto and Kingston gathered at Soccer Magic for Kingston's third annual indoor ultimate tournament.

This year's champions were Mad Marvin from Toronto, a team captained by tournament founder Mike List (Law '99). List, who started this tournament three years ago, has been part of the championship team every tournament.

"It's a different game indoors... It makes for higher scoring games and shorter points."

— Joel Yearsly

On the road to victory, Mad Marvin defeated tournament favorites Xi from Ottawa, a team with members on the men's open division Canadian national champion WAX, and a handful of players from Stella, the woman's division national champions. In the other semi-final game, Queen's Mothership defeated McGill's MUT by one point, paving the way for a fateful showdown between List's new team and his old. The final however was not a contest as Mad Marvin handily defeated Mothership.

Due to the unique constraints imposed by Soccer Magic's irregular field layouts, the format at this tournament was a significant departure from the norm. Tournament play was co-ed, three men and two women as opposed to classic four and three. Also, game lengths were capped at 40 minutes as opposed to the norm of one and one half hours or first team to 15 points.

"It's a different game indoors. There's no wind, almost everyone can throw the length of the field and there just isn't as much space to work with. It makes for higher scoring games and shorter points" says Kingston native Joel Yearsly, a Mothership member and co-founder of Kingston's summer and winter ultimate leagues.

Get a job!

▶ Experience is not required. ◀

Positions available:

- ▶ All Service Staff and Committee Members
- ▶ Queen's Journal Business Manager (Applications are due Monday, March 21st at 16:30.)
- ▶ Director of Business Development and Business Development Staff
- ▶ Studio Q and Tricolour Yearbook Business Managers
- ◀ Who's Where / What's Next Project Manager
- ◀ Hoods & Gowns Manager
- ◀ Queen's Entertainment Agency Head Manager

Applications for these positions are due Wednesday, March 24th at 16:30. If you want to work in any AMS service next year, you should apply now.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

Wanna work for the paper?

Applications are still being accepted for the following positions:

Editorial Board Business Staff

Production Manager
Reader Editor
Supplements Editor

Business Manager
Advertising Manager
Advertising Designers
Sales Representatives
Systems Manager

Applications for all positions are due Monday March 22 at 4:30 p.m. Drop by the Journal house, 272 Earl Street to pick up an application.

Questions? Need more information? Call Sarah Crosbie or Stefan Murray at the Journal at 533-2800.

We are not amused

A grand prize of $1000 is no laughing matter.

Speak up at the Andrina McCulloch Public Speaking Competition March 29, 30 & 31.

Details & Applications at JDUC Information & Visitor Centre (open to all Queen's students)

FREE STUFF. WEDNESDAY MARCH 24th. ENOUGH SAID.

MONSTER SALE
March 22th to 27th

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

GEORGE TAYLOR RICHARDSON MEMORIAL FUND, 1999-2000

Invitation to Apply

The George Taylor Richardson Memorial Fund provides grants for the stimulation of the arts at Queen's University. In accordance with the wishes of the benefactor, Agnes Etherington, who was instrumental in the establishment of the Department of Art, the Department (now School) of Music and the Agnes Etherington Art Centre, the grants are specifically intended to support public performances and exhibitions for the benefit of the Queen's and broader Kingston communities. Applications are welcome from all members of the Queen's community.

Course-related activities and projects that focus on research, composition, creation or production do not qualify for support.

Guidelines and application forms are available from Joan Jones at the Information and Visitor Centre, John Deutsch University Centre, room 144, ext. 32794. To obtain an electronic copy of these documents in Word 97 format, please e-mail Joan at jj7@post.queensu.ca. For further information, please contact Jack Sinnott, secretary of the George Taylor Richardson Memorial Fund Subcommittee, in the JDUC, ext. 74848, e-mail sinnottj@post.queensu.ca.

Application deadline is 4:30pm, Thursday, April 1, 1999. Successful applicants will be notified in writing by May 1.

Supporting the Arts at Queen's

Athletes recognized

Continued from page 25

She took on the role of athlete-coach in her sophomore year, and has been a leader on the teams which have won the OUA championship for the last three years. Fyffe has been the quintessential scholar-athlete, who has excelled at her sport while maintaining an average of more than 80 per cent in Biology. "It is something I never ever would have expected. That's what makes it all the better," said Fyffe.

Jenkins Trophy

Awarded to the graduating male athlete who has brought the most honour to Queen's by his athletic and scholastic ability.

Bob McGill (Cross-Country and Track)

Combining academic and athletic excellence has been the best way to describe Bob McGill's career at Queen's. Athletically, he has been an exceptional runner for Queen's and has claimed two OUA championship medals and an OUA silver medal. He has also been a conference all-star and the Cross Country MVP in 1997 and 1999. Academically, McGill has been an Academic All-Canadian for three years, and during this past season, was conferred with a Rhodes Scholarship.

"This is from a group of people that know me really well and that means so much to me," said McGill in comparing this honour to his Rhodes Scholarship.

In addition to these awards, nine varsity athletes were awarded Special Merit Plaques: Paul Correale (football), Mike Cowan (soccer), Shawn Brady (cross-country and track), Derek Richardson (basketball), Jen Sarginson (soccer), Carolyn Fitzgerald (field hockey), Rob Chalmers (football), Andrew Calder (volleyball) and Nicole Clarke (track and field).

Intramural Corner

The Intramural season is once again coming to a close with the final games in several leagues being played over the next week. Queen's Intramurals would like to thank all participants, managers, representatives, officials and staff for making this season a success. Any person involved with Intramurals over the course of the year is invited to attend the end of the year banquet on Tuesday, March 30 at the Singing Frog in A.J.'s. The banquet gets underway at 6:30pm and tickets are now on sale at the wickets in the Phys-Ed Centre for $3. The evening will be a celebration of the Intramural season, and award several individuals and teams for their outstanding performances and contributions to the program. Your ticket will also include an assortment of finger foods and admission to any Hub establishment for the remainder of the evening. If you wish to nominate someone for an award it must be submitted by 4:30pm today at the Intramural office in room 201A at the Phys-Ed Centre.

THE UNDERGRADUATE REVIEW PRESENTS:

An open invitation to all the fine students of Queen's University...

GIVE US YOUR BEST

(or in the event that you haven't really written anything noteworthy in your time here, just pass in something from high school that you feel especially proud of...)

Now accepting essay submissions at the ASUS Core for publication and dissemination.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Bueller's playground
Queen's Players bring down Clark

SHOW REVIEW

you've got one hell of a funny show.

BY CRYSTAL BONA

The entire cast worked extremely well together. They were pretty outstanding, especially after they had a couple of beers in them, which made it all the more fun to watch.

It had been a long day. I just wanted to unwind. I had this ticket in my pocket. That's how I ended up at Clark Hall watching the Queen's Players' latest venture, Ally McBueller's Day Off, and let me say that I have never had more fun in my life. Well, in the past week, at least.

Basically, Ally McBueller's Day Off is the merging of those three great masterpieces of cinema and television; Ally McBeal, Ferris Bueller's Day Off, and Top Gun. And if that isn't enough for you, throw in a bit of Dirty Dancing, A Few Good Men, and a lot of jabs at Queen's life and the AMS, and

I started out the evening with a plan. I was going to put a checkmark by all the people in the program who I thought were worth mentioning. This plan later proved to be a mistake, because pretty soon my program was full of checkmarks and I had no room to write any comments. There was of course room to mention that the male members of the cast all looked remarkably good without their shirts on, but after that the page was full.

The entire cast was wonderful. Each Player fit their songs and roles perfectly, and the obvious closeness of the 'team' shone through on the stage. The entire cast worked extremely well together. They were outstanding, especially after they had a couple of beers in them, which made it all the more fun to watch.

There are, of course some performances worth singling out. Jewelle Blackman, who played Renée, or Renu, depending on who you ask, did a great job of singing Lauryn Hill's "That Thing." Kris Bruun (Goose) really was "Pretty Fly (For a White Guy)."

The show stopping tune which stood out for me was "I Still Haven't Found What I'm Looking For," which included a strong performance from the entire cast, and Ben Birchard (Ferris Bueller) giving a wonderful performance on lead vocals.

But for my money, Robert Knox stole the show as Cameron, Ferris' best friend. Not only were his lead vocals on

Please see Full on page 33

Shall we Dance?

Annual recital a must see

DANCE PREVIEW

BY SARAH CROSSBIE

The Queen's Dance Club is set to shake their thangs, shake their bootie, do a little dance and make a little love this weekend.

This year the annual show is entitled, "For the Love of Dance," and features more than 300 dancers in the disciplines of jazz, tap, ballet, modern, hip-hop, cardiofunk and streetdance.

Although held in Duncan McArthur Auditorium, students and members of the Kingston community surprisingly, don't mind the trek out to West campus. The show has been sold out for the past couple years, and due to increased interest, Heather Moroz, president of the jazz club, and Danielle Perry, president of the baller club, added an extra performance this year.

Warming Up: Dance Heather Moroz prepare for the annual gala.

The show features performances by all disciplines in the beginner, intermediate and advanced categories and also features 13 solo, duet and small group numbers.

Students can sign up for dance classes in September and learn the fundamental steps and exercises, which are applied to a routine which the group begins to rehearse in January.

Highlights of the show

Please see Big on page 31

Rotate this!

Holly McNarland
Live Stuff
Universal Music

BY ELI SCHUSTER

As much as I hate to begin a CD review with my thoughts on political economy, please bear with me — it will make sense in a few sentences.

I've always liked capitalism, yet one criticism I've always found credible is the possible loss of high culture under a completely free market regime.

I've never understood the appeal of unmitigated crap to most consumers. Great Italian trattorias can go out of business, yet delish customers will line up for hours outside the local Olive Garden (not anymore, but that's the way it was in the early 1990s).

In musical terms (this is where I finally get down to business), Holly McNarland's Live Stuff is the equivalent of Olive Garden food: bland, overrated, and not worth the $19.95 you might shell out.

No, Live Stuff isn't a total piece of trash, and I'll be the first to admit that McNarland's remake of Phil Collins' "In the Air Tonight" certainly caught my ear; it was interesting, although a little depressing however, and lacking in vocal power.

Over time, people eventually tired of the Olive Garden, and the chain more-or-less went out of business (a few outlets might still be open in Canada). The same will probably become true for Holly McNarland.

The CD jacket features an obviously intoxicated McNarland (she's spilling a bottle of beer on herself, for crying out loud) and much of her music sounds as if she's had a few. Her voice strikes me as whiny, none of her songs are in any way memorable, and they all seem to blur together after awhile. Except for "In the Air Tonight," (which I'd compare to the Olive Garden's pretty good breadsticks), all of the songs on this album were written either by McNarland or Mark Pullyblank; from this, I suspect that Collins is the only one who knows how to write a tune.

Over time, people eventually tired of the Olive Garden, and the chain more-or-less went out of business (a few outlets might still be open in Canada). The same will probably become true for Holly McNarland. There's nothing really had about this CD, but I came away feeling I wasted my time on 30 minutes of mediocre, unsatisfying musical entertainment.

Before reviewing Live Stuff, I was only vaguely familiar with McNarland's name and now I doubt she'll ever attain superstar status.

East Side Mario's replaced the Olive Garden, and it's not too much of a stretch to predict another flash-in-the-pan will soon bump Holly McNarland off the stage.

Various Artists
Original Motion Picture Soundtrack
Virgin Music Canada

BY DOUGLAS REID GIERULA

Cruel Intentions is yet another soundtrack set to the tune of teenage love and deceit. Take a glance at the track list and some big names pop out — Brit-pop that is. There is no doubt that this is a Virgin records production and their cruel intentions soon become clear — a jumpstart of their artist's new singles for upcoming albums... and not just the good ones.

Placebo starts the soundtrack with "Every You Every Me" a moderate paced track off their latest album. This will definitely be their next single, following the ever popular "Pure Morning." This is an excellent opening tune and definitely the most upbeat of the disc.

Following this good start, there is Fatboy Slim with his next big hit "Praise You." This song is definitely the best track on the soundtrack, with a solid beat and classic lyrics that you can't get out of your head no matter how hard you try.

Blur presents us with a new song from their soon to be released 13. But before you scream 'woo hoo!' "Coffee & TV" is a medium paced song using the classic organ and guitar medley that Blur is known for.

By the way, the Verve concludes this compilation with "Bittersweet Symphony" — a song we all know and I love.

One of the album's most memorable songs, "Bedroom Dancing" is Day One's debut recording. With its trip-hop beats and rhythmical lyrics, this song is definitely a favourite.

Please see Rotate This on page 31

"AS PRIME MINISTER" AWARDS

What would I do
if I had $20,000?

What would I do
if I were
Prime Minister?

If you're a Canadian college, university or CÉGEP student

TELL US...

If you were the Prime Minister of Canada,
what political vision would you offer to improve our living standards?

AND WIN

1 x $20,000 * 9 x $10,000 * 50 x $500
Internships * National Exposure

Essay deadline is June 15, 1999.
Details: www.asprimeminister.com or 1-800-97-MAGNA

THINK OUTSIDE THE BOX

MAGNA FOR CANADA
SCHOLARSHIP FUND
MAGNA POUR LE CANADA
BOURSES D'ÉTUDES

IN ASSOCIATION WITH THE NATIONAL POST

Rotate this!

Continued from page 29

Turn up the volume on this one and let some great subtleties come out.

As for the rest of the disc, the Counting Crows, Marcy Playground, and Aimee Mann fail to impress while some more obscure artists including, Skunk Anansie, Bare Jr., and Abra Moore definitely have some strong but dark, melodic arrangements that do add to the disc rather than detract from it.

By the way, the Verve concludes this compilation with "Bittersweet Symphony" — a song we all know and I love.

Cruel Intentions is a good listen for those days that you don't want to be too upbeat, but not too slow. This is a true soundtrack as it compliments the movie well and a definite great buy for the Brit-pop fan.

Van Morrison
Back on Top
Virgin Records

BY KEN BUTLAND

When Van Morrison says he's back on top, he must mean something other than his musical career. Philosopher's Stone released in 1997, was a smart, well-crafted, inspired album, and his successful 1998 tour with Joni Mitchell and Bob Dylan was anything but a fall.

Dealing Morrison's musical style, Back on Top has the same signature blend of blues, jazz, gospel, soul and rock.

With his new album, I think Morrison is saying that he's back on top of his head. Maybe he got a little confused for awhile there, getting old and losing touch, dealing with "the isolation at the top of the bill" as he puts it in the lyrics to the title track. Maybe he was getting frustrated with going through the same motions, searching after the same answers and failing, judging by the lyrics "Learned my lesson and I had my fill/Learnt it all in vain/Went through it all again," from the same song.

Back On Top has many of the same undertones as Bob Dylan's Time Out Of Mind: disillusionment with age, struggling to get on and looking back on where he messed up. The strengths of both albums lie within the little nuggets of wisdom embedded throughout the lyrics. Especially interesting is Morrison's and Dylan's less direct approach to their belief in God (within a few years of each other, they went through a born-again Christian, heavy gospel phase). Both use less obvious religious metaphors, and in contrast to their work in the eighties, they most often incorporate religious thought into secular songs rather than the reverse. Morrison's lyrics are startlingly similar to Dylan's, like those of "Precious Time": "It doesn't matter to which God you pray/Precious time is slipping away."

Dealing Morrison's musical style, Back on Top has the same signature blend of blues, jazz, gospel, soul and rock that has made Morrison-esque an acceptable term to toss around. He's lost some of his vocal range, but easily makes up for it with deeper soul and more thoughtful lyrics. He kinda makes me want to be old so I can be worldly, wistful and wise. But only kinda. Mostly he makes me want to curl up and have a nice, soulful nap.

Edwin
4 spins around the sun
Epic Records

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Edwin left his distorted home after only two albums, and though his Mother will miss him, he is going out on his own. Former I Mother Earth frontman Edwin has produced a solo effort, and the preliminary report is that he's either too young or immature to be going it alone.

On 4 spins around the sun, a four-song preview of his soon-to-be-released another spin around the sun, Edwin displays the ferocity and aggressive lyrics, elements that he perfected in his term with I Mother Earth, but the accompaniment and songwriting just isn't there.

All the songs other than "Screaming Kings," which is interestingly arranged, are marked by mediocre lyrics and Edwin's growling and generous use of effects (heavy on tremolo and wah-wah) can't overshadow the album's lack of semblance.

The opening track, "trippin'" is simply dull, while the closer "shotgun" misses the thrash alternative sound it was clearly aiming for.

Although it is difficult to judge an album on the strength of only four tracks, if these songs are any indication of the tone and quality of the upcoming release, Edwin has a lot of work to do.

Edwin, there's no place like home.

Big night

Continued from page 29

include a Britney Spears streetdance quarter, a tap routine which features glowsticks and the closing number performed by the staff and executive of the dance club to the classic Grease number, "We Go Together."

Perry thinks students should go see the show because, "it's fun and exciting with a lot of student talent you wouldn't imagine" with Moroz adding, "it's good to see dance in Kingston."

Tickets are selling quickly for all shows, but there's still some left for all three performances.

"For the Love of Dance" runs tonight at 7 p.m., Saturday afternoon at 1 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8 p.m.

If you're thinking this is an all female event, guess again. There's more than 20 guys involved in the show — a little something for everyone.

Are you:

- a leader?
- a self-motivator?
- interested in Alumni Relations?
- looking to become more involved?

If you are then S.T.A.R. wants you!

The Student Team on Alumni Relations is a joint venture between the AMS & the Queen's Alumni Association and we are now recruiting for our 1999 executive!

Deputy Coordinator positions are available in the following areas:

- Exam Crisis Kits
- Finances
- Student Leaders Reception
- Futures 1999 Conference
- Bon Voyage Reception

Interested? Call Laurie McMann at 533-6000 ext. 77520

Making it up

Queen's improvers hope to go to Ottawa

Too close for comfort?: Adafait gets down to work...or play?

TROUPE PREVIEW

By STEFAN MURRAY

Who's turn is it anyway? It's Adafait's turn, god-damnit.

Adafait, a Kingston improv troupe, is gearing up for The Kingston Regional Improv Games taking place next week. The competition begins on Thursday, March 25 at Etherington Hall and will consist of seven different improv groups from around Kingston.

Adafait, which is an acronym for Another Dumb Acronym For An Improv Troupe, won the competition last year and finished third in the national competition in Ottawa.

The troupe is sporting new members this year and even ous — it all depends on timing, attitude, atmosphere, lines and body language — every variable plays a critical role.

As far as improv goes, usually the best performances are delivered naturally, when the timing is right. So isn't it completely oxymoronic to practice for improv? Practice is to get the ideas flowing, the adrenaline pumped and to become completely comfortable with one another, which is necessary for the four different games: style, story, theme and character.

Each team has to perform in every style of improv with the details of the game scenario suggested by the audience.

The competition will begin on Thursday, March 25 and runs until Saturday, March 27. Shows start at 8 p.m. Tickets are $5.

though each member has been practicing improv for many years, they have only been together as a group since early September.

At a practice held this week, I watched Adafait prepare for the competition. I witnessed a Woody Allen meets the Three Little Pigs scenario and a sketch where Se7en was performed with a Walt Disney World slant. Although their ideas were interesting, the presentation left a little to be desired. Point blank — they weren't funny. This isn't, however, necessarily a bad thing.

Improv is short for improvisational and is different each time. So, just because I wasn't bellowing with laughter doesn't mean that Adafait aren't hilari-

PHOTO BY STEFAN MURRAY

Get Out There!

Music:

The Annual Amnesty International Benefit Concert is today from 2 p.m. to 2 a.m. at Alfie's. The evening features Travel Agent, Lounge Act and Jon Coakley, Bumblepuppy, Franklin's Fault, Amusia, Pat Ang, Sex Kitrens, Reno's Hitmen

Keven McMillan, one of the most respected lyric baritones of his generation will be the visiting artist in the School of Music from March 17 to 21. He will be in Dunning Auditorium today at 2:45 p.m. for a Public Masterclass and 2:00 p.m. Saturday and will perform "An English Songfest" in Sunning on Sunday at 2:00 p.m.

The second round of Battle of the Bands is this coming Wednesday at Alfie's Pub. Doors open at 9 p.m.

The QEA free concert is here! Some tickets may still be available for sale at the door. Questions? email at qea@ams.queensu.ca.

Dance:

The Queen's University Pipe Band and Highland Dancers will Present Highland Salute II on Monday March 22 at 8 p.m. in Grant Hall. Tickets are $3 and are available at the door.

Call for Editors:

Ultra-Violet needs a new Editor(s)-in-Chief for 1999/2000 volume. You can pick up an application in the Union Gallery. The deadline is March 23 1999.

Event:

Kingston Literacy is holding the Greater Kingston golf and travel Show on Saturday March 27 and 28 at Soccer Magic. The funds generated will be used to support Kingston Literacy's Family Literacy Program. For more info call 547-2012.

Art:

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre is featuring the exhibit Crime and Punishment from March 20 to June 6. The opening reception is tomorrow night at 7 p.m. The show features Sheila Ayeart, Jonathan Eeles, Angela Grossmann and Louise Noguchi.

Got Roti?

Ali's provides great food

PHOTO BY JAMES TERRANUN

RESTAURANT REVIEW

By THEO OOS SANTOS

It is that time of the year when many Queen's students begin experiencing a growing feeling of déjà vu. The particular manifestations of this feeling vary from student to student but there are some types that are experienced by most.

These include, "oh no, not this class... again"; as well as "yikes, crappy Kingston weather... again"; but also, "dammit, this same old fast food/Marriott food... again."

Well, the final dates to add and drop courses are long past and, unfortunate as it may be, there isn't much to be done about Kingston weather. But if you're tired of the "same old, same old" when it comes down to your diet, Ali's Caribbean Foods offers a change from the ordinary.

meaning in this age where almost every product multi-million dollar companies concoct is hyped as "delicious." But Ali's foods are great in a way that french-fries, buckets of chicken, or even Levi's jeans, aren't.

Ali's foods don't just appear delicious, in the sense that they look good, smell good, or even taste good; the foods Ali makes actually are, and this isn't something you taste with your mouth, it's something you feel with your stomach. When you walk out of Ali's after you've tried a glorious chicken roti (the specialty chicken, potato, onion, and light curie stew wrapped in dahlipuri bread) you just feel good.

Ali's also has a fairly comprehensive menu. This means Ali offers four types of roti (besides chicken, he also has beef, goat, and chick-pea roti for vegetarians), and a wide range of other lunch and dinner options including Jerk Chicken and Caribbean-style beef patties.

Price wise Ali's is very fair. Roti are usually $5.20 for meat and $4.25 for vegetarian roti, but Ali even has a student special where all roti is $4.25 at lunch time between 11 a.m. and 2 p.m.

In short, you'll know something most Queen's students don't: a taste of the Caribbean makes Kingston winters just a little more bearable.

There are two drawbacks to Ali's: first, its location behind Burger King on Princess means it is easily missed, second, Ali's has fairly limited operating hours and closes by 9 p.m. on the weekdays and 6 p.m. and 4 p.m. on the weekends (Saturday and Sunday respectively). So it is impossible to get a late night Roti at Ali's after a night of debauchery at the bar.

Still, at Ali's you'll get good food, reasonable prices, and friendly service. The best part is that once you've tried Ali's roti, you'll be thinking to yourself, "damn, change is good, but roti à la Ali is really good."

In short, you'll know something most Queen's students don't: a taste of the Caribbean makes Kingston winters just a little more bearable.

What Ali's offers, precisely, is East Indian cuisine, the "taste of the Caribbean." Located at 396 Princess St. (between the restaurants Mekong and King of Donair's), it's just a short walk from campus.

Admittedly, Ali's is no Le Caveau or Chez Piggy, and some of the more delicate members of the Queen's community might initially be put off by Ali's "no nonsense" interior, but Ali's food does make up for what it lacks in appearance.

For example, you can expect Ali himself (owner and operator) to prepare your food using fresh ingredients and tasty spices. This is what's really special about Ali's: you can have your food as spicy as you want it — really mild or very hot. Either way, your food will taste delicious.

Delicious? Surely here is a word which has almost lost all

Breaking the bubble

Queen's gets a taste of culture

EVENT REVIEW

By NATALIE PITRE

The African Caribbean Students Association celebrated their unique culture at their annual show extravaganza last Saturday at the Duncan McArthur auditorium.

The multicultural event was as successful as it was refreshing because it was a chance for students to acknowledge and appreciate some of the ethnically diverse students at Queen's University.

The masters of ceremonies opened the evening with a warm welcome that created a positive atmosphere and active participation from the audience, lasting throughout the event.

The traditional African fashions confidently modeled on stage presented a vivid image of Ethiopian, Nigerian, South African, Indian and Ugandan cultures. The models wearing clothes sponsored by The Bay, Cotron Ginny and Athlete's World looked both striking and bold and received the audience's approval with loud applause and remarks like "Work it!" and "You go girl!"

On the candle illuminated stage, Tyler Lewis was an adonis in his suit on the stage. Janice Raveendran and Praveena Sivarajah's Tamil dance, was performed as much with their eyes as with their arms and hands, allowing the dancers to exchange stories utilizing the entire body. The use of the human body, song, and musical instruments, including flutes and drums, served as metaphors for a wide array of emotions and concepts, including joy, sorrow, relaxation, marriage, birth and last funeral rights."

PHOTO BY JAMES TERRANUN

The theme "Celebrating Us" was an effective "pot-pourri" of entertainment, education and insight.

In flamboyant and revealing attire, Narasha James and Jewelle Blackman exerted intense energy, which provided the viewers with a replica of the Calypso dance from Trinidad's period of Carnival.

Not only did Blackman demonstrate her talent on the dance floor, she also displayed her powerful vocal ability by singing Aretha Franklin's "You Make Me Feel," a cappella style, which had an invigorating effect on all of her listeners.

The theme "Celebrating Us" was an effective "pot-pourri" of entertainment, education and insight conveying what the past has achieved in molding people into who they are and who we are as a community.

In hindsight, a greater exposure and publicizing of cultural events held at Queen's would foster an increased awareness of the different cultures that exists among us.

As for Jacqueline Ammah, Ceryllyn Cobie and Natasha James, the major contributors who made ACSA's Culture Show '99 a success, I just wanted to say that "you're all that" for exposing the diversity among us.

Full-time player

Continued from page 29

the song "Leave Your Hat On" amazing, but his facial expressions, timing, accents, and back-up vocals were wonderful. This is pretty impressive considering that the program describes Knox as a "Playaz Virgin" who, in my opinion, did it like a pro.

The music was provided by a 10-piece band which included for the first time, a brass section. Musical Director Chris Hicks hit the right note (no pun intended) with this band. Every song had a rich, full quality to it, and sounded remarkably like its counterpart on the radio, and in some cases, even better.

The Players had the audience with them from the start — all were clapping and yelling for more. The Players answered this request and received a standing ovation at the end of their efforts.

If there was one bad thing about the show, it would have to be that the microphone and sound quality was rather poor. At times, it was difficult to hear the actors, but this was just a minor problem.

All together, director Lyrandia Martin-Evans and Hicks are to be commended on an amazing show.

With fabulous writing, amazing vocals, and a great cast and crew, Ally McBueller's Day Off is guaranteed to be a great night out. Of course, you don't have to take my word for it. Go and see for yourself.

The show runs from March 17-27, and it's sold out, but if you go to the door and beg, maybe they'll see what they can do.

PHOTO BY BOB HUSH

Sheridan Get Marketing Career Training!

Marketing Management Post-Graduate Program

- One-year full-time professional Program in marketing, advertising and promotion management.
- Experience on-the-job learning with a four-month paid work placement.
- Benefit with an IBM ThinkPad® computer for duration of Program.
- Study with university graduate peers.
- OSAP available for approved applicants.
- Start September 1999.

To receive a Calendar and application form, call: (416) 480-1320 or (905) 815-4008 or Email: sheridan@minacs.com

Contact Program Coordinator Derek Barnes at: (905) 845-9430, ext. 2887 Email: derek.barnes@sheridanc.on.ca Web: www.sheridanc.on.ca/academic/business/marketingmt/mrktgmt.htm

Sheridan

GUINNESS jacket giveaway
it all begins on friday mar 19
...slante....

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
$2.49 sunday breakfast
sun-fues
1/2 price wings* wed
1/2 price nachos* after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS
Fri Mar 19
Zydecosis
cool cajun tunes....

Crashing into AJs

Crash Test Dummies belt out oldies and some new tunes

CONCERT REVIEW

By Bob Huish

Last Sunday, AJ's Hangar brought the Crash Test Dummies to Kingston as part of their cross-Canada tour. It's hard to believe that the Dummies are celebrating 10 years of success in the Canadian music scene. With three successful albums under their belt, the Dummies felt the time had come to release number four, Give Yourself a Hand. The record won't be out until March 23, but the band went out on a limb and chose to test the waters in Kingston with their new material.

Considering that the band was performing on a Sunday night lead singer Brad Roberts was indeed impressed by the healthy turn out. Although AJ's wasn't jammed packed, the crowd was large enough to give the Dummies some confidence in testing their new music.

From the beginning the band's new sound truly shocked the crowd. Like the albums in the past, the Dummies feature their off the wall lyrics, but their style has been redefined yet again. The new Dummies seem to have abandoned acoustic guitars, harmonicas, and accordions, and focuses on an electric and synthesized sound.

Roberts says that the new album (like the ones in the past) is primarily about sex, only just a little more blunt.

Roberts says that the new album (like the ones in the past) is primarily about sex, only just a little more blunt.

In fact, their new sound is definitely difficult to digest at first, however, as with their other records, the style seems to grow on the listener.

For the Dummies' new effort, Roberts' has taken a different angle and has not used his distinctive deep voice for a couple of tunes. Two songs on the record feature Roberts trying to hit his soprano range — mind you, he did attempt this feat only after several cocktails.

Another change for the better is the stronger presence of Ellen Reid on lead vocals. Reid's greatest role to date with the Dummies was her performance of a XTC track "The Ballad of Peter Pumpkinhead" on the Dumb & Dumber soundtrack. Reid does an outstanding job as a back up vocalist for Roberts, but it is good to see her take the lead role on certain songs.

Probably the most entertaining part of the show was watching Roberts drink himself into a stupor. The man is indeed a comical drunk. After belting back martini after martini, Roberts and the Dummies did put on an outstanding, yet in-

Lead singer Brad Robertson gives the AJ's crowd a crash course in rock.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERMANIAN

riated performance. The Dummies captured many cheers with their performance of fan favourites such as, "The Superman Song," "God Shuffled His Feet," "MMM MMM MMM MMM," and "Swimming In Your Ocean."

The band obviously felt that it wouldn't be fair to dish out unfamiliar tunes all night long.

As for the Dummies opening act Lounge Act, not as much can be said about their performance as most of the crowd tended to focus on their drinks rather than the band itself. As far as a time filler goes, Lounge Act served their purpose, but as an act to pump up the crowd for the Dummies, they didn't come through.

Overall, the show was just as much a concert as it was a comedy act featuring Roberts attempting to drink out of an oversized water bottle, and trying to find Reid a date with someone in the crowd. The Dummies are indeed talented performers, and although Give Yourself a Hand may not take off right away because of the new style, performances like these will keep the Dummies alive on the Canadian music scene.

THE ANNUAL AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL BENEFIT CONCERT

Come out on Friday, March 19th and support Human Rights with:

Travel Agent
Lounge Act
Bumblepuppy
Sex Kittens
Reno's Hitman - Pat Ang
Amusia - Franklin's Fault
Jon Coakley

On Friday, March 19th, 1999
From 2:00 p.m. - 2:00 a.m.
Come to the Pub under the JDUC and Celebrate your Freedom!

exchange

Events
List

Queen's Players
$6

Raptors
Road Trip
$40

On Sale
Now!

Tickets
At:

exchange

The Queen's Entertainment Agency Proudly Presents:

TUESDAY MARCH 23RD

Esthero with Emm Gryner and Sarah Slean

Last Chance For FREE Tickets!!!

FREE

All Shows All Ages!

FRIDAY MARCH 26TH

The Dream Warriors

TUESDAY MARCH 30TH

King Cobb Steelie & Ghetto Concept

600 Free Tickets to the Esthero Show
300 Free Tickets to the Dream Warriors
140 Free Tickets to King Cobb Steelie & Ghetto Concept
will be provided on a first-come first-served basis
@ the Used Book Store (UBS). While everyone may pick up a ticket to Esthero, they must choose only ONE
of the remaining two shows.
Tickets are free for any student who DID NOT Opt-Out of the QEA Opt-outable Fee (You must present your Student Card).
Some tickets may still be available @ the UBS for SALE, additionally, tickets *WILL* be sold at the door of EACH show.

Questions?
E-mail Us :
qea@ams.queensu.ca
http://ams.queensu.ca/qea/

Classifieds

99¢
Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.kweb.com/bluerof or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

ESOS (Educating Students On Substances) and the Queen's Student Constables urge everyone to exercise moderation in their social relaxation. With this in mind, we present to you Part four of our awareness challenge. This week's question: Define binge drinking as it relates to women and to men. Email your answers to contest@www.ams.queensu.ca.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1-877-PREP-COM.

MARCH IS nutrition month in Canada. Check out the great links for healthy eating, recipes, and self-assessments at www.queensu.ca/sndc - click on the fitness and nutrition link.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069 www.resumelay.com.

ADVANCED ENGLISH TRAINING! Oral Presentation and Writing. Learn to express ideas fluently in English, in person or on paper. Call Ruth Kennedy at 542-7369 or mail to: yes!@email.com

FEEL LIKE CRAP? Get a handle on a healthier lifestyle. Check out the Fantastic Lifestyle Checklist at www.queensu.ca/sndc.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.ca for daily rates. Wellington foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington, 531-8731.

QUEEN'S JAZZ AND BALLET CLUBS annual recital at Duncan McArthur Auditorium. March 19 at 7 p.m., March 20 at 1 p.m. and 8 p.m. Tickets $5 at Performing Arts Box Office in JDUC, $6 at the door.

PSYCHIC READINGS Group psychic readings at our lakeside country place, or in your own home, with the Wizard. Receive a free session to organize a group of seven. Call 359-6695.

REHEARSAL SPACE available for theatre, 1500 sq.ft., 20 ft. ceilings with kitchen access and washrooms. Call 547-4500, The Kingston Theatre Resource Centre or email to: ktrc@email.com

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

REBUILD BIKES FOR SALE, bike repairs, winter tune-ups and bike rentals. Call us at 542-0964 or visit us at 132 Ordinance.

FOR SALE: Commerce jacket. Great condition, $130. Contact Jill at 531-1988.

FOR RENT: Three or four bedroom, $695/$795, good condition, parking, large. Two blocks from University and Princess. Phone 545-0393.

FOR RENT: Bachelor/one bedroom, great location at 302 Queen. Good condition, laundry, storage, parking. $450 including heat, hot water. Phone 545-0395.

HELP WANTED

WANNA BE A PART OF THIS PAPER? Applications for business manager are still being accepted. Other positions for next year may also be available. Call Sarah or Stefan at 533-2800 to enquire.

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewardesses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM, which offers one-on-one help and support to children from disadvantaged families, is looking for tutors and supervisors for 1999-2000. If you want to volunteer, please contact Rosalind Malcolm at 549-2778. We need your organizational and human relations skills! This challenging and rewarding community experience will enhance your resume and change your life!

ULTRA-VIOLET MAGAZINE is looking for next year's Editor-in-Chief. Students from all faculties are encouraged to apply. We are looking for creative people with leadership skills. Pick up an application in the Union Gallery in Staufler. Question? Contact UV@www.ams.queensu.ca. DEADLINE: MARCH 23rd, 1999 at 4 p.m.

HEY! YOU in Arts and Science! Apply to be an Academic Rep! Come on, everyone's doing it! Stop by the Core (183 University) or phone 533-6000 ext.75148.

SALESPERSON REQUIRED for upgrade Shoe Store. Employment available from end of school term in Spring to Labour Day weekend. Possible part-time employment beyond Labour Day. Previous experience not necessary. Please send resume to: Jack McCalpin C.Ped. Manager, Walkwell Shoes, 179 Wellington St., Kingston, ON K7L 3E3

STUDENT SUPERVISORS REQUIRED: to supervise up to 15 high school students in the Enrichment Mini-Course Program in extra-curricular activities from May 9th to May 14th and/or May 16th to May 21st. Weekly salary $250.00, includes breakfast, dinner and room in residence. Applications at Continuing and Distance Studies, Mackintosh-Corry Fl. Applications due April 2nd, 1999.

WANTED

SUMMER SUBLET one bedroom apartment 1/2 block from lake Ontario on Beverly St. 4 minute walk from campus. Available May - August. $380 per month, negotiable. Call Richard at 546-1481.

BIKE COURIERS WANTED All-weather riders, reliable, adventurous, part-time is okay. Call us at 542-0964 or visit us at 132 Ordinance.

WANTED: Six Academic Reps. Applicants must be Arts and Science students interested in representing students' academic interests. For more information, stop by the Core or phone 533-6000 ext. 75148.

SAILING AND TENNIS INSTRUCTORS WANTED! The Beaumaris Yacht Club is looking for tennis and sailing instructors for the months of July and August. If you are interested please contact Ginny Clark at (613) 530-3711 or send resumes to 1-437 Johnson Street, Kingston, ON

K7L 1Z3.

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: Matteo Maas black suit jacket, lost at Artsci '99 formal. If found please contact Craig at 544-7114.

LOST: Fuji D3-190 zoom lens camera. Lost at Artsci formal. If found please call 545-1033 or email at 4mnc2@qink.

LOST: A black Olympus camera in a little black bag. March 6th the night of the ArtSci formal. Please call Julie at 530-3841.

FOUND: Sweater found in Ellis Auditorium Monday March 8th after the Sue Johanson lecture. Call 531-9257 to claim.

FOUND: One tuxedo jacket at the ArtSci formal. Please contact Rob at 547-3430.

FOUND: A camera and carrying case in a cab the night of the ArtSci Formal (March 6th). Please call 533-7981 to identify.

FOUND: At the ArtSci Formal, non-disposable camera. Contact 4eat to identify.

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

PERSONALS

PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1 800 844-8669.

GW - What happened to the rest of your so-called challenge?? Scared? Hunh, hunh, hunh? — QJ Staff

EVERYONE AT THE J: You've all worked so hard this year. Keith and I think you are all awesome, talented and wonderful people. And ya' kick ass. -T

DAWN and LINZ: Just continuing the trend. Lub you! (And I'm looking forward to Sunday night) — The Amazing Disappearing Housemate.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

ACROSS

- 1. Female whale
- 4. Pudding starch
- 8. Grand slam
- 9. Having sound
- 11. New Testament book
- 12. Made up of rock fragments
- 14. Grow old
- 15. Scarlett O'Hara's home
- 17. Give a job to
- 18. False sect
- 20. Shuttiecock
- 22. Human beings
- 23. Nervous
- 25. That is! Lat.
- 27. Soak flax
- 28. Mr. Costello
- 29. Mollen rock
- 32. Black magic
- 36. Strange celestial sight
- 37. Singer Domino
- 39. Faithful
- 40. Cease proceeding
- 42. Snack between meals
- 44. King of Judah
- 45. Sport of bowling
- 47. Three-time Indy 500 winner
- 49. Garland's costar
- 50. Looks at

DOWN

- 1. Good-looking
- 2. Shout of approval
- 3. Bridge player
- 4. Of the sun
- 5. Memorable saying
- 6. Deep wound
- 7. Punctually
- 8. Indistinct
- 9. Paper currency
- 10. Makes weary
- 11. Janet and Chrissy's roommate
- 13. Dollar part
- 16. Border part
- 19. Semester
- 21. French fashion designer
- 24. Without hearing

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE

Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
  - Proven Test-Taking Strategies
  - Personalized Professional Instruction
  - Comprehensive Study Materials
  - Simulated Practice Exams
  - Personal Tutoring Available
  - Free Repeat Policy
  - Thousands of Satisfied Students
- Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

Teach English Overseas

- ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses
- Intensive 34-hour and 42-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)
  - Classroom management techniques
  - Detailed lesson planning
  - Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
  - Comprehensive teaching materials
  - Teaching practicum included
  - Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
  - Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
  - Formal certificate given upon course completion
  - Cost: $395 (34-hr course) / $445 (42-hr course)
- For More Information Call Oxford Seminars:
544-9389 / 1-800-269-6719

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysisists. Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

MONEY FOR NOTHING!

The Winter Clubs & Assembly Grant forms are here! Application forms and complete criteria are available outside of the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs (CIA) office. Forms are due back on March 19th, 1999

- You MAY be eligible for a grant if you are:
- Part of the Queen's Student Community;
  - From a non-profit cause, organization or society and your activity does not already receive AMS funding.

Complete Criteria, along with application forms, are available at the AMS Commission of Internal Affairs.

For more information please contact Dave Contant, CIA Deputy Commissioner, at 533-6000 ext 74815 or cia@ams.queensu.ca

ASUS AGM!!!

Do you Love Democracy? Come to the ASUS Annual General Meeting (AGM)

We the People

March 25th 7:00 pm
McLaughlin Room in the JDUC
Every Arts and Science Student gets a Vote
This includes...CESA, PHESA, BFA, BMUS
Everyone's welcome to Attend

ASUS ASUS ASUS

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800.

Own a piece of Queen's history.

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

- It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!
- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
  - ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
  - ✓ New Air Canada service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Léisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

"Fuckin' A"

THERE IS A SCENE in Hamlet, during the famous "To be or not to be" speech, when our title character makes reference to "the undiscovered country," a kind of elegant metaphor for the future.

At the risk of making an ill-advised connection between high-brow and low-brow topics, Shakespeare's words can be applied to the world of salty snack foods.

What's this, you ask? Hast thou gone barny? Dost thy brain still reside in thy head? True, it might seem a bit insane to apply words from one of the greatest pieces of literature ever created to a discussion of salty treats. But before you Englishx majors turn away in disgust, read on a bit — we're going somewhere with this.

Like Hamlet, the snack food world has reached a crossroads in its existence. Powerful forces are at work and the future has suddenly been put in doubt. And what is the cause of all this turmoil? The answer: chipnuts.

Undoubtedly you have more questions, not the least of which is "what in blazes are chipnuts?" Well, loyal reader, chipnuts are jumbo cocktail peanuts wrapped in a crispy potato shell, and they are mighty tasty. Imagine biting into a bunch of pebble-sized lumps with a satisfying crunch, and savouring a pleasant, wildly addictive, flavour. They are truly the best salty snack around.

Now, to get back to our Hamlet comparison, chipnuts are themselves an "undiscovered country." Although they currently exist in obscurity, this is a snack food that has the power to revolutionize the entire snack food industry.

Like all the undiscovered countries

MAKE CHIP, NUT WAR

out there, chipnuts will rule the future. And the future they will lead will be one of peace, where the current competing salty snacks can finally live together in harmony. Too long have the forces of peanuts and the forces of potato chips battled for supremacy of the snack food world. Now there is an alternative. Chipnuts, being part peanuts and part chips, can finally bring some order to this chaos.

Bearing this sad fact in mind, we have taken it upon ourselves to spread the gospel of chipnuts. Not so long ago, we, like the general public now, lived in blissful ignorance of what we were missing. The veil of darkness was lifted from our eyes however, with the first taste of the salty manna. That's when we realized we were converts to the chipnut cause.

Like the ascendancy of McDonald's from a low-key burger joint to emperor of the entire food industry, or the rise of Beavertails from obscurity to the domination of the deep-fried whole wheat dough market, we boldly predict that chipnuts will ascend to similar greatness. But it can only happen with your help.

If chipnuts are to have the glorious future they so richly deserve, we need more people to spread the word. How can you get involved in this worthy cause? There are lots of ways — a single person speaking out can make a world of difference. Boycott your neighbourhood convenience stores until they stock chipnuts. Stand up to your boss and demand that a chipnut vending machine be installed in your workplace. Call your local politicians and say you'll withhold your taxes until they start importing chipnuts by the truckload.

Before you know it, chipnuts will be on every street corner, and you will have helped this to occur. Help us in our mission, start a snack food revolution. You won't be disappointed.

But here's the problem: nobody knows about them yet. The only place chipnuts are made is on a small peanut farm in the booming metropolis of Simcoe, Ontario (pop. 15,000). The consequence of this is that a wide-spread market for chipnuts hasn't been established yet. Only a small number of chipnuts are produced, and very few of these are shipped any great distance. This means that, unless you are a resident of Simcoe, you almost never have access to this delicious salty treat. Millions of people don't know what they are missing. It's a tragedy of epic proportions.

George Pfaff, Kevin Butler, and Keith Gerein are not allowed closer than 500m to Simcoe's city limits.

To this day, Neil Young denies the rumours that he performed in the movie "The Last Waltz" with a Chipnut lodged up his nose.

Results of the 1st ever Queen's chipnut survey

Long believing that chipnuts are the greatest undiscovered snack food, we sought out the opinions of Queen's students to determine if others shared our views. Our mission of evangelism brought us to the mean streets of the JDUC last Tuesday, where we braved the bemused stares of passers-by to bring you the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth on the appeal of chipnuts at Queen's.

Total participants: 113		Male: 60%	Female: 40%
1. Have you ever heard of chipnuts before?	Yes: 19% No: 81%	2. Do you think chipnuts are better than peanuts?	Yes: 79% No: 21%
3. Do you think chipnuts are better than chips?	Yes: 31% No: 69%	4. Would you buy chipnuts if they were sold in Kingston?	Yes: 67% No: 33%
5. Please rate chipnuts from 1-5
Rating:	Original	Ranch	BBQ	Onion & Garlic	Salt 'n' Vinegar	All Dressed	BBQ Pickle
1 — Very good	17%	33%	24%	0%	25%	33%	29%
2 — Pretty darn good	39%	28%	56%	30%	69%	33%	47%
3 — I've had better	44%	28%	12%	30%	6%	25%	18%
4 — Pretty darn crappy	11%	8%	40%	40%	0%	8%	6%
5 — I'd rather eat socks	0%	0%	0%	0%	0%	0%	0%
Avg Score:	2.3	2.2	2.0	3.1	1.8	2.1	2.0

Justine Li, Arts '99, samples a BBQ flavoured chipnut. Justine's appraisal? "I'll give it a #1, 'cause I'm very satisfied," she says.

PHOTO BY KEITH GEREN

presents a brief history of the chipnut

As the story goes, the idea for chipnuts was conceived approximately 10 years ago when a female customer walked into Picard's Peanuts and Country Store in Simcoe, Ontario.

After looking around a bit, the woman approached the counter with a bag of chips and a package of peanuts. That day the cash register was being operated by Jim Picard, the leader of the family that owned the store and the surrounding peanut farm.

Jim began to ring up her purchase, completely unprepared for the revelation that was about to hit him.

"I asked the woman why she was buying both chips and peanuts," recalled Jim. "You see, normally it would be one or the other."

He continued his tale: "Well she told me that her husband liked to eat both chips and peanuts at the same time while watching TV. And that got me thinking, and I wondered if maybe we could combine the two somehow, we'd have a winner."

Jim had a brainwave alright, but it would be six years before he and two of his sons, John and Jim Jr., were able to perfect the snack.

Why did it take so long? You just slap a potato coating on a bunch of peanuts, right? Easy.

"It turned out to be quite difficult," said Jim. "We would get up early and stay late, trying a number of different methods that weren't very successful. The coating would always fall off the peanut."

But, undaunted, the Picards pressed on, determined to make Jim's dream a reality. "After about six years, we created a product that we thought was good enough to let customers sample," said Jim. "People told us what they liked and what they didn't and we took that information and made some modifications until we arrived at the product we make today."

Currently offered in seven flavours (original, BBQ, ranch, onion & garlic, salt n' vinegar, dill pickle, and all dressed) with an eighth (hot n' spicy) on the way, chipnuts have become the Picards' most popular product.

Chipnuts are still a small player in the salty snack industry, but Jim has high hopes for his invention.

"We currently distribute to about 20,000 gas bars and country stores around Canada. That's not bad for a company as small as ours, so there's no telling how far chipnuts will go."

PHOTO BY GEORGE PFAFF

BY KEITH GEREN

JIM PICARD SPEAKS

The first ever glimpse into the mysterious, reclusive life and craft of the great Canadian chipnut inventor very snooty french pronunciation "Pee-card" of our bald starship captain.

After this initial awkward moment, the interview started to proceed more smoothly. After a few minutes, I quickly realized two things about Jim's personality.

The first was that Jim is a very spiritual and very family-oriented man.

PHOTO BY GEORGE PFAFF

For example, Jim doesn't like it when you call him the creator of chipnuts.

"We didn't create chipnuts, because only God creates stuff, but we did invent it," he said.

Furthermore, Jim refuses to take sole credit for chipnuts. He did admit to coming up with the idea, but strongly maintained that chipnuts was a family project.

His son John worked on the potato coating formula, while his other son, Jim Jr., came up with the cooking process.

The second thing I noticed about Jim was that he is fiercely proud and protective of his family's invention. "Chipnuts is our little baby," he said. "And they are doing really well for us. They are probably the biggest thing we sell."

In fact, Jim has so much pride in his chipnuts, that he won't use the peanuts he grows on his own farm. For chipnuts, he imports a premium variety of jumbo cocktail peanut that's only grown on a farm near Gainesville, Florida.

"That's our name on the bag, so I wanted to make sure it was of the best quality we could make it," he said.

His pride for chipnuts then began to manifest itself in other ways, including a series of questionable "facts" regarding the product's health qualities.

For example, Jim informed me that chipnuts have half the fat of peanuts. This was a claim I considered highly dubious, considering that each chipnut contains one whole peanut plus the crispy coating, but not wanting to ruin the rapport we had built up, I let it go.

While his salty invention will always remain Jim's "baby," he was quick to remind me that Picard's Peanuts was more than just chipnuts.

"We do every kind of coated nut you can think of," he said. "We do seven varieties of peanut brittle, did you know that?"

I laughed. It seems that when it comes to putting the world in snack heaven, Jim Picard will never rest. Hopefully, one day, his efforts will be rewarded with a place in the snack food hall of fame.

MISC BUILDING CONTEST: THE FINAL PIECES

If no one is able to solve the mystery phrase after this issue, we'll publish all 14 clues next time in an all-Building extravaganza.

Until then, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letter of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensical. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring.

Note: if you've missed the clues from the first six issues, you're hopelessly screwed. Just wait until next issue.

Ashley Williamson, Arts '00 models in front of Building #13

Darrell Lettowillier Sci '02 models in front of Building #14

Attention: All Native students and anyone involved in research with Native Peoples and Issues

NATIVE STUDIES RECEPTION

- Share your ideas and research with others
- Find out about a possible Student Conference on Native Studies
- Casual; beverages and snacks provided

Where: Robert Sutherland Room, JDUC
When: Thurs., March 24, 3:00 – 5:00 pm

SEE YOU THERE

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS

St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions:

- Stewardesses
- Deckhands
- Assistant Cruise Directors
- Galley Assistants
- Bartenders

Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduating students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

ST. LAWRENCE CRUISE LINES INC.

Kingston Symphony Association
Glen Past 9899
MARCH 28TH 2:30 PM
MARCH 29TH 8:00 PM
GRANT HALL
MUSIC OF CONSOLATION & TRIUMPHANT RE-BIRTH with the Kingston Choral Society & Queens Choral Ensemble Fauré: Requiem
Glick: Triumph of the Spirit
Tickets call GRAND THEATRE 530-2050
FOR STUDENT RUSH TICKETS CALL THE GRAND THEATRE FOR DETAILS

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to success. We would like to help take you the rest of the way by offering $750 towards the purchase or lease of a new Chrysler or Jeep® vehicle.* That's $750 in addition to most current Chrysler incentives. If you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada, we'll also defer your first three months payments!† And with a world-class lineup of vehicles to choose from, we clearly offer something for everyone. Whether you're looking for the off-road excitement of a Jeep®, the rugged performance of a Dodge Truck, the roominess of a minivan or the redesigned and refined Chrysler Neon 2000, we've got a vehicle that'll take you wherever you want to go. What's more, you could win a $5000 travel voucher just for sharing your smarts with us. For details, simply visit us on-line at www.chryslercanada.ca

*Excluding Trucks and Vans. †Some restrictions apply. See your retailer for details. The $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college or university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1996, and September 30, 1999, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students, regardless of final graduation date. © Jeep is a registered trade mark licensed to Chrysler Canada Ltd.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Retailer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

since 1873

FRIDAY, MARCH 26, 1998

Senate approves tuition hikes

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Yesterday, Queen's Senate approved a set of substantial tuition increases proposed by Principal Bill Leggett for next year.

In a vote of 20 members in favour, 11 opposed, and six abstentions, Senate passed Leggett's motion for increases that, if passed by the Board of Trustees, would include a dramatic increase of 40.8 per cent for students entering their second year of Queen's Commerce program. Students registered in the program in 1997-98 will only face a maximum increase of 20 per cent.

Last year, the Board approved a multi-year plan for tuition adjustments that provided an increase of approximately 10 per cent for all programs except Applied Science and Commerce, for which there was no proposal.

First-year tuition levels at the School of Business are limited to a regulated increase of 9.1 per cent, which was approved last year. However, increases for upper-year students were not determined at that time. The proposed 40.8 per cent tuition increase in Commerce would result in an overall 1999-2000 cost of $5,000. This increase will affect students who are currently enrolled in their first year of the Commerce program at Queen's.

According to a principle outlined in the government's 1998 fee announcement, increases for students who were registered in 1997-98 will be limited to a 20 per cent increase level. This

Please see Comm on page 7

Queen's student dies

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Queen's student Angeline Melissa Hook passed away March 11. Angeline fell ill and was taken to hospital on March 11. She passed away in hospital later that day from heart failure. Doctors were unable to determine the cause of death. Angeline would have celebrated her 26th birthday on March 17.

Angeline was registered in a Bachelor of Science Degree program in the Faculty of Arts and Science at Queen's. She hoped to pursue graduate studies at the University of Western Ontario following her graduation from the university.

Angeline's family is from Arnprior, Ontario, which is located east of Kingston. She will be sadly missed by her mother Linda, father Shane, sisters Ashley, Kaitlin and Jessica, and brother Michael.

The Laundry Café on Princess Street closed its doors Sunday evening. Please see related story on page 3.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

V-P Cowan new RMC principal

BY FIONA STEVENSON

A vice-principal at Queen's University has been appointed the next principal of Royal Military College in Kingston.

Defence Minister Art Eggleton announced Tuesday that John Cowan, Queen's vice-principal (operations and finance), will replace RMC's current principal, John Plant, who is retiring on May 31 after more than 15 years as principal.

"Dr. Cowan has the breadth of experience required to help the commandant lead the college into the new millennium," stated a release issued by RMC announcing the appointment.

"It's good news for RMC... It's bad news in the sense that he's made a terrific contribution here and he'll be sadly missed."

— Queen's Principal Bill Leggett

"I think it's going to be really interesting," said Cowan, who will be the first principal to serve a five-year renewable term rather than an unlimited appointment. Cowan was chosen by a committee of military and non-military representatives and will assume his new position on July 15.

"I was very pleased for John Cowan," said Queen's Principal Bill Leggett. "It's nice to see people succeed in what they want to do. It's good news for RMC... It's bad news in the

Please see Cowan on page 3

Queen's eyes Frontenac courthouse

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

By submitting a proposal to Kingston City Council, Queen's School of Business has officially declared its interest in acquiring the Frontenac County Courthouse. The school has estimated it would cost them $17 million to renovate the existing building and pursue an expansion.

"This is an expression of interest," said Margot Northey, dean of the School of Business. The school has given the City of Kingston until June 1 to decide if it would like to pursue negotiations with Queen's.

The proposal offers to restore the existing building and add a three story expansion behind the courthouse. If the city or province declines, Queen's plans to investigate other options.

"If we get the courthouse it would be absolutely wonderful for the School of Business," said Northey, adding that the acquisition would allow the school to continue "making its mark as a very innovative and forward-thinking school."

According to Wednesday's Kingston Whig-Standard, the provincial government, along with some local agencies, are hesitant about permitting the city to sell the courthouse, due to heritage issues and a problem with an expansion across Barrie Street.

Commerce Society President Brenda Ha said there are people who disagree with the move and are concerned "that we might be taking over space that has history and significance in Kingston."

"We're not in any way changing the neighbourhood," said Northey, explaining that the surrounding area, including the park, would remain the same. "I don't see that this is really a change," she said. "The city needs a solution."

"We're seriously overcrowded," stressed Northey, who explained that much of the school's staff is spread over different buildings and that there is no room for new staff.

"We're doing a lot of different endeavours that require [the expansion]," she added, pointing to the school's new computer-based environment, which requires extra space.

As part of the proposal, delivered to city council Tuesday, Northey promised the school would not only maintain the courthouse but restore it to some of its former grandeur.

Please see Money on page 3

index

Volume 126, Issue 38
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	Sports & Fitness	21
Editorials	10	A&E	27
Opinions	11	Classifieds	34
Science	15	M&C	35
Features	17

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny High 4°C, Low -1°C, POP 0%	Sunday Sunny High 11°C, Low -1°C, POP 0%
Saturday Sunny High 9°C, Low -4°C, POP 0%	Monday Sunny High 11°C, Low 0°C, POP 0%

studio Queen's only student-run TV show is NOW HIRING

Positions available:

PUBLICITY MANAGER
VIDEO FACTORY MANAGER
SEGMENT EDITORS (2)
HOSTS (2)

Applications are due in the Studio Q office (in the JDUC) by Wednesday, March 31 at 5:00 p.m. For more information, contact Studio Q at 533-6699 or studioq@ams.queensu.ca

Kingston's One and Only Hard Rock Café

The Brass

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
 20¢ wings
 (with the purchase of a beverage)

Conference comforts

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

Last Friday and Saturday, approximately 50 students participated in the Comfort Women Conference. This on-campus event recalled the approximately 200,000 women that were forced into sexual slavery by Japan's armed forces during World War II. The conference was sponsored by the Creating Awareness about Race Relations group in Kingston and on campus.

Guest speakers at the conference included activist Meerai Cho, CBC journalist Kathleen Boylan, and film maker Nancy Tong.

"Comfort women" were young women between 11 and 27 years old who were enslaved in military brothels known as "comfort stations" throughout East Asia from 1932 until the end of the war. The women from China and South East Asia were subjected to repeated rape, beating and torture, and were forced to serve an average of 30 to 40 soldiers a day.

The majority of the survivors are now in their late 70s, and many continue to suffer permanent injury accrued from disease and psychological trauma. For years, many of the "comfort women" did not speak out as they were ashamed or scared of being rejected and disbelieved. After nearly 50 years of silence, former "comfort women," began to speak out in 1991 about what had happened to them.

Many conference speakers said the Japanese government has not provided proper redress or compensation to those women who were forced to work in the "comfort stations." The official position of the Japanese government has gone from denial to a deflection of culpability onto soldiers, they explained. A private fund was created by the Japanese government to raise money for the women but most survivors are demanding direct compensation from the Japanese government as well as a full apology.

"I came [to the conference] because I wanted to know more about [the issue] and see what I could do to help," said Kari Kim, Law '00. Kim indicated that she was impressed with the conference. "The conference was well organized. I learned a lot from [Nancy Tong] and her film," she said.

Conference organizers said they were pleased with the university community's interest in the event.

"I was pleased at the attendance," said Cathy Shin, Law '00, one of the conference organizers. "A lot of men showed up. I was pleased with that."

Shin said she was encouraged by the participation of those attending the conference. "Participants got to give voice to their opinions. People weren't just complacent," she said. "[The atmosphere] was really emotionally charged. For a sombre topic, I felt optimistic."

"I think that a lot of males skip out on women's issues," said Eun-Hye Chung, another conference organizer. "I liked the diversity of the audience," she said. "It was a good overall conference."

CORRECTION

In the Sports and Fitness section of the last issue, Mike McDermot's name was misspelled. The Journal regrets the error.

A Night At

Alfie's PUB

You Will Remember the Next Morning

PEC accommodates transgendered persons

BY TARA MANSBRIDGE

In many ways, Queen's is notorious for its inaccessibility. That's why a recent initiative by the Physical Education Centre to accommodate the needs of a transgendered individual at Queen's stands out.

"All Queen's students have a right to use the facilities," said Joan Stevenson, director of the School of Physical and Health Education, of the request to provide comfortable changing facilities for individuals making the transition from male to female or female to male. Stevenson identified the issue as one of basic human rights, stating that every individual using the facilities at Queen's has a right to "feel safe and have a potential for privacy."

This issue is "helping [the PEC] accomplish something that should have been accomplished a long time ago," said Stevenson, who said that the change-rooms at the PEC are extremely outdated and in need of improvement.

Not only are the changerooms difficult for transgendered individuals, the spaces were created at a time when the two-parent nuclear family was the norm. Currently, a mother cannot have her son accompany her into the woman's change room, nor can a father have his daughter accompany him. The only showers in the men's washroom are what Stevenson describes as "gang showers," which afford no privacy whatsoever. Stevenson said money from the Capital Campaign, which is currently underway, will go towards updating the changerooms to meet the community's needs.

"[The current request] is sort of a wake-up call," said Stevenson, continuing, "we're a progressive school and we're used to change." Stevenson hopes to have some kind of permanent accommodation made for transgendered individuals at the PEC as early as May.

"Basically, our accommodation flows from our legal obligation to accommodate," said John Cowan, vice-president (operations and finance). "That's why we've created an essentially private area for the woman concerned."

Under the judicial system, a transgendered person is someone who has made steps towards biologically transitioning from male to female or female to male, what Irene Bujara, director of the Human Rights Office, calls "a person in transition." Socially, the transgendered category has been used to refer to people who identify as transsexual, as something other than their biological sex or as no gender at all.

Although there is no legislation dealing specifically with discrimination against transgendered individuals, the Human Rights Code is designed to protect the rights of all Canadians. In a recent case before the Human Rights Tribunal in British Columbia, the tribunal ruled if transgendered individuals are restricted from using public restrooms of the gender to which they are transitioning it constitutes sexual discrimination.

"It's a human rights issue," said Eleanor MacDonald, a political studies professor who researches and writes on transgender issues. "People shouldn't be required during the time that they are transitioning to not exist."

Queen's has been dealing with the needs of transgendered individuals for a little more than a year. Approximately six months ago the Transgender/Transsexual Policy Group was formed to accommodate the needs of transgendered staff and students. The group, composed of staff, members of the HRO, representatives from residences and Student Affairs, and transgendered individuals, has already looked into issues such as accommodating the needs of transgendered persons living in residence.

"I don't think most Canadian universities have begun to deal with this issue," said MacDonald. "I feel very positive about the fact that there is this transgendered group on campus."

MacDonald, who is part of the TG/TS Group, is also concerned about the lack of social understanding about transgendered issues, both on campus and in the larger society. "I think that there's a risk that people think it doesn't need to be a mainstream concern," she said. "The risks are largely borne by the first people who come forward, people who have a certain extra level of bravery, because society doesn't like hearing about this. After these few people come forward, though, people begin to understand."

"The level of transphobia on this campus and in the community at large is quite high," said Julie Darke, anti-heterosexism coordinator at the HRO.

"These are difficult issues for all our staff and faculty as well," agreed Stevenson.

Cowan said he "has a number of

Please see 'Rights' on page 9

Money will not come from tuition fees

Frontenac County Courthouse: soon-to-be Property of Queen's University?

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Cowan familiar with RMC operations

Continued from page 1

sense that he's made a terrific contribution here and he'll be sadly missed."

Leggett spoke about the strong tradition at RMC that will be continued by Cowan's appointment. "It's good that if he's going to leave at least he stay in Kingston."

Cowan does not come from a military background but is familiar with operations at RMC. "I've had a fair bit to do with RMC in the past few years," he said.

Cowan sat on a panel that drafted a set of recommendations intended to improve the operation of the college. In addition, Cowan has been involved in an initiative to improve the college's core curriculum. Cowan is also a qualified pilot.

Cowan is married and has two stepchildren, one of whom also attends Queen's. He has worked as vice-rector at the University of Ottawa and as a senior advisor for the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada. He assumed the position of Queen's v-p (operations and finance) in 1995.

Leggett said that hiring for the vacant vice-principal position will begin shortly, although he expects it will take some time to review applications and form a hiring committee. He anticipates that position will be filled by the fall term.

— with files from Renée Huang

Continued from page 1

Ha expressed concern with the potential location. "The concern is that if we move, it distances us from the campus and makes things less accessible."

Ha did note that the school, as is, is quite crowded, and that a move would put the school "under one roof." At the moment professors and programs are spread out and have limited access to the dean. This "inhibits a lot of communication," said Ha.

The proposal received a somewhat negative reception from the campus development and planning committee, but the school's interest has not dwindled. "They are not giving up their rights to planning... these are the types of preliminary debates you get," said John Cowan, vice-principal (operations and finance).

Cowan said the current master plan of the campus does not include the courthouse, however, he said the expression of interest in the courthouse was a necessary step in determining whether or not it is a viable option. "We really have to play this thing through," said Cowan, noting that the proposal to negotiate has to be sanctioned by both the city and the province before it can be brought back to Queen's for approval.

Northey said the money for the restoration and expansion would come from "outside money being raised," and confirmed that the funds would not come from student tuition fees.

Cowan concurred. "We have no allocation whatsoever of institution money that would do this," he said. Cowan explained the courthouse, as a heritage building, would possibly be attractive to outside donors.

"We have known for a long time that we have a problem with space... we've been looking at options," said Principal Bill Leggett.

"This creates a different form of solution, it appears it would make good sense," he said. "Whether we will be able to acquire it in the end is another issue."

"Certainly the building itself is quite elegant," Leggett said. "Queen's has a wonderful record of maintaining and restoring historic buildings in the city... that is important to the community."

Cowan echoes Leggett's vision of honouring the historic element of the courthouse. Even if it were purchased by Queen's School of Business, he said the building would always be known as The Frontenac County Courthouse.

Laundry Café closed

BY LAURA MACINNIS

If you're craving cheesecake and a coffee, it may be time to find a new place to hang out. The Laundry Café, a restaurant and coffeshop next to McDonald's on Princess Street, closed its doors on Sunday night.

The Laundry Café has been open for 14 years, and Andrew Tietzen has been its owner for the past five years. For personal reasons, the Kingston resident has recently closed the café and ended its catering service. Tietzen will be working this summer as a cook for a tree-planting company.

The Laundry Café catered several Queen's groups, including QPID, Amnesty International, and Clark Hall Pub events. The café also catered the ArtSci formal and the Queen's Pub this year.

Tietzen said "about 1,600 customers per week" frequented the café, including many Queen's students.

Lauren Sukerman, Arts '00, who has worked at the Laundry Café for two years, called the news of the closure "a big shocker," and "very, very sad."

Employees were informed on Sunday that the café would close that evening. "We really didn't want to believe it. There was some indication that it was going under but no one thought that it would go under so quick," said Scott Deveau, ArtSci '00 and a two-year employee at the café.

Sukerman said there are about 19 staff members at The Laundry Café, and about six of them are students who rely on the job. Sukerman was planning on working at the Laundry full time this summer, and said there are other students who had made similar plans.

"[Tietzen's] trying to help us all get jobs," said Sukerman, adding that Tietzen has written reference letters for his employees to help them find work at other restaurants in Kingston.

"All the pay cheques were paid. Andrew's written reference letters for everyone," said Deveau. "On top of that

Please see Café on page 9

AMS Assembly chastises Dean Crawford

BY ERIK MISSIO

Last Thursday, the Alma Mater Society Assembly unanimously passed a motion to draft and send a letter to Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford expressing its anger over the two-day closure of the Queen's Pub last week.

At approximately 5:30 p.m. on Wednesday, John Deutsch University Centre Director Jack Sinnott approached Queen's Pub Assistant Manager Mark Soules and informed him that the pub was to be closed until further notice.

The decision was made jointly by Crawford and Sinnott, due to a perceived violation of an agreement concerning the grad residences and pub noise.

The agreement, created to address concerns brought by grad students about noise levels, limits live entertainment to Friday and Saturday nights. There was a band playing in the pub on Wednesday afternoon as a part of St. Patrick's Day celebrations.

Controversy arose after no effort was made to contact either AMS President Tom Stanley or Services Director Sarah Armsstrong before the decision to close the pub was made. AMS Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie received only one voice message instructing him to call Sinnott.

"I find such unilateral, non consultative action very disturbing. It cuts to the core of how the AMS operates alongside the university as an autonomous, legal corporation directed by students," said Moodie at the Assembly meeting. Moodie then put forth the motion, seconded by V-P (Ops)-elect Owen Minns, to draft a letter to Crawford, disapproving of his actions.

The letter states that the AMS finds it "unacceptable for Dean Crawford's office and the JDUC [to] treat AMS officials as being essentially irrelevant to making important decisions about AMS services." The letter cites that the QP is "our service. We own [it] and run [it]. This would seem to dictate that we should play a role, or at least be consulted, when decisions are made and actions taken that demonstrably effect [its] operations."

"I very much appreciate the spirit of the AMS [position]. I accept it, understand it, and I would make every effort to not unilaterally in the future."

— Bob Crawford, dean of student affairs

Moodie conceded that an agreement may have been broken, but argued that any possible noise infraction is not the point.

"The QP's actions are arguably a violation of agreements, but this argument never happened because the AMS was never adequately consulted. It was sort of embarrassing to be in charge [of the QP] but to know less than the average student [about the situation]," he pointed out. "The band could've left, they could've turned down the sound... there were plenty of potential solutions and I don't know if closing down was the ideal one," said Moodie, who estimates the pub's net losses during the closure between $3,000 and $4,000.

Next year's QP Manager, Mark Soules does not see the incident as incredibly detrimental to the AMS/JDUC relationship.

"The key to next year will be to build upon this year's communication. The challenge will be to make sure we can continue to have a good, strong, working relationship... there are no easy solutions for either side," he commented.

Soules said there will be some internal adjustments at the QP next year, including a re-examination of the house sound system. It is his hope that any changes made will be seen as measures of good faith. "Our major goal next year is that we know less than the average student success of this year — success that is the credit of hard-working staff," Soules asserted.

Incoming Services Director Susan Henry said she feels confident that the incident will not mar future relations between Crawford, Sinnott and the AMS. "We're looking to start a new relationship with them, but we'll still keep the events of the past in mind. We'll put an extra effort into building a positive relationship," she said.

Crawford seemed equally eager to put the conflict behind him. "I very much appreciate the spirit of the AMS [position]. I accept it, understand it, and I would make every effort to not act unilaterally in the future."

While Crawford said he expects negotiations to achieve a compromise between a viable pub for students and a quiet studying environment for graduate students, and he is hopeful for the future.

"[The Dean's office and the AMS] worked through a number of problems this year, and I have every faith that this [situation] can be moved behind us," he said.

Liberal government supports tuition decrease

BY STEPHANIE CARVIN

On Monday, Ontario Liberal Leader Dalton McGuinty announced that a Liberal provincial government would roll back tuition fees by 10 per cent. This follows a similar announcement made last fall by Ontario's New Democratic Party, which also promised to roll tuition fees back 10 per cent.

In addition, the Liberals said they would restore OSAP funding for part-time students, a group cut off from OSAP in 1997 by the current Progressive Conservative government. As well, working students would be able to earn up to $1,800 during the school year without their OSAP deducted after $600, as is currently the case.

The plan is revenue-neutral to universities, with the Liberals planning to provide compensation for the tuition roll-back, and will cost $140 million. "There is a cost to making post-secondary education more accessible to those that cannot afford it," said McGuinty in a press release. "However, it is far less than the cost to our economy and our future prosperity of preventing our best and our brightest from reaching their full potential."

The Liberals have also promised to re-regulate tuition fees for professional programs such as medicine, law, and engineering, and will offer free tuition to any medical student who agrees to work in an underserved area for at least five years.

"[The Ontario Liberals] would love to be able to do more," said Lyn McLeod, M.P.P. and the official critic for colleges and universities at the Ontario Legislature. "I hope to go further. Being 10th out of all the provinces [for university funding per student] is not an ideal situation to be in."

Reaction to the announcement was varied around Queen's campus. "I think it's a step in the right direction," said Milan Konopek, academic affairs commissioner for the AMS. "It is good that the opposition parties recognize that accessibility is being threatened," he added.

Konopek urged the current provincial government to announce its platform on education. "It is time for the PC government to do the same things. They have had the opportunity," he said. "It's about time they tell the students of Ontario what they plan to do with post-secondary education."

additional funding would make up for lost revenue caused by tuition roll backs.

"Universities are trying to increase the quality of education. Are we going to have to stick with the status quo?" he said.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford said he was pleased that tuition would be lowered but shared some of Nardari's concerns over the lack of new funding. "It leaves exactly the status quo," he said. "Where is the recognition that [universities] are dramatically under-funded?"

"At Queen's of the $30 million drop in government grants, approximately 50 per cent is offset by students," said Vice-President (Academics) Dave Turpin. "We would hope that any government would increase funding to universities, allowing us to take the pressure off students."

Robert Crawford, dean of student affairs, said there is currently no policy on how Queen's handles situations involving crimes committed by students. A policy was drafted last year but it has never been completed. Crawford said that Queen's handles situations involving students and crime "case by case."

Students charged with mischief

BY CHRISTINE TYRRELL

Two first-year Queen's ArtSci students, T.W. Kim and M. Amir, both age 19, have been charged with mischief exceeding $5,000 for smashing two eight foot by four foot windows at a King Street East residence last Thursday evening.

According to the Kingston police report, a city bylaw officer spotted a group of five men standing in front of the residence at King Street East and William Street. He observed and reported the incident to the Kingston Police.

Police Constable Steve Wright arrived at the scene within 30 seconds. A foot chase followed and Kim was apprehended. Amir was later apprehended. The two males admitted responsibility for the damage and were released at the scene. They are scheduled for a court appearance on May 4.

Robert Crawford, dean of student affairs, said there is currently no policy on how Queen's handles situations involving crimes committed by students. A policy was drafted last year but it has never been completed.

Crawford said that Queen's handles situations involving students and crime "case by case."

This particular crime falls outside of Queen's jurisdiction.

Had the incident occurred on Queen's campus or against a member of the Queen's community, then it would be dealt with under the Queen's Code of Conduct, he explained.

Crawford added that, if necessary, "we would always feel free to initiate our own disciplinary procedures irrespective of whether or not the student was actually charged."

Kim and Amir both expressed regret over the incident.

"Me and my friends were coming back from the bar, I guess we had way too much to drink," said Kim. "We were just fooling around, and we just broke the windows, and I'm very sorry for what I did and I wish I could it back but I can't so I'll just leave it in the law's hands and I will be punished properly."

"As an ambassador of this school, I feel I've let Queen's down in the eyes of the police and the Kingston community," said Amir. "My actions were unjustifiable and I'm sincerely sorry for what I did."

— with files from Fiona Stevenson

You can be a chiropractic physician in five years.

Why settle for anything less?

The time is right to learn more about a rewarding and fulfilling career as a doctor of chiropractic. Greater emphasis is being placed on preventive care and non-invasive health methods in today's modern health-care system. In five academic years, you can graduate with a doctorate and be licensed to practice anywhere in the U.S. and Canada.

Known for academic excellence, Logan College is on the cutting edge of curriculum innovations. In addition to offering a quality clinical program, Logan provides value-added business management training. This gives graduating practitioners a winning edge with better leadership and practice enhancement skills.

Logan College of Chiropractic is now accepting applications. Write, call or check our Internet Website for a free descriptive brochure and admission kit.

EARN A DEGREE WITH A FUTURE
http://www.logan.edu
1-800-533-9210

1851 Schoettler Road • Chesterfield, MO 63006-1065
Phone: 314-227-2100 • Fax: 314-207-2425 • E-Mail: loganadm@logan.edu
An Equal Opportunity Institution of Higher Education

Queen's Law class of '99 celebrated their graduating formal last Saturday night at the Viry Officer's Mess of CFB Kingston. Over 170 students, faculty and administrators dined, danced and reminisced the night away. Retiring professor Hugh Lawford was honoured by the Law Students' Society and Law '99.

PHOTO COURTESY OF CHRIS ELLIS

What's Happening

The AMS updates you on what's happening on and around campus

QEA Presents Dream Warriors @ Alfie's Pub.
Tickets FREE at the door or the UBS.
Doors open @ 8:30pm. All Ages!!

Pierce George, brother of Dudley George, Stoney Point defender killed by the OPP at the former Ipperwash Provincial Park.

Saturday, April 3.
Wallace Hall, JDUC, 7:00pm brought to you by the Queen's New Democratic Youth and Anti-Racist Action Kingston.

For more information contact Eric at 531-7767 or qndy@hotmail.com

Put a roof over their heads and hope into their hearts. Buy a shingle for $2 and proceeds go to the homeless.

"AS PRIME MINISTER" AWARDS

What would I do if I had $20,000?

What would I do if I were Prime Minister?

If you were the Prime Minister of Canada, what political vision would you offer to improve our living standards?

AND WIN

1 x $20,000 + 9 x $10,000 + 50 x $500 Internships + National Exposure

Essay deadline is June 15, 1999.
Details: www.asprimeminister.com or 1-800-97-MAGNA

THINK OUTSIDE THE BOX

If you're a Canadian college, university or CÉGEP student

TELL US...

IN ASSOCIATION WITH THE NATIONAL POST

If you have something you want to tell the world then

phone the AMS Communications Commission @ 545-2732, or email Comm@ams.queensu.ca

Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award

The Agnes Benidickson Tricolour Award honours select students each year who have demonstrated an outstanding contribution to Queen's through non-athletic extra-curricular involvement. Induction into the Tricolour Society is the highest student initiated tribute given for student excellence. Nomination for this award is a tremendous honour and all nominees should be recognized for the impact that they have had on the Queen's community.

The nominees for 1998-99 are:

- Ian Brisbin
- Nick Cheeseman
- Tracey Childs
- Jeffrey Coull
- Andrew Dalrymple
- Chris Ellis
- Kevin Henry
- Clara Ho
- Lindsay Hogan
- George Kim
- Darren MacDonald
- Neil McCartney
- Jennifer Mihill
- William Montcrief
- Philip Pietersma
- Angela Pilas
- Dawn Robertson
- Jennifer Ross
- Chrissy Walker

Tricolour Award recipients will be announced Sunday March 28th

Opt-outable fee helps Studio Q recover from debt

By NATALIE DIAZ

The approval of a $2.16 opt-outable fee in last fall's referendum gave Studio Q an additional $7,000 in revenue this year, and helped the service recover from the debt accrued in previous years.

"Without student fees, Studio Q was left with only two sources of revenue: video sales in Orientation Week and sponsorship revenue," said Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations). As a result, "they lost $10,000 last year alone," he added.

Moodie said the large debt was mainly caused by the high expenses in advertising, video production, office supplies and equipment. "Approximately $2,000 was lost in advertising, $4,000 between office supplies and equipment, and $3,000 in video production," Moodie said.

"Our main focus this year was to become financially stable and, luckily, we were able to accomplish our goal."

— Ariel Goldblatt, executive producer of Studio Q

Ariel Goldblatt, executive producer of Studio Q, explained that this year's profits were directed strictly to paying off the deficit accumulated from last year and also to pay some of last year's hired staff. She noted that only the executive positions of Studio Q are paid, and that most students volunteer in order to get hands-on experience.

"Our main focus this year was to become financially stable and, luckily, we were able to accomplish our goal," Goldblatt said.

Liz Levine, business manager of Studio Q, agreed. "Give or take a few percentages, we will be able to break even and meet our goal," she said. Nevertheless, she pointed out, "it will take a couple of years for Studio Q to get back on its feet again and resemble a real television station."

As for the future of Studio Q, Bart Bonikowski and Pete Carr are currently the only team running for the position of Executive Producer. If they are elected, they said they will stress a campus-oriented television station, with concert listings, better advertisements, and better equipment.

According to Bonikowski, "We want to bombard Queen's with Studio Q. We want a better quality of the show, and we will begin by looking into Toronto and Montreal Sponsors throughout the summer." Bonikowski said he believed this year was a transitional one, adding that Studio Q is a hands-on experience job that has great potential.

There will be an open forum for candidates running for the position of Executive Producer on Sunday in the Studio Q office, located in the lower level of the JDUC. Elections will be held on Monday in the same location and will be announced shortly afterwards.

Comm faces 40% increase

Continued from page 1

increase, which will be in effect next year, means tuition would reach $4,261.

AMS President Tom Stanley expressed his concern over the dramatic increase in tuition fees, especially the 40 per cent increase for first-year Commerce students. "This is my biggest point of concern. When the government instituted a 20 per cent cap on students already in deregulated programs... the spirit of that was that students enrolled would know what they had to face," he said.

Stanley explained that the Commerce program was not deregulated in the technical sense. "Changing the rules on this one year of students is patently unfair," he said. "I'm not disputing that you have to have money in programs in order to have quality, I'm just disputing the nature."

"Because of the technology enhancements, there's a lot of cost recovery that must be done," said Brenda Ha, Commerce Society president. "This is just one more attempt to increase the quality of our degree... and be competitive with other schools. I agree that it is something that needed to be done," she cautioned.

Vice-Principal (Academic) Dave Turpin concurred, stating, "My understanding is that without the increase, new technology will not be possible."

Ha explained that the school is actively pursuing other funding possibilities and fund-raising options. "We believe in the value of our degree," she said, adding that "no student is turned away because of financial constraints."

Margot Northey, dean of the School of Business, said that Commerce will create bursaries to ensure no students are forced to leave for financial reasons. "We're trying to create a package to help students here now and future students."

Stanley noted that students who are currently enrolled in upper-year courses will be paying substantially less for their education than next year's second-year class. Since there is a high degree of fluidity in the program, students may take upper-year courses despite their second-year status. This means these students will be paying more than other students in the same class, he said.

The administration "made a two-year tuition announcement," said Stanley. He said the university was clear at the Board of Trustees that, depending on the government's actions, they may have to revisit their proposal, but still chastises the inconsistency.

"The commitment to predictability and stability in planning should override other concerns," said Stanley. "The more predictability... the better," he added.

"I think that this internal focus is very important," said Stanley. Stanley said he recognised the fear of external factors. For example, a lower tuition may be perceived as reflective of a lower level of education being provided. Stanley thinks Queen's should "steer away from logic like that. The internal factors are much more important."

Stanley believes the tuition increase "automatically removes focus from our accessibility." He questioned whether or not this education was affordable. "This argument is something that gets shifted to the back," he said.

Ha said she understood this could be the opinion of an outside perspective, but was adamant that "there has been a major revamp in the curriculum and technology."

"The courses themselves have changed radically... it's basically a new program," said Ha, adding that "in every change there's always that transition."

The tuition increase for next year's engineering program is also substantial. It is recommended to be 29.7 per cent over this year's costs, representing an increase to $5,000. However, as in Commerce, increases for students currently registered in this program will be limited to 20 per cent, or a $4,627 overall tuition cost.

"They're all facing the same level of increase," said Stanley. "I don't have the same concerns there."

— with files from Lianne Elliott

loyalist college

canada's outstanding small college

PHONE: 1-888-LOYALIST MAIL: Box 4200, Belleville, ON K8N 5B9 FAX: (613) 769-7905

One-Year Programs in Journalism, Media and On-Line Production

APPLY NOW! Your current degree or diploma qualifies you for admission to one of nine exciting options in our Emerging Media Technology Centre (EMTEC).

Classes begin in May for Fast Track entry into:

- Advertising
- Broadcast Journalism
- Photjournalism
- Print Journalism
- Radio Broadcasting
- Television Broadcasting

Classes begin in September for Post-Grad programs:

- New Media Journalism*
- Media Marketing and Sales*
- New Media Production*

*final approval pending

Guaranteed consideration if you apply by April 15th.

E-MAIL: graduate@loyalist.on.ca WEBSITE: www.loyalist.on.ca

Got a thing or two weighing on your mind?

Exams, girlfriends, papers, boyfriends, deadlines, summer jobs, holidays, moving...

break out for brunch

Spanish Eggs, Frittatas with Homefries, Cinnamon French Toast... Special Coffees, and hot, hot, hot drinks... and all at your 15% student discount!*

Chez Piggy. A great place to roost.

Chez Piggy Restaurant 68R Princess Street 549-7673 *with ID

The Alma Mater Society Teaching Issues Committee is currently seeking opinions on the state of the system at Queen's.

Tenure

If you have a point of view that you think should be included in this report, please submit a letter or an e-mail containing your opinions. Write to the academic affairs commission - submit a copy to the AMS office in the JDUC or write to:

academic@ams.queensu.ca
subject heading Tenure

Psychiatric disabilities often overlooked

By MAGGIE BUHAJCYK

While access ramps and doors have made Queen's campus more accessible for students with physical disabilities, some feel that the needs of students with psychiatric disabilities have remained unnoticed.

In a recent article, Terry Krupa, assistant professor for the School of Rehabilitation Therapy, wrote that while many students suffer from occasional bouts of anxiety or depression, "there are identifiable patterns in the way that psychiatric disability presents a barrier to education." Combined with mental and emotional demands of university life, these disabilities can often create significant pressures on the academic performance of the students, she explained.

Krupa said she thinks a major problem is the confusion regarding the academic capability of students with mental health problems. "If I give them an extra week to finish something because of an anxiety problem, it's not an indicator of impaired intelligence, but it's hard for people to separate those," she said.

Fauzia Ahmed from the Alma Mater Society Accessibility Taskforce said the main problem is identification and awareness. "People don't have just physical or learning disabilities, many have psychiatric problems and a lot of them are reluctant to identify themselves," she said.

According to Krupa, awareness and acceptance will not resolve the problem. "Good feeling won't do it," she said. Instead, Krupa thinks Queen's needs to implement academic support programs for students with psychiatric disabilities. "There's a difference between putting in extra access ramps and trying to accommodate around academics," said Krupa.

"At the end of the year I would like to have a program of 15 to 20 people whose specific needs are targeted," she added.

Krupa cited availability of resources as the main challenge to such programs. "People don't see it as a high priority so they don't redirect resources or put money into it, and that's a problem," said Krupa.

According to Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), the Accessibility Taskforce deals primarily with physical and learning disabilities, not psychiatric illness. "It doesn't fit into our mandate. It could evolve that way eventually but I don't know if we have the expertise to deal with those issues," she said.

Loat added that the different needs of students with psychiatric disabilities expand the scope of the problem. "Some people may need medication while others need special programs — it's hard to generalize the problem," she explained.

Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford said he is confident that Queen's offers services to students with mental health problems. "We think it's important to offer psychiatry as a part of health care and disability services because by working with them we are able to help the students function successfully in the university," he said.

Café a 'landmark'

Continued from page 3

he's kind of gone out of his way... It's not like anyone can leave with any animosity."

"Most of the [employees] don't really need their jobs. The people who did — he's already gone out of his way to help them," Deveau added.

Many Queen's students frequented the Laundry Café, which was a popular locale for studying and for dates. "The weekends were very busy," said Sukerman.

"It was a very relaxed atmosphere," said Deveau. "It was just kind of fun to be at place where people were happy most of the time."

"It's a landmark of their Queen's experience," Sukerman explained. "I think the general feeling on campus is that we've lost something really unique to Kingston."

'Rights can conflict'

Continued from page 3

people call [him] very upset, who feel that [his] judgement has been very bad on this issue." However, Cowan continued, once he explained the legal precedents which protect the rights of transgendered individuals, many of the callers began to understand. "It's mostly a process of education to put people at ease," he said.

"You've got to understand that rights can conflict."

In the past, a lot of people have felt uncomfortable when oppressed groups stood up for their rights and requested change, explained Bujara. In this and all other instances that the HRO has dealt with, "accommodation is always made trying to respect the dignity of both the individuals and the units involved," she said. Bujara said that although everyone should feel comfortable with the accommodations reached, people's comfort levels should not supersede the rights of transgendered individuals. "There are still people uncomfortable in the changerooms because there might be lesbians."

Queen's students have reacted cautiously to the accommodations being made by the PEC. "I think I might be uncomfortable with it, but I'd get used to it," said Katie Harkins, ArtSci '99. "I've grown up a lot since I've been at Queen's. If you'd asked me [about transgendered issues] when I was in high school I would've flipped out."

Bujara was quick to point out that the request at the PEC was not the first accommodation Queen's has made for transgendered individuals. "The accommodation [at the PEC] is there for a need which may be more broadly felt."

Outstanding Contributors: March

B O N A

C R Y S T A L

Sorry we couldn't get your picture!

C H I L D

W I G M O R E

V I R G I N I A

Crystal has been a wonder to behold this month. In one issue alone, she spent an entire day writing a late-breaking news story and then went to cover a review for A & E the same evening. She is a pleasure to work with, very enthusiastic and has great news sense. Her straight-forward manner of pursuing stories and interviews is an asset to the News and A&E sections. Way to go, Crystal!

Jeff Child; Poet, Visionary... kick-ass Opera critic. Mr. Child has been a faithful contributor to the A&E section. Often writing last minute, high quality reviews and contributing ideas for stories, he never fails to impress the A&E editors with his biting style and sometimes sensitive commentary. Mr. Child, we salute you!

She's snazzy, savvy and sophisticated. Wigg is not only the best dressed chick on campus, but also a dedicated A&E writer. Wigg is always ready to take on different stories, and frequently saves the A&E team by writing last minute stories. What makes Wigg special is her love for boy bands, Barbra Streisand and art reviews. We appreciate your talent and enthusiasm!

MATHEMATICS AND STATISTICS
INFORMATION NIGHT
FOR ARTS AND SCIENCE STUDENTS
WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1999
7-9 P.M.
JEFFERY HALL, ROOM 128

The Department of Mathematics and Statistics invites you to learn about Mathematics and Statistics course offerings planned for the academic year 1999-2000 and about our new Jobs Network for students concentrating in Mathematics or Statistics.

The information presented will be of vital interest to second and third year students who are registered in Mathematics and Statistics Honours programs (BSCH-SP, MAJ OR MED, AND BAH-MED).

Students in first year can also benefit from the opportunity to look ahead and think about planning a four year program in Mathematics and Statistics.

Students in other concentrations may also wish to hear about our 300 and 400 level courses.

Refreshments will be served.

CONSIDER A CAREER IN THE PUBLIC SERVICE

Is your degree in the arts, natural or social sciences, humanities or a profession? Complement it with our MPA or diploma in public administration. Governments are hiring talented people. Watch the doors open.

DALHOUSIE UNIVERSITY
Master of Public Administration
Halifax, Nova Scotia
Canada B3H 3J5
(902) 494-3742
Fax: (902) 494-7023
E-mail: dalmpa@dal.ca
www.ngmt.dal.ca/spa

Toward excellence in the Public Service

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

Spring is right around the corner & it's time for....

Queen's Summer Leagues

Grad Soccer (m/w)

&

Coed Softball

Team entry packages now available at the PEC (front lobby)

Grad Soccer League

Team Registration: Deadline April 16 @ PEC wickets (With $25 deposit)
Manager's Meeting: April 20, Grad Club @ noon
Official's Meeting: April 21, Grad Club @ noon (paid positions!)
1st League Games: May 3rd (Sundays-Thursdays)
League Ends: Mid July
# Teams: 6 Women's/12 Men's depends on # teams, but about $150/team

Sponsored by: SGPS, The Grad Club, & Queen's Athletics

Check out the Grad Soccer League Website at: qlink.queensu.ca/~3dj15/gsl/

Coed Softball League

Team Registration: Deadline April 29 @ PEC wickets (With $60 deposit)
Manager's Meeting: May 10, Rm 205 PEC, @ noon
1st League Games: May 25 (Sundays-Thursdays)
League Ends: July 29
Annual Tournament: Aug. 7/8
# Teams: 32 (maximum); first come basis (min. 5men/5women per team)
Rec & Competitive: depends on # teams, but about $165/team

Divisions:
Team fees:

Sponsored by: Queen's Athletics

Check out the Summer Softball League Website at: <http://civil.queensu.ca/individ/brown/softball>

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

What about Bob?

THE QUEEN'S PUB COULDN'T give away beer on St. Patrick's Day — thanks to heavy-handed measures taken by the administration to enforce a noise-reduction policy. The decision by Dean of Student Affairs Bob Crawford and JDUC director Jack Sinnott to close down the pub last Wednesday cost the service more than $4,000 in sales. More important than lost revenue, however, is the disturbing message that such unilateral actions send about the administration's contempt for the autonomy of student-run services.

In the absence of any immediate danger to students, the administration should have waited until the relevant AMS official could be contacted before closing down the pub. Instead, they swaggered in like an authoritarian sheriff and gave the management one hour to shut the saloon doors. AMS services director, Sarah Armstrong, was not contacted or even proffered an explanation after the fact. Nor was any serious attempt made to get in touch with AMS Vice-President Gord Moodie, or President Tom Stanley who was in his office at the time. Consequently, the situation was resolved with the worst possible consequences for the pub: closing down on what was projected to be one of the largest grossing nights yet. Granted, the QP management should have known better than to violate the noise agreement by having a live band on a weekday. Nonetheless, Bob Crawford and Jack Sinnott could have shut-down the noise without closing the pub.

Perhaps the administration would not feel so emboldened to interfere with the QP in the future if the AMS acquired its own liquor license. Ultimately, however, the only way to put an end to the dispute over noise at the QP is to resolve the tensions between the pub and the graduate residence above it. As long as there are students living directly above a campus pub, it seems unlikely the situation will be resolved to the benefit of the student community.

Dear Bill Leggett,

I FEEL A KIND OF CONNECTION TO you. We started together at this school, way back in 1993, and since that time I'd like to think we've had some of the same experiences. But unlike you, at the end of this academic year, I'll be leaving Queen's. As the day of my departure creeps closer, I've started to look back a bit, to reminisce. And I've started to think about how this place has changed since the day I first stepped on this campus as a scared, naive frosh.

I am frightened for the future of this institution.

During my time here I have developed a lot of pity for the people who work at the front desk of the Registrar's office. I feel sorry for them when I think about the sheer volume of irate students these people must have to deal with everyday as they try to justify the insensitive tuition policies of the Queen's administration. It's unfortunate that these are the people who get dumped on, because they're just the messengers. One day, Bill, it might be worthwhile to spend some time at Richardson Hall's front desk. Stand there and listen as the assistants tell student after student that they owe the university money. It's got to be a frustrating experience.

Since I arrived here, Arts and Science tuition has gone up more than 60 per cent, and guess what, it's going up again next year. Students in other Faculties have experienced, and are continuing to experience, far more dramatic increases. Granted, this isn't solely your administration's fault. Government funding cutbacks have provided you and your colleagues with some tough questions as to how to cover the shortfall. But every single time, your answer has been to make the students pay more. Maybe you've done the best you can, but it's really tough to believe this when no substantial alternatives have ever been attempted. This is a critical failure and points to a disturbing attitude within your administration that Queen's students have bottomless pockets.

Perhaps I'm not being fair. Government cuts have been excessive, and despite this, Queen's is, overall, still a great place to be. I have no doubt that you work very hard and that you care deeply about this university and the students who attend it. But, ultimately, it all comes down to job performance, and I have to wonder whether during your term here, Queen's has become a better place.

I am frightened for the future of this institution. Improvements to the quality of education have not kept pace with the rise in tuition. Accessibility and diversity are decaying. The return on our investment declines everytime you raise prices. Quite frankly, Bill, you are fortunate that students here are either too apathetic or too busy trying to survive to launch a large-scale protest. Instead, we silently fume, wondering how we're going to afford another year at Queen's. I'll leave you with this. As a new alumni, I don't have much money to donate, but what little I give will not be given to Queen's. Not yet. You're going to have to earn my confidence back first.

BY KEITH GEREIN

Jobs still available

WHERE HAVE ALL THE KEENER students gone? Surely, there are more than 17 people on a campus of more than 12,000 that are interested in being an AMS commissioner. From service manager positions to campus media posts, extracurricular opportunities abound this year, but applicants remain scarce. While these posts have never been lucrative, they all offer an opportunity to play an integral role in campus life and gain invaluable experience. At the very least they are a good way to pad a resumé.

Yet, for some reason, few students have shown an interest in applying for these positions this year. While any explanation for the declining interest in student life must take into account a number of factors, the rising cost of education must share some of the blame. With tuition going up every year, fewer students can afford to volunteer their time in a position with little or no remuneration. Consequently, participating in student government is becoming less accessible for many students.

There is no denying, however, that fiscal restraints aside, there is a trend towards student apathy at Queen's. Few students seemed motivated to even take the time to cast a ballot at the AMS elections in February and last week only 12 per cent of the community voted in a referendum that resulted in substantial fee increases. If most of the community is unwilling to take the time to put a check in a box, it's not surprising that students are shying away from student government. This problem is compounded by the fact that the student community is woefully uninformed about the opportunities that exist on campus. Many students don't realize that these positions, from service director to deputy commissioner to campus editor, require no previous experience and are meant for them.

To make matters worse, some students were probably turned away from student government by the controversial events surrounding this year's AMS executive elections. It is doubtful, however, that political scandal can account for much of the declining interest.

Regardless of the reasons for the decrease, the low number of applicants is a troubling indicator that student government and campus media at Queen's may be for the students but not really by the students.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura Macdonald

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Shawn Brimley
Renee Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Friday, March 25, 1999 • Issue 38 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800; advertising: 613-533-6711; Fax: 613-533-6728; Email: journal@post.queensu.ca; Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca; Circulation: 9,000. Issue 39 will be published on Thursday, April 1, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Milica Belzner, Ian Brislin, Maggie Buhajczyk, Stephanie Carvin, Lucas Costello, Natalie Diaz, Tanla Haas, Alison Lemay, Erik Missio, Heather MacDonald, Jennifer Paterson, Bill Raynatt, Dimitrios Totos, Christine Tyrrell, Joshua Wiesenthal, Virginia Wymore.

Photographers: Geoff Ashenhurst, Robin Brebner, Sue Holland, Bob Hush, Sean Richmond.

OPINIONS

has a talking

HEADS

Explosion

What do you think about the toilet?

"The Journal makes good toilet paper." Chris Kennedy Arts '99
"Will you get out of my bathroom?" Trevor Brown Arts '99
"I've got a log to pick with you." Scott Carr Arts '00
"Which hand to wipe with." Dave Ritchie Arts '99

PHOTOS BY GEOFF ASHENHURST

How much money do you have left?

"Enough to get home to Newfoundland if I bike and then swim." Danielle Kelley Artsci '02
"Not even enough to do any laundry I'm dirty." Jen Cuttis BMus '02
"Just enough for one more Thursday night at AJ's." Ryan Mahaffey Artsci '02
"Enough for one more 'adult' selection from Night Owl Video." Jeff Benner ConEd '02

PHOTOS BY ROBIN BREBNER

Who do you think will win the main event at Wrestlemania XV on Sunday?

"Jesse 'The Brain' Ventura." Angela Jones Artsci '00, Becky Bauman Kiri Zweep Sci '00, Nurs '00
"Surprise challenger Professor 'Stone Cold' Gerald Tulchinsky... oh hell yeah!" Ira Matthews Artsci '01
"Every Jahroni knows it's going to be The Rock." Neal Khan Artsci '01
"The tag team of Colonel Harland Sanders and Sydney Poitier." Rob Himier Artsci '01

PHOTOS BY BOB HUSH

What is your definition of soul? Part II

"Ask Oats Redding." Will Lee Sci '01, Lisa Harun Arts '01, Theo Mactucu Arts '01
"That good time feeling you get with a free lollipop!" Rich Couchiching Arts '92
"Kendra's 1999 Operations Committee." Jenn Earl Arts '00
"Eatons. Diversity. Whatever." Melissa McKay Arts '01, Ben Birchard Real World '01

PHOTOS BY SEAN RICHMOND

Letters to the Editors

Naming names

Dear Editors,

While I certainly appreciate the newsworthiness of the article entitled "Student charged in child porn case" (Journal, March 19), I write because I take issue with one part of the article. Why was the student named?

Although a part of me did not want to write this letter and encourage more people to note the accused's name, I eventually (obviously) decided to write, with this request: If a reader did not notice the first time, please don't look back.

I don't understand the purpose of naming a Queen's student charged with a crime. In a community such as ours, the concept of "Six Degrees of Separation" holds more true than in a larger city or at a larger university. Also, consider the possible ramifications to the individual if he is found not guilty. His name will have been cleared, he will be prepared to return to university, and... he will be stuck with the stigma laid by a front-page Journal article. This is not only unfortunate, it is also fundamentally unfair.

From my perspective, I fail to understand how any student benefited from the accused's having been named. For that matter, I am more at a loss trying to reconcile why some of his extracurricular activities were named in the article. Again, I do understand how our community benefited from the article; however I take extreme issue with the first two paragraphs.

Hartley Lefton
Artsci '01

What were we thinking?

Dear Editors,

Regarding the article "Student charged in child porn case" which you ran on the front page of the March 19th, 1999 issue of The Journal: what the hell were you thinking? You may have had the right to publish Adrian Veins's name prior to his trial, but given the lack of information available on the details of the case, it was not the responsible thing to do. Do you realize that your article has effectively destroyed Adrian Veins's reputation and future at Queen's whether or not he is guilty? Or do you not care? I don't know the accused, but as a result of your tabloid-style attack upon him, I do sympathize with the situation you have placed him in.

David Mazzucchi

ACSA clarification

Dear Editors,

There was a significant omission in the article about the African and Caribbean Students Association (ACSA) Culture Night which was featured in the March 19, 1999 edition of The Journal.

The author identified several people as contributors to the success of the evening but forgot to include Hiba Fidol, our Culture Night Coordinator.

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly acknowledge, on behalf of ACSA, Hiba's untiring efforts and grace during these past few months. Also, congratulations must be extended to the participants, both performers and audience, for making the evening such a great fun.

Momona Haile Mariam
ACSA Public Relations Officer

Journal scored

Dear Editors,

In several issues of The Journal, there have been many articles, opinions and letters supporting the pro-life issue. With headlines like "Pro-life pro-debate," many people would expect to see both sides (pro-choice and pro-life) on this issue. You could imagine my surprise when only one letter to the editors (from a nursing student) supporting pro-choice with accurate information, while pro-life was getting major attention.

Then my curiosity was answered in the March 19, 1999 issue of The Journal with the editorial "Pro-life pro-debate." If one or more of the editors are pro-life, then it makes sense why my letter, and probably many other pro-choice letters to the editors, are not being printed.

The disclaimer in the editorials states that the editorials represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal, and that this is done by a democratic process. To me, democratic means equal rights and privileges for all, so why is The Journal not allowing the pro-choice side to be printed, especially when they call it a debate?

The Journal is discriminating against the pro-choice side, especially women who are pro-choice. I am sure that the majority of women on campus and in the Kingston area are pro-choice and feel the same on this issue. I always thought that The Journal represented the views of all students at Queen's, and I am sure that not all students are pro-life.

I feel that The Journal owes an apology to the students for not equally expressing the views on both sides of the issue, and the newspaper should promise that this will not happen again with any issues. Until this happens, I am boycotting The Journal and I urge others to do the same, especially the local businesses that supply The Journal to the students and the general public.

Jacqueline Penford
Kingston Resident

Being fair about $15

Dear Editors,

I was somewhat amused by what I think John Shipman intended as a response to my last letter (January 29), in which I argued that the new policy which forces students who do not bring their student cards to exams to pay a fine of $15 is unfair, and so should be revoked. I say Mr. Shipman "intended" his letter (February 12) as a response to mine, because quite clearly it was not that at all.

An actual response to my letter would have consisted of reasonable arguments directed against the points I made. But Mr. Shipman seemed to think that he could make up for what he lacked in argument with personal attacks. In his letter, besides misspelling my name, he suggested I am "stupid", "wasting valuable trees" and, of all things, "Mr. Spock, spouting logic."

OK, I must admit that the comment about my being akin to Mr. Spock was pretty funny, and maybe even somewhat a propos. However, while Mr. Shipman's hilarious wit may be fine as far as it goes, I think it is a poor substitute for argument.

What is odd is that when we search Mr. Shipman's letter for a real argument (and no, making fun of people doesn't count), we notice two things: 1) there isn't much there; and, 2) what there is isn't very convincing. When we consider these two points in combination, in the end it is Mr. Shipman who, despite his wit, ends up looking rather ridiculous.

And just what is it that Mr. Shipman wants to offer instead of argument in order to attempt to justify the $15 policy? Apparently he wants to appeal to some principal of economics called "opportunity cost." Mr. Shipman says he is sure I am familiar with this principal of "simple economics" unless I "failed Vulcan 101."

No doubt Mr. Shipman, with his extensive background in commerce, understands all kinds of principals of economics. But actually Mr. Shipman is incorrect. I must, on my part, confess to being totally ignorant of what this "opportunity cost" principal might amount to, and also of finding it a rather mysterious and vague notion insofar as it might relate to the $15 fee debate at hand. Of course, I never did take Vulcan 101...

Continued on page 13

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 12

What would be even more mysterious than "opportunity cost", however, would be if any principal of economics could justify the $15 fine policy that is the current reality. Like I've said before: any way you look at the policy, it just doesn't make any sense. Principals of "simple economics" are not required to see this, and neither is logic. All that is required is common sense.

Common sense tells us that if Queen's administration is going to charge us $15 for a policy to curb cheating, then the policy must work. In this case, "working" means that the policy achieves what it is designed to do; that is, it curbs cheating in the form of impersonation. But actually, and this is the crux of the argument: the policy does not achieve what it is designed to do, it does not curb cheating.

Why doesn't it? Simple: although the total number of students who forget to bring their student cards is brought down by the $15 policy, there will still be students at exams who forget their student cards who are not cheaters. Similarly, a $15 fine will not detract those really bent on cheating, so there will also be those at exams who are cheaters.

The problem (are you still with me?) is that Queen's administration has no way of telling the cheaters from the non cheaters. This is because as the policy stands now both cheaters and non cheaters are forced to do the exact same thing: sign a piece of paper in lieu of their student cards, and Queen's administration has no way of telling the phony signatures from the real!

What does this mean? It means that not even one single cheater will be caught as a result of the $15 policy. Even if we consider the extreme hypothetical in which all students "forget" their student cards, but are actually cheaters, Queen's would still have to let them ALL go because they could not know whether those students had innocently forgotten their cards or had only "forgotten" them.

Now does seem like a policy that works? Does that seem like a policy that works when what it would mean for it to work would be that the policy curbed cheating? Common sense reveals the policy for the sham it is.

What's strange is that Mr. Shipman himself seemed to realize that the policy is completely ineffective, yet he still chose to try and defend it. He realized that even when the total number of students without student cards is brought down, there is still the problem of telling the cheaters apart from the non-cheaters.

This is why he said "...by possibly instating Mr. McCarthy's Polaroid idea, faith in the system could very well be

Continued on page 14

Back by Popular Demand!
Travel & Teach ESL

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
44 HOUR CERTIFICATION COURSE

Classroom Teaching Practicum Included

Crash Course A: 1 week	Course B: 6 weeks
Time: May 3 - 7, 1999	Time: May 10 - June 17, 1999
9:00 - 5:00	6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
Monday - Friday	Mondays & Wednesdays
Practicum May 8	Practicum June 5 & 12
10:30 - 2:30	10:30 - 2:30

Location: Queen's Campus

Cost: $359.00/44 hour course
(5% discount if registered before April 23, 1999)

REGISTRATION INFORMATION
Phone 384-6194 or email sbromstein@bigfoot.com

Take Control Of Your Career

If you're a student or recent graduate, Campus WorkLink NGR can help you with your job search. Hundreds of part-time, full-time, summer and internship opportunities are advertised on our websites each month. With Campus WorkLink NGR, you can post your résumé online for employers to see, search through job listings, research employer information and read up on the latest career tips - 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. And best of all, the service is absolutely free. So don't wait any longer. Take control.

Connect FREE via the Internet to Campus WorkLink NGR.

<http://www.worklinkngr.com> or call us at 1-800-930-9643

connecting.canadians

Government of Canada / Gouvernement du Canada

Ryerson Polytechnic University introduces the

Retail Management degree program

Your ticket to a stimulating, high-energy career

Searching for a career that offers excellent job prospects, with competitive rates of pay? Not sure whether your university degree will help you find it?

Consider Canada's only Retail Management program that leads to a Bachelor of Commerce degree.

You'll receive the management education retail employers want, with a chance to specialize and gain work experience along the way. Entrance scholarships are available for outstanding applicants.

For more details, contact the School of Retail Management at (416) 979-5000, extension 7282 (phone); (416) 979-5324 (fax); or retmg@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail). Or contact the Office of Admissions/Liaison/Curriculum Advising at (416) 979-5056 (phone) or inquire@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail)

RYERSON

Journalism.

Are you interested?

The Journal is hosting a Journalism Roundtable this Saturday (March 27) at 2:30 p.m. in The Journal House (272 Earl St.)

Guest speakers include such Journal alums as:

Giles Gherson
Political Editor, National Post
Editor in Chief, Southam News

Chris Hall
Parliamentary Correspondent, CBC Radio

Drew Fagan
Associate Editor, Report On Business,
The Globe & Mail

Sheila Ryder
Assignments Editor, CBC Television News

For more info and to reserve a space call Tara @ 533-2800

PLANNING A PARTY OR SPECIAL EVENT?

Let our CAMPUS EVENTS DEPARTMENT Help You
Matthew Segal - (613) 548-4688

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 14

restored." Mr. McCarthy's "Polaroid idea", to recap, involved taking pictures of those students who forgot their cards in order to match them up with their student cards after the exam.

Personally I don't think the "Polaroid idea" will ever be instated. But this is not the issue. The fact is that right now the Polaroid idea is not in affect. So right now there is no way to tell the cheaters from non-cheaters. In short, as the policy stands now it is completely ineffective.

Appealing to some method of discriminating between cheaters and non-cheaters which is not actually a part of the policy as it stands, is much like saying "hmm... this policy would work if we had a way of telling the cheaters and non-cheaters apart, but even though we don't have such a method, or at least not one we'll implement, let's pass the policy anyway."

Now does that make sense? Is that what "opportunity cost" shows to make sense? I don't think you need a course in Vulcan logic to see that Mr. Shipman's "argument" is actually pretty funny.

But do you know what the funniest part is? The funniest part is that all of this argument is actually quite beside the point. Mr. Shipman is defending a policy that should never have been passed in the first place. That's right the senate sub-committee on exams who passed the $15 fine policy did not have the competency or the authority to do so!

How it is that no one in student government has realized this glaring error as of yet, despite the fact that the policy was passed nearly two months ago, is what I find really mysterious.

Although I find something humorous in all this, my purpose has never been to ridicule people but instead to show how ridiculous the $15 policy itself is. I think my arguments have been of such a kind that any Queen's student can understand, and hopefully be convinced by. In the end I am confident that even the good John Shipman will come to see the policy for what it is: basically it's just a pile of shit, man!

Theo Dos Santos
 Arts '99

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

DOES YOUR LANDLORD ROCK?

Nominate him/her for the

LANDLORD OF THE YEAR AWARD!

Pick Up Nomination Forms outside the AMS Front Doors. Please call the MAC at 533-6000 ext 75178 with any questions. Packages are due Monday April 5, 1999

SCIENCE

Chewing it over

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

FIRST IT WAS GOOD, THEN IT WAS bad. Then they changed it and it was good again. Now, it might be bad again!

Chewing gum is a hot issue today, and it probably has been for a good part of human history, or at least for the past 9,000 years. That's the age of a wad of sweet birch resin found in an archeological site in Sweden, the oldest chewing gum known.

Gum-chewing became part of recorded history in 50 A.D., when the Greeks began masticating on the resin of the mastic tree. Around 200 A.D., the habit was particularly popular among the South American Mayans who chewed chicle, the sap of the sapodilla tree, and among the North American natives who chewed spruce sap.

It seems likely that these ancient civilizations recognized the benefits of the custom on dental health. Chewing tree resin after meals would have helped remove shreds of food wedged between teeth, and the increased saliva flow would have cleaned the mouth and protected the teeth in an age without fluoride or toothpaste.

In 1848, John Curtis created the first commercial gum in the style of the North American natives, but it wasn't until 1870 that the first flavoured gum ("Black Jack, the licorice gum") was manufactured. That's when the debate started heating up.

Flavoured gum was a hit because it tasted good, but the flavouring contained

Now also available in Spruce Sap and Mastic flavours!

sugar and sugar caused cavities. Since 1870, bubble gum has accumulated dozens of flavours, colours, smells and preservatives, many of which are detrimental to our health in one way or another. Licorice flavouring can cause high blood pressure, cinnamon can cause mouth sores, and the sweetener Sorbitol may contribute to diarrhea.

Gum's greatest glory was achieved when the sweetener Xylitol was added. Xylitol is a five carbon wonder-sweetener refined from wood that significantly inhibits bacterial growth. Not only does the sweetener prevent cavities in the mouth, it might even prevent ear infections. A recent Finnish study found that children who chewed Xylitol gum were half as likely as those who didn't to get certain bacterial ear infections.

Since the Xylitol success, chewing gum has been medically reborn as a vector for drug delivery. Nicotine gum is already enjoying a great deal of popularity, while aspirin and caffeine gums are still emerging on the market. The latest pharmaceutical to jump on the bandwagon is colloidal bismuth subcitrate, which is being chewed as gum by peptic ulcer sufferers to eradicate the bacteria that cause their disease, Helicobacter pylori.

Another interesting 'applied gum' product is Sugarest, whose active ingredient gurmar, an Indian herb, blocks the

Continued on next page

Digital flicks

BY MIKE BELTZNER

Last week the recent developments in televisions and the history of 5.1 channel sound were reviewed. Part two of this series will continue to examine the latest audio products, and also look at the new media that brings everything together — the digital video disc.

More of the sounds

Dolby's 5.1 Digital format caught fire, and movie theatres quickly renovated in order to have the "Dolby Digital" logo added to their listings in local papers. The 5.1 Digital soundtrack was added to film reels in such a way that theatres without Dolby equipment could still use the older surround-stereo soundtrack. Instead of replacing the audio track, Dolby placed the digital sound data in the spaces of film between the sprocket holes on the side of a filmstrip.

In order to squeeze six (left, centre, right, rear left, rear right and bass effect) discrete channels of digital sound in that small space, Dolby laboratories created the AC-3 coding format which both interweaves, compressed and filtered out redundant data from the digital bitstream. Thus, the Dolby Digital decoder extracts the six channels of sound from the encoded bitstream and sends the information to an amplifier which in turn sends it to the speakers. It should be noted that Dolby Digital decoders exist as both stand alone devices and as features that exist as part of some amplifiers. Any device capable of reading a Dolby Digital bitstream will have the Dolby Digital logo proudly placed on the front.

The only competitor to Dolby's AC-3 standard is DTS. While DTS features the same six discrete digital channels as AC-3, it does not feature any data compression encoding. In theatres, DTS soundtracks exist on compact discs that are time-synched to the film as it runs through the projector. Unfortunately, this difference exists in home theatre products as well: to experience a film recorded in DTS, you'll need a DTS audio processor. Fortunately new products will be arriving on the market this summer that can process both AC-3 and DTS.

Bringing it all home

The VCR revolutionized the home entertainment industry. A family could rent a movie and watch it in the privacy of their own homes instead of going out to a theatre. Movies that had been long out of circulation were given new life, and the home theatre enthusiast was no longer some nutter in California who'd installed his own 35mm projector and screen in his basement.

In the late 1980s, avid home theatre junkies bought into the Laserdisc, which looked like a compact disc's bigger brother. These platter-sized optical media contained digital MPEG (Motion Picture Expert Group standard) video and audio data that could be read and output to a home theatre system. The improvement over standard VHS video was incredible, but the cost was prohibitive. Movies released in laserdisc format were often collector's editions, and almost always letterboxed as the target audience were home theatre enthusiasts.

The laserdisc was a good idea, but a little ahead of its time. Technology advances in optical media have now brought the Digital Video Disc, or DVD. While a DVD looks identical to a CD, advances in optical media technology have increased the capacity more than ten-fold, from the 747 megabytes of an audio CD to the 9 gigabytes that can be stored on one side of a DVD.

This format contains enough space to hold a full length feature, as well as several six-channel soundtracks, and still has room for more. Producers have taken advantage of this incredibly

Continued on next page

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Me Tarzan, you Jane

A couple of studies have been released this week dealing with the sticky subject of the differences between men and women: one to do with brains, the other with breathing.

University of Albany anthropologist Dean Falk believes that she has an explanation as to why men have larger brains relative to body size than women do. In an article in the Journal of Human Evolution, she called the difference an "evolutionary inheritance" and proposes that the extra grey matter in men is used to process visual information and build mental maps. To back up her claim, she points to certain animals species in which the males must travel long distances in search of mates, and to the fact that men score better than women do on cognitive tests that gauge visual spatial tasks.

And now for something completely different... snoring. Men are eight times more likely to snore than women. Scientists at Edinburgh's Western General Hospital think the difference here lies in the larger neck muscles of men collapsing the airway and causing it to vibrate.

Speeding up alcohol production

Ethanol makes a great fuel; it burns more cleanly than gasoline and is less volatile, making it easier to handle. However, it is not all that practical to manufacture large quantities of ethanol using current methods, fermenting naturally occurring sugars in crops like corn and wheat. What is needed is a cheaper source of large amounts of sugar. A recent development in enzyme chemistry at the University of Arkansas may make this a reality. The enzyme cellulase cleaves cellulose, the tough polysaccharide component of plant cell walls, into simple glucose, a sugar that can be fermented to make ethanol. Unfortunately, the enzyme works very slowly and scientists have tried for a decade to increase its activity. The work in Arkansas involved mutating an amino acid at one of the enzyme's binding sites, resulting in a weaker bond with the cellulose substrate. The mutant enzyme had 13 per cent more activity than normal cellulase, marking the first time that its activity had been increased. Since cellulose is an abundant material, making up about half the organic material on Earth, the potential exists for cellulose to be a new and completely renewable resource.

Gum won't decompose DVDs store more

Continued from previous page

tongue's taste buds for up to an hour. The product is being marketed to dieters as an easy way to curb cravings for sweets. I guess if they can't taste their food, there's no reason to eat it.

Such additives have improved bubble gum's image and broadened its customer base, but one substantial hurdle remains. Whether it is in the human intestine, the kitchen sink, or the landfill, bubble gum does not degrade.

Although swallowed chewing gum is usually passed harmlessly — and intact — though the digestive system, several severe cases have recently been documented in which surgery was needed to remove mass quantities of gum lodged in the intestines of young children.

A 1995 episode of the radio Q & A show "Earth and Sky" investigated the environmental impact of bubble gum. They asked industry representatives, consumer groups, and university chemists, but none could even estimate the standard time required for a piece of Hubba Bubba to break down. Ancient resin gum would have degraded easily, but today's lab-made varieties contain synthetic plastics, butyl rubbers and waxes, which are incredibly stubborn. If you've ever had gum stuck on a carpet or in your hair (that's why I got a boy-cut in grade 7) then you know how resilient the stuff is.

Bubble gum baked to our Kingston streets every summer can't just be removed by a street sweeper like other trash. If we ever wanted to rid our sidewalks of this goo, we would have to take much more drastic methods, like they did at Northwestern University, whose 10-day, $5,000 campaign of gum removal involved violently blasting all the streets with hot pressurized water.

It seems almost ridiculous that every year thousands of tons of gum will be produced, yet we have no clue when it might ever degrade. Although plastic bag recycling has been reasonably successful, I somehow don't think the same strategy would go over as well for Trident.

Such environmental considerations have incited some concerned citizens to cut back on their gum chewing, but few want to go as far as Singapore has, where you can get a $1,000 fine for chewing gum in public.

So what does all this mean to the typical Queen's student? Should we chew gum or not? It seems to me that most of the benefits of bubble gum can be enjoyed without the actual bubble gum.

Those who are worried about cavities or bad breath could just brush their teeth after meals, and most of us can probably take our medication in a pill just as easily as in a wad of gum. People who think gum-chewing will make their jaws stronger might want to think again: chewing gum has been linked to mandibular joint problems, muscle fatigue and pain. Even the psychological motivations to chew gum (to relieve stress or to keep oneself occupied) could probably be satisfied through other means.

If, however, you crave that chew that only a goop of gum can provide, you — and the environment — might be better off if you went for the original. I hear the trees on Summerhill provide a good variety of resin around this time of the year, although the squirrels are known to be quite inhospitable to large visitors.

Continued from previous page

versatile digital media to release films on DVD that allow viewers to: select widescreen or standard video formats, choose one of several soundtracks (which may contain different languages or director's comments), display subtitles in a variety of languages, view trailers and special cast interview segments, read biographies on cast and crew members and in some cases even select a different angle from which to watch the action unfold.

The two wavy lines to the left of the image are the standard soundtrack, and the digital information can be seen as graininess between the sprocket holes on the left.

Because the movie is recorded on a digital media, random access is available as opposed to being restricted to sequential access like with a VCR. This means that a viewer can jump to any time index or "chapter" of the movie with the push of a button, just like a listener can skip to any song on a CD.

Most importantly, however, the DVD format encapsulates all of the audio and video advances made over the past 10 years in home theatre. When HDTV becomes standard, the DVD format will be able to handle the enhancements in image resolution, and already the discs hold Dolby Digital and/or DTS soundtracks. Lasers are slowly disappearing from the marketplace, and being replaced by DVD players, which look to become the next standard in home theatre. While players are costly right now at $600 and up, these prices should steadily drop over the next few years until buying a DVD player becomes as common as buying a VCR.

Where do we go from here?

As movie ticket prices increase, the desire to build a home theatre is becoming more and more common for the average Canadian. Home theatre systems can be expensive, however, containing a television, 5.1 channel digital stereo system and DVD player, as well as a Dolby and/or DTS audio processor if its not included in the player or stereo.

The cost isn't prohibitive, but rather a commitment. For an enthusiast, the ability to witness a movie with the best picture and most realistic sound will be worth the cost. If that doesn't matter to you... chances are you can find a friend who's an enthusiast. That's probably the smarter move, because the home entertainment world is expecting to be shaken up again with the release of Star Wars: The Phantom Menace. George Lucas will insist that the new Dolby 6.1 Digital system be installed in theatres that want to screen his much awaited movie — he claims that the extra channel (rear centre) is essential for the effect of a space ship flying overtop of the audience. Well, we wouldn't want to miss out on any of that experience, now would we?

FEATURES

THE HOMELESS CRISIS

In Canada, homelessness is becoming more and more prevalent in the public eye. Here in Kingston, local organisations are taking the initiative to become part of the solution to a crippling problem

BY TANIA HAAS

POVERTY IS AN ISSUE EASY TO ignore. Homelessness, often a consequence of poverty, is just as easy to ignore, or brush aside, or walk by without recognition or second thought. Remaining ignorant about those who deal with homelessness everyday allows many of us to casually disregard the issue as one not needed to be discussed.

Canada as a nation can no longer ignore homelessness, so how can you?

Yesterday, Toronto City Council held a summit dealing with homelessness, which has been labelled by some as a "national disaster," and is certainly no longer solely a "Toronto" issue. On Tuesday, Jean Chrétien appointed Labour Minister Claudette Bradshaw as the first minister ever responsible for fighting homelessness. Municipal and federal governments are finally taking steps to deal with a problem that has increased significantly over the years.

HOMELESSNESS is an issue of increasing importance here in Kingston. Beyond Princess Street and the "student ghetto," there is a community that deals with poverty and its consequences every day. Outside of our student bubble, Kingston, like many other cities across Canada, is a city burdened with an escalating number of people struggling to survive financially. Food bank use in Kingston has not declined since 1995. Many of the clients who use the local food bank receive general welfare, and rely on less than $50 for the entire month. The Kay Healey and Kingston Frontenac Housing — both low income housing structures — have more than a thousand and 901 people on their waiting lists respectively, with an approximate wait of two to five years.

When an issue such as homelessness challenges a community, adversity is sure to follow. Who is to blame? What are society's responsibilities, and where are the limitations? Mental illness, addiction, alcoholism, poor education and unemployment are all factors contributing to poverty — factors considered to be the government's responsibility. So what can students do? Or, more importantly, what is being done?

The Kingston Youth Shelter Project offers food and shelter for homeless youth under 25.

Many student groups at Queen's and local Kingston organisations are not ignoring the increase of homelessness, and have taken the initiative to confront the increasing need for community support, creating hope for many organisations in the Kingston community.

THE RYANDALE HOUSE for the Homeless is a small three-bedroom house located about a 20 minute walk from Princess Street. It is one of five emergency shelters in Kingston, providing a place of food and real beds for children, youth, men and women. It is the only shelter which provides emergency shelter for families.

Other shelters include the Salvation Army and the Dawn House for women. Although partially supported by the United Way, Ryandale relies heavily on 20 loyal volunteers and community support, whether financial or simple acts of kindness. Dave, a first-timer at Ryandale, describes the house which allows visitors to stay for a maximum of three nights, as "a place to let your mind off of your troubles — inspirational."

All rooms hold as many beds as possible. For example, one room for adult males, a 12' X 12' room, has three beds tightly pressed against the walls. Currently there are only seven beds and one cot distributed amongst the three bedrooms.

THE INCREASING PROBLEM of poverty in Kingston is what keeps Ryandale open. Michelle Dickinson, the House Director, accepts any assistance she can get. "It's cramped, crooked and expensive," she said in reference to the Ryandale House.

For its appreciative residents, it is a short escape from the reality of homelessness. A "growing concern" means there is an increase in need for shelters like Ryandale, who are struggling to pay rent while maintaining a high quality of care.

Both the Alma Mater Society's Social Issues Commission and Queen's Medical Outreach are attempting to promote awareness and raise funds for Ryandale House. Under the leadership of Lauren Sukerman, the most recent fundraising endeavour has become an inter-departmental project with the AMS and Physical Plant Services. Put a roof over their heads and hope in their hearts is a project where a single shingle can be purchased by students or departments from $2 to $5. The goal is to provide Ryandale with a secure roof and an extra $1,400.

Sukerman believes in student involvement. "This is our community, and Queen's has the potential to contribute many resources," she said.

In addition to the shingle program, Queen's Medical Outreach has taken an interest in the local community, helping to promote awareness and education of homelessness last week at the Kingston Centre.

Queen's Project on International Development (QPID), which usually operates with an international focus, has also concentrated a lot of their efforts on our immediate societal challenges right here in Kingston.

The Kingston Youth Shelter Project, created by a group of concerned Kingston citizens and Kingston's homeless youth, is now assisted by QPID through fundraising. The committee of eight recognises the great need in our community for student involvement. Through many fundraising projects such as Kiss Your Stuff Goodbye,

"CRAMPED, CROOKED" — Ryandale House for the Homeless is a three-bedroom house with seven beds and one cot distributed amongst the three bedrooms.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Put a roof over their heads and hope in their hearts. Students and faculty can purchase shingles for this roofless dwelling from $2 to $5 with proceeds directed toward Ryandale House for the Homeless.

PHOTO COURTESY OF LAUREN SUKERMAN

Hey Queen's Grad, say good-bye to student life, and hello to the Queen's Alumni Association...

Bon Voyage Reception

Tuesday, April 6, 1999
2:00 p.m. - 4:00 p.m.
Grant Hall

When you graduate you'll automatically become a member of the Queen's Alumni Association.

Drop by this informal reception for some free food, door prizes and to find out what the Queen's Alumni Association is all about. Watch for your invitation in the mail!

Queen's University
Alumni Association

This event is sponsored by the Alumni Association and organized by the Student Team on Alumni Relations (STAR)

du Maurier
ARTS

Supporting 215 cultural organizations across Canada during the 1998-99 season

Ryandale House for the Homeless: averages per month

Residents	33	Females	6
Average Stay	3.87 days	Children	3
Longest Stay	11 days	Families	3
Males	24	Youth	0

Homeless, continued from page 17

money, furniture and clothing has been collected to help with the development and maintenance of the new Kingston shelter, which is trying to meet the needs of the increasing number of youth homeless. According to a 1998 study by the Social Planning Council, there are an estimated 80 homeless youth in Kingston and 800 more who occasionally require accommodation.

The Kay Healey and Kingston Frontenac Housing have more than a thousand and 901 people on their waiting lists respectively.

The Kingston Youth Shelter project passed a question on the recent AMS spring referendum, establishing an opt-outable student fee of 85 cents. Vogue '99, Queen's Annual Fashion Show, which took place on Wednesday at Stages, directed all proceeds to the Youth Shelter Project.

THOUGH QUEEN'S IS certainly striving to improve the current problem of homelessness in Kingston, this is a problem that is not drifting away.

It is not a seasonal phenomena either. Unlike what some people think, the consequences of being without a home do not decrease in the summer as it is not a weather related condition. Just as many people die in the summer from dehydration or addictions as those who die in the winter.

More needs to be done and it requires the work of not only our government to provide the proper infrastructure, but also the awareness of its citizens that homelessness is way out of proportion.

If you want to be a part of the solution, contact one of the following organisations through which you can help out with cash donations, furniture or by volunteering.

- QPID: 533-6845 (Amy Lister)
- AMS Social Issues Commission: 533-6000 ext. 74816 (Lauren Sukerman)
- Ryandale House for the Homeless: 548-8466 (Michelle Dickinson)

The LUMPY world of genital warts

UNDERSTANDING SEXUAL HEALTH

BY ANNASTASIA PALUBISKI

THE FIRST TIME that I ever saw a photograph of untreated venereal warts I immediately covered my eyes. When I gained the courage to look again it took me a while to figure out that I was actually looking at someone's genitals. The only things visible in that photograph were several large, grey, bumpy warts! So, imagine my horror when I discover that HPV, the virus that causes venereal warts, is estimated to be one of the most common in the world. On campus, Queen's Student Health figures that HPV is one of the top three diagnosed sexually transmitted infections; however, this is a guess as it is not often reported. Knowing this I began to ask myself:

How can I protect myself against HPV?

First of all it is important not to have sex while warts are present. It greatly increases the chance of transmission and can be painful. Sex can be resumed once the warts are treated, but remember, once you have HPV the virus never leaves your body. This means that transmission does not only occur through contact with a wart, but also through intimate contact with any part of the body that may contain the virus. Therefore, one should always use protection when engaging in any form of sexual activity.

Condoms will reduce the chance of transmission, but they do not offer protection for the area around the penis or around the vaginal opening that may come into contact with your partner during intercourse. Women may use the female condom for more protection.

On campus, Queen's Student Health figures that HPV is one of the top three diagnosed sexually transmitted infections

As well, the virus can be spread orally; thus, it is important to use a barrier method such as a dental dam, or a condom while performing oral sex. The most important thing is to communicate with your partner about the possible risks and how you plan to have safer sex.

How would I know if I had it?

Venereal warts show up as small lumps that are shaped like cauliflower. Because they can occur on both the external and internal genitalia, they may be hard to spot. Currently, the only viable clinical method for diagnosing HPV is through physical examination by a doctor, as warts can be extremely difficult to see. To help, a doctor can apply a vinegar solution that causes them to turn white.

As well, HPV is a risk factor in the development of cervical cancer. Many women may discover they have HPV when an abnormal Pap smear for cancer of the cervix shows signs that the virus is present.

How are they treated? The most common method is an ointment called Podophyllin that is applied directly to the wart. A physician should inform you on how to use Podophyllin properly because it can cause painful burns if left on too long or applied to non-affected areas. More serious methods include freezing with liquid nitrogen or burning with electrocautery (Ouch!).

Why is this infection so common?

HPV has an incubation time of anywhere from three weeks to six months. During that time an infected person will not display any symptoms, but remains capable of transmitting the virus. Some people will never show symptoms. Although there is no cure for HPV, there are treatments, and through communication and safer sex it can be controlled.

If you have any questions about HPV or any other sexually transmitted infections please contact the Sexual Health Resource Center at 533-2959. Or if you're curious to see some pictures of venereal warts come visit us in the Grey House.

YOUR SPRING BREAK!

ROOTS KINGSTON

Save 10-40% off selected items of Spring Merchandise

Modern Straight Leg Jean

Regular $69.95 NOW $34.99

Sweats, Shoes, Shirts, Shorts, Bags, Boots, Outerwear, Pants, Hats & everything else!

229 Princess Street - 546 - 7668 - Open Sundays

LAURIER BUSINESS & ECONOMICS THE LAURIER ADVANTAGE

Business Education for People Working in the Real World

A NEW BEGINNING

Laurier's new Brantford Campus will offer a One-Year Diploma in Business Administration.

Discover what Laurier's Nationally Recognized School of Business and Economics can offer you...

The Diploma in Business Administration Program is designed to meet the needs of people with non-business undergraduate degrees, who wish to enhance their skills in business administration. The program can be completed in two terms of full-time study.

For More Information:
Phone: (519) 884-0710 ext. 2572
E-mail: mtamblyn@mach2.wlu.ca

Subject to final University approvals and sufficient enrollment

Queen's = degree +
volunteer opportunities,
athletics, performing arts,
clubs, government, people, service jobs, Queen's spirit, fun, ... more ...

Get involved.

Positions are still open in Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Internal Affairs, Municipal Affairs and Social Issues. Visit the AMS today.

SPORTS & FITNESS

FAST START
Canadian race car driver Greg Moore got off on the right foot in the opening race of the CART season, winning the pole position and the race in Homestead, Florida. The 23 year-old in his fourth year on the circuit was able to hold off CART veteran and living legend Michael Andretti over the final laps of the race to earn the victory. Moore is now in the driver's seat to win the CART crown left vacant by two-time champion Alex Zanardi's move to Formula 1.

HOME COOKING
The seventh-seeded St. Mary's Huskies took the CIAU national basketball championships in Halifax by storm, defeating the top-ranked Alberta Golden Bears in overtime to win the crown. The underdog Huskies were forced to beat second-seeded Western, as well as sixth-seeded and highly touted McMaster to get a chance at Alberta, and when they did they took full advantage. In the finals, St. Mary's was spurred on by a large partisan crowd and by the play of 6'8" forward Cory Jones, who had 26 points, 13 rebounds, three blocks and two huge foul shouts with 4.8 seconds to play. As the seconds ticked away, the large home crowd flooded the floor in celebration of the unlikely championship, the first for St. Mary's in 20 years.

UPSET SPECIAL
The most dominant college basketball team since the UCLA dynasty of the sixties and seventies has seen their run for a fourth consecutive college basketball crown cut short. The University of Tennessee Lady Volunteers were defeated in the regional finals by an upstart Duke squad. The Lady Vols, who entered the tournament as the second ranked team in the land, had lost two games during the season and weren't the same invincible team it had been in the past. The third-seeded Blue Devils will be joined in their first ever final four by fellow three seed Georgia and top-seeded squads Purdue and Louisiana Tech, none of whom have won a title. With Tennessee not being able to find their way to San Jose, a dynasty has died a premature death.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...
•Elvis Stojko would stay on his feet for an entire routine.
•Detroit Red Wings and Little Caesars owner Mike Ilitch would sell enough pizza to pay his players.
•Raptor phenom Vince Carter and cousin Tracy McGrady would have one more ball-playing relative.

Leaping to new heights

PROFILE

By ROBERT MACNEIL

On March 15, the Queen's Track and Field team closed out its successful 1998-99 season at the CIAUs at McGill. The star of the team was second-year high jumper Nimrod Major, who won a silver medal and was named an all-Canadian.

Major, a resident of Courtice, Ontario, is currently a life sciences major, but is planning to switch to engineering for his third year. He has been high jumping for 15 years now and is also a member of the Queen's fencing team. He was heavily recruited out of high school by the University of Toronto, but chose to attend Queen's instead.

As a rookie last year, Major jumped 2.10m in his first university attempt, which is only 1 cm off the Queen's record. He was having a promising season, and was nominated for the Alfie Pierce Trophy, given to top rookie in all Queen's athletics, but was injured just before the OUA championships.

Nimrod Major

At the start of this season, Coach Melody Torcolacci took charge of the high jumpers and relied heavily on Major to help instruct them.

Torcolacci said that Major "provided invaluable assistance" in developing the skills of the other high jumpers. She praised Major as "a great guy, a good team guy and a very deserving Athlete of the Week."

In turn, Major said that "[Torcolacci] is an excellent coach, who picks things up really fast."

In helping his coach, one problem Major had was that he found it difficult to pick up new things that his teammates were doing in their techniques. Luckily for Major, he was able to get tips from his father when he returned home. His father was a high jumper for the Hungarian team at both the 1972 and 1976 Olympics.

Major also has his sights on an Olympic performance. While he is not prepared to enter the 2000 Games, if the right training opportunities present themselves, he may be on Canada's team for 2004.

Major wished to praise the Track and Field team for a strong 1998-99 season. "The team does better and better every year, we are growing all the time with the coaches. With each year you spend here, you get progressively better."

Grey night for men's rugby

THE LAST WORD

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The Ambassador Hotel was abuzz with excitement, the student-athletes were buzzing with good 'spirits' and the 63rd Colour Night was a rousing success — but only for those in attendance.

This year's Colour Night, the Queen's varsity athletics version of the Academy Awards, featured a travesty even greater than Life is Beautiful not winning best picture — the men's rugby team was not even invited.

The rugby team, which has been crowned OUA champions seven times this decade, was not on the guest list because of an incident that occurred following the last game of the season (Queen's Journal Friday, December 4). En route home from their playoff loss to Guelph, a number of alcoholic beverages were consumed on the team bus, which is stated as inappropriate conduct in the policy section of the Guidelines on Conduct of Division of Athletics and Recreation. News of this transgression travelled quickly and Director of Athletics John McFarlane and his trusty sidekick Janean Sergeant, who is head of interuniversity sports, cast their decision — the rugby team was banned from Colour Night and faced two years probation.

This harsh ruling was then passed through the University Council of Athletics, thus making the punishment official.

Team captain Emmett Connolly attempted to reason with the powers that be, offering alternative (and more productive) penalties such as speaking to high school students about the dangers of drinking and driving, but his pleas fell on deaf ears.

Nobody could question that the rugby team's actions were clearly a violation of the rules that govern Queen's athletics. Those guidelines are printed in black and white. What isn't so clearly delineated is what punishment fits the crime. Those who ruled on this decision did not follow precedent, they set it.

While members of the rugby team were contrite about their actions, the administration and those who sit on the UCA (many of whom are students) were vindictive in their unwillingness to

The Canadian university champion tennis team enjoys a much deserved rest between matches. PHOTO COURTESY OF TENNIS TEAM

Queen's wins crown Women's tennis wins Canadian championship

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The OUA champion Queen's women's tennis team headed west for an old fashioned shoot-out last weekend against the Western Canadian Champion University of British Columbia Thunderbirds, and when the dust settled, the Gaels were the only ones left standing.

Queen's took control of the Canadian Women's Tennis Challenge by winning four of six singles matches and followed that up by claiming all three doubles matches, thus winning the title by a convincing 7-2 margin.

The Gaels were led by Kingston native Paula Myslivecek, the OUA singles and doubles champion, who won both her singles and doubles matches over the weekend. These wins increased her impressive career winning streak to 54 consecutive singles and doubles matches. Other key contributors to this Canadian title were: Halifax native Melanee Short, Kingstonian Irene Vasa, Heather MacDonnell who hails from Toronto, Burlington native Amy White and Andrea Leimanis, a Montreal native.

Head Coach John McFarlane was obviously very happy with the performance of the team this past weekend and all season. "The team played very consistently all year," said the proud coach. "As a team, Queen's never lost a doubles match in exhibition, OUA League or play-off competition all year. [This] is the best record in my 20 years of coaching Queen's tennis teams."

While the final score was lopsided, the individual matches were much closer. "The competition was really good," said McFarlane. "A lot of the matches went to the third set, but we were able to win the close ones."

The Canadian women's tennis championship was the first

Please see Event on page 26

Please see Rugby on page 26

And down the stretch they come... The trade deadline has passed and teams are preparing to make a run

By ROBERT MACNEIL

As I rolled out of the sack on Tuesday afternoon, I suddenly remembered that the NHL's trade deadline had expired at 3 p.m. EST. By 3:15 p.m., I had found out that 30 deals had been made involving 21 players. The clear winner was the Detroit Red Wings who appear set to keep Lord Stanley's mug into the next century.

The Wings made four separate deals yesterday which increased their chances considerably. They traded a no-name player and two first-round draft picks to the Blackhawks for veteran bruising defenceman Chris Chelios, whom the Flyers desperately covered. Chelios has one Stanley Cup ring and has won the Norris Trophy as the league's best defenceman twice.

The Wings also struck a deal with Tampa Bay for Kelvington, Saskatchewan's favourite son Wendell Clark and goalie Bill Ranford. A veteran of 14 NHL campaigns, Clark is having another strong season with 28 goals so far (including three hat tricks). Ranford is in the midst of a dismal 3-18-3 season with the Lightning, but with their mediocre 'talent', the statistics are in no way indicative of his play. In their final deal of the day, the Wings acquired the injured Ulf Samuelsson from the Rangers. While he is out from two weeks with a broken foot, Samuelsson will be back in time for the playoffs.

The Maple Leafs decided that they will basically stick with their current roster as they head into the playoffs. They did re-acquire Yanic Perreault from the Los Angeles Kings for a minor league player. Perreault became a necessity because Alyn McCauley and Igor Korolev are both out with injuries. The Leafs did not make stronger attempts to improve their squad because they did not want to trade away their young talent.

Not surprisingly, the Philadelphia

Flyers made several moves. This team has been treating the entire 1998-99 season as a trade deadline. On Tuesday, the Flyers added defenceman Steve Duchesne from the Kings and Craig Berube from Washington. On Saturday, the Flyers traded for Mikael Andersson and Sandy McCarthy and also acquired Mark Recchi from the Canadians earlier this month. GM Bob Clarke has obviously not heard of the words 'team chemistry.' He has constantly changed the team's roster from week to week and should be considered the Flyers' greatest weakness, not the players or Head Coach Roger Neilson.

The Ottawa Senators made only a minor change on Tuesday, acquiring Nelson Emerson from Chicago in exchange for Chris Murray, their toughest player. Clarke could probably learn a lot from Senators GM Rick Oudley in not messing with a good thing. While Ottawa is sticking to its guns as they continue to cruise at the top of the Eastern Conference, the Montreal Canadiens continue to bail water from their sinking ship. This time they tossed captain Vincent Damphousse overboard in exchange for draft picks and future considerations from San Jose. It's been a sad year for the organization, especially since Molson has considered selling the team. Who would have thought in training camp that the Leafs would be closing in on 90 points, while the Habs would be conducting a firesale.

The trading deadline had a little bit of everything, and it appears that teams have never been more even entering the playoffs than this year's collection. While the Wings have every reason to be more confident, it looks like several upsets could be in the making as parity among NHL teams is at an all-time high. Unless you're a Habs fan, then it's time to call the radio stations and ask for the heads of this year's front office.

'Disc'ussing the issue

To print...

I'm soooo open! And so the season begins. Hundreds of men and women suddenly gather together and begin sprinting up and down a field, changing directions sharply, diving fully horizontally to the ground. During a tournament, eight hour-long games are played in the blistering sun, and sometimes in the bitter cold. Some would say this is a game where elite athletes come together to challenge their minds and bodies, and some would say this is a game for hippies who could never compete at a higher level in a 'real' sport.

Ultimate has many different levels and dimensions, from pick-up on a sunny Sunday afternoon to University Nationals to world-class tournaments

This is Ultimate Frisbee. The name sounds frivolous, perhaps a little pompous, but certainly intriguing to those who have heard the name spoken, or seen the discs flying. Seven people, men, women or both, line up on both endlines facing each other. The signal is given, and the disc (frisbee) is thrown from one side towards the opposite end of the field. One team lines up down the middle of the field and makes cuts (sharp, hard sprints) towards either sideline. The disc is thrown, and the other team tries to prevent it from being caught. This defence is non-contact, and fouls are called by individuals on the field — there are no referees in this game.

More than 200 people participate in this sport competitively at Queen's. There are four competitive teams with about 14 members on each squad, and open tournaments always bring out more. People are simply flocking to play. From track stars to rugby and field hockey players, athletes have come to explore this fascinating sport. And they have been satisfied.

Ultimate Frisbee is unbelievably physically demanding (unbelievable until you've played it, that is). It requires field-long sprints, quick accelerations, and a phenomenal level of endurance. You need to run and run, and then when you think your body is absolutely exhausted, somewhere you find some extra little reserve, and you go horizontal for that disc that seemed just 'out of reach.' You then stand up victorious, make a throw, and run some more.

As for the 'hippies', well, they're there. And they're part of the great spirit that makes the game of ultimate unique. This is a sport where teams cheer each other at the end of every bout striving to show that spirit is just as important, if not more important than the game itself. Just like every other sport, Ultimate has many different levels and dimensions, from pick-up on a sunny Sunday afternoon to University Nationals to world-class tournaments. Each has its own feel and each is a part of this unique sport. Ultimate Frisbee is truly a sport unto its own. Huck the disc baby, just huck it.

Alison Lemay plays on the ultimate competitive team and can really huck it.

...or not to print

I have a headache. It is not the lasting effects of the regular Thursday night hangover, it is due to the incessant badgering of the ultimate team about their lack of coverage in The Queen's Journal. I am taking this opportunity to stop the harassment and answer their unending questions of why you can't read about them in the Sports and Fitness section.

Firstly, it is important to remember the full name of this increasingly popular pastime — Ultimate Frisbee. That is right, despite concerted attempts to abandon the game's roots, including changing the name of the essential gaming instrument to disc, it is still that very same frisbee.

The influence, or more specifically, dominance of Canada's favourite barley based beverage in the ultimate community is reminiscent of softball or bowling.

A frisbee is the ultimate barbeque toy on a sunny, wind free day. When you have a picnic on the beach, never leave the old fluorescent or glow in the dark projectile behind. When you want to turn Buster the flying dog into a competitive canine, you can always use the local pizza joint's complimentary frisbee to teach man's best friend how to become a true show dog.

While these are all noble uses of a 'disc', it is not to be taken seriously as the focus of a competitive endeavour looking for recognition in mainstream sports media. A large contingent of talented frisbee catching dogs made an appearance at the Corel Centre in Ottawa, but no mention of these admirable athletes made the sports pages of any newspaper.

Ultimate also remains absent from these pages because of its party atmosphere. No matter how important the game, it just seems to be more of a prelude to drinking than a serious competition of athletic prowess. The influence, or more specifically, the dominance, of Canada's favourite barley based beverage in the ultimate community is reminiscent of softball or bowling, both entertaining endeavours, but not sports page material.

The cries from the ultimate lovers can already be heard, "Look at the athleticism that the game requires, it is more physically exerting than baseball or volleyball," they scream. Clearly the amount of sweat secreted in a game is not the only measure of a sport. Baseball and volleyball involve skills that are impossible to measure without having attempted to hit a tough curveball or return a top spinning jump serve. That said, one of the most physically demanding activities that I have ever come across (though never participated in) is ballet, and show me a sports rag that covers Swan Lake and I will gladly eat my notebook.

I will grant one thing, I love to play the game. I play it on hot summer days at a local park before diving into the cool river, but nobody really keeps score. Ultimate frisbee is meant to be played by fun loving amateurs in public parks, it not meant to appear on the sports pages of this newspaper.

Adam Kaminsky is just jealous because he can only huck the 'disc' 20 feet.

"Thank you for using our student-run services in 1998-99. It's been a great year."

—AMS Service Staff & Management

Alfie's Pub • Publishing & Copy Centre • Queen's Journal • UBS Exchange • Queen's Pub
Tricolour Yearbook • Hoods & Gowns • AMS Skylight Lounge • Studio Q • Walkhome Service Queen's Entertainment Agency • Who's Where and What's Next • Queen's Student Constables

Out late at night?

Don't want to walk alone?

Looking for a smile to brighten your evening?

Call Walkhome.

We've already walked over 5,000 people this year.

That's more than 10,000 km.

So we think we can help.

Walkhome 533-2662
or you can still call our old number at 545-2662

NO EXPERIENCE?

NO PROBLEM!

The Journal still needs applicants for Production Manager, Supplements Editor, Advertising Manager, Ads Designers, Sales reps and Systems Manager.

Call 533-2800 and ask for Sarah or Stefan for more information. Applications are available at The Journal, 272 Earl St. and are due on Tuesday, March 30 by 4 p.m.

TORONTO
$23
OTTAWA
$18
MONTREAL
$25
MISSISSAUGA
$27
OAKVILLE
$27
BURLINGTON
$30
HAMILTON
$30

THINKING ABOUT GOING HOME FOR EASTER
TAKE THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS

exchange
Cdn. Paper Texts Cdn. Books & Staff

Tickets and Schedule available at UBS
Departures Thursday, April 1. All Runs Return April 4.
9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JQUC • 533 2120

A long strange trip

The trek to St. Petes has ended for the lucky teams.

By all accounts, the National Championship is Duke's to lose. For all of the upsets which have characterized this year's NCAA Tournament, when the lights come up on the stage in St. Petersburg tomorrow night, the cream will once again have risen to the top, with three top seeds making the trip, and a talented Ohio State squad the only interloper. And even among this group, Duke has unquestionably been the most dominant team since the 1991 UNLV team which first tasted defeat in the national semi-finals (and, according to their wizened, Yoda-like Head Coach Jerry Tarkanian, would have fallen prey to the depth of this year's edition of Blue Devils). However, let's not start sizing the Blue Devils for rings quite yet.

While Duke does have an outstanding record throughout the 1990s, and may well be considered the team of the decade, few remember that their attendance at this year's Final Four breaks a five year absence, dating back to their loss to Arkansas in the 1994 final. Upperclassmen such as Trajan Langdon have seen the mighty Blue Devils struggle, and simply don't have the final four experience that the teams of Danny Ferry and Christian Laettner were able to call upon. Don't misinterpret this comment; if anyone benefits from experience this weekend, it will be Duke, given the crucible that the ACC has represented for the past decade, coupled with the fact that of the four coaches in the Final Four, Mike Krzyzewski is the only one who has been here before as a head coach.

Two things must happen for Duke to lose to Michigan State on Saturday. First, MSU must replicate their effort of December 2. That day the Spartans suffered a 73-67 loss to Duke (which wasn't as close as the score would have you believe) they battered Duke on the boards, outrebounding them 41-25 in a performance which saw Duke centre Elton Brand banished to the bench for the next two games. The second thing that must happen is that Mateen Cleaves must shoot the ball well. He was only able to produce nine points in the December game, shooting 3-17 from the field. The irresistible force vs. immovable object storyline will also come into play in this game, with Michigan State holding tournament opponents to 38.5 shooting percentage from the floor, facing a Duke offence which, over the course of the year has averaged 93 points per game.

The story of this Final Four will be guard play. One team has the luxury of allowing their emerging guard dominance to complement their frontcourt prowess (Duke), while Michigan State, Ohio State and Connecticut are all accurately characterized as backcourt-heavy. The matchups between backcourts composed of Scoopic Penn and Michael Redd (OSU), William Avery and Langdon, Khalid El-Amin and Richard Hamilton (Connecticut) and Cleaves and whomever else chooses to step up, will determine who cuts down the nets on Monday night, with apologies to Elton Brand fans. Perhaps the most compelling potential individual matchup of the tournament is the prospect of sophomore William Avery's explosive offence being challenged by the smothering senior defence of high-school teammate Ricky Moore of Connecticut.

However, when all is said and done, this is a Final Four about history. Ohio State is making a return trip for the first time since 1968, a year which finally saw the end of a run which began in 1962 with John Havlicek, Jerry Lucas and a second-teamer from Orrville, Ohio by the name of Bobby Knight. Connecticut ends a streak of being the most-invited NCAA tournament team without advancing to the Final Four (21 years) with their first trip. Michigan State is back for the first time since an exuberant sophomore named Earvin Johnson led a defeat of Larry Bird's Sycamores of Indiana State, in a game which ushered in the modern, television era of the Final Four. And finally, Duke is back, to cap off the nineties as the first team since 1983, and the second in history to advance to the Final Four in the same year as their women's team (Georgia was the first).

Even so, the subplots make it more interesting to write about, but it comes down to the basketball and, have no doubt about it, this weekend will be a treat from St. Pete. In the first game Saturday, it would seem that UConn has the horses to pull away from a surprising Ohio State team. The Buckeyes were 32-2 last season, but to date this year have won 27 times, a Lazarus act orchestrated by their coach Jim O'Brien, to date best known for the run that he and his alma mater Boston College made through top-ranked North Carolina and Indiana in the 1993 tournament. Unfortunately for Ohio State, O'Brien brings with him a record of futility against Connecticut, losing his last 18 games at BC head to head against Jim Calhoun of UConn. Save an unbelievable performance by the Ohio State backcourt, this streak runs to 19. Duke/Michigan State does have the potential for an upset, given the depth of Michigan State. They bring their leading scorer off the bench in a sixth-man role and someone new always seems to step up to help Cleaves, who will not shoot 3-17 this time around. Look for Michigan State and UConn in the final on Monday night, with the Huskies taking home the trophy. It would only be fitting to see perennially heartbroken UConn bring joy to the town of Storrs, Connecticut in this, the first season in which they would be considered to be upset winners.

Ian Brisbin was captain of the Queen's basketball team but now just talks about it

Intramural corner

Winter Results as of March 24, 1999

BEWIC CHAMPIONS:

Curling — Sci '02
Innertube Water Polo Rec — Half a Schlitz
Innertube Water Polo Comp — Water Lilies
Rec Volleyball — Chem Eng Grads
Intermediate Volleyball — Death on the Beach

BEWS Champions:

Badminton — Edward Y Yun
Ball Hockey — Devastation
Curling — House
Ice Hockey Tournament — Iceholes
Ice Hockey ZLeague — Electrical
Squash — Ryan Leesui
Soccer Magic — 99 Gunners
Volleyball Open — Keep 6

WIC CHAMPIONS:

Badminton — Sarah Stuart
Ice Hockey Tournament — Comm/Ed
Ice Hockey League — PHE
Jogathan — Law
Skateathon — Eng 1
Soccer Magic — PHE
Swimathon — ConEd
Volleyball Open — Engineering B

Check The Journal next week for more winter Intramural results. Queen's Intramurals is looking forward to seeing all winners and participants at the Intramural Banquet this Tuesday in the Singing Frog @ AJ's. The banquet gets underway at 6:30 p.m. and tickets are available at the PEC wickets for $3 in advance. For more information on this event, please call the Intramural Hotline at 533-6000 ext. 75036.

Nominations for The Sutherland Prize

The Sutherland Prize will be presented annually to a graduating and self-defined student of colour who has shown leadership and initiative at Queen's, most specifically in the area of encouraging and fostering diversity on campus.

The winner of the Sutherland prize will receive an award from the Society at Convocation and will have his/her name inscribed on a permanent wall plaque in the Robert Sutherland Reading Room

Nominations are available at the AMS front desk and are due Friday April 9th by 5:00pm

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
AMS
STUDENT GOVERNMENT

It's cold out there!
Stay warm with our huge
OUTERWEAR SALE
20% -50%
OFF everything

TRAILHEAD

237 PRINCESS STREET
KINGSTON, ONTARIO K7L 1B3
PH: (613) 546-4757 FAX: (613) 546-5243
WEBSITE: <http://www.TrailHeadCnd.com>
MAILBOX: Kingston@TrailHeadCnd.com

Rugby loses out

Continued from page 21
reason.

For the graduating players this was their last opportunity to participate in a truly great Queen's event; instead they donned their suits and had their own 'banquet' at a local bar.

The only thing that kept McFarlane and Sergeant from allowing the fourth-year players to attend their final Colour Night, while upholding the ban on underclassmen, was a lack of courage. Once their original decision was made, the administration did not have the guts to do what was right, so they maintained what was wrong.

This penalty was not about justice, it was about sending a message to the other athletes that like to savour a cold beer while travelling home from a road game. However, this message may have fallen on deaf ears. Rugby Head Coach Al Ferguson estimated that 80 per cent of Queen's teams involve themselves in this illicit activity (drinking on the buses) and to believe that the insensitivity shown by this ruling will change that, I think the athletic administration has another thing coming.

While McFarlane and Sergeant enjoyed another in their long line of athletic banquets, some athletes from the most storied sport in Queen's history missed their final opportunity to attend Colour Night. If that is considered justice at Queen's, I think that Kenneth Starr would fit right in.

After learning of the ruling, coach Ferguson likened the penalty to getting a speeding ticket on the 401, but that was understating the situation: This punishment is similar to having your car impounded for not wearing a seat belt.

As Colour Night progressed, muffled chants of "Where's rugby?" began to fill the air. While the event was well organized and a great opportunity to honour the student-athletes, I ended the night with the very same question.

Triathlon team celebrates another impressive victory with an old fashioned pose down. PHOTO COURTESY OF TRIATHLON TEAM

Triathletes win series

By ADAM KAMINSKY

The Queen's Competitive Triathlon Club out-ran, out-biked and out-swam its competition this season, winning the five event University Multisport series.

The squad needed a spectacular showing at the this weekend's race at Trent University, the last of the season, and the team was up to the task. Queen's finished first in two categories, while taking home third place in another category. Paced by Adam Campbell's victory in the rookie men's division and a relay first place, Queen's was able to edge out Western and defending champion RMC in the overall standings.

This is the first time since the inception of the multisport series in 1992 that Queen's was able to win the overall title. Last season the club finished in third place, although they led the standings heading into the final race of the season. A snow storm cancelled the bike leg of that competition, the strong point for Queen's, and thus ended their championship dreams.

Event could lead to true nationals

Continued from page 21

series of its kind and it could have laid the groundwork for future inter-university tennis competitions on the national level.

"It could be a prelude to a full CIAU sport or it could be a prelude to a different kind of CIAU championship," said coach McFarlane, who is also the chair of athletics and recreation. "Sports like rugby and rowing have a CIAU invitation to decide their champion so that could be a different way to go."

McFarlane also felt that this trailblazing competition was something that could not only create national opportunities for tennis, but the success could lead to cross-Canada competition in other sports.

"The team played very consistently all year."

— Coach John McFarlane

"It has some interesting possibilities for more than tennis, but other sports such as badminton, squash, synchronized swimming and any number of other sports," said McFarlane.

"It provides an alternative method to offer people from around the country [the opportunity] to compete against one another."

If women's tennis does attain CIAU status, the performance this past weekend of the Queen's squad showed that they will be ready, willing and able to compete.

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis Recommended by Physicians.

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

LSAT MCAT GMAT
www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.

LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
MCAT - Start in June, July, August
GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

Teach English Overseas

ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses

- Intensive 36-hour and 42-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)
- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Comprehensive teaching materials
- Teaching practice included
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
- Formal certificate given upon course completion
- Cost: $295 (36-hr course) / $445 (42-hr course)

For More Information Call Oxford Seminars: 544-9389 / 1-800-249-4717

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Beaming with talent uv radiates with creativity

MAGAZINE PREVIEW

By SARAH CROSBIE

I expected it to be a black cover. I don't why, but I did. When I got my copy of ultraviolet, it was a stark white. I mean white. Adorning the cover are eight anonymous faces set against vibrant, deep colours — and that's it.

The cover is plain and simple, and I don't know what type of paper the jacket of the magazine is made of, but I don't like it. Because the magazine jacket almost shimmers, you want to touch it, and when you do, you realize that it produces the same sensation as running your fingernails down a chalkboard or moving around styrofoam. It makes you cringe.

But — the content of uv is an entirely different story. The written pieces and artwork in this magazine are heartwarming, thought-provoking and unpretentious; they are serious, silly and sensuous. One of the greatest features of ultraviolet is that it appreciates the beauty and function of white space, and, in the case of this particular magazine, black space. None of the stories or artwork are stuffed into rectangular allocations, attempting to fit as much creativity as possible into the forty page publication.

ultraviolet allows blank space to become a part of the work, highlighting the written and visual art, rather than distracting from it.

The pieces in the magazine range from 'japanimation' cartoons to short stories to free verse. Sherwin Tjia's "what I did after my housemate was killed and before his parents had time to fly to montreal" is a realistic free verse which describes a friend finding insignificant items that were to be garbage, that come to be treasures. This poem is a thought process and I immediately began to think about what

Please see uv on page 29

The battle resumes Part II of Battle of the Bands a hit

CONCERT REVIEW

By DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

Note: To ensure a fairness in the judging of the competition, the Queen's Entertainment Agency has decided that band selection will be switched back to the traditional method of selecting the top two bands to advance to the final round, instead of the overall top four.

I've just experienced the second round of the Queen's Entertainment Agency's annual Battle of the Bands and I still can't get over the fact that every talented musician there probably had more musical gumption at the age of three than I presently have, or ever will have. Of course, that is unless the remnants of Milli Vanilli can manage to start up their own talent agency.

The Loose Lips whose calm coolness, ease with the crowd, and each other, made their performance an engaging and synergistic experience.

The first band to put any musical aspirations I might have had into a more realistic perspective was a six person ensemble known as Ibiza. With pumping synthetic drumbeats of electronica bleeding alternately into a lunchbox mix of hip hop and rock elements, I could easily recognize the potential of this fledgling band.

The group's music possessed a dancing, ravish quality that Letting Loose: Matt Barber and The Loose Lips (above) along with Waxing Gibbus advanced to the finals. The Prototype and Reno's Hitmen will also join the company next Wednesday.

gelled well with vocalist Lilian Kim's emotional, slow, waving vocals. It was interesting to see the manner in which the band managed to integrate instances of calculated abruptness of guitar and drumbeats into their music, and the lilting peaks and ebbs of the high energy and later drowsily moody music into a somewhat coherent and promising package.

[Waxing Gibbus] presented a tightly-knit, well-polished performance of original and unique music.

Immediately following Ibiza was the four person group, The Loose Lips whose calm coolness, ease with the crowd, and each other, made their performance an engaging and synergistic experience.

Lips opened with a slow, seeping song about warm coffee on a Saturday morning, and serenely led into the rest of their set. The band proceeded to showcase the abilities of Andrew Shaver on his tiny Casio keyboard, Mike Pearson rhythmically drumming on his "bizarre African drum," the Djembe, and the steady sureness of vocalist and guitarist Matt Barber as he was backed by Aaron Asselstine, the bass player.

Taking up where The Loose Lips finished off was the five person troupe eclectically called Waxing Gibbus. At the beginning of one song, called "Lunar Power," vocalist Terry Kelly jokingly stated that they wrote this song because "we write music that comes from the moon." This statement wasn't really too far off the mark though because their performance was nothing short of stellar.

Starting their set off with Kelly lolling around the dance floor in a slowly spastic manner with his tambourine, the group presented a tightly-knit, well-polished performance of original and unique music.

There was a highly technical aspect to the band that reminded me of elements of Radiohead's album "OK Computer," with songs backed by the dialogue of a masculine computer voice that seamlessly led the group from one song to the next as Kelly's strong voice wavered in and out of pacific depths, backed by Andrew Tom's measured turntablism and

Please see Fierce on page 30

Student bands, including Ibiza, took center stage at Alte's Wednesday night

Rotate this!

Ben Lee Breathing Tornados Grand Royal Records

By ELLI RAYNAI

A quick glance of the cover of EMI recording artist Ben Lee's debut album Breathing Tornados gives off the impression of seventies psychedelic images mashed with computer-constructed nomologies of the future world.

I'll admit, I was immediately enticed and intrigued to pop the disc into my CD player, hoping that it would offer my ears something fun and original. However, after listening to the first couple tracks of the album I knew that I was deceived. Breathing Tornados is nothing like what its cover intimates. Instead, what I got was another young artist trying to break new ground with a generic sound and an array of weak lyrics.

Lee is attempting an original, innocent sound. Most likely, these attempts are what gave him the chance at a record contract, especially the selective Grand Royal label.

What I got was another young artist trying to break new ground with a generic sound and an array of weak lyrics.

Songs like "I am a Sunflower" and "Tornados" are the only bright spots on an album that leaves much to be desired. Both tracks are completely different from everything else on the album. These tracks contain a solid mix of harmonies and elaborate guitar and piano riffs which tease the listener into believing that pet-

Please see Rotate This on page 33

GUINNESS jacket giveaway
see your server
THURS APRIL 1...THROUGH HERMIT

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
$2.49 sunday breakfast
sun-fries
1/2 price wings*
wed
1/2 price nachos*
*after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS
Fri Mar 26
assmachine & spinecracker

Backpacker's Europe

Spring Sale-Book by Mar 31

London	from $519
Paris	from $669
Frankfurt	from $649
Zurich	from $699
Manchester	from $519
Rome	from $719

- ✓ Eurail Passes
- ✓ Busabout, Haggis, Stray
- ✓ ISIC, YHA Cards
- ✓ Bon Voyage Insurance
- ✓ Open Jaw Airfares
- ✓ Tours -Contiki, Trek Top Deck

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Laissez Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Wide Mouth Mason jars Kingston

Canadian rock heroes thrill the crowd at AJs Hangar

CONCERT REVIEW

BY JOSHUA WIESENTHAL

Rockin'. That would have to be the one word to describe this music-infested Wednesday evening. Although the opening act, Miller Stain Limit, numbed the crowd with their ear-bleeding wailing and three uncontrollable guitar riffs, Wide Mouth Mason over-compensated with hardcore talent and pure, unadulterated emotion.

Sponsored by Durex condoms, Saskatoon's own Wide Mouth Mason is touring across Canada and promoting their newly released disc entitled Where I Started.

This spunky band burst onto the Canadian scene in 1996 with their original and independently released CD The Nazarene. Followed by their first release on the Warner record label, their self-titled debut shook both the foundations and expectations of Canadian rock. The band only hopes that they can follow their gold record success with their new release Where I Started.

With the eight-foot member of the male genitalia stealing the opening show, WMM had a tough act to follow.

Their original rock style, fused with a twist of bluesy funk, brings a refreshing new sound to an aging rock music scene. After a couple attempts at his new falsetto-style singing, lead singer Shaun Verreault reverted to singing the fan

Eyes Wide open: Saskatoon trio impress Kingston-crowd-once-again.

PHOTO BY SUE HOLLAND

favourites "Tom Robinson" and "Mary Mary."

Other than the marionette actions of the lead singer of Miller Stain Limit, the opening band had nothing to offer but a migraine and a chance to make a trip to the bar for a refills of the pitchers of liquid libations. After the opening band left the stage, the loudest cheer was heard when the eight foot Durex-sponsored penis started walking amongst the audience and throwing condoms into the open arms of inebriated fans.

With the eight-foot member of the male genitalia stealing the opening show, WMM had a tough act to follow. Showing their sense of humour, the band entered the bar from their pink tour bus painted with a giant sperm. Their bus, dubbed the "Iron Sheik," symbolizes their willingness to be daringly original. When asked why they chose a sponsor-new sound on their current album, and judging by their fan support, it seems like their novel style will grow into a success initially built from a small, devoted fan base.

The comfortably filled club was satiated with feelings of fascination and a general sense of levity. The audience was awed and shocked by the unique guitar playing of Earl Pereira and beautiful vocal range paired with the behind the neck jamming of Verreault. Safwan Javed amazed all with his rhythmic drumming and tank-top strutting presence.

After hamming it up with the audience for nearly two hours, and performing an encore of the Hendrix classic "All Along The Watchtower," the band members entered the crowd and were very approachable. As are all other small bands, they were extremely accommodating and went out of their way to introduce themselves, never failing to mingle and share drinks with their fans.

After opening for the Rolling Stones in Wisconsin and Michigan at the beginning of February, the band is touring their way across Canada. Reintroducing themselves to their old fans, while seducing new members, the band is working their way through the Maritimes, Ontario, Quebec, the Prairies and the West, ending up as the opening act of Alanis Morissette's Saskatoon concert.

Judging by tonight's performance, their tour and CD sales will be smooth and favourably received. Take one listen to this up-and-coming band and their discs will be in kept in your stereo for quite a while.

Carving a niche and developing a well-respected fan base with their self-titled debut was not satisfactory for the relatively new band. They have tested a

The colour of crime

Art exhibit illustrates the unjust criminal system

uv shines

Continued from page 27

An observer enjoys the exhibit at Agnes Etherington.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

ART REVIEW

BY VIRGINIA WIGMORE

People have a sick fascination with crime, especially sensational, gruesome crimes that often are romanticized. Perhaps this infatuation arises out of an innate fear that society's veneer of civility is too thin, and that the savagery exhibited in these crimes lurks in us all. What does the face of someone capable of violence look like — could it be you or me?

This is the question addressed in the exhibit currently displayed at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre entitled Crime and Punishment. This exhibit is curated by Jennifer Rudder and includes works by Shelia Ayearst, Jonathon Eeles, Angela Grossmann and Louise Noguchi.

The combination of crime, media and art in this collection provides a surprising poetic social commentary. Even the title of this exhibit makes reference to the 19th Century novel by Feodor Dostoevsky, in which the protagonist realizes his own capacity for crime. These paintings and photographs touch on issues of fate, redemption, contamination, guilt and innocence. These concerns are amplified through the depiction of real or-alleged crimes, thus making the stakes and implications even more tangible.

Angela Grossman, one of the artists in this exhibit, uses mug shots of petty criminals of the late 1930s and 40s, taken from the penitentiary in New Westminster, to depict pathetic men who were more victims of circumstance, ignorance and racism than they were criminal masterminds.

The painting by Grossman entitled "X-ray" uses the layering of the various materials to represent the levels of complexity and the interaction of numerous different issues that are involved in the conviction and prosecution of these men — despite the apparent simplicity of their crimes.

In this painting, Grossman takes the mug shot of one such man and mounts it onto a canvass of mattress ticking, adding a body and a mylar apron to the criminal's head. The combination of having a clear overlay and a body that melts into nothingness gives the painting an ethereal, ghost-like quality. Furthermore, the emaciated, forlorn faces with shaved heads echoes a vision of World War II and Holocaust victims. The overall effect is one where the lines between guilt and innocence are blurred, and the taunting question seems to be: who is responsible for this society or the young man being depicted?

Louise Noguchi poses a different question in her artwork. By attempting to identify herself as both a criminal and a victim, she addresses the difficulty in reading emotions and guilt from a face.

In a series of photographs, Noguchi takes a picture of herself in the same pose as her chosen criminal or victim. She then proceeds to cut the two photographs into strips and weave the two together, resulting in a composite in which gender, race, innocence and guilt are all blended together. These photographs break down the recognizable identity into fragments, turning the picture into a form of camouflage.

In one such painting entitled "Compilation Portrait #15," Noguchi's face is combined with the portrait of Adelaide Bartlett, a young woman who was acquitted of charges for allegedly poisoning her husband. While Bartlett's pose is very proud, deterministic and formal, Noguchi's is more vulnerable and relaxed. The amalgamation of the two results in a photograph of a wistful young woman whose face does not appear capable of committing such a crime.

This exhibit is especially relevant to the Kingston because it addresses issues that are important to a community filled with correctional facilities.

Crime and Punishment is on display at the Agnes Etherington Art Centre until June 6, and is worthwhile seeing for its unique combination of media, art and crime.

trash lying around my friends' rooms would be significant indicators of who they really were to me and what things I would leave lying about to illustrate what I wanted others to think.

Another highlight of the publication is Katherine Romba's short story, "eleven." This work describes the precious moments of youth and the dreams we all have before we hit our teen years. You feel like a child again reading Romba's piece — hoping for that one special kiss that in your innocent years could change your life (but never happens).

My favourite piece in ultraviolet however, is not actually contained within the magazine. Andrea Feddersen's 'editorial.' Feddersen's free verse entitled, "Here is the story so far," is a beautiful and symbol-laden work that glitters across the eyes and makes one wish everyone could write poetically.

ultraviolet and all the treasures it holds will have its magazine launch on Saturday evening at Alfie's. As well as the written and visual submissions, this year ultraviolet also has a seven song CD included featuring Ibiza, Jon Coakley, Reno's Hitmen, Matthew Barber, Travel Agent, Jill Barber and dj greazy, porkchop and applesauce. Look for the review next week.

ultraviolet's mission statement on the magazine is "the sun is not your enemy," — ironic in that I thought ultraviolet should have a black cover.

It's a book with personal works awaiting your read — and there's no little lock to break to get to them.

APPLICATIONS

NOW AVAILABLE FOR
A.M.S.
PART-TIME
RECEPTIONIST/OFFICE ASSISTANT

Responsibilities include AMS Front Desk reception and other duties as required.

The position may require approximately 20 hours a week with a flexible weekly time schedule starting date September, 1999 to April, 2000.

No experience necessary, however, priority will be given to individuals who have had office work experience and word processing skills.

More specific information about the position available with the application form.

APPLICATIONS DUE
APRIL 9TH, 1999 BY 4:30 P.M. IN THE AMS OFFICE
(Applications may be sent by fax to 545-9565 or courier to the AMS Office)

INTERVIEWS WILL BE HELD THE WEEK OF APRIL 12TH, AND CAN BE FLEXIBLE

NO EXPERIENCE?

NO PROBLEM

The Journal still needs
applications for Production Manager,
Supplements Editor and its 1999-
2000 business staff.

Call 533-2800 and ask for Sarah or Stefan for more information.

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Own a piece of Queen's history.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Camera Kingston
foto source™

Your one - hour,
one - stop photo shop

ask about your CLUB CK discount card

second set of prints

FREE

with this coupon

35mm or APS film at time of development
see store for details

our downtown location is open
7 days a week

114 Princess@Wellington Bath@Gardiners Rd
549 3747 384 3747

Women and Song

Esthero, Sarah Slean and Emm Gryner dazzle

Heaven Sent: Esthero offered the Grant Hall crowd energy and inspiring music.

CONCERT REVIEW

By LUCAS COSTELLO

Wow. It was free and the majority of you reading this right now missed it. Before reading any further, kick yourself for missing QEA's first free concert.

Now I'll be honest, I was there for Esthero, and I hate "stand-up" concerts (everybody look at the singer in a daze). However, this show was the exception. The opening performer was Sarah Slean, who captivated the handful of people at Grant Hall. Her accompanists included a cellist, a drummer, and a vocalist. Slean's skill on the piano and her excellent voice had many people asking, "Who is this?" followed by the comment "she's really good."

Thematically, the music could have been more varied, but hey, if some people find catharsis in professing trouble with boys, with music this beautiful, I'm not going to complain. Also, there were songs that broke up the more mellow vibe with a hard hitting bassline and wicked use of the cello. Throughout her set, Slean kept the audience laughing, speaking on her quest to find men and the problem with boys.

Maybe it's because Kingston just isn't use to shows of this nature, but when Sugah Bear went for call and response "I'm gonna get there, gonna get there", well there was no response.

Following Slean was Emm Gryner — a talent vocally, on the guitar and the piano. Gryner's set was a livelier one with more up-tempo and harder hitting tracks than Slean's. While Slean seemed to be introverted with her music, Gryner exuded more energy, bringing elements of rock, folk, hip-hop and funk to the show — perhaps due to more stage experience.

Also the levels of emotion varied more with Gryner's music, ranging from funky to touching, with the dedication of a beautiful song to her friend Slean. Gryner closed her set off with a really fun version of the Beastie Boys' "Sabotage."

Before this goes any further, kick yourself one more time for not being at this concert. Esthero and the touring band arrived late due to Air Canada selling her seat. During the performance she made several references to the trials and tribulations of her flight to get out here. The levels were a bit off due to the quick start, but were adjusted soon enough with a quick freestyle by resident MC with Esthero and Sugah Bear.

Now if you didn't know, Esthero's album is really good. Now imagine a live show with a live band that's open to improvisation. Interludes from the album became full songs that made a few people dance and had a fair amount of heads nodding. Maybe it's because Kingston just isn't use to shows of this nature, but when Sugah Bear went for call and response "I'm gonna get there, gonna get there," well there was no response, (maybe the crowd just couldn't hear him.)

The response to Esthero was great though, and she emitted a sensuality on the stage that was damn fine: marching and gyrating across the stage barefoot, head nodding and constantly interplaying with the band.

At one point Esthero pulled a member of the audience up on stage and danced with her. It was a dynamic performance, with the varying beats and moods of the night. Hard hitting rock spiced with jungle, salsa with beats, and a voice that's been compared to many — there was something for everybody.

At the end of the night I had a quick chance to speak with Sugah Bear and Esthero, but unfortunately, I screwed up my dictaphone. What I did recall however, is that Sugah Bear is releasing a three song single in one month. Also, Esthero is no longer working with Doc (producer of Breath From Another), but just finished recording a track with DJ Krush (MILIGHT). There is also the possibility of her working with Mos Def (one half of Black Star) — cross your fingers.

Finally, she spoke volumes of praises for GooDie MOB ("Still Standin") on the remix of Country Livin', and meeting with them at the video shoot.

Slean's skill on the piano and her excellent voice had many people asking, "Who is this?" followed by the comment "she's really good."

Emm Gryner has also already released an album, so check that out, along with Sarah Slean's recent single. Keep an eye out for her new album due soon.

So there it was, a night of free, really, really good music. Sad thing is, all of these acts are some of the best Canadian entertainers and there was basically no one there to see it.

The music was incredible. Hopefully, the poor turnout won't discourage these acts from returning again and again. Kick yourself one more time as reminder not to miss an event like this ever again.

Midtown Meta

Queen's band at Manor

CONCERT PREVIEW

By STEFAN MURRAY

After gracing the stages of AIs, The Brass, Smigies and The Shot over the past three years, Meta might be closing the curtain as a Queen's band.

On Thursday April 1, Meta will perform at the Midtown Manor, and a month later lead singer Peter Altimas will complete his degree at Queen's, ending a four-year engagement with Queen's and the Kingston Community.

The show is a farewell concert of sorts for Meta, (admission will be free) who will relocate to Toronto to try and find their place in the big city club scene.

Meta, who Altimas describes as "an entirely original act" that is stylistically comparable to Pearl Jam and U2, attribute their musical success mature lyrics and a progression of musicianship.

The band has just cut their fourth album, a five-track effort titled Magnum Opus recorded over three days in early January, and will release the album to the public and perform the new material on Thursday night.

Meta was formed in 1992 as a high school act, and since then have released four albums, been featured at many high profile clubs in Kingston and Toronto, and received airplay on CFNY and Q107, two popular Toronto rock stations, as well as Queen's radio CFRC.

Altimas claims that his "focus is school, first and foremost" and that because his dedication to academics and the fact that two members of the band attend Ryerson, Meta has lately only been able to schedule a sporadic number of shows.

Altimas will plug in on Thursday, write a couple of econ exams and then embark on his Meta-morphosis to bigger and better things.

Thursday night will be their first show of the new year, and the Midtown Manor is definitely a tough room to fill. However, Altimas believes that the show will be successful because it offers a "departure" from the Thursday night ventures with no covers and two sets.

So Altimas will plug in on Thursday, write a couple of econ exams and then embark on his Meta-morphosis to bigger and better things.

Doors open at the Midtown Manor at 8 p.m., admission is free. Copies of Magnum Opus will be available for $10.

Rotate this!

Continued from page 27

Recognize Me Now?

Franklin's Fault
Recognize Me Now?
Independent

By DIMITRIOS TSOTOS

Describing music is such a touchy subject. It seems that the common approach to reviewing an album is to simplify the band's style of playing and squash it into the confines of a few specific genres.

Personally, my grasp of music and all its conventions isn't very firm. You will hear no extemporizing from me about Franklin's Fault and the profundity of their pop-Dylan-esque type, Backstreet Boys/Engelburt Humperdink flavouredness, or how this chirpiness melds well with the rapid hip-hop/funk/rap/jazz sound in their new album Recognize Me Now?

What I will say about this seven-member troupe is that I really like their album because of its smart lyrics, great vocals and stylish synergy.

The album jumps out because it provides a taste of aspects of university life with the main focus on love and relationships.

Some of my favourite songs are "Housemate Lovin'," a funny, rhyming song about, what else, housemate loving, and "Pictures," a beautiful, moody song notable for vocalist Kate Anne Vandermeer's sweeping voice and Adam Sneyd's impressive trumpet playing.

Finishing the album off on a strange and quirky note is "Mudpuppy," a somewhat nonsensical, but engaging, dirty track that includes a confused Curious George Story in the middle.

You will hear no extemporizing from me about Franklin's Fault and the profundity of their pop-Dylan-esque type, Backstreet Boys/Engelburt Humperdink flavouredness.

Recognize Me Now? is definitely a worthwhile addition to any Queen's student's music collection.

Don't take my word for it though, find out for yourself. The album can be purchased at the UBS Exchange in the JDUC, as well as House of Sounds and HMV.

Your Professors will never see:
the four weeks of research,
the crashed computer,
the two pots of coffee,
the thirty-six sleepless hours.

They will see:
it was worth getting bound.

Working Hard to Make You Look Good.

The Publishing and Copy Centre

Rebate. Rebate. Rebate.

Right now, you can take advantage of a $50.00 airtime credit when you buy our dual mode PCS Sony phone. Combine this saving with any of our affordable plans including our unlimited local evening and weekend option and you're all set to go wireless. This offer is valid from Feb 1 to March 31. Pick one up at your campus bookstore or reach us at www.clearnet.com/student or 1-888-248-5968. The future is friendly.

* Must activate within 10 days. Phone must be activated for a minimum of 30 days.
* Trade marks used under license from Clearnet Communications Inc.

Interested in going to China this summer???

16 day all inclusive summer tours
• unique cultural experience gain insight into the hub of global commerce

Come out to our info session!

Tuesday, March 30
Robert Gullerland Room, 2nd Floor JDUC
Open House: 2:00 - 5:00

Door Prizes and Giveaways!!!

For details, brochures, and walkhome @ queen@uq.ca

Brought to you by Fando Tours and the AMS.

Earn credit and/or satisfy your departmental language requirement easily!

Geometrie Geisteswissenschaft
Wirtschaft Chemie Kolloquien
Musik
Geschichte
Komposition
Altklausur

Another important article or text that exists only in German?
"My schedule doesn't allow for any more three-hour-a-week courses."

Do we have the solution for you!

READING GERMAN (GRMN 061*/062*)
...has NO set class-time
...is CD-ROM based
...allows YOU to work within YOUR schedule
...is comprised of TWO components; one per semester
...the first module is a GENERAL introduction
...the second module is subject-specific to meet YOUR requirements. The topics are: HUMANITIES, MUSIC, BUSINESS/ECONOMICS, OR CHEMISTRY

FOR MORE INFORMATION CONTACT THE GERMAN DEPARTMENT AT 533-2072 OR E-MAIL: kl16@post.queensu.ca

Classifieds

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kalye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

COVER YOUR CREST!!!! Next Wednesday March 31st is Cover Your Crest. Arts and Science students, lets remind Queen's University that bigger is better and blow those other faculties away.

BLUEROF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.lkweb.com/bluerof or call Kim Onaate at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE
www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877/PREP-COM.

SOMETIME SIZE DOES MATTER! Arts and Science students; next Wednesday March 31st is Cover Your Crest! Show those puny faculties just how much money 8,000 students can raise for the children of KGH.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resumelay.com.

COVER YOUR CREST!!!! Next Wednesday March 31st is Cover Your Crest. Arts and Science students, lets remind Queen's University that bigger is better and blow those other faculties away.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.on.ca for daily rates. Wellington foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington, 531-8731.

QUEEN'S BASEBALL PIE DAY order your pie and have it "delivered" to your friend for only $2.00. Call Brian at 549-0529 before Saturday March 27th.

SOMETIME SIZE DOES MATTER! Arts and Science students; next

Wednesday March 31st is Cover Your Crest! Show those puny faculties just how much money 8,000 students can raise for the children of KGH.

JUBILATE! 7 p.m. St. James Church. Corner of Union and Barrie Streets. Exciting worship and explorations of the lives and faith of Martin Luther King Jr., Bach and others.

SOMETIME SIZE DOES MATTER! Arts and Science students; next Wednesday March 31st is Cover Your Crest! Show those puny faculties just how much money 8,000 students can raise for the children of KGH.

SMOKEFREE HOME daycare in Waterloo Village has positions open for full-time preschool age children. Excellent references. Call Lisa at 384-7065.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR RENT: 10 month lease - 2 bedroom spacious downtown apartment available, July 1 - May 1. $800 per month includes parking. Very nice apartment: hardwood floors, storage space, large yard. Call 544-8336.

FOR SUBLET: Bachelor for summer sublet: Quiet area, all new, very clean, partially furnished if desired. Johnson/Clergy. Guaranteed privacy! Asking $300. Call Kara ASAP at 547-5365.

HELP WANTED

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED for the Campus Observation Room during Orientation Week '99 and Alumni Weekend. Free FIRST AID certification and detox training provided. Applications available at Student Health reception. For more information call Diane Nolting, Health Educator at 533-6712.

WANNA BE A PART OF THIS PAPER? Applications for business staff are still being accepted. Some other positions for next year are also available. Call Sarah or Stefan at 533-2800 to enquire.

SOMETIME SIZE DOES MATTER! Arts and Science students; next

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewardesses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM, which offers one-on-one help and support to children from disadvantaged families, is looking for tutors and supervisors for 1999 - 2000. If you want to volunteer, please contact Rosalind Malcolm at 549-2778. We need your organizational and human relations skills! This challenging and rewarding community experience will enhance your resume and change your life!

SALESPERSON REQUIRED for upgrade Shoe Store. Employment available from end of school term in Spring to Labour Day weekend. Possible part-time employment beyond Labour Day. Previous experience not necessary. Please send resume to: Jack McCalpin C.Ped. Manager, Walkwell Shoes, 179 Wellington St., Kingston, ON K7L 3E3

WANTED

WANTED: HOUSEMATES preferably upper year students, female, non-smoking, to share NEWLY-RENOVATED house on Brock St. Rent $270 plus utilities. Cable included. Queen's at Home installed. Call 544-3784

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: A dark grey PENTAX camera in a black bag at Colour Night, with 36 exposure film in it. If found please call Steph at 531-4623 or e-mail at 7j5k...

LOST: Matteo Maas black suit jacket lost at Artsci '99 formal. If found please contact Craig at 544-7114.

LOST: Fuji D3-190 zoom lens camera - Lost at Artsci formal. If found please call 545-1033 or email at 4mnc2@qlink.

LOST: A black Olympus camera in a little black bag, March 6th the night of the Artsci formal. Please call Julie at 530-3841.

FOUND: Sweater found in Ellis Auditorium Monday March 8th after the Sue Johanson lecture. Call 531-9257 to claim.

FOUND: One tuxedo jacket at the Artsci formal. Please contact Rob at 547-3430.

FOUND: A camera and carrying case in a cab the night of the Artsci Formal (March 6th). Please call 533-7981 to identify.

FOUND: At the Artsci Formal, non-disposable camera. Contact 4eat to identify.

FOUND: A small stuffed animal at PEC entrance on January 29th, (Friday) around 6:00 p.m. Owner please contact 6mrs3 to identify.

FOUND: One Squash racquet on Union and Alfred St., bus shelter. Call 533-2016 to identify.

FOUND: A set of keys with a small Swiss Army knife on the keychain, just outside MacCorry Saturday, January 16th. Contact Jon at 533-7334 if its yours.

PERSONALS

PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1 800 844-8669.

THE QUEEN'S STUDENT AND COMMUNITY SERVICES GROUP (QSCSG) thanks all the students who voted to renew the QSCSG student fee. Thank you very much!

TO THE PERSON who stole my wallet at The Shot - please return my cards to me! Drop them at The Shot if you have them or found them! A reward is offered.

MISC

MISC'S BUILDING CONTEST EXTRAVAGANZA

THOSE SPOOF-POOR BASTARDS over at GW called this thing pointless and none in their little fake Journal issue a couple of weeks ago. You're just bitter bethies if you ask me. Everyone knows STUPIDITY + FREE SHIT = BEAUTY. Unfortunately for GW this year, they forgot that STUPIDITY + SHIT equals something completely different.

THE RULES: Figure out which buildings are being obscured by students, take the first letter of all 14 buildings and rearrange them so that they spell out something sensible (i.e. maybe more than one word, maybe some punctuation in there somewhere). If you think you've got it, send your answer along to The Queen's Journal, 272 Earl St. or e-mail it to: journal@post.queensu.ca.

THE PRIZE: A big ol' stand-up full-colour cardboard model of Crockle, that little cackoson money-mokin' icon from Kellogg's Rice Krispies. Go-Gawd, Yawh! Deadline: April Fool's Day.

PHOTOS BY JAMES TERJANIAN, CHRIS GLOVER AND CHERYL CHEUNG

MUSHROOM RISOTTO

You may have tried this rice dish in an "Italian" restaurant, where they presented it to you covered with large chunks of seafood or vegetables resting on top. I regret to inform you that what they served you was IMPOSTER SEAFOOD! Risotto is not supposed to have identifying chunks of food on top of it; it should taste like seafood, or saffron, or like various other vegetables you can flavour it with, but not look like those foods. If you want further proof of this, watch the movie Big Night and see what Primo has to say about it. The rice you need for this is available in any grocery store. It costs a little bit more than the regular crap, but when it comes to risotto, any Northern Italian will tell you to do it right or not at all.

- 2 tsp. Olive oil
- 1 medium cooking onion, finely chopped
- 6-7 large white portabello mushrooms, finely chopped
- 1 cup uncooked Arborio or "Italian style" rice (Arborio is better)
- 1 10 oz. can chicken broth + 2

- cans of water
- 1/4 cup white wine
- 1/4 cup finely chopped fresh or 1 tsp. dried parsley
- 1/4 cup finely chopped fresh or 1 tsp. dried basil

1. Bring the chicken broth and water to a simmer in a saucepan.
2. In a separate medium-sized saucepan, brown the garlic in oil, then add the onion and mushrooms and brown them well.
3. Add the rice and a small amount of broth to the mushroom pot and stir until the liquid is absorbed. Add the wine. Keeping adding broth and stirring until it is absorbed: resist the urge to pour all the broth in at once, or the rice will be too starchy (i.e. sticky and gross). Periodically taste the rice to see if it is cooked: it should be slightly al dente. You may not need all the broth, and you may run out of broth before it is done. If this happens add water.
4. Add the parsley and basil, stir. 1 minute more.

*Serve sprinkled with parmesan cheese.
*Serves 2.

Uncle Ben can go straight to hell as far as Sarah LeMay is concerned

Work Study Program
Queen's University
1998 - 1999

WORK STUDY

Enrolled in Spring/Summer Session?
Need $$ to make it through?

If you have at least a 60% course load this summer, then you are eligible to apply for the Spring/Summer Work Study program. Pick up applications at Student Awards or Career Services. They're due April 16th, and entitlements are handed out on the 28th.

Visit our web site:
<http://careers.queensu.ca/Workstudy/>

ATTENTION

Arts & Science Undergraduates

ARE YOU IN THE RIGHT ACADEMIC PROGRAM?
CONCERNED ABOUT CAREER OPPORTUNITIES AFTER GRADUATION?
INTERESTED IN AN APPLIED PROGRAM?

WHY NOT CONSIDER TRANSFERRING INTO CHEMICAL ENGINEERING OR ENGINEERING CHEMISTRY (OR DOING A DUAL DEGREE WITH YOUR CURRENT PROGRAM).

The award-winning department of Chemical Engineering is a dynamic department with an outstanding record of excellence in teaching and research, with many links to industry.

Well qualified students can expect credit for completed CHEM, MATH, H&SS, GEOL and Laboratory courses.

Your transfer will be smooth and painless!

For information contact:
Dr. David Lawrence, #208 Dupuis Hall
lawrence@chee.queensu.ca
533-2783

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to success. We would like to help take you the rest of the way by offering $750 towards the purchase or lease of a new Chrysler or Jeep® vehicle.* That's $750 in addition to most current Chrysler incentives. If you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada, we'll also defer your first three months payments!† And with a world-class lineup of vehicles to choose from, we clearly offer something for everyone. Whether you're looking for the off-road excitement of a Jeep®, the rugged performance of a Dodge Truck, the roominess of a minivan or the redesigned and refined Chrysler Neon 2000, we've got a vehicle that'll take you wherever you want to go. What's more, you could win a $5000 travel voucher just for sharing your smarts with us. For details, simply visit us on-line at www.chryslercanada.ca

*Excluding Prowler and Viper. †Some restrictions apply. See your retailer for details. This $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college or university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1998, and September 30, 1999, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students, regardless of final graduation date. © Jeep is a registered trade mark licensed to Chrysler Canada Ltd.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Retailer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

CHRYSLER
CANADA

Good Luck to Beau and Konrad with their Purification! - from 223 Earl, The Pen

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY THE JOURNAL

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
General Travel: 549-3553
Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

since 1873

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1999

The "Cover your Crest" in front of Ontario Hall yesterday afternoon was a great success thanks to the warm spring weather.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Students robbed at gunpoint

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

Shortly after midnight on Tuesday two third-year Queen's students, one male and one female, were threatened at gunpoint, and subsequently abducted and robbed.

An anonymous source from the AMS, who is acquainted with the victims, revealed the incidents of the evening on their behalf. The event occurred off campus after the pair returned from a movie. They were parked outside one of their houses, and were sitting in the car talking when they were approached by two people wearing balaclavas. The perpetrators entered the back seat of the vehicle, held a gun to the driver's head and told him to drive.

According to the source, the four people drove for approximately 10 minutes, after which the students were told to exit the vehicle and hand over their wallets, bank cards and personal identification numbers.

The students were then locked into the trunk of the car while the perpetrators drove to various automatic teller machines throughout the city, and withdrew money from their accounts. This lasted for approximately one hour, during which time the assailants occasionally spoke to the victims through the closed trunk, said

Please see Indiglo on page 4

300-level English courses sparse

BY KEITH GEREIN

Students trying to preregister for upper-year English seminars are finding that the list of options is shorter than usual. The number of 300-level English courses offered are being substantially cut next year.

According to John Pierce, undergraduate chair for the department of English, this year the department offered 20 full-year courses at the 300-level. Next year it will offer 17.

"It was a whole bunch of factors coming together to create the shortage this year," said Pierce. "This certainly doesn't happen every year."

One of these factors is the large number of professors who are taking sabbaticals next year. Pierce confirmed that four or five English professors had been granted sabbaticals by the Faculty of Arts and Science. "There just seemed to be a big group of them this year," he said.

Edward Lobb, acting head of the English department, explained that once every seven years, a faculty member has the opportunity to apply for a sabbatical. He said that as long as a professor's job performance has been good, it is common practice to grant his or her request. Even if the professor's absence contributes to a shortage of faculty within a department, a sabbatical request will rarely be turned down.

"If word gets out that we don't grant sabbaticals to deserving people, Queen's is going to have a very difficult time attracting faculty," said Lobb.

"I want to be clear about this. When we reduce the number of courses, it's because we have no other choice," Lobb said. "We do not favour research over teaching. Teaching is our top priority."

Pierce said he did not foresee having to reduce upper-year seminars as much as was required.

"I'll admit I didn't see it coming," he said. "It was only when I did the roster that I saw the shortage and by then the sabbaticals had been granted."

Lobb said the course reductions are also due to a lack of funds to replace retired professors, and a union contract that limits the number of part-time instructors the department can hire.

"For a number of years we have suffered from funding cutbacks," he said. "We have had a number of retirements and have only been able to partially replace those losses."

Even if the department could

Please see Shortage on page 7

Queen's libraries rank 101st in North America

BY CRYSTAL BONA

Despite widely differing disciplines, you can almost guarantee that every Queen's student will enter the expansive halls of Stauffer Library at least once in their university career.

That's why a drop in Queen's libraries' ranking amongst universities across North America has the Senate Library Committee concerned with the University's ability to maintain its status as a research-intensive university.

In a report presented to the Queen's Senate, the SLC stated that the most recent survey of North American university libraries, conducted in 1996-97, has Queen's ranked 101st, while comparable universities are ranked much higher.

"Queen's University has been in rather serious trouble with regards to our library... there was a time in which we were as high as 60th in North America... the slide has been especially rapid in recent years," said Marvin McNiss, SLC chair. "The report is intended to point out [the problem] to the Senate and indicates that we haven't solved [it] yet," he added.

"Inflation in [the price of] library acquisitions has been astronomical. As a result of this inflation, libraries at most universities have been cut back... there are some big issues to be addressed as a result of this," explained David Turpin, vice-principal (academic).

"The reason a university like Queen's needs a large library... is very largely because we pretend to be a research library with good graduate programs... There is a fundamental problem — how in this new environment does a mid-size residential research-intensive university gain access to the information it requires?" commented Turpin. The problem, he added, "is that there is no hope of this being rectified out of the regular library budget."

"It's a huge concern of the SGPS," said Chris Hales, outgoing president of the Society of Graduate and Professional Students. "The bottoming-out of our research standings affects all students at Queen's, especially those in research-intensive studies... upper-year students, lower-year students, graduate, and professional students."

Hales added that "the decrease in serial acquisitions affect how current students can be in [graduate] studies. In social sciences and humanities, primary historical documents are lacking, which means [students] have to be able to travel both nationally and internationally."

The report states one solution is to provide journal information electronically, but states that a problem with electronic journals is that "more and more journals are being provided electronically, but publishers commonly require that subscription to hard copy be maintained."

Hales said another problem with electronic journals is their "increase... is of some benefit to science students, but not to social science and humanities, because on-line journals are predominantly science journals."

The SLC report states Senate

Please see Libraries on page 5

index

Volume 126, Issue 39
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	ABE	14
Editorials	8	Sports & Fitness	17
Opinions	9	Classifieds	22
Science	11	Crossword	23

WEATHERWATCH

Today Mix of sun and cloud High 13°C; Low 4°C; PCP 20%	Saturday Mix of sun and cloud High 14°C; Low 2°C; PCP 20%
Friday Mix of sun and cloud High 18°C; Low 2°C; PCP 20%	Sunday Mix of sun and cloud High 12°C; Low 4°C; PCP 10%

Calling all contributors!

You are formally invited to The Journal Year-End Banquet, Sunday, April 11.
Come for an evening of good wine, good food and good company. Please call or stop by The Journal House to put your name on the guest list.
We look forward to seeing you.

Kingston's One and Only
Hard Rock Café

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday
nights- open MIC
with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm
20¢ wings
(with the purchase of a beverage)

AMS card winner prepares to take off

By BARBARA HARVEY

Queen's student Nancy Cole will soon be flying high as the winner of the first AMS services card draw. Cole's propensity for copying and autofry paid off, in the form of two complimentary round-trip plane tickets. Her grand prize win is valued at approximately $2,500.

"It was a good idea but we made a few mistakes... we expected way too much from students."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations)

Last Wednesday, Cole was chosen as the grand prize winner of the AMS card contest. The second-year biology student was awarded two Air Canada Long Haul tickets valid for use anywhere in North America.

Upon learning that her name had been drawn by AMS president Tom Stanley, Cole said, "I'm ecstatic. I filled out the card nine times... it was fun."

The promotional event for AMS services underwent numerous changes as it ran its course. Initially, contestants were expected to frequent Alie's, the QR, the Publishing and Copy Centre, and the UBS on 20 separate occasions in order to complete the card.

However, the AMS adjusted the contest rules in January due to a low student response, requiring entrants only to use and receive one stamp from each AMS service. The contest was extended numerous times before the final deadline passed on March 25, at which point 60 completed cards had been submitted.

"It was a good idea but we made a few mistakes," said AMS Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie, adding that "we expected way too much from students."

Moodie attributed the low number of entries to poor advertising during the fall, the availability of only one prize, and the fact that the participating AMS services had "nothing in common."

In retrospect, Moodie expressed he was a "little disappointed with our execution of the promotion," adding that the AMS had spent "more than was justified" on the campaign.

Noting that "we have left plenty of room for improvement," Moodie suggested the possibilities that the AMS offer separate cards for specific services,

Please see Initiative on page 3

CLARIFICATION

In the previous issue of The Journal, a story in the News section about the Liberal party pledging support for a tuition decrease did not identify Jason Nardari, Comm '01, as communications director of the PC Association on campus. The headline meant to suggest if a Liberal government were elected.

The Journal regrets the omission.

DOES YOUR LANDLORD ROCK?

Nominate him/her for the

LANDLORD OF THE YEAR AWARD!

Pick Up Nomination
Forms outside the AMS Front Doors. Please call the MAC at 533-6000 ext
75178 with any questions.
Packages are due Monday
April 5, 1999

Award winners share involvement, humility

Tricolour Award winners Jeff Coull (left) and George Kim
PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

By FIONA STEVENSON

Queen's students George Kim and Jeff Coull have been recognized for their outstanding contributions to extra-curricular life at Queen's with the Tricolour Award, one of the university's most prestigious honours.

According to Lisa Mori, chair of the Tricolour Award Committee, award is the highest tribute that can be paid to a student for valuable and distinguished service to the university in non-athletic, extra-curricular activities.

An 11-person committee, made up of student representatives from all Queen's Faculties, chose Kim and Coull from a pool of 19 nominees. "The quality of the nominees was phenomenal and it made our selection extremely difficult," said Mori.

Four students received the award last year, although the number of award recipients varies each year.

According to Mori, Kim and Coull were the two clear winners from this year's nominee pool. "They embodied absolutely everything that we were evaluating in the candidates," she said. Mori said the committee also appreciated the humility of the two candidates. "They did what they did to improve the experience of students here, and not for any other reason."

Coull, a fourth-year life science student, has been involved with Queen's First Aid since first year and acted as director this year. In addition to devoting about 400 hours to this position, Coull was also a member of the Judicial Committee, the Formal Committee and the Life Science Executive.

Coull was responsible for implementing several new QFA initiatives this year. One of these was the introduction of on-call response, which underwent a trial period in February and will be officially implemented in September. Coull also focused on increasing training at QFA this year. "We really tried to bolster the training of the unit... The average member is as well trained as a fire fighter," Coull said.

News that he had won the award came as a surprise to Coull. "I was shocked. I didn't believe it at first," he said. Coull hopes to pursue a career in emergency medicine. He is interested in attending medical school or pursuing a graduate degree in pharmacology.

"They embodied absolutely everything that we were evaluating in the candidates."

— Lisa Mori, chair of the Tricolour Award committee

Kim, who completed a biochemistry degree last year and is now taking liberal arts courses "to enhance his science degree," has been extensively involved in extra-curricular activities at Queen's during the last five years. Past and present involvements include five years with the Walkhome service, including one term as day coordinator and one term as assistant manager; four years as a sexual health peer educator, including one term as team coordinator; two years with the SOAR program, including one term as program director; two years as a member of the ASUS Aids Awareness Committee; and four years as a Departmental Student Council representative in biochemistry, English, women's studies, and philosophy. Kim was also responsible for the Loblaw's Food Shuttle initiative, and served on the committee responsible for bringing the Canadian Aids Memorial Quilt to Queen's. Kim is currently a Don in Morris Hall.

"I love the idea of the Tricolour Award," said Kim. "I think it's a valuable award because it brings to the forefront all the hard work that every single person on this campus does in the form of extra-curricular commitments... If I could divide up the Tricolour award into 15,000 pieces, I would and give it to everyone."

Mori agreed, stating, "One of the mandates is to do as much as we can to celebrate and recognize extra-curricular involvement in general."

Kim, who is interested in both medicine and teaching, said, looking ahead, he plans to "continue doing what I'm doing right now — doing what I love, having a passion for everything."

Kim thanks the Queen's environment for helping him to grow as a person and develop a vision for himself. "Other universities pale in comparison," he said.

Fair trade group prepares petition to Marriott

By MAGGIE BUHAJCYK

The next time you buy a cup of badly-needed coffee from Marriott, the Fair Trade Working Group urges you to think about where that bean has been.

The group is presenting a petition to encourage Marriott to offer fairly-traded coffee as an alternative in Queen's campus cafeterias.

According to Suzzanne Smith, campaign organizer, the group's main goal is to inform the community about problems of unfair trading practices. "It's about building a greater understanding of where our food is coming from and who produces it. It's part of a bigger issue of inequality," she said.

"We're trying to get Marriott to buy fairly traded coffee rather than the coffee they've been buying now," said Andrea Bubrin, a member of the Ontario Public Interest Research Group.

Instead of a boycott, the organization is trying to encourage a "buycott."

"It doesn't mean we're encouraging people not to buy coffee. Instead of not buying, you can make a consumer choice to buy a fairly traded product and increase the demand for it," she maintained.

In a press release, OPIRG explained that since coffee exports are controlled by middlemen, many farmers receive only 10 per cent of the retail price of their coffee. "It's important to realize that there are workers who don't get paid enough to cover the costs of their own production," Bubrin said.

The group chose to focus on coffee because of its high demand amongst university students. "Coffee is a commodity consumed by a lot of students and its easy to target because it's one of the most easily accessible fair trade products," explained Smith.

Students can identify fairly-traded coffee by looking for the Transfair international seal which is issued by Fair TradeMark Canada and placed on all products sold at their fair market value.

OPIRG recognizes that price may be the major concern for most Queen's students. On average, fairly-traded coffee costs two cents more per cup than regular coffee. However, Bubrin maintains this increase is minor when compared to what she perceives to be already inflated coffee prices. "A small cup which sells for $1 in reality costs less than five cents to make," she said.

In addition, fairly-traded coffee offers other benefits. "It's good, gourmet coffee. If anything, it would increase the quality of the coffee because it's often organic. It also encourages sustainable environmental practices," said Bubrin.

Student response seems to be fairly positive.

"Two cents isn't that much money. I'd be willing to spend it if it's good coffee," said Matthew Pressey, Comm '01.

"We have 600 signatures and the people we have spoken to generally think it's a good idea," said Bubrin.

"It's about building a greater understanding of where our food is coming from and who produces it. It's part of a bigger issue of inequality."

— Suzzanne Smith, campaign organizer

"People really don't know very much about fairly-traded coffee but they've all been very interested after we've described what it is," added Smith.

Bruce Griffith, director of Residence Services, said Queen's does not have the authority to change Marriott's purchasing policies. "Queen's does not purchase any products. That's something we contract Marriott to do," he explained. "It would not be within my authority to change the North America-wide policies for Marriott," he added.

Smith recognizes that change will not occur instantly. "This is just a starting point for us. Queen's has to go through Marriott but by generating support it would be a more viable option," she said.

In addition to the petition, The Fair Trade Working Group held a letter writing campaign and visited Kingston businesses and restaurants. Currently, the Sleepless Goat, the Kingston Brew Pub, Oliver Smith, Tara Fine Foods, and the Kingston Boat Lines offer fairly-traded coffee as an alternative.

Initiative planned to continue next year

Continued from page 2

as well as offering multiple prizes.

Owen Minns, AMS media services director and v-p (ops)-elect, agreed that changes to the contest format will be required if it is to continue.

"One of the main purposes of this contest was to raise awareness that the AMS does offer these services."

— Owen Minns, AMS media services director

However, he also pointed out that a number of positive factors resulted from the promotion, including an increased student awareness of AMS services and a positive relationship with the sponsor, Air Canada.

"One of the main purposes of this contest was to raise awareness that the AMS does offer these services," said Minns, declaring the promotion a success in that regard. He also stated that the AMS would like to have some kind of working relationship with a company, although not necessarily Air Canada.

The AMS card contest is currently being reviewed and future plans for the promotion will be finalized over the summer. "The safest thing to say right now is that we probably want to do something similar for next year," said Minns.

Firehouse Grill in the JDUC: a Marriott hallmark.
PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Suspicious crimes concern security

Is the housing area as safe as students think it is? Rising incidents of crime would suggest not.

BY RENEE HUANG

A rash of suspicious crimes in and around the Queen's housing area have some security advisors in Kingston and the Queen's community concerned.

Louise Fish, director of Campus Security.

QUEEN'S JOURNAL FILE PHOTO

A recent posting on the Campus Security Web site advised people about a report of a "peeping tom" in the student housing area last Monday night. At approximately 8 p.m., Kingston Police received a report of a man looking through venetian blinds on the ground floor bedroom window of a house on Johnson Street between Albert and Frontenac Streets.

The suspect is white, very tall, muscular, in his early twenties, with buzz cut short brown hair, wearing a green fleece jacket and blue jeans.

Louise Fish, director of Campus Security, is advising people to keep a look out for individuals "engaged in suspicious behaviour."

Fish hopes students and members of the community take an active role in reporting any suspicious incidents.

"Even if it's not your house, if you notice someone lurking in the bushes" or peering in windows, call security or the police, she advised.

Fish also stressed the importance of reporting incidents immediately, using the blue light security phones if they are available. She said that a misconception surrounding the blue lights is that they should only be used in dire emergencies. This is not the case. If a person is lost, feeling uncomfortable or simply needs directions, the blue light assistant phones are available to them.

"You won't get in trouble for [using] it... if you're trying to pass information to us," she said. "Even if you just need directions, we'll do that for you... it's not a big deal."

"You have to be a little naive if you find somebody in the middle of your house claiming to look for somebody [and believe them]."

— Constable Mike Shultz, Kingston Police

Another incident involved a man who entered a home in the student housing area unannounced. Upon being confronted by tenants, the man said he was looking for a friend.

Kingston Police Constable Mike Shultz said this led to occupants of the house on Aberdeen Street being robbed of some money. Although there is no suspect in this incident Shultz said robberies of this type "happen disturbingly often."

He said it often comes down to "irresponsibility on the part of students. They are very want to leaving the doors [to their homes] open... the danger is that you're kind of open to the world."

Shultz described the man as a professional, "a fairly slippery individual... the average person doesn't wander into someone's house." People with criminal intentions know the student housing area is an easy target. Shultz advises members of the Queen's community not to be "so trusting."

"You have to be a little naive if you find somebody in the middle of your house claiming to look for somebody [and believe them]."

The Security Web site also shows an increase in incidence of thefts in campus buildings, and car break-ins.

Indiglo aids in escape

Continued from page 1

the source.

The assailants then parked the car and fled, leaving the students locked in the trunk for approximately two hours before they managed to escape. The car was parked approximately one block from where they had originally been abducted, they told the source.

Constable Mike Shultz, media contact from the Kingston Police, confirmed the incident was reported to them. "[The victims] used their indiglo wrist watches to illuminate the trunk of the car and found the cable that releases the trunk lid," said Shultz.

The police were notified immediately after the pair's escape from the trunk and a report was filed.

The source said the victims hoped transaction records from the use of the bank cards will track the times of the cash withdrawals, and correspond with surveillance camera video footage, leading to an arrest of the perpetrators.

The suspects are described as one male and possibly one female. One of them had a small build and long hair. Both wore masks over their faces.

Shultz does not recall incidents of this sort occurring in Kingston in the past. "It certainly isn't something I have heard of," he said.

Shultz emphasised that people should always take precautions with personal safety. "Keep the doors locked... [only] roll the windows down a crack, especially if you don't know the people."

Louise Fish, director of Campus Security, offered some practical advice, "when you're in your car, lock it," she said. She also suggested that if someone knocks on your car door saying they need help do not open the door. "Tell them you'll call the police," said Fish. "Don't be that trusting."

sunday, april 4
7pm and 10pm
dunning auditorium

ASUS MOVIE THEATRE

Footloose in Canada

Student Class Fares

Vancouver	from $349
Calgary	from $299
Edmonton	from $299
Regina	from $349
Winnipeg	from $239
Halifax	from $249
Saint John	from $329
St. John's	from $299

Kingston Service

It's now easier than ever to get to Toronto!

- ✓ Via Rail's 6-Pak
- ✓ Up to 12 flights a day
- ✓ New Air Canada service

ODYSSEY TRAVEL
186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)
Lévy Travel 549-3553 Long Haul Group Travel 549-3561
Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

your ticket to ride!
Discounts up to 40%

Student Friendly Fares

Valid student card must be presented at time of purchase.

For schedule and fare information
call 613-547-4916
or 1-800-461-7661

trentway-wagar

ORIENTATION EVENING

If you missed the first event, please contact the School of Environmental Studies, 533-6602 for more information.

Room 1120, Biosciences Complex
April 8, 1999
7-9 pm

FIND OUT ABOUT HONOURS BSC OPTIONS IN:

- Environmental Biology
- Environmental Chemistry
- Environmental Geography
- Environmental Life Sciences

HONOURS BA PROGRAM: Environmental Science Medials

Come out and meet the faculty and DSC.
Free Refreshments!

Libraries low 'priority'

Continued from page 1

intended to make the libraries a "high priority" in the next capital campaign, outlining an initial goal of $25 million. According to McInnis, however, "as the capital campaign has evolved, the library has effectively slid in priority."

"The [end] goal is $25 million. That hasn't changed. The expectation following discussion with donors... is that $5 million may be a reasonable goal at this point in the campaign. This hasn't changed the [initial] goal of $25 million," Turpin added.

"Information is the cornerstone on which universities are built," Turpin said, stressing the importance of having a strong library system.

Hales echoed this sentiment, saying, "The library is the heart and soul of the university, without which we are an empty limestone shell."

This issue has met with concern from Queen's faculty. In a letter addressed to Principal Bill Leggett and included in the last Senate package, history professor

James Leith said he is concerned that Queen's is attracting students under false pretenses, "if we do not provide them with up-to-date sources." Leith's concern also stems from the fact that he is an "active researcher... constantly frustrated by the gaps in our collection and our inability to acquire the latest electronic sources."

Former faculty members have also expressed their concern to the administration. In a letter, Professor emeritus of German Anthony Riley said that "we must do more to attract either first-rate students or faculty in the long-term. If we do not improve our libraries... including staffing, electronic resources, and... the acquisition of books and serials, we will experience an inevitable decline into mediocrity."

Students also had mixed feelings on the Queen's library systems.

"I don't like how they don't have some of the scientific journals. They'll be listed as having it and then you'll look it up and it will be discontinued," said

Sarah Yakimowski, a second-year biology and computer science medial. "There's not many journals anymore, relative to other universities, or if they have them, they're just old issues."

"I think they're pretty good," said Jonanne Gage, a second-year biology student. "I really don't have too much trouble finding what I'm looking for."

Douglas Library at University and Union.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Calling all Queen's Journal contributors!

WHAT: Contributor photo
WHEN: Tuesday, April 6
at 5:30 p.m.

WHERE: The Journal House
272 Earl Street

Come immortalize yourself in the pages of Journal history...

Hot,
steamy,
SEX.

Got your attention?
Good.

We need you. We want you. We'll do anything, well, almost anything to get you to apply. Like this sensationalist marketing technique. But, please, don't hold that against us.

We're looking for a Production Manager, a Features Editor, a Supplements Editor, Sales Representatives, an Ads Manager and a Systems Manager.

Applications available at 272 Earl St. Call 533-2800 and ask for Sarah, Stefan or Mark for more information.

And You Thought YOU had great job opportunities in mind!

Don't land in some dead-end job. Get your foot in the door to some of the hottest companies in Toronto and the surrounding areas. We'll find you a great summer job so you can establish your network of contacts. Here's a list of just some of the business sectors that call on Pinstripe for impressive people with a desire to learn, grow and be financially rewarded.

- Financial/Accounting
- Investment Banking
- Advertising & P.R.
- Call Centre
- Telecommunications
- Retail/Sales
- Information Technology
- Human Resources

• Beer Tasting (Just Kidding!)
(Premium paid for Bilingual applicants)

Keep your learning curve on an upswing.
Call Pinstripe today to arrange your appointment.
(Our Service is Free to All Applicants)

P I N S T R I P E

Premium Temporary, Permanent & Contract Staffing

Call Sabrina at Pinstripe Central 416-777-9675
Call Jana at Pinstripe West 905-306-8405
Call Amy at Pinstripe East 416-279-1046

Do you think you can take care of business... care to prove it?

The Journal is still offering many business positions in which successful candidates may show their stuff, contribute to a great paper, gain invaluable experience and even earn a couple of dollars!

Available Positions:
Advertising Manager, Computer Systems Manager, Advertising Designers, Sales Reps and house cleaners

Please Contact Mark at 533-6711, email at journal@post.queensu.ca or simply stop by the Journal house at 272 Earl st. to pick up an application. NO EXPERIENCE REQUIRED!

Congratulations to:
Shannon Bell
Leah Bellamy
Jennifer Ross

Winners of the Queen's/Kingston Community Commitment Award

Honourable mention to: Karen Irvine, Doris Romano, Leah Anne Smythe

In Here

Race and Racism review

Dean of Arts and Science Robert Silverman is reviewing the course Race and Racism (IDIS 302*). The course was mandated by Queen's Senate in 1993 as an "elective, for-credit, interdisciplinary course on race and racism which the Dean would review after a three-year trial period." It was part of a series of recommendations from the Principal's Advisory Committee on Race Relations (February 1991) and the Ad Hoc Committee on Race Relations and Curriculum of the Faculty of Arts and Science (October 30, 1992) aimed at promoting anti-racist education at Queen's. The Dean is interested in hearing from all members of the Queen's community on this subject and on the role played in this broad mandate by IDIS 302*.

Continued from page 1

at Queen's. The Dean is interested in hearing from all members of the Queen's community on this subject and on the role played in this broad mandate by IDIS 302*.

Engineering students shine at competition

Queen's engineering students won at the Canadian Engineering Competition held in Montreal from March 19 to 21. Queen's finished second in the corporate design competition, and won two of four special prizes awarded by a jury of Quebec professors for engineering quality and technical expertise. The Queen's team also won prizes in disciplines representing engineering fundamentals, namely technical and scientific teaching. The event attracted 170 students from 25 engineering Faculties across Canada.

Orchid Mystique '99

The Kingston Orchid Society presents its annual Orchid Show and Sale at the Beechgrove Complex at the corner of King Street and Portsmouth Avenue on April 10 from 12:30 to 5 p.m. and again on Sunday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Dancing ladies, lady slippers and sprays of moth orchids in a rainbow of colours are yours to enjoy for only $4. Escorted children under 12 are admitted free and parking is free.

Out There

Conflict in Kosovo
NATO is increasing its bombing campaign following dismal hopes for a peace accord and a failure to slow down ethnic cleansing in Kosovo. Attempts to resolve the week-long conflict ended when NATO leaders rejected a proposal for resumed Yugoslavia negotiations after NATO ended bombing. Canada has doubled the number of its CF-18 Hornet warplanes in the NATO mission from six to 12. Ottawa also announced $10 million more in humanitarian aid for Kosovo refugees in addition to the $3.2 million pledged Monday. As reports of atrocities multiply, tens of thousands of refugees streamed out of Kosovo, fleeing Serbian attacks into surrounding Albania, Macedonia and the Yugoslav republic of Montenegro. Tuesday, due to the overwhelming influx of people seeking refuge, Macedonia was forced to close its main border crossing.

What are you planning to do with your science education

consider RADIATION SCIENCES

Why not consider a career in the radiation sciences? The Faculty of Medicine, University of Toronto is now offering a new joint degree/diploma program in radiation sciences, in partnership with The Michener Institute for Applied Health Sciences, with the following specialities:

- Nuclear Medicine Technology
- Radiological Technology
- Radiation Therapy

"Demand is increasing for radiation sciences professionals"

Application Deadline: April 30, '99

Info: Radiation Sciences Office
222 St. Patrick Street, Toronto M5T 1V4
Tel: (416) 596-3177 toll free 1-800-387-8066
Fax: (416) 596-3180
Email: radsinfo@staff.michener.on.ca

Shortage 'unfortunate'

people around." According to Pierce, most of the courses being cut are ones with multiple sections. "Some of the courses with two sections are being reduced to one," he said. "In effect, the variety of timetable options has been reduced." Pierce said he is most concerned about how the reductions will affect English students heading into their graduating year. "I want to make sure the fourth years get the courses they need to graduate," he said. "The selections those students make will be given the top priority." Jessica Simmons, Con-Ed '00, an English major entering fourth year, said she "noticed [the reductions] looking through the course calendar." "It's unfortunate," she added. "There is definitely less choice and that makes it difficult to tailor your program the way you want it."

Rebate. Rebate. Rebate.

Right now, you can take advantage of a $50.00 airtime credit when you buy our dual mode PCS Sony phone. Combine this saving with any of our affordable plans including our unlimited local evening and weekend option and you're all set to go wireless. This offer is valid from Feb 1 to March 31. Pick one up at your campus bookstore or reach us at www.clearnet.com/student or 1-888-248-5968. The future is trendy.

* Must activate within 10 days. Plans must be activated for a minimum of 30 days. Trade-in's used under licence from Clearnet Communications Inc.

Ace your finals!
Try
Wizard Wonder-Word
Association
using the
Chez Piggy Menu

Check it out...

- Frites: German inventor of French fries
- Wasabi: Aboriginal for "Hey man, what's happenin'"
- Nori nori: Japanese version of Pizza Pizza
- Tapenade: Lemonade-type drink made of old dance shoes
- Puttanesca: Golf club on the Italian Riviera
- Confit: A resident of KP
- Tajine: Small island in the South Pacific
- Tutti: A frilly ballet dress
- Aslago: Wild donkey of Chile
- Paté: A long time ago
- Muscovy: A group of lakes north of Toronto
- Salsa Verde: Spanish for St. Patrick's Day

What a deal!! All these useful words plus your 15% student discount*

And Good Luck in your exams!!

Chez Piggy 68R Princess St. 549-7673 *with ID

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

The editorials that appear in the space below represent the views of the editorial board of The Queen's Journal. The editorial board chooses the topics for discussion and arrives at the stated position through a democratic process.

Six feet under

WHO SAID YOU CAN'T FLOG A dead horse? Seven months after AMS President Tom Stanley held a funeral for accessible education, the administration is quietly working hard at burying the concept under even more tuition hikes. Meanwhile, our student government and campus media must have been so busy mourning the death of accessibility that no one even raised a peep about the new fees before they were voted on at Senate. While tuition hikes for Commerce and engineering were not unexpected, the lack of public discourse over 40 and 30 per cent hikes in those programs is alarming. At least Tom Stanley voiced an objection to hitting up current students for more than they planned for — AMS President-elect Sarah Corman, however, couldn't even stay for the entire Senate debate.

Unlike two years ago, hundreds of students did not file through the Senate meeting last week in protest, and nor will they protest at the Board of Trustees meeting unless the issue of accessibility is kept on the political agenda. Although it's unclear who is responsible for keeping students out of the loop on this issue, the administration, student government and campus media such as The Journal must all share some of the blame.

The administration, student government and campus media such as The Journal must all share some of the blame.

Of course, not all student representatives are opposed to the hikes; Commerce Society President Brenda Ha believes her Faculty will benefit from higher tuition. The administration even glibly pointed to a survey of Commerce students from last year that showed overwhelming support for tuition hikes. This survey, which was heavily criticized last year for its biased questions, explicitly included a laptop computer as part of the increased costs. This year, the 40 per cent tuition hike does not include a laptop computer, so it should not be taken for granted that Commerce students support such a significant fee increase.

Transcending differences

DON'T READ TOO MUCH INTO THE gender-specific icons on change-room doors: the world cannot be simply divided into stick-figures and stick-figures with a skirt. Not everyone entitled to use the female or male wash-room fits into the traditional dichotomy of the sexes.

In Canada, the law protects the rights of people who are biologically transitioning from male to female or female to male. On Queen's campus, the administration has taken an important step towards respecting those rights: accommodating transgendered individuals in the Physical Education Centre change-rooms. To do otherwise would be to violate the basic human rights of a group that is often misunderstood on campus and in Canadian society in general.

Some members of the Queen's community, however, have expressed a valid concern that the policy will conflict with the need for women to feel safe in the change-rooms. The very presence of an individual with male anatomy in the women's changeroom, regardless of their stage of transitioning, will make some women uncomfortable.

While the comfort levels of women in such a private space is indeed important, it does not justify closing the door to transgendered individuals. With time and education, people will learn to respect the rights of a group that is only now becoming visible in mainstream society.

In the meantime, the Queen's administration should continue its policy of accommodating the needs of transgendered people on campus. These efforts, which will be guided by the recommendations of the Transgendered/Transsexual Policy Group, are a progressive step towards making Queen's a more equitable place for all people.

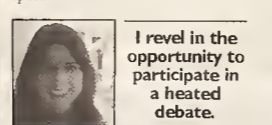

The existence of such a unique policy group is an encouraging sign that Queen's will soon be ready to answer an even tougher question than PEC change-rooms: who can live in Chown Hall.

Do I have to write one?

THIS SIGNED EDITORIAL WAS DUE about 46 hours ago, but I've been given an extension. This generous concession is accompanied by a threat that if I try to get out of writing this piece, my name and picture will run in the centre of a quarter page of blank space.

excited about the prospect of writing signed eds as I was about filling the News section twice per week.

I revel in the opportunity to participate in a heated debate.

There was something greatly appealing about the potential members of editorial board have to make students laugh, to move the Queen's community, to generate controversy, or to present an entirely new perspective on a familiar issue. However, every time I looked at the schedule and discovered my signed ed was due in hours, I panicked. The pressure to say something innovative and stimulating was too great.

So instead of directing my energy toward choosing one brilliant topic and writing about it, I channeled it towards begging, bribing, or blackmailing other members of ed board to take the duty off my hands. It almost worked this time too; almost, but not quite... and once again I find myself unable to choose just one topic on which I can summarize my opinion in less than 500 words. So here are a few: I would prefer to live in a communist society than a capitalist one; I think people who live in a warmer climate are generally happier; AMS commissioners make too much money; the world will not end on December 31, 1999; education is not in danger of becoming inaccessible, it already is; the Fireside Grill is ridiculously overpriced for a student cafeteria; call display was a dangerous invention; the institution of marriage is inherently flawed; I wish I were 16 again; I believe that some people truly possess psychic powers; and boxers are definitely better than briefs.

No one seems to understand why I find such difficulty in what appears to be a simple task, and, no, it's not that I have nothing to say. I revel in the opportunity to participate in a heated debate and am always willing to stand behind my beliefs on even the most sensitive or controversial issues. In fact, when I started my term as News Editor last spring, I was as

BY FIONA STEVENSON

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Helzer

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Crosbie
Lilian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Beltringer

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Krat

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fusella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourne
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL
Thursday, April 1, 1999 • Issue 39 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright ©1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of the University. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Green Community Press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganouke, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-Editors-in-Chief. Please inquire about further reference policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N8. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800; advertising: 613-533-6711. Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Website: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000. Issue 40 will be published on Thursday, April 8, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Geoff Ashenburt, Crystal Bona, Maggie Butkaycz, Douglas Reid Gierula, Sonja Grgar, Barbara Harvey, Brock Jones, Mike Kostoff, Ellen Lee, Erik Missio, Jennifer Paterson, Neate Sagar.

OPINIONS

Through coloured lenses

MANY BELIEVE WESTERN LIBERAL democracy has emerged from the ashes of the 20th century as the dominant philosophy of the new millennium. Not facing any plausible ideological competitor in world politics, its ascendancy suggests that perhaps the "end of history," as Francis Fukuyama put it, has indeed arrived. Having defeated Soviet totalitarianism only a decade ago, Western liberalism stands triumphantly alone in the world as the model for other societies to mold themselves after.

One cannot espouse multiculturalism and expect students to see each other as individual human beings.

Recently we have seen, however, the emergence of a very serious intellectual challenge to liberal democracy that vigorously and mercilessly attacks its very core beliefs. In its own words, it proposes to radically "redefine" democracy in a most disturbing manner. This challenge is multiculturalism.

As a set of political ideas, multiculturalism is much more than an effort to try and expand people's cultural horizons. It is an attempt to replace the system of liberal democracy — based upon individual citizens making personal, rational decisions — with a system of cultural democracy in which the fundamental units are ethnic groups and cultural blocs. People are taught to view themselves as part of these "collectives" rather than as free-thinking individuals, each independent of one another.

It is a fundamentally wrong view of human nature. At its essence is the belief that one's race determines one's identity. It is the belief that one's convictions, values and character are determined not by the judgment of one's mind but by one's perceived cultural heritage or "blood."

The spread of this perverse logic leads to the destruction of an individual's confidence in his own mind. Such an individual then anxiously seeks a sense of identity by clinging to some group, abandoning his autonomy and his rights, allowing his ethnic group to tell him what to believe. Because he thinks of himself as a racial entity, he feels "himself" only among others of the same race. We are not all Canadians — rather we are African-Canadians, Asian-Canadians or Euro-Canadians. The lines separating us are drawn ever more clearly and endeavors to bring us together are met with increased opposition.

Such an idea — that culture is carried through blood — has more in common with Nazism than any democratic philosophy. Of course, the diversity movement claims that its goal is to extinguish racism and build tolerance of differences. This is a complete sham. One cannot teach students that their identity is determined by skin color and expect them to become colorblind.

One cannot espouse multiculturalism and expect students to see each other as individual human beings. One cannot preach the need for self-esteem while destroying the faculty which makes it possible: reason.

Advocates of "diversity" are true racists in the basic meaning of that term: they see the world through coloured lenses. To the multiculturalist, race is what counts — for values, for thinking, for human identity in general.

Through some twisted irony, multiculturalism makes the desire for "colour-blindness" evil, if not impossible.

Though dressed in progressive language, these ideas are in fact deeply reactionary. We often hear of "language codes" on many US universities designed to forbid the use of "offensive" language by students that would upset members of a certain culture. Free speech takes a back seat to the omnipotence of the thought-police. Real diversity is supposedly the goal, but abject conformity is what is truly desired.

The diversity movement claims that its goal is to extinguish racism and build tolerance of differences. This is a complete sham.

Despite its pretentious claims, multiculturalism is a backward and narrow-minded paradigm. If we are to truly embrace the 21st century with the hope of putting ethnic and racial differences behind us, we must continue to believe in the superiority of the rational individual, not be caught in the destructive mire of mythical cultural allegiances. As John O'Sullivan has pointed out, like all grandiose schemes of social engineering, multiculturalism cannot ultimately succeed. But it can cause a lot of damage in the course of failing.

BROCK JONES
ARTS '00

Letters to the Editors

Hey Keith, leave Bill alone

Dear Editors,

I have just finished reading Keith Gerein's editorial entitled "Dear Bill Leggett" and I feel compelled to respond. Keith's ability to point the finger at one particular person whom many love to hate is quite original, but I honestly don't believe that he has taken a good long look at the situation. Tuition has indeed risen significantly over the four years that I have been at Queen's and I don't like it any more than the next guy. However, this huge dip into the pockets of students is not isolated to Queen's University, nor to the malevolent workings of Bill Leggett and his associates.

This huge dip into the pockets of students is not isolated to Queen's University, nor to the malevolent workings of Bill Leggett and his associates.

Let us begin with where the seed of the problem has been planted. It is no mystery that the Harris government has slashed education budgets and has left universities with far less money to operate with. Thus, all universities are presented with a financial deficit that must somehow be filled. Since money obviously does not grow on trees, post-secondary institutions have been forced to investigate alternative sources of income to keep operations in order and quality at the highest rates. Raising tuition has been taken as one of these options, and this is a big kick in the butt for students, no matter how necessary. I agree with this.

However, to state that "no substantial alternatives have been attempted" is unfair and untrue. Has Keith thought about alumni support, Queen's Telefundraising, corporate sponsorship or the brand-spankin' new "Campaign for Queen's?" Sure it's a pain in the arse to be phoned at home and asked for money, but it has to come from somewhere. Also, Queen's is lucky to get some pretty big bucks from both private donations and companies who have the cash to spare, or conversely, invest. I agree that the tuition increases have been high and difficult to afford; however, other measures have been taken, in fact quite aggressively, to raise money for the university.

To state that no improvements have been made to Queen's since 1993 is ridiculous. What about the new Ban Rich cafeteria, the BioSciences Complex, the revamped JDUC or the improved PEC? If you are referring specifically to the quality of education itself, I would challenge you to tell us how it could be improved, apart from smaller class sizes. Queen's still maintains a reputation as a high-quality university, and I think it is much easier to sit back and complain than to appreciate what we do have. As for Keith's references to the decay of "accessibility and diversity," explain, please!

I'm sure there are many of you reading this very letter thinking "Wow, she is naive." I am not denying that the cost of education is crazily high. I agree, it's shitty. However, as someone who has always had a part-time job during the school year and who worked three jobs this past summer in order to be able to pay tuition, I know first hand that students can take part in their education financially, with or without parental support.

Queen's maintains a reputation as a high-quality university, and I think it is much easier to sit back and complain than to appreciate what we do have.

I also believe that if you really want to, and if you're willing to budget a little, you can graduate with very little debt. I am not a "rich Queen's kid" and I do not live on Daddy's credit card. I just understand that there are some things you must work for. So in light of all the wrongdoings of Queen's administration and the slumping quality of the university, I challenge you, Keith Gerein, to come up with a better plan for Queen's.

Alison White
Artsci '99

Continued on page 10

talking

HEADS

How are you spending your day in the sun?

"Helping out the Kids 4 Kids." Andrew Medd Comm '99

"Melting chocolates and throwing pennies." Shane Duff Comm '99

"Not studying." Ted Goldhorpe Comm '99

"Harassing strangers for money." Walker Young Comm '99

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 9

UBS symptomatic of larger problems

Dear Editors,

The Used Bookstore, also known as the thrifty "UBS exchange," has fit the bill for my complete and utter dissatisfaction. It is poorly run, unprofitable and useless.

To my dismay, I did not find out about my sold textbook for three weeks, as bookstore policy requires that I come in and check "once in a while." The girl behind the counter told me that I was owed $60. Instead of being paid, the bureaucracy of the bookstore dictates that I wait two weeks for my check. I returned, two weeks later, only to be once again disappointed.

Returning every week for the next four weeks, I was repeatedly angered. After the staff finished chatting about their "wicked" weekend, they would rifle through a flimsy cardboard box of unclaimed cheques. Mine was never in it. Nothing else productive was done. It just "wasn't there, sorry!" (Their face gleaming with an empty-headed stupidity)

Susan, the unaccountable manager, has reassured me a number of times that "it'll be in next week, I promise." It never is though. Her apathetic attitude towards my problem is annoying.

I feel that the UBS is a good representation of all the various AMS organizations, which are ridiculously unprofitable. If you sell something for more than you bought it for, shouldn't you make money?

The Used Bookstore... has fit the bill for my complete and utter dissatisfaction. It is poorly run, unprofitable and useless.

Similar to real federal governments, anyone who has the brains and skills to run the place doesn't have the time to bother. None of these "managers" are ever accountable for anything. My tuition pays for the inevitable debt that these organizations accumulate each year, not to mention the grotesque salaries of the staff.

If money is lost, it will be next year's problem. In the real world, these people would get a kick in the ass if they didn't make a large enough profit - let alone create a debt. I loathe the AMS. They never asked me if I even care. Who's Where, What's What, What Where When... Who cares?

Jeff Conlin
Sci '00

Interested in a Career in Teaching?

Consider Montessori education. It is a child-centred approach that offers teaching opportunities world-wide. Toronto Montessori Institute has been accredited by the Montessori Accreditation Council for Teacher Education. MACTE is an autonomous international accrediting agency for Montessori Teacher Education Courses. Toronto Montessori Institute has been training teachers for 28 years.

Our course leads to 2 diplomas qualifying you to teach children 3 to 12 years old, applying Montessori educational theory and methodology.

Prerequisite: Undergraduate Degree
Course duration: August 1999 - June 2000

Enrolment is limited. For further information please call Pam Debbo, Registrar, at (905) 889-9201
e-mail: pdebbo@toronto-montessori.on.ca

TORONTO MONTESSORI INSTITUTE
8569 Bayview Avenue, Richmond Hill, Ontario L4B 3M7

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

Too much partying

Dear Editors,

Over the last three years I have noticed that Queen's is becoming more and more like a "party school." People just do not care about their studies as much as they used to or as much as they should. Now I am not saying that no one is allowed to have a good time but it's getting out of control. Every other week there is a formal, semiformal or smoker somewhere. But the students are not the only ones to blame.

A larger amount of criticism must go towards the administration and the AMS. A few weeks ago there was an article in one of the university's newspapers regarding the Campaign for Queen's. They would like to encourage more social activities here at Queen's. Hello! What did I just mention above? Queen's can't get any more social than this... there are three pubs on campus within a matter of a couple of blocks, not to mention all the stuff that goes on down town without any interference from the AMS.

Why don't The Campaign for Queen's people campaign for what students originally came here for: an education. How about doing something about the Queen's network that keeps on crashing all the time. Why do the libraries open after the PEC and close before it? True there aren't a lot of students in the library at 10 p.m. but there aren't more than 50 students in the gym at 11 p.m. either.

How about campaigning for Queen's outside Canada... no one knows about this place in Saudi Arabia, Pakistan, England... what makes U of T, or McGill or University of BC more famous than us? I'll tell you what: they concentrate on their academic research more than us. I found out one of the most exciting projects here: there is a lab of about 50 people on the top floor of the Biosciences Complex that is working with NASA regarding the Missions to Mars project. This lab also happens to be the largest one in the world. But no one knows about it except for the 75 people who took the courses offered in the winter term.

We don't even advertise ourselves to us anymore. I haven't heard of any interesting seminars being presented lately at the beginning of any of my lectures. The only people who come are those either saying "vote for me..." or "there's a so and so smoker at so and so..."

I could probably go on for pages about the faults at Queen's but anyone who takes the time to read this letter can probably come up with their own stories and complaints. I am not complaining because I get a kick out of this but because it bothers me and because I (and maybe other students) feel like I have basically thrown away a good chunk on money and time for something that we did not want.

Burhan Survery
Arsci '00

Clearing the air

Dear Editors,

After reading the article that appeared in the Friday, March 26, 1999 edition of The Journal entitled "Senate Approves Tuition Hikes," I felt that my position on the issue was misconstrued and so wanted to clarify this with Journal readers.

It is generally understood that in articles and news briefs, much situational context is lost. What was not included in Jocelyn Laporte's piece was that in February, ComSoc executive were asked to attend a meeting with administration to discuss the issue of tuition.

Four members of the Commerce Society executive attended a meeting with the Dean, the undergraduate office, and members of faculty, where administration disclosed their intentions to ask Senate approval of tuition increases for the 1999-2000 academic year.

The four of us asked the administration very difficult questions about alternatives to tuition increases, sponsorship, what the money was to be used for, bursaries and scholarships, accessibility issues, etc. The team of students present at this meeting fought for students, and accessibility issues, as we always have the best interests of Commerce students in mind at all times. After our list of questions was exhausted, we were satisfied that we raised our concerns with administration and that these issues would be considered in the weeks to come before the Senate meeting.

Shortly following this meeting, the administration also held a meeting for the Class of '02, who have imposed upon them the largest increase in tuition at 40%. There, questions were answered, and input and feedback was solicited from these students as well.

Through conversations with Commerce students, it has been agreed upon by many that technology initiatives will teach our students valuable computer skills, thus giving us a competitive advantage that other schools have not equipped their students with.

In analyzing alternatives and exhausting sponsorship avenues, tuition increases as a last resort seem necessary for cost recovery of money already spent on technology initiatives, to perform technical upgrades, and to continue training faculty members to use the technology in the classroom.

It is definitely agreed that tuition increases are painful and call into question concerns about accessibility and the issue of the rising cost of education. However, the undergraduate office has expended, and will continue to expend much time and resources into ensuring that funds for bursaries and scholarships are made available to Commerce students.

As a student who has supported herself financially all throughout university, I understand the cost and strain of paying for a university education. That is why it is critical at this point to ensure that the value technology is adding to the program is being realized, and to work with administration to provide a means for students to come to, and stay in the Commerce program.

Brenda Ha
Outgoing President
Commerce Society

SCIENCE

Focus on locusts

The research seems obscure, but bugs do provide answers

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

AT FIRST GLANCE, SOME OF THE scientific experiments performed by Queen's researchers may seem a little strange. For example, Mel Robertson, a professor of physiology and psychology, carefully toasts locusts in ventilated plastic containers at 45 degrees Celsius. He observes changes in their behaviour, and after a recovery period at room temperature, he proceeds to "chop 'em up and stick micro-electrodes in them." Robertson's novel method of chopping 'em up definitely kills the locust, but it preserves the ion currents in its minute brain, so that he can actually observe "functional" locust neurons responding to the after-effects of the slight scorching.

Robertson's locust experiments are more that just strangely interesting, however. They're on the cutting edge of important research with practical applications. Robertson and his colleague Jan-Marino Ramirez at the University of Chicago are studying how "heat shock" affects the locust nervous system in particular, but the same phenomenon is believed to occur in many life-forms, including humans.

Heat shock stimulates the production of special proteins that protect important parts of a cell from the harmful effects of high temperature and other stresses. As mentioned in Robertson and Ramirez's article in the February 1999 edition of the Journal of Neurophysiology, the heat-shocked locusts "showed no evidence of neural or behavioural impairment and were alert, walking, and jumping, apparently normally, before dissection." Such protective proteins are generating a lot of interest partly because of their potential in human therapeutics. For instance, heat shock proteins might be able to help protect the brain from the damage caused by a stroke.

Mel Robertson and a great big plastic locust. (Mel's the one with the beard.)

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Although individual heat shock proteins have been characterized and studied extensively, Robertson and Ramirez's research is the first to demonstrate hard evidence linking heat shock to long-lasting alterations in behaviour and neuron functioning. As Robertson explained, the locust flight system "operates in a range of 24 to 42 [degrees] normally, but if you heat-shock them it goes up to 50-something." The two scientists are trying to correlate this observable change in behaviour with specific current changes induced in the locust brain.

Please see Locusts on page 13

Making machines emote

BY SONJA GRGAR

IMAGINE THE FOLLOWING: YOU FIND yourself boarding a plane and a seductive voice addresses you from behind asking if you needed anything. You quickly turn with your best "to die for" smile, hoping to spot a handsome flight attendant standing at your service. Your romantic fantasy is dashed, however, when you realize that the soulful voice is coming from a computer that was built into the plane to assist the passengers. Recent University of Florida research has created computerized voice synthesizers that have the ability to convey various human emotional states, thus transforming what used to be only a science fiction fantasy into a realistic, and soon probably commonly used feature of everyday life.

D'Arcy Haskins Truluck of University of Florida designed GALE, an emotive voice synthesizer system, for her master's degree project in computer and information science and engineering. Haskins Truluck delved into psychological studies to understand how various linguistic variables translate into our perception of emotion in speech including pitch, volume, accent, vowel length and the speed of word delivery.

Haskins Truluck's program has the capacity to portray five different emotional states: fear, sadness, anger, happiness and neutrality. The same word spoken in each of the emotions will have a unique vocal variable combination that humans usually associate only with that particular emotion. For example, a word expressed with sadness will have the pitch and the pitch range decreased, as well as a gain in nasalization, whereas uttering it in anger would mean the increase in the average pitch and pitch range, as well as the more pronounced loudness and breathiness. In its original design to help speech-disabled people to get their emotions across more effectively, a person would only need to type in the desired words, choose the appropriate emotion, and then press the "translate" button on the synthesizer screen.

Please see Can on page 13

Science Spectrum

Science news from around the world and beyond

Pot doesn't increase accident risk: UofT

A recent University of Toronto study suggests that taking moderate quantities of marijuana does not significantly increase a driver's risk of causing an accident. While pot does impair a person's ability to drive, says researcher Alison Smiley, it does not have the effect on judgement that alcohol does. She says that drivers who are high are aware of their impairment and drive more cautiously, whereas drunk drivers drive more recklessly. The finding is the result of a meta-analysis of traffic accident statistics from the United States and Australia.

Pulling oxygen out of thin air

Engineers at NASA have succeeded in producing oxygen from a simulated Martian atmosphere with eyes towards reducing the cost of a crewed mission to Mars. If oxygen could be produced on Mars, it would dramatically reduce the amount of the gas that astronauts would need to bring with them for breathing and as propellant. The experiment "chamber" used in the process is a toonie-sized ceramic disk sandwiched between two platinum electrodes, heated to 750 degrees Celsius. When the "Mars mix" is pumped into the unit, the ceramic disk catalyzes the reaction converting carbon dioxide to carbon monoxide and oxygen.

'I'm a personality prototype. You can tell can't you?'

In Douglas Adams' The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy we meet Morvin, an android programmed with GPP, Genuine People Personalities. Morvin's ability to convey a wide range of emotions, from melancholy to deep despair, with remarkable subtlety is exemplified in this passage:

'With a microsecond pause, and a finely calculated micromodulation of pitch and timbre - nothing you could actually take offence of - Morvin monoged to convey his utter contempt and horror of all things human.'

A TRADITION OF EXCELLENCE

PLAYER'S RACING

FOLLOW THE TEAM: WWW.PLAYERS-RACING.COM

Locusts get roasted

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Continued from page 11

Robertson's research illustrates, once again, the importance of insects (and invertebrates in general) to human biology. Although cats and mice are much more similar to humans, these groundbreaking experiments could not have been performed as successfully in a mammalian model. For one thing, the part of the locust brain that Robertson looks at has only 4,000 neurons, and all of them can be individually identified. This makes analysis much simpler, because "you can build up circuit diagrams that control particular behaviours," while mapping the brain of a mouse would be close to impossible. Furthermore, locust behaviours, unlike those of mice or cats, are resistant to dissection. Cut up a locust and stick electrodes in it and it will pretty much go about its business. This is important because "you need to be able to link what's happening in the brain with what the brain is trying to control, which is behaviour, and you're more likely to be able to monitor nerve activity at the same time that an insect is behaving."

Insect research in general has been extremely fruitful for biologists. According to Robertson, "a large number of the major conceptual advances in our understanding of how nervous systems operate have been based on invertebrate work initially." Similarly, a good deal of what we know today about genetics was first discovered in the fruit fly. It has now been suggested that even the complex human immune system can be modelled by the common cockroach. Insects make excellent model systems, but insect research also has many other important applications for humans. For example, Virginia Walker and Peter Davies, two other Queen's researchers, have discovered an antifreeze protein in the spruce budworm that may end up in our ice-cream some day. Similarly, spider silk proteins are being studied by materials engineers who would like to produce flexible but incredibly strong super-materials. Even the butterfly has a contribution to make to high technology, as researchers at Tufts University are modelling microelectronic chips after the intricate butterfly wing, whose surface always heats evenly.

Insect research may seem esoteric at first, but there is almost always a human application. Whether one is researching basic biological systems, like Robertson is doing, or isolating useful insect proteins, or finding engineering inspiration, insect studies are making a remarkable contribution to human life.

Can a computer cry?

Continued from page 11

How humans learn to make a connection between a particular "linguistic formula" and a certain emotion is somewhat puzzling. Is something of that ability inborn, or is it all established at a certain stage in our development? Does individuality have a place here? Do different people sometimes assign the identical linguistic pattern to different emotions? Haskins Truluck's tests of the GALE system indicate that the latter may be possible: the results revealed a differential pattern of recognition, where sadness was recognized 83 per cent of the time, and happiness only 27 per cent of the time. Why do we have a more or less universal linguistic pattern for some, and a very loose and undefined one for other emotions?

The invention and implementation of this emotional speech synthesizer introduces more than a set of intriguing questions. It, in a sense, calls for a redefinition of our humanity. It demonstrates that, given sufficient ingenuity and effort, it is possible to penetrate deep into the essential elements of what we consider to be a uniquely human feature, to learn its secrets, and to apply them to technology. Emotion suddenly fuses with rationality as the emotional expression in computer speech. An element generally associated with human subjectivity, turns out to be a product of an almost mathematical combination of linguistic units. Doesn't the possibility of translating some natural human traits to technology change how we perceive "human nature?"

While perhaps forcing us to reconsider our own self-definition, emotive voice synthesizer has an enormous practical potential for humans. Haskins Truluck hopes to expand the synthesizer's capabilities with more nuanced emotions, as well as to give the disabled people the ability to create personalized voices through the variation of multiple voice parameters. Other benefits include the use of the now more animated voice synthesizer in aircrafts, elevators, and cars, especially when conveying urgent or safety information. Even businesses may profit in the future, where "conversing" with a computer that has an emotive voice synthesizer really strengthens the human attention span during the interaction.

In the ever-raging debate about the relationship between technology and humanity, the ability to convey emotion in verbal communication has become one of the linking points between these two spheres.

— with files from John Bowman

city of kingston
utilities kingston
water sewer gas electricity networks
all your utility services under one roof

WIN $1,000 FROM UTILITIES KINGSTON

EMERGENCY SERVICE

YOUR ACCOUNT
CONNECT DISCONNECT
METER READINGS
PAYMENT & DEPOSITS
TERMS & CONDITIONS

RATES

CUSTOMER SERVICE

YOU ASKED

YEAR 2000

CAREERS

SEARCH

ABOUT US

CONTACT US

HOME

To enter, simply request your disconnect/connect for utility services online or by using the automated telephone system between April 6th and May 7th and you could win a $1,000.

SAVE TIME

Save yourself a trip into our offices at the north end of the city. Regrettably, we also have some long wait times at our customer service counter due to the heavy traffic volumes at this time of year — so disconnecting/connecting online or over the phone saves you time for all those other last minute things you need to do.

MORE CONVENIENT

You may disconnect/connect online or over the phone any time or any day you wish. Our electronic application service is available when you want it, 24-hours per day, 7-days per week.

IF YOU HAVE AN OUTSIDE METER

If your utility meters are outside of your dwelling, then there is no need to meet our meter technician. Just disconnect online or over the phone and that's all there is to it.

IF YOU HAVE AN INACCESSIBLE METER

If your meter is inside your dwelling and we do not have access, simply advise us of the date you wish to vacate or move into the dwelling. Enter the date in the easy-to-use online form or in our telephone voicemail system and we'll send a meter technician to meet you and disconnect/connect the service.

CONNECTING SERVICE

If you know the address you will be moving into in the fall, apply for connection of service either online or by using the automated telephone system and you will double your chances of winning in May. Additional information may be required. We will contact you prior to the requested connection date.

BILLING

If you are disconnecting your service, we will be taking actual readings of your meter in the last week of April to ensure you pay only for your actual consumption. Your final bill will be mailed to your forwarding address.

If you require additional information, please contact our customer service group at 546-1181 or visit our website at www.utilitieskingston.com. Our office hours are 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday. All in person inquiries are handled at 211 Counter Street.

Contest winner will be notified by May 30th 1999.

METER READINGS

When your account is active, you may also submit meter readings online or over the phone. It's an easy and convenient way to make sure you're billed only for actual consumption.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

King Cobb grooves at Clark Guelph quintet dishes out quality sounds

King of Clark: King Cobb Steelie rocks at the QEA's final free concert.

CONCERT REVIEW

BY GEOFF ASHENHURST

Intoxicating. Transcendental. Groovin'.

To the hundreds of people who didn't opt out of the QEA fee, but decided to sit at home on Tuesday night: you missed out. You missed out on what could only be described as a musical experience. It may sound cliché, like the kind of mindless praise you're used to reading, but I don't know how else to describe King Cobb Steelie's performance.

Their music begs you to close your eyes and allow your senses to be overwhelmed. Don't think, just listen and you can't help but feel. Space rock, experimental, call them what you will, every song is a groove. Every groove will break your heart into a million pieces. Every millionth piece of your heart will find new life in their songs. Part of me wanted to join the three audacious souls on the dance floor, but didn't dare for fear that I'd fall down, overcome by the vertigo inspired by the music.

That the experience is such a visceral one is due in part to the unique makeup of the band. One heavily-reverbed lead guitar, another adding subtle melodies, an out-of-control bassist, a tight drummer, and an unbelievable DJ/percussionist combine to make sounds so rich that it was hard to accept that they were being conceived on stage. Even as a musician I was still dumbfounded at times.

Once again it all comes down to the groove. They have perfected the art of the jam, letting the music take on a life of its own and letting it go where it pleases. However, this recklessness is just an illusion created by the power of the music — they are definitely in control. Their songs possess a level of sophistication that transcends that of most popular music today, moving through vast levels of dynamics like a modern symphony. The pacing of each song is carefully restricted, coming to a climax that hits you like a tidal wave.

The addition of former Crash Vegas vocalist Michelle McAdorey has enriched the band with a new dimension. Her haunting voice creates harmonies that linger in your consciousness, inspiring potent imagery, particularly during a gripping rendition of their hit "Rational."

You may not believe anything I've just told you; you may think that I'm a little fucked up (I swear no drugs were involved in the evening), but that's okay — you'll probably sit at home again anyway.

Oh yeah, Ghetto Concept opened up (for all of 20 minutes), and I vaguely remember thinking that they put on an energetic show (fists were pumping), but their rhymes were weak. Unlike Rascalz, I couldn't find anything to justify the hype surrounding them. There was nothing especially innovative — just another Hip Hop band spewing out the usual battle rhetoric, with Toronto and Rexdale substituting for New York and Staten Island. A DJ that touches the tables more than once during the show couldn't hurt either.

Hot Liquid Zine warms soul

MAGAZINE REVIEW

Liquid
Liquid Publishing

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

Not being one for the 'alterno-mags,' I wasn't exactly sure what to think when a friend of mine handed me a copy of Liquid — the latest in a long line of entertainment/travel/fashion/music magazines. Weighing in at 170 pages, however, this latest dinner guest has a lot to add to the party.

The magazine begins with

Please see Heavy on page 16

Rotate this!

Blur
13
Virgin records

BY DOUGLAS REID GIERULA

Blur has endured many years of near-success in the US, coming mighty close a couple years ago with the catchiest twominute ditty of the decade, "Song 2." "Woo-hoo!" became the summer's battle cry, then the advertising song du jour.

Now, the apparently unsuspicious quarter returns with 13. With this disc, we're a long way from "Girls and Boys" and "Country House."

On 13, Blur works with entirely new textures — highlighted by the single "Tender" and its gospel-meets-John Lennon's "Give Peace A Chance" undertones. It would be difficult to peg a "Blur sound" from 13, for it moves from the mellow and forlorn "1992" to aural violence with "Bugman" and finally "Coffee & TV," marked by the lo-fi aesthetic the band dabbled with on 1997's self-titled effort, all with the guitar effects pedals turned on full.

The most beautiful track on 13 is "No Distance Left to Run." This ode to lost love (singer Damon Albarn split with his longtime girlfriend, Elastica's Justine Frischmann, prior to recording the album) begins softly with Albarn uttering, "It's over, you don't need to tell me," then telling his departed beloved, "Hope you're with someone who makes you feel safe when you're sleeping tonight/ I won't kill myself trying to stay in your life." "No Distance Left to Run" is one of the most soul-baring numbers Blur has ever written; no coyness, no veiled references, just the pain that accompanies a breakup.

Albarn's new personal songwriting, combined with Graham

Coxon's relentless inventiveness, even unrestrained, can produce some pretty remarkable stuff. It's not a lot of fun to listen to, but it's ultimately the most compelling music Blur has ever made.

the miller stain limit
Radiate
A&M Records

BY LILIAN KIM

There's something about the Canadian rock sound that is hard to describe. It's a certain airy, simple, raw feature that almost every rock band shoots for on almost every Maple marked case. Just listen to the Killjoys or Our Lady Peace and maybe the whole concept behind the miller stain limit will seem more familiar than you thought it would.

The album Radiate starts like a story with a beginning that pretty much sums up the rest of the album's personality. The guitar-solo friendly first track "This Day Is Not For Me" sets up the rest of CD. Point blank, the first song is like the fifth song is like the seventh song, in that they sound like each other — only with tempo change of course.

The Canadian band does attempt to slow things down in the album, with harmony tracks like "Thin Ice," which is slow and relaxing. But it's difficult to celebrate the band's success at originality, especially when artists such as Ben Harper play the strings quickly and slowly with more natural beauty and versatility. It seems like the miller stain limit is only imitating what's been done while failing to realize it at the same time.

Primary songwriter and frontman J. Miller sounds very much like Our Lady Peace frontman Raine Maida, only less nasally. The band is, well, the band and pretty much vulnerable to being replaced.

Other rock music criticisms focus on one particular aspect that is hard to veer away from — three chord galore. Sure, many musicians use the expendable technique and manipulate it to create the ultimate sound, but unfortunately the miller stain limit refuses to go beyond the triad. And this means Radiate becomes just another rock CD to rub off.

Robbie Williams
The Ego Has Land
Capitol Records

Robbie Williams
The Ego Has Land
Capitol Records

BY ERIK MISSIO

All right, let's just cut to the chase, shall we? I enjoyed this

Please see Rotate This on page 16

The Mod Squad fraud Action flick fails to deliver exciting adventure

In line: The Mod Squad, Giovanni Ribisi, Claire Danes and Omar Epps, wait for action.

MOVIE REVIEW

BY ELLEN LEE

As a member of the audience quipped after the movie had ended, "Let's put it this way — it wasn't horrible." That pretty much sums up how movie-goers will feel after seeing The Mod Squad. Starring Claire Danes, Giovanni Ribisi and Omar Epps, the film, directed by Scott Silver, is among a slew of new teenage films such as Cruel Intentions and Go.

The Mod Squad is based upon the TV series of the same name, which aired in the late sixties to early seventies. Like most other people my age, I had never before seen an episode of the series and had not heard the phrase Mod Squad except in passing. This established, I entered the theatre with no expectations and came out having been somewhat entertained.

The Mod Squad refers to three fashionably-dressed criminals who have been granted a chance to redeem themselves by working undercover with the police. The sullen and uncooperative trio consisting of Linc (Epps), once convicted of arson, Julie (Danes), a former drug addict charged with assault, and Pete (Ribisi), a bad-boy convicted of robbery, are partnered with an unimpressed police force. Due to the Squad's youthfulness and their acquired street-smarts, they are able to get into local Los Angeles bars, nightclubs and underground operations that the police cannot. The almost too simple plot goes like this: Julie, Pete and Linc are told to investigate a nightclub, out of which a teenage prostitution ring is suspected of operating. While Pete and Linc work the floor and Julie poses as a waitress, the trio soon discover that there is more going on than meets the eye. Before long, the trio, with their designer clothing and knowledge of the streets, unravel a conspiracy involving a shady drug operation and cover-ups in high places.

Although touted as a crime drama, it isn't terribly suspenseful or action-packed, and some parts towards the middle even drag on.

The screenplay and plot of the movie are quite basic and lack imagination. Although touted as a crime drama, it isn't terribly suspenseful or action-packed, and some parts towards the middle really drag on. It was amusing to note that although the members of the Squad are supposedly experts in crime (and thus criminal investigation,) their main investigative skills consist of creeping around, eavesdropping on people giving away secrets, and taping confessions with microcassette recorders while hiding behind walls. The film does have its moments, however. Comic relief is provided by Michael Lerner who plays an overweight dancing crime lord, and Ribisi, whose character steadily quips one-liners. The dark atmosphere of the film proves also to be quite intoxicating.

Epps provides the best portrayal of character with his silent-but-strong dominant role in the squad.

One would expect the acting in the movie to be of exceptionally high calibre with names like Danes (Romeo & Juliet) and Ribisi (Saving Private Ryan, The Other Sister). In actuality, there is nothing spectacular about their acting. They have both given stronger performances in other roles and their characters in The Mod Squad were not developed enough for them to further explore. Epps provides the best portrayal of character with his silent-but-strong dominant role in the squad. His calm intensity contrasts nicely with the unstableness of the other two members.

While there is nothing particularly innovative or stunning about The Mod Squad, the plot is enough to keep an audience's attention and is good for a few laughs. Overall, it would make for a good rental video or a cheap Tuesday movie.

Get Out There!

Movies:

Playing at the Screening Room:
(Weekend Matinees only)

Life is Beautiful 4:00, 7:05
Rushmore 9:30
Gods and Monsters 4:05, 7:10
Velvet Goldmine 9:30

Art:

Union Gallery:

The Union Gallery is currently showing Vertigo. The exhibit runs until April 13.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre:

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre is currently showing Crime and Punishment. The show runs until June 6.

Live Music:

Canadian Friends of Burma presents a benefit concert to be held at Clark Hall on Thursday, April 8. Doors open at 9 p.m. The concert will feature Jon Coakley and Waxing Gibbus, opening with Root Locous and Sex Kittens.

Literature:

Kingston Regional Arts Council welcomes Spring with Eighth Annual Member's Open Art Salon and Annual Kingston Literary Awards. The event will be held Friday, April 30, 1999 from 6 - 8 p.m. in the Wilson room, in the Kingston Frontenac Public Library.

Aching feet? Sore Knees? Back Pain?

We may have the solution to your problems!

Dynamic Orthotics offers the latest advancement in computerized medical technology!

- Sport, dress diabetic, custom-made orthotics.
- Free assessments/ follow up
- 30 money-back guarantee
- 2 year warranty

Please call to schedule a FREE assessment.

158-82 Emma Street
Cornwall Bldg.
Brockville, ON
K6V 1S9
613-498-2223

215 Princess Street
Downtown Kingston!
Kingston, ON
K7L 1B3
613-545-0100 / 545-1997

Dynamic Orthotics

RYERSON

Ryerson Polytechnic University introduces the

Retail Management degree program

Your ticket to a stimulating, high-energy career

Searching for a career that offers excellent job prospects, with competitive rates of pay? Not sure whether your university degree will help you find it?

Consider Canada's only Retail Management program that leads to a Bachelor of Commerce degree.

You'll receive the management education retail employers want, with a chance to specialize and gain work experience along the way. Entrance scholarships are available for outstanding applicants.

For more details, contact the School of Retail Management at (416) 979-5000, extension 7282 (phone); (416) 979-5324 (fax); or retmg@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail). Or contact the Office of Admissions/Liaison/Curriculum Advising at (416) 979-5036 (phone) or inquire@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail).

You can be a chiropractic physician in five years.

Why settle for anything less?

The time is right to learn more about a rewarding and fulfilling career as a doctor of chiropractic. Greater emphasis is being placed on preventive care and non-invasive health methods in today's modern health-care system. In five academic years, you can graduate with a doctorate and be licensed to practice anywhere in the U.S. and Canada.

Known for academic excellence, Logan College is on the cutting edge of curriculum innovations. In addition to offering a quality clinical program, Logan provides value-added business management training. This gives graduating practitioners a winning edge with better leadership and practice enhancement skills.

Logan College of Chiropractic is now accepting applications. Write, call or check our Internet Website for a free descriptive brochure and admission kit.

EARN A DEGREE WITH A FUTURE

<http://www.logan.edu>
1-800-533-9210

LOGAN
COLLEGE OF CHIROPRACTIC

1851 Schoettler Road • Chesterfield, MO 63006-1065
Phone: 314-227-2100 • Fax: 314-207-2425 • E-Mail: loganadm@logan.edu
An Equal Opportunity Institution of Higher Education

Heavy fluids

Continued from page 14

quite a jovial and insightful article on the booming $10 billion a year porn industry. The writing is quite descriptive and never fails to leave a smile on your face. "And porn's fastest growing customer? It is not the cum-filled frat guys and trench-coated men with heads full of loneliness..."

After wetting our appetites with a little porn, Liquid then quenches our thirst by describing how to become a wine connoisseur in 12 easy steps. These little tips are likely more useful in our daily lives than the information contained in our expensive textbooks. If alcohol isn't your bag and you are a phys-ed health nut, there are also reviews of energy drinks like Tribal Tonics' various fruit beverages.

There is also the mainstream section of the magazine which contains interviews with and features on some of today's celebrities. In this issue, actor Leon (Waiting to Exhale, Cool Runnings, All The Right Moves) stops by for a chat, Marilyn Manson discusses penis sign-ings, death threats and on-stage donkey orgies, and Bush lead singer Gavin Rossdale provides a studio update on how their latest album is going.

What entertainment magazine would be complete without CD reviews? Thankfully the editors at Liquid do not review the generic superstar albums — they provide insight into albums that run the musical gamut. Some groups that can be sampled from include Burger/Ink (dance), The Crusaders (jazz/soul), Lucinda Williams (blues) and BioRitmo (latin).

The travel section in this magazine is out of this world. A feature on crocodiles in the East Alligator River in Northern Australia describes the tours that eager explorers can join. The tale of Eric, the 100-year old crocodile, and his horse-eating habit is interesting, to say the least.

Even more interesting was the article about Indonesian soup made from snakes. The author tells of a restaurant that kills a king cobra in front of you and chops off various parts of the snake, which is then blended with honey, the bile from the cut-open bladder and the blood to make a rare cocktail.

If this still hasn't whet your appetite, Liquid presents automotive reviews on BMW's new M Coupe, Corvettes and VW Beetles, and provides an extensive catalog on a variety of trinkets. Everything from guitars, lap tops, boots, stereos, electronic hair conditioners, espresso and coffee machines, vampire wine, cork screws, clocks, doorbells and martini shakers are featured.

Closing out this well-rounded magazine is the usual array of beautiful people modeling clothes that fit only about five per cent of society. But you gotta hand it to 'em, they sure are sweet to look at.

In short, Liquid has got a tasty, biting blend of the basics in an entertainment/travel/fashion/music mag and a wide variety of other rare delicacies that makes your $3.99 purchase well worth the trip. It's the perfect exam break to read on one of those rare hot Kingston days and a procrastinator's worst nightmare.

Rotate this!

Continued from page 14

CD waaaay more than I should have.

People like myself who pride themselves on their taste in music technically shouldn't be lauding an effort like The Ego Has Landed. I mean, sure the title's clever and the music ain't bad, but c'mon... it's Robbie Williams, for God's sake! Didn't he used to be in Take That? I'm sorry, but former 'boy band' performers are the last people we should be encouraging to make decent records. And maybe that's why it works this time. From some of his lyrics and his demeanour in the Bond-inspired "Millennium" video, I get the feeling that Williams doesn't take his pretty self too seriously. There's a lot of fun on this album. In that respect, it's kind of like bubble gum: nonchalant, sweet, and addictive. Except, like bubble gum, extended exposure will probably result in some sort of headache.

For the most part, Mr. Williams gets by sounding like Oasis trying to sound like the Beatles. On second thought, he almost sounds like Bob Dylan on "Jesus in a Camper Van"... I kid you not. "Mean Machine" and "Old Before I Die" climb into your brain upon the first listen and then proceed to stay there... forever. Damn you, choruses. "Millennium" is equally catchy with one verse advising we "live for liposuction/and detox for your rent/ Overdose at Christmas/ and give it up for Lent." Heh. To be honest, the songwriting doesn't get much more deep or introspective than this (aside from what must have been a rather cathartic monologue hidden after the last song), but it all still manages to work somehow. It shouldn't... but it does. It's official. I'm now stuck liking the same music as my 12-year old sister. Sigh.

falls short by trying to mix it into an alternative sound, heavy on percussion. Unfortunately, their flat singing style often comes off more eighties than alternative.

Libido does deliver a steamy tune... unfortunately, their flat singing style often comes off more eighties than alternative.

Libido
Buck-O-Nine
Universal Records

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

"Swimming in the Sand" is one of the more reggae tracks, and less harsh than other songs on the CD. This song effectively combines horns, reggae guitar, steel drums and bongo sounds, delivering a tight set and all around great sound. "Awkward Girl" has amazing acoustics, but the repetitive lyrics take away from a total enjoyment of the song. "On a Sunny Day" is catchy, and one of my favourites on the disc. Their sounds and lyrics come together nicely on this one. All in all, their sound is great. I love the brass and the reggae influence, but their lyrics and voices leave something to be desired. To be fair, I have to say I wouldn't pay too much more than a Buck-O-Nine for this CD — sorry, I couldn't resist the pun!

The Ego Has Landed contains tracks culled from his two previously unavailable albums: some are soft ballads (if you can get by the fairly banal lyrics, "Angels" is quite nice), and some are Tom Jones-esque tracks that God help me-make me want to dance. Viva "Let Me Entertain You!"

There's also the way too angry and bitter for a pop star "Karma Killet," but for the most part, Mr. Williams gets by

SPORTS & FITNESS

SHOCKED THE WORLD

In what many considered to be one of the biggest upsets in recent NCAA tournament history, the University of Connecticut Huskies defeated the heavily favoured Duke Blue Devils 77-74 in what was a scintillating game. UConn, who had been the number one ranked team in the nation and lost only two games all year, were able to do what only one other team had done all year — beat the Blue Devils. The Huskies were led by all-American Richard Hamilton's 27 points and the inspired defensive play of Ricky Moore. UConn overcame the inspired play of Duke senior Trajan Langdon to win their first NCAA men's basketball championship.

The Queens Intramural Awards Banquet was held Tuesday at AJ's. See awards on page 18

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Kill the owners

FROM THE BLEACHERS

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

The sun is shining, the birds are beginning to sing and the 'boys of summer' will be soon heading north for their long season. On April 5 the annual rite of spring, opening day, will see numerous important public figures throwing out the opening pitch, parents trying to get in touch with their youth and children trying to learn what the 'national pastime' is truly about — unfortunately they might not like what they see.

It is an old baseball adage that everybody is in the pennant race on opening day, but sadly this is not true. As rival sports, basketball and football have learned the economics of modern sports and share revenues, while baseball continues to hold on to the one tradition that everybody wants to forget: competitive imbalance.

Major League Baseball now has a rift in the salary structure that could make the Grand Canyon look like a small crack in the desert.

While the division between rich and poor has dramatically worsened in recent times, this is not the beginning of these problems. The dominant Yankees of the 1940s and 1950s sported a payroll that sometimes exceeded rival teams by three or four times. The Brooklyn Dodgers, the only team that competed with the Yanks on the field, were also the only team that was able to compete financially at that time. It got more and more difficult for the Dodgers to raise the funds and some say this imbalance led to those Brooklyn boys heading for the left coast.

Things became more competitive through the end of the seventies and eighties, with teams from all over winning division crowns. Milwaukee, Montreal, Pittsburgh and Minnesota produced competitive teams that were not simply hoping to reach .500 on the field and break even off it, but competed for pennants and World Series titles.

This was only a taste of competitive balance. Major League Baseball now has a rift in the

Please see A league on page 21

Watch your step

Women worry about PEC changerooms

BY ROBERT MACNEIL

A combination of melting snow, leftover sand, 1,500 females and no cleaning service during the day means that the women's changerooms PEC are often left in filthy conditions. Students are frustrated at their surroundings and wish to see changes made.

Sarah Nemeth, Con Ed '00, goes to the PEC three or four times a week and is dismayed at the conditions in the changerooms.

"I find globs of hair that resemble cats in the shower drain and when I walk in I [have to] pick up pins and razor blades off the floor," Nemeth also said that "at least one-quarter of the toilets are clogged with some very interesting contents, there is gum on the shower walls and my feet are full of grit and grime [from walking around]."

"[W]hen I walk in I [have to] pick up pins and razor blades off the floor."

— Sarah Nemeth, Con Ed '00

Amy Dowle, Con Ed '00, agrees that "the cleanliness is not up to par," and will not walk on the floor in her bare feet.

Cindy Hickey, ArtSci '99, goes to the PEC five times a week and laments that there has always been a "lack of regular cleaning."

Bill Sparrow is responsible for the changerooms at the PEC, and said that he was not aware of the problems of pins and razor blades on the floor of the changerooms. He does admit that there is dirt and grime on the floors but feels that there are few options open to make things better.

In maintaining the PEC Sparrow works with Physical Plant Services, which employs the custodial staff, but "they are not under my control." Since the building is in constant use during the day, the custodians

Please see Students on page 18

Play ball!

The Journal experts handicap the field

BY NEATE SAGER

AMERICAN LEAGUE

While Sunday's exhibition game in Havana between the Baltimore Orioles and the Cuban national team may indicate shifting relations between the US and Cuba as the new millennium beckons, Yankee imperialism still pervades the grand old game. While the Bronx Bombers are unlikely to match their '98 record, even with five-time Cy Young honouree Roger Clemens in pinstripes, this astoundingly deep and balanced team has more arms than a group of guerrilla insurgents. They also have capable bats (the Yanks went yard 207 times last season, though no player registered more than 28 dingers) to override the slumps that invariably occur over the long season, as they will win their 25th world championship.

The Bronx Bombers' main threat within its own league will be the Cleveland Indians, with eight recent all-stars in its everyday lineup. The tribe has strong defence up the middle and power from the corner spots, a durable, yeoman pitching staff, and the modicum of competition within the AL Central to ensure a fifth straight playoff berth.

Under the heading of "Thanks for comin' our" are Anaheim and Texas. With the $80 million acquisition of slugger Mo Vaughn (.337, 40 homers in '98), the Angels can outslug the Rangers and Seattle to win this pitching-poor grouping; swapping one of their surplus hitters for an elite starter would definitely tip the scales in their favour. Texas' formidable one-two punch of reacquired Rafael Palmeiro and two-time league MVP Juan Gonzalez will carry it to the wild card, but a dearth of adequate, much less quality starting pitching, prevents much more. For all their trumpeted free agent signings, Baltimore will not contend; poor pitching and defence, and Albert Belle in right field, render the O's as likely to implode as explode as the season unfolds.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Come late October, the Yanks will meet the Dodgers in the Fall Classic for a record 12th time, after Rupert Murdoch's tax shelter prevails in a West Division where one can as easily make a

Please see Yankees on page 21

ARISTA/BMG RECORDING ARTIST
DEBORAH COX

Kickin'

ROOTS KINGSTON

229 Princess Street 546-7668

Check out A&E next week:

Backpacker's Europe

Spring Sale-Book by Mar 31

London	from $519
Paris	from $669
Frankfurt	from $649
Zurich	from $699
Manchester	from $519
Rome	from $719

- ✓ Eurail Passes
- ✓ Busabout, Haggis, Stray
- ✓ ISIC, YHA Cards
- ✓ Bon Voyage Insurance
- ✓ Open Jaw Airfares
- ✓ Tours-Contiki, Trek Top Deck

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston (at Montreal)

Leisure Travel 549-3553 Long Haul/Group Travel 549-3561

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

Y
E
A
R

I
N

R
E
V
I
E
W

Intramural corner

The Queen's Intramural Awards Banquet was held Tuesday night at AJ's and the following individuals, teams and facilities were recognized for their excellent performance and outstanding contribution.

FACULTY AWARDS:

James G. Bews Trophy: 1. Phys Ed 2. Meds 3. Comm '01
Klat/Fleet Trophy: 1. Phys. Ed 2. Meds/Rehab/Nursing 3. Arts '99
John Paul Memorial Trophy: 1. Phys Ed 2. Comm '01 3. Meds
WIC Independent Trophy: 1. Law 2. Rehab 3. Phys Ed
Marion Ross Trophy: 1. Phys Ed 2. Engineering 3. Rehab

INDIVIDUAL AWARDS:

PHESA Award: Saski Harvey (Arts '99)
Edwards Trophy: Mark Dilworth (Arts '99)
PHESA Award of Merit: Will Moncrief (PHE '99)
Silver Whistle Award: Jon Cheung (Rehab '01)

Rehab '86 Award: Beth Tortorelli (Eng Chem)
ASUS Award: Linda Bianchi (Law)
BEWIC Cup: Chad Bartrop (PHE '99) and Joan de Grace (Arts '99)
Doug Adams Ward: Rob Archibald (PHE '00) and Chike Madeume (PHE '01)

WINTER TEAM WINNERS: BEWS

Rec Basketball: Comm '00/'01
Comp Basketball: Law '99
Broomball: Comm '99/'02
Soccer Magic: The Mafia (correction from last week)
Indoor Soccer: Law

BEWIC

Comp Volleyball: Comm '99
Super Comp Volleyball: Keep 6
Volleyball Tourney: Overkill

WIC

Comp Basketball: PHE '00/'99
Broomball: Engineering
Indoor Soccer: Arts '99
Comp Volleyball: PHE '01/'02

Wrestlemania rocks

Like it or not people are watching wrestling

WORD ON THE STREET

By ERIC MISSIO

It's sports entertainment, damnit.

When people find out I like professional wrestling they have a tendency to stare at me with a look that's a mixture of incredulous disbelief and shameful pity. I can take that. Really, I can. I readily acknowledge that plunking down the 35 bucks for the honour of having Wrestlemania appear on the television isn't for everyone. But it is for a lot of people. Vince McMahon, the evil genius behind the World Wrestling Federation, is raking in the cash these days.

Still, it's not everyone's cup of tea. I can accept that. When people start whining and complaining that it's fake, however, I lose it.

For the record, I'm not an idiot. I know that wrestling isn't 'real' in the sense that basketball or baseball or soccer are (note 'boxing' was not included in that sentence). That said, wrestling is not 'fake.' Is the ballet 'fake' just because it's well choreographed and planned before hand? No, I think not. Wrestlers are part actors, that much I concede. These days it ain't enough to be able to hit somebody convincingly... you have to be able to work a microphone as well. But to say that these men are not athletes is ludicrous. These guys have no off season. They're on the road more than 300 days a year. And the moves? Yeah, most of them aren't real, but it's not like they're not connecting. It's not like accidents don't happen.

Not athletes? Not real? Tell that to guys like "Stone Cold" Steve Austin, who've had their necks broken (not sprained, not bruised, but b-r-o-k-e-n) on live television. Or Shawn Michaels, who's had so many concussions and smashed vertebrae that his career is over way before his time. Or Bret Hart — a proud veteran who watched his livelihood destroyed through backstage office politics. Or Mick Foley. I dare you to tell Mick Foley that wrestling is not 'real.' It ain't all hype. They really are out there, night after night, running and jumping and hitting and slamming and suplexing for the masses. And yeah, it's predetermined... they've never claimed it to be a sport. It is however sports entertainment.

And don't get me wrong, this stuff isn't for kids. Parents should know better than to let their 12 year old watch someone who screams "Suck it!" to the crowd while pointing to his crotch. There's been other times when the show borders on being offensive. Mock crucifixions, hospital bed pan assaults, blood baths and the infantile, Americanocentric chants of the crowd can be a little much—if you let it get to you. The best way to watch wrestling is to view it as one part display of athleticism and two parts R rated movie. Don't take it too seriously and odds are you may find it enjoyable in spite of yourself.

With Austin recapturing the world title from The Rock (perhaps the best villain currently in the business) at Wrestlemania this past Sunday, it's a perfect time to sit down and try to watch an hour or so. Odds are, if you haven't switched channels by the first 20 minutes, you may find yourself hooked. Monday night. Nine o'clock. TSN.

You'll either thank me or hate me. Or both.

their 'motivation.'

Through it's use of what it terms 'sex appeal,' the WWF has been called sexist and degrading to women. I have no defence for that. There's been many times where my friends and I (co-ed group that we are) have stared at the screen in disgust. You could argue, I guess, that it's equally exploitative to the men. Not that this is any sort of excuse.

And don't get me wrong, this stuff isn't for kids. Parents should know better than to let their 12 year old watch someone who screams "Suck it!" to the crowd while pointing to his crotch. There's been other times when the show borders on being offensive. Mock crucifixions, hospital bed pan assaults, blood baths and the infantile, Americanocentric chants of the crowd can be a little much—if you let it get to you. The best way to watch wrestling is to view it as one part display of athleticism and two parts R rated movie. Don't take it too seriously and odds are you may find it enjoyable in spite of yourself.

With Austin recapturing the world title from The Rock (perhaps the best villain currently in the business) at Wrestlemania this past Sunday, it's a perfect time to sit down and try to watch an hour or so. Odds are, if you haven't switched channels by the first 20 minutes, you may find yourself hooked. Monday night. Nine o'clock. TSN.

You'll either thank me or hate me. Or both.

Wrestling is not 'fake.' Is the ballet 'fake' just because it's well choreographed and planned before hand?

Students partly responsible

Continued from page 17

are only available to clean the PEC between the hours of midnight and 8 a.m.

"We would have to close down an area [during the day] to get it clean, and what kind of reaction would I get?" said Sparrow. "If there are emergencies like clogged toilets or broken glass, we can send someone in but [the students] would have to contact us."

Sparrow is faced with an almost impossible choice — on one hand there are complaints by students over issues of cleanliness but there would also be complaints if sections of the PEC were shut down for cleaning.

Nemeth is disappointed "at what my student fees are getting me. It wouldn't take much to get someone in to mop floors and unclog toilets."

If students do find problems such as broken glass or clogged toilets, Sparrow urges them to go to the equipment counter or the front office so the problem can be addressed quickly.

in but [the students] would have to contact us."

Sparrow is faced with an almost impossible choice — on one hand there are complaints by students over issues of cleanliness but there would also be complaints if sections of the PEC were shut down for cleaning.

Nemeth is disappointed "at what my student fees are getting me. It wouldn't take much to get someone in to mop floors and unclog toilets."

If students do find problems such as broken glass or clogged toilets, Sparrow urges them to go to the equipment counter or the front office so the problem can be addressed quickly.

Thank you

To all those who made this year's Sports and Fitness section simply the best ever.

GUINNESS
jacket giveaway
see your server for details
...slante...

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com
down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS
$2.49 sunday breakfast
sun-tues
1/2 price wings*
wed
1/2 price nachos*
*after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS
Fri April 2
Tartan
Special
great Celtic tunes....

American or Canadian: The gridiron debate

Canadian football rocks

"Thank god for the Canadian football league!" This is the phrase I inevitably exclaim over and over again while I make the mistake of tuning in to the Super Bowl — the farce that passes for the championship game of the other league.

By contrast, the Grey Cup game, signifying CFL supremacy, is consistently an exciting culmination of an already thrilling season. Somehow, this league of eight teams manages to have more parity than a league of 31!

The different evolutionary course that these two football leagues have taken has resulted in some distinct rule differences between the CFL and the other guys. Incredibly, every discrepancy represents a way in which Canadian Football has developed in to the superior, high paced, action packed brand of football were fortunate enough to enjoy north of the border.

Let's look at some of the highlights of the Canadian game. Three downs in the CFL vs. four in the other league. Actually, the game was played with three downs in the US for a time, before changing to the four down version they now enjoy. Good call guys. The incredible boredom that comes about from painfully watching the teams run back and attempt to stuff the ball through a line of 400+ pound "athletes" is indescribable.

Three down football creates an environment in which a big pass is more likely, making the game more exciting for the fans. However, this does not mean that the ground attack is not and integral part of the game. A balanced attack is even more important with fewer downs available.

Americans and American wannabes often poke fun at the one point that the CFL awards one point for kicking the ball into the end zone. They cannot seem to grasp why a missed field goal, for example, should awarded.

Simply, the rule is in place to facilitate exciting kick and punt returns. If you want to take a knee and guarantee decent field position, it'll cost you a point.

The CFL also facilitates exciting punt and kick returns through the "no yards" penalty, forcing opposing players (with the exception of the kicker) to stay at least five yards away from the returner. The other leagues solution: as usual, a boring one. The ultimate of sissy rules, the fair catch. Please don't hurt me!

It is difficult to compare the quality of play in the two leagues; there is no question that the dough that team owners fork over in the US lure the better talent. However, with quarterback Doug Flutie, we have witnessed a man who's game became significantly better in the six years the poor guy was 'exiled' to the CFL.

Incredibly, Flutie has somehow been able to overcome the challenge of seeing over the massive frames of the linemen in the NFL, a task that many speculated would be impossible for the 5'10" quarterback. Yeah, it's called "lateral movement." Someone tell Dan Marino about it. Sure the CFL has drafted the odd dead guy, but the NFL actually starts them!

Not only is the CFL a superior brand of football, but they are showing the initiative to acknowledge and tackle their problems. For one, there are no longer two teams named Roughriders in the CFL. And are not there two teams named "New York" in the Non Football League?

Mike Kostoff is the sports editor at the Cord Weekly, the Wilfred Laurier newspaper and he drinks Molson Ice like a fish.

Screw patriotism, the rules suck

As our expansionist neighbour to the south continues to challenge our culture, we are trying to hold on to what is still truly Canadian and viciously defend it. While this is a noble idea when protecting our entertainment industry, it is misguided in defending our version of the gridiron game. There is no question that Canadian football has gained its share of proponents over time, but with an analysis of the rules it becomes clear that our version of football is like American beer — watered down.

This Coors Light of football sees only three attempts to gain the requisite 10 yards, a gigantic field, an extra player per side to man this huge space and a point for kicking the ball in the end zone, a sort of consolation prize for a poor place kicker.

If one offensive error is made in three down football, it is time for either a big play or a punt. An incomplete pass on first down narrows the play book to either a draw or a pass. A loss of yards on first down spells disaster.

With four downs a team can set up the pass with the run and play action exists in virtually every down and distance situation. Proponents of the northern game argue that this creates scoring, I argue that it just creates a situation of six receivers, limited offensive creativity and a 'chuck and duck' play book. It is like preferring Harlem Globetrotters basketball to the NBA because their scores are higher.

The size of the field in our game is almost comical in its similarities to the country of its birth — a green expanse of land with a smattering of people residing in this gigantic space. The field of play is 10 yards longer, 12 yards wider and the end zones are a remarkable 10 yards deeper than their American counterpart.

Even with an additional player per side participating, this field of play is still obscenely large. A 10-yard out route from the opposite hash mark travels 30 yards through the air and an old fashioned sweep play leaves the running back in the midst of a marathon simply to gain the corner. The most offensive aspect of the Canadian field is the 20-yard end zone. A quarterback can throw a 20-yard fade route from the one-yard line and receivers get lost like ships in the Bermuda triangle. You wonder why defensive players look helpless during goal line stands.

While the large end zone is silly, the 'rouge' or free point for lacking the ball through the end zone is beyond ridiculous. In a tie game with the clock ticking down to zero and the team with the ball driving deep into the opponents zone the drama of it all is lessened by the single point. The driving team could elect not to attempt a field goal and punt it through the end zone, thus winning the game dramatically by one point. This is the ultimate Canadian gesture — sorry that you missed the attempt, so we'll give you a point for trying really hard.

I believe that football played in any form is a great game, but there are definitely degrees of greatness. While these arguments may seem petty on the surface, the differences substantially change my enjoyment of the game. Canadian football has a rich history and the individuals that play the game are as worthy of recognition as any, it is the game itself that is fundamentally flawed. Give me Canadian college football players playing the superior American game and I will call it heaven.

Adam Kaminsky is sports editor at The Journal and despises American beer.

Hey '99s!

Have you applied for the STAR "Excellence in Leadership" Award?

This scholarship is awarded annually to two graduating students who have made a significant contribution to Queen's through their extracurricular involvement.

Each award is worth $400.00 and to apply, all you have to do is fill out this application form, drop it off to the address below, and keep your fingers crossed.

Questions? Call Laurie McMann, STAR Commissioner, at 533-6000, ext. 77520. Good luck!

DEADLINE FOR APPLICATION: MAR 6/99, 4PM

1. List the activities in which you participated during your time at Queen's (if necessary, please attach an additional page).

[Empty box for activity list]

2. Which of the above activities did you find the most rewarding, and why?

[Empty box for most rewarding activity]

3. In your opinion, what are the qualities of a good leader? How do you exemplify these traits?

[Empty box for leadership qualities]

4. STAR is throwing a dinner party in your honour. List the four people, living or dead, that you would invite to sit with you at the head table and (briefly) describe your choices.

[Empty box for dinner party invitees]

Please drop off the completed form to:

Student Team on Alumni Relations (STAR)
Summerhill, front desk
(the big white mansion-type building by Theological Hall)

Wednesday April 7, 1999

Shinerama '99
Cystic Fibrosis Benefit Concert
Featuring:

FRANKLIN'S
FAULT
with special guests

Waxing Gibbus
At the Trasheteria

Curry Village
Bringing you Kingston's finest Indian Cuisine for 13 years

Recommended by The New York Times,
The Globe and Mail, Toronto Life and the
Where to Eat in Canada Guide (1987 - present)

169A Princess Street (upstairs), 542-5010
Kingston, Ontario

20% Discount for Students, Sun. - Thurs. (Food Only)

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

She wouldn't forget to order a subscription for Volume 127 of The Queen's Journal.

Are you going to let an elephant get the better of you?

Whether you are a Queen's parent, a student, an alum, or just an interested in the goings-on at Queen's, order NOW to ensure prompt deliver of all the issues of The Journal for the 1999-2000 year. Keep up on the politics, research, sports activities and entertainment that makes Queen's what it is.

Just cut out the form below and send it to 272 Earl St., Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Call Gabe at (613) 533-2800 if you have any questions or concerns. If you are already a regular subscriber to The Journal, you should still fill out the form below in order to ensure that your subscription is renewed.

Name: _____
 Last: _____ First: _____
 Address: _____
 Street: _____ Apt.: _____ City: _____
 Prov.: _____
 Postal Code: _____
 How many subscriptions: _____
 Method of payment: $55 + GST per subscription per year
 Check one please.     Cheque     Money order     Cash

And time is running out... don't miss your chance to own a piece of

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Order yours by April 9 to avoid disappointment.

Own a piece of Queen's history.

Yankees lead contenders A league divided

Continued from page 17

case for any club finishing fourth as first. The Dodgers will oust Ted Turner's Atlanta Braves in a playoff clash sure to become Fox and/or TNT Movie of the Week. New skipper Davey Johnson, who has a flair for quickly improving middling teams, and workhorse righthander Kevin Brown, should soon tight a notoriously underachieving club. A less heralded signing this winter for Los Angeles was that of Devon White, who will covet centre-field and the one-third of the earth's surface not covered by water; Gary Sheffield and Raul Mondesi round out the senior circuit's premier outfield.

The diagnosis of first baseman Andres 'Big Cat' Galaragga with lymphoma and season-ending elbow surgery for closer Kerry Ligtenberg bodes poorly for the Braves recovering the league pennant they won four times earlier this decade. Los Bravos, while bolstered by the acquisition of second baseman Bret Boone and outfielder Brian Jordan, the poor man's Barty Bonds, lack, as usual, a solid bullpen and bona fide leadoff hitter, foreshadowing further Atlantan angst. Their leadoff man could well be 40-year-old Otis Nixon, who surely should be toiling in Seattle, where he could be dubbed 'The Ancient Mariner.' While doubtful to tromp upon the lush greenery of Atlanta's championship estate, the New York Mets will cop the wild-card berth, as both John Olerud and Mike Piazza strive to become the first Met to win a batting crown.

Houston will take the Central Division for the third straight year, despite possibly being without their best hitter, Expos U graduate Moises Alou, for the first half of the season. Mark McGwire's St. Louis Cardinals should challenge the 'Stros, if manager Tony La Russa can mitigate an inexperienced pitching staff, which had an ignominious 31 blown saves last summer. A half-century of history dictates the Chicago Cubs' charmed '98 campaign, which yielded an improbable playoff appearance, will soon prove an aberration. The Cubbies will sorely miss 21-year-old flamethrower Kerry Wood, who may miss up to two seasons with a career threatening arm ailment, and reigning league MVP Slammin' Sammy Sosa will prove mortal, belting 'only' 40 or 50 homers.

By ROBERT MACNEIL

As the players finish working on their tans and managers trim their rosters down to 26, major league baseball's 1999 season is set to start this afternoon. After a flurry of off-season moves in which owners continued to plead their cases for fiscal restraint, as well as crowning baseball's first $100 million man in Kevin Brown, all the teams are starting in first place.

In at least one division, the outcome is virtually set — the New York Yankees in the AL East. The Yanks however are a weakened team from last year's squad because they have lost two keys ingredients in their clubhouse: popular left hander David Wells and manager Joe Torre. It will be difficult to access the emotional significance of these losses because chemistry was such a key part in this ballclub winning 125 games and the World Series. The addition of Roger Clemens will go a long way to replacing Wells on the field, but many players were upset over the loss of Boomer.

In the AL Central, it appears that the Cleveland Indians will again run away with the division. The Alomar brothers are reunited, but if they fall off early, Robbie might toss another hissy fit and demand a trade. While the offence is impressive with David Justice and Manny Ramirez, the absence of a number one starter, will mean that their post-season will be going nowhere.

In the AL West, the Anaheim Angels should rise above a group of very mediocre teams to win their division. They are the most improved team, adding slugger Mo Vaughn and pitcher Tim Lincecum to a talented squad. This fresh blood has been added to a strong team consisting of OF Jim Edmonds, OF Tim Salmon, starting pitcher Chuck Finley and bullpen ace Troy Percival.

In the wild cat race, the Blue Jays should be able to take the final playoff spot. The additions of Wells, Graham Lloyd, Homer Bush and Cecil Fielder, and the ousting of manager Tim Lincecum will allow the Jim Fregosi-led Jays to return to the post-season for the first time since 1993 (when they defeated Fregosi's Phillies in the World Series). Their only real competition last year was against AL East teams, and this season both Baltimore and Boston have dropped off considerably. The Orioles lost Rafael Palmeiro and Eric Davis, and the Red Sox, once again, lost their biggest star in Vaughn.

The National League features several similarities to the junior circuit in that two divisions are virtually wrapped up before the season starts. In the East, the Atlanta Braves will cruise into the playoffs with the starting rotation of Glavine, Smoltz and Maddux but will die another slow death in the playoffs because they have no closer.

In the central division, Houston should be able to defend their crown with the addition of third baseman Ken Caminiti offsetting the loss of OF Moises Alou. The offence is still strong with the Killer Bees at the center (Bagwell, Bell, Biggio).

The Western division is so pathetic that the crown is up for grabs. The Dodgers are banking on Kevin Brown carrying them to glory, but they will be upset by rival fatcat Arizona. With the signing of pitchers Randy Johnson, Todd Stottlemyre and Greg Swindell, the Diamondbacks should have the greenbacks to get into the playoffs.

As far as the wild card goes, the New York Mets have bought themselves the final playoff spot by dishing out millions to veterans Mike Piazza, Al Leiter, Rickey Henderson and Robin Ventura.

Once the playoffs get underway, the Braves and Diamondbacks will quickly fall and the NL pennant will be a battle between the Mets and the Astros. The AL pennant will determine who won the biggest off-season trade as Clemens and Wells duel against their former teams. Look for the Jays to sweep New York City as they cruise against the Yanks and Mets on the way to their third championship of the decade.

Continued from page 17

salary structure that could make the Grand Canyon look like a small crack in the desert. The chasm between haves and have-nots has led to many people joking about implementing a small market division (like English soccer) to increase competitiveness (which while ridiculous on the surface is an idea that may begin to gain steam).

There are currently eight teams that have payrolls that could exceed the Gross National Product of some small third world nations. The New York Yankees, Mets, Cleveland Indians, Los Angeles Dodgers, Baltimore Orioles, Arizona Diamondbacks, Atlanta Braves and Anaheim Angels are spending with impunity and if recent history persists, they are buying their way into the playoffs. All eight teams in the 1998 playoffs had payrolls in the top-10 in the league. Those with light wallets should simply pack up in May and call it a season.

The salary structure has gotten so out of wack that two or three years ago the salary of the Braves starting pitching staff exceeded that of some of the small market teams, now the salary of Kevin Brown, a Dodgers starting pitcher, is bigger than some team's entire payrolls.

With local television deals being so disparate, a poor merchandising deal and an abhorrence of sharing on the part of the owners, things do not look good for revenue sharing in the future. The New York Yankees receive $50 million a year in local television revenue while the Seattle Mariners bring in a paltry $3 million per annum. If this is just an example of the economic difficulties, imagine what an in-depth study may uncover.

With the Expos, Pirates, Royals, Twins, Marlins and a host of other teams fighting losing battles both on the field and off people watching baseball have become resigned to this imbalance. Fans of the have-nots are able to draw moral victories from competitive seasons and hope that their team can catch lightning in a bottle. As free agents continue to flock to where the money is that lightning is becoming more and more rare — hopefully baseball will be fixed before that lightning is extinct.

Read The Job Ads Lately?

CAREERS
POSITIONS AVAILABLE FINANCIAL SERVICES
 • Strong communication and analytical skills
CSC required

The Canadian Securities Course™ (CSC)
 prepares you for a career with an investment dealer, mutual fund company, bank or other financial services firm.

Enrol in the self-study CSC this Spring and by the Fall you will have gained the competitive edge that financial services employers are looking for.

Ask About Our Special Offer!
15% off for University Students
1-800-274-8355
 www.csi.ca

Teach English Overseas

- ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses
- Intensive 34-hour and 42-hour courses (evenings and/or weekends)
  - Classroom management techniques
  - Detailed lesson planning
  - Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
  - Comprehensive teaching materials
  - Teaching practicum included
  - Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
  - Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
  - Final certificate given upon course completion
  - Cost: $399 (42-hr course) / $445 (34-hr course)
- For More Information Call Oxford Seminars: 544-9389 / 1-800-369-6719

LSAT MCAT GMAT

www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.
 LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
 MCAT - Start in June, July, August
 GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

Linda McQuaig

"Exposing lies for fun and profit" - Globe and Mail
 "She should be horsewhipped" - Conrad Black

Reviving Democracy

Grant Hall
 April 8th, 1999
 8 pm

A public lecture presented by the Dunning Trust

Classifieds

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOF FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.lkweb.com/blueroof or call Kim Ondaalje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE www.prep.com

com, Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at learn@prep.com Richardson - 1 877PREP.COM.

STUDENT WORK $12.85 to start. Over 500 positions to fill in Eastern Canada. Scholarship awards and great experience available. Call the closest office for an interview. Kit/Waterloo: 896-0909; Mississauga: 812-9272; Durham Region: 723-4920; St. Catharines: 937-8668; Markham (905) 947-9851; London 438-2711; Hamilton: 387-2872; Ottawa: 739-2999; Toronto: (416) 487-3730; York Region: (416) 497-5464. Opening April 19th Sudbury: 673-3975; Etobicoke: (416) 237-1733; Toronto Chinese 410-8361. Call 1 888 329-5304 for updated numbers for the following: Halifax, Montreal, Burlington, Samia and Windsor.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resumereley.com.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.com for daily rates. Wellington foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington, 531-8731.

SWINGIN' AT THE WALLACE Come swing at Wallace Hall (JDUU) April 8th, 1999. Swing dance lesson 7:30 - 9:00 p.m., dance 9:00 - 1:00 a.m. tea-turing HASKELL and the CLEAVERS! Tickets available at UBS Exchange $8 or $10 at the door.

A MODERN MUSICAL COMEDY - Living Soul: An unusual internet connection. A sexy Song Contest. A Transformation of the Soul. Earl St. Theatre (KCVI) April 8, 9, 10 at 8 p.m. Students $2. 546-0432.

KEEP ABORTION safe and legal. Protest the Human Life International meeting April 10th in Toronto. For information call OPIRG: 549-0066, email: kingston4choice@hotmail.com or check out: www.angellfire.com/on/prochoice.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT

FOR SALE: IBM 385XD laptop available! Excellent condition! Active matrix, 1 gig, intel processor, 33kpbs card modem, 40mb RAM, case and cords! Asking $1500 or best offer. Call 533-5106! Flexible price.

FOR RENT: 2 rooms for sublet! $195 per room per month. CHEAP! 5 minute walk to campus and downtown. Free parking, dishwasher and laundry, fully furnished. Available from May 1st to September 1st. Located on William St., between Division and Bame. Call 536-5658.

FOR SUBLET: Bachelor for summer sublet! Quiet area, all new, very clean, partially furnished if desired, Johnson/Clergy. Guaranteed privacy! Asking $300. Call Kara ASAP at 547-5365.

HELP WANTED

VOLUNTEERS NEEDED for the Campus Observation Room during Orientation Week '99 and Alumni Weekend. Free FIRST AID certification and detox training provided. Applications available at Student Health reception. For more information call Diane Nolling, Health Educator at 533-6712.

CRUISE LINE POSITIONS St. Lawrence Cruise Lines of Kingston, owner of the overnight cruise ship M/V Canadian Empress, invites applications for the following positions: Stewardesses, Deckhands, Assistant Cruise Directors, Galley Assistants and Bartenders. Seasonal full-time May to November. Ideal for graduation students. Please deliver resumes to 253 Ontario Street, side door, 2nd floor, Suite 200.

HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM, which offers one-on-one help and support to children from disadvantaged families, is looking for tutors and supervisors for 1999 - 2000. If you want to volunteer, please contact Rosalind Malcolm at 549-2778. We need your organizational and human relations skills! This challenging and rewarding community experience will enhance your resume and change your life!

SALESPERSON REQUIRED for upgrade Shoe Store. Employment available from end of school term in Spring to Labour Day weekend. Possible part-time employment beyond Labour Day. Previous experience not necessary. Please send resume to: Jack McCalpin C.Ped. Manager, Walkwell Shoes, 179 Wellington St., Kingston, ON K7L 3E3

LOST AND FOUND

LOST: To the person who stole, or accidentally took my brown leather jacket from AJs, if it is returned you will be well compensated. Leave a message for Mark at 545-3565, 6m13.

LOST: My glasses, somewhere between Botteral Hall and Victoria Hall. I really need them to study for exams. If you have found them please call me at 547-0348.

LOST: Adark grey PENTAX camera in a black bag at Colour Night, with 36 exposure film in it. If found please call Steph at 531-4623 or e-mail at 7jrk...

LOST: Matteo Maas black suit jacket lost at ArSci '99 formal. If found please contact Craig at 544-7114.

LOST: Fuji D3-190 zoom lens camera. Lost at ArSci formal. If found please call 545-1033 or email at 4mnc2@qink.

LOST: A black Olympus camera in a little black bag. March 6th the night of the ArSci formal. Please call Julie at 530-3841.

FOUND: Sweater found in Ellis Auditorium Monday March 8th after the Sue Johanson lecture. Call 531-9257 to claim.

FOUND: One luxedo jacket at the ArSci formal. Please contact Rob at 547-3430.

FOUND: A camera and carrying case in a cab the night of the ArSci Formal (March 6th). Please call 533-7961 to identify.

FOUND: At the ArSci Formal, non-disposable camera. Contact 4eat to identify.

PERSONALS

PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1 800 844-8669.

TWO GAY MALES looking for same, to share companionship and maybe more! Adventurous types preferred. Call 531-9845 and ask for Chris or Sean.

ALYSSA, JOANNE AND LIANE. Thank you for your unconditional support and my incredible memories. Always remember that I love you and am here if you need me. Love always Jen

A HEARTFELT thank you to members of Queen's First Aid. You have all touched my life in ways that you will never fully understand. All the best next year. Love Jen.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY KIM! You are the best friend and housemate we could dream of. Have a great 21st year! Love from Catherine, Sara, and Laura.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

ACROSS

1. Madonna Initials
4. Corvine bird
8. Used a crowbar
10. Walt near at hand
12. Address Durbin
13. Spanish romance hero
15. Sea eagle
16. Adam's abode
18. Leah's son
19. Unreal images
21. Roman law
22. Vega's constellation
23. Impurity added to a pure substance
26. Ruminant's food
28. Negative word
29. Distinct stages in a development
32. Be dressed in
35. Grief
36. Don Juan in "The Fair Penitent"
39. Building extensions
41. Mental picture
42. Make a request
43. Fallen angel in "Paradise Lost"
45. Baby birds?
47. Christmas VIP
48. Gilbert and

DOWN

1. Eau de vie
2. Wine Fr.
3. Agamemnon's brother
4. Intimate ballad
5. Computer memory
6. Egg-shaped
7. Skiing technique
8. Jeopardy
9. Pedestal part
11. Metal pin
12. Fourth letter
14. Half a dozen
17. Last part
20. Killer whale
24. Pocahontas' father
25. Geographical

Teasdale

49. Adam's third son
50. Meshed fabric

region

27. Samson's mistress
29. Magnet ends
30. Ancient Greek name of Greece
31. Turf
33. Landing place of Noah's Ark
34. Dangerous chances
35. Spider's network
37. Hardy heroine
38. Authorizes
40. Acute angle function
44. Lawyer. abbr.
46. Native metal

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE

Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

ELECTROLYSIS

Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely. Experienced electrolysis Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

Nominations for The Sutherland Prize

The Sutherland Prize will be presented annually to a graduating and self-defined student of colour who has shown leadership and initiative at Queen's, most specifically in the area of encouraging and fostering diversity on campus.

The winner of the Sutherland prize will receive an award from the Society at Convocation and will have his/her name inscribed on a permanent wall plaque in the Robert Sutherland Reading Room

Nominations are available at the AMS front desk and are due Friday April 9th by 5:00pm

THE Academic Affairs Commission

IS SEEKING TWO MEMBERS-AT-LARGE TO SIT ON THE GOVERNMENT ISSUES COMMITTEE (GIC). THIS COMMITTEE DEBATES AND FORMULATES AMS POLICY ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ISSUES AT THE UNIVERSITY, PROVINCIAL, AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT LEVELS.

GIC ISSUES OF INTEREST INCLUDE UNIVERSITY FUNDING, CORPORATE SPONSORSHIP, TUITION AND STUDENT AID ISSUES.

* APPLICATION DEADLINE APRIL 7, 1999 AT 4:30 P.M.
* FOR FURTHER INFORMATION PLEASE CONTACT RODGER OR MILAN AT 533-6000 EXT. 7481 B

Monday April 5th to Saturday April 17th

Humanities Sale
History Classics Philosophy Religion

25% off

all Humanities Titles

Clark Hall - Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 - 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

Back by Popular Demand!

Travel & Teach ESL

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
44 HOUR CERTIFICATION COURSE

Classroom Teaching Practicum Included

Crash Course A: 1 week	Course B: 6 weeks
Time: May 3 - 7, 1999	Time: May 10 - June 17, 1999
9:00 - 5:00	6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
Monday - Friday	Monday & Wednesday
Practicum May 8	Practicum June 5 & 12
10:30 - 2:30	10:30 - 2:30

Location: Queen's Campus

Cost: $359.00/44 hour course
(5% discount if registered before April 23, 1999)

REGISTRATION INFORMATION
Phone 384-6194 or email sbromstein@bigfoot.com

TORONTO
$23

OTTAWA
$18

MONTREAL
$25

MISSISSAUGA
$27

OAKVILLE
$27

BURLINGTON
$30

HAMILTON
$30

THINKING ABOUT GOING HOME FOR EASTER
TAKE THE TRICOLOUR EXPRESS

exchange
CDs • Paperback • Text • Cassettes • Books & Staff

Tickets and Schedule available at UBS
Departures Thursday, April 1. All Runs Return April 4.
9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JYUC • 533 2120

index

poo jokes
pee jokes
barf jokes
self-indulgent
humour

Serving • the • society • of • geeks • since • the • sixties

In This Shit-packed Issue!

Jokes to us:

The Repulsiveness and Feebleness of Old People!

Jokes to you:

Kudos if you can find them!

Jokes to no one:

Pages one through eight of this issue,
pages one through sixteen of any given issue of GW!

AN OPINION

(Probably not yours)

You know, I'm tired of all you people and your complaints. Nobody understands how hard a job I have. I have responsibilities you can't even fathom. You think it's simple coming up with 25 issues of quality crap? You think filling space with pointless cartoons in lieu of articles with any kind of substance is easy? You try running this paper with a staff that were all raised with rabid pheasants and consequently don't have an intelligent funny bone among them. And yet, you people continue to write me letters and call me up, telling me I'm incompetent. Well, I won't have it.

And do you know what else I hate? Bolivians. They smell bad and they can't make a decent waffle to save their lives. Hmm... As long as I'm taking unfounded cheap shots that have no relevance to my original point, I might as well smear the reputation of a campus personality. Like Rector Mike Kealy. What a moron, eh? And he looks like a duck! Boy, do I feel better about myself now. There's no better way to raise my level of self-importance than by throwing around a few insults at people I've never met. What an impish rogue I am. Hee hee.

But let's back to my main focus. You criticize us left and right, telling us that we rattle topics that simply aren't funny. Well, you're all dumb. You wouldn't know comedy if you fell in a big, sticky pile of it. I mean who's the editor of a comedy paper here? Trust me, anything can be funny. It all depends on how you construct the joke. I'll prove it.

Subjects that are too pure to be funny

So, you think there are some things that are too pure, too sacred, too beyond reproach to make fun of. Take old people. One might think that we should respect our senior citizens because of all they have contributed over their lives — sweet ol' grandma is beyond ridicule, right? I say bullshit. These people are walking comedy routines (or shuffling comedy routines if they use a walker). I laugh every time I think of all the ways old people are a burden on our society. I mean, just think of all the health problems the elderly have. Look at Grandpa Jim, he's wearing a colostomy bag! He has to pee into a bag cause his wrinkled ol' pecker ain't working so good any more.

And ol' Auntie Ethel wears dentures! Wouldn't it be funny if someone took the old bag's teeth while she was sleeping, filed the incisors down into razor-sharp points, smeared some ketchup on the teeth and then put them back in her room? You could run into her room again the next morning, all in a panic and mumbling something about Baby Megan being killed by a vampire, and then, with a look of horror, point at her sharp, red teeth. "O unholy fiend! I must destroy you undead spawn of Satan! A stake and hammer shall end your evil atrocities forever!" The resulting shock should be enough to make Ethel fall out of bed and break a hip. Or, if you're really lucky, she'll have a mild stroke, and that could lead to even more comedic situations.

"Look Dad, Auntie can't speak properly... she's drooling on your tax return." Hee hee hee, hilarious!

Subjects that are too horrible/scary to be funny

A good example of something that fits into this category is religious extremists. These are some scary, scary people. Many of them have caused widespread death, pain and suffering, but hey, nobody's perfect and we can certainly find a few laughs out of all that misery. Trust me, religious terrorists can be a laugh riot.

For instance, can you imagine Saturday Night Live flunky Norm MacDonald attending an interview to become a member of the crimson jihad?

Jihad interviewer: Why would you like to join our glorious brethren?

Norm: Well, uh, Abdul, or whatever your name is, I kinda like your cute red hats. But can I tell you something, just between you and me? You guys gotta lose those scary beards and all this talk about "destroying the Western infidels." I mean, you sound like terrorists for Christ's sake!

Ha ha, what a card! He wouldn't last five minutes. They'd string him up, cut holes in his skin and release a swarm of red ants on him. What whimsical amusement this is!

And what else are religious extremists good for? Answer: blowing shit up. Pretend there are a bunch of militant Buddhists who are supposed to blow up the White House with a car bomb. But pretend they misunderstood their instructions and instead blew up Norm MacDonald's house! Ha, Norm's house, along with a half a city block blown to smithereens. This stuff is gold! Raise the yuk meter up a few notches.

Subjects that are too mundane to be funny

Think there are some topics that are just too dull to be funny? Well, watch and learn.

David Upcheung

What's Wrong With This Picture Of Sunday At The EngSoc Lounge?

1. Legitimate social and political satire left lying about where GW staffers can easily read and learn from it.
2. Student outside laughing at a witty, high-brow joke in this year's GW.
3. Fan expressing admiration for favourite cartoon, "Hot—Hot—Robot Sex."
4. Editors using social ineptitude to make first-time contributors feel more comfortable.
5. Sign on wall reads "Remember: Queen's students might not find cum jokes as funny as our pubescent siblings do."
6. Editor not abusing editorial power to take potshots at AMS Candidates, former subletters, or cute, wholly disinterested girls they knew in high-school.
7. Gratuitous pictures of current/former GW staffers in formal wear left off cover on grounds of obvious personal bias.
8. Kippers!?! Where's the pizza?
9. Co-Editor having an epiphany on how to put together a decent fake Queen's Journal.
10. Editor picking an underused formula article to recycle from a previous year of GW.
11. GW operations manager has heard and forethought to tell other staffers that running for AMS executive "maybe isn't, you know... such a good idea given that you're, uh... well... just editors of the campus funny-paper and all."
12. Big words? Ready for use in GW? What the fuck??
13. Magazine with headline reading "80's-Metalhead-type hair and goatees: not in fashion this year" duly nored.
14. Editors drooling over each other rather than the shameless, traitorous Queen's Journal Editor-in-chief in their midst.
15. Writer somehow explains how he/she can snub "Mike and Jen" (the embodiment of Queen's collective vacuous personality) and rock out to The Tragically Hip and Pearl Jam but not be a big fat hypocrite.
16. Hippo mascot remains unabused.
17. People actually playing pool on the pool table.
18. Expired tube of Preparation-H being used on a salad! Now that's funny!
19. Staffer willing to admit that Magic: The Gathering is a better role-playing card game than Jyhad.
20. Layout editor setting out to design something more eye-catching than an accounting spreadsheet.

Mulan'n'n and D'accord

Let's Chat! GW LETTERS

McStealy-Boots
Dear Editors,
Stop copping my shit.

Signed,
Adam Sandler

Like I need the fucking publicity. Assholes.

Melancholy wordsmith and Godfather of Grunge,
Neil Young

Dear GW,
Stop copping my shit.

Signed,
Joey "Armpit Maestro" Perkins,
Age 13

Taking a breather
Dear Son, the Co-editor,
It's your mother, dear. Your father and I were just wondering if you could get your head out of your ass long enough to give us a call.
Miss you.

Buck, buck
Dear GW,
How come you never print any real letters? Does no one have anything to say to you, or are you too chicken to print them? Personally, I think you're just chicken. That's right, chicken. Buck, buck, buck, buck... probably hot and tasty fried chicken. Buh-GACK, Buh-GACK... With 13 secret herbs and spices, available at your nearest KFC restaurant. Then again, maybe nobody gives a Cluck.

Signed,
Kerry Sanders

Love,
Mom

Kudos, Dudos
Dear Editors,
We heard so much about the brilliant, wickedly scathing humour happening north of the border, we decided to get a subscription to your paper. Very impressive. It's true what they say, the Canuck style of comedy reigns supreme down here. After reading GW, we were considering ceasing to publish altogether. We felt we just couldn't compete. Then we reconfirmed that we had all taken large doses of Ether and Ritalin. Our editor-in-chief would like to know if you're using that pot that makes everything seem funny, even when it's not. Please write back.

Love,
Staff of Harvard Lampoon, Harvard University

One Big Willy
Dear Editors,
Principal Bill here with a joke for ya. Feel free to use it — just run me under my usual pseudonym, Big Willy.

Q: What did the Principal say to the intern about his penis?
A: In a minute, it'll go off like tuition!

Love that Blasphemy Corner, Principle Bill

Tanks A Lot
Dear Editors,
I really loved that photo of Jon Bon Stravinsky submerged in a tank of water a few issues ago. Could you show it just one more time?

Thanks,
A fan

Thanks to y'all for writing in. By the way, you can all go kiss our collective asses.
—The Editors

GW
Où est la salle de bain?

Editors
Ken Butland Fav #/Fluid
Sean Springer Nine/Bid!
Eleven/Pus!

Editors-in-chief
Keith Gerein Eight/Ureal!
Tara Mansbridge 7/Lovejuice!

Managing Editor
Laura MacInnis Two/Sweet!

Business Manager
Claudia Kraft Two&1/2/Pee!

Advertising Manager
Mark Fucella Four/Blood!

Buddiez List
Lazy P.P. Arnie, Chayfedas, Daddy's Little Princess, Pita, Blabber Feta, Pongopus-ass of Love, Soapdish, Leacher, Clam Chowder, BaZZard, Hardy Pyle of Shit, Willy Wanker, Crack Baby, Dedshovel, Mulan'n'n, D'accord

Palz List
Bill Keane, Janice Chan, Adam Prosser

GW — The jokes stop here ©

GOLDEN WORDS SPOOF ISSUE
Thursday, April 1, 1999 • Volume 126

Thursday, April 1, 1999 • Issue 1 • Volume 126
GW SpooF issue is published by The Queen's Journal, an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers.

Contents ©1999 by The Queen's Journal. All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd, in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation inquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8
Telephone: editorial 613-545-7800
advertising 613-545-6711
fax: 613-545-6728
e-mail: journal@post.queensu.ca
Circulation: 9,000

GW Formulaic Ice-Cream Flavours (served up cold since 1967)

Psycho Roommate Daiquiri • Breaking Up With High-School Sweetheart Swirl • Hallowe'en Costumes You'll Never See Because They're So Crazy Delight • How To Write A Pop Song In The Style Of Some Popular Artist Hash • Aimless Rail On Some Cheesy TV Show Crunch • Dysfunctional Families N' Holidays • Mediocre Pop-Song Parody Mocha • Mean Things To Do To People You Dislike A-Licious • AMSicle • Long List Of Jack Handey's "Deep Thoughts" Type Jokes N' Cream • Disturbing-Article-From-Fucked-Up-First-And-Last-Time-Contributor-But-Included-Anyway-Because-We-Didn't-Have-Enough-Material Mallow • Fake Interview With Famous Dead Person Fudge • Outlandish Game Show Orange • Cherry Classic Movie Plot Rewritten To Be Loony Garcia • Boorish Diatribe Berry • List Of Related Comical Food Items/Designer Clothing Labels/Eighties Toys Mint • Rocky Open Potshot Road • Preposterous Reflections On Scarring Childhood Pecan

THE FAMILY CIRCUS, By Bil Keane

-Mom, can you think of a lazier way to fill space?
- CD reviews, Honey.

You got where you are with hard work and smarts.

Jeep TJ

Plymouth Voyager

Dodge Dakota

Neon 2000

$750 GRAD REBATE

Chrysler can help out with your driving ambition.

As a recent graduate, you're on the road to success. We would like to help take you the rest of the way by offering $750 towards the purchase or lease of a new Chrysler or Jeep® vehicle.* That's $750 in addition to most current Chrysler incentives. If you finance with Chrysler Credit Canada, we'll also defer your first three months payments!*

And with a world-class lineup of vehicles to choose from, we clearly offer something for everyone. Whether you're looking for the off-road excitement of a Jeep®, the rugged performance of a Dodge Truck, the roominess of a minivan or the redesigned and refined Chrysler Neon 2000, we've got a vehicle that'll take you wherever you want to go. What's more, you could win a $5000 travel voucher just for sharing your smarts with us. For details, simply visit us on-line at www.chryslercanada.ca

*Excludes Florida and Quebec. *Some restrictions apply. See your retailer for details. This $750 Grad Rebate is available to all college or university undergraduates and postgraduates who have graduated or will graduate between October 1, 1996, and September 30, 1997, and all currently enrolled master's and doctoral students, regardless of final graduation date. © Jeep is a registered trade mark licensed to Chrysler Canada Ltd.

For more information, visit your nearest Chrysler Retailer. Or, hit www.chryslercanada.ca or call 1-800-361-3700.

Help the GW editor find his sense of humour

The origin of the poo jokes?

Meet Lenny, the current GW editor. About a year ago, shortly after he was hired as GW editor, he woke up one morning and discovered, strangely enough, his sense of humour was gone. After furiously frisking his brain, he screamed "Oh, my God, I've lost my sense of humour! How am I supposed to edit a humour paper when I can't even be funny?" As far as we know, he never recovered his sense of humour and, based upon what we've seen this year, well — you make the call.

Did he absent-mindedly sell it to a hooker in a drunken stupor? Did it fall out of his ear while snoozing in geology? Observe the day before Lenny realised his sense of humour had vanished. Where did he go wrong? How did it happen? E-mail your best guess to enggw@post.queensu.ca

Was it the booze?

Was it the hookers? =>

A symbolic portrait of Lenny and his now-lost sense of humour

① 7:15 a.m. Waking with a hard-on and a smile left by the wet dream involving Martha Stewart, Lenny is startled by the screaming of a vacuum cleaner. Observing the mess splattered all over his blue duvet, he fires up a spillbuster, which by accident, clings to his earlobe and, quite possibly may have sucked out Lenny's precious sense of humour. His housemate then farts and Lenny is believed to have remarked, "Nice one!"

② 9:39 a.m. Lenny's mornings always involve a rich dose of masturbation. With one leg on his car and the other wrapped around his head, he loses his balance and is flunked into his laundry hamper. The presence of hardened, stale feces and smelly laundry saturated with urine permeates his pores. (Could this be the origin of GW bathroom humour?) Shortly afterwards, he watches an episode of Full House and is heard letting out a few big ha's.

③ 10:15 a.m. Feeling sticky, Lenny hops in the shower. (No, he doesn't slip and hit his head on the basin.) He cranks the shower radio and the volume knob flies off leaving poor Lenny standing next to an uncontrollable 100 decibels of sound waves carrying the vitriolic rantings of Howard Stern (suppose they have an antenna). Did the sound waves of Stern uttering "Yes, it's true. I have a really small penis" infect Lenny's brain, ultimately leading to the death of his sense of humour?

④ 12:06 p.m. Lunchtime. "Hunger strikes," says Lenny to his stomach, so he rushes to the JDUC where he scarfs down a ready-to-eat mini-pizza. The combination of lunch with a stale milk turns awry when Lenny sends his undigested lunch flying into the eyes of three prominent members of the Queen's administration to the cheers of appreciative students. Lenny ponders this moment: "People find barf jokes funny?"

⑤ 7:46 p.m. Trying to endure a three-hour metallurgy lecture, Lenny focuses on the chest of his voluptuous professor. He starts to drool and slur "teats, teats, teats, teats — yeah, yeah."

⑥ 10:47 p.m. Lenny recuperates in front of the boob tube ("Boob tube" Lenny thinks) when a psychotic Journal editor blows through the front entrance with an aluminum shovel. Lenny, now very drunk and immersed in an episode of Married With Children, is subsequently incognisant to the Journalista who whacks Lenny over the head, making for a nasty bruise rendering the future GW editor unconscious. The Journal editor leaves shortly thereafter; however, he makes sure to steal something very dear to Lenny — what could it be?

⑦ 12:58 p.m. While lingering in a coma for two hours, Lenny comes to when yet another visitor arrives, this time being Lenny's hooker. "Though it's kinky," thinks Lenny, "why would she bring along her pimp?" Bruno, the pimp is not there for kicks, but rather is collecting for Lenny's lucrative owings for crack and perverted sexual favours. Lenny, carrying about $2.50 in nickels, faints, and Bruno proceeds to steal — who knows? A sense of humour?

THE NEXT MORNING: Lenny rolls out of the bed, picks up a copy of Harvard Lampoon and... nothin'. Absolutely nothin'. Not even a smirk.

THE HILARIOUS WORLD OF PARTIAL COMEDY

CLAM CHOWDER

A Golden Review

Webster's Dictionary of the English Language Various Words

Rated out of 5 rhinos

book review

by blubber feta

On the whole, I have to say I was pretty unimpressed with this book. It was written by some guy named Webster, so naturally, I was expecting some endearing story about a 30-year-old black midget going to live with an overweight, ex-football player and an alcoholic. But no such luck. To my surprise, I opened the book and found words. But these were no ordinary words, they were random words, arranged in some unintelligible order.

Well, I thought, this Webster dude must want me to think this out, so I kept reading, searching for some kind of hidden meaning among the nonsense, but none was to be found. By chapter "J" I was getting pretty agitated, but I pressed on, hoping the plot would pick up, and that some characters would develop. But no, just more words. Worst of all, there was no violence and no torrid sex (except in the chapter entitled "S" but even then it was pretty bland.) Granted, I now know the meanings of "profiterole," "ecumene," and "trout," but I couldn't help feeling like the 46 days spent reading this book could have been more productive.

My advice: save your money and wait until the paperback version come out.

THE CARROT

Classical Blasphemy Corner

Starring Prometheus

"THE SERVICE IS SLOW, AND THE ATMOSPHERE IS BLAND, BUT THAT IS ONE TASTY ORGAN!!"

By Chaffedass

YOU'RE GIGI FROM THE CHAT ROOM? I CAN'T DATE YOU... YOU'RE AN APE!!

A DATE WITH AN APE.

THIS IS FILLER

This man is laughing

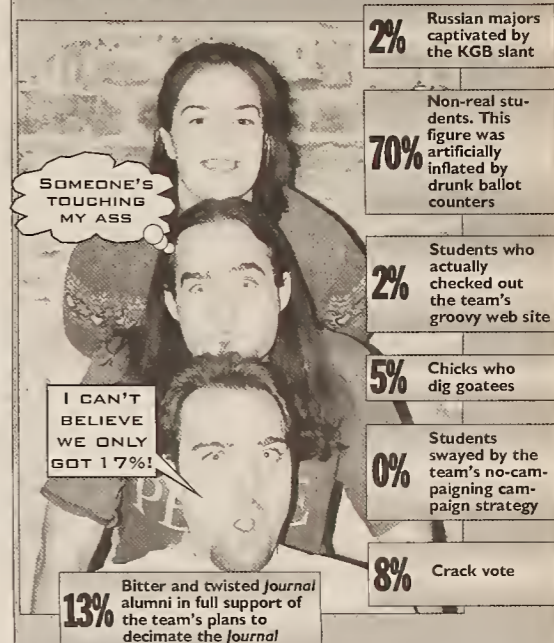

This man is pouting

Who voted for these guys and why?

infograph

candidates "KGB" voter support breakdown

Do you think you can take care of business... care to prove it?

The Journal is still offering many business positions in which successful candidates may show their stuff, contribute to a great paper, gain invaluable experience and even earn a couple of dollars!

Available Positions:
Advertising Manager, Computer Systems Manager, Advertising Designers, Sales Reps and house cleaners

Please Contact Mark at 533-6711, email at journal@post.queensu.ca or simply stop by the Journal house at 272 Earl st. to pick up an application. NO EXPERIENCE REQUIRED!

In Kingston for the Spring or Summer?

Get a head start on next year and take a spring or summer course.

Spring Term Classes: 3 May 14 June Summer Term Classes: 5 July 16 August Spring-Summer Classes: 3 May 20 July

Courses In: Fine Art, Art History, Biology, Classics (Archaeology), Commerce, Computing Science, Drama, Economics, English, Film, French, Geography, German, Greek, Health, History, Italian, Mathematics, Microbiology & Immunology, Music, Nursing, Pharmacology, Philosophy, Physics, Politics, Psychology, Religion, Sociology, Spanish, Statistics, Women's Studies and Effective Writing.

Not In Kingston for the Spring or Summer?

Take a correspondence course home with you!

To register, or for more information contact:
Continuing & Distance Studies

F1 Mackintosh-Corry Hall 533-2471 www.queensu.ca/cds

Queen's = a degree

- + volunteer opportunities
- + athletics + government
- + performing arts + clubs
- + people, service jobs
- + spirit + tons of fun
- + a whole lot more...

Get involved.

Positions are still open in Academic Affairs, Campus Activities, Internal Affairs, Municipal Affairs and Social Issues. Visit the AMS today.

Help put a roof over their heads and hope in their hearts.

Have your name placed on a shingle for a donation of just $2 to the Ryandale Shelter for the homeless.

Raise the Roof

Sponsor a shingle today.

Ryandale Shelter for the Homeless

THE JOURNAL

since 1873

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1999

General Travel: 549-3553 Long Haul / Groups: 549-3561

Although they were set for sunshine by Lake Ontario, Sarah Willett and Erin Nicholson, ArtSci '00, were game to frolic in April showers, too.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Warrant issued for suspect

By JOCELYN LAPORTE

Kingston police are initiating plans to make an arrest in an incident that occurred last week involving two Queen's students who were abducted, robbed and locked in the trunk of a car.

The two students were sitting in their vehicle outside one of their homes on Clergy Street last Tuesday when two perpetrators wearing balaclavas entered their vehicle and threatened them at gunpoint.

The first suspect is 26-year-old James Warren Gunter, who is currently facing charges for the alleged abduction of a 27-year-old Halifax woman. Gunter is believed to be a native of Florida.

The woman from Halifax said she met Gunter through an Internet Star Wars chat room, according to an article in yesterday's Kingston Whig-Standard.

"They travelled from Halifax to Kingston with numerous trips to Toronto and back to Kingston," reported Staff Sergeant Paul White to The Canadian Press last week. "They stayed in motel rooms where she was tied up and secured for the night." The woman was left near a Niagara Falls shopping mall.

Kingston police made the announcement yesterday, issuing an arrest warrant "for two counts of robbery with a firearm, two counts of forcible confinement, one count of using a disguise while committing a criminal offence and two counts of unlawfully pointing a firearm."

Kingston police said they know the identity of the second suspect, who they believe to be in Ontario, but would not release any additional information.

A friend of the victims said "they're pretty traumatized... they're really not in a state to be writing exams."

Enrolment to surge in 2002

By FIONA STEVENSON

If the findings of two recent studies are accurate, Ontario universities and the provincial government will face a significant challenge in dealing with a dramatic enrolment increase over the next decade.

"Our position is that this is clearly an issue that has to be worked on jointly by the government and the universities... Provided both sides do their part, we will be able to meet the demand," said Ian Clark, president of the Council of Ontario Universities, the body that commissioned the studies.

"The government is actively engaged in working groups and discussions with the universities to develop a complete plan to deal with this issue," said Robert Prichard, Chair of COU and President of the University of Toronto.

Last fall, COU commissioned consulting firm PricewaterhouseCoopers to analyze enrolment projections and the capacity of universities in Ontario to meet the expected demand. Opinion research firm Angus Reid was commissioned to determine public opinion with respect to Ontario universities and options for dealing with the enrolment increase.

The studies suggest that a combination of factors is likely to result in enrolment increasing by approximately 90,000 students over the next decade.

The surge in demand is expected to begin in 2002 when secondary school reforms result in the number of high school graduates increasing by 33,500. At the same time, there will be an increase in the population of traditional university-aged students (18 to 24). As well, there will be an increased desire for graduate and postgraduate degrees, and a rise in the number of people leaving their jobs to improve their educations, the analysis suggests.

In Ontario, the projected expansion would increase the number of full-time university students in the 17 institutions by about 40 per cent. The current

Please see Increase on page 6

This is for real.

Get a job!

Experience is not required.

Positions available:

Who's Where / What's Next Project Manager

Work full-time through the summer and into October to oversee the production of two campus publications.

Business Development Staff

Join an AMS team committed to improving life on campus by securing support from businesses and other off-campus organisations.

Hoods & Gowns Manager

Oversee the hood and gown operations at convocations. The time spent on this job is focused on these two convocation sessions.

Applications for these positions are due Tuesday, April 6th at 16:30.

Please ask current employees of the AMS or the new Executive if you have any questions about available positions.

Applications are available at the AMS Front Desk, and are due back at the same place.

The AMS is committed to employment equity. All AMS members in good academic standing are encouraged to apply.

index

Volume 126, Issue 40
www.journal.queensu.ca

News	1	ABE	33
Editorials	16	Crossword	39
Opinions	17	Classifieds	40
Science	21	MSC	43
Features	22	Last Words	44
Sports & Fitness	25

WEATHERWATCH

Today Sunny with clouds High 11°C; Low -1°C; POP 0%	Saturday Mix of sun and cloud High 13°C; Low 5°C; POP 20%
Friday Rainy High 11°C; Low -1°C; POP 90%	Sunday Rainy High 11°C; Low 2°C; POP 90%

JDUC renovations may be in the works

By RENÉE HUANG

In the constantly evolving world of buildings on campus, yet another renovation may be in the works for the John Deutsch University Centre.

The Campus Planning and Development Committee, in conjunction with JDUC council, recently developed a concept that suggests moving the AMS offices, currently located in the narrow corridor beside the Publishing and Copy Centre, into the L-shaped area branching off the ceiling.

In an attempt to open up space and improve visibility and accessibility, the concept proposes blowing open the area beneath Wallace Hall that currently house the Who's Where/What's Next office, Tricolour Yearbook, Studio Q and other campus organizations, said JDUC Director Jack Sinnott.

"Right now, it's a rabbit warren of underutilized space," he said. In the proposed concept, the space currently taken up by AMS offices would be used to accommodate organizations, groups and clubs.

The reconfiguration of student activity space comes on the heels of an AMS space survey initiated by the JDUC council and this year's AMS. Groups and

Please see Plan on page 15

Kosovo in Crisis

A former resident of Belgrade talks about the real victims of NATO bombings — citizens who neither support

Milosevic nor the invasion of their sovereign nation.

A Queen's student calls on others to think about who's really telling the truth. Trusting media reports means implicitly accepting the legitimacy of NATO's intervention. But who controls the media?

Please turn to Opinions, p. 18

Thanks for a Great Year
From all of us...
As of Monday April 12th
open nightly from 8 tilll close

4-SNight This Thursday April 8th

Last Day of classes '99... April 9th

FLUID FRIDAY

BUMBLEPUPPY

MANY MORE

Meal plan required for West?

BY LAURA MACINNIS

David Turpin has been a university administrator for 10 years, and is ready for a break.

Queen's Vice-Principal (Academic), affectionately known as "the teen dean," has decided not to renew his contract next year in order to return to his research in the field of biochemical physiology.

"I will be re-investing in my intellectual capital," said Turpin, who will be working in labs in France and Australia at the end of his term.

Turpin has had an impressive stint in university administration. Before taking the position of V-P (Academic), Turpin held positions as Head of the Botany Department at the University of British Columbia and Dean of Arts and Science at Queen's.

A search for a new vice-principal is underway, targeting both internal and external candidates. Among the members of the search committee are AMS President Tom Stanley, Dean of Arts and Science Robert Silverman, and psychology professor Jane Knox.

Starting next year, students living in West Campus Residences may no longer have the choice to opt-out of meal plans. The Ban Righ Board's Budgetary Advisory Committee has proposed to expand the mandatory meal plan to include the Jean Royce Hall Cafeteria.

According to Graham Brown, Director of Residences, the committee is proposing to expand the scope of the mandatory meal plan in order to generate additional revenue. This revenue will supplement the residence renewal fund, which is designed to improve the residence system.

"Keeping the optional meal plan at West would increase marketability."

— Anthony Farrell, president of Jean Royce Hall Council

As Brown notes, 75 per cent of Queen's residences are 35 years or older. Thus, the board wants to set money aside for renovations to improve the residences and help the university compete for the best students.

If passed the proposal would also allow students to choose a smaller number of meals per week and obtain a single room, and a 10-meal-a-week meal plan for about $5,700.

Brown believes the variety of choice offered by in the West Campus meal plan will result in more people choosing to live there. He further noted that allowing for options in the standard meal plan "is a better way to promote Queen's residences" because it has "something for everyone's budget."

As well, Brown commented that the expansion of the mandatory meal plan to West Campus will allow all residences to provide the same menu. Presently, "the West dining hall does not provide the food program that main campus has," Brown said.

Brown admits that the proposal to make meal plans mandatory on West Campus was not universally popular.

Alison Loat, AMS vice-president (university affairs), opposes the proposal, saying that it isn't fair to increase the revenue going into the residence system "at the expense of students who can probably least afford it."

Many West Campus student leaders also openly expressed their dissatisfaction.

Anthony Farrell, president of Jean Royce Hall Council, commented that the committee's objective was supposed to be to "increase the marketability of West Campus," noting that many students do not want to live there voluntarily.

According to Farrell, the council believes the committee's proposal will instead decrease West Campus' popularity due to the fact that many incoming students who selected to live on West Campus this year did so because it offers the choice to opt-out of meal plans. Farrell asserted that "keeping

Please see Plan on page 4

V-P Turpin to leave Queen's

BY LAURA MACINNIS

"We are carrying out a national search, with the assistance of Janet Wright and Associates, a search company," said Queen's Principal Bill Leggett.

"We have set ourselves a tentative timeline for July to be completed," said

Leggett, adding that if a candidate is not found by the summer the search will continue into the fall.

"I will be re-investing in my intellectual capital."

— David Turpin, vice-principal (academic)

David Turpin, vice-principal (academic)

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Turpin's term as V-P (Academic) officially ends in July of 2000. When the new vice-principal is selected, the candidate will work alongside Turpin for an undetermined period in order to become familiar with the role.

"We hope they will have the chance to benefit from the excellent leadership David has given," said Leggett.

When Leggett began his tenure as Principal of Queen's in 1993, he created the position of v-p (academic). The V-P Academic has a significant portfolio, responsible for external and internal academic issues including raising funds, budgeting, and promoting the university internationally.

Queen's@Home to be discontinued

BY LIANNE ELLIOTT

Starting in May, students living off-campus will have a new, cheaper cable Internet provider instead of having to use the Queen's computer system in order to access the Web.

"The new server is not as complicated to install."

— Andy Hooper, ITS manager of resources and systems

Queen's Information Technology Services has decided to discontinue Queen's @ Home, the specialized Internet server run through COGECO Cable Inc. which presently provides the student housing area with high-speed cable Internet access.

Queen's @ Home was created last year by ITS and marketed to private subscribers for a $30 monthly fee in response to the need for faster and constant Internet service.

ITS will instead sign Queen's up with COGECO's regular Internet server, which is currently used by Kingston's general public. Dial-in services to klink, both toll and free connections, will remain unchanged.

However, despite Queen's switching to COGECO's general server, students will still be able to benefit from the monthly discount rates and lowered installation fees they received with Queen's @ Home.

According to Andy Hooper, ITS manager of resources and systems, by using COGECO's regular server, the problems which arose with the installation of Queen's @ Home's will be eliminated. "The new server is not as complicated to install," he said, explaining that it follows "standard installation procedures."

Because Queen's @ Home is a specialized server, only a few technicians have the ability to install it. This resulted in a back-log of students waiting for Internet hook-up last September. "I found it to be a big hassle getting both ITS and COGECO to install Queen's at Home last fall," said Shannon Morton, ArtSci '01. "I had to wait a long time before everything was set-up properly," she said.

Another problem with Queen's @ Home is its inability to handle the high concentrations of users in certain areas of the city. These high concentrations result in slow access to Web sites and difficulty in getting on-line during popular times of the day. "The capacity is not sufficient enough for the nightly peak hours," Hooper said.

"Sometimes, I find I randomly can't get connected," said Michelle Zuliani, Sci '01. "It makes access to class Web sites really difficult."

According to Hooper, students will no longer face slow connections with the new server, as it has a higher capacity than Queen's @ Home and places fewer users on one line. "Congestion will be much lower," he said.

"Congestion will be much lower."

— Andy Hooper

Over the next week ITS plans on e-mailing all Queen's @ Home subscribers to inform them of the new server and necessary steps needed to switch over without cutting their Internet access.

AMS proposes new marking scheme

BY JOCELYN LAPORTE

The Alma Mater society is proposing the implementation of a new marking scheme to Queen's administration that would allow students to enrol in interdisciplinary elective courses without the risk of lowering their grade point average.

The new system, which has yet to be approved by the University, would be based on a Pass/D/Fail grading scheme.

This marking system would apply to undergraduate elective courses in various departments. Students would be limited to taking only a certain number of courses where these pass/fail grades could be received.

Program initiator and Academic Affairs Deputy Commissioner Rob Arnfield, stated in a press release, "The message students are receiving is to measure their success by their marks. The most valuable components of an undergraduate education have nothing to do with test scores. The proposed program allows students to discover this for themselves without penalty."

The Academic Affairs Commission is hoping this new system will be especially valuable to upper-year students who have more elective options but are concerned about their grade point averages for employment or graduate schools, explained Arnfield about the new scheme.

Deputy commissioner of Academic Affairs Aaron Lazarus, said "the basic point is for students to take elective courses and not have to worry about their marks."

"This new system, will help students take courses they might otherwise not be interested in," said Lazarus.

"We developed the scheme, then we heard it existed elsewhere," said Arnfield. Similar programs are already in place at numerous universities, including Harvard, Princeton, Yale and McGill.

"Pursuing breadth and a diverse education is possible without jeopardising your grade point average," said Arnfield about the benefits of the program.

"Philosophically I think it's a great idea," said Barry Smith, dean of the Faculty of Health Sciences. This change will "allow students to broaden their educational background without affecting their grade point average," he said.

Please see Student on page 6

Peeping Tom in housing area

BY CRYSTAL BQNA

For the second time in a week, a "peeping tom" has been spotted in the student housing area. "Last night, Walkhouse reported that there was a fellow peeping in a couple of windows in the student housing area," said Louise Fish, director of Campus Security.

"When [security] followed him, he became very agitated... ran into an alley and lost the security vehicle."

— Louise Fish, director of Campus Security

"When [security] followed him, he became very agitated... ran into an alley and lost the security vehicle. The area was searched and a description was passed on to the police," she added.

The suspect is a white male, 5'10" to 6', with red curly hair. He was wearing a three-quarter length green jacket and jeans. This is similar to the description of the "peeping tom" reported in an incident that occurred on March 29.

The individual in that case was described as very tall, muscular, in his early twenties, with buzz cut brown hair, and was wearing a green fleece jacket and blue jeans.

In the March 29 incident, police received a complaint from a house on Johnson Street of a man looking through a ground floor bedroom window. The suspect in this case has not been apprehended.

Fish offered advice for students living in the student housing area. "Keep the curtains drawn. If you notice any suspicious people in the area, phone Campus Security or the police," she said.

Fish added that it is important to "keep your windows and doors locked... peeping is one thing, but if they decide to come in and get a closer look," the situation could become more serious, she warned.

Treat me right

New document outlines TA treatment

By MANDY MARRIOTT

A new document outlining procedures for the treatment of graduate students on non-academic matters was approved by the Queen's administration and went into effect on March 12.

Lorena Taricani, vice-president (internal), said "this document evolved from the recent [Teaching Assistants] unionization drive. The administration recognizes that there are legitimate issues surrounding TAs at Queen's which need to be effectively addressed."

After graduate students voted against implementing a graduate students union at Queen's last year, some students took the opportunity to address the concerns in another way, Taricani continued.

The document outlining the procedures for the treatment of graduate students on non-academic matters was prepared by an informal working group consisting of V-P (Operations and Finance) John Cowan, representatives from the Society of Graduate and Professional Studies Students, and the School of Graduate Studies and Research. The document was then distributed to other vice principals and deans for review and comment, as well as both the Steering Committee and the Council of the SGSR before being approved and implemented.

"The administration recognizes that there are legitimate issues surrounding TAs at Queen's which need to be effectively addressed."

— Lorena Taricani, SGPS vice-president (internal)

Taricani said the document "clearly outlines the steps involved in settling grievances, outlines TA allocation within departments and employment practices for TAs, TA Fellows, and the like."

The document also makes clear the steps a graduate student can take if they feel they have been treated inappropriately, she added. Taricani contended that issues surrounding TAs have been around for a long time. One concerns the allocation of teaching supplies like photocopies and highlighters. "Some of these things were being paid for by students themselves, especially in the humanities," she said. Under the new policy, graduate students will not be required to pay for teaching materials.

Another major issue surrounding graduate students was the allotment of their sick pay. Taricani said that in the past, if a student was dismissed, their pay could be withheld until the issue was resolved. Under the new policy, students will be eligible for sick leave if they are unable to perform their duties because of illness or injury, she explained.

Taricani believes that both Cowan and Dean Anderson, Dean of the Graduate School, were particularly instrumental in the proceedings. She went on to say "that it was nice to have someone on the students' side."

Any future amendments to the policy will be done by a Joint Consultative Committee composed of two graduate students, the university's V-P (Operations) and the Dean of Graduate Studies and Research. In addition, the Joint Consultative Committee will provide a forum for discussion for any matters concerning the document or of any other University policies concerning graduate students that are of a non-academic nature.

Plan awaits final approval

Continued from page 3

the optional meal plan at West would increase marketability."

Farrell further noted that many people are already buying into the system, thus, the committee seems to be trying to "change something that doesn't need to be changed."

Farrell said he understands the need for revenue-building, but suggests the committee look for money in other things.

As it stands, the proposal has been sent back to the Budgetary Advisory Committee for further discussion. "It has not been rejected or accepted fully yet", Brown said.

Jean Royce Hall cafeteria on West Campus.

PHOTO BY ALEX KRONBY

Signatures... Schools Out!

TAKE ADVANTAGE of our Summer Hours by:

- Relaxing on our Euro-tanner, 5 sessions for $25.00
- Getting your Highlights and Haircuts for summer.
- Refilling all of your A.C. Products before you go!
- Booking all your Esthetic Appointments today!

See you in the Fall and HAVE A GREAT SUMMER from everyone at SIGNATURES

544-9022
100 Clergy Street West (JDUC)
Kingston, Ontario

How to cut your grocery bill IN HALF:

Fresh milk, eggs and bread.
Hot dogs, soup, cereal, fruit and vegetables.

Visit the student food bank.

Basement, 272 Earl St.
(between University and Division)
533-6972

There's no application. You don't need to show ID or prove financial need. Just drop by, and shop for free. We're open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m.

Alfie's review makes strong recommendations

This familiar hallway leading to Alfie's may soon see changes.

By ERIK MISSIA

As part of a new initiative by the AMS Strategic Planning Committee, an Alfie's Viability Review has recommended changes to the pub, including the creation of a full-time services manager position.

Another striking suggestion is the idea of the Alma Mater Society pursuing its own liquor license. Currently, Queen's only license is held by Associate Director of Residence Services/Director of Food and Beverage Services Bruce Griffiths.

Considering factors such as financial viability, social benefits and the pub's contributions to both the AMS and the Queen's community, the Viability Review Committee explored several different possibilities that would add to Alfie's ability to both attract larger crowds on off absolute AMS autonomy. "The AMS doesn't need parents," Ogle said.

Griffiths, on the other hand, doesn't see how the acquisition of its own license will change things for Alfie's. "It's not immediately clear to me how the AMS owning its own license would increase Alfie's viability operationally... as they would still be restricted from doing things illegally. The university would still ensure complete compliance with the law," he said, commenting that many of the Hub's 'lite nights' are against the liquor license policy.

As well as the license issue, the report examined the pub's smoker policy. "We looked at [their policy] from the perspective of what benefits the pub gains. The idea is that a group on campus would bring in extra business for Alfie's and in return for that, they would be allowed to charge cover and keep the proceeds. But on an already busy night like Thursday or Saturday, the bar is generally at capacity, so the marginal benefit of having a smoker isn't usually readily visible," explained Laryea.

Instead, the report suggests that smokers for bigger groups, such as entire faculties, be moved to off nights, having people frequent the bar when it is less busy. The size of the group seeking a smoker should be evaluated, said Laryea, as AMS Chairman of the Board of Directors Trevor Ogle agreed that Queen's establishments should acquire a separate liquor licence.

He referred to the administration's recent closure of the Queen's Pub and the need for some of the smaller clubs or organizations would only be able to benefit on the larger nights. "Smokers should be mutually beneficial," she commented.

Another recommendation by the report is that a committee look into the creation of a services manager position within the AMS to oversee not only Alfie's and the QR but other services such as the P&CC. Since one of the problems with Alfie's is considered to be the managerial turnover, the service manager — which would be a full-time position — would be able to provide some sort of continuity.

"It's important for Alfie's to have its own liquor license so that they can have more control over the pricing and promotion for the bar."

— Edlyne Laryea, chair of the Alfie's Review Committee

"The institutional memory is very short as students are only here for four or five years so some of the same mistakes happen again. The service manager would serve as the memory, becoming the safety net for management... they would help managers in carrying out policies and by keep them on track,"

Other changes the report advocates includes the addition of beer tubs and a liquor gun to minimize the wait for patrons, a reduction in both staff and Student Constables for off nights, and a re-examination of the funding relationship shared with Queen's Entertainment Agency.

Ogle was especially pleased with the report, extending thanks to both the Alfie's Review Committee and its UBS Exchange counterpart. "The reports successfully incorporated a lot of different views... they weren't 'pie in the sky', but realistic and credible. We now have an independent, thoroughly researched document that can be used for guidance in making both short and long term decisions. The Alfie's Report forms the genesis of new strategic planning for future management," he said. "To me, these evaluations are one of the first times the AMS has taken a hard look at itself... philosophically, it's a huge step forward."

"We hope that the Alfie's viability review committee final report provides a template for similar endeavours in the future," said Jabes. "As such, management buy-in and the follow-up in the implementation of the recommendations is crucial to increasing the credibility of the Board of Directors as a whole within the AMS."

Thank you Queen's students for a memorable year!

Thanks to all of you who committed your time and energy to making this university a better place.

Thanks to those of you we worked with directly, especially our council — we couldn't have done it without you.

We've learned a lot this year about education in this province and at Queen's. While we know Queen's is doing the best it can, and is still a top university in this province, student interests will never be taken into account until they are forcefully presented in a united manner. Deregulation and the threat of external competition are real, and risk dividing us. Although students may not agree on a vision of post-secondary education, accessibility should always be a central concern — not just framework rhetoric to make tuition increases more palatable.

We encourage all of you to be increasingly vigilant during your time at Queen's and after you graduate, to ensure a strong university system in this province.

Thomas Stanley
President

Gord Moodie
VP (Operations)

Alison Loat
VP (University Affairs)

Increase to cost up to $1.8 billion Student response favourable

Continued from page 1

university population is approximately 229,000.

COU estimates that the increase would require an additional $1.2 to $1.8 billion increase in spending by the provincial government. Universities currently receive annual operating grants of $1.6 billion from the government, which cut $400 million from university spending during its first two years in office.

Prichard said he is very encouraged that the provincial government is taking steps to plan for the enrolment increase. The Minister of Education and Training recently established a deputy-minister led Steering Group on the Double Cohort and Post-secondary Capacity, a body with college and university representation. Prichard noted that the government has consistently ensured that there will be a place in Ontario's post-secondary sector for every qualified and motivated Ontarian.

"They recognize it's a problem. They are working very closely with the universities to determine the most cost-effective way of dealing with it," Clark said.

There are many implications associated with the increased demand. Laboratories, classrooms and library resources will have to be added. A projected 11,000 to 12,000 additional faculty will need to be hired by Ontario universities to keep up with enrolment growth, replace retiring faculty, and reduce the student/faculty ratio to the national average.

"Ours are publicly funded universities," said Clark. "In order to have more professors, we need more public funds so in our report we described how much is required in order to both deal with the increased demand while holding the faculty/student ratio constant."

Clark explained.

The public opinion research conducted by Angus Reid indicates that Ontarians expect that all qualified students will have access to education. Of the 1,000 Ontarians surveyed, 96 per cent agreed that it's a priority for government to ensure access for every qualified student. The majority of those surveyed also agreed that quality should be maintained.

"I would say that it is the objective of Ontario universities to deal with the surge in demand simultaneously with taking measures to ensure quality, ensure an improved quality, and that's what we're working with the government to do," said Clark.

Whether or not quality of education is affected "will depend on how much money the Ontario public is in the end willing to spend on the university sector," he added.

Both Prichard and Clark see the increased demand as an opportunity to plan for the achievement of long-term goals. These include attracting top quality educators and researchers, ensuring the delivery of quality education, increasing the province's research capacity, improving the range of student assistance programs, and lowering the student/faculty ratio.

"We need to be ready to deal with all of these if we hope to be able to expand the system and improve the quality at the same time," Clark said.

Continued from page 3

Lazarus said the timing was perfect for this new initiative, considering the planned new curriculum review. "The time could not be better to have this kind of change made," said Lazarus. "This new system will help students take courses they might otherwise not be interested in."

"We think it's very realistic... the response has been favourable," said Lazarus. He also noted that students generally seem to be in favour of the change, "it just seems to make common sense to them."

"It's been thrown by a number of students committees it's gone over very well, the important part is to align all the administrators," explained Arntfield.

"We've had good support from Dean Silverman and Dean Smith," said Arntfield, who said the idea has also been addressed with Dean Harris.

Smith said the new system would fit Queen's as a university for students with broad interests. "I think it is important we have grading systems that allow them to broaden themselves."

"I'm very excited about this idea," said Arntfield. "I think it's particularly important at Queen's where academic rigour is what excites us."

Queen's students had the opportunity to pose for photos with the famous Stanley Cup Wednesday. From left: Katie Tompkins, Colin Ritchie, Sean Mazurkiewicz, Eiana Rosenberg, Ryan Aunger and Danielle Fama.

PHOTO BY JAMES KRONBY

You no longer have a curfew, so why should we?

Clearnet's new unlimited evening and weekends. Introducing Clearnet's new $45 flat rate plan. One low price that gets you thousands of included local minutes, voice mail, call waiting and caller ID. And there's no activation fee and no contract to sign. Pick one up at your campus bookstore or reach us at www.clearnet.com/student or 1-888-248-5968. The future is friendly.

Network Technology by clearNET pcs Lucent Technologies Bell Labs Innovations

WILLIAM FICHTNER
KATIE HOLMES
JAY MOHR
SARAH POLLEY
SCOTT WOLF

from the director of "Swingers"

GO

life begins at 3am.

SUBJECT TO CLASSIFICATION

www.sony.com/go AT THEATRES SOON

"And the Award for Best Performance in a Leading Role goes to..."

the CLASS of '99!"

Through Queen's Graduating Class Gift Programs, graduating students in ten faculties and schools said "Thanks Queen's" with gifts to their class projects. To date this year, the Class of '99 pledged more than $209 000 to Thank Q and COMMitment, and pledges are still coming in...

Faculty/School	Project	Percent Participation	Amount Pledged
Applied Science	Science '99 Student Bursary	76%	$70 600
Arts & Science	ArtSci '99 Student Bursary, Student Initiatives Fund & Mark Wilson Memorial Park Bench	56%	$77 529
Commerce	Commerce '99 Bursary	40%	$22 629 (campaign in progress)
Education	Arthur Mandell Education Bursary	34%	$5 000 (outright gifts)
Law	Moot Court Room Renovations	39%	$13 420
Nursing	Nursing '99 Student Bursary	81%	$6 900
PhysEd	Computer Lab Upgrades	78%	$10 560
Rehab	Audio Visual Equipment	30%	$2 610
MBA	Student Endowment Fund	Results Unavailable at Time of Press
Medicine	KGH ON Call Lounge Upgrades	Results Unavailable at Time of Press
Executive MBA	Small Business Consulting & Artwork for MBA Office	Results Unavailable at Time of Press

THANK Q TO THE CLASS OF '99!

For more information about Thank Q or COMMitment Graduating Class Gift Programs, or to join your classmates, please contact the Thank Q Coordinator at 533-6000 ext 75883, or your faculty representative.

ASUS SAC

The ASUS Society Affairs Commission would like to thank the following businesses for donating items in the 1999 Charity Silent Auction:

- |                   |                        |                          |                                   |
|-------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| First Canada Inns | Lick's Ice Cream       | Black's Photography      | Jankins Computers                 |
| Alcan             | Zap Records            | Photography              | Heritage Screencraft & Embroidery |
| Flowers & Things  | Atrium Arts            | Trasherteria             | Uniglobe Travel                   |
| Blockbuster Video | Downtown               | Pan Chancho              | Stepping Stone Inn                |
| Econo Dry         | Workout                | Classic Video            | Cataraqui Cinema                  |
| Cleaning          | Camera Kingston        | Kingston School of Music | Canyon Mountain Company           |
| Guys & Dolls      | Screening Room         | JDUC Retail Postal       | Robert & Elaine Silverman         |
| Videoland         | 501 Video              | ASUS Theatre             | Anatole Pappopoulos               |
| Haircraft S & R   | Windmills Cafe         | Ms. E.A. Bartlett        | Mode One Hair Design              |
| Coffee & Company  | Odyssey Travel         | Clark Hall Pub           | Winnle's Boutique                 |
| Swiss Pasteries   | Taekwondo School       | Campus Bookstore         | Mark's Work Warehouse             |
| Neon Clothes      | Copper Penny           | Alfie's Pub              |                                   |
| ASUS '99 Formal   | Turks                  | Carlson Wagonlit         |                                   |
| Maison Paul       | Olympic Photo          | The Bay                  |                                   |
| Coiffure          | Godfatha Pizza         | Cobico Jewellers         |                                   |
|                   | The Grizzly Grill      | Smithbooks               |                                   |
|                   | Ho-Lee-Chow            | Wine Shoppe              |                                   |
|                   | Canada's Best Karate   | Zellers Inc              |                                   |
|                   | Really Rainbow Designs | HMV                      |                                   |
|                   | Kiddie Kobbler         | University Coin Wash     |                                   |
|                   | Stooley's Cafe         | College Book Merchant    |                                   |

And Thanks to everyone who bid on an item for making the '99 auction the best yet!! See you next year!!!

Journal to end year with significant profit
Largest year-end total since 1994-1995

BY MAGGIE BUHAJCYK

For the first time in years, The Queen's Journal will end the year with a substantial profit.

The newspaper is currently $43,000 in the black, although this is expected to decrease considerably because The Journal still has outstanding expenses to pay before the end of the year. "The $43,000 accounts for the profit made as of March 31st. We expect the current figures to drop by approximately $20,000 because we still have to pay honorariums," explained Tara Mansbridge, co-editor-in-chief.

"It's better than losing $30,000 or so, because at least next year we can make substantial improvements to The Journal," he said. "I just think we need to focus on using the money well."

— Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations)

The profit is a dramatic turnaround from the last few years. Last year, The Journal lost approximately $17,000 and in 1996-97, the newspaper was almost $31,000 in the red. The last time the Journal made a profit was in 1995-96, when they made $2,024 and in 1994-95 with a $25,982 profit.

Keith Gerein, co-editor in chief, attributed this year's profit to an overall reduction in costs. "We really cut expenses this year. There haven't been any huge savings on one particular thing. It's just been a number of small things," he said. On average, paper sizes were smaller this year and included a higher ad content. Other expense reductions included printing and delivery costs as well as utilities and administrative fees.

"It's been a general dedication to living within our means and being within our budget," said Mansbridge. "We've really been scrimping," she added.

While pleased, Mansbridge and Gerein were surprised by the numbers. "The Journal is not mandated to be running a large profit. We don't want to be taking extra money from students," said Gerein. "Both Tara and I would have preferred to see it a lot closer to zero."

Mansbridge agreed. "I wouldn't want to see The Journal make a profit on a long-term basis, but I think a profit this year, although not intended, can make it a lot easier for next year's crew," she said.

AMS Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie, said that the profit "was a bit high for a service that charges student fees" but was confident that it could be appropriately reinvested. "It's better than losing $30,000 or so, because at least next year we can make substantial improvements to The Journal," he said. "I just think we need to focus on using it receives from the mandatory $2.50 AMS student fee. "The recent history of this place has been to lose money. At this stage, it would be premature to start cutting revenue or increasing expenses because it's very easy to slip back into the old pattern," he said.

According to Mansbridge the projected $20,000 left at year end will be absorbed into the AMS. "The money we make this year will go to covering short falls in other places," she said. She added that the money may also be needed to prepare for next year's Y2K.

Moodie said he hopes the money can be put towards upgrading The Journal's computer system and increasing staff honorariums. "There are things in The Journal that the money can be spent on," he said. "I think the emphasis is on service improvement."

Mansbridge would also like to see the money go towards volunteer appreciation. "That's where we want to reinvest and make sure the people who work here feel valued for the immense amount of time they put in," she explained.

Incoming Editor-in-chief Sarah Crosbie said she could not predict where the money would be spent until next year's budget was determined. However, she hopes to continue the trend in the future. "I think it's incredible that Tara and Keith got The Journal out of the rut and I hope our year will at least break even," she said.

The Journal house at 272 Earl St.

PHOTO BY JAMES TERJANIAN

Despite the profit, Gerein maintains that The Journal still relies on the money

UNCOMMON SENSE

THE GREEN PARTY OF ONTARIO PROPOSES:

- ✓ reduced tuitions and enhanced assistance programs
- ✓ student loans repayable through community work
- ✓ increased emphasis on arts education
- ✓ a 32-hour work week to make room for young people entering the work-force
- ✓ expanded and extended maternity/paternity leave
- ✓ a proportional representation election system
- ✓ a revenue-neutral tax shift away from income and onto resources to help boost the economy
- ✓ a guaranteed annual income supplement to replace welfare and encourage employment
- ✓ a reduction of Ontario's three deficits: fiscal, social and environmental

Does this sound like ONLY an environmental party to you?

Find out more at the Public Information Meeting Tuesday, April 20 at 7:30 at the Kingston Public Library

QUEEN'S GREENS
KINGSTON GREEN PARTY

Contact: tal_henderson@hotmail.com

Saturday, April 10
Doors Open 9PM

Alfie's
PUB
LIVE MUSIC

Fundraiser to Record a CD
$5 Donation at The Door

Award honours Queen's profs

Recipients of the Frank Knox Teaching Award, Leander Fabrigar from psychology (middle left) and Jim Lee from geological science (middle right) pose with committee members (from left) Lisa Mori, Carly Grimsen, Chair Rodger Scott, Alex Tarantino, and Cathy Kitchen.

BY RENEE HUANG

"You are the best instructors Queen's has to offer." With that introduction, the two recipients of the Frank Knox Award for Excellence in Teaching were announced Tuesday evening before a crowd of approximately 70 well-wishers.

"I'm kind of in shock... I think it's fabulous that junior faculty could be recognized for teaching."

— Jim Lee, geological science professor and Frank Knox Teaching Award winner

Psychology professor Leander Fabrigar and Jim Lee from geological science are the newest recipients of the Frank Knox Award, and were honoured along with 24 other nominees at a reception held at the University Club.

enthusiastic students," continued Lee, who has taught at Queen's for three years. "I really enjoy interacting with the students."

Each year, two instructors are selected from a pool nominated by students, and are honoured for their outstanding commitment to education. The award was established in 1989 as a tribute to Frank Knox, a professor of economics who demonstrated "tremendous dedication in his teaching of Queen's undergraduates from the 1920s to 1960," stated a written description from the Academic Affairs Commission.

"It's been a pleasure to teach the students here and I wouldn't trade them for any in the world."

— Leander Fabrigar, psychology professor and Frank Knox Teaching Award winner

Both instructors were pleased to receive the award, often considered the highest honour of recognition from students. "It's been a pleasure to teach the students here and I wouldn't trade them for any in the world," said Fabrigar, who has taught at Queen's for four years. "It's not really work to teach these students."

"I'm kind of in shock," said Lee. "I think it's fabulous that junior faculty could be recognized for teaching." He explained that part of his surprise stemmed from the fact that the course he was nominated for has only been in existence for two years. "I was lucky to have bright and

Chair of the Frank Knox Award committee Rodger Scott said the nomination process required two letters of recommendations from students. Candidates were evaluated along five criteria from overall teaching excellence to availability outside classroom time.

The committee, consisting of Lisa Mori, Con-Ed '99, Carly Grimsen, ArtSci '00, Alex Tarantino, ArtSci '01 and Cathy Kitchen, Comm '99 hoped the award would allow students to express their appreciation for teaching excellence, and recognize the contributions and efforts of all instructors nominated.

1998-99 Frank Knox Teaching Award Nominees

- Wayne Albert - Physical and Health Education
- David Bacon - Chemical Engineering
- Axel Becke - Chemistry
- James Carson - History
- Lynann Clapham - Physics
- Peggy Cunningham - School of Business
- Robin Dawes - Computing and Information Sciences
- Merlin Donald - Psychology
- Lee Fabrigar - Psychology
- Dan Fraiken - Theology
- Alois Freunderfer - Electrical Engineering
- John Hanes - Geological Sciences
- Elizabeth Hanson - English
- David Lawrence - Chemical Engineering
- Jim Lee - Geological Sciences
- Max Lizano - Spanish
- Fred Lock - English
- Eleanor MacDonald - Political Studies
- Olga Malyshko - Music
- Donna O'Connor - Occupational Therapy
- Patricia Rae - English
- Ken Rose - Physiology
- Robert Shenton - History
- Geoffrey Smith - History
- Gary Wagner - Drama
- Tracy Ware - English

The Campus Bookstore would like to thank those individuals who participated in the Campus Bookstore Surveys. We received 498 completed surveys; therefore we will be donating $498.00 to a local literacy foundation on your behalf. Check your email to see if you were one of the lucky winners of a $50.00 gift certificate from the Campus Bookstore.

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955
Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909
www.campusbookstore.com

Need a Headquarters?
Need an office?

JDOC OFFICE SPACE
NOW AVAILABLE...

... for AMS affiliated clubs and extra-curricular groups.

Applications now available at the AMS front desk and are due back at the CIA office by May 1st.

Questions? Contact Carol or Dan ext. 74815

Would you like to spend a term in England?

It is possible to experience the ISC for a cost comparable to being on campus

New Bursaries Available:
Up to $5000

For information & applications, contact:
Student Awards, Victoria School Bldg.
(613) 533-2216
Awards@post.queensu.ca
www.queensu.ca/lialson/isc/isc.htm

MOVING MADNESS!

You think exams are hell? Get ready for The Move!
 An important message for outgoing tenants, new tenants and landlords.
 The Municipal Affairs Commission (533-6000 ext. 75178) and Town-Gown Relations (533-6745) are ready to help!

Outgoing Tenants

You should leave your unit clean and tidy. It makes it nicer for the next tenant...and the landlord can charge you if you've left dirt, furniture or damage behind. Don't leave garbage behind trying to get back at a nasty landlord...it only hurts the next tenants who are probably students like yourself.

Incoming Tenants

Make sure the place is clean and clear of garbage. If it isn't, note problems in writing and contact your landlord ASAP. As a new tenant, you have the right to a clean unit and you should not be responsible for labour or costs to clean up after a previous tenant. If you're pleased with the conditions, take time to give those responsible (tenants or landlord) the credit they deserve.

Landlords

New tenants have the right to move into a clean house with clean appliances, free from the traces (or worse) of the previous tenants. Talk to your current tenants now -- and offer what help you can -- to make sure the place will be ready for the next set of tenants. Ultimately, though, it's your responsibility to have it in shape!

If you're moving in... new tenants

New tenants should be aware that they can contact the City of Kingston Property Standards Officer (384-1770) ext. 203 or the Kingston Fire Inspector (548-7861) to arrange a FREE house inspection.

GETTING RID OF STUFF - THE RIGHT WAY!

RECYCLING

Make the most of your Blue Box. Recycle newspapers, notes, magazines, catalogues, plastics (#1, 2, 4, 5, 6), clean plastic bags, styrofoam, metal cans (clean), cardboard (cereal boxes, etc. but not pizza boxes with food stains), glass bottles and jars (Clean with no lids), corrugated cardboard, aluminum trays and foil, fine paper and envelopes.

If you need a sheet telling you how to separate your stuff...so that it Goes Away...or if you need a Recycling/Garbage schedule, contact the MAC or Town-Gown. Need a Blue Box --- Still? Call Town-Gown to get one with a $6 deposit.

REUSABLE STUFF YOU DON'T WANT ANYMORE

Like what? Couches, chairs, pots & pans, cutlery & kitchen things, small appliances, "pieces of art," drapes, blinds, mats, etc. Items must be clean, intact and reusable.

If you can't sell it or give it away to a friend, then donate it to a worthy organization:

- Bridge House - 549-6303
- St. Vincent de Paul Society - 546-3333
- Dawn House Women's Shelter - 545-9640
- The March of Dimes Store - 549-4141
- Goodwill - 545-3643
- The Salvation Army Thrift Store - 548-4411
- Kingston Interval House - 546-1833

*some places can pick up...far other places, you must deliver --- give them a call!

OR you can donate stuff to the MAC-AMS Yard Sale on April 30th & May 1st at the "Unwanted Stuff" site at the Alfred Street Parking lot between Stauffer Library and the Old Victoria School (Awards & Admissions - Registrar's Office). MAC will have a van available and will pick up large items for the yard sale - call them at the MAC office - 533-6000 ext. 75178.

CLOTHING

Pick up a Salvation Army Blue Bag at the AMS office or Town-Gown Office (both offices located in the JDUC) and fill it with any re-usable clothing (pants, shirts, skirts, socks, shoes, jackets, hats, scarves). Drop it off at the AMS office during regular business hours for pick-up by the Salvation Army.

NON-PERISHABLE FOOD

Bring canned or unopened non-perishable food to the AMS office or call Partners in Mission Food Bank at 544-4534.

Get together with friends for the "clean out the fridge" potluck. Mmmm, pickles, mustard and year-old fishsticks! Got stuff that is opened and perishable? Give to friends -- don't waste!

GARBAGE

also known as...

ITEMS THAT CANNOT BE RE-USED OR RECYCLED

1) If it fits in the garbage bag without the bag ripping, put it out for your regular garbage pick-up.

2) Otherwise, take large garbage (couch, mattress, TV stand) to the Waste Transfer Station (see map). You can dump it there for NO COST April 26 through May 15. (At other times of the year, there is a weight-based fee). Hours of operation: Monday - Friday, 7 a.m. - 4 p.m.; Saturday, 8 a.m. - 1 p.m. *Either use your moving van to transport large garbage before you move...or put your dead couch on the last of all and drop it off on the way to the 401!

3) If you really, really, really have no means of getting your large garbage to the Waste Transfer Station during the NO COST period, bring it to the "Unwanted Stuff" Site operating ONLY April 30 and May 1 during daylight hours in the Alfred St. parking lot between Stauffer Library and the Student Awards/Admissions Office of the Registrar (Old Victoria School). The AMS Yard Sale will be taking place on the same site at the same times...and you can bring your Blue Box recycling (yes, that's a year's worth of notes) there too. (The site is staffed...you can't miss it...corner of Alfred and Union).

Kingston Garbage & Recycling Collection Zones

April
S	M	T	W	T	F	S
				1 <sup>E</sup>	2 <sup>D</sup>	3 <sup>D</sup>
4 <sup>D</sup>	5 <sup>D</sup>	6 <sup>B</sup>	7 <sup>A</sup>	8 <sup>C</sup>	9 <sup>D</sup>	10 <sup>D</sup>
11 <sup>D</sup>	12 <sup>E</sup>	13 <sup>B</sup>	14 <sup>A</sup>	15 <sup>C</sup>	16 <sup>D</sup>	17 <sup>D</sup>
18 <sup>D</sup>	19 <sup>E</sup>	20 <sup>B</sup>	21 <sup>A</sup>	22 <sup>C</sup>	23 <sup>D</sup>	24 <sup>D</sup>
25 <sup>D</sup>	26 <sup>E</sup>	27 <sup>B</sup>	28 <sup>A</sup>	29 <sup>C</sup>	30 <sup>D</sup>

May
S	M	T	W	T	F	S
						1 <sup>D</sup>
2 <sup>D</sup>	3 <sup>E</sup>	4 <sup>B</sup>	5 <sup>A</sup>	6 <sup>C</sup>	7 <sup>D</sup>	8 <sup>D</sup>
9 <sup>D</sup>	10 <sup>E</sup>	11 <sup>B</sup>	12 <sup>A</sup>	13 <sup>C</sup>	14 <sup>D</sup>	15 <sup>D</sup>
16 <sup>D</sup>	17 <sup>E</sup>	18 <sup>B</sup>	19 <sup>A</sup>	20 <sup>C</sup>	21 <sup>D</sup>	22 <sup>D</sup>
23 <sup>D</sup>	24 <sup>E</sup>	25 <sup>B</sup>	26 <sup>A</sup>	27 <sup>C</sup>	28 <sup>D</sup>	29 <sup>D</sup>
30 <sup>D</sup>

Garbage & Recycling Schedule

Location of Waste Transfer Station and K.A.R.C./ Hazardous Waste Facility. Only 10 minutes north of campus!

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Don't put this stuff out with the garbage! Augh! Paints, solvents, (paint thinner, etc.) batteries, aerosol containers, household cleaners are toxic waste. Keep hazardous waste in its original containers. Take it to the hazardous waste facility at KARC (see map) ONLY during these times: every Thursday and the 2nd Saturday of the month from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. (Dates in April are the 8th, 10th, 15th, 22nd and 29th). Questions? Call the site at 546-4988. (Your landlord may be willing to help transport you and your scary stuff).

EVIL PEOPLE

Each year, bad people try to "hide" their garbage in their neighbour's backyard...or in the dumpsters paid for by others...etc. These people often get caught. And they are truly evil. Please don't be evil. Somehow you got the stuff to Kingston - take responsibility for it!

These timely and helpful hints brought to you by the AMS Municipal Affairs Commission and the Town-Gown Relations Office. Good Luck Moving!

Dear Staff and Customers,
As the year comes to a close, we'd like to thank you all for not only your business, but also your loyalty to this service. Without great staff, and friendly clients such as yourselves this student run operation just isn't possible. Our hats come off to all of you who have helped us out throughout this long year, and they go back on for the few who kicked us when we were down. Good luck to the Management of 1999/2000. You're gonna need it.

The P&C Management of 1998/1999

P&C
 The Publishing and Copy Centre

Thanks again!

on behalf of the AMS food bank

- A & P at Princess and Barrie
- AMS Welcome Back Week
- Campus Bookstore
- Department of Film Studies
- English DSC
- ENGSO
- Faculty of Arts and Science
- Health, Counselling & Disability Services
- Office of Advancement

- Queen's Apartment and Housing
- Queen's Christian Fellowship
- Queen's Residences
- Queen's Libraries
- Queen's University Faculty Association
- Queen's Ultimate Frisbee Club
- Vice Principal (Advancement)
- Weston Bakeries
- Queen's Journal

...and best of luck to Vanessa Chiasson, next year's food bank coordinator

Open Mondays and Thursdays, 4-6 p.m. until April 26.
 272 Earl St. (basement) • 533-6972

Plan 'a step forward'

Continued from page 1

services currently housed in the JDUC were surveyed about the quality of the work space and activity needs.

"This is a project... that fits into the student life initiative," said outgoing Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie. The relocated offices would be organized around open concept office space with portable work stations that would increase flexibility and visibility of the AMS. "If I had a window in my office this year, the things I could've accomplished," Moodie said, in hindsight.

The proposed AMS office expansion is a short-term solution that fits into the overall long-term scheme to improve student life facilities at Queen's, in order to "improve student activity space in such a way to avoid compromising future redevelopment," said Sinnott.

The existing AMS office space has been criticized for its inaccessible nature. "Queen's has one of the most vibrant student life on campus yet one of the most deficient student life facilities," said outgoing AMS President Tom Stanley.

"I don't think people will come to the AMS unless we make the doorway so they just stumble in," said Moodie.

"I think the move and location would make us more visible and accessible... and less intimidating to visit," said Lisa Mori, incoming vice-president (university affairs). "It's advantageous to have AMS volunteers sharing work stations for the [benefit] of support systems," she continued. "Providing the set up allows for some privacy [for phone calls and meetings]. I don't think an open concept work space would be detrimental to our effectability."

Part of the reason the JDUC keeps undergoing renovations, Stanley said, is that the initial building plan did not consider long-term planning. "If we can get some vision and start implementing it in steps, we can really make this building great," he said.

Although the plan is still in its preliminary stages, important details still need to be worked out. "I think if we could find a balance between... some small offices... and then general open workspace, it could be an efficient set up," Mori said, citing the possible reallocation of student activity space as a "step forward... in terms of getting where we want to be in a couple years."

The long-term plan to improve student life facilities includes removing graduate residence in the JDUC, revamping the Phys-Ed Centre and building a new field house on Clergy Street.

Since the JDUC council has approved the concept, Sinnott said a small committee of representatives from user groups will meet over the next three to four weeks to "try and put some flesh on this skeleton."

If approved, Sinnott said the redevelopment of the JDUC into "a high traffic social space" could conceivably be done this summer.

It is still unresolved where the source of funding for the expansion will be.

Fast Facts

In Here

Breast Cancer awareness walk

The sixth annual walk to raise awareness of Breast Cancer will be held on May 8. Registration begins at 9:30 a.m. at the Gazebo in McDonald Park on the water at King and Barrie Streets.

There is a $15 registration fee, which includes a t-shirt. Sponsor sheets are available at All Hair Alternatives, Eclectica Gallery, Indigo Books, K R Copy, Liz Claiborne outlet, Neva's Mastectomy Boutique, Ontario Breast Screening Program, and Scotiabank. For more information, please contact Breast Cancer Action Kingston at 531-7912.

Ryandale Shelter needs volunteers

Are you staying in Kingston this summer? Why not volunteer at Ryandale Shelter for the homeless? There are afternoon, evening, and overnight shifts available. For information, call Michelle at 548-8466.

Royal Bank Mayor's Walk

Volunteers are needed to take part in the Royal Bank Mayor's Walk on April 24. For information, call Bill Bleackley at 542-1336.

WearFair Networking meeting

On April 14 WearFair, a group against sweatshops, will be holding a networking meeting consisting of a short video and discussion at the John Orr Room in the JDUC. For more information contact Christine at 546-9416 or e-mail her at 7ct3@qlink.queensu.ca.

Out There

Five people killed in Ottawa massacre

Five people were killed in Ottawa on Tuesday afternoon after a lone gunman opened fire in the stockroom of the Ottawa transit company and then turned the gun on himself. The gunman was a former employee of Ottawa Transit.

— courtesy of The Globe and Mail

S.T.A.R. (The Student Team on Alumni Relations) would like to thank the following corporations for their generous support of our Survival Kit program:

Pepsi-Cola Canada
 Alberto Culver
 Butler
 Blistex Ltd.
 Deodato's

Hunt Wesson
 Krispy Kernels
 Hershey Canada
 Sanford
 Dep Canada

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1873

Oh, what a year!

Ed board awards darts and laurels for '98-'99

THE 'TEFLON COATING' AWARD: The outgoing AMS Executive, for a year of nearly scandal-free leadership.

THE 'RICHARD NIXON' AWARD: Incoming AMS Executive for tarnishing the position before they even took office.

THE 'TO SERVE AND PROTECT' AWARD: Campus Security Director Louise Fish and Media Spokesperson Sue Wagar for their diligence in bringing security issues to the attention of students.

THE 'SWIFT KICK' AWARD: The administration, for surprising students with a 40 per cent tuition hike for Commerce and 30 per cent for Applied Science after no public discourse.

THE 'OPRAH'S BOOK CLUB' AWARD: ultraviolet magazine, for raising the profile of the literary scene at Queen's and packaging a stellar CD with their latest issue.

THE 'POLKAROO' AWARD: The new Rector, Mike Kealy. Has any one seen this guy?

THE 'OPENING DOORS' AWARD: The Accessibility Task Force for making progress towards making the campus more accessible.

THE 'DOES ANYONE CARE?' AWARD: The AMS Social Issues Commission, lacking the initiative to bother printing the Anti-Racism Review, renamed Culture Shock, as planned.

THE 'STRENGTH OF SPIRIT' AWARD: New Equity Advisor Mary Margaret Dauphinee for working hard to establish her new office in the uncertainty following the elimination of the office of the Dean of Women.

THE 'WALKHOME OR STAY HOME' AWARD: Out campus, for being an unsafe environment for students, as evidenced by this year's alarming number of violent assaults and the threat of date rape drugs such as Rohypnol.

THE 'GOLDEN RULE' AWARD: AMS Food Bank Co-ordinator Eric

Morris for making the community aware that the food bank is a service available to all students.

THE 'GET OFF YOUR ASS' AWARD: For a student body that doesn't seem interested in exercising its democratic will or getting involved in student life and opportunities on campus.

THE 'CAMPUS DIPLOMAT' AWARD: JDUC Director Jack Sinnott, for his tireless and enthusiastic work behind the scenes, and for trying to reconcile with students after the Queen's Pub fiasco.

THE 'IGNORANT MASSES' AWARD: The ASUS representatives to AMS assembly, for insinuating that students are not informed enough to decide the issue of alignment for themselves.

THE 'GO THE EXTRA MILE' AWARD: Pat Bogstad, Associate Registrar (Student Awards), for bending over backwards to help students in their time of financial need.

THE 'GENDERLIZATIONS' AWARD: The Physical Education Centre, for making the washrooms accessible to transgendered persons.

THE 'YOU'VE GOT NAILED' AWARD: Dean of Law Alison Harvison-Young, for providing inadequate explanations for both an e-mail that showed preferential treatment for some students and a sexist letter that described a female law student as a 'hoitic.'

THE 'GREASY SILVER SPOON' AWARD: The Marriott run JDUC cafeteria, for charging exorbitant prices for cafeteria-quality food.

THE 'OIL-THIGH' AWARD: For an amazing Homecoming weekend (despite the storm) and a successful experiment with a beer tent.

THE 'YOU DO THE MATH' AWARD: The AMS, for not explaining to students what accounting discrepancies led to the firing of Walkhome Assistant Manager Mark Fam.

Journal superstars 1998-1999

Neil Acharya, Cimi Achiam, Heather Aggus, Karen Amit, Robert Arntfield, Geoff Ashenhurst, Galisdo Bae, Jennifer Barnes, Sarah Baumann, Tyler Benedict, Patrick Billey, Sarah Jane Bird, Lindsay Blakely, Michael Blank, Joseph Breen, Robin Brebner, Kari Brinnittell, Ian Brisbin, James Brown, Naomi Brunenmeyer, James Boake, Crystal Bona, April Bond, Maggie Buhajczyk, Mike Burgess, Paula Bush, Kevin Butler, Chris Carson, Stephanie Carvin, Alison Char, Boon Chang, Jeff Child, Cheryl Cheung, Michelle Cheung, Robert Choi, Hillary Clark, Daniel Clarke, James Clark, Aaron Collins, Michael Colby-Lorenzo, Lucas Costello, Madelaine Côté, Greg Coughlin, Sarah Crowe, Stacey-Anne Curtis, Sonya Dal Cin, Rajeev Dave, Robert De Bellefeuille, Scott Deveau, Natalie Diaz, Greg Dole, Theo dos Santos, Diana Drappel, Nicholas Du Prey, Alexander Dyer, Genevieve Eastbrook, Lianne Elliott, Daniel Evans, Tim Evans, Melissa Farmer, Doug Fever, Robin Fonger, Alastair Forbes, Tanya Foubert, Rachel, Friesen, Liz Frogley, Kristen Gable, Sean Gallivan, Douglas Reid Gieurla, Audrey Giles, Tim Gillespie, Kristen Glazer, Ryan Graham, Matthew Grant, Sonja Grgar, Chris Glover, Tanie Haas, Laura Hampel, Adam Davison Harden, Barbara Harvey, Chad Heard, Tal Henderson, Alan Hesketch, Marina Hess, Kelly Hishon, Chuck Holt, Ryan Hoffman, Sue Holland, Chris Holmes, Jennifer Howse, Greg Hughes, Bob Huihui, Simon Hunkin, Kate Hunter, Greg Jack, Todd Jackson, Angela James, Michael Johnson, Mark Johnson, Brock Jones, Simon Kalechstein, Mike Kealy, Jessica Keen, Anna Kim, Gabriella 'The Queen' King, Kathy Ko, Milan Konopek, Mike Kostoff, Jonathan Krashinsky, Calvin Lam, Aaron Lazarus, Johnny LaRue, Ellen Lee, Andy Lehrer, Alison Lemay, Sarah LeMay, Brad Lepp, Malcolm Levy, Kristian Li, Carol Liao, Sarah Lidstone, Andrew Limmert, Alison Loat, Julietta Loeffler, Kevin Lorimer, Charmian Love, Heather MacDonald, Mitra Manouchehrian, Mandy Marriott, Stefan Martin, Kevin McCarthy, Mike McDermont, David McCluskey, Taryn McCormick, Eric McDonald, Bob McGill, Jackie McLachlan, Craig McCall, Shandley McMurray, John Merritt, Vivik Mehta, Jason Millar, Owen Minns, Erik Missio, Alison Mitchell, Ben Molson, Joe Monsier, Gord Moodie, Jennifer Morrison, Eric Morris, Samantha Morris, Alex Mueller-Gastell, Jenny Muir, Jennifer Mulvihill, Luke Mylyaganam, Marte Natvik, Anna Nesblitt, Jeremy Newhook, Erin Nicholson, Trung Nguyen, Jill Ollenbeck, Anastasia Palubiski, Jennifer Patterson, Mike Payne, George Pfaff, James Pinkerton, Natalie Pitre, Jennifer Potter, Natasha Poushinsky, Leslie Preston, Karen Prochaka, Adam Prosser, Tom Purves, Paul Quick, Elli Raynal, Sarah Redekopp, Mike Reed, George Reinblatt, Emma Ritchie, Sean Richmond, Lindsay Robertson Sindi Sabourin, Nathan Sager, Nicole Salama, Andria Sallése, Mark Salvador, Fiona Scannell, Eli Schuster, Timothy Scott, Rodger Scott, Joe Sellors, Joanna Sharp, Steve Sheller, Claude Sherran, Jeremy Stern, Karen Simpson, Nick Sinclair, Isabelle Skabuskis, Kathy Skelton, Andrew Smith, Richard Smith, Rebecca Spaulding, Tom Stanley, Rebecca Stelter, Aymara Stoute, Mathew Struthers, Deirdre Swan, Jody Sugrue, Brad Suisnam, Stu Talos, Laura Thackeray, Edrick Thay, Heather Tilbury, Johnathan Tinney, Andrew Toms, John Trenholme, Dimitrios Tsofos, Mike Tiffin, Dalia Tufis, Hannah Varto, Adria Vukisnic, Mary Wade, Karyn Walmark, Megan Webster, Aaron West, Corey Wilson, Anna Maria Wilson, Stuart Wilson, Tyler Wilson, D.L. Windell, Gillian White, Jim Whittington, Virginia Wigmore, Chris Wicke, Joshua Wlesenthal, Mark Woolford, James Worrall, Sampson Wu, Bernhard Wu, Chris Wulff.

EDITORIAL BOARD

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gershin
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

NEWS EDITOR
Fiona Stevenson

ASSISTANT NEWS EDITORS
Renée Huang
Jocelyn Laporte

EDITORIAL PAGE EDITOR
Paul Heisler

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT EDITOR
Stefan Murray

ASSISTANT A&E EDITORS
Sarah Grosbie
Lillian Kim

FEATURES EDITOR
Sean Springer

OPINIONS EDITOR
Dan Rowe

SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Adam Kaminsky

ASSISTANT SPORTS & FITNESS EDITOR
Robert MacNeil

MISC. EDITOR
Ken Butland

GRAPHICS EDITOR
Janice Chan

THE READER EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellinger

SCIENCE EDITOR AND TECHNICAL CONSULTANT
John Bowman

PHOTOGRAPHY EDITORS
Alex Kronby
James Terjanian

WEB EDITOR
Marco Lui

BUSINESS STAFF

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

SALES REPRESENTATIVES
Suzanne Armstrong
Andrew Cooke

ADVERTISING MANAGER
Mark Fucella

ADVERTISING DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourn
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

SYSTEMS MANAGER
Craig Thomas

THE QUEEN'S JOURNAL

Thursday, April 8, 1999 • Issue 40 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. Opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Copyright © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Gann Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Gananoque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please address complaints and grievances to the Managing Editor and/or the Co-editors-in-chief. Please inquire about further grievance policies if you are not satisfied with their response. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2N6. Telephone—editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6728. Email: journal@post.queensu.ca. Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca. Circulation 9,000 Issue 1 of Volume 127 will be published on Tuesday, May 18, 1999.

CONTRIBUTORS

Writers and Reporters: Sarah Jane Bird, Crystal Bona, Maggie Buhajczyk, Mike Burgess, Theo Dos Santos, Lianne Elliott, Kristin Gable, Katherine Lee, Sarah LeMay, Julietta Loeffler, Mandy Marriott, Erik Missio, Manjana Paticovic, Nease Sager, Heather Tilbury, Andrew Toms. Photographers: Bob Huihui.

Accessibility matters

— LAURA MACINNIS —

A double cohort of high school students will soon reach Canadian universities as a result of the phasing out of grade 13 in Ontario. The Queen's Board of Trustees has discussed plans to accommodate this new influx of students (or not), and the Council of Ontario Universities has said it will take an extra $1.2 billion per year to deal with the increased enrolment demands.

Parents are worried. Parents who would give anything to ensure their children's success, including paying for day care, tutors and private school, are in a bind: There may not be a place for their children in the Canadian universities of the early twenty-first century.

It's a crisis of accessibility — and it's big news. The front pages of major Canadian newspapers warn of the super-elitist universities of the future, where not all deserving students can make it in.

Much like the Queen's University of today. In the past ten years, Queen's tuition has raised by 155 per cent for Arts and Science students, 230 per cent for Commerce students, and 204 per cent for Applied Science students. Undergraduate students starting Queen's in September 1999 will pay an average of $3,604 more per year in tuition than those who started in September 1989.

Proponents of tuition hikes are armed with convincing arguments. Tuition has been artificially low for too many years. Government cutbacks have hit universities hard. We need to raise tuition or the quality of our education will suffer. We need to raise tuition or we will no longer be on the cutting edge, we will not longer be the best. While these arguments may seem valid, and are widely accepted by administrators, faculty and some students, they are inadequate and incomplete in response to the challenges now facing our university.

There is a reason that tuition levels have traditionally been set low, and were maintained at low rates until recently. When tuition is low, university is an option for students who do not come from privilege. Parental income, summer employment and loan eligibility are secondary issues when tuition is low. It matters less if you're a mother, if you're studying part-time, or if you're a mature student when tuition is low. University is one choice among many when tuition is not daunting.

By permitting universities to raise tuition, the government of Ontario has signalled that accessibility to education is no longer a priority. By subsequently raising tuition, universities such as Queen's have made inaccessible education real for many deserving students.

The most recent tuition hikes for Commerce and Applied Science students, 40 per cent and 30 per cent respectively, were justified by the notion that Queen's needs more revenue from students in order to remain competitive. The quality of our education, it was said, depends on a tuition rate on par with other university programs.

Queen's is a high-quality institution because of the calibre of its students and faculty. While laptop computers and new buildings are certainly valuable acquisitions to Queen's, it is the people who make up the university who bring excellence to our academia.

If Queen's were to commit itself to low tuition levels for all students, the best students would certainly come to Queen's. A lower tuition rate would attract students to Queen's who would otherwise not be able to afford post-secondary education, and reinforce the university's commitment to educating top students, regardless of social class.

Increasing tuition is just one option among many to improve and maintain the quality of Queen's. It is exclusive and harmful to raise tuition at a public university to a rate where only privileged students can benefit from the experience.

But it's already happened. The tuition increases over the past decade at Queen's have changed the diversity and make-up of our student body. They have made a Queen's education inaccessible to many high quality students.

The irony of the double cohort is that accessibility has now become a hot political topic, long after post-secondary education lost its universality.

Now that accessibility affects upper-middle class students to the same degree as all others, it is gaining mainstream media attention. Now that post-secondary educational accessibility has superseded class, it is recognized as a problem in Canada.

The inside story

— PAUL HEISLER —

Who are those shadowy figures who meet twice a week and opine on everything from euthanasia to tuition hikes? What really goes on at those editorial board meetings behind the closed doors of The Journal fortress on Earl Street? Where do we hoard the fat student-subsidized cheques that Golden Words claims we receive in compensation for printing "self-indulgent pictures of Neil Young"? Since I've already collected my last cheque from the AMS front office, I feel it's now safe to share with the Queen's community the sordid details of life behind the masthead of The Journal — and perhaps dispel a few myths as well.

Many students seem to have conflicting perceptions about the type of people who make up the editorial board of The Journal. Just in the past month, letter-writers have complained that the ed-board is: a partner-swapping, self-congratulatory in-group that should be paid in beer and condoms, with a sinister pro-life agenda, and led by a perverted co-editor-in-chief who cannot control her physical desires. Much to my chagrin, I must admit that there is a kernel of truth in all three allegations — but just a little kernel.

We really are all normal hard-working students just like you. Well, actually quasi-students would be a better label. Both co-editors-in-chief graduated last year and none of the rest of us actually go to class.

That aside, however, the 22 members of the editorial board do reflect a fair cross-section of the Queen's community and all its academic diversity — with the exception of Applied Science, Commerce, Concurrent-Education, Nursing, Meds, Law and Rehab; we do have Arts and Science students though.

Together, we choose what topics we think are relevant to the community and then engage in vicious debate until one side prevails or we reach consensus. Since some readers seem confused about this process, I will attempt to clear up any misconceptions. For some reason, editors of 'rival' campus publications have had a difficult time grasping the concept of a group editorial. The editorials that appear on the left side of the page are neither anonymous, unnamed, cowardly or necessarily the opinion of Paul Heisler. They are simply the opinion of the entire ed-board as decided in an open and democratic manner and then written by myself.

The names of the members of that ed-board are hardly anonymous; they are listed at the bottom of the page under the heading... Editorial Board. Some readers might have noticed that not all those names have lasted the year. Those who did not share our rabid pro-life-cum-swinger lifestyle were quickly ousted in favour of more docile editors. Those of us who have survived the cutthroat infighting and constant haranguing by superiors, remain proudly listed on the masthead. Once again, just a little kernel of truth. If it were true, would they really let me write it?

Of course, not everything you read in The Journal is true. A lot of it is the unsubstantiated opinions of students who have no more experience or wisdom in life than their readers.

This should not, however, be frowned upon by the community. The Journal is not The Globe and Mail and neither should it aspire to be. For all its faults, The Journal is a remarkable institution and an unparalleled learning environment for Queen's students interested in the media. Like any other extra-curricular activity at Queen's, The Journal does suffer from the lack of interest that many students have in volunteering their spare time. For those that do make the sacrifice, however, they will find that the doors to 272 Earl Street are always open and the experience is extremely rewarding.

It is hard not to take pride in a student newspaper that has persevered for 126 years and, this year, survived multiple computer viruses and still met its deadlines; albeit a day late.

The Journal 1998-99

OPINIONS

Battle in the Balkans

I MOVED TO KINGSTON FROM Belgrade at the age of 25 and have lived here for the past 10 years. During the war in Bosnia, I taught the Serbo-Croatian language to our Canadian peacekeepers. I have always been proud to be a part of our Canadian peacekeeping mission. Now, it saddens me to realize that these same people are being used by NATO forces to bomb civilians.

I will not dwell on the fact that the bombing of Yugoslavia violates the UN and NATO charters as well as international law. Numerous analysts have already made that point. Nonetheless, I do feel compelled to warn you that this war started by NATO may change the future of the world and is likely to accelerate the arms race around the globe. Some world leaders are no doubt aware of the ominous resemblance of the present situation as compared with the annexation of Czechoslovakia that preceded WWII.

The war on Yugoslavia will do no more to solve the current situation than did the killing of 800,000 innocent people in Iraq. The effect will be to further prop up Slobodan Milosevic as it did with Saddam Hussein. The bombs are supposedly aimed against Milosevic, not at the people. But roads, bridges, power plants, factories are vital to all people of Yugoslavia; Serbs, Kosovars and Montenegrins alike! A nine-year long embargo aimed at curbing Milosevic resulted in the worst inflation of this century. War profiteers and organized smugglers flourished overnight — "a cream of society" supporting the president.

Meanwhile, my brother's engineering salary could buy a toothpick, retired people searched garbage containers for food, and families stood in lines from 4 a.m. to get bread and milk! Add to this picture the 700,000 refugees that poured into what remained of Yugoslavia. What was left was an expanded power base for Milosevic at the cost of a weakened opposition.

While governments are using the media to manipulate public opinion in order to justify their actions, NATO is generating the humanitarian disaster on all sides.

While governments are using the media to manipulate public opinion in order to justify their actions, NATO is in fact generating the humanitarian disaster on all sides. Instead of strengthening Milosevic, they should be working to assist the Yugoslav people to remove him. The last attempt to overthrow him, the three months of demonstrations in 1996, died because NATO preferred to uphold Milosevic for a practical reason: his negotiation on the Bosnian peace accord.

I still remember the exaltation of hundreds of thousands of anti-Milosevic protesters while marching, singing and dancing in the winter cold against police cordons and how gripped with despair they were afterward. Now, these same people are standing not behind Milosevic but against the attack on their country while NATO bombs are targeting young men, mostly 18-25 year olds, who are conscripted in the army under the Yugoslavia civil defense law. NATO has indeed achieved a lot in only two weeks: it leveled the capital of Kosovo, destroyed facilities essential for everyday life around the country, carpeted the fields of Kosovo with the depleted uranium bombs, produced hundreds of thousands of refugees, relegated the moderate Kosovar president to oblivion, and suggested the arming of the extremist KLA as a way out of their self-imposed trap. Neither NATO, the KLA, nor Milosevic care about human disaster. The aim is to save face, claim victory and achieve their political goals.

I don't doubt the good intentions of the Canadian people who support NATO's actions but please realize that in current bombings will only deepen the crisis. If this continues to the point where NATO feels compelled to land ground troops to save face it will ignite a full-scale war in Europe. Is this what YOU really want? We as a people have to decide whether to send our citizens to die over political arrogance or to solve humanity's problems constructively, honestly and sensibly.

MARIJANA MATOVIC
QUEEN'S ALUMNI

Bombing Yugoslavia, bombing Queen's

Civilization is nothing more than the effort to reduce the use of force to the last resort.

— José Ortega y Gasset
La Rebellion de las masses (1930)

BY NOW MOST QUEEN'S STUDENTS are aware that Yugoslavia is being bombed by NATO. I think there are two different ways in which we can know this though. We can know it and care about it, and try to do something to change the situation, or we can know it and not give a damn, and let the bombings continue.

Part of the reason why it is so easy for Queen's students to know that Yugoslavia is being bombed and not worry too much about it, is because we are actually misinformed by media stations like CNN (read: American propaganda machines). These "news" stations paint a picture of the events leading up to the current crises that is at best incomplete, and at worst a horrid misrepresentation of the historical reality — a lie.

According to the Western media portrayals we are constantly exposed to, NATO is bombing Yugoslavia to stop the "genocide" and "ethnic cleansing" of Albanians by Serbs that is said to be taking place in Kosovo. What is never mentioned in these broadcasts is that the mass exodus out of Kosovo by Albanians only started after the NATO bombing campaign began. Nor is it ever mentioned that many of these "refugees" have been encouraged to leave Kosovo by their very own KLA (the so-called Kosovo Liberation Army — they used to be called terrorists) in order to exacerbate an already tense situation.

It is also an open question that what is going on in Kosovo is or ever was anything that should be classified as a "genocide." To put the figures in perspective, in the two years of fighting between Serbian paramilitary forces and the KLA, approximately two thousand Albanians were killed, many of them affiliated with the KLA and killed in retaliation for previous attacks. Is this genocide? Almost five hundred Americans are killed yearly in the United States capital, Washington D.C., by Americans. Is this genocide?

Over six million Jews were killed in the Nazi holocaust. This most definitely was genocide. To use emotion-laden terms like "genocide" and "ethnic cleansing" in the attempt to raise support for NATO bombings is pure propaganda.

I am pointing to the fact that in every dispute there are three sides: the one, the other, and the truth. What we have been given so far has been one sided, a far cry from the truth.

Besides, if NATO really uses genocide as a pretext to bomb a sovereign nation, then why has it stood so idly by as other nations committed true acts of terror and aggression? It has been estimated that Turkish forces exterminated some 36,000 Kurdistan people in the last few years. Yet NATO did nothing. So the question arises, why does NATO choose to "intervene" in Yugoslavia, but not in Turkey? Could the reason have something to do with the fact that Turkey is an ally of NATO while Yugoslavia is not?

The demonization of the Serbian people by the Western media is what is really horrific in all this. And a blatant disregard for the facts is the method to this madness. What about the fact that Serbians have historic and legal entitlement under international law to the province of Yugoslavia called Kosovo? This is never mentioned. What about the fact that historic battles were fought and won by Serbians there? Evidently this is not news. What about the fact that Serbians were driven out of Kosovo by Albanians? This doesn't matter. And the fact that practically all historic buildings and monasteries tied to Serbian culture are situated in Kosovo? All these facts are unimportant. What matters is that the Serbians be portrayed as evil so that NATO can drop their bombs.

There are those who say that we should measure a civilization by how it treats its criminals, but I tend to agree with the Spanish writer and philosopher Ortega y Gasset, who thought that a better measure of a civilization was its reluctance to wage war against another. Is it really the case that bombing Yugoslavia was the last recourse available? Does it really make sense to wage war to stop war? I am not trying to say here that Serbians are saints and Albanians are devils. That would just be to write more propaganda, albeit in the opposite direction. Instead I am pointing to the fact that in every dispute there are three sides: the one, the other, and the truth. Whatever it is we have been given so far has been one sided, a far cry from the truth.

In the end I suppose what I am trying to show is that there is a connection between Queen's students and the bomb-

Continued on page 19

talking

HEADS

How do you avoid working?

"Clean the chalice and burn down Rome."

Penny Smith
Arts '99

"Sleep."

Janet Pye
Arts '99

"Feed Ostrich."

Leslie Witol
Phys-Ed '00

"Flirt with Leslie."

Ostrick Verrigo
MBio '99

PHOTOS BY ALEX KRONBY

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS POLICY

The Editors of The Journal want to hear from readers. All letters must include the writer's name, signature, and telephone number. Any letter that is legible, legal, and literate will be published if space permits. Those that are as brief and direct as possible will have a better chance of publication. Drop off letters to The Journal House, 272 Earl St., or e-mail them to journal@post.queensu.ca.

Letters to the Editors

Leggett responds

The Editors:
Dear Keith Gerein,

Thank you very much for your recent letter which you chose to deliver via the March 26 issue of The Journal. It was good of you to write. I accept your judgement of my performance during your time at Queen's. It has been, as you acknowledge, a difficult and demanding period, a period characterized by unprecedented cuts in government funding, corresponding reductions in the numbers of faculty and support staff and library acquisitions, sharp increases in class sizes, and dramatic increases in tuition and student debt loads. Given all of this, I can understand why you might be dubious about my commitment to students and concerned about the future of Queen's.

A great many people have worked tirelessly to sustain the quality for which Queen's is widely admired, and to minimize the impact on students.

I was, however, heartened by your acknowledgement of the commitment of the staff of the Office of the Registrar and, by extension I am sure, the staff and professors in other areas who have assumed dramatic increases in their individual and collective work loads in order to ensure that that services and the education available to you was as good as it possibly could be. They deserve your thanks.

In your letter you suggest that no substantial alternatives to tuition increases have ever been tried at Queen's in an effort to maintain the quality of the educational and support services available to you and your fellow students. This is where we part company. A great many people — professors, staff, members of the administration, students and alumni — have worked tirelessly to sustain the quality for which Queen's is widely admired, and to minimize the impact on students. Let me cite just a few examples.

In the period of time between your arrival in 1993 and today, the Office of Advancement has increased the private giving from approximately $14 million per year to in excess of $25 million per year. All of this increase has been used to mitigate effects of government grant cuts, and to restrain the levels of tuition increase that might otherwise have been necessary. Much of this new funding came from alumni who care deeply about Queen's and about the opportunities available to you and your fellow students. In 1996, over an eight-month period, alumni and friends of Queen's donated $30 million for student assistance through a program called the Ontario Student Opportunity Trust Fund. On a per-student basis this was the most successful campaign in Ontario. The $30 million matching grant by the Government of Ontario resulted in a doubling of the endowment for student aid at Queen's in less than one year. Between 1992-1993 and 1998-1999, annual expenditures on student assistance from the operating budget at Queen's increased from $6.3 million to more than $14 million. The growth is even more dramatic when one includes additional student assistance supported through income from the endowment.

The $2.5 billion Millennium Scholarship Fund established by the Government of Canada was the result of extensive lobbying by presidents and principals, and faculty and students of Canada's universities. Queen's was a central player in this initiative. The $800 million

Canada Foundation for Innovation established by the Government of Canada in 1998 and the $150 million Ontario Research Development Challenge Fund established by the Government of Ontario in the same year were both the products of similar lobbying. So, too, were the very significant increases in the budgets of the federal granting councils. Again Queen's was actively involved. Queen's has already benefited from these funds to the tune of several millions of dollars. These monies bring new equipment, new operating funds, and new professors. They will benefit both undergraduate and graduate students for years to come.

Regrettably, none of this was enough to offset the cuts and, as you note, improvements to the quality of education have not kept pace with the rise in tuition. But imagine the impact on quality and/or tuition if these successes had not been achieved! In my view, everyone involved at Queen's — students, staff, faculty, administration and alumni — deserve to be proud of the extent to which they have been willing to sacrifice and to work to offset the impact of budget cuts on the cost and the quality of education at Queen's. No individual or group at Queen's has a special claim to hardship or dedication.

[Queen's students] are far from apathetic. They are the most involved students I have had the privilege of knowing and working with in 30 years of university life.

I also differ with you in your assessment of Queen's students. They are far from apathetic. They are the most involved students I have had the privilege of knowing and working with in

Continued on page 20

Kosovo crisis

Continued from page 18

ing of Yugoslavia by NATO (of which Canada is a member — yes there are Canadian warplanes dropping bombs on Yugoslavia). Not only is this a connection Queen's students should know about, it is also one about which we should care very deeply. You see, in a way the bombing of Yugoslavia depends on another type of bombing, a bombing of misinformation, which we the students of Queen's are the intended targets of. Although I would rather be bombarded by bullshit than by cruise missiles, I shouldn't have to choose between the two. I really hate being lied to and bombarded in this way. Given that the Serbian people are being attacked in ways countless times worse, I think I would rather die than drop another bomb on Yugoslavia.

THEO DOS SANTOS
ARTS '99

Job Opportunities for Graduate and Professional Students!

The SGPS is now hiring for the following paid positions:

SGPS Guide Editor

Responsibilities: under the supervision of the V-P Communications, assume responsibility for production of guide; layout and design; organization of print ads; input articles and submissions; prepare final copy for printing purposes by early August 1999. Remuneration: $8 per X 125 hrs. = $1,000.00 Start date: May 1

SGPS Guide Advertising Executive

Responsibilities: under the supervision of the Guide Editor, assume responsibility for the fundraising and soliciting of advertisements from local businesses.

Remuneration: $200 honorarium, 30% commission. Start date: May 1, 1999 (Duration approx 3-4 weeks plus collection of funds.)

Please submit expressions of interest/resume to:

SGPS, Rm 021 - JDUC
533-2924 Attn: V-P Communications
sgps@qsilver.queensu.ca

Linda McQuaig

"She should be horsewhipped" - Conrad Black
"Exposing lies for fun and profit" - Globe and Mail

Reviving Democracy

Grant Hall
April 8th, 1999
8 pm

A public lecture presented by the Dunning Trust

Agents Wanted!!

Attention International Students!

EARN EXTRA MONEY THIS YEAR! AT SCHOOL OR WHILE ON BREAK!

We offer great commissions for new students enrolled at our school! We are looking for agents both in Kingston and abroad. Sign up friends, colleagues and business acquaintances to our ESL programs and earn extra cash!

For more information please contact:

Limestone City Private English Language School
322 Princess St, Suite #5
Kingston, Ontario K7L 1B6
(613) 536-3480 Email: limestone1@sprint.ca

Letters to the Editors

Continued from page 19

30 years of university life. In my experience, Queen's students also have a remarkable awareness of the importance of the quality of the education they receive, and they have repeatedly shown their willingness to work with their university, rather than against it, to ensure that quality is maintained.

We must continue to advocate tirelessly for responsible public funding of post-secondary education in Ontario (and Canada).

You and I have a duty to continue this work. We must continue to advocate tirelessly for responsible public funding of post-secondary education in Ontario (and Canada). We must continue to advocate for responsible student assistance programs. And we must continue to advocate for the importance of the humanities and the social sciences in our universities at a time when many appear willing to sacrifice them on the altar of technology.

And, I respectfully suggest, you and I have an obligation to support Queen's with our donations so that future generations of students can benefit from the same high quality education you have enjoyed. The level of private support they receive distinguishes great universities from the merely good. Queen's is a great university. It is great because generations of faculty and staff and students have been willing to go beyond the call of duty to uphold its reputation for quality, and because its graduates have recognized and acted on their obligation to give something back. I intend to fulfill my duty and my obligation to the best of my ability. I hope you will too.

William C. Leggert
Principal and Vice-Chancellor

The last letter of the year

Dear Editors,

I find it very disheartening when members of the AMS Executive deliberately mislead Queen's students on the issue of post-secondary education. Unfortunately, this is exactly what happened in the letter from Mr. Milan Konopek and Mr. Aaron Lazarus entitled "Step up, Mike."

First, Mr. Konopek and Mr. Lazarus completely misrepresent the facts surrounding Ontario Education Minister Dave Johnson's absence from the AMS Debate on Post-Secondary Education. The organizers of the debate were told as early as February 5, 1999 that the Minister would be unable to participate because of a scheduled two-day caucus meeting in Sarnia. Given that the AMS knew over a month in advance that all members of the PC caucus would be in Sarnia on March 11, it was certainly no surprise to Mr. Konopek or Mr. Lazarus that no Tory MPP could participate in the forum.

It is also worthwhile to note that members of the Queen's PC Association did offer to find someone to participate in the forum to discuss the Mike Harris government's record on post-secondary education. However, Mr. Konopek repeatedly refused to allow an alternate speaker to attend the debate on behalf of the Ontario PC Party.

The March 19 letter also claims that the Education Minister refused to attend other debates in Hamilton and Toronto on February 10th and February 25th. Had either Mr.

Konopek or Mr. Lazarus bothered to check their facts before submitting their letter, they would have discovered that Minister Johnson was scheduled to attend other open public forums on education on both of those dates.

Furthermore, it is irresponsible for Mr. Konopek and Mr. Lazarus to claim that the Mike Harris government is not willing to discuss its education policies. Both gentlemen are certainly aware of the fact that Progressive Conservative MPP's held a meeting with members of the AMS Executive last April to consult with Queen's students about the government's Throne Speech. In addition, the AMS Executive also met privately with the Education Minister over the summer to discuss education issues.

The Mike Harris government is proud of its record in education. The Ministry of Education & Training's total budget has slightly increased since June 1995, while funding for post-secondary education has remained stable since the 1996-1997 fiscal year. While Mr. Konopek and Mr. Lazarus write about reductions to education funding, they deliberately neglect to mention that the Mike Harris government has reinvested its savings from education reform right back into the system.

I certainly share the AMS' view that it is important to have an important debate dialogue on the future of education in Ontario. However, I can only hope that Mr. Konopek and Mr. Lazarus will stop the grandstanding and the promotion of their own partisan political agendas, and start working to support the legitimate interests of Queen's students.

Blair McCreadie
4th Vice-President
Ontario PC Party
Law '99

Prying eyes

EYES ARE ABOUT YOU every where you go. Personal phone calls are a thing of the past. "Intimate details of your life" is an oxymoron. The stuff of Orwell, n'est ce pas? The answer may or may not surprise you, depending on the depth of your X-Files. Welcome to modern living, baby.

Article 12 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights reads: No one shall be subjected to arbitrary interference with his/her privacy, family, home, or correspondence, nor to attacks upon her/his honour and reputation. Everyone has the right to the protection of the law against such interference or attacks.

Sounds great in theory. So great, in fact, that almost every country in the world explicitly recognizes this right in their constitution. And why not? Privacy makes possible the peaceful co-existence of a nasty office-picking habit and good social standing. It's a pity the governments of the US, Canada, UK, Australia, New Zealand, Germany and Japan don't recognize this right in practice. These countries and many others are committed (to a greater or lesser extent) to a secret international intelligence treaty known as UKUSA.

Drafted and signed in 1947, the UKUSA agreement establishes information trading protocols for the member states. At the heart of the agreement is a National Security Agency (NSA, US) operation known as ECHELON. ECHELON monitors essentially every telephone call, fax, and telex within and between almost all the countries of the world. Yes, everything, even calls to Mom from Kingston. If you thought wire taps are just for drug dealers, think again.

One unlikely victim was PM Trudeau's wife, Margaret, who was targeted by the RCMP under the ruse of suspicion of marijuana purchase and use. Months of monitoring turned up nothing. Former Canadian spy Mike Frost speculates that the RCMP had ulterior political motives, possibly including defamation of the radical Trudeau. The RCMP, however, are not the only ones with the capacity to conduct such covert operations.

Surveillance gadgetry is in the midst of a boom. Motivations for the purchase of this equipment range from corporate espionage to deranged domestic disputes. Pinhole remote cameras (1/16th inch lens diameter) can be had for about $350Cdn. Lower pricing is available on a wide range of nearly undetectable telephone and room bugs. All of this makes life easy for modern violators of personal lives. A few well-thought out and relatively risk-free installations will set you up in almost any North American bedroom, stereo surround style. Having one's abode checked for such devices, however, is prohibitively expensive. Only a handful of qualified firms operate in North America. Kiss your privacy goodbye.

So what to do? Even if you're feeling desperately Trumanesque, the answer may be not a whole lot. Disappointingly, Canada is one of the few countries which does not recognize the right to privacy in its constitution. Despite this glaring oversight, we have a good deal of protection from unsolicited surveillance in the form of specific laws. These laws, however, are of little use if the identity of your surveillant is unknown.

What does all of this mean? The existence of a project such as ECHELON erodes the very foundations of democracy. Our government regularly encroaches on a fundamental right. The illusion of personal privacy is crumbling. If you think you're being watched, you may well be right. Unfortunately, you may also have to live with it. Other options include a lifetime camping trip to Sierra Leone.

KATHERINE LEE
ARTSCI '00

ANDREW TOMS
KINGSTON RESIDENT

Teach English Overseas

ESL Teacher Training Certificate Courses

- Intensive 36-hour and 42-hour courses (evening and/or weekend)
- Classroom management techniques
- Detailed lesson planning
- Skills development: grammar, pronunciation, listening, speaking, reading and writing
- Comprehensive teaching materials
- Teaching practices included
- Strategies for finding teaching jobs overseas
- Listings of schools, agencies, and recruiters from around the world
- Formal certificate given upon course completion
- Cost: $395 (36-hr course) / $445 (42-hr course)
- For More Information Call: Oxford Seminars: 546-9389 / 1-800-569-4719

SCIENCE

The world-wide beat

By FIONA STEVENSON

YOU MAY REMEMBER SWATCH as the company of Swiss watchmakers responsible for the large, colourful watches that adorned young wrists across North America in the 1980s. The company will likely make bigger waves in the future with its newest invention: a system of universal time, known as Internet time.

The system involves setting the current day into 1,000 "beats" instead of 24 hours. One Swatch beat is the equivalent of 1 minute 26.4 seconds. That means that noon in the old time system is equal to @500 Swatch beats. The creation of this revolutionary new unit of time means the elimination of time zones and geographical borders.

Internet time is the same all over the world. This is possible because, in addition to creating a new way of measuring time, Swatch has created a new meridian in Biel, Switzerland, home of Swatch. Biel Mean Time will be the universal reference for Internet time. Thus, a day in Internet time begins at midnight BMT, which is equivalent to @000 beats. The meridian was inaugurated on October 23, 1998.

These multiples of 10 form a "base 10" reference which would be the same anywhere in the world, whereas the standard "base 12" time changes. The custom of dividing the daylight into 12 hours can be traced back to the Babylonians, who favoured the division of units by 12 because groups of 12 are easily divided into halves, thirds, and fourths. Later, when people wanted to express times at night, dividing the night into 12 hours as well seemed logical, making 24 hours in a complete day. Even

Feel the beat

The best way to show how Internet time works is to do a conversion. So you're reading this article between lectures on Thursday morning of 10:25. In Internet time, that's translated to

08.04.99 @684

That some moment is expressed with the some series of numbers everywhere on the planet, which is convenient if you want to make a chat date with someone in Tokyo.

All good things...

YES, I HAD MY PREJUDICES. I had my own ideas about what the Science section would be like before I even started. I thought, for instance, that most of the writers would be like me: male, science students, interests include checking e-mail and watching what remains of Star Trek. In short, I was expecting geeks. Instead, most of my writers were women, not all were science students, and the TNG vs. DS9 debate never came up. Go figure.

I thought there would be a little more diversity in the topics explored in the section. I'm surprised at how my own biases showed themselves in the Science section this year. All of the Queen's researchers whose work was featured in Science following the invention of crystal and atomic clocks, the division of days into units and multiples of 12 remains standard today, despite the fact that the only other measurements currently not divided into base-10 units are the degrees of an arc.

The Swatch company has developed Internet time to be a world-wide standard and to eliminate time zones. Is it more Internet hype or an innovative new tool?

Nicholas Negroponte, director of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Media Lab, predicts that in the future, real time will be Internet time. However, the system is a long way from universal adoption. The costs of conversion would be substantial, as it would render every traditional timepiece in the world obsolete. Essentially every watch and clock on the face of the planet would have to be completely altered, or preserved only for its aesthetic or sentimental value.

However, it is possible that the benefits will outweigh the costs. With the advent of globalization, standardized time has become increasingly important. Primitive timekeeping devices, like the sundial, were inaccurate but adequate for a world in which distant communication was unfathomable. Official time zones did not become essential until the mid-19th century, when railroads and telegraphy were introduced. These inventions opened people's minds to the concept of world-wide travel and communication across borders, further necessitating the introduction of time zones for different parts of the world. In 1883, the United States was divided into four time zones and the following year, the International Meridian Conference, held in Washington, set formal time zones for the entire world.

In order for the Swatch system to be universally adopted, it would have to be endorsed by a worldwide body of standards-keepers, coordinated by the Bureau International des Poids et Mesures. The BIPM's 1972 General Conference on Weights and Measures adopted a new timekeeping standard known as Coordinated Universal Time, which was also the same all over the world. The system is based on the cycles of atomic clocks rather than the rotation of the earth. However, this system is still grounded in the base-12 tradition and is thereby less sophisticated than the one proposed by Swatch.

Although the Swatch concept is relatively new and has yet to be officially sanctioned, many Web sites are already featuring Internet time on their pages. Swatch is also producing watches equipped with its concept of universal time.

Time will tell whether Swatch will succeed at setting a monumental world-wide standard or whether this trend will have a fate paralleling that of the neon-coloured, polka-dotted Swatch wrist-watches we keep stored away as reminders of our childhood years.

Hailing frequencies closed.

Science Spectrum
Science news from around the world and beyond

Severed nerves restored in animals

A University of Texas neurologist has developed a new way for quickly rejoining severed nerves in an animal model. The technique repairs cut or crushed nerve endings in both the central nervous system (brain and spine) and the peripheral nervous system (the rest of the body). The finding is important because there is currently no method for repairing CNS nerve injuries or for speeding up PNS injuries. The technique involves applying a solution of polyethylene glycol to the ends of severed axons, sealing them. The solution is then washed off and the ends treated with a calcium solution to restore transmission of electrical impulses. A biological adhesive is then applied to the ends to repair the lesion.

U of Sask study to cost $170M

The most expensive scientific project in Canada's history has been approved by provincial and federal governments. The Canadian Light Source will be a synchrotron facility at the University of Saskatchewan, costing more than $170 million. A synchrotron is a device about 50 m in diameter that uses powerful magnet to accelerate electrons to a large fraction of the speed of light. Using this method, pulses of electromagnetic radiation millions of times more intense than medical X-rays can be produced. Other synchrotrons similar to the proposed CLS exists elsewhere in the world, but this facility will allow Canadians to work without leaving the country. The device will be completed by the end of 2003.

Predicting group behaviour

It's the basis of the Asimovian concept of psychohistory: the behaviour of groups is a lot easier to predict than that of individuals. An article in the April 2 issue of the journal Science, by an American zoologist and a Canadian mathematician, investigates the modelling of behaviour of aggregations of animals — flocks of geese, schools of herring, swarms of bees. By constructing computer models, variables that can't be reasonably altered in real life — subtle changes in temperature, or drastic drops in population — can be changed with unlimited freedom on the computer.

In 1995, the French political party the Front National received 15 per cent of the vote in the Presidential elections. The party makes the 'Reform party look like B'Nai Brith' and their leader has outrightly stated, 'Yes, I believe in the inequality of races.'

What's the story here?

By KRISTIN GABLE

Kristin Gable is currently studying at Université Lumière Lyon 2 in Lyon, France

IT IS ENTIRELY POSSIBLE that you have already heard of the Front National. The radically right-wing French political party has gained much international publicity during the last number of years for some of its more "illustrious" activities. These include the infamous statement by Jean-Marie Le Pen, the party's somewhat, shall we say, "outspoken" president, that "Yes, I believe in the inequality of races," his outright dismissal of Nazi concentration camps and gas chambers as a mere historical "detail" of the second World War, and his very public comparison of Fodé Sylla, the president of SOS-Racisme, one of France's most prominent anti-racism organizations, to a "gros zébu fou," meaning a big, crazy bovine-like animal. A reporter from the Globe and Mail recently wrote that they "make the Reform Party look like B'Nai Brith."

All shock value aside, a very important thing to know about the Front National (FN) is that they are far from being a fringe political movement. Quite the contrary. During the 1995 national Presidential elections, for example, approximately 15 per cent of the French electorate (that's approximately 4,500,000 voters) thought that having Le Pen in power might be a pretty good idea. The 1995 municipal elections resulted in FN control over at least three French municipalities (with another being added in 1997) and approximately 2,000 municipal councillors country-wide. The regional government elections of 1998 placed 275 FN members in regional councillor seats.

Facts like these obviously raise a lot of questions regarding the exact nature of the FN agenda. Like, what is this party really all about? What's their side of the story? Who exactly composes this 15 per cent of the French electorate? And, perhaps most fundamentally, how did France — a country widely recognized as a major world and European Union power, the birthplace of many of the world's most important artistic, philosophic and cultural movements, from I think, therefore I am to the French Revolution; a country regarded by many to embody the epitome of culture and civilization — ever get to the point where a party like this could become, in the words of a French author on the Front National, "an essential actor in French political life?"

THE FRONT NATIONAL came into official existence on October 5, 1972 as a partial product of past extreme-right movements in France which date as far back as the 19th century. It was initially intended to be "a third voice between Gaullism (the right-wing political philosophy borne of Charles De Gaulle, President of the French Republic from 1959 to 1969 which embraces the concept of "France above all") and Socialism." Over the years, the party has evolved significantly to embrace an agenda that is at once complex and controversial, to say the very least.

According to the party's official Web site (www.front-nat.fr), under the dramatic headline of "Front National: Real Politics!" the FN, an "assembly of patriotic, lucid, and courageous men and women," exists to "bring about the successful rebirth of a French France in a European Europe" and prevent what they perceive to be the continued "decadence" of France at the hands of past right and left-wing governments. And what exactly is the nature of this "decadence?" According to the Web site, "Today immigration, unemployment, AIDS and the decrease of birth rate pose a real threat to the liberty and security of the French people and to the very survival of France. The state is neglecting its essential duties: defence, national security, law and order, education... It sinks vast sums into a ruinous and outdated economy which are then recouped by the Revenues from the Taxpayer... Our country needs a government which with the strength of the people behind it will be capable of putting into action a true programme for the rebirth of France and Europe."

SOUNDS PRETTY AMBITIOUS, but what's it really all about? The fact is, a large portion of the agenda of the Front National is dedicated to what many would consider to be a disturbing contempt for "cosmopolitanism," or more specifically, the fear of the mixing of cultures which results from immigration. Indeed, as the party's own Web site reads, "The Front National sees itself as the stronghold and bastion of national identity against cosmopolitan projects mixing peoples and cultures. Far from being racist or xenophobic, Jean-Marie Le Pen fights to defend the French people so that they are given priority over foreigners and so that their basic rights are defended."

And how exactly does he plan on going about this?

The Front National takes a hard line approach when it comes to immigration into France. Key features include championing the establishment of a controversial system known as "national preference," under which housing, employment and social welfare systems are strictly reserved for French citizens. They wish to severely limit the numbers of refugees allowed into France. They wish to reform the code of nationality acquisition in France from the current "droit du sol," under which a child born in France can seek French nationality, regardless of parental lineage, to what is known as "droit du sang," meaning one must be born from French parents in order to be legally French.

Their Web site dramatically refers to immigration as a "silent invasion" that, according to a controversial study known as the "Rapport Milloz," (which has received heavy criticism for its accuracy) costs France over 250 billion francs annually. They link immigrants in France to the majority of the country's crime as well as its disturbing unemployment problem. The group states that "more than a third of prisoners in France are foreigners," as are 60 per cent of all those arrested for drug trafficking. Also according to the "Rapport Milloz," there are "a million jobs occupied by foreigners which could be given to Frenchmen."

Past FN publicity posters have run such slogans as, "Three million unemployed, that's three million immigrants too many." Aside from the economical and legal standpoint, the FN perceives immigration as a threat to the preservation of what they term "French identity." Indeed, their Web site begs the question, "Who could believe that France will remain herself, if tomorrow our country continues to be covered with Mosques and our children are raised by the sound of African or Arab music?"

ACCORDING TO JEAN-LOUIS Marie, professor of political science at Université Lumière Lyon 2 in Lyon, France and a specialist on political behaviour, there are a few things to keep in mind while considering the FN approach towards immigration and French cultural identity. While he believes that the FN perceives immigration as a "parasite," he also believes that this negative approach is principally reserved for immigrants from Third World countries, and North African countries in particular.

"The FN fears that the people of 'White Europe' will become minorities," explains Marie. (It should be noted that the FN programme does include a provision for what it terms France's "frères européens," who, "close to (the French) by ethnic origin and culture do not pose any of the problems that we know with foreigners belonging to other civilizations.") He adds that he perceives the FN programme to be one which supports a concept known as "differential racism," which is dominated by the belief that the cultures of the world should "exist, but exist separately." Indeed, there is a provision in the FN programme which allocates aid to Third World countries ("France will help foreigners, but only at home") based in part on their willingness to accommodate the incentives of FN policies towards immigration. Marie also hastens to add that immigration should not be perceived as the unique focus of the objectives of the Front National.

The Front National is composed of many different ideological and intellectual trains of thought, ranging from Catholic to conservative to traditionalist to anti-technocrat and so on," she says. A common focus, however, does revolve around the concept of France as an "old country, with hundreds of generations behind it, blood shed over wars et cetera. They perceive a need for order, authority and the need for the law to be obeyed. They fear political and social disorder."

SO, WHO VOTED FRONT NATIONAL? According to the book, The Extreme Right Today, during the 1995 Presidential elections, the FN vote was composed of 30 per cent of all labourers, and 25 per cent of all unemployed in France. Marie adds that the FN electorate tends to be primarily male, and that a significant number of voters belong to educated and economically comfortable social classes as well as the working classes. He adds that "it would be a mistake to assume that all people who vote Front National are fascists. That is not true. I would say that people who vote FN are people who are afraid and are looking for answers."

"Who could believe that France will remain herself, if tomorrow our country continues to be covered with Mosques and our children are raised by the sound of African or Arab music?"

— excerpt from the FN web site

Recent events of extreme significance in FN-land have involved what has emerged as a significant split in the movement. Bruno Mégret, a powerful party member, has left Le Pen's movement to strike out on his own, bringing a significant number of party members with him. Marie notes that significant differences between Le Pen and Mégret include the fact that "Mégret gives a much more sophisticated impression that Le Pen. He passes better on the television. He is not as hostile as Le Pen is towards forming an alliance with another right-wing French political party, which could prove to be in his advantage."

IT SHOULD COME AS NO SURPRISE that a multitude of movements against the perceived evils of the FN have sprung up over the last number of years, and, within the non-FN voting population, there exists a great deal of hostility towards the movement.

"They are a severe threat," says a representative from the Lyon office of SOS-Racisme. "The things they say — like that immigrants are responsible for all of the crime in France — it's ridiculous."

"Problems like crime should be seen as a social problem for all of France, not just in terms of the immigrant aspect."

As for Le Pen's attestation that he is not a racist, "He has confirmed that he believes in the inequality of races," she added. "That is racism in itself."

It would be safe to say that the majority of French citizens are in agreement with her. According to "The Extreme Right Today," close to 70 per cent of the French population sees the FN as a threat.

But of course, there is always the other side. Problems regarding hostility towards immigration are a phenomenon which seem to affect nearly every country in the developed Western world. France is not even close to being alone when it comes to the emergence of an extreme-right party within its borders. Within Europe alone, numerous racial factions have emerged in countries such as Austria, a trend suggesting that the threat of imposed racial segregation is hardly diminishing in power.

"France is far from being a fascist country," Marie said, emphasising that the FN is much more the exception than the rule; however, this undeniable trend provokes the question, How far will it go, and how will it affect the face of Europe in the dawn of the new millennium?

F, E, A, T, U, R, E, S,

Front National Centre

TRAVEL

By HEATHER TILBURY

I MET A FRIEND at Herstmonceux Castle in the Fall of 1998, who charmed me with the romantic story of how his parents met and fell in love some 30 years ago while volunteering on a kibbutz in Israel. He felt it was important for him to visit this kibbutz, and he convinced me to come along.

As I soon discovered, a summer in Israel is an experience unmatched by other travel options.

Some 270 kibbutz settlements throughout the country nurture members from birth to old age, and sustain their people through a variety of industries and services. Men and women are paid a monthly salary, commonly utilized for travel, entertainment or savings. I was pleasantly surprised to find that, in sharp contrast to Western societies, the kibbutz community displays its progressive nature through the unequal payment of men and women — women are, in fact, paid slightly higher than men due to the necessary purchase of feminine hygiene products.

Day care centres, children's schools and high schools provide quality education for youth and adolescents. When a young man or woman reaches the age of 16, they are able to move out of the family home and into supervised residence-style homes with their peers. While continuing to attend school, they are required to contribute to the community by working for one half day each week. At 18 years of age, military service is mandatory for one or two years, followed by the option of university or college.

Various religions, cultures and social conditions create an individual mosaic within the state of Israel. Religion is a personal choice and is guaranteed by the Declaration of the Establishment of the State of Israel. However, failing to recognize the overt animosity within various parts of Israel would be ignorant. Centuries-old Arab-Jewish conflict is apparent in everyday life within the country, and, despite relationships between Israeli Arabs and Jews on economic and municipal levels, there is very little positive interaction on social and political levels.

Jennifer Barnes, ConEd '99 and Alex Mackay Smith on a hike in Ein Gedi Nature Reserve. PHOTO BY HEATHER TILBURY

Fortunately, my experience as a volunteer on Kibbutz Ein Gedi proved that international friendships have a certain strength, warmth and are unquestionably enduring. Volunteers are welcome to stay on the kibbutz, usually for a minimum of three months, and a maximum of two years, at which time democratic voting occurs to establish membership.

A view of Jerusalem from a youth hostel. PHOTO BY HEATHER TILBURY

After a semester at Herstmonceux, the author travelled to Israel where she worked in one of 270 Israeli kibbutz settlements — an exhilarating experience for student travellers

Volunteers at Ein Gedi are required to work eight hours a day, in exchange for food, accommodations, health care (including medication) and some travel. At this point in my travels, I was weary and broke, and Israel was a welcome relief. Once the kibbutz accepts you as a volunteer, you're pretty much taken care of. I did become ill after I arrived and, despite slight confusion due to language barriers, I was offered care, lots of medication and appropriate time off work.

My position entailed rising at 5 a.m., coffee at 5:15 a.m., then straight out into the fields to pick dates. I was given work pants, big steel toe boots, and my very own pair of clippers. Days (mornings) were exhausting, but the enchanting image formed by the sun rising across the Dead Sea and over the country of Jordan made any type of work bearable.

Other volunteer jobs included work in silk shops (where I was "transferred" when I nearly clipped my finger off), preparing food in kitchens, various cleaning jobs in the spa and guest houses, and delivering supplies around the kibbutz. Volunteers are randomly placed at positions, but can request to be changed if they're not happy.

We worked six days a week and had Saturday off (the Shabbat, Israel's official day of rest). In addition, for every two weeks worked, a paid day off is earned. The volunteer salary is nominal, and only tends to cover ice cream, beer and occasional travel. However, options for days off are varied, and include hikes in the mountainous reserve surrounding the kibbutz, travelling to Jerusalem or Masada, or relaxing at Ein Gedi Spa (a luxury for members and volunteers at Kibbutz Ein Gedi).

The Spa is Ein Gedi's pride, and attracts North Americans and Europeans. Volunteers also have unlimited access to sulphur baths, swimming pools, and mud from the Dead Sea (allegedly very good for the skin). We were also able to float in the Sea on our leisure and, as a friend and I discovered, one really does float in the Dead Sea! Some volunteers tried to "coast" to Jordan one evening, and actually made it halfway. Due to the high salt concentration, certain body parts began to sting, which caused the volunteers to return to Israel's shore.

Every Friday night, the kibbutz's bomb shelter was converted into a disco for volunteers and members who were "of age." This little bit of "Alfie's" was enough to satisfy my Queen's fix each week. Kibbutz Ein Gedi also recently built a brand new theatre that catered to new films, and occasionally hosted a touring university choir or theatre group. During my stay, between May and June of last year, I was fortunate enough to attend a kibbutz wedding, a wonderful celebratory event that welcomed all members and volunteers.

Every Friday night, the kibbutz's bomb shelter was converted into a disco for volunteers and members who were "of age."

Communal meals offered an abundance of nutritious foods. Each of the three daily meals would include a buffet of fresh tomatoes, cucumbers, breads, salads, tzatziki, cottage cheese, fruits, eggs and various hot dishes. Vegetarians always had lots of options and were able to eat balanced diets. On Friday evenings, Shabbat dinner was an opportunity to dress-up and have a meal with nice tablecloths and special dishes.

Communication with friends and family isn't easy and requires patience.

Kibbutz Ein Gedi had scattered pay phones around the kibbutz with queues during certain hours. One phone within the volunteer area accepted incoming calls for volunteers, but often those being called were not in the area to take the call. E-mail was a possibility, but only during specific hours, when there weren't classes being taught in the computer lab.

Volunteers shared rooms in cabins that were set up in a sort of sub-community on the kibbutz. The central volunteer area consisted of washrooms, showers, a common room with a TV (which was very rarely used), table tennis, a little bar and a big grassy field conducive to nightly campfires. The most sought after volunteer job was that of "moon queen" or "moon king" — the lucky volunteer responsible for all of our cabins, orientation of new volunteers and planning events.

My roommate was a wonderful girl from Japan, and we often shared long conversations about our countries, cultures and travels. Each room was slightly make-shift and contained items from previous volunteers. All had an air conditioner, a couple of beds and shelving. Some cabins had old radios or tape players left in them.

My roommate and I had to finally confess (after weeks of great looking hair) that our cabin contained the sole 'kibbutz hairdryer' left by a previous volunteer, of course. Others had books that volunteers read and passed around. Because there were always cats and dogs wandering around, my roommate and I also had a puppy that lived with us. Another friend had three kittens born under his bed!

Volunteers were from New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, Germany, Netherlands, Denmark and Sweden. Among 60 volunteers, I was the sole North American, so I naturally had endless opportunities to learn about the world. This variable is clearly the most magnetic aspect of kibbutzim and possibly the solution for travellers who want a bit of everything.

Thanks for a great year! Goodbye and Good Luck!

9 Selections on tap!

Sunday & Monday nights - open MIC with host Smitty.

Every night 6pm - 9pm 20¢ wings (with the purchase of a beverage)

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY

AMS

STUDENT GOVERNMENT

The BEST of 1998-99

QUEEN'S STUDENT CONSTABLES

The Queen's Student Constables entered the Digital Age when we acquired eight Mike phones from Clearnet.

SERVICES

QP Expansion
Some gosh darn AWESOME QEA Events
The first football game Beer Gardens.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

The MAC improved property standards of over 60 student homes and created the Property Standards Task Force to battle poor housing conditions!

The MAC facilitated the 15 GALLONS of our very own "Chili on a Budget" in the community.

The MAC brought students' snow removal concerns forward to the secured our priority routes in the city's plan and sold you great snow shovels for just $5.

WALKHOME

Walked home over 20,000 people this year. (and walked in -50 degrees and loved it!)

INTERNAL AFFAIRS

There was a Clubs Night, an Election SCANDAL and a Referendum. Yee Haw!

COMMUNICATION

AdMan produced and designed over 2000 ads.

Complete overhaul of the AMS web site.

Infobank informed over 4000 lost and confused Queen's students.

DENTAL PLAN

We now have one.

AMS CARD

Somebody got sent somewhere. Congratulations.

SOCIAL ISSUES

Guerrilla Girls speak for Voices in Art.

QUEEN'S ENTERTAINMENT AGENCY

The QEA have brought the following artists to campus: Maestro Fresh Wes, Thrust, The Rascalz, Kardinal Offishal, Johnny Favourite Swing Orchestra (First time Hip Hop has been brought to campus!), Philosopher King, Emm Gryner, 54 40, Treble Charger, Ian Halperin, Battle of the Bands, the FREE Concert Series.

AMS - It's ALL good!

SPORTS & FITNESS

WEARING OUT HIS WELCOME? If nothing else, Dennis Rodman brings intrigue. Since signing with the Los Angeles Lakers a quarter of the way through this abbreviated NBA season, the cross-dressing, hody pierced, rebounding machine has done just about everything right and wrong for his new squad. After helping the team to nine straight wins, Rodman disappeared for personal reasons, missing a number of games and practices. Since solving his personal issues, Rodman has missed practices and was recently ejected from a game early in the first half. This ejection prompted veteran Derek Harper, a team leader, to intimate that if he was management, Rodman would be taking his act elsewhere.

LIKE OLD TIMES

The last playoff spot in the Western Conference is up for grabs and it is going to be an old fashioned Battle of Alberta to see who gets invited to the post-season dance. While Calgary and Edmonton aren't battling at the top of the standings like they did in the late 'eighties, the two will be fighting for the pleasure of playing in the first round against the vaunted conference leading Dallas Stars. With six games remaining for each team, this playoff spot will be decided in the right way — they play each other three times in the next two weeks. With a playoff spot on the line, an old provincial rivalry and three games in two weeks, this could get ugly fast.

OPENING DAY

Baseball's $100 million man got his butt kicked around Chavez Ravine yesterday as Dodger Kevin Brown gave up five runs in a little more than five innings of work. His counterpart Randy Johnson gave the Diamondbacks seven quality innings and only two earned runs. In other news, the Expos pummeled the Pirates by a count of 9-2, while the Orioles defeated Tampa Bay 10-7 but lost Cal Ripken Jr. after the third inning. Baseball's Iron Man could be lost for a while with back problems. In an emotional moment, cancer stricken Braves' first baseman Andres Galaraga threw out the first pitch via satellite at their home opener.

IF CHRISTMAS CAME EARLY...

All three Toronto teams would see post-season action this year.
One small market, low budget baseball team would make the playoffs.
CFRC play-by-play man Nick Sinclair would get to call one of golf's major championships.

ATHLETES OF THE YEAR

In its fourth year of existence, The Queen's Journal Athlete of the Year award recognized one male and one female who have brought distinction to their sports, demonstrated qualities of leadership, and represented Queen's in an outstanding manner.

Last year's winners were Donovan Beth (Wrestling) and Joanna Thomas (Squash)

ROB MAILLOUX
HOCKEY

BY NEATE SAGER

In what might eventually be hailed as a turnaround year for the Queen's men's hockey team, right winger Rob Mailloux stood out sharply enough for him to be named The Queen's Journal Male Athlete of the Year.

"Christmas came early," analogized Gaels' assistant coach Tim Cunningham, in allusion to the harmonic convergence which made possible the Capreol, Ont. native's sterling season. After pacing a high-scoring Kingston Frontenacs squad with 53 goals during the winter of 1997-98, Mailloux attended the Toronto Maple Leafs' rookie camp and the training camp of the IHL's Orlando SolarBears this fall, with both stints failing to pan out.

"He's a real competitor... he'd slit your throat to get the puck, but buy you a beer after the game."

— Assistant coach Tim Cunningham

Whereupon, said the second-year economics student, "I called [Head Coach] Chris [MacDonald] and said, 'I'm coming.'" Adds Mailloux, of his choosing to become a Queen's student-athlete, "It was an easy decision... I figured [playing in the minors] could wait for after my degree."

Another, perhaps more crucial factor in the decision was the opportunity to be reunited with MacDonald, who was a Frontenacs' assistant for the first three seasons. Mailloux wore Kingston black and gold. "Chris has done tons of stuff to improve this program. He's really professional and takes his job very seriously. There are a lot of other players who want to come here because of him."

"Rob adjusted very well to the league," lauded MacDonald. "We already knew how well he can score, but he improved his game in other areas as well." As for his ingratiating himself with his new teammates, MacDonald says, "He brought a load of what I call 'quiet confidence' to our dressing room."

Expounding on the intangibles the former OHL sniper lends to the Gaels, Cunningham says, "He's the MVP of the league, by his value to the team. He's a real competitor... he'd slit your throat to get the puck, but buy you a beer after the game."

On the ice, added MacDonald, Mailloux "raised the level of play around him. His ability with the puck is what you notice first... but just as important, he plays with an edge and physical aspect to his game. He can play tough and doesn't get pushed around."

Mailloux was certainly tested early in the season; a fast burst out of the starting blocks soon drew the attention of OUA foes, resulting in frequent skirmishes with opponents. "He'll admit that he will have to change his style of play," MacDonald com-

Please see Gutsy on page 29

ANNE BENNEDETTI
LACROSSE

BY FIONA STEVENSON

Winning The Queen's Journal Athlete of the Year Award seems an appropriate end to a highly successful year for star athlete Anne Bennedetti. Bennedetti helped the women's lacrosse team capture the initial OUA championship this year and captured significant recognition along the way.

At an awards banquet for the lacrosse players held last term, Bennedetti was named the league's top scorer, a conference all-star, the Most Valuable Player, and shared Coach of the Year honours with teammates Darcie Spearing and Nancy Symons. She was also named a Queen's Journal athlete of the week and of the fall term. Two years ago, Bennedetti was named Rookie of the Year and last year she was the recipient of the Conventor's award, which recognizes the achievements of athletes in the East Division.

"A lot of it had to do with the fact that I had great people helping me learn the skills."

— Anne Bennedetti

A fourth-year Con-Ed student from Cambridge, Ontario, Bennedetti has only been playing lacrosse since her second year at Queen's. Bennedetti played basketball throughout high school and during first year. She said making the transition from basketball to lacrosse was relatively easy. "Lacrosse is a lot like a cross between basketball and soccer. You wouldn't think [basketball and lacrosse] are congruent sports but they really are."

Last summer, Bennedetti played for the Ontario provincial lacrosse team, travelling extensively throughout Canada and the United States. She credits the experience with dramatically improving her game. "I definitely was not the player I am now without the help of those coaches," she said, adding, "It was nice to be able to play in the summer and come back and contribute to the team." Bennedetti has been training with the Ontario provincial squad since January and hopes to play for the team again this summer.

Benedetti finds many aspects of lacrosse appealing, including the fact that it's played outdoors and it's "free-flowing," rather than highly structured. However, she most enjoys the sport's team aspect. "We've had a team that really gets along... The atmosphere we have is a very friendly atmosphere. Everyone's included in everything whether you have great skills or developing skills," she explained.

Benedetti said her teammates have played a significant role in shaping her ability on the field. "A lot of it had to do with the fact that I had great people helping me learn the skills," she said.

Looking ahead, Bennedetti hopes to try out for the national team which will compete in the World Cup of lacrosse in 2001. However, Bennedetti is also excited about playing for Queen's again next year. "We'd love to repeat," she said, adding, "As we get more support from Queen's it's important that we don't lose the fun that's involved with our team."

Sports is alive and well, thank you

"The sky is falling," screams the sports fan. "The salaries are rising, teams are moving, ticket prices are increasing, and athletes are showing up on the police scanner more than on the scoreboard." It is as if the modern day sports fan has gone the way of Chicken Little, but like the little chick, people will soon find out that the sporting world is not coming to an end.

It seems that, rather than glorifying the good in sport, people in the media have taken to pointing out the failures. That said, this editor has taken part in some of this negative publicity and looking back sheepishly, it is a little disappointing. It is from this chair at The Queen's Journal that a number of critical pieces have been written and approved, but for the last one from this editor's desk, it is the good of sport that will be the focus, not the bad or the ugly.

For every piece of negative news in sport there is at least two pieces of good news. That may be hard to believe, but it is the truth. With one year as the sports editor and three years spent with CFRC Sports, a lot of the good in sport I was able to find at Queen's.

This school is a bastion of sporting hope. For those that complain about salaries, nobody makes any money here except for the coaches, and even they don't make too much. The worries about sporting corruption can be left at the Division St. exit of the 401, because you will not find under the table payments here. At Queen's the athletes are students, not the other way around. If at half-time of a given athletic contest there was a pop quiz for extra points, it would be a safe bet (not that you should gamble on sports) that virtually all of the Queen's teams would be conference champs.

40 issues ago we started with a blank slate and a lot of empty pages and they were remarkably filled by many who dedicated themselves to the cause.

Beyond this 'goody two-shoes' image lies an athletic program that competes and entertains. Who cannot have smiled when 9,000 people took to the field to celebrate the death of McGill at Homecoming with a huge Oil Thigh? Then there was the fan fiesta at the Queen's-Ryerson basketball game and the madness that surrounded Game One of the men's volleyball playoffs against University of Toronto. For those that made it to these events, you know as well as anybody that they were something special.

Special is also the best word to describe the student-athletes at this school. Tennis player Paula Myslivicek has yet to lose a match and badminton player Caroline Gibbings loses about as often as we see Haley's comet. Hockey player Rob Mailloux carried an ailing team on his back and soccer player Mike Cowan just kept on scoring. Who could forget Paul Correale's elusiveness, Jim Aru's tenacity, Derek Richardson's first step, John Purdy's hair, Deannah Shelley's game face, Steph Glancey's range, Emmett Connolly's fight through injuries, Ange Crookford's speed, Jo Hackett's toughness, Frederic Cotnoir's jump serve, Jake Magolan's furious spikes, Anne Benedetti's dominance and countless other individual acts of athletic prowess. Then there were the teams. Four teams won OUA championships, reaching the pinnacle of their sport. Women's tennis, figure skating, synchro and women's lacrosse all brought home banners to add to the proud Queen's tradition.

While Queen's athletics are close to my heart, from this seat I was also able to look out at the other sports world, the one that starts where Kingston ends, and I liked what I saw. A great deal happened in the last year and it did not have everything to do with salaries and revenue, although there was a lot of that going on.

Look past the economics and you will see the greatest home run chase of all time. This year saw the greatest basketball player hanging up his famed Air Jordans after hanging a sixth banner from the United Center rafters. The New York Yankees had a fairy tale run, the French soccer team won their first World Cup on home turf and the Ottawa Senators had an opportunity to do something truly special.

If at half-time of a given athletic contest there was a pop quiz for extra points, it would be a safe bet that virtually all of the Queen's teams would be conference champs.

These are all tangible events, statistics that can be looked back on and judged, but there is more to sport than that. There was the joy with which Sammy Sosa fathered the big bear hug between father and son McGwire, the smiles on the faces of athletes who won and the grimaces on those that lost. Tears were shed, champagne sprayed, laughter heard, revenge sought and anger unleashed, and call me naive, but these emotions weren't about money or salary caps, these were about the love the game. No matter how much the sporting world has become a business with petulant athletes leaving a collective bad taste in the mouth, at the end of the day most of the people we watch play, love the game as much as we do. There are lock-outs and strikes, hold-outs and free agents, Al Davis and George Steinbrenner's, Albert Belle's and Latrell Sprewell's, but sports will outlast all of it, and that is what restores my confidence.

So with that last ringing endorsement of sport, I hang up my pen and note pad and bid adieu. 40 issues ago we started with a blank slate and a lot of empty pages and they were remarkably filled by many who dedicated themselves to the cause. The job would have been impossible without the accommodating coaches, who spoke to me at all hours of the day and granted me access that most journalists can only dream of. I learnt a lot from those that knew much more than me and hopefully those that read the sports pages gained a similar knowledge. Whenever we needed anything, the athletic department and most notably Sports Information Officer Ken Kirkwood, were there with bells on.

As far as the sporting world is concerned, I just looked outside and the sky is not falling, it is actually clear and blue.

Adam Kaminsky had a great run as editor and he's going to miss all the folks he met at Queen's

Runner's high

By JULIETA LOEFFLER

Runners fascinate me. I see them running at all hours of the day, through rain, snow, high winds smiling. Nothing seems to stop them from going out on their daily run. I used to think that people who ran were somehow better than those who didn't. I thought that they had more discipline, more confidence in their abilities, more drive. The piece of information that I received that helped me overcome these notions was that most runners experience "the runner's high."

Although many regular exercisers feel better psychologically, emotionally, and spiritually after exercising, the phenomenon is particularly pervasive among runners. The runner's high is a euphoric sensation, usually unexpected, of heightened well being, enhanced appreciation of nature, and transcendence of time and space. Other words used to describe it are power, gracefulness, moving without effort, and glimpse of perfection. To experience this high, most people require rhythmic, long-lasting, uninterrupted activity.

The runner's high does not happen every time a person runs, but some aspects of it are usually seen while exercising. Particular conditions that do facilitate the experience of achieving a runner's high are few distractions, cool weather with low humidity and long distance running (at least 30 minutes at a comfortable pace). The person needs to be able to forget about time and space while they are running, and almost detach themselves from the pace of the world that they are in.

Every person's experience with runner's high is different and some people will never experience it, but research has shown that 77 per cent of runners experience it on nearly 30 per cent of their runs. The feeling is sometimes every powerful and for some, very spiritual.

With spring in the air, I have seen many people outside enjoying the sunshine and warm weather. I have seen many people biking, walking, roller blading, and playing various sports and all of them seemed to be smiling. I have also seen the runners, and I challenge you to become one of them. Whatever your excuses have been in the past, forget them.

The key is to start slowly and stretch a lot. If you have never run before, begin with alternating walking and running for a set number of minutes. For example, start with a fast walk for five minutes, follow that with a two or three minute run and then 10 minutes of walking, and then another two or three minutes of running and a five minute cool down walk. Add more intervals if you feel more comfortable with one minute of running and only three minutes of walking. You will be surprised at how quickly you will decrease your walking time and eventually you will be running the entire time. Make sure you take a few minutes before and after the run to stretch. It might also help to stretch during the run. Many injuries can be avoided if you stretch properly.

The feelings that are released when a person exercises are incredible. Endorphins, a drug produced naturally by your brain, pituitary gland and other tissues are released while exercising, reduce the sensation of pain and produce a state of euphoria. This is usually the drug associated with a runner's high. I think that everyone should make a serious attempt to experience this by taking up running. Maybe, you too will become addicted to the sport and be one of "those" people. The ones, who run through sleet, snow and rain and are always smiling.

Back by Popular Demand!

Travel & Teach ESL

ESL/EFL TEACHER TRAINING
44 HOUR CERTIFICATION COURSE

Classroom Teaching Practicum Included

Crash Course A: 1 week		Course B: 6 weeks
Time:	May 3 - 7, 1999 9:00 - 5:00	Time:	May 10 - June 17, 1999 6:00 - 9:00 p.m.
	Monday - Friday Practicum May 8 10:30 - 2:30		Mondays & Wednesdays Practicum June 5 & 12 10:30 - 2:30

Location: Queen's Campus

Cost: $359.00/44 hour course
(5% discount if registered before April 23, 1999)

REGISTRATION INFORMATION
Phone 384-6194 or email bsromstein@bigfoot.com

ATTENTION

Arts & Science Undergraduates

ARE YOU IN THE RIGHT ACADEMIC PROGRAM?

CONCERNED ABOUT CAREER OPPORTUNITIES AFTER GRADUATION?

INTERESTED IN AN APPLIED PROGRAM?

WHY NOT CONSIDER TRANSFERRING INTO CHEMICAL ENGINEERING OR ENGINEERING CHEMISTRY (OR DOING A DUAL DEGREE WITH YOUR CURRENT PROGRAM).

The award-winning department of Chemical Engineering is a dynamic department with an outstanding record of excellence in teaching and research, with many links to industry.

Well qualified students can expect credit for completed CHEM, MATH, H&SS, GEOL and Laboratory courses.

Your transfer will be smooth and painless!

For information contact:
Dr. David Lawrence, #208 Dupuis Hall
lawrence@chee.queensu.ca
533-2783

Varsity athletes honoured

By CRYSTAL BONA

The athletics department honoured its top four female and four male athletes for the winter term this past Tuesday at the Grizzly Grill. They were a diverse group, representing seven different sports and coming from all over the country.

Tara Feeney, a rugby and wrestling athlete, was named an OUA all-star and female Wrestler of the Year by the OUA Coaches. A highlight from her season was a comeback win from an 8-2 deficit against a Western wrestler.

Nimrod Major, a second year life sciences student, was a valuable member of both the fencing and track teams, after last year's promising rookie season was shortened by injury. He won the silver medal in the high jump at the CIAU national championships in Montreal and was awarded the prestigious status of All-Canadian.

Claudia Tom, a B.C. native, was named OUA rookie of the year. A leader in on-ice and dry-land conditioning for the women's hockey team, Tom's play immediately improved her team's performance. She was honoured during the year as OUA and CIAU athlete of the week for consecutive shutouts.

A two-time OUA Basketball all-star, Derek Richardson routinely led his team in scoring and was also a rebounding force this season. He is credited with resurrecting an interest in basketball this year.

Caroline Gibbings was a valued member of this year's badminton team. At the time that she was selected as Queen's Journal Athlete of the Week, this Torontonian had only lost three games in three seasons. She has competed both nationally and internationally in her sport, and sets a good example for her team by working hard and playing well.

Fredric Cotnoir was the personification of the scholar-athlete ideal this season. A first year Law student from Sherbrooke, Ontario, Cotnoir provided leadership for the volleyball team and was ranked ninth nationally in kills.

Coach Melody Torcolacci raves about Nicole Clarke's potential. As a rookie, Clarke placed third at the CIAU National Track Championships in the 20lb weight throw and fifth in the shot put at this year's OUA Championships.

Jason Skilnick's first year as a goalie for the men's hockey team immediately and significantly improved his team's performance. In a three-game series against Toronto, he allowed only four goals and was named OUA athlete of the week for that effort.

Congratulations to all honourees and best of luck to them in their future endeavours.

Canada Europe Asia Round the World

SPRING AND SUMMER FLIGHTS FILL QUICKLY!

- ✓ Student Class Fares
- ✓ Budget Fares
- ✓ Custom Long Haul Fares
- ✓ Rail Passes Worldwide
- ✓ Hostel Cards
- ✓ ISIC Cards
- ✓ SWAP

Amazing Spring Seat Sales

- Canada, Europe
- Australia & New Zealand

Book & Pay by Apr 14!

A World of Student Travel

Website: www.odyssey-travel.com

ODYSSEY TRAVEL

186 Princess St., Kingston, Ont. K7L 1B1

Leisure Travel
549-3553

Long Haul/Group Travel
549-3561

E-mail: odyssey@odyssey-travel.com

"It's like the Internet on caffeine."

Queen's@Home
high speed Internet access over cable

$29.95
A MONTH

For Queen's
Students
Only!!

3 MONTHS FREE! Hook up to Queen's@Home between June 1 and August 31, 1999, and don't pay a cent until September 1st, 1999!

NEW "ROOMMATE" RATES! Pay $29.95 per month for your first computer, and only $10 for each additional computer in your home!

FREE INSTALLATION! Order Queen's@Home now, and we'll do the installation for free!

IS THIS YOUR LAST YEAR AT QUEEN'S? If you need to disconnect your Queen's@Home service, call 1-877-8-ATHOME.

Go further. Go faster. Go...

QUEEN'S@Home™

1-877-8-ATHOME

www.cogeco.ca

CONSTANT CONNECTION
— no waiting,
no busy signals,
no second phone line

UNLIMITED CONNECT TIME
EASY-TO-USE BROWSER

DEDICATED CUSTOMER CARE CENTRE
open 24 hours a day,
7 days a week

5 EMAIL ADDRESSES
5MB OF PERSONAL WEB SPACE per email account

Gutsy player

Continued from page 25

mented. "That's the way our league is... they don't let a guy like Rob establish himself too quickly."

Cunningham concurred, "He made such a great adjustment to the league because he was such a high-profile player coming in... he wasn't centred out by the opposition when he was in Kingston. He handled it very well."

Following a brief slump early in the new year, induced by nagging injuries, Mailloux came alive again down the stretch. "He became comfortable with being a Queen's student playing hockey," said Cunningham. Not coincidentally, forward Dave Gallo, a transfer from Northern Michigan and a long-time friend of Mailloux's, became eligible in January. "Off the ice, we're the best of friends," remarks Mailloux. "Having him come in certainly helped my game... when he came in, I not only started scoring again, but it gave me a boost mentally."

After a second-place finish in OUA scoring, Mailloux's season seemed to be over when he suffered a severely pulled abdominal muscle during the team's last home weekend. After sitting out five games, during which the Tricolour wrestled home-ice advantage for the OUA Mid-East semifinal from the University of Toronto Blues and then forced a decisive third game against Varsity — Mailloux's frustration at being unable to play led to him telling the Queen's coaches "that I would play as much as I could."

Although in pain he would describe only as "terrible," Mailloux managed to set up Gallo for the tying goal early in the third period, forcing overtime. What ensued was deemed by veteran coach Cunningham "the gutsiest athletic performance I have ever seen... it was an amazing effort. It increased the pain threshold for everyone else, seeing him do what he did."

Despite the severely constricting injury, Mailloux took a regular shift as the two teams battled through four extra sessions (hitting the crossbar late in the second OT) before captain Scott Richardson ended the epic struggle, putting the Gaels in the divisional finals, where they fought valiantly in defeat against the Guelph Gryphons.

"Having [Gallo] come in certainly helped my game... when he came in, I not only started scoring again, but it gave me a boost mentally."

— Rob Mailloux

"It was a good experience," said Mailloux of switching from the grind of major junior hockey, where in his final season he carried a full Queen's course load. "This year, I was able to gain the entire university experience."

With professional hockey adding new franchises quicker than Subway, the CIAU, long ignored by scouts, has become looked upon as a finishing school for future pros. "People are starting to watch our games to look for that late bloomer," says MacDonald. "I would classify Rob as one of those guys who'll continue to develop as a player. Hopefully someone will give him a chance."

LSAT
MCAT
GMAT
www.prep.com

Toronto spring/summer classes with 1 weekend, 2 weekend, or 5 week formats.
LSAT - Start in May, June, July, August
MCAT - Start in June, July, August
GMAT - Start every month

Request our FREE Law School Bound and Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at:
learn@prep.com

Richardson - 1 800 410-PREP

FRANSELLY
Hair & Esthetics
Thank you Queen's for formal updo's!
See you this fall

We're In The Business of Making You "Look and Feel Good" and we specialize in long hair - It's the place to be!

178 Ontario St.
549-2700

Check out our Website for style samples.
www.Fransellyhair.com

Quest to be master

Since Johnny Miller did it in 1974, no player had won four tournaments before The Masters until David Duval came along. Fresh off back-to-back victories in the past two weeks, Duval is unquestionably the top golfer in the world going into the first of golf's four major championships. That indisputable notion, coupled with the fact that his game is widely considered to be a very good match for the Augusta National layout, makes him the odds-on favourite to walk away with a green jacket on Sunday evening.

However, simply dealing with the pressure of the expectations that have been heaped upon him will be a monumental task for the graduate of Georgia Tech. Golf, after all, is a sport where the favorite loses much more often than he wins. In fact, the last time that a player came into The Masters with the type of fanfare that has surrounded Duval all week, was just one year ago when Tiger Woods was perceived by many as being unbeatable. After breaking the tournament record in 1997, Tiger came into the 1998 Masters as everyone's choice to repeat. In the end he finished behind the 58-year-old Jack Nicklaus.

Nonetheless, if there is a player on tour who has the temperament to cope with the hype, it is Duval. While the terms tranquil and laid back characterize his outward demeanor, the Duval that exists behind those familiar shades of his, is as determined and focused as any player on the planet. There is little doubt that if he can maneuver himself into contention, he should be a force to be reckoned with throughout the tournament.

Nevertheless, this year's Masters is bound to be about more than David Duval. For starters it was not that long ago that Tiger Woods shocked the golfing establishment with his record-setting, four-round score of 18 under par. Common sense dictates that Tiger is not to be ruled out in evaluating this year's field. In fact, with so much of the limelight having been deflected onto the new 'number one' player in the world, Woods' game may be poised for a second title in three years.

The Masters, it usually takes a little more than superlative skills to get the men in green coats scrambling around for your size.

Battling a Sunday showdown for the green jacket between Tiger and Duval, there are several other competitors who could contend for this prestigious title. For instance, both Ernie Els and Davis Love III have the type of driving ability that is an absolute must on the wide-open fairways of The National. With so many elite twenty-something golfers nowadays, Els is looking to add to his two US Open titles so as to ensure that his name is not lost in the shuffle. In addition to his power, he has the patience and touch around the greens that is required of any would-be Masters champion. Much the same can be said of Love, who has been lurking near the top of the leaderboard in recent weeks.

Although the crop of European invitees is not as strong as in past years, an international player could still feasibly walk away with the title.

Consider that for the first time since Jumbo Ozaki was in his prime, Japan has produced a golfer capable of winning in America. While capable is the key word, Shigeki Maruyama has shown that you don't have to be six feet tall to play a power game of golf. The stocky Japanese player was the surprise winner of the President's Cup last November, and arrives in Georgia this week as an up-and-coming superstar. It may surprise the casual fan if he is in one of the final pairings come Sunday, but it is doubtful that any of his peers are still second-guessing Shigeki's talent.

Nevertheless, on the back nine during the final round of The Masters, it usually takes a little more than superlative skills (isn't that right, Mr. Norman) to get the men in green coats scrambling around for your size.

With both ability and composure David Duval has, in the words of The Cup, defined all of the defining moments that have come his way this year. Why should this weekend be any different?

Nick Sinclair not only knows golf but he is an excellent broadcaster and a heck of a nice guy

Can't get a course you need? Contemplate the advantages of taking one of Athabasca University's 450 distance education courses to solve your dilemma. Solutions

Athabasca University
Canada's Open University™

www.athabascau.ca • 1-800-788-9041 • ainfo@athabascau.ca

The Last Waltz: The sporting year at Queen's

Much like the major league baseball season opening now, 40 issues is much too long a season. I never thought there would be times that it would be difficult to fill these blank pages every week. Thankfully, however, Queen's sports provided many moments throughout these last eight months which made my task a lot easier.

By far the greatest team at Queen's this year was the juggernaut known as the women's lacrosse team. They pummeled their opponents at every turn and easily bulldozed their way to the first ever lacrosse OUA Championship. Behind the coaching of Anne Benedetti (Queen's Journal female athlete of the year), Darcie Spearing and Nancy Symons, this highly quotable and confident team never showed any weakness. Though they only won the final by three goals, instead of the five that they predicted, the victory was still inevitable.

Finishing a close second behind lacrosse would have to be our five-nine figure skating dynasty. These women knew exactly what it took to win and all remained focused on the task at hand — adding another championship banner to Jock Harry Arena. The talented captaining threesome of Tara Black, Leanne Findlay and Karen Thomas completed their four years at Queen's with four championships and the void created by their departure may be too much to overcome. But it was one hell of a run.

By far the greatest team at Queen's this year was the juggernaut known as the women's Lacrosse team.

A team that does not seem to get as much attention as they deserve is the women's hockey team. They started this season with a roster virtually comprised of rookies and went into their last game battling for the final playoff spot — only to lose to York's 30-year old ringer.

Slightly off the beaten sports path, the introduction of the Queen's "hospitality" tent was one of the many joys of Homecoming weekend this past fall. It was nice to see that students could be relatively well-behaved and hopefully is a sign of good things to come. While there was a problem of only buying one beer at a time, generous Queen's alumni 'donated' their time and their tickets to make sure current students drank their fill before the 'gael'-like winds ripped through campus and gave us one last taste of what blackouts and booze feel like.

One of the hi-lights of being one of the sports editors is covering Colour Night. You hear a lot about apathy at Queen's during election time (and who can really blame us), but if you want pure student participation check out the more than 600 varsity athletes that packed the Ambassador Hotel on St. Patrick's Day. With all the travel and training these athletes do, it's remarkable that they still graduate with honours degrees. Unfortunately, this great celebration of our athletes is more private than it should be. I think a big parade/rally led by our Queen's Bands would be even more fitting. This way all students would be able to show their appreciation.

The one problem with Colour Night was the lack of fourth-year rugby players sitting at the tables. What would have been the harm in letting these graduating athletes sip from the Grail one last time? Yeah I'm sure the first, second and third-year students learned their lesson and they will act more responsibly next year. But how will the fourth-years show they've learned from their mistakes? Probably by not donating any of their alumni wealth to the Department of Athletics and Recreation.

But I digress. One thing our friends at the PEC did do well this past year was increase the amount of aerobics classes offered as part of our student fees. With flexible hours and many classes, the administration has taken a large step towards recognizing the needs of students. Of course, if you are a woman you may want to wear construction boots when you walk through the change-rooms for fear of stepping on razor blades.

The year in sports would not be complete without a summary from the world of professional sports. The Peanut Gallery made its debut in the paper this year and despite what some sword-fighting coaches may think, it served as an important balance to our coverage of sports in the Queen's community.

You hear a lot about apathy at Queen's during election time, but you should have seen the 600 athletes that turned out for Colour Night.

Baseball had a very successful 1998 season with the epic home run chase (though it was the most incredibly overrated event in sports) and the Yankees winning 125 games and the World Series. Roger Clemens, after throwing a hissy fit, demanded a trade to a contender and a new contract. Jays Manager Tim Johnson was finally excuted by Colonel Ash to finally end that annoying saga. As usual, salaries boomed again, raising the ceiling to $15 million per season and giving us the first $100 million man. Under the category of 'Coming and Going', the NBA said goodbye to the Chicago Bulls dynasty and Michael Jordan with his game-winning jump shot in Game 6 against the Jazz, and said hello to the new Mr. Jordan, Vince Carter and his surging Raptors. Who woulda' thunk it that the Raptors would be a consistent sellout at the Air Canada Centre and carry a dominating 12-2 home record.

The Detroit Red Wings continued their winning ways this decade, but the nicest surprise was the first-round upset by the Ottawa Senators as they sent the Devils to hell. This year, the Sens are about to pass the 100-point mark and another surprise is the 90-point Leafs who said goodbye to fabled Maple Leaf Gardens.

The world of pro sports and Queen's sports provided a lot of highs and lows during this long 1998-1999 year. While I'm sure there were not too many insightful, life-altering articles in this section, hopefully we gave you something to read on Tuesday/Friday mornings, or else something to wrap your leftover lunch or use as a high-quality substitute for toilet paper. It was a pleasure to bring you all the sports that we felt were fit to print and best of luck to those of you who are not being paroled from Tricolour Prison. Thank you. Goodnight. Goodbye.

Robert MacNeil will now retire from journalism... he has nothing left to say.

Photo Contest winners

Jason Millar

Jason Millar

Mike Callan

All photo contest prizes were donated by Camera Kingston. Prizes and photos may be picked up at The Queen's Journal.

272 Earl Street — 533-2800

Rosamund Oxla

Fast-track Social Service Careers

@ St. Lawrence College

Graduating this year? Not going on to graduate school? No work experience?

Specialize in a social service career and gain valuable experience at the same time through field placement.

St. Lawrence College, Kingston Campus, offers fast-tracking for the following social service programs:

Behavioural Science Technology

Grads have worked as addiction counsellors, behaviour therapists, rehab counsellors, residential and vocational counsellors.

Early Childhood Education

Grads have worked in centres providing all-day care for infants, toddlers and pre-schoolers; half-day nursery schools; and programs for school-age children.

Social Service Worker - Gerontology

Grads have worked in activity departments for nursing homes, adult day programs and home support agencies.

For more information, contact the School of Human Studies at (613) 544-5400, ext. 1117/1234.

GUINNESS
jacket giveaway

see your server for details
last chance to enter on Friday April 9

The Toucan
www.thetoucan.com

down the alley at 76 Princess St. 544-1966

FOOD SPECIALS

$2.49 sunday breakfast

sun-tues
1/2 price wings<sup>4</sup>
wed

1/2 price nachos<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup>after 2pm with beverage purchase

LIVE BANDS

Fri April 9

Gael Force

great celtic tunes from London.

When I say "union" I think PSAC !

Many of the people employed at Canadian universities are unionized. The reasons are clear: a union gives them the collective strength to defend their rights and to obtain better working conditions. When governments cut and university administrators apply these cuts to their more vulnerable workers, a union is indispensable.

Joining a union is a step to ensure that management will listen to your demands.

Joining the Public Service Alliance of Canada is a step to ensure that managers will understand that you are not alone in your struggle for fair and equitable treatment.

Some of the people who are working at other universities are glad they joined the PSAC. The more unstable one's worklife is, the more employers switch over to short-term employment with no benefits and no job security, the more that sort of dicey workplace becomes the norm, the more you need unions. Laura Penny, University of Western Ontario Local, London.

The PSAC gives you not only the strength of a movement of more than 150,000 workers all across Canada, it is a modern and well-organized union that can help you when you negotiate with your employer. We support you with the resources to negotiate a fair contract, to resolve any difficulties with your employer and to have a more effective voice in your workplace.

Help yourself by forming a union. Help your union by joining the Public Service Alliance of Canada.

For more information, contact : Fernie Shurtleworth, PSAC, 416-485-3558, ext. 230. Or visit our web site : www.psac.com

Honourable Mentions

Decna Dovara

A.J. Javier

Nessa Prendergast

Eric Iresublay

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Student films a pleasant treat for the eye

O u t o

f

s i g h
t

If the rest of us only knew what was going on for these last eight months.

While most of campus crammed for exams, essays and last minute assignments, a select few took on the roles of director, producer, writer and cinematographer. The lights burned bright early this year with the cameras rolling, and as of this moment the final touches are being stamped onto student moviemaking history.

Queen's Film Department is proud to present "Emerging Visions," this year's festival showcasing the films created and produced by the students of Film 350. This year's selection of films compliment a broad range of ideas and student views. From superheroes to millennial anxiety, the festival is out to offer a variety of sights for the moviegoer:

Blind Eye

Action... Reaction... Consequence. What would you do if you had to make a split-second decision - one that could affect someone's fate? Three strangers grapple with the consequences of their actions in the face of tragedy.

Director/Writer: Christina Thom, Producer: Philip Svoboda, Cinematographer: Scott Carr, Editor: Cara Coppert, Lighting/Grip/Sound: Jeremy Stern
Cast: Gord Love, Bill Morrow, Karina MacKenzie, Phoebe Jones, Lenny Epstein, Patrick O'Leary

Faultlines

Associative images form the backdrop to this exploration of the interaction of memory and geography. A childhood blasphemy, an aborted screen test, and the ballad of John and Yoko all serve to illuminate the faultlines between cultures - faultlines that are solidified by history and the boundaries of experience.

Writer/Producer/Director: Chris Kennedy, Cinematographers: Mike Healy/Chris Kennedy, Sound Recordist: Naomi Powell, Asst Director/Technical Support: Jędrzej Jędrzej
Cast: Grace Myong, Brad Lepp

Frozen

A suspenseful story about a childhood tragedy that has become one man's haunting reality. A simply case of mistaken identity escalates to an episode of intrigue and betrayal which finds Thomas Glass cornered on the roof of a ten-story building.

Director: Geoff Ashenburt, Writer/Producer: Mathieu Wolfe, Cinematographer: Trevor Brown, Editor: Marc Griffin
Cast: Steve Spencer, Phillip Brown, Gloria DiFolco, Jim Davis

Playing Like A Girl

Four women settle into a game of poker. Throughout the evening in a heady atmosphere of alcohol, cards, bluffing, and cheating, they each reveal more than the cards they hold. Playing Like A Girl is a bitter sweet comic look at the contradictory and cryptic lives of lesbians, revealing the highly developed skills needed to negotiate their relationships.

Director of Photography: Raymond Kioke, Writer/Producer: Helen Wickham, Cinematographer: Lindsey Robertson, Editor: Andrea Morales, Lighting Designer: Killeen Kelly
Cast: Vee Blackburn, Marie Goddard, Killeen Kelly, Jennifer McGinnis

Super Dreams

Superhero from the hood, superhero with dream. Super Dreams is a comic look into the life of a common man with an extraordinary dream. All Tommy has ever wanted is to be a superhero; come for his journey, stay for the popcorn.

Director: Eli Rayna, Producer: Katherine Colbourn, Cinematographer: Ivan Shih, Editor: Douglas Thomas, Writer: David Ritchie
Cast: Anthony Farrell, Lucas Costello, Lenny Epstein, Charly Charell, Nancy Leckie

transcanada

What happens when you are sent to Newfoundland to write a story about Millennium anxiety... and none exists? In the spirit of direct cinema, this documentary traces this search from the streets of Toronto to the shores of Newfoundland.

Created entirely through collaboration and consensus by Mike Healy, Kelly McCague, and Naomi Powell

A class of twenty-four students were sectioned off into 6 groups to collaborate their creative vision for the intensive third-year film course. The projects were filmed on 16mm, a first for many of the students. Many of the films have plans of entering prestigious film festivals across the continent. Some festivals such as TVO's Film Festival have had Queen's films part of the award winning roster.

Emerging Visions will run from Thursday April 29 to Saturday May 1 at 8 p.m. in The Screening Room located at 120 Princess Street. General admission is $6.50.

Compiled by Lilian Kim

Photos (from left, down) Blind Eye, Faultlines, Frozen, Playing Like A Girl, Super Dreams, transcanada

Rotate this!

Various Artists Ultraviolet Frenetic Records

By KEN BUTLAND

Congratulations to Ultraviolet this year for putting together a magazine that looks and feels really professional. Its nice to see so many healthy, young, alternative-looking white folk on the cover. And the lengthy accompanying CD, made virtually free to students thanks to the business-savvy Celia Hatton, is a sweet bonus. Concerning the lineup, I confess I don't see how an electronica hand, two DJs and a funk combo mesh with the mandate of a poetry collection, but I'm stupid and drunk right now, because I'm done with The Journal, so grasping the concept of "saving the document as you go" is almost too much for this light-headed lad, let alone carrying on a debate over lyrical content versus musical esthetics.

The hardcore electronica band Ibiza starts things off with moody guitars, synth, and effective doubling of electronic and live drums. The only thing lacking is Monica's thin, unemotive vocals. Monica who learned quickly that famous singing women need no last name.

Travel Agent, with local popularity analogous to the global appeal of the Spice Girls, is permanently burned into the fifth track of every copy.

Next is Jon Conkley's "Hair like Roots," with accompaniment from at least one uncredited percussionist. Although maybe he played and recorded everything himself. I don't know. When I saw him play at Alfie's once he told the story of his childhood friend who inspired the song. The depth and soul of the lyrics in "Roots" demonstrate Jon's remarkable ability to take the roots of experience and turn them into compelling art. Oh, God, I must be sounding like a mutthead by now. Oh well, it's too late, I've already saved it.

Skipping over Reno's Hitmen's mediocre "Tequila Sheila," we reach Matt Barber's Sloan-ish sounding "My Secret Identity Crisis." When I was in grade 10 I wrote this really embarrassing, angst poem and called it "My Own Private Idaknow" after the movie "My own Private Idaho." Not that there's a connection. I just felt like sharing. Matt Barber's song is real perdy. He's done some crisp, brooding guitar work here, and the sound engineer must have doubled Barber's vocals, because they sound extra strong - they almost "shimmer," if you will.

Travel Agent, with local popularity analogous to the global appeal of the Spice Girls, is permanently burned into the fifth track of every copy. I think the refrain of the Rap Traxx 2-type lyrics is supposed to be "the point of being is the scope of my trip," but it sounds like he's really saying "the point a pee-

Please see Rotate This on page 36

Alfie's 98-99

PUB

THANK YOU

For All Your Patronage This Year

Alfie's Pub Staff 1998-99

We Are Open Thursday-Saturday
Through April, May and June

WWW.ALFIES.QUEENSU.CA/ALFIES

Talking with Waxing Battle of the Bands winners Waxing Gibbus talks

PHOTOS BY JAMES TERJANIAN

INTERVIEW

BY STEFAN MURRAY

Although a soccer field might seem like a strange place for the birthplace of a successful campus band, Waxing Gibbus owe their success to the Queen's Summer soccer league.

Last summer, Terry Kelly was minding the goal while Shermi Lamba was playing defence. The duo shared a common interest beyond soccer and a month later they had started a band.

Their surprise win was even more impressive considering the band's goal when they formed was only to qualify for the competition.

Roughly six months and four members later, Waxing Gibbus was on top of the Queen's bubble after winning the campus wide Battle of the Bands in late March. Their performance was tremendous, edging The Loose Lips, The Prototype and Reno's Hitmen in one of the closest finals ever.

"For some reason, I didn't think we would win because I didn't feel we had played up to our potential," recalls Kelly.

"I was also greatly impressed by the abilities of the other guys," he said.

Their surprise win was even more impressive considering the band's goal when they formed was only to qualify for the competition.

Waxing Gibbus is made up of six members; Kelly provides the rhythm guitar and vocals, Lamba plays lead guitar, Peter Reed sits in on drums, Mark Marcnimigon mannes the keyboards, Eric Bacon takes on the bass duties while Andrew Toms contributes as the band's DJ.

The forming of Waxing Gibbus has a definite connection with the battle of the bands tradition. Drummer Peter Reed, who abdicated from his role as drummer for Lounge Act to join Kelly's band Ebb, battle contender in 1998, and eventually signed on to provide the rhythm for Waxing Gibbus. As well, Bassist Eric Bacon, was a former member of Los Sea Monsters, a local band that once reached the finals of the battle. In December of '98 the band recorded a three track disc entitled "Freezing Up". The Single.

"We decided to record it and we didn't know what to do with it afterwards," said Kelly.

The band eventually used the disc to prepare for the battle, using it as their entry demo.

Waxing Gibbus was the clear fan favourite at the battle last Wednesday, offering a diverse style that had something to offer each member of the audience. Their powerful folk melodies and terrific songwriting soothed the crowd and the element of trippy sampling was also well received by the audience.

Waxing Gibbus was the clear fan favourite at the battle last Wednesday, offering a diverse style that had something to offer each member of the audience.

Kelly maintains that he likes the DJing element because "it has the ability to contribute thematically with samples to give the audience a better idea of what the song was saying."

Waxing Gibbus has been busy of late with the battle, their gig with Thrushhermit at the Toucan, their set with Franklin's Fault at the Trash last Wednesday night and their show tonight at Clark Hall Pub with Jon Coakley and Reno's Hitmen.

The Waxing Gibbus story ends there unfortunately. Individual members will do their own thing this summer and it is uncertain that those who have graduated the university will move on to better things. However, Bacon provides some hope as he says,

"look for something in September, lets just leave it nice and vague."

Thanks to everyone who contributed to A&E this year. We couldn't have done it without you guys!

— From the A&E types, Stefan, Sarah and Lilian

Read The Job Ads Lately?

CAREERS
POSITIONS AVAILABLE FINANCIAL SERVICES
 • Strong communication and analytical skills
CSC required

The Canadian Securities Course™ (CSC) prepares you for a career with an investment dealer, mutual fund company, bank or other financial services firm.

Enrol in the self-study CSC this Spring and by the Fall you will have gained the competitive edge that financial services employers are looking for.

Ask About Our Special Offer!
15% off for University Students
1-800-274-8355
www.csi.ca

bouquets to you, and thank you for your patronage

If you're graduating, we wish you much success.
If you're here this summer, we'll see you on the patio.
If you're returning next fall, we'll welcome you back.

Thanks again from the staff at Chez Piggy & Pan Chanco.
Have a great summer!

Pan Chanco
 Bakery-Catering-Take-out

Chez Piggy 68R Princess St. 549-7673 Pan Chanco 70 Johnson St. 544-7790

Rotate this!

Continued from page 33

ing's to cope with ma drip." Whatever. The tune is a few hundred bars too long. But boy can they play. Wow!

Jill Barber, often thought of as the younger sibling in Queen's leading family of musical prodigies, is actually the love-child of Ani DiFranco and Jewel Kilcher. "Shame," her contribution to the U.V. CD might be described as "a sharp acoustic expression of themes associated with the female condition." Of course, this statement neatly describes Ani DiFranco's entire musical portfolio, but it would take one blackhearted son-of-a-bitch to make constant comparisons like that, and so onto the final track.

party hats ready), turntables outsell guitars, DJs refuse to sell-out, musicians and students are sold on the Ultraviolet CD. It's UltraFine!

Waxing Gibbus
"Freezing Up" - The Single
Frenetic records

BY SARAH JANE BIRD

The depth and soul of the lyrics in "Roots" demonstrate Jon's remarkable ability to take the roots of experience and turn them into compelling art.

DJ Greazy Porkchop and DJ Apposauce are the artists who send the Ultraviolet CD "spinning" off into the reaches of space with their "wack" sounds and "cutting-edge" rhythms. Live guitars? No. Live drums? No. Lead singer? No. None of that stuff. In 1978, when Neil Young first sang the lines "Hey Hey, My My/ Rock and Roll will never die," I wonder if he knew how soon his ironic prophesy would come to pass. That said, "Backbone Gumbo" is an appropriate end to a great compilation.

In 1999, as everyone anxiously awaits the beginning of the last year of this millennium (2001 is when it happens for real, but 2000 is when all those numbers change, so get your

Judging from the simple, low budget design of their CD jacket, Waxing Gibbus seems to be a young "pop rock" group waiting to be discovered. Their sound is similar to that of many of the mellow pop groups that seem to entice university students, but I am not one of those students.

Their CD "Freezing Up" - The Single contains only three tunes, "Freezing Up," "Sister Edwina," and "Running Through the Flowers." This collection of songs does have one strong feature; the instrumental work is good. All six members of the group mix well musically resulting in a solid instrumental performance, but it might be said that the lead singer struggles on occasion with the vocals. Too often throughout all three songs does his voice strive to reach a higher pitch with less than success. When he sings in the lower register, the sound is far more pleasing. "Sister Edwina" contains the most effective vocals, while the title song, "Freezing Up," is a little whiny and monotonous. Perhaps I am alone in this, but it seems to me that music is supposed to make you want to dance, cry, or think. These songs make me want to nap.

Three selections from the repertoire of Waxing Gibbus may not be enough to accurately judge their performing ability, but they do leave a lasting impression in terms of their instrumental ability. The guitar work is particularly impressive.

For those of you who like the mellow, "pop-rock" sound, this group may do it for you, but I tend to look for 'new' and 'innovative' when broadening my musical horizons. My intention is not to discourage this new group, for I am sure they have the potential for success, but their type of music just isn't for me.

The Prototype
No Possible Way
Independent

BY FIONA STEVENSON

"No possible way" represents an impressive debut CD for the Ottawa Band Prototype. Incorporating percussion, bass, keyboard, guitar and the sensational vocals of Queen's student Ian Shackleton, the distinctive sound of these young musicians is likely to leave a mark on the Canadian music scene.

The CD combines a lot of diverse sounds and is clearly influenced by the sounds of Our Lady Peace, The Tea Party, Prodigy and Moist. I'm a big fan of the first three bands, but not of control faster than you can say NoMeansNo. Armed with their new CD Dance of the Headless Bourgeoisie, this foursome, self-described as "two dummies, a joker, and one dink", have waged a failed attempt to impose their doctrine of crappy music on the talent-conscious masses.

Most of the songs are upbeat and energizing, especially "Through My Eyes" and "Head." The band's cohesiveness is one of its best features, and all the songs sound exceptionally tight. However, what drew me most to the band's sound was the incredible vocal range displayed by Shackleton, especially evident in the album's second song "Too Late." Other notable songs on the CD are "Lost" and "Disengage" which are both a bit more subdued than the hard-edged sound which characterizes most of the other numbers, including the CD's title track.

I definitely recommend giving this CD a spin. Chances are that at least one element of the diverse talents and sounds exhibited by this group will appeal to you.

NoMeansNo
Dance of the Headless Bourgeoisie
Wrong Records

BY MIKE BURGESS

Music listeners of the world unite! The new-rock revolution is at hand, and it's spinning out of control faster than you can say NoMeansNo.

Armed with their new CD Dance of the Headless Bourgeoisie, this foursome, self-described as "two dummies, a joker, and one dink", have waged a failed attempt to impose their doctrine of crappy music on the talent-conscious masses.

NoMeansNo have nothing going for them aside from average instrumental ability, undergraduate arts vocabularies - they use the word 'myriad' and a basic knowledge of three-chord harmony.

NoMeansNo have nothing going for them aside from average instrumental ability, undergraduate arts vocabularies - they use the word 'myriad' and a basic knowledge of three-chord harmony. Unfortunately, they put none of these skills to good use.

The band demonstrates little imagination or diversity, oscillating between similar hard rock and speed grunge formulas on every track. Their grim, angst-ridden, lyrics yield no shock-value and collapse into simple rhymes, clichés, and pseudo-intellectual social commentary.

Needless to say, their moderate instrumental talent is squandered.

NoMeansNo's downfall is that they don't contribute anything to the already boring style of quick-tempo hard rock. Typical examples are "This Story Must Be Told," "I Can't Stop Talking," and "The Rape," which are virtually the same chord progression set to different lyrics. The title song is even worse using only tuneless noise and annoying vocals.

The final track, "One Fine Day," displays a hint of promise, but most listeners will have banished the CD to the wasteland of their collection before they ever hear it. Tedious, unimaginative and lacking direction, NoMeansNo are no better than the headless bourgeoisie they sing about, and are destined for the dustbin of rock history.

LSAT GMAT MCAT GRE Preparation Seminars

- Complete 25-Hour Seminar Packages For Only $275
- Proven Test-Taking Strategies
- Personalized Professional Instruction
- Comprehensive Study Materials
- Simulated Practice Exams
- Personal Tutoring Available
- Free Repeat Policy
- Thousands of Satisfied Students

Oxford Seminars
(613) 544-9389
1-800-269-6719

Sexperts Needed!

The Sexual Health Resource Centre is currently looking for volunteers for its summer season.

Applications are available at:

- The SHRC; located in the Grey House
- Infobank in the JDUC
- AMS Office

DUE APRIL 21

Feel free to call us for any further information.

The Sexual Health Resource Centre
533-2959

GREGOS

gill and wine bar

Restaurant Review

You don't have to be Greek to enjoy an evening of delicious Greek delicacies, accompanied by the traditional music of Greece playing in the background. Just wander down to Greco's Grill and Wine Bar at 169 Princess Street, Kingston.

Owned and operated by the Kofinis family, the restaurant is small, but it is warm and cosy. Pictures of their Greek homeland decorate the walls, along with beautiful plants and several small trees lit up at night with tiny bulbs.

Usually when eating out, I like to have good friends along for a second opinion and because we can all order a variety of foods to try. This evening I am accompanied by my husband Marco and two very close family friends, Marianne and Roy.

After ordering a bottle of Iriskillen Pinot Noir, our waiter, Stewart, brought a basket of fresh garlic bread and a crunchy flat bread covered with sesame seeds (Baked on the premises). A tasty salmon spread is served with the bread.

For appetizers we tried the marinated octopus falso (also prepared in the kitchen and very delicious) and the Saganaki. Saganaki is a square of tangy cheese flambé at your table. For those who have sworn off salt, it is a cheese, but tasty. The flambé causes the cheese to be crusty on the outside and creamy on the inside.

Having eaten at Greco's a number of times, I find it very difficult to pass up the Gourmet Chicken. It is fantastic, but this evening they are preparing for the Chicken in Puff Pastry, a similar dish and equally delicious (It's not on the menu, but it is offered occasionally as a special.) After a little arm twisting, we got the recipe for you to try at home.

Marco and Roy both ordered the grilled lamb chops. I don't think they could resist them. Marianne ordered the garlic shrimp platter served on a bed of rice. They looked wonderful. All this food went down nicely with a bottle of Mondavi Cabernet Sauvignon. After the meal, we were so full that we did not want to hear the word "dessert," so instead we enjoyed a coffee, accompanied by a warmed brandy.

Don't be afraid of breaking the bank at Greco's. Prices are very reasonable, especially for the quality of the cuisine. On the dinner menu, appetizers such as Tiroplita, Carpaccio and Bruschetta are priced from $2.95 through $9.95. Entrées are priced from $8.50 to $13.95 including items like the Chicken Parnesan, Filet Mignon and Rack of Lamb. For fish and seafood lovers, Rainbow Trout, Filet of Salmon and the Posidon's Platter, are priced from $9.95 to $14.95. The menu also features a selection of pasta dishes and a variety of gourmet pizzas. Wine lovers won't be disappointed either, a wide selection of wines are available from Greece, California, Italy, Chile, Australia and Ontario.

Out late at night?

Don't want to walk alone?

Looking for a smile to brighten your evening?

Call Walkhome.

We've already walked over 5,000 people this year.

That's more than 10,000 km.

So we think we can help.

Walkhome 533-2662
or you can still call our old number at 545-2662

Leaving Queen's for the summer?

Information Technology Services

Don't forget that dialing in to Queen's might be a long-distance call!

I have a PC. What do I need to do? Packman will create long distance connection profiles for you. In the Packman Launch Pad, double-click on 06 Advanced Options, then double-click on 05 Configure Network Connection. Put a check beside the long distance option of any modem pool that you dial in to (e.g. "QLink Long Distance") and click OK. I have a Mac. What do I need to do? The instructions for Macintosh computers depend on which dial-up software you have.

<http://www.its.queensu.ca/pubs/howto/longdistance.html#mac> has all the information you'll need.

I ran into trouble! Help! Manual configuration instructions are at:

<http://www.its.queensu.ca/pubs/howto/longdistance.html>

The dial-in information index has lots of helpful documentation:

<http://www.its.queensu.ca/pubs/dialindex.html>

Don't forget about your e-mail!

For more information about the many services available on QLink that help you to manage your e-mail while you're away, see this page:
<http://www.its.queensu.ca/pubs/itsnote/holidays.html>

Not coming back!

Even if you aren't taking courses at Queen's in September, you still keep your QLink account until the end of October 1999. This is to allow you time to get an account with another Internet Service Provider. Once you do, you should inform everyone of your new account, and forward your QLink e-mail to it. Here's how:
<http://www.its.queensu.ca/pubs/itsnote/holidays.html#fwd>

We're here to help!

The ITS HelpDesk stays open all summer to help our users with questions about Queen's-related computing. Call (613)533-6666 or e-mail helpdesk@post.queensu.ca

Ryerson Polytechnic University introduces the

Retail

Management degree program

Your ticket to a stimulating, high-energy career

Searching for a career that offers excellent job prospects, with competitive rates of pay? Not sure whether your university degree will help you find it?

Consider Canada's only Retail Management program that leads to a Bachelor of Commerce degree.

You'll receive the management education retail employers want, with a chance to specialize and gain work experience along the way. Entrance scholarships are available for outstanding applicants.

For more details, contact the School of Retail Management at (416) 979-5000, extension 7282 (phone); (416) 979-5324 (fax); or retmgmt@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail). Or contact the Office of Admissions/Liaison/Curriculum Advising at (416) 979-5036 (phone) or inquire@acs.ryerson.ca (e-mail)

RYERSON

You can be a chiropractic physician in five years.

Why settle for anything less?

The time is right to learn more about a rewarding and fulfilling career as a doctor of chiropractic. Greater emphasis is being placed on preventive care and non-invasive health methods in today's modern health-care system. In five academic years, you can graduate with a doctorate and be licensed to practice anywhere in the U.S. and Canada.

Known for academic excellence, Logan College is on the cutting edge of curriculum innovations. In addition to offering a quality clinical program, Logan provides value-added business management training. This gives graduating practitioners a winning edge with better leadership and practice enhancement skills.

Logan College of Chiropractic is now accepting applications. Write, call or check our Internet Website for a free descriptive brochure and admission kit.

EARN A DEGREE WITH A FUTURE
<http://www.logan.edu>
1-800-533-9210

1851 Schaeffer Road • Chesterfield, MO 63006-1065
Phone: 314-227-2100 • Fax: 314-207-2425 • E-Mail: loganadm@logan.edu
An Equal Opportunity Institution of Higher Education

A&E in brief

Rap Sheet #4: Rapper ODB was arrested on misdemeanor charges after New York police said they found him carrying a small amount of crack cocaine. ODB was arrested when police found drugs in his car. Last month, the 30-year-old rapper refused to attempt murder charges when a Brooklyn grand jury refused to indict him on charges of shooting at police officers. (A&E's last issue note: ODB was featured more than any other celebrity in A&E in Brief.)

Hawaii-1-0: Hawaii is set to become the new locale for Baywatch. TV news reports in Hawaii suggested a deal to move the syndicated show to Hawaii had been finalized. Baywatch which features actor David Hasselhoff has been filmed in Los Angeles for the past nine years.

Poo on You: It was a shocking scene when Fabio stepped off the inaugural run of a roller coaster at Busch Gardens in Williamsburg to discover that a bird had collided with his face. Fabio's face was splattered with blood, was taken to hospital and released with only minor cuts — the condition of the bird however, is unknown.

Ooo so Tesh-y: Many thought that when John Tesh walked away from Entertainment Tonight, he would lose his fame, but Tesh is proving many people wrong. Tesh has his own concert, "One World" airing on PBS stations nationwide. The program and CD feature Tesh performing his uptempo, new-age music in collaboration with musicians from other countries and other cultures. Tesh said of his mixed reviews, "I've been picketed by people who think I'm an alien, so I'm having a good time."

Believe it: She's #2: (Top three billboard songs for April 2)
1. "No Scrubs," — TLC
2. "Believe" — Cher
3. "Every Morning" — Sugar Ray

Goldie Weekend: (Top three movies for April 2nd weekend)
1. The Matrix 27.6 million
2. 10 Things I Hate About You $8.7 million
3. The Out-of-Towners $8.1 million

Get Out There!

Live Music:

Canadian Friends of Burma presents a benefit concert to be held at Clark Hall on Thursday, April 8. Doors open at 9 p.m. The concert will feature Jon Coakley and Waxing Gibbus.

Kingston Symphony will host Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra on Friday, April 16, 1999 at Grant Hall at 8 p.m. Call the Grand Theatre Box office at 530-2050. Tickets will also be sold at the door.

Canadian soprano Mary Lou Fallis will present "Primadonna On a Moose", a historical compendium of musical hits on May 17 at the Grand Theatre at 8 p.m. Tickets go on sale April 12 and are $22 (GST included).

Literature:

Kingston Regional Arts Council welcomes Spring with Eighth Annual Member's Open Art Salon and Annual Kingston Literary Awards. The event will be held Friday, April 30, 1999 from 6 - 8 p.m., in the Wilson Room, in the Kingston Frontenac Public Library.

Movies:

Playing at the Screening Room: (Weekend Matinees only)

Life is Beautiful 4:00, 7:05
Rushmore 9:30
Gods and Monsters 4:05, 7:10
Velvet Goldmine 9:30

Art:
Union Gallery:

The Union Gallery is currently showing Vertigo. The exhibit runs until April 13.

The Modern Fuel Gallery will begin showing Dwelling by Tanya Morand on Saturday April 10 to Saturday May 15.

Agnes Etherington Art Centre:

The Agnes Etherington Art Centre is currently showing Crime and Punishment. The show runs until June 6.

THE JOURNAL CROSSWORD

- ACROSS
- Female whele
  - Pudding starch
  - Grand slam
  - Having sound
  - New Testament book
  - Made up of rock fragments
  - Grow old
  - Scarlett O'Hara's home
  - Give a job to
  - False sect
  - Shuttlecock
  - Human beings
  - Nervous
  - That is: Lat.
  - Soak flax
  - Mr. Costello
  - Molten rock
  - Black magic
  - Strange celestial sight
  - Singer Domino
  - Faithful
  - Cease proceeding
  - Snack between meals
  - King of Judah
  - Sport of bowling
  - Three-time Indy 500 winner
  - Garland's costar
  - Looks at
- DOWN
- Wildcat
  - That woman
  - Good-looking
  - Shout of approval
  - Bridge player
  - Of the sun
  - Memorable saying
  - Deep wound
  - Punctually
  - Indistinct
  - Paper currency
  - Makes weary
  - Janet and Chnsy's roommate
  - Doller part
  - Border part
  - Semester
  - French fashion designer
  - Without hearing
  - Conduit
  - Forfeiture
  - Perfume making substance
  - Pursuing
  - 10<sup>100</sup>
  - Cheap cigar
  - Pencil rubber
  - Artifices
  - 365 deys
  - Building addition
  - Subterfuge
  - Silence
  - Small hotel
  - Bom

ELECTROLYSIS
Unwanted hair removed permanently and safely
Experienced electrolysis
Recommended by Physicians

HARRISON SALON
Kingston Since 1959
Free Consultation
Call 542-5595

In Kingston for the Spring or Summer?

Get a head start on next year and take a spring or summer course.

Spring Term Classes: 3 May 14 June    Summer Term Classes: 5 July 16 August    Spring-Summer Classes: 3 May 20 July

Courses In: Fine Art, Art History, Biology, Classics (Archaeology), Commerce, Computing Science, Drama, Economics, English, Film, French, Geography, German, Greek, Health, History, Italian, Mathematics, Microbiology & Immunology, Music, Nursing, Pharmacology, Philosophy, Physics, Politics, Psychology, Religion, Sociology, Spanish, Statistics, Women's Studies and Effective Writing.

Not In Kingston for the Spring or Summer?

Take a correspondence course home with you!

To register, or for more information contact:
Continuing & Distance Studies
F1 Mackintosh-Corry Hall    533-2471    www.queensu.ca/cds

Camera Kingston
foto source™

Your one - hour,
one - stop photo shop

..ask about your CLUB CK discount card    second set of prints

FREE
with this coupon

35mm or APS film at time of development
see store for details

our downtown location is open
7 days a week

114 Princess@Wellington Bath@Gardiners Rd
549 3747    384 3747

ORIENTATION EVENING

If you missed the first event, please contact the School of Environmental Studies, 533-6602 for more information.

Room 1120, Biosciences Complex
April 8, 1999
7-9 pm

FIND OUT ABOUT HONOURS BSC OPTIONS IN:
Environmental Biology
Environmental Chemistry
Environmental Geography
Environmental Life Sciences

HONOURS BA PROGRAM:
Environmental Science Medials

Come out and meet the faculty and DSC.

Free Refreshments!

Classifieds

99¢

Whopper Junior every day

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WONDERING ABOUT RELATIONSHIPS, career etc? Seeking direction? Experience greater self-awareness with Tarot, palmistry, runes, and more. Clients say my readings are inspirational and very accurate. I also offer classes in meditation, Tarot, etc. For more information phone Kellye at 544-1909. Also available Fridays and Saturdays at "Harmony", 93 Princess St. Walk in or pre-book at 544-7897. Tape included.

BLUEROOD FARM IS A GET-AWAY for Queen's students and their families. Half an hour away. Visit our website - www.lkweb.com/blueroot or call Kim Ondaatje at 374-2147. Transportation can be arranged.

LAST-MCAT-GMAT-GRE - www.prep.com Toronto live spring/summer classes forming now. Request our FREE Law School Bound or Pre-Med Bulletin email newsletters at: learn@prep.com Richardson - 1-877PREP.COM.

STUDENT WORK $12.85 to start. Over 500 positions to fill in Eastern Canada. Scholarship awards and great experience available. Call the closest office for an interview. Kitchener: 888-0909, Mississauga: 812-9272, Durham Region: 723-4920, St. Catharines: 937-8668, Markham (905) 947-9851, London 438-2711.

Hamilton: 387-2872; Ottawa: 739-2999; Toronto: (416) 487-3730; York Region: (416) 497-5464. Opening April 19th Sudbury: 673-3975; Etobicoke: (416) 237-1733; Toronto Chinese 410-8361. Call 1 888 328-5304 for updated numbers for the following: Halifax, Montreal, Burlington, Sarnia and Windsor.

RESUME RELAY SERVICES takes the stress out of finding work! We will use our extensive database to fax your resume to hundreds of companies within hours/overnight anywhere in Canada. 1 800 545-5069/www.resumelay.com.

OVERSEAS STUDENTS AND FACULTY We buy and sell most foreign currencies at excellent rates, without service charge. Check www.wellingtonfx.com for daily rates. Wellington Foreign Exchange, 153 Wellington, 531-8731.

A MODERN MUSICAL COMEDY - Living Soul: An unusual internet connection, A sexy Song Contest, A Transformation of the Soul. Earl St. Theatre (KCV) April 8, 9, 10 at 8 p.m. Students $2, 546-0432.

COME SEE The Soldier Dreams at the Baby Grand. April 22nd 8 p.m., April 23, 24, 7 p.m./9 p.m. Tickets $6/$8. A fun and wonderful Canadian play.

KEEP ABORTION safe and legal. Protest the Human Life International meeting April 10th in Toronto. For information call OPRIK: 549-0066, email: kingson4choice@hotmail.com or check out: www.angelire.com/prochoice.

ADVANCED ENGLISH language training! Oral presentation or writing. Learn public speaking, speech making and conversational skills. Learn clarity and fluency in your writing. Contact yes!@email.com or 547-4500.

POTTERY CLASSES - May/June and during the summer. Creative and fun. Close to Queen's. Beginners welcome. 6 week session - $85 (supplies included). Phone Linda Abbott at 549-3546.

FOR SALE/FOR RENT
FOR SALE: IBM 365XD laptop available! Excellent condition! Active matrix, 1 gig. intel processor, 33kpbs card modem, 40mb RAM, case and cords! Asking $1500 or best offer. Call 533-5106! Flexible price.

FOR SALE: Kitchen table with seat and 4 chairs. Good condition asking $25.00. Phone 399-1349 after 5 p.m.

NEED FURNITURE? 2 tulon frames, 1 tulon mattress w/padding, 4 bookshelves, 2 dressers, 3 desks, 2 computers, 18 speed bike, 3 office chairs, 2 full-length mirrors, large white message board, large tack board, halogen lamps (2), and stacked crates. For details call 547-2678.

FOR SALE: ArtSci '99 leather jacket. Hardly ever worn! Great memento! $200 or best offer. Includes the hanger it's been sitting on for 4 years! Call Mike at 531-3410

FOR RENT: 2 rooms for sublet! $195 per room per month. CHEAP! 5 minute walk to campus and downtown. Free parking, dishwasher and laundry, fully furnished. Available from May 1st to September 1st. Located on William St., between Division and Barrie. Call 536-5658.

SHARED ACCOMMODATION Three female students to share three bedroom apartment #1. Three male students to share four bedroom apartment (one room occupied). #2 Apartments include living room, kitchen includes fridge and stove. Location: King & Portsmouth, 10 minutes to Queen's West Campus. Rent: $250.00 to $285.00 per month each student, plus shared utilities. Available: immediately for male student apartment, May 1st for female student apartment. (Sublet May 1 to Aug. 31 also available for 2 rooms). Free parking. Contact G. Potter at 613 476-1960.

SUMMER SUBLET - fully furnished, clean, 5 minute walk from campus on Johnson/Frontenac. Rooms available for any amount of time. Rent negotiable. Call 531-3609 or 546-2477.

FOR SALE: Bar fridge in great condition for $100. Call 531-0932.

HELP WANTED
HELEN TUFTS TUTORIAL/FRIENDSHIP PROGRAM, which offers one-on-one help and support to children from disadvantaged families, is looking for tutors and supervisors for 1999-2000. If you want to volunteer, please contact Rosalind Malcolm at 549-2778. We need your organizational and human relations skills! This challenging and rewarding community experience will enhance your resume and change your life!

GET INVOLVED! Volunteers needed for the AMS Infobank starting September. We're getting a head start on recruitment. If you're interested in some GOOD TIMES at the Infobank, contact Shawn at 547-6324 or Cindy at 546-5658.

INTERESTED IN CONTRIBUTING TO THE FEMINIST REVIEW? Too busy with exams to think about next year? No worries! We will be looking for editors for the Feminist Review in September. If you're interested and want more info, please e-mail Laura at ELMM@qlink.queensu.ca or stop by the AMS Social Issues Commission.

WANTED
WANTED: Your old desks, dressers, chairs, lamps, etc. Call me before you toss them out! 376-6949.

DRUMMER WANTED: itching to tap the skins? You've come to the right place. We need a drummer. So, if you're up for it give 549-3565 a call. Own kit is a must!

TWO HOUSEMATES WANTED: To share big, bright 5 bedroom house. Two full baths, large kitchen, free parking, laundry included. 10 minute walk to campus. $270 plus utilities. Call Anita at 531-4812.

WANTED: HOUSEMATES: preferably upper year students, female, non-smoking to share newly-renovated house on Brock Street. Rent $270 plus utilities. Cable included. QUEEN'S AT HOME installed. Call 544-3784.

LOST AND FOUND
LOST: My glasses, somewhere between Botteral Hall and Victoria Hall. I really need them to study for exams. If you have found them please call me at 547-0348.

LOST: Adark grey PENTAX camera in a black bag at Colour Night, with 36 exposure film in it. If found please call Steph at 531-4623 or e-mail at 7jsk...

LOST: Matteo Maas black suit jacket lost at ArtSci '99 formal. If found please contact Craig at 544-7114.

LOST: Fuji D3-190 zoom lens camera. Lost at ArtSci formal. If found please call 545-1033 or email at 4mnc2@qlink.

LOST: A black Olympus camera in a little black bag, March 6th the night of the ArtSci formal. Please call Julie at 530-3841.

FOUND: Sweater found in Ellis Auditorium Monday March 8th after the Sue Johanson lecture. Call 531-9257 to claim.

FOUND: A camera and carrying case in a cab the night of the ArtSci Formal (March 6th). Please call 533-7981 to identify.

FOUND: At the ArtSci Formal, non-disposable camera. Contact 4eal to identify.

PERSONALS
ULTRA-VIOLET IS HIRING: Would you like to be involved with Ultra-Violet magazine next year? UV is looking for creative, dynamic and enthusiastic individuals to fill the following positions: editorial board members (6), art director, layout designer, CD producer, business manager, and events coordinator. Applications are available outside of the Union Gallery in Stauffer Library and are due by 4 p.m. on Wednesday April 14. For more information, e-mail Fiona Stevenson at 6lms@qlink.queensu.ca or uv@www.ams.queensu.ca

PRIVATE ADOPTION - Fun loving, childless professional couple wish to adopt. If you are pregnant and considering adoption, please give us a call after 8:30 p.m. at 1 800 844-8668.

HEY DOC! Congrats to Jose Soltes on being accepted to two medical schools (so far!) Love Scrappy and Jeanette.

196 UNIVERSITY: To Leslie, Sue, and Karen, who put up with all my antics this year. Thanks for the cra-azy year. YOU GUYS ARE THE BEST! Love, The "Sensitive" Housemate.

LINZ: CONGRATULATIONS! Much more can I say? You will be the most beautiful bride ever.

DAWN & LINZ: Thanks for putting up with all my crazy hours and ideas this year, you've been the best housemates I could ever ask for, and even better friends. I love you both. Hugs, T

EVERYONE AT THE J: Thank you for being my (somewhat dysfunctional) family this year. We've laughed, cried, yelled and sung, and it has been more wonderful than I could have ever imagined. I love you all very much and will miss you. May your travels be light and your days beautiful. Luv, Tara

KEITH & LAURA: I can't believe we've made it! You two are such special people. Thank you for living this crazy time with me and supporting me the whole way. You will always have a corner of my heart all to yourselves, and a couch to sleep on, wherever I end up. You are inspiring. Love, Tara

TARA: It's been a great year, and we will miss your company and laughter! Best of luck with your future endeavors! Love, Laura and the Chipnut Guy

THE JOURNAL

She wouldn't forget to order a subscription for Volume 127 of The Queen's Journal.

Are you going to let an elephant get the better of you?

Whether you are a Queen's parent, a student, an alum, or just an interested in the goings-on at Queen's, order NOW to ensure prompt deliver of all the issues of The Journal for the 1999-2000 year. Keep up on the politics, research, sports activities and entertainment that makes Queen's what it is.

Just cut out the form below and send it to 272 Earl St., Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8. Call Gabe at (613) 533-2800 if you have any questions or concerns. If you are already a regular subscriber to The Journal, you should still fill out the form below in order to ensure that your subscription is renewed.

Name: _____ First: _____
Last: _____
Address: _____
Street: _____ Apt.: _____ City: _____
Prov.: _____
Postal Code: _____

How many subscriptions: _____
Method of payment: $55 + GST per subscription per year
 Check one please.  Cheque  Money order  Cash

And time is running out... don't miss your chance to own a piece of

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Order yours by April 9 to avoid disappointment.

Own a piece of Queen's history

ARISTA/BMG RECORDING ARTIST
DEBORAH COX

Kickin'

ROOTS KINGSTON

229 Princess Street 546-7668

Kingston Symphony Association
Glen 98
99

APRIL 16TH
8:00 PM
GRANT HALL

TAFELMUSIK BAROQUE ORCHESTRA
JEANNE LAMON leader THOMAS MÜLLER, horn
Haydn: Symphony No. 59 in A Major, "Fire"
Mozart: Horn Concerto No. 4 in E-flat Major, KV. 495
Telemann: Abster Overture

Sponsored by: LESLON Media Sponsors: 1380
TICKETS CALL GRAND THEATRE 530-2050
FOR STUDENT RUSH TICKETS CALL THE GRAND THEATRE FOR DETAILS

If you can keep your head when all about you
Are losing theirs and blaming it on you;
If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you,
But make allowance for their doubting too;
If you can wait and not be tired by waiting,
Or being lied about don't deal in lies,
Or being hated don't give way to hating,
And yet don't look too good, nor talk too wise:

If you can dream — and not make dreams your master;
If you can think — and not make thoughts your aim;
If you can meet with Triumph and Disaster
And treat those two imposters just the same;
If you can bear to hear the truth you've spoken
Twisted by knaves to make a trap for fools,
Or watch the things you gave your life to, broken,
And stoop and build 'em up with worn-out tools:

If you can make one heap of all your winnings
And risk it on one turn of pitch-and-toss,
And lose, and start again at your beginnings
And never breath a word about your loss;
If you can force your heart and nerve and sinew
To serve your turn long after they are gone,
And so hold on when there is nothing in you
Except the Will which says to them: "Hold on!"

If you can talk with crowds and keep your virtue,
Or walk with Kings — nor lose the common touch,
If neither foes nor loving friends can hurt you,
If all men count with you, but none too much;
If you can fill the unforlorn minute
With sixty seconds' worth of distance run,
Yours is the Earth and everything that's in it,
And — which is more — you'll be a Man, my son.

Rudyard Kipling

Thank you to all the readers, writers, contributors, volunteers, dreamers and singers that have made Volume 126 what it is. Without you, The Journal would be nothing.

The Journal would like to invite all contributors to the Year-End Banquet, this Sunday, April 11 at 8:30 p.m. at Chez Piggy.

Come celebrate Volume 126 with us!

Attention all Arts & Science Grads!

Studio Q Now Has
Formal Videos On Sale

Only $5

WE ALSO HAVE:
FROSH WEEK '98 VIDEOS $10
ENG FROSH '98 VIDEOS $10

Call 548-3844 for details, ask for Gabe

Write • Edit • Design • Learn join us for the Journal's 127th year

There are several editorial and business positions still available with The Journal 1999-2000. Here's your change to show your stuff, contribute to a great paper, gain invaluable experience and even earn a couple of dollars!

Editorial board positions:

- Features Editor
- Supplements Editor
- Assistant A&E Editor

Interested?

Business positions: Please call Mark Fucella at 533-6711

Editorial positions: Sarah Crosbie would love to speak with you at 533-2800

Or: E-mail us at journal@post.queensu.ca for more information

Business staff positions:

- Advertising Manager
- Advertising Designers
- Systems Manager
- Sales Representatives
- House cleaners

Open Flow: One Approach

TO WRITE SUCCESSFULLY without a point. To guarantee fulfillment of the initial idea, that being mutual (reader and author) satisfaction with no overriding idea except of course for the first. To write believing that surprise and novelty is better than expectation, and that piecing together is more engaging than gazing at someone else's best attempt at a whole. To offer the pieces without the anxiety of anticipated judgement, and without protesting accountability. To resist reshaping ideas so that they might coordinate, complement or alter each other. To accept the fact that open, easy, improvised exchange is rarely if ever the manner of response, whether criticism or praise, but to remain on this level regardless. To write knowing that although each idea need be sensible, the only sense required of the whole is the ready apperency of a singular consciousness.

I argue that access to this mode of exchange ought not to be restricted to private diary entries, idle thoughts, drunken rants and other relatively inaccessible outlets. So long as the mind is capable and the ideas are absorbing, this form is ideal. I believe it is currently not used in mass print because it exposes the author to the reader, rendering both uncomfortable. It is a form with very few accepted particulars or accustomed boundaries. And as the author has no approved structure of discourse to rely on other than his or her personal, unique train of thought, the approach is intimidating.

For example, there ought not to be a linguistic requirement ordering a link between the thought "The good do not die young, the cliché exists because their deaths are the most regretful" and "They don't live long, those who lose sight of themselves with age and become irritable, stressed and at odds with their environment. As evidence: individuals over the age of 90 because of the "necessity" of lineation and pattern. But lineation and pattern is only for the benefit of the expectant reader. And if this type of writing - when used effectively - was deemed an acceptable mode of expression, the reader would undoubtedly adjust. The reader would cease to look for preamble, singular source.

The difference between this method and stream of consciousness writing is that the writer exerts control in regards to rationality and grammar, using only those ideas that have objective sense, and presenting them straightforward. Consider it this way. Someone has said that the most beautiful thing in the world is an arbitrary arrangement of objects selected at random. If sensible ideas are the objects and the writer's consciousness is the selector, then the resulting text — at least in one great thinker's mind — has implicit beauty. Therefore, while writers always ought to experiment with forms of communication that deviate from normative discourse, I urge them to explore this area in particular thoroughly, and to get their work published.

Ken Butland is done with this section and He's free as a bird! He feels as light as a feather! But unbeknownst to him he's gonna end up stuffed into a tiny cubicle this summer!
Irony, Atlantis-Style!

rarely fit this description." These are two valid ideas that deserve communicating, but under what umbrella? Aside from dealing with death, they have nothing in common. It is inappropriate to dispose of a writer's material only because it is fragmented. Regardless, no writer would even consider this method of writing capitulation, digression; instead, he or she would consider each individual thought on its own. He or she would see a piece of writing not as a contrived whole composed of interconnecting pieces, but as an arbitrary whole composed of non-related, self-standing pieces. It would be perceived as a whole only because of its

Congratulations to Jennie Thomson and Kathryn Contois, who solved the Building Contest Puzzle.

The phrase was: "DON'T SMOKE CRACK." They will receive a big stand-up cardboard cutout of Crockle, the Rice Krispies elf. Thanks to everyone else who entered, but you all fucked up, so they won. Sorry.

Thanks to Melissa Farmer(x2), George Reinblatt (x2), Bob McGill (x3), Adam Prosser(x2), Joseph Brean, Megan Webster, Gillian White, Greg Coughlin, Elizabeth Frogley, John Merritt, Sarah LeMay(x10), Jay Pinkerton, Danush Viswanathan, George Pfaff, Kevin Butler, Sean Springer, Stefan Murray, Keith Gerein, Jesse Craig Bellinger, Neil Young and anyone else I've missed for filling this year's space with lots of big and little words. Look out Surface, cause next year I'm gonna rearrange your face from the inside... but in a nice way.

You may think that it isn't worthwhile to make pizza from scratch when you can order one, but this is way better than any of the pizza they will serve you in Kingston restaurants. This recipe is not as hard as it looks, so don't be freaked out by the fact that you have to let the dough rise. Also, don't be scared off by my liberal use of olive oil in recipes either - olive oil is classified "Omega 3" fat, or a "good" fat, if you will. So don't worry about your diet, which, incidentally, you don't need to be on if you eat REAL food.

- For the dough:
- 2 cups all purpose flour
  - 1 envelope quick-rise dry yeast
  - 2/3 cup warm water
  - 1 tsp. salt
  - 1/2 tsp. sugar
  - Olive oil
- For the topping:

- 1/2 can tomato paste
- 1 tsp. dried oregano
- 1/4 cup chopped fresh or 1 tsp. dried basil
- 1/2 tsp. salt
- 1/2 tsp. black pepper
- 2 tbsp. olive oil
- 4 tbsp. water
- 1/2 cup sliced black or green olives
- 1 Spanish onion, chopped
- 1 small jar marinated artichoke hearts, drained
- 3/4 cup grated mozzarella cheese
- 1/4 cup grated parmesan cheese or a 2 inch cube of feta crumbled

1. Dissolve the yeast and sugar in the warm water: when it foams lightly on top (it takes 2 minutes), it is ready to use.
2. Combine the flour and salt in a large bowl. Make a well in the centre of the flour and pour in the yeast mixture. Stir until a dough is formed.
3. Knead the dough on a clean, lightly floured surface for 3 minutes. Shape into a ball and rub the exterior with olive oil. Place in a clean bowl, cover with a clean tea towel and place in a warm spot (on top of the fridge or near a heating vent) to rise for thirty minutes or until doubled in size.
4. Oil a large pizza pan and stretch the dough out very thinly on it, taking care not to rip it.
5. Combine the tomato paste, olive oil, salt, pepper, and herbs. Spread over dough.
6. Top with vegetables, followed by cheeses.
7. Bake at 400 F for about 20 minutes or until the bottom of the pizza is browned and the cheese is bubbling.

*Makes 1 large thin crust pizza.

Sarah LeMay finds a good appetite attractive! Personally, I find a good cook attractive!! —ed.

THE LAST WORDS

IT'S 4:12 A.M. and I can feel the mother of all headaches start to press into my skull. Inside the Journal House everything is dark and quiet. In a few hours Gabe will arrive to find last night's pizza boxes on her desk. A little while later, sleep-deprived editors will begin to drag themselves through the door, one by one. Before you know it, 272 Earl Street will be a virtual madhouse. As day rages on, a frenetic pace of activity will build, accompanied by flurries of confusion and stress. For one last time, this year's Journal staff will struggle to put our issue before deadline.

But right now I'm alone with my headache and the early morning silence, staring into a blank computer screen. The task before me is daunting and I'm in need of inspiration.

With only 500 words to work with, I'm supposed to summarize all the dreams, accomplishments and personalities that made The Queen's Journal what it was this year. And I have to do this with the knowledge that whatever I come up with will be the final words I will ever write for The Journal, the place that my life has revolved around for the better part of four years.

The pressure is getting to me, so instead of writing, I get up from my desk and go for a walk. It's a short walk, just a few steps, into the lounge, my favourite room in the house.

The wide range of emotions that define The Journal are experienced in the lounge. The couches, which are often used as beds, speak to the exhaustion that comes with the late nights. The cushions are the weapons in the fights that give much needed relief from stress. Our ed board meetings are held in here — meetings that feature both heated debate and the camaraderie of being on a team.

But ultimately what makes this room

my favourite are the volumes of past Journals stacked in the bookcase against the wall. These large, dense books are the only expanded record of the toil and emotion expended at The Journal over many years. Each time one looks at them it's hard not to feel a sense of history and pride, like you're part of something special and enduring.

And it's staring at these volumes, in the waning hours before dawn, when I realize why I have no drive to write these final words. It's because I'm alone. All year, the staff of the Journal, the people I see everyday, have been my inspiration. I have fed off them, their determination, their adventurousness and their resilience. Without them I am lost.

By the time this issue is finished, volume 126 will contain approximately 8,000,000 words of copy on 1,100 pages over 40 issues, a substantial addition to the volumes in the bookcase. These numbers can be counted. What is incalculable is the talent, energy and dedication required to produce those words and pages twice a week throughout the school year.

Each issue, the staff of this newspaper — from the sales reps and ads designers to the photographers and section editors — has astounded me. This has not been an easy year. Adversity has visited our doorstep frequently, but instead of wilting, this year's group has grown, not only as journalists, but as people. Tara and I have had to scramble to keep up.

To my Journal friends, thank you for making this year an exceptional one. I know we all share a sense of pride in our work; it's the feeling that comes from knowing we've done something extraordinary. For my experiences with you, I am eternally grateful.

Keith Gerein

Co-editor-in-chief, 1998-1999

IT HAS COME TO A TIME (once again, perhaps?) that my words are woefully inadequate. There is very little I can say that will express the incalculable debt of love and gratitude I feel to this place — and what little I may come up with will most likely run towards the plagiaristic. I have, after all, spent the last week and a half reading the last words of the various editors-in-chief who came before me.

Instead, I find myself, after hours of agonizing over the perfect focus, the perfect frame, the perfect last words, lost in laughter with my fellow editors on the couches at 272 Earl St. It has reached that giggly time of night. Some of us have essays to write. Some of us have midterms (hopefully not) fail. But we have spent the past half an hour enthralled by the history of this wonderful institution — its struggles, its triumphs, its failures — talking in quick bursts about what it means to be part of The Queen's Journal.

Ultimately, I can say nothing that will top the perfection of this very moment. It is the end of the last issue that I will have the honour of working on. I have spent a year in a state of near-constant joy and torture over my involvement with this place. I have learned the true meaning of responsibility, and I have learned to trust my principles and the principles of those I respect and care for.

Overall, it has been a beautifully painful year, filled with personal challenges, mistakes and the occasional technological disaster. I have watched my talented and dedicated colleagues, the editors and business staff of The Queen's Journal, overcome seemingly insurmountable obstacles time and time again. From the Homecoming power outage to the loss of editor after editor, from the total server crash to the near-daily production of extras, the people that make The Journal what it is have pulled through with only the occasional grumble.

From you, my friends, I have learned courage, leadership and strength. Because of you, and because of what this place is, I have been infused with a love of journalism so strong that even a solid year of editing, layout and ad design (especially at odd hours of the morning) have failed to shake it loose. You have been my inspiration and my guide, no matter how agonizing the journey, no matter how many times I fell down or failed (and there were more times than I would like, I admit), no matter how many times I simply wanted to leave it all behind me but was prevented by simple stubbornness.

Because of you, and my blessed time here at The Journal (blessed because so few have the opportunity to experience it as did Keith and I), I have been able to live closer to my dreams.

Indeed, there is a framed poem that hung on the wall in my office this year that expresses those dreams concisely. Looking it over for one last time, I am struck by how closely my time here at The Journal has mirrored the challenging course set in its stanzas. That poem, "If" by Rudyard Kipling, has kept me sane this year, reminding me when I falter of what I'm striving towards (and I even managed to sneak it in this issue — check out page 42!)

That said, without the tireless efforts of the editors, business staff and contributors at The Journal, "If" would simply have remained a poem to me, rather than a life's lesson lived.

Thank you all for being a part of this journey of growth with me. Thank you especially to the two dear friends of my heart — my ofr referred to "partners in crime," Keith and Laura.

I hope that all of you have enjoyed volume 126 of The Queen's Journal. I know I have.

Sam Mansbridge

Co-editor-in-chief, 1998-1999

The Queen's Journal Editorial Board and Business Staff 1998-1999

Back Row: James Terjanian, Fiona Stevenson, Paul Heister, Stefan Murray, Dan Rowe, Sarah Crosbie, John Bowman, Janice Chan, Claudia Kraft, Andrew Cooke
 Middle Row: Mark Fucella, Jocelyn Laporte, Ken Butland, Adam Kaminsky, Renée Huang, Shawn Brimley, Tara Mansbridge, Rob MacNeil, Lilian Kim, Rachelle Villanueva, Annie Ge
 Front Row (floor): Alex Kronby, Laura MacInnis, Sean Springer, Keith Gerein, Sue Armstrong, Craig Thomas MIA's: Jesse Craig Bellringer, Katherine Colbourn, Marco Lui

1998-1999

THE JOURNAL

Changing attitudes

Good vibr

A wild ride for Gaels basketball

Rum, scotch, A short tour of Kins

Year In Review

They're baaack

THE JOURNAL

ASKING DEEP QUESTIONS

REGARDLESS I FEEL THE STUDENT WE

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

Blue Sundays

Midtown Kingston's new House of Blues

ROCK N' PAW

kill John Lennon?

ing to crucify me

ay things are going,

FEATURES

Assault

coming by in green o Day.

A show or concert will t ng much attention to the s

126

News

In Review

Alignment debate OUSA question fails

OVER THE PAST FEW YEARS, the fulcrum of debate at AMS Assembly, and even higher decision making bodies such as Senate and Board of Trustees, has been the controversial subject of tuition. This year has been the exception. It seems as though one of the more heated debates concerning student representation, occurred during October and November, when student leaders considered joining an external student lobbying organization.

The two choices being considered were the Canadian Federation of Students (Ontario) and the Ontario Undergraduate Student Alliance. The pretext for joining an external lobbying group was that student leaders at Queen's have found it increasingly difficult to lobby and represent student interests with little support.

"We have tried as hard as we can to bring pan-university concerns to the government," said Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner on October 16, 1998, "[but] going out on our own really doesn't do that much."

However, the real controversy over the alignment question came during the October 15 meeting of AMS Assembly, in which the AMS Executive proposed to ask students during the fall referendum, whether they favour alignment with OUSA, as a way to strengthen lobbying efforts. After two hours of intense debate, the motion failed by a count of 16 in favour and 18 opposed. The real controversy lay in a motion by Jascha Jabes, ASUS representative to the AMS, for the motion to be decided by a secret ballot. Whether or not a secret ballot was necessary, and the circumstances which necessitate a secret ballot, have been subjects of debate in AMS Assembly all year long.

Nevertheless, the AMS Executive forced the question to referendum by collecting 600 student signatures. On November 13, 1998, the OUSA question failed, with 45.5 per cent of students in favour of joining OUSA, and 50.5 per cent opposed.

"This is the end of that, as they say," said Tom Stanley, AMS president. As academic affairs commissioner in 1997-98, Stanley had been working on external representation issues for 18 months prior to the OUSA controversy. "I guess I'm disappointed. I feel that OUSA would have made Queen's student's voice more effective," said Stanley. "Some broad goals we will never be able to achieve in splintered groups."

However, the alignment debate is far from over. The newly elected AMS executive stated in their campaign flyer, "We will not go at it alone!" It seems as though debates on external alignment will find a venue next year as well.

Queen's law under fire

THE QUEEN'S LAW SCHOOL has seen its share of highs and lows this year. In October, several law students were angered by an e-mail sent by the Dean of Law to the Faculty's Career Planning and Placement Officer. The e-mail was accidentally sent to the law listserv and referred to two students seeking articling placement. Harvison Young apologized for unintentionally sending the e-mail to the Faculty's listserv, which many students believed showed preferential endorsement of two law students.

The Law school came under further fire in January, when Canadian Lawyer gave Queen's Faculty of Law a B- rating, placing the school second last in the magazine's 1999 Law Schools Report Card. Out of 19 schools evaluated by this criteria, Queen's holds 18th place. Only the University of British Columbia finished lower. Faculty and students denied that Queen's deserved the harsh criticism, citing initiatives to enrich the faculty.

A few months later, in March, a document found in the temp file of a law library computer upset many law students and attracted the attention of both faculty and the Law Students' Society. The document, which appeared to be a series of letters addressed to individuals at a few law firms, disclosed personal information about several second- and third-year law students, including phone numbers, e-mail addresses, academic performance and attractiveness. Some of the comments beside the female students listed in the document included "very, very attractive," "hottie," "rather attractive," and "married (oh well!)." According to Don Stewart, associate dean of law, the third-year male student who prepared the document has since come forth and apologized.

CMM strife

Elected, disqualified, tried, survived

HOURS AFTER THE HORMAN-MORI-MINNS team captured 44.7 per cent of the vote in this year's AMS executive elections, questions about the winners' campaign expenses were being raised. On the morning following the election, the Krashinsky-Gay-Beltzner team contested the team's campaign finance report to the Chief Electoral Officer.

In a ruling released 24 hours after the team's victory, the CEO disqualified the team for exceeding the campaign expense limit. The CEO ruled that a cellular phone rented by the team's campaign manager was a campaign expense and when added to the team's other expenses, put them over the $400 spending limit.

A six-member Judicial Committee met with the team the next day to appeal the CEO's decision.

Following three hours of deliberation, the committee ruled to charge the team the maximum allowable fine of $500 and institute a re-vote of the original three candidate teams.

The CMM team prepared a written appeal of the Judicial Committee's ruling, stating "we remain confident that we at no time violated AMS elections policy."

CMM appealed the ruling to the Constitutional Appeals Tribunal, which was formed at the February 11 AMS Assembly meeting. In a ruling released seven days after the team's election, the CAT exonerated CMM of any wrongdoing and overruled the fine and re-vote instituted by the Judicial Committee. The CAT's decision was final and not subject to appeal. In the Tribunal's written ruling, members recommended that the AMS elections policy be clarified.

A Gael force homecoming

A HEAVY STORM RIPPED through Kingston on the Saturday of Homecoming weekend, costing the AMS pubs an estimated $11,000 in revenue. Hundreds of patrons at the QP and Alfies were plunged into darkness around 9 p.m., as 100km/h winds knocked out power all over Kingston.

Battling the bills

Professional tuition costs soar

STUDENTS ENROLLED IN PROFESSIONAL programs at Queen's fought the battle against tuition hikes on several fronts this year.

Last spring the Ontario government deregulated tuition for both medical and law programs at Ontario Universities, which removed the ceiling from tuition hikes and led to several dramatic tuition increases. At a Board of Trustees meeting on May 8, a vote of 18-2 passed a motion to increase law tuition by 54.9 per cent and medical tuition by 124.1 per cent.

An increased number of applications for bursaries and OSAP were received from Queen's medical students this year, to offset their rising tuition costs. However, it was later reported that bursary availability was poor.

On February 2, 120 Queen's medical students joined other students at Queen's Park in Toronto in a protest against medical tuition hikes and poor loan accessibility.

Other professional programs at Queen's faced similar deregulation problems this year.

In October, engineering students were targeted for deregulation as part of a new provincial government plan to increase overall university funding and increase student enrolment in highly technical fields. Queen's engineering students were surveyed that month about the province wide Access To Opportunities Program.

The survey offered students an opportunity to express their views on deregulation, the quality of their education and increasing tuition costs. In March, Tom Harris, dean of the Faculty of Applied Science, sent an e-mail to all engineering students informing them of his recommendation that engineering tuition be increased by 20 per cent. He reasoned that the tuition increase would ensure Queen's remained among the leading engineering schools by improving their facilities, staff and programs. By the end of the month, Senate had passed Principal Bill Leggett's motion to increase Applied Science tuition by 29.7 per cent over current program costs.

At the same Senate meeting, the Queen's commerce program joined the ranks of the deregulated with a motion that will increase tuition for students entering their second year of a commerce program by 40.8 per cent.

SUMMER TERM

14 new power doors were installed across campus this summer to improve physical accessibility. The initiative was a joint venture between the University and the AMS Accessibility Task Force.

This summer the Queen's Pub was the recipient of a $160,000 expansion and renovation, resulting in a pub with more space, more options and a larger food menu. The pub has enjoyed a successful year; however, the pub's location has been problematic. The pub is located underneath a floor of graduate residences, and twice this year has had to close as the result of noise complaints. Plans for JDUC renovation include phasing out the graduate residences, so noise complaints may not be a problem for future patrons of the QP.

FALL TERM

The AMS introduces a services card intended to reward frequent users and encourage student business stays on campus.

Robert Burke, Sci '99, and a student from Vancouver Film School, market Legend of the Greasepole, the CD-ROM game they designed around the infamous Engineering Orientation Week.

Campus Security and the AMS implement glassed-in safety notice boards in local laundromats, groceries and convenience stores off campus to inform students about alerts and recent security incidents.

Queen's considers offering gender neutral degree options.

An official policy is introduced at the International Study Centre that prohibits personal relationships between staff and first year students.

WINTER TERM

The Faculty of Arts and Science proposes to reduce the number of courses for a Queen's degree from 19 to 17.

Beginning in April 1999, students writing exams without their Queen's student card will pay a $15 fine.

After months of preparation and planning, Queen's Information Technology Services successfully introduced a new phone number and five-digit internal dialing system. The new telephone exchange, 533, was designed to simplify the dialing for students, staff and external callers. The first three digits of all Queen's phone numbers were changed from 545 to 533, creating increased accessibility and efficiency of the Queen's phone system.

The AMS proposes to introduce an opt-outable dental plan. The plan was later passed at spring referendum by a margin of 63.9 per cent.

The Municipal Affairs Commission develops the AMS Property Standards Task Force to improve living standards in the student housing area.

The Faculty of Education announces the addition of a second associate dean. The new position was filled by Don Campbell.

The Board of Directors strategic planning committee initiates a yearly review policy for AMS services. Each year at mid-year a committee will be selected to review two of the AMS services. This year the UBS and Alfie's were selected.

Queen's investigates the possibility of integrating CD-ROM textbooks and Internet courses into the curriculum.

Adaptive technology labs in Queen's libraries are improved with the addition of specialized computer equipment.

The UBS Exchange becomes an official agent of Ticketmaster, providing a new service for students on campus.

Queen's School of Business announces its interest in taking possession of the Frontenac County Courthouse.

Psychology professor John Berry develops a new intercultural relations course at Queen's, IDIS 307.

The Physical Education Centre accommodates the needs of a transgendered individual at Queen's.

The AMS executive recommends the creation of a new full-time, year-long external marketing director position to generate all AMS advertising and sponsorship, and centralize advertising initiatives for AMS services and groups.

In Memorium

- Julian Michael Szeicz
- Mark Wilson
- Donald Swainson
- Arthur L. Mandell
- Sam Davis
- Angeline Melissa Hook

Sadly missed by the Queen's community...

New Initiatives

AMS antics in review...

October, 1998

March 12, 1999

Who's Where/What's Next editor Jason Teske was fired by the AMS in October because he was not enroled as a Queen's student. His termination appeal was later rejected by the Board of Directors.

After much debate, a motion to propose alignment with Ontario University Students Association in the fall referendum was rejected by AMS Assembly by a vote of 16 in favour and 18 opposed.

January 15, 1999

March 19, 1999

At their mid-year review, the AMS predicted they would make a $170,000 year end surplus, a substantially higher number than their original estimate of a $32,683 loss. The increase was attributed to a combination of increased undergraduate enrollment, a health plan surplus and high AMS service performance.

The AMS Media and Services Director Owen Minns issued a memo challenging Studio Q's proceedings in the election of Bart Bonikowski and Peter Carr as next year's Co-Executive Producers. The memo challenged Studio Q's electoral process, citing that they failed to comply with three AMS corporate bylaws in their selection of a producer. The memo claims that no

February 5, 1999

Some on-campus groups and student run organizations reveal that on more than one occasion this year, they have been denied the opportunity to fund raise at Alfie's Pub due to double-booked events.

A delay in the production of two sets of Orientation Week videos have engineering students at grievance with Studio Q. Last year the videos were in distribution in mid-October; however, Con-Ed and ArtSci videos were just released and Applied Science videos are still in production.

voting list of eligible voters was ever compiled, that the Chief Returning Officer of the AMS was never asked to conduct the election and that no All-Candidates Meeting was ever held.

February 12, 1999

On the afternoon of March 17, JDUC Director Jack Sinnott approached Queen's Pub Assistant Manager Mark Soules and informed him that the pub was to be closed until further notice. The decision was made jointly by Crawford and Sinnott, due to a perceived violation of an agreement concerning the grad residences and pub noise. The agreement, created to address concerns brought by grad students about noise levels, limits live entertainment to Friday and Saturday nights. There was a band playing in the pub on Wednesday afternoon as a part of St. Patrick's Day celebrations. Controversy arose after no effort was made to contact either the AMS President or Services Director before the decision to close the pub was made. The Vice-President (Operations) Gord Moodie received only one voice message instructing him to call Sinnott. At its next meeting, AMS Assembly unanimously passed a motion to draft and send a letter to the Dean of Student Affairs expressing its anger over the two-day closure of the Queen's Pub.

Safe and Sound?

Security incidents in and around Queen's campus

Summer

On May 9, two Walkhome staff and a patron were shaken when a man who was verbally harassing the group, got into his car and tried to run them over. The group called police but were left alone for a number of minutes, and felt stranded.

A Queen's staff member became a victim of assault and attempted abduction while walking across campus to her late-night custodial shift one night last May. A man asked her for directions, and followed her into a building, grabbed her and attempted to drag her into her car. She managed to break free and the assailant ran away. This was the first of many assaults that occurred this year.

Fall

On October 3, 1998, a female student was assaulted while walking along University Avenue, near Richardson and Jeffery Hall. The victim managed to escape her assailant. This was the second time in two years a woman was assaulted near this area.

These university-area incidents involving assault or attempted assault in the span of two weeks concerned Kingston Police and Campus Security. In the first two incidents, female students were physically handled by male assailants. The third incident occurred on Lower Albert Street. Another incident on October 13 occurred on the west side of Clark Hall Pub when a female student was grabbed from behind by a male assailant.

Winter

Counterfeit five and ten dollar bills were found circulating on campus. They were used for purchases at the sidewalk Cafe in the JDUC and Jean Royce Hall on West Campus.

A first year Queen's student suffered from minor head injuries after being struck by a city bus. The woman was forced to walk on the road because of large amounts of snow blocking the sidewalk.

On February 1, two suspicious males were seen wandering in the Biosciences complex and in Miller Hall. One of the males was carrying a scribe, a sharp metal probe with a wooden handle, which is used in biology experiments. A pair of the males, including the scribe, were then seen the next evening in the Biosciences complex. The males were described as being Caucasian, one as 16-18 years old, 5'10" with short black hair, and the other as 18-20 years old, 6' with reddish hair.

On the evening of February 7, a woman was assaulted in the 300 block area of Johnson Street, near the intersection with Division Street. The woman was parking her car in the lot behind her apartment. When she opened the car door she heard a noise and was then dragged out of her car and thrown to the ground. The woman managed to escape by kicking the man and fled to her apartment where she contacted the police. The perpetrator was described as heavy set and wearing a ball cap.

On February 11, at approximately 1 a.m., a woman was assaulted on Queen's campus. The woman was walking outside on the north side of McNeill house when she was grabbed from behind by two male assailants, who pressed a sharp object against her back, covered her mouth and led her north on Lower Albert Street to Queen's Crescent. The woman managed to escape after the males threw her to the ground and fled, running west towards Collingwood Street. The assailants were described as approximately 10 years old and one was reported to be wearing jeans.

On February 17, a female student was washing her hands in Stauffer library, when a man repeatedly peered through the door to the washroom, and backed out when she noticed him. The woman also noticed the male in the hallway after leaving the washroom. The woman immediately reported the incident to the Stauffer staff who advised her that the male was most likely a custodian waiting to clean the washroom. However, when the woman was leaving Stauffer she noticed the man again and it appeared that he was trying to follow her. The woman went into the JDUC and he followed her. Inside, the woman was able to hide around a corner and the man passed by without noticing her. She immediately contacted Campus Security. The man was described as being in his late thirties to early forties, with dark brown hair and thick glasses. He has a stocky build and pale skin. He was wearing a mid-thigh length navy blue coat, with khaki pants.

A victim of sexual assault as a result of drug use reported her case to Campus Security. The student had been drinking with friends at a popular "hub" area establishment. Later in the evening, she met a male acquaintance who walked her home. The woman passed out shortly after reaching her residence and awoke to find herself being sexually assaulted by the man who walked her home. She suffered partial amnesia but did not have any symptoms of a hangover the next day.

On Thursday, March 11, a second-year Queen's student was charged with one count of possession of child pornography. He is set to appear in court on April 20 to enter a plea. University officials could only reveal that the charge related to child pornography and computer systems.

Shortly after midnight on March 30, two third-year Queen's students, one male and one female, were threatened at gunpoint, and subsequently abducted and robbed by two people wearing balaclavas. The suspects are described as one male and possibly one female. One of them had a small build and long hair. Both wore masks over their faces.

At about 8 p.m. on March 22, Kingston police received a report of a man looking through venetian blinds on the ground floor bedroom window of a house on Johnson Street between Albert and Frontenac Streets. The suspect is white, very tall, muscular, in his early twenties, with buzz cut short brown hair, wearing a green fleece jacket and blue jeans. Another incident involved a man who would allegedly enter a number of houses in the student housing area unannounced. Upon being confronted by tenants, the man would say he was looking for a friend. This incident led to occupants in a house on Aberdeen being robbed of some personal possessions.

The last word...

"I don't know if you've ever had a frappuccino, but it's a drink with a big chunk of ice that makes a lot of noise." — Tom Stanley, AMS president commenting on the viability of Starbucks in Stauffer.

"What the mugger did was stupid, trying to pull that off in daylight, in the middle of Princess, with thousands of fresh on patrol." — First-year students Shelley Rogers and Jeremy Wilson, who apprehended a mugger outside of The Gap on Princess Street during Orientation Week.

"The Student Village? What would that make us — the Village People? I get to be the cowboy." — George Reinblatt, Arts '99, on the AMS's official move to rename the student ghetto.

"It's a very crucial time for [students]. We tell them that they can always phone home, that's their safety net. Right now, that safety net has got a very big hole in it." — Laura Green, Arts '99 and resident don in Victoria Hall on the overload of the university phone system in September 1998.

"Regardless of if they are employing me, I'm going to see this publication through until it's in the hands of the students." — Jason Teshe, former WW/WN layout and design editor.

"I feel that OUSA would have made Queen's students' voice more effective. Some broad goals we will never be able to achieve in splintered groups." — Tom Stanley, AMS president, reacting to students' rejection of alignment with OUSA in the fall referendum.

"We are the furthest, most extreme example of manipulation of the body. Our lives are recovered by science... we are thieves of technology." — Max Valerio, transgendered speaker.

"[My dad] was pretty proud and reminded me what a serious commitment it was and not to neglect my school work." — Mike Kealy, newly-elected Rector.

"The people hiring are much more sophisticated in evaluating the quality of the students coming to them than just looking at a Maclean's ranking." — Principal Bill Leggett, responding to Queen's drop in overall ranking in Maclean's magazine.

"Students are much more interested in the quality of teaching, rather than the size of their classes." — Keith Stewart, Engineering Society president regarding deregulation and results of the EngSoc survey.

"The steam was so hot that it had lifted the colour out of the tiles... there were hundreds of gallons of water within the building," he said. "It was quite a mess." — Campus Security Supervisor Jason Pullman on damage from burst pipes in Gordon-Brockington over December holidays.

"Everyone was just hanging out at the bar waiting for the power to come back. It was pitch black and there was one little flashlight hanging from the glasses rack." — Jackie Leggett, Queen's Pub employee, describing the atmosphere at the pub during the Homecoming 1998 blackout.

"I find the situation very frustrating because [renting the cell phone] was something he decided as an individual and now the three of us are being hurt as a result of this." — Sarah Corman, AMS president-elect on CMM campaign manager Ryan Graham's alleged use of a cellular phone to aid in the team's campaign.

"If I had a reduced course load, I would be inclined to spend more time doing extracurricular activities, or sleeping, or watching television." — Milan Konopek, AMS academic affairs commissioner on Queen's administration deeming a 17-course degree program would leave more time for students to study.

"It's just frustrating to have all those people coming by in green outfits and looking for green beer and not getting any." — Gord Moodie, AMS vice-president (operations) on the administration's dismissal from the service for accounting inconsistency.

"There's a misconception among young people that birth control means STD control." — Diane Nolting, student health educator, commenting on the sexual practices of Queen's students.

"The pub has to remain financially viable. A show or concert will typically bring more people to the pub, and while smokers usually generate some revenue, it is in Alfie's best interest to expand the diversity of its programming." — Sarah Armstrong, media and services director, explaining the reasoning behind Alfie's Pub double-booking events.

"I take what has happened very, very seriously in terms of its implications. It was not a decision made lightly... I'm frankly feeling so saddened by the events of the last day." — Jack Simmott, director of the JDUC commenting on the decision to close the Queen's Pub for violating a noise agreement.

SCIENCE

The first year of a new Journal experience

Full Spectrum

Science news from the past year, from around the world and beyond

'Alien' microbes found

Scientists from Oregon State University have found bacteria living in just about the most inhospitable terrestrial habitats imaginable: two meters beneath the ice in Antarctica, and nearly a mile beneath the floors of the Pacific, Atlantic, and Indian oceans.

Computing at the speed of light

A lattice of microscopic silicon slivers, looking more like a summer-camp popsicle-stick project than a huge technological leap, holds the key to eventually manipulating light the same way we do electricity. The photonic crystal bends light repeatedly and virtually without leakage, a long-sought-after first step towards building a photonic computer.

A game of CAT and mouse

Mice are breathing small sighs of relief and geneticists studying their development are cheering the advent of an imaging system developed by the Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee. The MicroCAT system is based on conventional CAT scanners, which use X-rays and sophisticated computer software to build three-dimensional images of the subject's internal structures.

Star Trek: Deep Space 1

A space craft called Deep Space 1 was launched in October to test several new technologies, including an automatic navigation system and an ion-drive propulsion system. The ion drive engine failed only 4½ minutes after ground controllers switched it on early in November, but was successfully started later that month. NASA engineers now suspect that metallic contaminants between the engine's two high-voltage grids caused the initial failure, but were vapourized by subsequent attempts.

Leonid 'storm' barely a drizzle

The anticipated Leonid meteor storm, predicted to have reached peak intensity late in November, wasn't much more than a sprinkle. The show was disappointing even in Mongolia, on the "right" side of the Earth for the display. Canadian sky watchers had set up an observatory there to monitor meteor activity and were expecting up to 10,000 fireballs per hour. The actual rate was only about 50 visible meteors per hour.

Tainted love

Love is obsessive. And compulsive. So says a group of Italian scientists who have been studying the blood chemistry of people in love. The University of Pisa study shows that blood samples taken from people in love contain 40 per cent less of a certain protein than normal. Curiously, this lower level is also linked to obsessively-compulsive disorder.

Me Tarzan, you Jane

University of Albany anthropologist Dean Falk believes that she has an explanation as to why men have larger brains relative to body size than women do. In an article in the Journal of Human Evolution, she called the difference an "evolutionary inheritance" and proposes that the extra grey matter in men is used to process visual information and build mental maps.

The Articles

The maple leaf forever

BY JOHN BOWMAN

The shape of the maple leaf is the result of a combination of pressures. It possesses the flexibility and lateral "wings" to bend into a smooth cone when the wind picks up, and its points and indentations allow excess heat to be carried away in the breeze.

Clinical attachment

BY DIANA DRAPPEL

I documented their progress through surgeries, radiation therapy and chemotherapy sessions, and (sometimes) remissions. However, after the first few I quickly learned to dread the end of the file. It is still difficult to express how defeated and heartbroken I felt when, as so often the case, the last page of the file was an autopsy report. It was impossible not to be affected by these files that represented very real women, whose lives and those of their families were shattered by breast cancer.

Red hot chili peppers

BY JOHN BOWMAN

Incidentally, capsaicin doesn't just affect the tongue and lips. Any part of the body that has nerve endings is sensitive. [Head of the department of biology Gerald] Morris tells a story confirming that there are capsaicin receptors in our most delicate tissues. I won't recount the story here; let's just say that, for graduate students working with capsaicin, it is much more important to wash their hands before using the washroom than after.

Let's talk about sex, baby

BY LAURA HAMPFL

X chromosomes have about three per cent more DNA than Ys. If you stain sperm with a fluorescent dye that sticks to DNA, and then shine a laser on them, the dyed DNA will glow. X (girl-producing) sperm will glow more brightly since they have more DNA. Then all you have to do is separate the bright X sperm from the less bright Y sperm and artificially inseminate Mom with the sperm of her choice.

Grok: A Science Opinion

They say that no experiment is a failure, and even though only two Groks were written this year, I still think that opinion pieces are important to a science section. Maybe Sonja, next year's Science editor, will come up with a less geeky name.

Darwin in the raw

BY ANDREW PARKER

You do not have to be an atheist to be a scientist, and yet science is increasingly portrayed as an anti-religion. Yes, science does disprove certain religious notions: we know the world was not created in seven days, and Adam and Eve did not tread in the Garden of Eden.

McGwire's 'magic'

BY CRAIG MCKALL

In the case of androstenedione, the Olympic committee has vehemently denounced the use of this drug, while Major League Baseball remains silently accepting. It is these opposing views that often leave fans wondering if they should cheer on McGwire or denounce him.

Retrograde

BY JOHN BOWMAN

When Atari released Pong in 1972, it was the first time that people and computers got along on good terms. In the early eighties, gaming was a driving force in their popularization. And now that computers are a part of our lives every day, we should certainly preserve that early part of our relationship with them.

Fireflies and 'cool' light

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

Fireflies are pretty popular as far as insects go, and for one simple reason: fireflies are cool because their butts light up.

Gathering Intelligence

BY VIVEK MEHTA

Unlike cookies, which are usually unique for each Web site and therefore unreadable by any other site, the Processor Serial Number is a recognizable standard that will remain the same and cannot be deleted or easily changed.

Big picture, big sound

BY MIKE BELTZNER

If you're looking to buy a television in the near future (hellooooo, graduates!), you should probably steer clear of the HDTV/widescreen market for now. Industry standards are still being set, and there is always the risk of getting caught with a piece of equipment which is top of the line and obsolete, all at once.

The Research

When the pressure's on

BY ANGELA JAMES

According to [Associate Professor of pharmacology and toxicology Michael] Adams, his peers at this conference were "stunned into silence" following lengthy attempts to challenge the protocols used for this study. The idea that kidney remodeling could account exclusively for the changes in arterial pressure seen in this model carries possible implications for further developments in drug therapy.

Biochemistry professor Peter Davies

Breaking the ice

BY SONJA GRGAR

[Professor of biochemistry Peter] Davies explains that AFPs are macromolecules found in most cold climate organisms. Scientists are familiar with several dozen AFP structures, which work their magic by physically binding to the ice crystal surface. This interaction stops other water molecules from joining the crystal, and thus either inhibits its formation or controls its growth.

Turning back an invasion

BY BOON CHANG

Although other studies have already shown that oxygen plays a role in regulating the expression of a number of genes, [Assistant Professor of anatomy and cell biology Charles] Graham believes that "to our knowledge, this is the first instance of oxygen playing a role in regulating cell migration and invasion." His results show that in the first trimester of pregnancy, oxygen levels are indeed significantly lower in the placenta than in other tissues.

Queen's researches CF bug

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

Jamie Tibbo is one of several researchers involved. He came to Queen's University this past September from Memorial University in St. John's Newfoundland, where he grew up. He has never shied away from a challenge, and certainly isn't now, as he tackles Pseudomonas aeruginosa, the bacteria that eventually kills many CF sufferers.

Focus on locusts

BY JENNIFER PATERSON

At first glance, some of the scientific experiments performed by Queen's researchers may seem a little strange. For example, Mel Rohertson, a professor of physiology and psychology, carefully toasts locusts in ventilated plastic containers at 45 degrees Celsius. He observes changes in their behaviour, and after a recovery period at room temperature, he proceeds to "kind of chop 'em up and stick micro-electrodes in them."

Watch your Words

The village people

60 Minutes to live

Editorials

in Review

Let them eat pepper

The danger is real

Made in Canada

Throwing the game

Fidogate

The Year in Review

A Year of OPINIONS

if students care so little for rising tuition costs should then the AMS, who represents them, not cut back the amount of resources it devotes to this issue.

— Jon Tinney, Arts '00

Ontario spends less on university education than any other province in Canada, and less than 49 of 50 American states.

— James Worrall, Meds '01

The class of 2002 isn't composed of Canada's young intellectual elite, it's composed of 2,500 naive kids who think they're brilliant and who are going to get a rude awakening.

— Jordan Dodd, Artsci '02

The diversity movement claims that its goal is to extinguish racism and build tolerance of differences. This is a complete sham.

— Brock Jones, Arts '00

Breaking Ontario up roughly along telephone area code lines would allow the people of each region to make policies reflecting local values and dealing with the specific economic problems of their region.

— Andrew Smith, Arts '99

Due to the cultural sterility of Kingston, a fetish show, an exhibition of marginalized values corresponding to a truly underground culture, would be so severely out of context, the audience would not be amused or entertained, but horrified and angry.

— Isabelle Skabursis, Artsci '02

How are women thoroughly safe if one in four of us can be expected to be sexually assaulted, in most cases before the age of 16?

— Taryn McCormick, Arts '99

A WOMYN'S VOICE

Women of Queen's, I have a message for you: there is so much more to life than worrying about calories, fat grams and the size of Gap khakis into which you can wedge (or slide) yourself.

— Audrey Giles, PHE/Arts '01

The Abortion Debate

The posters I put up were in no way offensive and merely expressed a pro-fetus opinion, an opinion that I think I should be allowed to profess.

— Sindi Sabourin, PhD

I would urge Sabourin to follow her own advice and extend herself beyond the realm of her own comfortable, privileged, familiar place of judgement and imagine how the lives of women would be affected were abortion made illegal.

— Ann Valikoski, Arts '99

ON CAMPUS

Won't Queen's look rather silly when, well into the reign of King Charles or King William, we are still singing "God Save the Queen" at convocation.

Andy Lehrer
Arts and Sciences Senator

If you attend this university, you both hear and occasionally voice criticism of the self-serving resume-padders that purportedly abound in the AMS.

Graham Robinson
Arts '00/BMus '98

Competition itself almost disappears, as the grossly underfunded campaigns fail to even make a ripple in the collective consciousness of Queen's.

James Brown
Arts '02

The pressure to perform is crowding out the undergraduate's flexibility in course selection. Elective choices are influenced by the probability of doing well.

Robert Arntfield
Arts '01

I own a vibrator. More than one, in fact.

"I don't care if you stick [a vibrator] in each orifice and dance the hokey-pokey."

— Lynn Davidson, Artsci '99

talking HEADS

Now you can play at home!

What should you do if you see an endangered species eating an endangered plant?

What would you do to an evil housemate?

What do you think about on the toilet?

What is your definition of soul?

Do you think internet porn should be banned?

What is the worst part about the holidays?

Sept. '98: ... med. — Alex Kronby

Sept. '98: Gaels kill McGill — Alex Green

Jan. '99: A whole lot of row in K-town. — Alex Kronby

Sept. '98: ...

Focusing on Queen's

Sept. '98: Storm raves as homecoming — Cliff Achiam

In Focus

Mar. '98: ...

Sept. '98: Queen's rowers head out on the lake for early morning practice — Alex Kronby

Jan. '98: Ontario meds rally in Toronto — Joe Tinney

Nov. '98: Pirates invade the science formal — ...

The year that was

Jan. '99: Queen's swimmers take a dive — Bob Huish

Jan '99: Ultra Violet kicks it funky — Lillian Kim

Thanks to all of our contribs for the great year and good luck to Lilian and Bob, next year's photo editors

Aug. '98: Stroking the bunny — ...

Sports & Fitness

Another successful year in Queen's athletics

BY ADAM KAMINSKY

With an interuniversity athletic program that features more than 30 different teams, this year like most others was a busy one. The athletes of the Queen's Golden Gaels represented their school with pride and success all over the province and the country. This year saw Queen's take home four provincial team titles, as well as numerous individual honours. Here is a summary of results from the 1998-99 season.

BADMINTON

The team finished the regular season in fourth place in the OUA and had the same result in the playoffs. The strength of the team was the women's side, which saw Caroline Gibbings win OUA individual gold in singles and team up with Anne Brodie to capture provincial gold in doubles.

MEN'S BASKETBALL

The team had a break out year, remaining in the playoff hunt right up until the final game of the season, where a rough loss to York eliminated them from the post-season. The squad finished the year with an impressive 10-10 record (their most regular season wins ever) and placed Derek Richardson on the all-conference team for the third time.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

Queen's had another impressive regular season, finishing the regular season at 14-6, good for third place in the OUA East division. Unfortunately for the Gaels, they were bounced in the playoffs by their rival, the University of Toronto Blues. The team did place centre Wendy Moon and guard Steph 'Long Range' Glancey on the all-conference team.

CROSS COUNTRY

The cross country team had one of their most promising seasons, with impressive performances by both the men and women. The women's team finished second at the Ontario championships and followed that up with a phenomenal third place finish at the CIAU championships. The men's team had a great regular season and peaked at the right time, finishing fourth at the OUA championship and fifth at the nationals.

WOMEN'S CURLING

Queen's finished in the middle of the OUA with a 4-6 record this season, which left them just short of the playoffs.

MEN'S CURLING

The squad finished the regular season with a 6-4 record, good enough to reach the OUA playoffs. In the playoff round the team fell short of their goals, going winless in four games, but it was a successful season nonetheless.

FIGURE SKATING

Queen's captured their record-breaking fifth consecutive provincial banner with an impressive win at the OUA championships. The Gaels were also able to win all of their preliminary events, including the Queen's invitational.

FENCING

Queen's had a successful run, with the men's team finishing second in the OUA and the women coming in seventh. Impressive individual performances came from Bruce Preciosus and Will Anderson, who were both named conference all-stars.

FIELD HOCKEY

The field hockey team exceeded expectations, finishing the year with a 5-7-3 record. The squad performed admirably in the playoffs, defeating University of Western Ontario to finish in a strong fifth place.

FOOTBALL

The squad started the season impressively, with a 3-1 record and a homecoming thrashing of McGill, but the Gaels struggled in the second half of the season. The team lost their last four games of the season and finished out of the playoffs for the first time in Bob Howes' tenure as head coach. On an individual note, defensive linemen Jim Aru and James Osborne were named second team all-Canadians.

GOLF

The OUA championship was hosted by Queen's and they enjoyed the home cooking, placing second overall. The team chased the University of Ottawa right down to the last hole, but came up just short.

WOMEN'S HOCKEY

Queen's had their most successful season in recent memory, competing for a playoff spot on the last day of the season, but losing in overtime to York. While the GAELS finished fifth with a 4-13-3 record, the young team is making strides in the right direction.

MEN'S HOCKEY

The men's hockey team experienced a rebirth this season under the tutelage of second year Head Coach Chris MacDonald. The team finished second in the OUA Mid-east division (5-14-7) and despite a litany of injuries too numerous to list, the team defeated U of T in the first round of the playoffs. The young squad then took the experienced Guelph Gryphons to the third game of a three game series before succumbing. Individually, Rob Mailloux and Wes Booker, both first year players on the Gaels, were named OUA all-stars.

WOMEN'S LACROSSE

In the inaugural year of varsity lacrosse at Queen's, the squad set a standard that will be very difficult to attain again — they won the OUA championships. With player-coach Anne Benedetti leading the way, the team ripped through the regular season and dominated the playoffs. Benedetti was the leading scorer, named MVP and coach of the year in the OUA.

NORDIC SKIING

The team had a good season with both men and women finishing fourth at the OUA championships.

Please see Four on page 11

Christmas is here

Here are the Christmas wishes that came true and those that didn't

HITS

•Mark McGwire would set an unattainable home run standard
September 10, 1998
*Mark McGwire finished the year with a whopping 70 home runs, 13 more than the previous mark set by Roger Maris.

•John Gallagher's show on TSN would be cancelled so that faith can be restored in Canadian television.
September 18, 1998
*Faith has been restored. Gallagher met an untimely (or timely depending on your point of view) death early in 1999

•Darryl Strawberry would make one last improbable comeback.
October 6, 1998
*Darryl Strawberry seems to have recovered from cancer and will be on the New York Yankees' opening day roster.

•Evander Holyfield and Lennox Lewis would fight in a winner-take-all bout.
October 16, 1998
*While the fight wasn't winner-take-all (heck, there was no winner) the two heavyweight foes fought in a unification bout.

•Pavel Bure would be traded to a team with no Stanley Cup hopes — maybe the Toronto Maple Leafs.
October 20, 1998
*He apologized to those that

October 20, 1998

*Pavel Bure was traded to the Florida Panthers who despite a surge when the 'Russian Rocket' was healthy, will not be in the playoffs. (appendix 1: We missed on the Leafs not having Stanley Cup hopes)

•The Leafs would finally put the 'Cat' to sleep and get on with their season.
October 23, 1998

*Felix Potvin is sleeping peacefully on Long Island, where fans don't cheer loud enough to wake him.

•All the NFL people that doubted Doug Flutie would stand up and admit their blunder.
October 27, 1998

*The contract extension signed by Flutie with the Buffalo Bills shows that at least one executive can see the error of their ways.

•Maple Leafs GM Mike Smith would stop talking about fictional trades and make a real one.
November 3, 1998
*Stole Bryan Berard from the New York Islanders (see Potvin).

•Blue Jays Manager Tim Lincecum would apologize to the real victims — Vietnam War veterans.
November 30, 1998
*He apologized to those that he imitated, but does anybody listen to a manager without a team?

•A new savior for NBA basketball would arrive and make us all love that game.
January 15, 1999

*For those of you watching the Toronto Raptors a new messiah is in town — Vince Carter.

•The Toronto Raptors would go back to the drawing board to find ways of regaining the fans.
January 29, 1999

*Fans are coming in droves to see the basketball messiah dunk.

•Mike Tyson would be put away before someone dies.
February 9, 1999

*He is comfortably stowed in a Maryland jail, where he can't hurt anybody with a flying TV.

•There would be no biting, holding or low blowing during the Holyfield-Lewis title fight.
March 12, 1999

*The fight ended without any gross misconduct. It was after the bout that the shenanigans really occurred.

MISSES

•The NBA would learn from baseball and avoid a work stoppage at all cost.
September 10, 1998

*They suffered from a long lock-out, disappointed fans, ignorant players and arrogant management. They should have listened.

•All six Canadian NHL teams would make the playoffs.
September 15, 1998

*Vancouver, Montreal and one of Calgary or Edmonton will be playing golf early. At least Ottawa and Toronto are playing well.

•Tony Gwynn would culminate his spectacular career with the one thing he seeks — a World Series ring.
October 16, 1998

*After a beating at the hands of the New York Yankees in the World Series, the San Diego Padres lost a lot of their best players. The outlook isn't brilliant for Gwynn to get that elusive ring.

•CTV Sportsnet would have a No Curling policy.
October 16, 1998

*CTV Sportsnet should consider changing their name to the curling network.

•The Atlanta Braves would realize that no bullpen means no World Series and address the issue.
October 20, 1998

*They got no bullpen. They got no ring.

•Elvis Stojko would quit his figure skating career and focus on selling fruit juice.

November 3, 1998

*Stojko keeps on skating, but is barely competitive. That fruit juice business is sounding better and better.

•Patrick Ewing would really know what it is like to not be able to feed a family.
November 20, 1998

*He said he couldn't put bread on his family's table, but he is making more than $20 million this year. That is a lot of bread.

•Quebec City would win its lawsuit and Salt Lake City would forfeit the Olympic Games.
January 15, 1999

*Quebec City is now a two-time loser — no games, no compensation.

•New Blue Jay Cecil Fielder would be able to hit his weight next season.
February 12, 1999

*Fielder was cut. It will be tough to hit his weight when he has no at-bats.

•Boxing promoter Don King would do the best thing for this sport — disappear.
March 19, 1999

*King will never disappear. He will haunt the pugilistic world for an eternity.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

Four championships, countless memories

Continued from page 11

ROWING

Both men and women had productive seasons for Queen's, finishing third and fourth respectively at the OUA championships.

WOMEN'S RUGBY

The team never really got going this season, unable to win a single game going 0-6-1. The young squad had trouble against some of the more experienced squads in the OUA.

MEN'S RUGBY

After finishing the season in second place in the OUA with a 6-1 record, the team lost to arch-rival Western in the semifinals. The team was forced to battle injuries all season to finish as well as they did.

WOMEN'S SOCCER

Queen's had a dominating season, finishing the regular season undefeated with a 11-0-1 record, which was good enough for first in the OUA East division. They followed up their excellent regular season by getting to the OUA championship game, earning themselves a trip to the nationals in Victoria. While the team did not play as well as they would have liked at the nationals, they had a tremendous season. Individual accolades go to Judith Trepanier, Ange Crockford and Raelleen Dunn who were named all-Canadians and coach Dave McDowell who was named CIAU coach of the year.

MEN'S SOCCER

Despite being considered a rebuilding squad, the team was able to finish fourth in the OUA East with a 8-4-2 record. This earned them a spot in the playoffs, where they put up a good struggle before bowing out at the hands of U of T. Kudos to Mike Cowan for an OUA all-star season.

WOMEN'S SQUASH

The team finished in third place at the OUA championships, a good finish for a rebuilding squad.

MEN'S SQUASH

The men finished in very similar fashion to their female counterparts, coming in third at the OUAs.

SWIMMING

The team had a breakthrough season with both men and women finishing in fifth place at the OUAs. The squad sent eight swimmers to the CIAU championships, four more than made the trip last year.

SYNCHRO

The synchronized swimming team continued their winning ways, with their third consecutive OUA championship. The team was paced by swimmer-coach Sharyl Fyffe and Jen Holt, who shared most valuable performer accolades at the OUA finals.

TRACK & FIELD

The track & field team competed well all season, culminating with a sixth place finish for the women and a fifth place finish for the men at the OUA championships. The team sent 21 athletes to the CIAU championships, where Nimrod Major earned all-Canadian status with a silver in the high jump.

WOMEN'S TENNIS

Paced by Paula Myslyvick, who won the individual OUA singles and doubles titles, the squad won the OUA team championship. The team followed that up by defeating UBC in a challenge match between the two conference champions.

MEN'S TENNIS

After roaring through the regular season with a 6-2 record, good enough for third place in the conference, the team made a surge in the playoffs. After winning their semi-final match, the squad faced a tough Western squad in the final, where they came up short, losing 4-2.

WOMEN'S VOLLEYBALL

The team finished just out of the playoffs with a 6-6 record. The squad showed glimpses of brilliance, but simply could not put it all together. Kristine Spekkens and Lindsay Barrett collected all-conference honours.

MEN'S VOLLEYBALL

Queen's finished with a 8-4 record, good enough for second place in the OUA East. After defeating York in the first round of the playoffs, the squad lost a tough three game series with U of T by two points in the fifth and final set of the third game. The team had a great season, placing Jake Magolin, Frederic Cotnoir, Greg Stevenson and Michel Cameron on the all-conference team.

WOMEN'S WATER POLO

The women finished with a 2-8 record in regular season play, which left them on the outside looking in during the playoffs.

MEN'S WATER POLO

The squad finished the regular season with a 2-8 record, just out of the OUA playoffs.

WRESTLING

The team hosted the OUA championships, where the men finished sixth and the women fifth. An outstanding performance by Tara Feehey who won an OUA title.

ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT

HAPPENINGS '98-'99

IT ALL BEGAN on May 1. Almost 12 months later, it's been a big ticket year of music, theatre, art, comedy. It's been a long year, with a lot of events and Kingston welcomed many. So, here's a look back at everyone who sang, danced, mixed, scratched, performed, made us laugh, made us cry, opened our minds and helped us escape. Here's to you. Thanks for filling our pages and offering your voices.

Summer '98

The summer opened with some fine events for those who remained in K-town during those relaxed summer months. The Kingston summer festival and shows by Blue Rodeo and Wide Mouth Mason were well attended while the Shot's introduction of Roaring Thursdays, satisfied our longing for live comedy.

September

In September, the majority of Queen's students returned and were provided with an amazing month of entertainment.

It all started with Damn the Diva, Treble Charger and 54-40 battling the rain and a shorted-out soundboard to provide an awesome welcome to new students during the all-Faculty frosh concert. Rusty, Killjoys, One Step Beyond and Jane Bunnett capped the music explosion for the month, while Studio 102 opened strong with their presentation of three plays and Catherine Dolcini's display at Union forced us to acknowledge the colour and shape of modern art.

October

October will be remembered for the amazingly diverse presentation of music. Contemporary rock was well represented with appearances by Econoline Crush, Big Sugar, Huevos Rancheros, Spirit of the West and a conveniently timed visit by gothic rocker Bif Naked right before Halloween. Hip-hop was covered with Rascalz at Alfie's, Swing was accounted for when Colin James rolled into town and the Queen's Wind Ensemble impressed the symphony lovers among us. The highly-touted release of the Undergraduate Review was well received demonstrating the literary excellence of our peers. Aunt Dan and Lemon had a successful run at the Grand Theatre and the Union Gallery brought us more great student work with Pervert's Theorem. Kudos to The Shot for bringing acclaimed comic Russell Peters to K-town and The Battle of the DJs for highlighting some unrecognized talent.

November

November was highlighted by fantastic drama and was an all around banner month for entertainment. The Imaginary Invalid, fall's Drama Major, was very well received by the Queen's community. Funerals n' Things and Med TV, as well as the Queen's Players presentation of Cheubacca to the Future, also demonstrated student performances headed in the right direction. Ultra-Violet released their first publication, Juno-award winning Wyrd Sisters dazzled a 477 crowd, Maestro "conducted thangs" at Alfies. The Philosopher Kings sexed up a willing crowd at Grant, and Jim Cuddy went it alone at Stages.

January

A Chorus Line opened the month to rave reviews, soothing a student body fearing another ice storm. Urban Myth and Ron Tite brought some scathing stand-up to Clark, and the Modern Fuel Gallery presented 99 Degrees. Connie Kaldor, BTK, and Thrust had the music in them in January. Night Noises kept Grand Theatre patrons satisfied in the waning days of the month.

February

February brought us the multi-media presentation TV, Studio 102's presentation of The Way of the Pilgrim, Earl Street Theatre's For the Love of Oz, the hugely successful art auction Cezanne's Closet and the German Theatre's annual show. The Mosaic New Concert series effectively presented new and diverse styles of musical expression to campus.

March

March pretty much closed out the year for Arts and Entertainment and proved to be the most fascinating month of the year. The second drama major Blood Wedding enjoyed success, Yellowwood received a phenomenal response and the Battle of the Bands was a great year-ender for the QEA as Waxing Gibbus walked away with this year's prize. We also bore witness to the Queen's Players' Ally McBeuller's Day Off, the last of Studio 102's plays, three free concerts courtesy of the QEA, and the thought provoking display Crime and Punishment at Agnes Etherington. The Freak shows visit to Alfie's convinced a sell-out crowd that their artistic merit in torture. The Crash Test Dummies and Wide Mouth Mason capped a fabulous month of entertainment.

.....

And that's the year it was. Open your eyes and your ears this summer for another great year of Kingston and Queen's entertainment.

The most whacked out A & E in brief

My So Called Braun: Claire Danes isn't a big fan of Manila and now officials in the Philippines don't like her either. The Manila Council is planning to ban her movies there, after she told Premiere magazine, "Manila smelled like cockroaches, with rats all over and there is no sewage system and the people do not have anything — no arms, no legs, no eyes."

Another Panzerotti Pavarotti? Luciano Pavarotti has tipped the scales at 300 pounds and has offered a reason for his weight problem: "You have to have some willpower and have to be determined. It's psychological. A person of my size has some hunger, maybe from the war. I am a child of World War II."

Domino effect?: Fitness guru Richard Simmons admits he craves pizza and has to go undercover to get it. "There's a Domino's four blocks from my house, so I have to lower my voice and say 'Hi, this is Mr. Reveles. I'd like a pizza.'"

Crushing the Competition: 22-year-old "Teen Queen" Alicia Silverstone is on the line to test her pipes for Kenneth Branagh's musical production Love's Labours Lost. The actress who shot to stardom after starring in Clueless has not been taking her singing obligation lightly. "At first I was like God my jaw hurts and my throat hurts," complains Silverstone. "Singing lessons help me with my breathing for everything else, because I have, um, a really hard time breathing."

She's No Angel: Tori Spelling recently shocked her TV-mogul

father Aaron Spelling with her recent responses to Playboy's "20 Questions." In the October issue, Tori reveals she's had sex in the restroom of a Europe-bound plane. She also discusses her fantasies about three-ways, oral sex and male masturbation. She also admires strippers, saying, "I think I would be a great stripper."

Eating Out with Bill: Culture icon Martha Stewart cancelled a pre-taped interview in which she has lunch with Bill Clinton. She cancelled the broadcast stating it would be inappropriate to air the interview because of the sex scandal surrounding the president. During the interview, she presented Clinton with a bedroom pillow and said, "I'm sure he'll enjoy using this."

You're so Pitt-iful: The Supreme Court recently ruled that Athena Maria Rolando must stay 100 yards away from Brad Pitt for the next three years. Rolando recently climbed through a window and spent 10 hours inside Pitt's house. Rolando stated, "I'd actually like to file a restraining order against Mr. Pitt himself to stay away from me."

Rap Sheet: On September 14, rapper Coolio, best known for "Gangsta's Paradise," was arrested for suspicion of carrying a weapon and possessing marijuana after he was pulled over for driving on the wrong side of the road. Also Ol' Dirty Bastard, a member of the Wu-Tang Clan, was arrested this September for creating a disturbance at a nightclub.

Rap-sheet (again): Rapper ODB was arrested on a charge of attempted murder after an attempted shoot-out. ODB, also known as Big Baby Jesus, was stopped by the police after his sports utility vehicle didn't have its lights on. This was his fourth arrest since July.

Rap Sheet #3: ODB was recently arrested for wearing a bullet proof vest — something those with a violent history are prohibited to do. The Wu Tang Clan rapper was arrested when he was pulled over for driving erratically and the police saw the vest. ODB has also been arrested for shooting at police officers, not paying child support and shoplifting shoes.

Ellen, George Michael and Tinky-Winky?: Reverend Jerry Falwell says he is not guilty of "oung" Tinky Winky, a Teletubbies character, as gay. He does however, defend a warning in his National Liberty Journal newspaper telling parents to be cautious of the show. The conservative Falwell said, "As a Christian, I believe that role-modeling the gay lifestyle is damaging to children."

Senile Place: Aaron Spelling is shocked at the sexual content in some recently released teen movies. In Newsweek he stated, "I abhor some of these teenage movies. If they're going to have sexual affairs, I'd like to see condoms." An article in the same issue featured stories on Cruel Intentions and Go, two new teenage flicks. Didn't Tori star in the movie Co-Ed Call Girl in 1996? And what about 90210 and Melrose? Good grief.

A Year of Quotes

Q: Hypothetically speaking, who would win in a fight between a pirate, a samurai, a vampire and a viking?

A: Rusty's Jim Moore: The vampire because he is immortal. Have you ever seen the show Oz?

Q: ...yeah, the prison show, why?

A: Moore: It must be pretty popular in Kingston.

Q: Indubitably (Issue 7).

"Whatever, it's all good, everything in its time. Right now I'm just trying to blow this shit out of the water."

— Maestro, who played Alfie's in November, explaining his hip-hop future. (Issue 20)

"No matter what I do in music, it's all blues to me." — Colin James (Issue 14).

"Northern Touch was meant to shine a light on Canada, all the talent coast to coast. Many people think hip-hop is strictly from T-dot-O. I've seen great MCs in every province I have been to. While I have never been there, I bet there are some dope MCs from N.W.T."

— Red-1 from the Razacls, who played Alfie's Pub in October (Issue 9).

"Busking is the medium for me to get the music out there. It has smoothed the savage beast. Anything's possible if you set your mind to it. Don't let others get in your way." — Mike Thompson, Kingston Busker (Issue 11).

"The truth is that most of the traffic in MP3 is illegal. The music industry at large is not excited." — David Basskin, President of the Canadian Music and Reproduction Rights Agency (Issue 28).

"It's not the quiet reserved Mozart bullshit anymore."

— Mosaic concert organizer Christien Ledroit describing the new music concert festival (Issue 32).

"Kevin's not a regular guy. But people will appreciate the dark humour. No other show is dealing with it. Sodom Jokes? We're the only ones."

— Greg Lawrence, creator of Kevin Spencer, an animated show appearing on the comedy network (Issue 28).

"The album is more connected to my own history, the raw materials and pivotal points of my life that allowed me to remain a musician and avoid getting a real job."

— Jim Cuddy, on his new album All In Time. Cuddy played Stages Nightclub in November (Issue 21).

"I assembled Orbital's keyboards and processors for Lollapalooza '97. The same day I carried Korn's guitar equipment from their tour bus. That touring season I also had the opportunity to wash and inflate Weird Al Yankovich's 30-foot tall blow-up figurine for an appearance on his 'Bad Hair Day' tour... The job in itself is damn hard work and the techie is the one who sweats his sack off in the middle of summer so the audience gets their money's worth."

— Joe Sellors, Sound and Lighting technician (Issue 24).

"We need to improve our professionalism on and off stage. We don't want to be known as people who are your friends or people in your class."

— Travel Agent Guitarist, Mike Budd. (Issue 5).

"We do not have a big message, we just enjoy playing."

— Brian Taguchi, Clever Hans (Issue 5).

"Back when I went to Queen's, Frosh Week wasn't considered a success unless there were 50 Dead and 200 injured with the clock tower of Grant Hall in flames and Tindall Field a smoking crater filled with human remains."

Treble Charger guitarist Bill Priddle during the all-Faculty frosh concert (Issue 5).

"Some people thought we were a video store, and some thought we were a porno place."

— Dan Wannemacher, owner of The Screening Room, on the opening of his business (Issue 28).

Top Artists

1. Lauryn Hill
2. Keb Mo'
3. Gomez
4. Beastie Boys
5. The Beautiful South

Top Movies

1. The Thin Red Line
2. Shakespeare in Love
3. Saving Private Ryan
4. Pleasantville
5. Life is Beautiful

Thanks to everyone for a superb year in A&E — that means you, our dedicated writers and photographers. Congratulations to Dimitrios Tsotos, next year's A&E editor. Have a wonderful summer!

MISC

LEST WE

A Year Of Joy, Pain, Sunshine and Rain:

SEPTEMBER

ISSUE 1: BEGINNINGS - NOBODY REALLY PAYS ATTENTION.

...Oscar Wilde, whose last words — said on his deathbed in a poorly decorated hotel room — were: "either this wallpaper goes or I do." Nobody remembers any of the first few witty things he said. In fact, for all we know he might've started out in social circles as a dullard. Maybe it wasn't until he discovered opium dens that he really started to make people laugh... —Ken Butland

ISSUE 6: PROFESSORS - STIFFENING UP.

...I decided to investigate, asking every professor I could recognize, "Why are there so many male profs trying to get laid all of a sudden?" Most professors took offense at the accusation that it was only recently that so many of them were thrown into the sex pool. "We've been fucking the community for years," retorted a group of about six of them, each with a stunning date... —Sean Springer

ISSUE 4: QUEEN'S ENGINEERS - MAYBE NOT SO CRAZY. ...I don't know how the biggest group of geeks ever to walk the planet got the reputation of being rowdy partiers. When you drove past your first group of fecs on Monday, I'm sure the student constables told you to keep your distance from them. This is a safety measure I don't understand. When you arrived at high school, did security tell you to stay away from the guys in the computer lab or the zany chess club?... —George Reinblatt

ISSUE 16: MODERN ETIQUETTE - THE ANECDOTE.

...A final type of anecdote is characterized by a speaker who is unaware of any other tools of communication besides the anecdote, his or her only reply to "What do I say?" being "I should tell a witty and flattering anecdote." On first glance the harmless indulgences of the vain, these anecdotes are in all truth an insidious threat to the generally accepted paradigm of bilateral social action and multi-participant conversation (chapter 1). The agent has lost all sense of his audience as conversational partners and regards them instead as a set of objects or receptacles for his or her anecdotal discharge. A nervous energy usually plagues users of this type of anecdote and causes an agonized and restless appearance when they are forced into the role of listener... —Joseph Breen

ISSUE 8: TOUPEE OR NOT TOUPEE

...And the social pressures are on. There's a smorgasbord of negative models to avoid out there. George Costanza, Newman, most of Danny Devito's roles, etc, etc. The media equates baldness with aging, slimy pricks. Your stereotypical supervillain is bald, and your average skin-head too. It appears people equate baldness with evil on top of pdknessness. In fact, the only positive "sex symbol" I can think of is Woody from TV's Cheers, and he's an idiot. Also he may not even be a sex symbol. I don't know. The point is that young, prematurely balding guys are damned if they do something about it and double toucan damned if they don't. It's depressing... —Ken Butland

OCTOBER

NOVEMBER

ISSUE 20: "EL DUELO GRANDO! EDITORO CONTRA EDITORO" (MISC. SHOWDOWN #1)

...My byline became attached to a cesspool of incoherence for which I can only blame Jesse, who has proven himself totally maladroit in the role of editor. I sat and watched the horror show until 2 p.m. when Jesse lost all motor skills and passed out on the floor like a bowl of Jell-O-tine. In the process he crushed his poor parrot and lost a handle on the bottle of gin, which smashed into smithereens... —Sean Springer

ISSUE 21: "EL DUELO GRANDO! EL MUSICO DEL NINO RAFFI CONTRA EL OTRA MUSICO DEL NINO FRED PENNER" (MISC. SHOWDOWN #2)

...From his imitation beard and clothing to his voice and chord progressions, Penner has become a Raffi clone, mimicking everything that made Raffi groundbreaking. In order for Penner to actually mature musically, he must wait for someone else to do it first and then shamelessly copy it. He'll probably release a swing album within the next six months... —Stefan Murray

...The prognosis for Sean is not good. Although he has been treated with a variety of phenothiazines, none have been effective. The spastic shuffle with which he now walks is a direct result of the high doses of thiorazine currently being administered; please don't say anything to him about it. It's hard enough for Sean just stumbling down the hallway and drooling. He doesn't need your further debasement... —Jesse Belinger

ISSUE 22: MISC. COLOURING CONTEST.

...Students gulped as the revolutionaries silently gathered their crayons like so many rifles. Two eagles flew overhead. A crow squawked. The colourers let out a frenzied 'whoop' and began scribbling. And scribble they did. Tirelessly. An endless number. Entries flew through The Journal door like prize horses at a racetrack. The onus of judgement fell upon two experts in the field of colouring: Francis, Age 8 and Jade, Age 9. Their task wasn't easy: to choose three winners out of the literally thousands of entries MISC. received. After hours and hours of arguing, squabbling, napping and Nintendo, they came to a consensus...

1st Place:
Brian Adams, Arts '00.
"It rocks," states Jade
"Santa's on fire," observes Francis

ISSUE 23: STUDYING, A HABIT.

...in a few weeks, you're going to have to put a shocking amount of useless facts into your head for a very short time, write them down on paper, then forget everything and never think about it again. This is important. The last thing you want to focus on at this stage is retaining knowledge in any way. No, at this point in time I'd recommend watching a few movies, taking up a form of interpretive dance, something like that. You're not going to want to open your books until a day or two before your exam... —Jay Pinkerton

DECEMBER

NEIL YOUNG:

Don't ask me to explain. He just kept working himself into whatever article happened to be printed at the time. I think this goes to show that whether or not we're willing to accept it, Neil Young is everywhere; a good thing for some, not so much for others.

FORGET...

MISC. Remembers Arbitrary Chunks Of It.

ISSUE 24: COURSE CALENDAR 1999-2000. FILM-302*0.48 Pomography: The Lost Episodes Intermediate-study in the art of mid- to late-seventies porno films. Examines the fundamental elements of a solid Little emphasis on plot or scriptwriting. PHED-369/0.69 Homocroticism

35,2P

3P

JANUARY

ISSUE 26: DISNEY - "THE LOIN KING," SUBLIMINAL PORN. Doubtless, Disney will continue to stay one step ahead of others who will vie for the same market. There will doubtless be competitors. The pioneering Ralph Bakshi (Heavy Metal, Fritz the Cat) tried all this back in the seventies, except for some reason he got it backwards, resulting in animation with the porn out in the open and the actual entertainment value rendered subliminal... —Adam Prosser

ISSUE 25: MISC. GUIDE TO FAKING HIGH-BROW.

...You can tell the difference between Labatt Blue and Molson Canadian. You've got a few cigarette tricks. You know the macarena. Whoopie-poo Chester, cause that won't get you very far in the diamond studded, solid gold, genuine leather world of the upper-class. Nosirree, you've got to have style, panache, a certain — I don't know — "je ne sais quoi" in order to hobnob with the highbrows. Falling that, you've gotta have enough know-how to fake it. Sort of like Jack in Titanic... —Ken Butland

FEBRUARY

ISSUE 27: SHORTER PROSE.

...We get accustomed to our clothes, to carrying ourselves or acting in particular ways. We get too comfortable. We do our thing and our thing becomes routine. We eat the same things, buy from the same stores, go to the same bars, have the same days. There is no magic in this. Magic happens when we do it anyway. The times when we say fuck it and test the fantasy. Magic happens when we know we risk making complete fools of ourselves, but we don't care. Magic happens through fantasies, when you define the world. When you do it anyway... —Gillian White

ISSUE 29: 1ST ANNUAL MISC. AMS CANDIDATE IRON LUNG.

...How do you decide which trio of AMS hopefuls to make triumvirate? Whichever team's names roll off your tongue the best? Whichever team hands out the shiniest buttons? It's tough to say. Personally, I'd pick the candidates who are willing to go the distance, who follow through with what they promise, and who demonstrate a high degree of good sportsmanship. And there is perhaps no better way to discern this than to have them all stuck their heads in a giant fish tank filled with water —Paul Hessler & Ken Butland

ISSUE 28: TED NUGENT - THREATENS CANADIANS, ROCKS MILLIONS.

...[The bear hunt ban] only helps the touchy-feely fantasy of a bunch of people who would ban you or I from ever having a steak... By this I'm assuming Ted means extremist vegetarians. If so, I can back him up on that one, most of those people have had their wits dulled by lack of fresh, juicy red meat to the point of being dangerous (although many vegetarians I know spend too much time feeling superior and trying not to die of malnutrition to notice anything else, let alone the plight of bears)... —Ken Butland

ISSUE 31: WARTON WILLIE - HIS DEATH, MEMORIES FROM A HOMETOWNER.

...Perhaps in years to come they will talk about the fateful weekend of the festival, when all of the people had returned to their hometown. They will explain how the mayor and the elders brought him out before the mob on the Friday, how some cheered him and some jeered him, saying "Free Willie!" or "Crucify him!"; how Willie wet himself on the mayor, who promptly cleaned himself up and declared "I wash my hands of Willie." How the crowd just laughed... —Bob McGill

MARCH

ISSUE 32: JERRY SPRINGER - WHITE TRASH, SILVER LINING?

...PRO #4: Jerry Teaches Effective Money Making Strategies. Think profiting off other people's misfortunes and sheer stupidity is the diabolical proliferation of Corporate America? Think again. Is sort of selfish advancement immoral, loathsome and repugnant? Of course not, Jerry does it, and he is a rich, rich man. Know someone with a horrible secret? Blackmail, my friend. Met someone with an incredibly shocking and unbelievable story to tell? Exploit 'em. Pretty soon you'll be giving up your position as mayor of Cincinnati to do this on a permanent basis. Just like Jerry... —Melissa Farmer

ISSUE 31: CHIP NUTS - "MAKE CHIP, NUT WAR." ...Like the ascendancy of McDonald's from a low-key burger joint to emperor of the entire food industry, or the rise of Beavertails from obscurity to the domination of the deep-fried whole wheat dough market, we boldly predict that chipnuts will ascend to similar greatness... [But] if chipnuts are to have the glorious future they so richly deserve, we need more people to spread the word... —Kevin Butler, George Pfaff, Keith Geren

ISSUE 38: THE FAKE GW

...One might think that we should respect our senior citizens because of all they have contributed over their lives — sweet ol' grandma is beyond ridicule, right? I say bullshit. These people are walking comedy routines (or shuffling comedy routines if they use a walker)... —(from opening editorial) Keith Geren

ISSUES 31-38: MISC BUILDING CONTEST

...Hopefully this is going to be simple, fun, and include at least one of your friends, unless you're a social outcast, or your only friends are in your local religious club. For the next few issues, figure out which buildings are being obscured by students. The first letters of each building name (when put together and unscrambled) will spell out something sensible. If you're the first person to guess it right, you'll win something very, very large and awe-inspiring...

Less jokes!

More Old We meet Changing Their Colostomy Bags!

IN VARIOUS ISSUES BETWEEN 25-40: SARAH'S RECIPE CORNER Sarah LeMay has provided the Queen's Community with recipes for Risotto, Crepes, Mixed Grill & Pizza among many others. Her culinary expertise has caused many a mouth to salivate. For some reason, Golden Words had a problem with printing recipes for delicious dishes in the MISC. section. Cuckoo. Looks like too much bitterness puts the brain a mite askew

CRAP IN THE CORNER:

This short lived addition to MISC. lasted only a few issues. Why? Because it was too freakin' hard to write. Counting the number of Na's in "Hey Jude," — what in the hell was I thinking?

Odds that if you're a Spice Girl you're a new mother: 1 in 2
of Teen Pregnancies in Britain each Year: 9,000
of Courses in Advanced Animal Telepathy offered by Penelope Smith in California: 3
of Times "Roxanne" is mentioned

in The Police song "Roxanne": 26
of Times "Red Light" is mentioned in the same song: 25
Today's Peanuts Punchline: (Peppermint Patty hands her teacher a test she has just completed)
P.P.: "Can you see the little note I added at the bottom?"

P.P.: "Dry Clean Only!"
Today's Charles S. Schulz Sentinity Rating [1 being a musing-grandfather type sentine, 10 being scany-old-man-on-the-street type sentine]: 8.6
of Times "Body Count" is mentioned in the song "Body Count" by "Body Count" from the album

'Body Count': 72
of biographies in Stuffer Library: 27,285
of biographies on Culture Club: 1
of 'No's in Hey Jude: 229
of times the cat come back 5

reader

All The World's A Movie Screen

MCGILL AND QJR AT THE MOVIES... AND THE LIBRARY?

By BOB MCGILL

Most readers have a strange relationship with film versions of their favourite books. Nearly every new adaptation inevitably disappoints a book's biggest fans, yet there's always a buzz whenever a new movie based on literature is in the works.

Studio executives bank on film adaptations drawing large audiences based on the assumption that if people have paid to read the book, they will pay to watch the movie. Yet, there have been some tremendous examples of failure: the Demi Moore version of The Scarlet Letter was a critical and commercial flop, and the cinematic incarnation of Tom Wolfe's bestselling The Bonfire of the Vanities — despite big names Tom Hanks and Bruce Willis — is still known as one of the most notorious lemons of all time.

Adapting books into film is a tricky business, to say the least. Yet the practice continues, and it continues successfully. Literature has generated what are arguably some of the finest American movies ever, including One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, A Clockwork Orange and The Graduate. Clearly, American producers consider a genius for story still to be the domain of the novelist, and although it can be difficult to recreate and transform a literary artistic vision into a cinematic one, the process is sometimes extremely fruitful.

It seems the adaptations that tend to earn the most critical acclaim are not the ones that repeat the plot line by line, nor are they even the ones that try to mimic precisely the manner of the text. Rather, they are ones that take the artistic vision of the novel as inspiration in creating their own unique spirit. This is surely what made films like Atom Egoyan's The Sweet Hereafter and Forrest Gump hits. Egoyan's film, in particular, is notable for taking an American story and bringing it to life with a distinctly Canadian flavour, from its Tragically Hip soundtrack to its incredible shots of British Columbia's interior.

Filmmakers clearly struggle with the level of faithfulness to the text that they should maintain. Kenneth Branagh's Hamlet played with the visual interpretation of the play, while at the same time using Shakespeare's entire text and perhaps alienating modern audiences as a result with a running time of over four hours. On the other hand, the Clare Danes and Leonardo DiCaprio version of Romeo and Juliet chopped away dialogue and additionally created its own visual character with its liberal use of religious iconography, yet it arguably managed the dual feat of preserving the spirit of Shakespeare's play and pulling in money at the box office.

At the extreme of this approach of re-visioning the spirit of the text are films that are generated from around a text rather than the text itself, films like Shakespeare in Love, which took the sex, violence and comedy of the Bard's plays and created a film that has both an incredibly literary pedigree and a unique identity of its own.

Perhaps following on Shakespeare in Love's success, a prequel to Romeo & Juliet called Verona Beach is currently in the works. Leonard DiCaprio will apparently be returning as Romeo, and the film will chronicle his relationship with Rosaline, the character who is mentioned in Shakespeare's play as Romeo's pre-Juliet obsession but who somewhat-mysteriously never appears in the play. Tom Stoppard exploited this fact delightfully in Shakespeare in Love, but it remains to be seen whether any other writer will be able to find the perfect combination that Stoppard did between the tradition of Shakespeare's creative spirit and the particular demands of the medium of cinema.

Please see "From Page to Screen" on page 3

The Year in Review

Features hits 40

ABOUT A YEAR AGO, we at Features were given a licence to do, well, pretty much whatever we wanted. And with an expiry date of 40 issues, it's time to sign this licence to thrill over to a new editor whom I can't quite name and ridicule since they don't exactly exist.

So, think of this year in review as an ad geared toward all those enthusiastic journal-types with the time, energy and savvy to produce 40 sections of feature-length material on diversified, unpredictable topics from travel to social issues to comedy.

Sound fun? If you think "yeah, could be cool," then inquire with either Sarah or Stefan at The Journal, 533-2800, and if you have any questions whatsoever, ask for Sean, the sentimental, teary-eyed, soon-to-be ex-editor.

Thus, as a promotional guide to what some lucky Queen's student could be doing next year, we present the highlights from this year in Features.

Issue No. 21 — A brief history of words

By Malcolm Levy

"In response to being labelled as 'bad seeds' and 'rough characters' by the dominant class, urban youth began to reappropriate the words which were being used to portray them in a negative light."

In what was one of the longest features of the year, the author went into heavy detail on why the ideological control over language has begun to move from the traditional, normative forms of words to the vernacular — words that have discriminated against subservient classes for centuries.

Issue No. 35 — A Symbol of Change

Stories by Laura MacInnis

"She blamed her pregnancy on the swimming pool, where men had been swimming without bathing suits in gym class. Dean Douglas sent an order that the pool be drained, and it was so done in 1956."

This feature came in two parts. In the first the author presented conflicting opinions from members of faculty and the administration on the elimination of the dean of women in the spring of 1996. Part two explored the powerful role the Dean held at Queen's throughout her tenure from 1911 to 1996.

Ha! Humour!

Issue No. 23 — GW vs. The Journal

By Jonathan Krashinsky

"GW strikes alternately with satire and with cheap shots at poor Journal spelling. The Journal replies with editorials decrying the latest GW excess. Repeat as needed."

This feature was a retrospective dissection of an on-campus media rivalry that has existed ever since GW's inauguration in 1967. The author, GW co-editor Krashinsky, discussed how GW's initial raison d'être as a mere "supplement to the Journal" rapidly evolved into the official student humour paper with The Journal serving as a regular source of material. Occasionally, The Journal retaliated with its own GW spoof (see below).

Issue No. 25 — Believe it or leave it!

A Features Special with the graphics of Rachelle Villanueva

Yes, even we here at the ol' QJ can get a little wacky once in a while, printing some factual, yet pretty far-fetched stories from our storied 126 year history. We presented the obvious "Stauffer masturbator" scandal along with several other absurd counterparts like "Library accepts prof's offer to pay for Playboy" and "Yelling matches result of free photocopies."

Issue No. 39 — Golden Words Spoof Issue

A Misc. & Features Supplement

This wasn't a 'fake' but a parody of our favourite comedy paper — Golden Words. Aptly called GW, it set out to have fun with such GW beauties as "More Old Men Dying on the Crapper" and "The Wonderful World of Partial Responsibility." Though it's only the fourth known GW spoof to date, we hope the supplement can become a yearly ritual at The Journal.

Rock n' Roll is Dead?

Issues No. 27, No. 29 & No. 33 —

This three-part feature on death conspiracies surrounding pop artists Kurt Cobain, John Lennon, Bob Marley, Jim Morrison, Paul McCartney and Tipac Shakur examined the facts, clues and rumours that might reveal certain elements of truth in an ongoing series of unsolved mysteries.

Stories by Jesse Craig Bellringer, Ben Molson & Sean Springer

Eye on the town

Issue No. 11 — Waiting to Inhale

By Eric Morris

"With the exception of Allie's and the Grad Club, Queen's would be all but smoke-free heading into the next millennium."

Smoking became a hot topic on campus last fall when ResLife's plans to ban smoking in all residences by next fall were approved. Meanwhile, Alfie's Pub had already lost a battle with AMS Council over the Pub's plans to sell cigarettes in Alfie's.

Issue No. 19 — Ghost Town?

By Liz Frogley

"Allie Pierce haunted a janitor at the Student Union Building, telling him that great wealth was buried beneath a limestone wall in Kingston. The janitor nearly went mad in his quest for it..."

With more eerie ghost stories than you can shake a stick at, Kingston is undeniably much more than a sweet little community. This feature confirmed our horrors that, yes, Kingston is a MONSTER CHILLER HORROR TOWN, infested with both gentle and diabolical creatures nestled in a dimension on the other side of K-town.

Issue No. 34 — Virtual Poverty

By Tania Haas

"During the game, one man had justified theft and would have acted upon his thoughts if given the opportunity. This man was Sergeant Rick Carter of the Kingston Police Force."

As a participant in the Adversity Challenge, a workshop hosted by the Ryandale House for the Homeless, the author played "Claudia," an unemployed single mother receiving welfare. In this role, certain emotions were brought out in the author who arrived at a vivid understanding of some of the harsh realities of living in poverty.

Homecoming Special

Stories by Keith Gerein & Stefan Murray

The big game, homecoming hijinx, football rivalries, irate Kingston mayors. It was all here, the love, the passion, the parties — what homecoming was and what homecoming has become.

Students in action

Issue No. 18 —

Into the Bleak

By Laura MacInnis

"Once the rescue mission was called off, Precious and his crew were told to concentrate on recovering debris, including human remains."

As an employee for the Coast Guard last summer, Queen's student Bruce Precious spent his last week of work searching for survivors and recovering debris from Swissair flight 111.

Issue No. 16 —

French degrees of education

By Kristin Gable

"There is a fundamental belief in French culture that a university education should be accessible to all... 'instruction must be possible to everyone.'"

Last October, hundreds of thousands of French students took to the streets to express their frustration at a lack of teachers, a lack of computer access and a surplus of students in the classroom, among other things. One source of the turmoil is the high accessibility of education in France. This feature posed the sensitive question, "Is this the model of accessible education?"

Issue No. 20 — Summer in Sudan

By Gregory Moore

"Even with the major import of supplies by the relief organisation, the hospital resembled one that might be seen at a summer camp."

The author reflected on three months of relief work in Sudan — bearing witness to the harsh reality that local Sudanese villagers had endured in the midst of 15 years of civil war.

THE JOURNAL Reader

EDITOR
Jesse Craig Bellringer

EDITORS-IN-CHIEF
Keith Gerein
Tara Mansbridge

MANAGING EDITOR
Laura MacInnis

BUSINESS MANAGER
Claudia Kraft

ADS CO-ORDINATOR
Mark Fucella

ADS DESIGNERS
Katherine Colbourne
Annie Ge
Rachelle Villanueva

CONTRIBUTORS
Ryan Boggs, Andrea Feddersen,
Heather Harding, John Lee, Robert
McGill, Jonathon Neville, Paul Quick,
D.L. Windell

the queen's journal reader

Thursday, April 8, 1999 • Issue 6 • Volume 126
The Queen's Journal is an editorially autonomous newspaper published by the Alma Mater Society of Queen's University, Kingston. Editorial opinions expressed in The Journal are the sole responsibility of The Queen's Journal Editorial Board, and are not necessarily those of the University, the AMS or their officers. Contents © 1999 by The Queen's Journal; all rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced without the prior permission of The Journal. The Queen's Journal is printed on a Goss Community press by Thousand Islands Publishers Ltd. in Ganarque, Ontario. Contributions from all members of the Queen's and Kingston community are welcome. The Journal reserves the right to edit all submissions. Subscriptions are available for $55.00 per year. Please direct editorial, advertising and circulation enquiries to: 272 Earl Street, Kingston, Ontario, K7L 2H8 Telephone — editorial: 613-533-2800 advertising: 613-533-6711 Fax: 613-533-6728 Email: journal@post.queensu.ca Internet: http://www.journal.queensu.ca Circulation: 9000 Design & Layout by J.C. Bellringer Special thanks to D.L.W. and Sean Springer

...A proposal that every citizen should be required to appear at reasonable intervals before a properly qualified jury to justify his existence. If he could not justify it, his existence would be swiftly and efficiently terminated.

— George Bernard Shaw

History.

It could be yours.

The Queen's Journal is offering memories for sale. The events, controversies and happenings of the 1998-1999 year, neatly contained in a leather-bound book. Volume 126 in its entirety. Call Gabe at 533-2800. Own a piece of Queen's history.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY
THE JOURNAL
1875

On the Road

once more unto the breach

When you betray somebody else, you also betray yourself.

— Isaac Bashevis Singer

Let's go get a taco.

— Mr. White

Sometimes, perhaps usually, the journey is the destination. Travel possess its own rewards, implicit in the giddy promise of an open road, the sunny security of a one-way ticket.

April is the cruelest month, a month of ironic disintegration as everything that surrounds us is restored to vitality. Friendships retreat into summery hibernation, our temporary homes are turned inside out and we pass them again as strangers. We grow old; things change.

Occasionally we admit our darker, anti-nostalgic remembrances, despite the best efforts of our wildly revisionist histories that somehow turn these formative, furtive flashes into a warm, post-secondary love affair that lasts far beyond these lecture halls and neglected streets.

We come to the end and ask ourselves: is there anything else? What now? We come to the end and inevitably find the same truth, no matter how arduous or capricious our travels have been. We find ourselves moving forward.

And, if we must, and despite Thomas Wolfe's famous postulation, we can always find our way home.

Satire?
I had no idea!

Oceans of Gratitude to The Reader's Writers:

Gabrielle Fenny, Robert McGill, Hannibal Hack, Stress Berger, D.L. Windell, Paige Holmes, Sean Arthur Springer, Lilian Kim, Gregory B. Betts, Paul R. Quick, Andréa Feddersen, DNR, Mac McArthur, Laura McInnis, Emily Truman, Sean Robichaud, Ryan Boggs, Tim Conley, Amy McCarthy, Tara Mansbridge, John Lee, Anna Phelan-Cox, Robert Hoffman, Sean Bell, D.A. Cunningham, Karen Wang, Eli Shuster, Heather Harding & Leyla Mahdaviyani

It's amazing that the amount of news that happens in the world every day always just exactly fits the newspaper.

— Jerry Seinfeld

From the outgoing QJR editor and our mutual friend, Roberto Benigni

Life is Beautiful

ps. I'm not Roberto Benigni

From Page to Screen

Continued from page 1

According to fact and rumor, here is a sample of films currently in development that are based on works of literature:

A Midsummer's Night's Dream, William Shakespeare, starring Kevin Kline as Bottom, Michelle Pfeiffer as Titania, Calista Flockhart as Helena;

All the Pretty Horses, Cormac McCarthy, Billy Bob Thornton (directing), Matt Damon and Henry Thomas;

Beowulf (Yes, the anonymous Anglo-Saxon epic); starring Christopher Lambert and set 1,000 years in the future and advertised as "from the producer of Mortal Kombat;" (caveat emptor!);

O, from William Shakespeare's Othello; starring Julia Stiles;

Breakfast of Champions, Kurt Vonnegut, Jr.; starring Bruce Willis and Nick Nolte;

The Fellowship of the Ring, JRR Tolkien; the first of the much-loved The Lord of the Rings trilogy; stars Sean Connery as Gandalf the Grey;

Hamlet, another anonymous Anglo epic; this time updated to contemporary New York City and starring Ethan Hawke;

The Green Mile, Stephen King; starring Tom Hanks;

An Ideal Husband, Oscar Wilde; Minnie Driver and Rupert Everett are attached;

Angela's Ashes, Frank McCourt; Emily Watson (Breaking the Waves, Hilary and Jackie) is rumored to be involved;

The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Douglas Adams; Jay Roach (Austin Powers) directing;

Snow Falling on Cedars, David Guterson; starring Ethan Hawke.

Also of interest is the recent spate of game-inspired cinema that has been appearing in theatres and on videotore shelves of late. There has been mixed success in bringing video games to the big screen in much the same way that literary adaptations tend to vary wildly in commercial success regardless of their histories on the bestseller list; Mortal Kombat, for example, while Super Mario Bros. bombed.

Nevertheless, studios seem keen on continuing to explore the market potential, perhaps hoping that people who spend hours living vicariously through characters while gamers will fork out the money to spend a couple more hours of doing the same in front of a bigger screen.

The transition from video game to the theatre seems to present a challenge antithetical to the problem of transferring a book into film. Whereas some works of literature are considered unfilmable because their stories are too subtle, too complex or simply not visually-exotic enough for the screen, visual richness is an essential component of almost any successful video game. It is rather the plot that is sometimes suspect. In a game it may be enough that Mario has to save Princess Toadstool from King Koopa, but whether or not that challenge can sustain a feature-length film is another matter.

The latest attempt to realize a video game on film is Wing Commander, based on the popular space shoot-em-up. The video game itself uses hours of digitized live-action footage and blurs the boundary between game and movie. If video games continue to proceed in this direction (and there is little doubting that they will), it will be interesting to see whether they will further whet gamers' appetite for movie versions or simply make adaptations into film superfluous.

It shouldn't take long to find out. Other video games that appear headed toward the big screen include Doom, Duke Nukem, and Final Fantasy.

As for myself, I'm saving my $8.50 for the Minesweeper movie.

You can call me Betty, and Betty when you call me you can call me Mr. President

Al Franken for President: Why Not?

BY SEAN SPRINGER

Why Not Me?
By Al Franken
Delacorte Press
$35.95

THE STAR OF Daily Affirmation with Stuart Smalley and Stuart Saves his Family is back and this time he wants your vote.

He's good enough.
He's smart enough.
And doggone it people like him.

But is Al Franken presidential material?

Al Franken poses the question differently. Why Not Me? Indeed, the self-effacing star of this book, a farcical account of a presidential dark horse who stuns the pundits by crushing Al Gore in the democratic primaries, then Newt Gingrich in the fall election, has all the qualifications. But who wouldn't? They've all been lowered by the honourable sleaze, William Jefferson Clinton.

He's horny: "Why do I need (Bill Clinton's) advice? I already know how to get a blow job."

He's a retired drug addict: "I believe that a president who has smoked the occasional joint or snorted the occasional line or dropped the occasional tab of acid is better suited for the nation's highest office than someone who has only smoked the occasional joint and not done the other stuff."

Above all, he's duplicitous: "Indulging in personal attacks is not the Franken Style," he writes, just before he slams democratic Presidential nomination candidate Al Gore, "whose uncontrollable libido and inappropriate sexual behaviour toward anything with two legs and a hole in between brought shame and ill-repute to Bill Clinton's presidency."

And thus, Al Franken is your ideal candidate for President. One problem though, how does Al defeat Al, that is, vice-prez Al?

WHICH IS WHERE WE BEGIN in the story of Franken, growing up as an innocent Minnesotan to become a Saturday Night Live alum and the author of I'm Good Enough, I'm Smart Enough and Doggone It, People Like Me! and Rush Limbaugh is a Big Fat Idiot and Other Observations. Taking a hipper angle over the movie-equivalent, Primary Colors, Franken transcends modern political scepticism by openly presenting himself as a perverted sociopath, a clueless moron and an everyday, guilt-free politician on the Presidential warpath. Coming equipped with a single campaign platform: lower ATM fees, and the hapless, all-Jewish campaign team (featuring disgraced former Clinton advisor, Dick Morris), they prepare the defamation campaign from hell.

For example, Morris hires a team of homosexual men to attend every Gore rally and cheer: "One, two, three, four, if you're a homo vote for Gore!" turning homophobic America off Gore and onto Franken. Franken plays up the Gore camp's heavy fundraising tactics by running ads decrying "Vote for FRANKEN NOT GORE, the BANKERS' WHORE!"

Included in the book's carefully developed cast of characters is Franni Franken playing Al's Hilary. A woman who is smarter than her husband,

Continued on page 6

An (Incomplete) List of Recent Literary Adaptations

(When necessary, original texts appear in parentheses):

- Ten Things I Hate About You (The Taming of the Shrew)
- A Simple Plan
- Message in a Bottle
- The Sweet Hereafter
- One True Thing
- Beloved
- Out of Sight
- Field of Dreams
- True Crime
- Cruel Intentions (Les Liaisons Dangereuses)
- Affliction
- Get Shorty
- L.A. Confidential
- Simon Birch (A Prayer for Owen Meany)
- Clueless (Emma)
- Fear and Loathing in Las Vegas
- Primary Colors
- What Dreams May Come
- Midnight in the Garden of Good & Evil
- A Thousand Acres (King Lear)
- The English Patient
- A Civil Action
- The Horse Whisperer
- Practical Magic
- The Thin Red Line
- Permanent Midnight
- Hurlyburly
- The Ice Storm
- The Postman

— QJR

the best thing about the end (video mix 2.1)

like in a dream and we're moving so fast it's almost sex skimming across the surface of the earth in our slick bodies like ripe aching bullets speeding over the landscape five feet in the air buzzing by the little brick blurs of buildings dodging trucks
and telephone poles
weaving in and out between the skyscrapers
under bridges
til we get out past the city past the suburbs into the forest hundreds of us skimming and whizzing through the woods some lose control
ram into trees
splat against stumps explode in a crack of flesh meets bark hello
bits flying everywhere and it speckles our faces you turn to me in mid-air cup your hands to your mouth and yell through the trees violence is satisfying when you're travelling this fast
yes

this is why the end of the world would feel so good right about now
this is why we go to the car races jump-cut to and then someone said he saw a bear break the sound barrier going down main st on a bicycle and i laughed because it wasn't even a

we're all moving so fast and so fast spinning so quick and precise as an ICBM
as a porcelain puck across the ice beautiful absurd precarious and let's keep moving like this let's not miss

Paul Quick

Peace, Love
or that poem wherein I exorcise my demons of desire

I flip for you

Lecherous, lascivious, I drool for you.
Desire has me by the balls.
Thus I create a tension —
And thus we cannot be friends.

How do you stand the pressure?
Everyone who meets you falls for you.

Peace, love
No longer am I another hound dog
No longer do I need you.
Seeing the beauty in everyone,
I can share mysticism,
acrobatics and intelligent dance with anyone.

hannibalhack@geocities.com

DESIRE

What an anemic, tepid, paleface am I!
Pitiable dreck. I should be purged for my timidity (- first principle of our love for humanity).
I desire.

I say it with pride: I have a desiring ego.
I want erotic dance. I want it with you — you, who are everything I love wrapped up in one.

ryan boggs

the titled service — plays it safe — falls short of promise

metal then wax

twirled in lake Parisian petals
hee, hee huh huh, hee
when telephons rings are anticipated their precision promises a translucent cylinder comprised of circular disks, lowering only in miniature fathoms and senseless attraction, so the — yes, yes thank-you — decides to go and shave promptly, purposely cut his neck
where he always dies — ranning, lilling conveyed fastidiously through fat becoming, begrudgingly
bejeweled tongues
imagining juggled citrus fruit officially endorsed pericoonist of the clown um, well, isn't he short now folks?
please swirl in the cream with the gentlemen hunched, bobbing side to side grinning indulgently with their eyes closed"

"well, um thanks, Steve Gaulcker fluttering with ample allowance pigeons

red-eyed, allow green gleamed, the clouds know my pinched clock so please don't expect me to be awake in the over ripe hours with a devil on a tether of amber absolutely never lurking under the shedding wheel in the passing oars of the fade away grimace
—> (drink of water)
from speaking to live animals and ariving the preparation of dead apes to servicing, speaking, to now both and dead animals included therapeutic investments with intentions of resolved endeavours chilled in great basins shuffling indefinitely with tar from feet
blessing tartar sauce, looming out of a personal correspondence with Kraft.
— (drink of water)
one at two capers
tapered with exacting sapors and three strong stems elegant in black gloves, distracting the cast shadow of the latticed branches breaching outward scratching, anti-equinox, saddling a lame horse galloping waddling the sidewalk completely quiet for the news the news ends with hunters hurling
then the weather woman scoots into stair
—> she sounds like a perennial mother and so I am hopeful and boastfully insulted
when she is ripped by a distinguished and calm reminder gently

but yes, certainly yes

I am proud of public broadcasting

The clown spins around yes closed, teeth clenched grinning and tosses out his two cents of hope from his hip
enumerating his hands and the stiff lipped pension plans and the vinyl advertising accounts dormant on the round chairs

nalled around the table.

We're Back!!!

OUR SPRING CLEANING CLOTHING DRIVE NEEDS YOUR HELP:

NO NEED TO TAKE ALL THOSE CLOTHES HOME - DONATE SOME TO US!

BEGINNING APRIL 7TH, PICK UP ONE OF OUR DISTINCTIVE BLUE-BAGS AT:

- any Residence (they will be placed in your room)
- AMS Office - John Deutsch Centre
- the Salvation Army Thrift Store - 558 Princess St.

DROP OFF YOUR FILLED BLUE-BAG AT?

- your Residence collection point
- AMS Office - John Deutsch Centre
- The Salvation Army Thrift Store - 558 Princess St.
- call 544-4396 for pick-up
- watch for other drop-off spots!

President Franken

Continued from page 3

loyal and utterly naive: "[Franni] wants to know how I got mosquito bites all over ass. Says after full day of campaigning does not want to come home and put calamine lotion on my hairy butt. Made kids do it."

This choppy quote is a Franken diary entry and one of the many forms in his multimedia approach. Of the book's 289 pages, it features more than a 100 pages of diary entries, scripted television commercials of Snoopy and Charlie Brown defaming opponent Gore, scripted interviews with the usual gang of idiots in This Week with Sam Donaldson, newspaper clippings, mostly involving Franken's brother Otto heckling Gore at rallies ("Tell the truth, ATM stooge"), moronic campaign memos, a spin doctored Newsweek cover story, Franken's self-centered promotional autobiography Daring to Lead and the nail in the coffin of Franken's doomed presidency: Bob Woodward's (same guy of Watergate fame) scathing account of President Franken's office bumbblings The Void — the first one hundred days of the Franken Presidency.

His best and funniest device comes at the finale where Franken's genetically engineered clone, which was implanted in the uterus of Anne Heche and raised by her and life partner Ellen DeGeneres (don't ask, just read!), provides the wrap-up at Franken's duly rewarded Al Franken Presidential Library in Hartford.

Collectively, this method of conveying satire is extremely effective, as it presents accurate portrayal of the power of media and has the variety to sustain any beleaguered attention span. Separately, each forum is clear and lucid, with the exception of the diary entries, which are written in shorthand and provide for irritating reading. Saving Franken, of course, is his wickedly sharp sense of humour that keeps every second of this book on the cutting edge of political satire.

The bottom line is that Franken's style is accessible, hilarious and facilitates a vivid portrait of the modern political spectrum. Unlike his predecessor Franken cannot avoid the boot from office, but hey, he retains "the prerogatives of an ex-president, including [his] pension, an office and staff at taxpayer expense, lifelong Secret Service protection, and, eventually, burial in Arlington National Cemetery beneath an eternal flame."

Bowing out as a disgrace, Al still wonders, why not me? But, like all the others, he can't seem to figure it out.

Carpenter at Rest

William Gaddis, 1922-1998

BY TIM CONLEY

IT IS TOO SAD TO BE RIGHTLY CALLED IRONY. On December 16, 1998, the day on which a libidinal American President, counting the hours before his impeachment, launched yet another series of bomb attacks on an Iraqi population already unconsciously squeezed and starved, America's most proficient satirist died, William Gaddis was the author of four very complex novels (he completed an as-yet-unpublished fifth book, a non-fictional study of the player piano, called Agape Agape, before he passed away) and an artist inclined to avoid the trappings of celebrity.

Gaddis was born in New York December 29, 1922. He went on to Harvard, but was asked to leave the college in his senior year (the circumstances of the situation are mysterious, and await the unfortunate biographer). He worked for The New Yorker for a spell in the 1950s, and absorbed experiences at the bohemian parties and happenings, to be later used as material in The Recognitions. Travel provided further resources of experience — in Mexico, in Costa Rica, in Spain and in Africa — and, perhaps strangest to imagine of him, he was employed for a few years in public relations for a pharmaceutical corporation.

The number of printed interviews with Gaddis can be counted on one hand: he wondered why anyone should expect an author to be at all interesting, after having very likely (or ideally) projected the best of themselves in their work. He has been frequently compared with Joyce, Nabokov, and especially Pynchon, and in terms of talent this must be so.

Gaddis's first novel, The Recognitions (1955) is a 956-page saga of forgery, pretension, and desires misguided and inexpressible. Critical response to the book ranged from cool to hostile, but in most cases (as Jack Green took pains to show in his book of rebuke, Fire the Bastards!) reviewers were ill-prepared to deal with the challenge, and evidently many who began to read The Recognitions did not finish. The novel's sometimes great leaps in time and location, and the breadth and arcane pedigree of allusions are, it turns out, fairly mild complications for the reader when compared with what would become the writer's trademark: the unrestrained confusion of detached and fragmentary dialogue. Consider the following excerpt from very early on in Gaddis's second book, JR (1975; winner of the National Book Award), only 726 pages long:

—It's worked so far but it can't work forever, sooner or later somebody will show up who reads Greek. Then where are we?

—Up the creek, Miss Flesch obliged with a promptness that lost her some coffee down her chin, — like the smut mail.

—There's an issue. The smut mail rise.

—My boy sent off for a ball glove and what he got back in the mail was... —Mouthpiece puller, sleigh bells, stro-botuner, choir risers, tympanies, marching bell and stand, two thousand five hundred and... what's all that for? —Breakage. Here, replacing glass, repairing doors, painting, refinishing and so forth, thirty-three thousand two eighty-five. Thirty-three thousand dollars for breakage, isn't that what we're really talking about? Plain, unvarnished vandalism? And another fourteen thousand plus item down here, repairs and replacement, chairs, desks, project tables, pianos, same thing isn't it? Breakage...?

And this is only a sound byte of the logorrhea. The chaos of the unceasing deluge of talk of JR (very much part of the continuing spills, mistakes and general "breakage" which may be recognized as the plot), drove critics to declare the text "unreadable" — like the school's "Greek" motto ("Oh, can you read it?") one character asks another, who is seen copying it down, "Not exactly read it, said his companion". Reading Gaddis is by no means easy, but, as I think the above sample suggests, it is rewardingly hysterical. I don't know of any more lacerating and artfully sustained attack on capitalism than JR, and The Recognitions makes one so terrifyingly uncertain about the "unique" or "authentic" nature of experience and art that upon finishing it one cannot be sure one read a novel, as either term may be suspect.

In 1985 Carpenter's Gothic was published. Cynthia Ozick called this book, Gaddis's shortest (a manageable 262 pages) and ostensibly the most restrained in scope, "an unholy landmark of a novel." Set entirely in a rented house and buzzing with the usual chatter, lost voices, and half-heard telephone conversations, Carpenter's Gothic is probably the most intimate of the author's books — though, it needs to be added, perversely so, given the gradual revelations of corruption and insanity in even the most personal exchanges — and at the same time the most grimly apocalyptic.

And then there is the bureaucratic and legal farce of A Frolic of His Own (1994, and the occasion of a second National Book Award); where JR begins with the question "Money...?" Gaddis's fourth novel (509 pages, for those still counting) initially asks for "Justice? — You get justice in the next world, in this world you have the law." In planning the book, Gaddis admitted in a letter to a friend that originally it was to contain an effective representation of every lawsuit in America, with a plot as a more or less incidental result. The struggle to wrest language back from the distortions inflicted by professionals, particularly lawyers (one character observes that "every profession is a conspiracy against the public" in its truth-concealing cloak of jargon), is fought out in the same arena as the various other dramatized debates about intellectual property and the social functions of art.

Like the best satirists, Gaddis wrote (by his own admission) from a sense of indignation. His novels' world, for all its sound and fury (as a character in JR accuses: "Noise, you'll hide in noise any

continued on page 11

city of kingston
utilities kingston
water sewer gas electricity networks
all your utility services under one roof

WIN $1,000 FROM UTILITIES KINGSTON

☀ EMERGENCY SERVICE

YOUR ACCOUNT CONNECT DISCONNECT METER READINGS PAYMENT & DISPOSITS TERMS & CONDITIONS

$ RATES

👉 CUSTOMER SERVICE

? YOU ASKED

📅 YEAR 2000

👔 CAREERS

🔍 SEARCH

🏠 ABOUT US

📞 CONTACT US

🏠 HOME

To enter, simply request your disconnect/connect for utility services online or by using the automated telephone system between April 6th and May 7th and you could win a $1,000.

SAVE TIME

Save yourself a trip into our offices at the north end of the city. Regrettably, we also have some long wait times at our customer service counter due to the heavy traffic volumes at this time of year — so disconnecting/connecting online or over the phone saves you time for all those other last minute things you need to do.

MORE CONVENIENT

You may disconnect/connect online or over the phone any time or any day you wish. Our electronic application service is available when you want it, 24-hours per day, 7-days per week.

IF YOU HAVE AN OUTSIDE METER

If your utility meters are outside of your dwelling, then there is no need to meet our meter technician. Just disconnect online or over the phone and that's all there is to it.

IF YOU HAVE AN INACCESSIBLE METER

If your meter is inside your dwelling and we do not have access, simply advise us of the date you wish to vacate or move into the dwelling. Enter the date in the easy-to-use online form or in our telephone voicemail system and we'll send a meter technician to meet you and disconnect/connect the service.

CONNECTING SERVICE

If you know the address you will be moving into in the fall, apply for connection of service either online or by using the automated telephone system and you will double your chances of winning in May. Additional information may be required. We will contact you prior to the requested connection date.

BILLING

If you are disconnecting your service, we will be taking actual readings of your meter in the last week of April to ensure you pay only for your actual consumption. Your final bill will be mailed to your forwarding address.

If you require additional information, please contact our customer service group at 546-1181 or visit our website at www.utilitieskingston.com. Our office hours are 8:00 am to 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday. All in person inquiries are handled at 211 Counter Street.

Contest winner will be notified by May 30th 1999.

METER READINGS

When your account is active, you may also submit meter readings online or over the phone. It's an easy and convenient way to make sure you're billed only for actual consumption.

Thanks Students!

The Campus Bookstore would like to extend our deepest thanks and appreciation to all of our patrons over the past year.

Good Luck to all graduating students. To all returning students, enjoy the summer holidays and we'll see you in September!

www.campusbookstore.com

Clark Hall • Weekdays 9-8, Saturday 10-5 • 533-2955 • Owned and Operated by Students Since 1909

Second Thought

it might be a fire after all that's going to do it since rain would be obvious and we'd be ready

we would ignore it at first this little flame
this nothing heat

I'd paint signs to make sure everyone stepped around it with neon letters for night time

maybe set up concessions for tourists
and wedding parties

and if it got bigger
well
we could just move a bit further away not to be rude, of course, but for convenience sake

and since it's there anyway we'd probably channel the power somehow call in the engineers

maybe then we could use it to turn our spin cycles or run
air conditioners
because let's face it
it's getting pretty hot out there

I guess at some point
we'll have to do something more permanent since most of our food has been broiled beyond recognition and corn has become kindling

I think I could help choose a figurehead
a strong warrior man louder bigger than some little inferno to organize the army

maybe they'll be gallant maybe woman and children first and we could lower the ladders
count some heads

but oh,
breaths become shallow
heat like a cocked eyebrow and skyscrapers
sweating
babies dead for months now

I'll hold the bullhorn over my throat shrieking loud enough to make the echoes insignificant and the bodies will pile up like dishes or rugby players and even the headlines will run out of things to say except maybe

well,
the leaders have failed us again.

and no one's thinking about guilt anymore but about
Fahrenheit and how to claw over legs and shoulders
how to be inconspicuous inflammable

in the meantime however there is change to count and waitresses to rip off and I've never been so selfish or so happy all at once.

but the heat
oh god
the heat of every minute
every forgotten punchline will knock your eyes back through your skull
and leave a hole for it to shine through.

Andréa Feddersen

Cherry

i am what i hate
a cherry tree

i sway amongst those that i am like

and we speak

always the same
the men who have scaled our branches and harvested our sweet fruit always

nothing of our fine limbs
the strength of our withered trunks

just our sweet fruits small, red

our days in blossom are just that preparation production constant pruning

we fear the fall
turning into brilliant colours losing our fruits overlooked for harvest

not now
now we produce with abundance branches heavy

i am amongst the cherry trees packaged wholly into this tiny fruit waiting to be picked.

Heather Harding

The Defeatist Lover

Never, I thought, will I meet another like Andrea.
Never again, I thought, will bells exclaim, the Earth tremble, butterflies
sing. I will not hear my heart beat, fences will not beckon to be leaped over or off from, puddles will not cry "Dance in me!"
But now the stars have returned to the sky,
Trees are huggable, streets danceable, the elderly kissable,
And when the bitter wind blows I laugh and enjoy it as a clumsy caress
from your impassioned hands,
And when the sun warms my bones I thank you for sharing your love.
And yet, 'tis but a dream:
We cannot dine over talk of Nietzsche and communism,
we cannot share improvisation and pot, for 'though you are four years younger, you are twice as smart.

And what do I have to offer you?

hannibalhack@geocities.com

She looked like a gorgeous, impressionist mechanic.

I know that people think, when you're crazy about someone, you can feel it when they hurt themselves or see them walk into a room behind you.

That's not always true. Especially for me, I guess. I've got terrible vision, but I won't wear my glasses. It's not an issue. I just like the world a little hazy.

There was a whole bunch of us at the bar that night. I'd heard she was home for the weekend but I didn't expect to see her there. I was the designated driver so I'm pretty sure that everyone else was having a much better time than me. I'm not sure how long she'd been there before I noticed her. She was wearing a blue and white sweater thing with a black label on the chest.

I couldn't look at her. I really hated that, to tell you the truth, but as soon as I started looking at her other people started looking at me.

The next time she entered my field of vision she was staring. Pointedly, I paused for half a second and she winked at me. I don't know what she did that for. Just to freak me out probably. Or something like that. Maybe to make me feel that, everybody watching or not, it was stupid for me to be standing on the opposite side of the room. I agreed, but I didn't move. Across the bar, where she sat, a few other guys were trying their luck, fearless with their guys were trying their luck, fearless with bottled confidence. Poor saps. She ate them alive. They did look like they were having a much better time than me, but I told myself they must be drinking. She wasn't. She didn't. Whatever. She told me once that she liked being cognitive too much. She was pretty well guarded, though. The girls in our group took good care of each other.

They all left pretty early, cutting their way through the crowd with bare shoulders.

As she passed me, she turned so that her body brushed up against mine. I put my arm around her, to stop her, and she bumped into it pretty hard.
"Ow," she said, laughing.
"Oh...hey." She said it like she'd just seen me there. Maybe she had.
I let my arm drop. "Hi."
"Coming?" someone called her.

"Yeah," she answered. She looked into me with her really dark eyes and smiled like she knew something I didn't. "Later."
"Yeah," I said "Bye."

The truth is, when you're crazy about someone, all you really know is when they've left the room.

Gabrielle Fenney

Por Por

Today I pass by your grave por por.
The flowers were blooming, the grasses in sway;
So peaceful, so clear, this place where you lay.
The daffies, and roses and tulips you see,
The ones that you loved — a gift from me.

Softly I treat to a place of last days;
Images form of a worn, wrinkled face,
Softly I'm treading, you're somehow so near —
I listen intently, but all that I hear... is the calm, quiet murmur of sun's silent rays.

Air; it is breathing,
I feel its dismay,
The tears have fallen,
On these warm, gentle days
For you who shall ne'er be replaced.

Oh por por, how much t do miss you!
How much your smiles mean to my day;
Your laughter, your words — they replay, and replay...

For you're in my head, wherever I go —
Whether waking or dreaming
The dreams that I know
you send me from Heaven.

Karen Wang

dedicated to my great-grandmother, who passed away on January 17, 1998.

delicate men

We need more delicate men:
men of tears from reason who reach the wit of wisdom and suffer angers out loud.

These men who
turn existential corners and draw by graphite, who live part of dogtime and laze beside fur.

These men who sing first at funerals,
who stock root cellars to teach why,
who make hands responsible to minds,
who sense that birth is not the first part of death,
who spell Malraux and pronounce humane,
who step a child forward to count the touch of time,
who say scatter ashes, don't bury monuments.

These men whose witness gives no rein, whose tears rid a wound of salt,
whose special side is sisters,
who imagine the stars have eyes.

These men who
sing a power into life,
take an axe to guilt,
see an animal's face as mirror,
touch the spaces of spirits,
dress in capes and helmets,
smell a coming wind before it covers air.

These men who simply out the priests and stand to admire Venus sit at the tip of a winter crescent moon.

mac mearthur

green is the colour of money

want some money?

bring your books to the UBS

exchange
UBS Finance Trust Office Books 9 St. U

9:00 to 5:00 weekdays, 10:00 to 1:00 Saturdays • beside the Skylight Lounge in the Upper JPUC • 533 2120

Advertising designers Rachele Villanueva, Katherine Colbourn, and Annie Ge

Advertising Coordinator Mark Fucella

Managing Editor Laura MacInnis

Science Editor and Technical Consultant John Bowman

Administrative Assistant Gabriele King

Graphics Editor Janice Chan

Sales Representative Andrew Cooke

Arts and Entertainment Editors Sarah Crosbie, Stefan Murray, and Lilian Kim

Assistant News Editors Jocelyn Laporte and Shawn Brimley

Systems Manager Craig Thomas

Opinions Editor Dan Rowe

The Queen's Journal Volume 126

MISC. Editor Ken Butland

Assistant Sports and Fitness Editor Rob MacNeil

Sports and Fitness Editor Adam Kaminsky

Reader Editor Jesse Craig Bellringer

Sales Representative Sue Armstrong

Photography Editors James Terjanian and Alex Kronby

Features Editor Sean Springer

Business Manager Claudia Kraft

News Editor Fiona Stevenson

Editorial Page Editor Paul Heisler

Editors-in-chief Keith Gerein and Tara Mansbridge

Assistant News Editor Renee Huang

